Belmore at once went over to the writing-table, sat down, and took up a pen. In a few minutes the following advertisement was in fair copy:—

£5 Reward.—The above reward will be paid to any one who can inform advertiser of the present whereabouts of the daughter of L—— G——, born at a provincial town in Italy, on May 27, twenty-five years ago, or who, if she is dead, can furnish proof of her death.—Apply to, etc.

In the first rough draft of this advertisement, the name, Lottie Gregson, appeared in full, and that of the provincial town (Quirino) was specifically stated, but at Belmore's suggestion, the vaguer form was substituted, as being quite sufficiently explicit for identification.

"You see," he explained to the muddled Sarsfield, "in publishing advertisements of this kind, you need to be on your guard against impostors. It is on the cards that some young woman, scenting a possible something to her advantage, might try to personate the girl for whom you are advertising. But by suppressing names, you protect yourself against such fraud; for while the girl's initials and the general allusion to Italy, taken in connection with the other details, are quite enough to put the young woman herself, or any one who knows the true circumstances, on to the right track, it effectually baffles any ignorant but astute stranger who might try to earn the reward by faked information."

"By G—d, Belmore! You have your head screwed on all right. I hadn't thought of that," cried Sarsfield. "Very well, then; amend the draft as you suggest; and, when you've fair copied it, take the thing round to the offices of the leading London papers at once. You will take a cab, of course," he added, with unusual generosity, "and charge it to me." . . . .

It was very much like drawing a bow at a venture thus to advertise for a girl, of whom nothing had been heard since her birth twenty-five years ago, and Sarsfield, in the sober light of next morning, felt considerably less sanguine of getting any response to it than he had done under the influence of four whiskies and sodas over-night. But, as it turned out, fortune favoured him unexpectedly. It transpired that his daughter was not only alive, but was, at that moment, in London, occupying the post of nursery governess in the family of a wealthy parvenu. She herself answered Sarsfield's advertisement, and, subsequently calling upon him by appointment, had no difficulty in satisfying him of her identity. Indeed, he himself was so anxious to believe that she was really Lottie's child (in order that he might propitiate Nemesis by making reparation to the young woman before the Derby) that he would readily have taken her word for it. But Belmore, more faithful to his employer's interests than Sarsfield perhaps exactly deserved, insisted, not only on testing the young woman's story by a searching cross-examination, but on requiring her to furnish tangible proofs in support of it. All this occupied some little time; so that it was only on the day before the Derby that matters were completed, and poor Lottie's child was rendered independent for life by a present of £5,000. Usually, Sarsfield parted uncommonly hard. But, on this occasion, his superstitious fear of Nemesis paying him out at Epsom on the morrow rendered him almost extravagantly generous in his propitiatory offering to that Retributive Goddess.

Stephens' Ink writes a clear blue colour which develops into an intense black. It is pleasant to write with and follows the pen ungrudgingly even when much evaporated in the inkstand.

Water Glass for Egg Preserving can be obtained direct from the British Egg Preserving Co, Hinckley, 1s. and 3s. tins carriage paid. Prospectus free (30,000 customers).

Strange to relate, Philjim did not win the Derby, as the records of the Turf testify. Sarsfield now believes in Nemesis more strongly than ever. His faith in the goddess was greatly strengthened when his secretary left him a few weeks later, and when he subsequently learned that Belmore had married the little governess who had been the recipient of his late employer's £5,000.

ART NOTES.

THE NEW ENGLISH ART CLUB.

THERE is, of course, no place in the world at which it is possible to obtain a clearer idea of the progress of the problem-painting than at the New English Art Club. There are other galleries at which it is impossible for the open-minded observer to tell what the painter is driving at—many of them. But nowhere else can you feel certain that the painter himself does not know in the least what he wants to do, and does not care in the least how he sets about it. This is, of course, the second phase of the problem-painting, just as the R.A. or the International is the first. This being so, it is disquieting, if not discouraging, to find that more than one of the new English artists have this year—in the exhibition just opened at Dering-yard, New Bond-street, that is to say—deliberately deserted their own ideals and gone in for working out definite theses, just as if they were so many school children. There are at least three exhibits which are only too certainly straws to show the way this ill-wind is blowing. There is Mr. Walter Sickert, for instance, who has long been recognised as amongst the most prominent of our Irresponsibilists. What do we find this year? He shows a painting called "La Vecchia." You do not have to look at it for ten minutes before you know the problem he has set himself to prove as well as he does himself. It is this. He has evidently been impressed by the recent appearances of spiritualism in the Law Courts, and he has set his mind to work upon its artistic possibilities. Gradually he has evolved the idea of Rameses the Great converted into a mummy. He has said to himself: "Supposing that the 'spook' of Rameses the Great, as a representative Egyptian potentate, converted into a well-preserved mummy, were to take it into its head to come to life again in the physical form of an old English woman, what, exactly, would he look like?" Given his problem he has at once set to work to provide its solution; and he has succeeded marvellously. The mummy lives again, upon the walls of Dering-yard. We have the flat, brown face, the leathery complexion, the general suggestion of lack of finish, which makes the mummy-room in the British Museum a continual joy, but beyond all that we have the soul of Rameses peering out of the eye-holes, with exactly the expression of hopelessness which would be natural to Rameses were he suddenly to find himself in the New English Art Club of to-day. But not to dwell too long upon Mr. Sickert's masterpiece and thus give the erroneous impression that it is the only problem picture worth looking at in the show, let us turn to consider one of Mr. A. E. John's contributions to the Missing Subject Picture Competition. Mr. John has chosen a more modern, though not less universally interesting, problem. It is this: "Given a young woman with a non-anatomical neck, struck with the unpleasant idea that she may be developing hydrophobia, what would she look like did she decide to let her hair hang loose about her shoulders?" How satisfactorily Mr. John has solved the problem every visitor can see for himself, if he will look among the pencil-drawings upon the screen to the right hand facing him as he enters the gallery. Mr. John has, by the way, an almost equally fascinating solution to another problem upon the wall exactly facing this screen. He shows us exactly what a young lady with no arms would look like if she pretended to have one arm held with the elbow pointing skywards so as to hide her right ear. The question looks a little confusing as I have written it, but Mr. John has provided a most satisfactory answer to it, which is the chief thing after all. This love of anatomy, as providing pictorial problems, is also evidenced in a painting by Mr. Albert Rothenstein, which shows us what a laundry-girl would look like if her left arm were of normal proportions, while her right arm were about five sizes too small. And, really, I cannot imagine any painting which could answer the question with more finality. Then there is a very effective landscape problem, introducing a child with a hoop, by Mr. Lucien Pissarro, but here I must confess that, although I know the painter has set himself a problem, I cannot make head nor tail of the answer.

Needless to say that, side by side with those painters who keep the banner of progress so resolutely unfolded, there are a certain number of waverers, doubters—I had almost written retrogressors. There is, for instance, Mr. David Muirhead. He exhibits a canvas called "The Dark Night," and what Mr. Muirhead was thinking about when he painted it, or what the Hanging Committee were thinking about when they accepted it, I cannot imagine. For, astounding though it may appear, "The Dark Night" is quite a beautiful picture—beautiful in suggestion and in execution, beautiful in line, in composition, and in colour. It might have been painted by one of those absurdly old-fashioned painters who believed that beauty in a picture was rather an advantage than otherwise. However, I suppose that when Mr. Muirhead painted the very beautiful figure of the woman who is gazing out into the night he had fully weighed the risk. Another strange phenomenon is Mr. Sargent's "A Balustrade," which might easily have been painted by one of the despicable Old Masters (so-called) and by one of them who was painting for the pure joy of it. Mr. Sargent has done very different work to this in some of his portraits of fashionable dames, as you can see if you go to Burlington House at the present time. I am very much afraid that, if he is often discovered stumbling from the path of progress, as he does when he paints "A Balustrade," he will very soon lose his vogue as the most fashionable painter of the day. Yet another painter who will get himself into trouble with the New English authorities unless he mends his artistic manners is Mr. W. G. von Glehn, whose "Gold and Lacquer" contains not only some very skilful colour, but a figure—a charming one at that, I grieve to say—of a young woman which is quite anatomically correct. How is it that Mr. von Glehn, and Mr. Muirhead, and Mr. Jamieson, and Mrs. McEvoy, and three or four more have not learnt that the one essential quality in art, as practised by the New English Art Club, is that it must be ugly, that if you can draw you must conceal it, and that any technical knowledge of the art of painting you may be unfortunate enough to possess must be kept resolutely hidden. I thought everybody knew that by this time.

There are a number of fine works by "French and Dutch masters of the nineteenth century" at Messrs. Obach's gallery and some modern Dutch paintings and drawings of interest at Mr. Tinson's gallery in Grafton-street, which I should like to write about, but they scarcely seem in keeping with the masterpieces of New English art, so I had better, perhaps, reserve them for next week.

POLISHED FLOORS.—"RONUK," LTD., are prepared to estimate for the polishing and maintenance of all kinds of floors in Mansions, Hospitals, and Institutions. Write for pamphlet.—Manufacturers of "Ronuk" Polish, "RONUK," LTD., Portslade, near Brighton.

MORTLOCKS. — Specialists in Luncheon, Dinner, Dessert, Breakfast, and Tea Services. Old English and French Patterns and Models. Specimens sent on Approval. Carriage paid.—OXFORD-ST., AND ORCHARD-ST., LONDON, W.

MUSIC.

SINGERS AND THEIR FEES.

WHAT is the largest sum which has ever been paid to a singer? The question is suggested by the particulars recently published of Signor Caruso's new contract with Mr. Conried. Some time ago, it may be remembered—that is, at the close of the recent New York opera season—it was stated that Signor Caruso had declined to renew his agreement with the manager of the Metropolitan unless his terms were considerably increased. The result of the subsequent negotiations have now been made known. Caruso has certainly done very well for himself. His engagement is, it appears, for four years, at £40,000 per annum, in return for which modest remuneration he undertakes to sing eighty times in each twelve months. Each appearance will, therefore, work out at a fee of £500. It is enough to keep the wolf from the door, but it is not, of course, by any means a "record" in these matters. Only the other day, for instance, it was given out that Mme. Melba was paid at the rate of £800 a night by Mr. Hammerstein during her recent season in New York, while even larger sums were received in her day by Patti, who probably obtained the biggest fees of any singer who has ever lived. Again and again she received £800 a night when appearing at Covent Garden. By the late Mr. Henry E. Abbey she was frequently paid £1,000 an appearance, and during one season at New Orleans in the eighties she received as much as £1,200 a night.

Yet it would be quite a mistake to suppose, of course, that these mammoth fees are entirely of modern origin. Catalani, for instance, was only one of several singers of an older day who realised enormous sums. On one occasion, it is recorded, she received 200 gs. for singing "God Save the King" and "Rule Britannia" at a London concert, and for appearing at a single provincial festival she got £2,000. She made, also £10,000 in less than six months by her appearances at Covent Garden in 1806, which, having in view the altered financial conditions obtaining nowadays, was perhaps an even more remarkable achievement than Caruso's £40,000 a year. Before Catalani's time the prices ruling were much more moderate. Farinelli's £5,000 a year would be reckoned only a modest pittance by some of our latter-day prime donne, Caffarelli was regarded as having achieved a record when in 1740 he received at Venice a salary of £720 for a season of three months, and Faustina had to be content with a beggarly £2,000 when she appeared under Handel's management in London in 1726. Such fees look small, indeed, by the side of those which have been received not only by Patti, but by scores of other singers of recent times. Among modern tenors, Sims Reeves, Mario, and Rubini all earned prodigious sums, as, of course, did Tamagno and Jean de Reszke, among others, of a later day. M. Jean de Reszke's top figure was, I believe, the £7,200 which Sir Augustus Harris paid him in one season for sixteen appearances at Covent Garden—a sum working out at £450 a night. Tamagno received at least double this fee during his many appearances in South America. But, of course, it does not do to believe quite all that one reads on these matters. Vocalists are not always restricted by a too slavish regard for literal truth when enlightening the world as to the value placed upon their services. Even the system of double contracts—one for show and the other for use—is not unknown, so that if slightly erroneous notions sometimes get about the fact is hardly to be wondered at.

What is certain, however, is that, as I ventured recently to point out, the enormous fees which are paid nowadays are decidedly to be deprecated, and it may be noted in this connection that, speaking generally, the sums paid in New York and London are out of all proportion to those prevailing elsewhere. It would not matter so much if opera were a prosperous and flourishing institution earning big profits and enabling the public to get their seats at the lowest rates. Unfortunately, as is well known, it is nothing of the kind. If it just pays its way without any profit to the shareholders and at high prices to the public this is as much as is ever expected, and it is the outrageous fees demanded by the principal singers which, more than any other single circumstance, is responsible for this unsatisfactory state of affairs. Meanwhile, the announcement of Caruso's exclusive engagement during the next four years should certainly stimulate the attendance on the occasions of his appearance during the remainder of the present season at Covent Garden, even though it does not necessarily follow that he will not be heard in London again during the next four years. The New York opera season, it must be remembered, does not conflict at all with that of Covent Garden, and Mr. Conried will probably be only too glad to sublet his "star" for a proper consideration. It is stated, indeed, that arrangements to this end with the Paris opera authorities have already been made. But even so, it is just possible that Mr. Conried may find before he has finished that he has, in Transatlantic parlance, bitten off more than he can chew.

Concerts are coming thick and fast now. On Saturday at the Bechstein Hall Mme. Kirkby Lunn's only song recital of the present season drew a very large audience. It is rare to be able to say of an English singer that she is heard to even better advantage in the opera than in songs, which is Mme. Kirkby Lunn's case. But how many, even so, would be glad to sing as she does in the concert-room? On the same afternoon Herr Backhaus played brilliantly and fluently as usual at the Queen's Hall, while in the evening, at Miss Mathilde Verne's concert, Miss Marie Brema brought forward a new song cycle, "James Lee's Wife" (based, of course, on Browning's poem), by Arthur Somervell, which contained many pleasant if some rather laboured passages. One of the advertisements of this work, by the way, rather amusingly described it as a "new song cycle selected from her poems by Robert Browning"—the compiler of which evidently considered that Mrs. James Lee was the writer of the words.

Miss Lola Rally, who gave a vocal recital earlier in the week, has a very agreeable voice, of which she will probably make still more with further study. Miss Alice Ripper, a clever young pianist who has also been appearing again, is another who may be expected to develop her powers considerably yet. A recent orchestral concert of note was that of the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Señor Arbos, at which Godowsky showed that he can play as perfectly in a concerto as in solos. A concert of a different kind which was a great success was that organised by the indefatigable Dr. Charles Harriss in recognition of Empire Day. This week a remarkable number of violinists are appearing. Mr. Francis Macmillen led the way on Monday, on Tuesday Mischa Elman and Mr. Theodore Spiering were announced to appear, on Wednesday Herr Kubelik, on Thursday Lady Hallé (at the Philharmonic), and on Saturday Herr Kreisler and little Miss Sybil Keymer.

M. Kussewitzky, the Russian double-bass player, upon whom the mantle of Bottesini and Dragonetti would seem to have fallen, is certainly a brilliant executant on his ponderous instrument—the quality of tone which he produces and the seeming ease with which he plays florid passages being equally astonishing. Probably indeed only a double-bass player is capable of fully appreciating the merits of his performances. Unlike his great predecessor Bottesini, he employs a full-size instrument with four strings, though he resembles the former in that he does not rely exclusively on fireworks for his effects, but plays always as a cultivated musician. Whether the thing is worth doing is another matter. In one respect, at least, the double-bass virtuoso has an advantage; his rivals are never numerous.

A rather notable instrumentalist of a totally different order who is visiting London just now is the Swedish ballad singer and lute player, Herr Scholander, who has come, it is said, in response to a suggestion of the Queen, who was much pleased by some of his performances during one of her visits to Denmark. If the double bass is one of the most powerful stringed instruments, the lute is probably the most delicate. Mr. Dolmetsch, at his concerts of the old music, used to provide concert-goers with the opportunity of hearing it sometimes, but most modern music lovers' acquaintance with it is probably confined to that which they derive from its employment by Herr Beckmesser in "Die Meistersinger." Yet there are enthusiasts who declare that no more beautiful stringed instrument has ever been invented. Mr. Scholander, the latter-day successor of the Gaultiers and other famous lutenists of the past, sings, and to some extent acts, as he plays, and all, according to report, in a very effective manner.

Thomas Goode & Co.—China, glass, pottery, fireproof ware. Sole agents in the United Kingdom for the famous "Bi Métal" (copper lined with pure sheet silver) Cooking Utensils. Illustrated catalogues free.—South Audley-street, London.

To cut or not to cut? That is an old question which has been raised anew by the recent unabbreviated performances of "Lohengrin" and "Tannhäuser" at Covent Garden. Is there any real reason why the longueurs of these particular operas should not be reduced. It is the fashion, of course, of some enthusiasts to declare that when the parts usually omitted are restored, the performance seems positively shorter on this account. But this is a transcendental way of looking at the thing which is beyond the capacity of most. The truth of the matter is that both "Lohengrin" and "Tannhäuser" cry aloud for the blue pencil. The point involved is really less an æsthetic question than the limits of human endurance. Four hours' solid music, whether good or bad, is too much for any one. Suppose the works as Wagner wrote them ran to five or six hours instead of four, would it still be maintained that every note must be endured? Yet, if cuts would be justified in that case, why not in the works as they stand?

It is a great pity, of course, that Wagner wrote at such length in the first place, but it was his besetting sin to overdo matters in this respect. Carried away by his subjects, he never knew when to stop. As it used to be expressed, he left nothing in his ink-pot. As a consequence, the enjoyment of the noblest operas ever written is marred for nearly all by the undue demands which they make upon the hearer's receptive faculties. If the highest art implies the perfect adaptation of the means to the end, it was really a serious æsthetic error which Wagner here committed. This being so, why not recognise the facts and reduce the works to more reasonable dimensions? The same reasoning applies in the case of "Die Meistersinger," though here it must be confessed there is little that could be spared without a pang.

The recent performances of the last-named work must be ranked among the finest ever heard at Covent Garden. Herr Jörn's Walther was particularly successful, while Van Rooy's Sachs is incomparable as ever. In "Lohengrin," Herr Cornelius increased the good opinions produced by his earlier appearances, and in "Tannhäuser" it was pleasant to hear Herr Knote again. Caruso drew a big house to hear "La Traviata" on Saturday, but Melba was unfortunately an absentee, as she was also in the case of "La Bohème" on Monday, Mme. Donalda proving an efficient substitute on both occasions.

The dearth of good tenors is once more a subject of discussion, and Dr. W. H. Cummings (a tenor of note himself in his day) has been giving the reason:—

> In comparison with baritones and basses, genuine tenors are rare, and are therefore greatly in demand. The result is that a tenor student, instead of waiting to be properly trained, and refraining from singing in public, say for three years, rushes off to secure engagements, and ruins what might have been a good voice.

There is no doubt an element of truth in this. Every one is in a hurry nowadays, and not tenors only, but all other vocalists come before the public before their voices have been half-trained according to the older ideals. It was, if I remember rightly, Von Bülow who declared that the tenor was not a man, but a disease; the complaint to-day would seem to be that the disease is not nearly so prevalent as might be wished. Meanwhile, Lady Milnes Gaskell declares that she has discovered a tenor possessed of the makings of a really great voice in the person of a Wakefield tram-driver rejoicing in the unromantic name of Potts, and the public are invited to contribute to a fund for his maintenance and training.

London seems to possess an extraordinary attraction for the foreign singing teacher. The other day it was M. Edouard de Reszke to whom welcome was extended, earlier still it was M. Maurel, and now it is announced that Frau Nikisch is shortly proposing to open classes here. Frau Nikisch, who was formerly an opera singer herself, has for some time past enjoyed a great reputation as a teacher. A native of Brussels, whose mother tongue is therefore French, she attended the Cologne Conservatoire while it was under the direction of Ferdinand Hiller, and studied singing and acting under the operatic tenor Schneider. In opera she herself played soubrette parts, but after her marriage with Nikisch, then conducting the Leipsic opera, she assumed the unusual rôle for a woman of régisseur, and became responsible in this capacity for the setting of all the Leipsic operas. Her opportunities, therefore, have not been slight, and seemingly she has turned them to good account.

A scholarship for drumming! It is Mr. Albert Visetti, who, whether in jest or earnest I am not quite sure, has made the suggestion. Good drummers, he slily suggests, are at least as likely to be turned out in this way as good conductors. The notion that any one can play the drum, or that the art is, at any rate, very readily acquired, is, of course, a delusion. Two qualities are essential to the good drummer—a perfect ear and a fine sense of rhythm, and no musician, at any rate, needs to be told of the enormous importance of the drum part in many modern works. Beethoven loved the drum, as he did all the other instruments which he made to do so much, and first gave it individuality, obtaining, indeed, some of his most wonderful and characteristic effects by its means—as in the opening of the violin concerto and in the scherzo of the Choral. Berlioz later made much of it, and no one needs to be reminded of the use to which Strauss puts it in "Ein Heldenleben." Elgar is another modern composer who has turned it to original account in his "Enigma" variations, in one of which the drummer is enjoined to lay aside his sticks and use instead, if I am not mistaken, a couple of pennies, whereby a quite distinctive effect is secured. But the number of notable drum passages which might be cited is almost endless.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—The King is a reformer in more ways than one. It is to his Majesty that we owe the abbreviation of the once long-drawn-out dinner. For this it is impossible to be sufficiently grateful. Those who remember the 2½-hour dinner, and the atmosphere of even the best-ventilated dining-room as it neared the close, understand the dimensions of the debt of gratitude. His Majesty is also a reformer in the matter of colour in clothes. His taste rebelled against the monotony of black, grey, or dark blue for outdoor wear, with but a pale-tinted tie for relief, and possibly a white waistcoat. The Edwardian waistcoat is a thing of sweetness and light, and various as Cleopatra herself. A man's waistcoats are a real joy to him now. How he must bless his stars that he did not wear his youth in the dreary days when tailors merely made waistcoats (I have a haunting fancy that they call them vests) to match suits. And tailors themselves must be thankful to the King for initiating so profitable and agreeable a change. Profitable; that goes without saying. Agreeable? Yes; a tailor is a poet in his way, and what an airing he can give his fancy when he dwells on thoughts of waistcoats (vests) as they now may be! Tints borrowed from moor and sea, from sky and woody dale, from purple clouds and rosy dawns, pass in fair array before his mental vision, and charm his imagination. What chance was there of any Pegasian exercise of the kind in the old days when the waistcoat was cut from the same cloth as the rest of the suit?

Redfern.—Exclusive and original Models in Walking, Dinner and Evening Gowns, Theatre Wraps, &c. Paris millinery, lingerie, blouses, &c.—Redfern, Conduit-street and Bond-street.

I am so vexed with Charlie for not being able to tell me what kind of waistcoat the King wore at Kempton. He told me that his Majesty wore a grey suit, a brown bowler hat, a rose-pink shirt, and a lavender tie. And Charlie never looked at the Royal waistcoat!

Yes. The King is a cheerful dresser. It is his nature to. We often think of what a little Parisienne said to us in Paris last year. "Your King Edouard he knows to amuse himself; he is so—so—vary joyful."

I remember asking Charlie what the Queen had on once when he had the felicity of seeing her Majesty quite near. He said: "Something grey or blue or black, I can't quite remember, and a nodding thing on her beautiful head." What a description!

The river season began on Saturday about 10 a.m. in the most perfect weather imaginable, and lasted until about 3 p.m. The river season then left off abruptly, with a scurry of white-skirted girls and their flannelled friends. What a scene it was when the rain came down steadily and a flash of lightning was followed by thunder roaring in the distance. Nearly every girl on the river had a white hat, the material of which was far from well adapted to resist the wet. Yet many had come forth without even a sunshade. The white linen girls suffered most, their snowy shoes soon turning grey. It was quite pitiful. Jupiter Pluvius having intervened, the river season was unanimously adjourned sine die.

I have been taking Muriel (who is over from Canada) shopping. She is charmed with all she sees, and wants to order from each different house, as what she says is quite true; each seems to have an individual style of its own.

Poor Muriel, though, is rather worried over hats. She is a strong adherent to the smart little toque, and was so delighted to find Marie Tempest, in "Truth," sticking, as she calls it, to her jaunty little headgear, in spite of the rage for huge hats. 'Tis rather interesting going round to the various milliners in London (for we have been to all quarters of the Metropolis), and to find how "locality" influences the market, as Reggie says, we popped into a huge shop Leicester-square way, and found hundreds of hats to choose from, and very cheap indeed.

We walked up Regent-street to the very top, and I saw French models quite a guinea cheaper than at certain fashionable showrooms. We found such smart toques (and how difficult it is to get them now) in quite a small shop in Lower Belgrave-street; I think it was there or somewhere in that vicinity. Then at Harrod's Stores we were bewildered with the maze of hats, and such hats, ranging from 35s. to—well, I dare not even whisper it! But I must tell you of some of the wickedness of the age. Can you imagine any woman, no matter what her income may be, giving twenty-four guineas for a covering for her head? But, alas! 'tis true, and the people who sold it tell me that it was the exact price they gave for the model in Paris; it was only a plain straw hat, but the whole expense lay in the mass of osprey which trimmed the entire front. What would our kind Queen think of this, I wonder? I am afraid that her humane endeavours to prevent the use of the osprey for the adornment of our hats and coiffures have not met with much success. I notice that at the Opera several personal friends of the Queen still adhere to them and that even some of our Royalties themselves wear them in their hats and toques. Is it any wonder that poor, weak humanity follows in their wake? We, Muriel and I, were horrified at the utter impossibility of buying anything now at a reasonable price without the greatest tact and discretion; for instance, I thought to be very clever and copy one of the beautiful model hats I saw—it was only a mere straw hat with a huge bunch of Liberty silk bows and a "mount" of soft feathers. Well, the hat I wanted, untrimmed, was 39s. 6d., so I "let it stay at that," and did not even venture to enquire the price for the "little mount!"

I must tell you of some pretty frocks I saw at Bosworth's. You remember the beautiful long room at 9, New Burlington-street, where we saw the green cloth costume you admired so much? I wished you had been with me to see the long procession of lovely gowns that floated before us on graceful girls. You and I nearly always like the same things, so I am sure you would have admired a light grey check cotton voile made with a piece strapped down the front of the skirt, which fell full and in easy folds. A shaped piece was arranged in vandykes above the hem. The bodice was all pleats from shoulders to waist and the fronts were edged with Nattier blue velvet. A jabot, just like that of a cavalier of the olden days, filled in the space between. The belt had three bands of the Nattier blue velvet. The sleeves of this ideal summer gown came below the elbows and were finished with very dainty cuffs. A cream-coloured voile in kimono style was made over brightly-tinted satin, and it is useful to know that any combination of colours can be made up in this way. Straps of satin, in a rather more yellowish cream than the material of the bodice itself, trimmed the dress very effectively, the material caught in fine clusters of gathers between. The full bodice opened over a lace vest and the kimono sleeves did not hide much of the full net and lace ones that ended in elaborate cuffs near the elbows.

The sweetest little sleeveless coat was a feature of another cream-coloured gown striped in two shades, the skirt, disposed in pleats and strappings, so smart. A cream silk blouse, much frilled and fretted with Valenciennes, and a red scarf with white spots was knotted at the neck after passing under a little collar of embroidered lawn. The coat was embroidered and finished with lines of passementerie on the front and kimono sleeves. A lovely hat to be worn with this was in cream-coloured crinoline trimmed with shaded pink and aubergine roses. Then there was a fine voile, striped white and magenta, made with a very full skirt finished simply in a deep hem; a dark blue voile elaborately trimmed with black satin strappings and narrow black braid, the coat with a dear little basque, and with a pale blue silk collar.

I must not forget to tell you of the new Spanish cape that Bosworth is so successfully doing for this season. It is extremely full, being cut in a great circle but with wide corners that turn back to show the pretty lining, and finished with two or three buttons and silk loops. So useful for the garden on chilly evenings, or for the carriage when one expects to get back late. There is nothing to fasten. The cape holds on by reason of its cleverly planned corners.

Princess Christian presides over the Annual Summer Sale at the Royal School of Art Needlework, Exhibition-road, this week. It is a wonderful place for picking up beautiful and interesting things of every kind; old prints, old silver, glass, china and pewter, antique bronze and copper, furniture of the rarer sorts, old cabinets of every period and from every country, and endless choice of bric-à-brac. We never think of going anywhere else when we want to buy a wedding present. The Princess has now added a new department to the school, of which her Royal Highness is president, viz., that of embroidering dresses. The difficulty lay in getting orders for dresses without undertaking the further process of making them up. But now arrangements have been made with a dressmaking firm that is not only willing to introduce English embroidery on gowns, but eventually to use it exclusively, so that the work may all be done in England instead of being sent abroad, and good British money with it. As the demand Important to Ladies. — You can get the real genuine Horrockses' Longclothis and Flannelettes if you insist on seeing this stamp on the selvedge: 'Horrockses.' Obtainable from the principal Drapers. Over a century's reputation.

Corset Krutoid.—The latest nouveauté Parisien in tricot forms an elegant and smart up-to-date contour and lengthens the waist line.—Write or call at Mesdames Sykes, Josephine, & Co., The Royal Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, London.

for embroidery on dress increases yearly, there is every chance of a prosperous career for this undertaking. I have often wondered why the exquisite embroidery at the Royal School has not been applied to dress. The specimens shown this week will almost certainly produce an encouraging result. The Princess announces, too, that more than one theatrical manager has expressed an intention of joining in the experiment. This will give the work a great stimulus, for we all know that dresses on the stage are copied by thousands.

I see that the Summer Sale of the Working Ladies' Guild, Brompton-road, will be held on Thursday and Friday of this week at the Queen's Westminster Drill Hall, Buckingham Gate, by permission of Col. G. H. Trollope. It is announced that Princess Henry of Battenberg will open the sale at 2 o'clock and preside.

Some very excellent work is done in arts and crafts by members of the Lyceum Club. Such a number of girls now work in this direction, that the series of demonstrations to be given during the next month should prove interesting. They will deal with jewellery, bookbinding, leather work, colour blocks, lithography, etching, illuminating, weaving and spinning, lace-making, etc. Admission is free, the presenting of a visiting card being the only necessary formality.

At the interesting Travel Exhibition I had a little talk with John Strange Winter about her (she is Mrs. Arthur Stannard, you know) preparations that have met with such a genuine success. She told me some surprising things about the price of some of the ingredients she uses. One essence costs 9s. per ounce, another 12s.; and as the temptation to use some cheap and worthless imitation at 6d. per ounce might prove too strong for an employee, John Strange mixes with her own hands every bottle of the Temple Cream in which it is used. She attributes to this prudent care the remarkable success of the cream, the use of which is to induce hair to grow on the temples and eyebrows, avoiding the very ugly bald effect of thinning hair. No less than four gold medals have been awarded to Mrs. Stannard's Hair Food and other preparations. I remember telling you how delightful her Marquise soap makes the hands feel. I asked her about your hair falling out, and her answer was: "Tell her that trying first one thing and then another is simply loss of time and trouble." Not a word about her excellent hair food, which did such wonders for Nina's lovely hair when it fell out after her severe illness; and she only used two bottles. I suppose there is really nothing (except a blotchy complexion) more disfiguring than thin, weak hair. So get a bottle at once, and begin the treatment.

I have received the following from Mona:—

My Dear Madge,—Yes, I think you may safely plant your dahlias outside now. Being natives of Mexico, they are very tender, and in the north it would be prudent to wait another week or so, but in your neighbourhood there is not likely to be a frost severe enough to injure them. The general practice is to plant them in land which has been very heavily manured, but personally I do not recommend it; for while it undoubtedly causes dahlias to grow strongly, it for that very reason delays their flowering. Perhaps this needs some explanation. In plants of all kinds flowers are not produced at the same time as growth—at least, in any numbers; they either precede or follow it. In the case of shrubs and trees which bloom in spring, they are produced at the beginning of growth, often before it is visible; in the case of annuals, biennials, and the majority of herbaceous perennials which bloom towards the close of summer, they are produced at the end of growth. They are often regarded as causes of weakness, as in such plants as the bamboo, which dies after flowering, but they really are symptoms of weakness—or, rather, of a thickened condition of the sap, such as one might expect very early or very late in the year, before it has begun or after it has ceased to flow freely. Dahlias belong to the herbaceous perennial class. They flower so late that they have rarely, if ever, finished when they are cut down by frost. Obviously, then, our endeavour should be to force them into flower early, and so to extend their season as much as possible. This can be done by starting them in hothouses and keeping them there until it is safe to plant them out, but few can afford to give them the space which they require. The only other method is to treat them in the ordinary way, and, when they are planted out, to check their growth by limiting the supply of food and moisture—in other words, to plant them in soil which is not very rich, and to give them less water than is usually done. When treated thus, they very soon begin to flower. That is the time to feed them, not before. The ground around them should then be soaked with water two or three times a week, and some artificial fertiliser mixed with it once a week. If a mulch of litter can be laid over the roots it will check evaporation, and less water will be needed. In this way not only can a large number of flowers be obtained for a long time, but also they will be of a large size.

But thinning is essential. Grown as a dense bush, a dahlia wastes its energies on the growth of a great many shoots which are so crowded, so shut out from light and air, that they cannot but be useless, and the majority of the flowers which are produced are hidden by the mass of the foliage. It is impossible to lay down any general rule about thinning; it is more a matter of common sense than anything else. All I can say is that every shoot should have sufficient space for its future development, and that there should be very little overlapping of the leaves. As many shoots should be removed as may be necessary to satisfy this condition—completely removed, cut off close to the main stem. Each stem should be tied to its own stake. If several of them are bunched together, the object of thinning is defeated, and as they are very brittle, some are also sure to be broken. It is seldom safe to trust last year's stakes—at any rate, without testing. A full-grown dahlia offers a large surface to the wind, and in an autumn gale needs a very strong support to hold it erect. But do not, whatever you do, put ugly flower-pots on top of the stakes as earwig traps. If this were really necessary, I should not grow dahlias at all, for it utterly spoils the appearance of the plants. I know that earwigs are often very troublesome, but there are other and better ways of trapping them. If you will buy a few bamboo canes, not very thick, and cut them into short lengths, hollow from end to end, and hang them from the sticks so that they are hidden by the leaves, they will be quite as effective as flower-pots, and at the same time will not spoil the look of the plants. When they are examined, a sharp tap will cause any earwigs lurking in them to tumble out.

Your trouble with clematises is a very common one. They

SERIES: Per 100 Per 10

No. 555 (Standard Grade) 4/9 6D.

ASTORIAS (Billiard Room Size) 6/6 9D.

No. 111 By weight only. 10D. Per OZ. (About 25.)

Obtainable of all Tobacconists and Stores throughout the World.

Manufactured in LONDON by ARDATH TOBACCO CO., State Express Works, E.C.

STATE EXPRESS CIGARETTES

are the only Virginian Cigarettes which have ever appealed to all discriminating Smokers, and have the strong support and approval of the medical profession.

grow well for a time, then one shoot suddenly collapses, and then another, and finally the whole plant dies. The fault is due to grafting—sometimes an imperfect junction, sometimes an improper stock. Grafting, being the speediest method of propagation, is the one almost invariably practised, and, as you have found, the results are not always satisfactory. If you propose to buy any fresh clematises, try to get some which have been raised from layers or cuttings. They will cost rather more, but will be worth the extra money. As regards any plants that you still have, train some of the shoots along the ground and layer them before you finally take them upwards. In this way you will soon get them on their own roots, after which you are not likely to have any more trouble with them.

I do not think you would find a clematis satisfactory on a north-west wall. For that position I strongly recommend Tropæolum speciosum. If the conditions suit it—soil deep and moist and aspect cool—it is a magnificent climber, covered with scarlet flowers late in summer, and, though very fine on a wall, it really looks best when it is allowed to ramble freely among shrubs and trees, as it does in the Royal Horticultural Society's gardens at Wisley. It should be planted out from pots without disturbing the roots. It gives no trouble after it is once well established, but it is rather slow in getting accustomed to fresh ground. Many people who have tried to grow it have failed, and have given as the reason excessive warmth. I am inclined to think it more likely to be slugs. We could not grow this beautiful tropæolum at first, but after discovering that the tiny young shoots, soon after they came through the ground, were cut off by slugs, we took our precautions, and since then our plants have grown as luxuriantly as they do on the west coast of Scotland, where they are a sight worth going far to see in early autumn.—Your affectionate cousin, MONA.

Here are some tempting recipes for you. Roman pie is an excellent réchauffé:—

Line a piedish with puff paste and fill it with alternate layers of shredded cooked white fish, pieces of boiled macaroni and grated cheese; when the dish is filled pour in sufficient good cream to moisten the contents, cover them with pastry, and bake the pie about an hour in a moderate oven. Turn the pie out on a dish and serve round it a little creamy white sauce made with the stock from the fish bones.

Try this pain de lièvre:—

Take the meat from the bones of a cold, roast hare and stew it with stock for an hour or longer. Chop the bones and draw them down in a stewpan with minced bacon, onion, and celery, herbs, and an ounce of butter. When they have acquired a nice colour, add a wineglass of sherry and simmer them for two or three hours, then strain them, reduce the liquor, making it into a little very good sauce. Pound the meat, which should have cooled, add the sauce, and half a gill of cold, liquid aspic, season it with salt and pepper, and put it through a wire sieve. Pour a little aspic into a plain mould, and when it is set, decorate it with truffle, place a large bottle in the centre, and when the jelly is firm fill the cavity with the farce. Pour a little jelly on the top, and, when set, turn it on to a dish and garnish with chopped aspic and dice-shaped pieces of seasoned beetroot and bunches of curled celery.

Ever your loving cousin, MADGE.

DIAMOND RINGS & ORNAMENTS

Finest Quality, below Store and usual West End Prices.

SPINK & SON, LTD.,

DIAMOND AND PEARL MERCHANTS,
17 & 18, PICCADILLY, W., and 30, CORNHILL,
LONDON, E.C. Est. 1772.

BENSON'S

SELECTED GEM RINGS.

Brilliants, £12.

Brilliants and Rubies, or Sapphires, £17.

Amethyst, Diamond Points, £6 6s.

Brilliants, £18.

"The Times"
MONTHLY PAYMENT SYSTEM
IS AVAILABLE.

Illustrated Books: No. 1 of Rings, Watches, Chains; No. 2 of Clocks, Plate, Bags, and Silver Goods, post free. Mention TRUTH.

Brilliant, with Ruby Eyes, £6 6s.

62 & 64, Ludgate Hill, E.C.
and 25, OLD BOND STREET, W.

THE MUTUAL LIFE
INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Announces the issue of
NEW FORMS OF CONTRACT
providing for
ANNUAL CASH DIVIDENDS
with several options each year.

Liberal Loan and Surrender Values and Various Modes of Settlement.

FUNDS OVER £100,000,000 SECURELY INVESTED.

Apply for particulars Head Office for the United Kingdom—
16, 17, 18, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.
J. H. HARRISON HOGGE, General Manager.

SINGER CYCLES

BEST OF ALL. BEST FOR ALL.

YOU CAN LOOK THE WHOLE WORLD IN THE FACE

without fear of criticism if your new Cycle is a SINGER—the very name suggests all that is most desirable in a Cycle. To taste the refinement of cycling pleasure one must ride with The Singer Perfect Oil Bath Case.

TERMS TO SUIT ALL INCOMES.

WRITE FOR LISTS.

Dept. T., SINGER & CO., Ltd., COVENTRY.

The Ancient Writing Paper of the Priests.

Court Envelopes, 1s. per 100.
Mourning Envelopes, 1s. 6d. per 100.

Thin, for Foreign Correspondence, 5 Quires, 1s.
Mourning Note, 5 Quires, 1s. 6d.

HIERATICA

NOTE PAPER
5 Quires, 1s.
(Regd.).

Every Sheet and Envelope Watermarked HIERATICA. Reject imitations. Any difficulty in obtaining, send stamps to our new address, Hieratica Works, Hill-street, Finsbury, London, E.C. Sample free. Parcels carriage paid in U.K.

BAILEY'S HOTEL LONDON

The most comfortable Hotel in London. GLOUCESTER ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON. Self-contained Suites.

Telephone No. 567 Kensington. Telegrams—"Bailey's Hotel, London."

COUNTRY HOUSE AGENTS' LIST.

BRIGHTON & HOVE.—A. F. GRAVES, Auctioneer and Estate Agent, 9, North-street-quadrant, BRIGHTON. For particulars of all houses to be LET or SOLD, apply as above.

BOURNEMOUTH.—JOLLIFFE & FLINT, Estate and House Agents. Lists of Furnished and Unfurnished Houses for Sale or Let, free by post.—Offices, 1, Arcade, Bournemouth.

COWES.—MESSRS. MARVINS, Princes Buildings. Agency for Sale, Purchase, or Charter of Yachts. Also House and Estate Agency for Isle of Wight. Established 1858 and patronised by Royalty.

EASTBOURNE HOUSES.—MESSRS. LAKE & CROWDER, Auctioneers, Surveyors, and Valuers, opposite the railway station. Telephone 8. Y. Agents for all the principal furnished and unfurnished houses

OXFORD and READING.—HAMLET & DULAKE, Estate Agents, Auctioneers, Valuers, and Surveyors. Illustrated property list and all information gratis to applicants.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

WILLIS'S ROOMS, KING-STREET, ST. JAMES'S-SQUARE, S.W.
Under an order of the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division. By direction of the Trustees of the Settled Estates of Sir Robert Peel, Bart., of Drayton Manor, Tamworth, Staffs.
The well-known picture by Sir Thomas Lawrence, P.R.A., engraved by S. Cousins, R.A., entitled "Childhood's Innocence," being a portrait of Julia Countess of Jersey as a child.
MESSRS. ROBINSON & FISHER are instructed to SELL, at their Rooms, as above, on THURSDAY, JUNE 6th, at 4 o'clock precisely, the above important Example by Sir Thomas Lawrence, P.R.A.
May be viewed three days prior, and catalogues had of Messrs. DANGERFIELD & BLYTH, Solicitors, 26, Craven-street, Strand; of Messrs. LUMLEY & LUMLEY, Solicitors, 15, Old Jewry-chambers, E.C., and 37, Conduit-street, W.; and of the Auctioneers, at their offices, as above.

TATTERSALLS.

Messrs. Tattersall beg to give NOTICE that their Thursday Sales have commenced and will be continued during the Season.
Sales every Monday and Thursday.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS, sent gratis, with full particulars. Schools also recommended. Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 22, Craven-street, Trafalgar-sq., W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 Gerrard.

Patterns and Illustrated Catalogues Post Free.

COPLAND & LYE'S
"CALEDONIAN"
SCOTCH TWEED SKIRT
21/- In Stock Sizes. 21/-
Carriage Paid in the U.K.
Made to Measure, 2/- Extra.
Handsome Golf or "rainy day" Skirt in Stylish Checks and Plain TWEEDS.

COPLAND & LYE'S
Famous
SCOTCH TARTAN SKIRTS
in the principal Clan Tartans
Price 42/- Carriage Paid.

Scotch Winceys
from 1/- per yard.

THE LEADING SPECIALISTS IN SCOTCH TEXTILES.

COPLAND & LYE, Caledonian House, Sauchiehall Street, GLASGOW

TYPEWRITERS

M88. Copied.

Great Bargains for Sale, Hire, or Exchange. Shorthand and Typists sent out with machines from £1 per week.

Ring up—4881 Holborn.
8325 Bank. 7093 Central.

TAYLORS LTD., 74, Chancery Lane, London.
And at 92, QUEEN STREET, E.C. (Cheapside End).

APPEAL.

METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL SUNDAY FUND.
PATRON—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
Hospital Sunday, June 9, 1907.
Clergymen and Ministers of Religion who have not received the Official Posting Bills, &c., by Friday, May 31, are requested to make their wants immediately known to the Secretary, at the Mansion House, E.C.

SOUTH EASTERN AND CHATHAM RAILWAY.

EPSOM RACES.

June 4, 5, 6, & 7.

BOOK TO TATTENHAM CORNER, THE ONLY STATION ACTUALLY ON THE COURSE.

From Charing Cross, Waterloo Junction, St. Paul's, Cannon Street, and London Bridge.
Additional Direct Trains (1st class only) will leave Charing Cross at 11.35 a.m. (Derby day only), 11.50 a.m. and 12.15 p.m. Returning from Tattenham Corner at 5.15 and 5.25 p.m.
The last Special Train will leave Charing Cross at 12.30 p.m.
Fast Trains will leave Tattenham Corner Station at 4.0 (Derby Day only), 4.20, and 4.50 p.m. for London Bridge, Cannon Street, Waterloo, and Charing Cross, also at frequent intervals after the Races for London Bridge, Cannon Street, St. Paul's, Waterloo, and Charing Cross.
For Fares and further particulars, see Time Cards and Bills.
VINCENT W. HILL, General Manager.

BRIGHTON & SOUTH COAST RAILWAY.
The quickest and best route to the
EPSOM RACES, June 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th. FAST AND FREQUENT TRAINS direct to the Epsom Downs (Racecourse Station, near Grand Stand) and Epsom Town from VICTORIA, KENSINGTON (Addison-road), CLAPHAM JUNCTION, and LONDON BRIDGE, on all four days of the Races.
Through Tickets to Epsom Downs via London Bridge from all Stations on the Great Northern and City, and the City and South London Electric Railways.
THROUGH BOOKINGS from principal Stations on the London and North Western, Great Western, Great Northern, Great Central and Midland Railways.
A Special Through Train will run from Willesden at 10.15 a.m. on June 5th, Derby Day, and 11.15 a.m. on June 4th, 6th, and 7th.
THE SPECIAL EXPRESS TICKETS may be obtained on and from June 1st at the Company's Office, 28, Regent-street, which will remain open until 10.0 p.m., June 3rd, 4th, 5th, and 6th, also at Hays', 26, Old Bond-street, and 4, Royal Exchange-buildings, and at Cook's, Pickford's, and Myers' Offices.
Details of Supt. of the Line, L.B.S.C.R., London Bridge.

AMUSEMENTS.

ROYAL OPERA. Covent Garden.
GRAND OPERA EVERY EVENING.
(For full particulars see Daily Papers.)
Box-office, 10 to 10.

HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE. Mr. TREE.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30.
A WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE, By Oscar Wilde.
Lord Illingworth ... ... Mr. TREE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.30.

ST. JAMES'S, KING STREET, PALL MALL. Tel. 3903 Gerrard.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a New and Original Play,
JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOUR, by ALFRED SUTRO.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER. Miss EVA MOORE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING at 8 (doors open 7.40), a new musical play entitled,
THE GIRLS OF GOTTENBERG.
MATINEE TO-DAY (WEDNESDAY) at 2 (doors open 1.40).
Box-office open daily from 10 till 10.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.—Lessees and Managers, A. & S. GATTI. EVERY EVENING at 9.0,
MR. GEORGE,
by Mr. Louis N. Parker. Mr. Charles Hawtrey. At 8.15, JEMMY, by Louis N. Parker. Matinees, Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2.15.

APOLLO. EVERY EVENING AT 8.10.
HENRY LOWENFELD, Sole Proprietor.
Tom B. Davis, Sole Lessee and Manager.
ROBERT COURTNEIDGE'S Production,
TOM JONES.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.

SAVOY.—GONDOLIERS, WEDNESDAY and FRIDAY, 8.25, PATIENCE, THURSDAY and SATURDAY, 8.25, YEOMEN OF THE GUARD, SATURDAY AFTERNOON, 2.30.

GARRICK THEATRE. Mr. ARTHUR BOURCHIER and Miss VIOLET VANBRUGH. EVERY EVENING at 9 in
THE DUEL, by Henri Lavedan. (Last Week for the present).
At 8, "Doctor Johnson," by Leo Trevor.
LAST two MATINEES TO-DAY (Wednesday) and SATURDAY at 2.

CRITERION THEATRE (next door to Piccadilly Circus Tube Station). Lessee, SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM. Every Evening at 8.30, CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company in
THE LIARS,
by Henry Arthur Jones. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY at 2.30.

THE PLAYHOUSE, Northumberland-avenue.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. Cyril Maude. EVENINGS at 9. MATINEES, WEDS. and SATS. at 3 (by arrangement with Mr. Charles Frohman).
CYRIL MAUDE as TODDLES. 2nd Edition. At 8.20 and 2.20. THE DRUMS OF OUDE. All seats, including gallery, can be booked. Tel., 14,042 Central

LYRIC THEATRE. Mr. LEWIS WALLER.
Lessee, Mr. William Greet. Under the Management of Mr. Tom B. Davis.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a play in four acts by Tom Taylor, entitled
CLANCARTY.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

WALDORF THEATRE, Aldwych, Strand, W.C.
LAST 3 NIGHTS, at 8 PROMPTLY
E. H. SOTHERN and JULIA MARLOWE.
MAT. TO-DAY and TO-NIGHT,
ROMEO AND JULIET.
Thursday and Friday Evenings,
TWELFTH NIGHT.
Farewell Performance, Friday Evg., May 31.
Box-office open 10 to 10. Tel. 3340 Gerrard.

ALHAMBRA.—New Ballet, "QUEEN of SPADES," Mlle. Alexia, Danseuse de Genre; Maria Vinent, Millman Trio, Urbanora, Up-to-date Pictures, "L'AMOUR," and Grand Varieties. Doors 7.45.
Manager, GEORGE SCOTT.

EMPIRE, Leicester Sq.—New Ballet, SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY. Mlle. Adeline Genée, Première Danseuse, The Debutante, the Perezoffs, Le Pages, the Biograph, &c. Every Evening at 8.
Manager, Mr. H. J. HITCHINS.

PALACE.—EVIE GREENE, HORACE GOLDIN, MARGARET COOPER, LES TROMBETTA, &c. THE JUBILEE HANDICAP, &c., on BIOSCOPE. EVENINGS 8 (doors 7.45). MATINEE, FULL PROGRAMME, EVERY SATURDAY at 2.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION.—Brightest and most comfortable Promenade in London. Lifelike Portrait Models of T.M. The King and Queen of Spain. Madame Tussaud's Exhibition Band. Open 9 till 10.

LONDON HIPPODROME.
TWICE DAILY, at 2 and 8 p.m.
MIRTH, MYSTERY, AND SENSATION.
AQUATIC, STAGE, AND EQUESTRIAN SPECTACLE.

MASKELYNE AND DEVANT'S MYSTERIES.—St. GEORGE'S HALL, W.—DAILY at 3 and 8. "Spectres of the Sanctum," a new Theosophical and Spiritualistic Sketch, invented by J. N. Maskelyne. £1,000 Ghost and new Manifestations. Seats 1s. to 5s.; children half-price. Babies not admitted. 'Phone, 1545 Mayfair.

EXHIBITIONS.

GRAFTON GALLERIES, Grafton Street, W.
EXHIBITION OF FRENCH PAINTINGS in WATER-COLOURS.
Open daily 10 to 6. Admission 1s., including Catalogue.
Organised by EUGENE CREMETTI.

DORÉ'S GREAT MASTERPIECES.—Gardens and Landscapes by Mr. and Mrs. ALBERT STEVENS; Sculpture, Paintings, and Miniatures by 13 Women Artists; Portraits by C. B. PRESCOTT; Paintings by Miss F. Farrer. DORÉ GALLERY, 35, New Bond-st., W. 10 to 6. 1s.

JAMES CONNELL & SONS' GALLERIES.
Exhibition of selected Etchings by D. Y. CAMERON, A.R.S.A., A.R.W.S., including the New Belgian Set.
NOW ON VIEW at 47, OLD BOND STREET, W.
Admission including Catalogue, 1s.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.
SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, and includes selected Landscapes and Portraits by Early British Masters.
SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W.

CONCERTS.

BECHSTEIN HALL.—THURSDAY NEXT, at 3.15.
LOLA RALLY.
SECOND VOCAL RECITAL.
Solo Pianist,
IRENE SCHARRER.
At the Piano, Mr. COENRAAD V. BOS.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall; and usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.

BECHSTEIN HALL.
THURSDAY NEXT, at 8.15.
TILLY KOENEN.
SECOND VOCAL RECITAL.
At the Piano, COENRAAD V. BOS.
Tickets, 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. at Hall; and usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.

ÆOLIAN HALL.—Miss
ALICE RIPPER.
THIRD AND LAST PIANOFORTE RECITAL.
FRIDAY EVENING NEXT, at 8.15.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall; and usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.

BECHSTEIN HALL.
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 5, at 8.15.
ADOLF REBNER.
BRAHMS' RECITAL,
With the assistance of RICHARD EPSTEIN, Pianist.
LIONEL TERTIS, Viola.
HERBERT WITHERS, 'Cello.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall; and usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER,
Chatham House, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

QUEEN'S HALL.
QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA'S
SYMPHONY CONCERT.
THE QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.
Conductor—Mr. HENRY J. WOOD.
THURSDAY NEXT, at 3.
LAST CONCERT OF THIS SEASON.
Solo Pianoforte—M. RAOUL PUGNO.
Tickets, 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., 1s. ROBERT NEWMAN, Manager.

QUEEN'S HALL.
LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
SPECIAL BEETHOVEN CONCERT.
MONDAY NEXT, JUNE 3, at 3.
In Commemoration of Dr. HANS RICHTER'S 30 years' work in this Country.
Conductor—Dr. HANS RICHTER.
Tickets, 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., 1s., at Chappell's Box-office, Queen's Hall; usual Agents'; and L. G. SHARPE, 61, Regent-street, W.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Their Most Gracious Majesties
THE KING and QUEEN, who have graciously promised to Honour the Performance with their presence.

A GRAND CONCERT and Unique
GYMNASTIC DISPLAY will be given by Students of
THE ROYAL NORMAL COLLEGE
and
ACADEMY OF MUSIC FOR THE BLIND,
Upper Norwood, S.E. Founded 1872.
Principal: F. J. CAMPBELL, LL.D.
On MONDAY, 3rd June, at 3 p.m.

Tickets.—Boxes, £5 5s., £4 4s., £2 2s.; Stalls, 15s.; Balcony, First Three Rows 10s. 6d., Remaining Rows 7s. 6d.; Orchestra (Unreserved), 5s.; Gallery Promenade (300 seats), 2s.
Immediate application is necessary for Tickets, which can be obtained from the Royal Albert Hall; The College, Upper Norwood, S.E.; and the usual Agents.

BALKAN STATES EXHIBITION,
EARL'S COURT.
Open 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. 1s. Season Tickets, 10s. 6d. Weekly Tickets, 2s. 6d.
SERVIAN SECTION.—QUEEN'S PALACE.
BULGARIAN SECTION.—IMPERIAL COURT and GALLERIES.
MONTENEGRIN SECTION.—DUCAL HALL.
WORKING TOBACCO EXHIBITS.
Manufactures, Raw Products, Arts and Industries.
IN THE BALKAN VILLAGE.
Native Crafts and Village Industries.
50 PEASANT DANCERS and GIPSY MUSICIANS.
In the Summer Theatre—FREE.
"THROUGH THE BALKANS IN TEN MINUTES."
VIEWS of MONASTIR, SHIPKA PASS, CATTARO, &c.
GRAND MILITARY AND PROMENADE CONCERTS.

ATTRACTIONS AT THE
BALKAN STATES EXHIBITION,
EARL'S COURT.
"OLD JAPAN" IN THE EMPRESS HALL.
With its Temples, Monuments, Teahouses, and Geisha.
A COLONY OF ART MISSIONARIES.
Exhibiting every phase of their wonderful Crafts.
Spring Time in Old Japan.
A Wealth of Cherry, Peach, and Wistaria Blooms.
SEE THE WATERFALL AND THE LOTUS POND.
FUJI YAMA.—NIKKO TEMPLE AND NIKKO BRIDGE.
JAPANESE THEATRE. FREE.
"OLD JAPAN." "OLD JAPAN."
The New Great Chute—Maxim's Flying Machine.
Balkan Stalactite Caves—Gondolas on the Lake.
GREAT FREE SHOW DAILY.
The FISHING CORMORANTS.
The Helter Skelter—The Salt Mine—The Switchback.
See the NEW ILLUMINATED GARDENS.

THOMAS McLEAN'S Forty-third Annual Exhibition of Pictures of the British and Foreign Schools is now open at T. McLEAN'S GALLERY, 7, Haymarket. Admission 1s.

TRUTH FOREIGN HOTEL LIST & CONTINENTAL GUIDE.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—GRAND HOTEL HENRION CORNELIUSBAD. The Leading English house.

ALASSIO.—GRAND HOTEL, Alassio. The leading first-class house in the finest position. Electric Elevator.—A. MARSON, Prop.

ALASSIO.—HOTEL MEDITERRANÉE. Large garden. Sea view. Sheltered position. Auto. Garage. Moderate charges.—E. BOGLEOLE, Prop.

ALASSIO.—THE SALISBURY. Proprietor, Mr. JOHN CONGREVE.

BADEN-BADEN—HOTEL REGINA. Latest creation. The most up-to-date, elevated position.—J. LIPPERT, Proprietor.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL STEPHANIE. Allee of Lichtenthal. The leading Hotel.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL BRISTOL AND DÉPENDENCE. First-class. Facing baths and Sprudel. Occupying finest position.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL PRINCE OF WALES. HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL EULER. First-class. Close to Central Railway. Situated in a quiet position.—Prop. A. S. BUCHER.

BÂLE.—GD. HOTEL VICTORIA and NATIONAL. Opp. central Stn. First-class. Private apartments with bath.—Pr., PAUL OTTO.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL DE L'UNIVERS. Leading hotel. Suites of rooms with private baths.

BORDIGHERA.—HOTEL ANGST. Leading hotel. Patronised by English Society. Luxuriously furnished. English sanitation.—Proprietor, ADOLFO ANGST.

BORDIGHERA.—HOTEL ROYAL. High-class hotel. Full South. The most fashionable house. Garden.—L. PALOMBI, Prop.

BORDIGHERA.—HOTEL BELVEDERE LOMBARDI. The favourite English hotel.—Prop., G. WUNSCHMAUN. Madame is English.

BRUNNEN.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class, best situation of Brunnen. 250 beds. English billiards. American Bar.

BRUSSELS.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. Suites with private bath. Central heating.

CANNES.

CHEMIST.—GINNER & CO., Court Chemists. The English Pharmacy, 40, Rue d'Antibes, Cannes. Tel. 547.

CAPRI.—GRAND HOTEL QUISISANA. The leading first-class hotel. Every modern comfort.

CHAMOUNIX.—GRAND HOTEL IMPERIAL. The best-managed Hotel. Moderate charges.—H. BECKER.

CHATEAUX D'OEX.—GRAND and BERTHOD. 3,400 ft. Switzerland. Summer and Winter Sports.

COLOGNE.—HOTEL DISCH. The leading hotel in the town.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—GRAND HOTEL BELVEDERE. First-class.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—HOTEL VICTORIA. Favourite English House.

DRESDEN.—HOTEL BELLEVUE.—World-renowned. Very select. Situated on the Elbe and Opera Square. Suites and single rooms with private baths and toilet. Under the personal management of R. RONNEFELD.

EMS.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class.

EMS.—HOTEL FOUR SEASONS AND EUROPE. HOTEL FOUR TOWERS. First-class.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated. Full south.—Proprietor, CHIARI.

GENOA.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Apartments, with bath. Quiet rooms, garden on the fourth floor, splendid panorama.

GENOA.—GRAND HOTEL ISOTTA. Best central situation. All modern improvements. Hot water heating.—E. MOSER, Dir.

GLION, above Montreux, Swiss.—NEW PARK HOTEL. First-class. Best situation. Own park. Open whole year. Winter sports.

HOMBURG (BATH).—RITTER'S PARK HOTEL. The leading hotel. Patronised by English and American Society.—Proprietor, C. RITTER.

HOMBURG (BATH).—VICTORIA HOTEL. Very first-class in every respect. The largest, also 4 villas. Finest garden.—J. BAEHL, Pr.

HOMBURG (BATH).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Suites with private bath and lavatory. "Hygienic diet at doctor's advice."

HOMBURG (BATH).—HOTEL BELLEVUE. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Vacuum cleaning indoors.—W. FISCHER, Prop.

KISSINGEN (BAD).—HOTEL VICTORIA and KAISERHOF. The leading English house.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE & RICHMOND. Motor garage. Leading hotels. Best situation. Open whole year.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL DE LAUSANNE. First-class. Facing railway station. Latest comforts.—AD. SCHAER, Prop.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU SEJOUR. First-class family home. All latest comforts. Fine situation. Large garden.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL EUROPE. First-class. Finest situation. Very quiet. Entirely renovated. Latest improvements.—HAGEN BROS., Proprietors.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Open from March 4. In the vicinity of Station and landing boats.—G. MUTH, Proprietor.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BEAU RIVAGE. First-class family house. Write for illustrated pamphlet.—C. GIGER, Proprietor.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BELLEVUE AU LAC. First-class. Large dining-room, separate tables. Modern improvements.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. New hotel, unrivalled position, with latest improvements. The Hotel faces the English Church.—Proprietor, A. BROCCA, of Hotel Lugano.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BEAU REGARD & CONTINENTAL. First-class, beautifully situated in its own grounds. Nr. English church.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. First-class. Near Cathedral. Post, Teleg., & Rly. Office in hotel. Central heating. Suites with baths.

MONTE CARLO.—GRAND HOTEL DE LONDRES. Opposite Casino. Modern comfort. Reasonable terms. Always open.—Manager, J. KAISER.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Unrivalled situation and comforts.

MUNICH.—THE CONTINENTAL. Leading HOTEL and RESTAURANT. Entirely renewed and enlarged.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHERHOF. A good English house.—CARL POSCH, Proprietor.

NAPLES.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class. Situated in the finest and most select part of Naples. Magnificent view of town, Vesuvius, and bay. Proprietors, HAUSER & DOEPFNER.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable, in best situation. Splendid view of bay.

NAPLES.—GD. HOTEL DU VESUVE. Splendid position. Strictly first-class. Latest comfort.

NAPLES.—ELDORADO MODERN HOTEL. Good central situation. Moderate terms. Overlooking the Gulf.

NICE—GD. HOTEL DES ILES BRITANNIQUES. First-class, moderate terms.—Proprietor, ZAMBAIL. Summer, Hotel Roseg-Pontresina, Engadine.

NICE, Cimiez.—WINTER PALACE. One of the finest and most comfortable hotels in Europe.—J. AGID, Director.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel. Facing sea, nearest the Kursaal.—Props., HILLBRAND & BROWN

OSTEND.—Sea bathing. The leading hotels on the beach are the CONTINENTAL, 400 beds, the SPLENDID, 400 beds. Rooms from 6 francs. Full board with room, 12 to 20 shillings, according to location.

PALERMO.—EXCELSIOR PALACE HOTEL. New. Leading hotel. Opened February, 1906.

PARIS.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Most luxurious and comfortable hotel in Paris. Entirely renovated.—A. LOTTI, Gen. Mgr.

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES and ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rendezvous of English and Americans.—Proprietor-Manager, A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—MERCEDES HOTEL, Place de l'Etoile. Most modern hotel in Paris. Opened April, 1904. Luxuriously furnished.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA, Avenue de l'Opéra. First-class. Latest and all modern improvements.—G. VAUTIER, Prop.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENÉE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PISA.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL DE LONDRES. The only hotel with central heating in Pisa.

PONTRESINA.—HOTEL KRONENHOF & BELLAVISTA. First-class. Best situation. Open whole year. Summer and Winter resort.

RAPALLO.—VERDI'S HOTEL. Favourite English house. Charmingly situated. Electric light. Modern comfort.

ROME.—REGINA HOTEL. New. Opposite Queen Margherita's Palace. One of the leading.—Managing Prop., E. BARBIANI.

ROME.—PALACE HOTEL. New. Up-to-date. BEAUSITE HOTEL. First-class family house.

FOREIGN HOTELS, &c.—contd.

ROME.—HOTEL ROYAL. The English House.

ROME.—SAVOY HOTEL. First-class family hotel near the gardens.—Proprietor, J. LENGYEL.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family Hotel. Preferred position amongst the villas. Inclusive terms, Fr. 11 to 18.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ENGADINER KULM. Baths with suites and rooms. Golf, tennis, and all the winter sports.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL, the most fashionable. Proprietor, CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ST. PETERSBURG. Family hotel. Sunniest position, adjoining Kulm and all the Sport places. Inclusive terms, 10 to 16 fr.

TERRITET, Switzerland.—GRAND HOTEL & ALPES. Well-known rendezvous of English and American clientèle.

TERRITET.—GRAND HOTEL BON-PORT. Favourite English house. Apartments with baths. Most sheltered situation.

VEVEY.—GRAND HOTEL and PALACE HOTEL. The Fashionable Hotels. Two tennis courts.—ENG. MICHEL.

VEVEY.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. 120 rooms. Very latest improvements. Bath with private suite.—Proprietor, T. WHITE.

VEVEY.—Healthiest Swiss resort.—TROIS COURONNES HOTEL. First-class. Modern improvements. Most moderate terms.

WIESBADEN.—FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest position, opposite Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. Connected with a Magnificent Bathing Establishment. Situated at the Curplace. "The English Home."

WIESBADEN.—PALAST HOTEL. Kochbrunnen Bath establishment. Rooms with private bath. First-class, up-to-date.

FOREIGN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BEAULIEU.—HOUSES & ESTATES. E. KURZ (Opposite Station.) Villas furnished, to be let or sold.

SCHEVENINGEN.

The Seaside Suburb of The Hague, Holland.
Most fashionable and Historic Resort on the North Sea.

ONLY 12 HOURS FROM LONDON.

LUXURIOUS AND RAPID DAY AND NIGHT SERVICES.

Scheveningen affords visitors a never-ending source of interest and enjoyment, and constitutes a convenient centre for reaching all parts of the "LAND OF WINDMILLS."

MILES OF MAGNIFICENT SANDS. SAFE BATHING.
Golfing, Tennis, Cycling, Driving, Racing, and every Outdoor Pleasure. Excellent Roads for Motoring.
Concerts daily by the Berliner Philharmonic Orchestra. Distinguished Soloists. Balls and Theatre. Neapolitan Band in the Kurhaus Bar. Social Club.
Opportunities for Bridge at all Hotels.
Splendid Hotels. Moderate Tariffs.

Every information from the GENERAL MANAGER, Scheveningen; or SCHEVENINGEN BUREAU, 151, Strand, LONDON (Adjoining Somerset House).

PEACE & PLEASURE.

SCHEVENINGEN, forming as it does the sea front of The HAGUE, is only a quarter of an hour from the centre of the city, and is connected by electric & steam trams, which run every five minutes. The forthcoming Peace Conference at The Hague gives particular interest to Scheveningen.

The HEALTHIEST SPOT IN SCOTLAND.

At the foot of the Grampians. Grand Scenery. Every Modern Comfort. Excellent Cuisine. Electric Light and Heating. Spacious Lounge. Billiards. IDEAL RESORT for GOLF; 18-Hole Course near. MOTORING. Motor Garage and Pit. TENNIS and BOWLING GREENS near hotel. Send for Illustrated tariff to C. A. THIEM, Proprietor

R.M.S.P. THE ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY,

LUXURIOUS TRAVEL.

Brazil, £50; Argentina, £62; West Indies, £38.

SHORT TRIPS TO
Spain, £9 15s.; Portugal, £12.
Apply to 18, Moorgate-street, E.C.; or 32, Cockspur-street, S.W.

CANADIAN PACIFIC LINE.

FASTEST TO CANADA.

NEW "EMPRESS" ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS.
(4 DAYS OPEN SEA). Weekly Service from Liverpool.
EMPRESS OF IRELAND ... 14,500 tons ... May 31.
LAKE MANITOBA ... ... 9,674 ,, ... June 6.
For passages apply C. P. Rly., 62-65, Charing Cross, S.W.; 67, King William-street, E.C.; or Local Agents.
THROUGH TICKETS via CANADA to JAPAN, 22½ days; CHINA, 27½ days; AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND.

NORWAY PLEASURE CRUISES.
13 DAYS FROM £12 12s. "MIDNIGHT SUN." Two Berth Cabins. Luxurious Accommodation. Sailing June 8, 22; July 6, 20; Aug. 3, 17. Visiting Sand, Odde, Bergen, Fretheim, Gudvangen, Loen, Marok, Ness, and Molde.—Apply ALBION S.S. CO., LTD., Newcastle-on-Tyne.

TRUTH HOTEL LIST.

ANGLESEY.—BAY HOTEL, RHOSNEIGR. Bracing air, unrivalled seas, sandy shores, rocky islands and headlands. Golf, boating, bathing.
Good shooting and trout fishing free to guests.
Moderate terms.

AYR.—STATION HOTEL, adjoining station. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billards. For Business Gentlemen, Families, and Tourists to "The Land of 'Burns,'" and Ayrshire district. Within few minutes' walk of sea shore. Convenient Golf Courses. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Dumfries, and Turnberry.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—ROYAL CRESCENT HOTEL, MARINE PARADE. High Class, for Families and Gentlemen. Finest Position in Brighton for health and quiet. Sea view from nearly all rooms. Electric lighting throughout. Telephone, No. 1403. Telegrams—"Crescent Hotel, Brighton." Under personal supervision of GEORGE LOGAN, Proprietor.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Finest position on front.
Splendid public rooms. Orchestra twice daily.
Tepid sea-water Swimming Bath. Garage communicating with the Hotel.
Private suites, with bathrooms. Write for Illustrated Brochure.

DUBLIN.—HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE-STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High-class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

DUMFRIES.—STATION HOTEL, opposite station. Electric light. Lift. Billiards. Convenient for Firth of Solway, Castle Douglas, Sweetheart Abbey, Caerlaverock Castle, &c. Lovely Drives. Splendid centre for motor and cycle tours. Shooting. Fishing. Golf. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Turnberry.

EASTBOURNE.—The HYDRO HOTEL, a Select Residential Hotel, due south, facing sea. Spacious Lounges and Public Rooms. Garage. Special Week End Terms. Cinderella Dance Saturday. For Amusement Programme and Tariff (Illustrated), O. F. BERGANN, Manager.

FOLKESTONE.—BATH HOTEL.
First class Private. Inclusive Terms.—Miss GRIFFITHS, late York House, Bath. Telephone 117.

GLASGOW.—ST. ENOCH STATION HOTEL. Best centre for business and pleasure. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (4 tables). Restaurant. Within shilling cab fare of all railway and steamboat termini in Glasgow. Near electric cars and opposite subway cable railways. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Ayr, Dumfries, and Turnberry.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

MALVERN.—The Premier Garden City of England.—The IMPERIAL HOTEL faces due South and offers every comfort at moderate and inclusive charges. A cheerful lounge, with electric light. The extensive baths (separate building), Brine, Turkish, &c., now open. Accommodation for Motors.—For tariff apply to Resident Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

MARGATE.—CLIFTONVILLE HYDRO. Fully licensed Finest position, facing sea and oval. Electric light and lift.
Roof garden. Billiards. First-class cuisine and wines.
Motor garage in own grounds. Turkish, dowsing, and electric baths.
Special week-end terms from Messrs. Cook & Sons.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
W. WORSTER, Manager.

TURNBERRY.—STATION HOTEL. "The most up-to-date Hotel in Scotland." Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (3 tables). Conservatory. Garage and stables. Sea Water Baths. Two fine golf courses for visitors. Lovely Climate. Charming district. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Dumfries.

PEEBLES HOTEL Hydropathic

Under Mr. A. M. THIEM'S Personal Management.
CONSTRUCTED FIREPROOF THROUGHOUT.
EQUIPPED on the most MODERN lines. Every Home Comfort. High-class Cuisine. Pure Bracing Air. Golf, Tennis, Croquet, and Bowling Greens. Motor Garage. Magnificent Recreation Hall.
A GERMAN BATH IN SCOTLAND.—Physician, H. Neu, M.D. (Bonn University). Every form of Electricity, Massage, and Baths. Diet—Gymnastics—also Sun, Air, and Electric Light Baths.

LEAMINGTON SPA.—REGENT HOTEL. Premier Hotel of Midlands. Ideal Summer Resort. Best centre in England for Motoring and Driving. Garage for 60 cars. Telegs. "Regent." 'Phone 109 Leamington.

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire, 500ft. alt. Bracing air, lovely scenery, 9-hole Golf course. Static Electricity. High-frequency Currents. Radiant Heat X Rays. Vibratory Massage.—J. I. KIRBY, Managing Director.

WESTGATE-ON-SEA.—WESTCLIFF HOTEL. Premier position, facing sea. Coffee, drawing, lounge, billiard rooms. Family suites. Stabling. Motor garage.—G. MARCH, Proprietor.

MONTROSE ON THE NORTH SEA,

a Bracing Holiday Resort.

FAMOUS GOLF LINKS—Ladies' and Gentlemen's Courses open to all at nominal charge.
SEA BATHING—Miles of Sand, with safe and commodious Bathing Station.
MONTROSE forms an attractive and healthy place of residence, and a convenient centre for Excursions to a neighbourhood of beauty and interest.
For Official Guide apply to Town Chamberlain.

SPECIAL FOR LADIES.

At the Dressmaker's.

NEWEST IDEAS

IN

Morning Gowns. Day Dresses.
Evening Gowns. Millinery. . .
Tailor Suits. . . Mantles. . .

The Bosworth productions possess every desirable feature demanded by the most exacting taste.

VISIT CORDIALLY INVITED.

BOSWORTH 9, New Burlington St., Regent St., W.

By Appointment to
H.R.H. The PRINCESS OF WALES and H.R.H. The PRINCESS ROYAL.

BRIGHTEN UP

the home by covering the floors with LI-NOLA, our bordered CORK LINO. The rich-looking and wonderfully arranged border embodied in this material serves to make LI-NOLA better looking than any other low-cost floor covering.

FREE sample pieces, together with fine book of coloured designs, sent by post.

CATESBY & SONS, Dept. 12,
"Shipping Dept.," Tottenham Court-road, London, W.

Robinson & Cleaver,

BELFAST. LTD.

Regent Street & Cheapside, LONDON; and LIVERPOOL.
Manufacturers to His Gracious Majesty The King, H.R.H. The Princess of Wales, &c., &c.
Carriage paid on Orders 20s. upwards in United Kingdom.

CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples Post Free.

BORDERED.
Children's .. .. .. 1/3 per doz.
Ladies' .. .. 2/6 „
Gentlemen's .. .. .. 3/6 „
HEMSTITCHED.
Ladies' .. .. 2/9 per doz.
Gentlemen's .. .. .. 3/11 „

IRISH COLLARS, CUFFS, & SHIRTS.

Illustrated Price Lists Post Free.

Collars—Gentlemen's four-fold, from 1/11 per doz.
Cuffs for Gentlemen from 6/11 per doz.
Matchless Shirts, with four-fold Fronts and Cuffs and bodies of Fine Longcloth, 35/6 the half-doz. (to measure, 2/- extra).

OLD SHIRTS made good as new with good materials in neckband, cuffs, and fronts, for 11/- the half-doz.

IRISH DAMASK TABLE AND HOUSE LINEN.

Fish Napkins, 2/11 per doz.
Dinner „ 5/6 „
Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2/11 each.
Table Cloths, 2½ by 3 yds., 5/11 each.
Kitchen Table Cloths, 11½d. each.
Linen Sheeting, 2 yards wide, 1/11 per yard. Surplice Linen, 10½d. per yard. Dusters, from 3/3 per doz. Glass Cloths, 3/11 per doz.

N.B.—To prevent delay, all Letter-orders and Inquiries for Samples of these goods should be sent direct to 40, W. Donegall Place, Belfast.

OF ALL LEADING TAILORS.

Quality MOTOFRIEZE
Colour COPPICE (and 23 others).
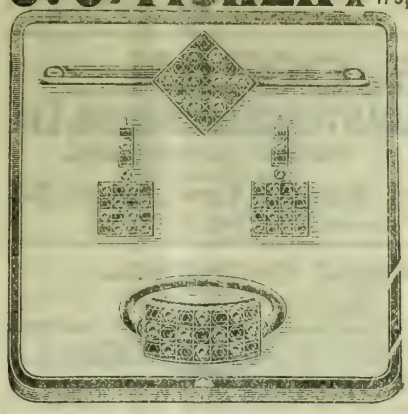
The only truly Hygienic cloth for Motor Garments.

Descriptive Booklet (with patterns) from the BALLYMENACH WOOLLEN FACTORY, Ld.,
Great Pulteney Street, Regent Street, London, W.

J. C. VICKERY

Jeweller and Silversmith
To H.M. The KING and H.M. The QUEEN.
179, 181, 183, Regent Street, W.



No. M 289.

Vickery's exclusive Novelty Brooch, Earrings, and Ring to match, in Diamonds and Rubies.

Only £37.

Charming Novelties for Gifts in Jewellery, Silver, Leather, Tortoiseshell, Watches, Clocks, Dressing Bags, &c.

"THE QUEEN OF

Apollinaris

TABLE WATERS."

FRILLED BUTTER MUSLIN

WITH NEW HEMSTITCH FRILLS, 3 yds. long, 8/3 per pair. PLAIN FRILLS, 6/9 per pair. Sample book of Plain and Fancy Muslins on approval. Carpets, Tapestries, Cretonnes, Art Silks, Art Serges. Patterns on approval. Book of Lace Curtains, Blinds, Carpets, Linoleum, Furniture, Bedsteads, Bedding, post free.

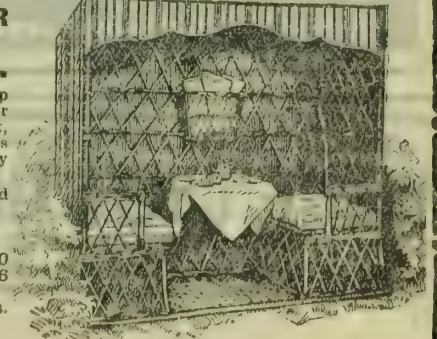
THE BELVOIR WICKER ARBOUR.

With let-down flap Table; Basket for Books, Needlework, &c. Being light, it is easily turned in any position.

Shelters from wind and sun.

Price Complete in Striped Tick...£3 5 0
Shower-proof 4 7 6
Made to fold flat, 15/- extra.

Catalogue Free.



GORRINGE & CO., 91A Dept., Queen's Walk, NOTTINGHAM.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY
(LIMITED),
HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.

INVESTED FUNDS - - £63,000,000.

THE OCEAN
ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE CORPORATION, LTD.
FOUNDED 1871. FUNDS £1,452,925.
(31st December, 1905.)
Head Offices: 36-44, Moorgate Street, London, E.C.
Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the Control of the Committee.

A list of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

BIRKBECK BANK (established 1851), Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C. 2½ per cent. interest allowed on Deposit Accounts. 2 per cent. interest on Drawing Accounts with Cheque Book. All general Banking Business transacted. ALMANACK, with full particulars, POST FREE.—C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

IMPROVE YOUR WRITING
by using JOHN HEATH'S PENS. A Sample Box of 24 samples sent post free for 7 stamps.
JOHN HEATH & CO., Birmingham.

DON'T LOOK OLD
KEEP YOUR Ssituation.

LOCKYER'S
SULPHUR
HAIR RESTORER
DARKENS IN A FEW DAYS.

To be obtained everywhere, 1/6 per bottle; or sent post free for 1/6 from J. PEPPER & CO., Bedford Laboratory, London, S.E.

Franz Josef
the only palatable Natural Aperient Water

Jewsbury & Brown's
ORIENTAL
TOOTH PASTE.
In Pots and Tubes.

FOR GOUT, GRAVEL, RHEUMATISM, etc., DRINK
VICHY CELESTINS (State Spring)
Caution: See that each bottle has a neck label with VICHY-ETAT & the name of the Sole Agents INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd., 26, Upper Thames Street, LONDON, E.C.

Est. nearly Quarter of a Century.
Tel. 327 Mayfair.

W. EVANS & CO.

Choice and varied Stock of new Goods for Spring and Summer Wear just arrived.

FROCK COAT from £2 15 0
CASHMERE TROUSERS from 18/-
LOUNGE SUITS ... £3 3 0
DRESS SUITS ... £5 5 0

INSPECTION INVITED.

Gentlemen who are unable to call can rely on having a good fit from self-measurements, or by sending garments as guide.

TRUTH says: "Our latest discovery in tailoring is Evans, 77, Gt. Portland-street, W., who can actually fit."

77, Gt. Portland-st., London, W.

The "Allenburys" DIET

Recommended for general use in place of ordinary milk foods, gruel, &c. It is very sustaining and nourishing, and whilst acceptable to all as a light nourishment, it is especially helpful to the Invalid and Dyspeptic.

The "Allenburys" DIET is a food for ADULTS and is distinct from the well-known "Allenburys" Foods for Infants.

Tins at 1/6 & 3/- of Chemists. A large sample sent for 3 penny stamps.

ALLEN & HANBURYS, Ld., 37, Lombard-st., LONDON.

To H.M. THE KING.

CARPET CLEANERS
— THE —
Compressed Air Carpet & Tapestry Cleaning Company.
BROOK GREEN, W., and 135, VICTORIA STREET, S.W.

TELEGRAMS: "PURIFYING, LONDON."
TELEPHONE: 93 HAMMERSMITH. 288 WESTMINSTER.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN, and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of Himrod's Cure for Asthma.
Established over a Quarter of a Century.

Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an Inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, J. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, MAY, ROBERTS, & CO., BUTLER & CRISPE, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale houses.

ALCOHOLIC EXCESS

and DRUG HABIT cured at home in 3 to 7 weeks by the TURVEY TREATMENT without inconvenience. The only cure under British Medical Direction. Success tested by officials of the C.E.T.S. Mission, &c. Established 12 years. Over 5,000 recorded cases.—Write for Report of Public Test, or call. Med. Supt., TURVEY TREATMENT CO., Ltd., 24, Amberley House, Norfolk Street, Strand, London. Consultation to patients or their friends, free.

From East to West.

TWO GREAT CENTRES.

By A. DOUGLAS.

To-day we are nothing if not progressive. Nothing will serve us but that the maximum of advantage shall be obtained at the minimum of expenditure in time. Do we need anything, we must needs go to a centre, somewhere where a choice can be made, and where we are sure the article we desire can be obtained, if, indeed, we may not have set our minds on the unattainable. At the same time, we have not the least intention of foregoing one of the advantages which can be obtained anywhere else.

A live business firm recognises this demand and provides accordingly. Acting on this principle, the Hackney Furnishing Company have just opened extensive premises—93, 95, 97, and 99, Oxford-street—for the better accommodation and economy of time of their West-End customers, who have been a very growing number on their books, since the advantages of their enormous selection, expert judgment, low prices, and exceptionally favourable trading system have become generally known. At their new address the Hackney Furnishing Company, having during their thirty odd years' trading made Hackney a centre of the furnishing industry, and knowing that the more wealthy patrons have in many cases hesitated to go so far to see the goods they contemplated purchasing, have gone straight for the latest and undoubtedly most convenient centre for the same trade in the West End. There is now no need for the dweller in the West to go further than the bottom of Newman-street to receive the most courteous attention, the largest selection offered by any firm in the world, and the most fair terms possibly attainable; as there has been no need in the past for the dweller in the North or East to go further than Hackney. At both these establishments the firm undertake Furnishing for every one.

"Furnishing for everyone," the reader may remark, is a very bold proposition. To undertake to supply rich and poor alike is to do that which at first sight seems beyond the means of any ordinary firm. There is not merely the enormous variety of class in furniture, artistic, economical, and serviceable, but there is the necessity of meeting the varying financial positions of the would-be purchasers. For anyone to make such a boast, it must be essential that he possess a thoroughly efficient and enormous organisation, perfected through years of experience. The Hackney Furnishing Company, of which Mr. A. M. Stewart is the Founder and Managing Director, the originators of the system of deferred payments, make this assertion. At Hackney, their original home, they have over 6½ acres of showroom area, being one of the largest furnishing stores in the metropolis. Their new premises, Nos. 93, 95, 97, 99, Oxford-street, have been described as "the prettiest shops in London." The management has been entrusted to Mr. Michael Pearl, whose great reputation in the North is known to all. In these two establishments can be seen furniture fit to grace the most elegant mansion, and also furniture fit to withstand the hard and constant wear of the artisan's home. The whole are supplied at strictly moderate prices, either for cash or upon the Hackney Furnishing Company's Improved "Model' System.

In these go-ahead times it is wholly unnecessary for any middle class home to be meanly furnished. The clerk or artisan can stock his home with artistic treasures such as his forefathers never dreamed of possessing. He can surround himself with the products of best workmanship—products which are the last word in artistic design, high quality, and durability.

When, some years ago, Mr. A. M. Stewart founded the Hackney Furnishing Company, it was looked upon by some in the light of a hazardous experiment, but the system he then inaugurated, and which is described by the whole Press as the "Model System," was destined to fill a public want.

By the Hackney Furnishing Company's system, the young man in a clerkship, or the warehouseman, enjoys the same terms of credit as those obtained by people in a much higher social position. He is not obliged to be content with an inferior article, one which will be a constant reproof to him, because that is the best his ready cash will run to.

No deposit is required. The prospective customer can drive in the firm's private motor or brougham to the magnificently appointed showrooms, and select at leisure from the largest and most artistic display of furniture in the Kingdom, and he has also the great advantage of Mr. Stewart's personal attention and advice—advice based upon many years' sound practical experience in the furnishing of houses of all classes. His purchases are then delivered to him, free of all charges, whether he resides in London, or miles away in the country. If he has not yet decided upon his place of residence, or for any other reason, the firm will store his goods for a period up to six months free.

The terms of payment are most advantageous—twenty pounds' worth of goods can be obtained on payments of eleven shillings per month, thirty pounds' worth for seventeen shillings, fifty pounds' worth for twenty-eight shillings per month, one hundred pounds' worth for forty-five shillings per month, five hundred pounds' worth for eleven pounds five shillings per month, and so on, in proportion. A free fire insurance policy is issued with all purchases, so that no loss by accident need be apprehended, whilst, by a system of life insurance, if the purchaser dies before completing the instalments the goods become the property of the widow or next-in-kin, without further payments. If a cash transaction is preferred, the purchaser enjoys a cash discount of ten per cent.

Their new premises in Oxford Street is a veritable treasure palace, a wonderful seven-storey building, replete with every modern contrivance for comfort and elegance.

Electric lifts convey the delighted visitor to floor after floor crammed with everything in furniture and home appointments the heart of man or woman can desire.

Great floods of dazzling light from splendid arch windows illumine a number of model rooms, each furnished with taste and elegance, price in all cases plainly marked. The feet of the visitor sink into rich pile carpets, upon which are arranged the finest quality Louis XVI. suites, Empress suites, embroidered suites, suites in oak, walnut, &c. Upon every wall hang the latest and best products of art and craft, in every nook and cranny some fresh marvel asserts itself. The keynote of the whole is absolute durability and expert workmanship. The customer can have any article taken almost to pieces if he so wish, to test the claims of the firm in this direction. A service of well-appointed motors is in attendance to convey purchasers to the new seven-floor West-end branch or the enormous parent warehouse at Hackney. One of the latest enterprises of this mammoth firm is house-reclaiming. You can buy an old dilapidated house, and hand it over to the care of Mr. Stewart. He will rebuild it for you, fit up electric light, and artistically furnish it to suit your every whim.

Write to-day to the Hackney Furnishing Co., Town Hall Buildings, Mare Street, Hackney, N.E., or to 93, 95, 97, and 99, Oxford Street, W., for the superbly illustrated catalogue, sent you post free. You will be astonished at its completeness. It would be practically impossible to name anything pertaining to the furnishing or decoration of a home which the firm do not stock, and of which they cannot offer a large selection. In fact, when you have paid them a visit, or, failing that, looked carefully through their catalogue, you will assuredly say, "Here, indeed, is Furnishing for Everyone."

LETTERS FROM CELEBRITIES.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET ON NERVOUSNESS.

"Industrial Farm Colony,
"Duxhurst,
"April, 1907.

"DEAR FRIEND,—Your letter is one of many which I constantly receive begging me to tell of something which can help to restore tired nerves and over-worn strength, and you ask me to do so because I come in contact with so many who for these very reasons fail in the race of life, having sought the wrong remedy for such loss of nerve-power.

"The description which you give me of your difficulty scarcely varies from that of which I am so often told. Work has become a drudgery, and life a heavy thing. You tell me that you go to bed feeling tired, and that you wake in the morning almost equally tired, that your food is distasteful to you, and that little things which used to sit lightly upon you have become heavy burdens; that even pleasure is toil. I know you have worked hard through many years, and have had much mental strain. This may in a measure account for your weakness, which is not brought about by any condition of actual disease, but which seems to arise from an even greater trouble—namely, that your nerve-force is seriously overspent.

"It is important to understand that in these days of worry and over-excitement, the over-work (mental and physical) to which most of us are subject calls forth an undue expenditure of strength, and that to recuperate the vigour we have lost we must consider what sort of food or remedy we require.

"Of course, the whole question of proper nourishment requires much thought and experience. Many forms of food and many restoratives are recommended, but having had to do with a great many people who have impaired their digestive organs and whose nerve-power has been seriously undermined, I do not think that I have come across anything which I believe a more suitable nutrient for all forms of weakness than Sanatogen. I do not know if you have tried it, but it seems to me, under the conditions such as you have described, an ideal preparation, because it provides a valuable tonic-food in the most suitable form. It consists, I believe, in the nourishing element of pure cows' milk, incorporated with which is a special nerve-tonic containing phosphorus. It has an invigorating power on worn-out nerves, and gives tone to exhausted tissues to a surprising extent. The feeblest system and the poorest digestive organs are able to assimilate it when they can really touch little else. I am strongly of opinion that you cannot do better than begin a course of Sanatogen if you wish to regain your strength.

"Sanatogen undoubtedly restores sleep and invigorates the nerves, and it braces the patient to health, for I have noticed that with the restoration of the digestive organs the mind becomes more quickly active, and work, both mental and physical, becomes more easy, and the freshness and keenness which such people have lost (apparently altogether) return gradually, and bring with them an enjoyment of life and a feeling of hopefulness not hitherto experienced.

"When the body is subjected to a course of Sanatogen the blood condition improves, the skin assumes a more healthy colour, the invigorated nerves are braced to a more healthy tone, and the whole human machinery is made fit for exercise and work and for fulfilling its functions in the most perfect manner. . . . . ."

Isabella Somerset

The above is an abstract from a letter addressed by Lady Henry Somerset to an intimate friend. In view of the public interest associated with the subject, the recipient has obtained her Ladyship's gracious permission to make the contents widely known. Additional information on the same subject may be obtained from the Sanatogen Company, 83, Upper Thames-street, London, E.C. Sanatogen is sold by all chemists, in packets, at 1s. 9d., 2s. 9d., 5s., and 9s. 6d.

For Headache and Weariness.

Bathe your brows and wrist in a basin of water in which are a few drops of

No. '4711' Eau de Cologne

You will be instantly refreshed, and your cheerfulness restored.

CAUTION

Cheap impure Eau de Colognes injure the skin.

Be careful therefore to see that the Hall Mark of quality is on the blue and gold label on every bottle.

No. 4711.

....

Of all Chemists, from 1/- upwards per bottle.

The quality of the tea is reflected in the quality of its patrons. Those who know good tea drink

Pearks' Tea

In Red Packets,
1s. 4d. and 1s. 6d. per lb.

Rudge-Whitworth
Britain's Best Bicycle

The Lightest Bicycle!
The Longest Guarantee!

To every 1907 Rudge-Whitworth is attached by Seal a Certificate of

10 YEARS GUARANTEE

and yet the prices are lower than ever and there is no extra charge for Easy payments. 81 patterns from £5; packed free and carriage paid.
Apply for the new 64 page Catalogue now ready, post free from

Rudge-Whitworth, Ltd.
Dept. 265 Coventry.

The REASON for TILIA

It is a popular idea that in order to be well nourished it is necessary to eat a large quantity of food.

This is a very great mistake. It is NOT the amount of food eaten that nourishes the body, but the amount which is digested and assimilated.

Many of our favourite dishes contain only a small amount of real nutrition. Even pure milk — one of the finest of foods — cannot always be taken, for it not infrequently causes indigestion and constipation.

is all nourishment

TILIA is a concentrated powder possessing all the life-giving qualities of the best food in their very essence.

TILIA sprinkled over porridge, vegetables, or any kind of food, boiled with soups and stew, incorporated with pastry, bread, and cakes—in fact, added to any and every possible food will immensely add to their nutritive properties.

TILIA PREPARATIONS are sold by Grocers, Chemists, and Stores throughout the United Kingdom at the following prices:—TILIA Powder, in airtight tins, 9d., 1s. 4d., and 2s. 6d.; TILIA Cocoa, in airtight tins, 9d., 1s. 4d., and 2s. 6d.; TILIA Biscuits, in airtight tins, 1s. and 2s.

FREE SAMPLES.

Every reader is invited to apply for samples of the TILIA preparations, which will be sent free in the U.K. if a penny stamp is enclosed for postage.

Address: Dept. T6, PEEK, FREAN, & CO., Ltd., 176, Drummond Road, London, S.E.

STEINWAY

VERTEGRAND

The attention of every householder is hereby directed to the fact that the pianos, Grands and Vertegrands, made by the house of STEINWAY, and sold by them through special agents at fixed net prices for cash all the world over, have a surrender value greater than that of the instruments produced by any other firm. The reason is not far to seek, viz.:—durability, general excellence in tone production, expensive workmanship in all minor details. The superiority of the STEINWAY creations in this respect is as marked as are all the other distinctive "STEINWAY" features.

Deferred Payments.

Hiring Arrangements.

STEINWAY Pianos may be obtained on hire at very reasonable rates, or may be purchased by deferred payments. If for any reason a purchaser on the Deferred Payment System is desirous of returning his instrument, the difference between the Hire Terms and the amounts paid under the deferred plan will be returned to him.

Write or call to-day for the Steinway Hire and Deferred Payment particulars, also booklet "P.," "Portraits of Musical Celebrities," post free on request.

STEINWAY & SONS
STEINWAY HALL

Exhibition of Spanish Art

WARING & GILLOW, Ltd., invite particular attention to this interesting and unique Exhibition. It includes not only a very fine collection of antique furniture, embroideries, tapestries, lace, statuary, jewellery, Hispano-Moresque ware, &c., but also a choice and representative selection of the works of the best living Spanish artists.

Illustrated Catalogue on application.

OPEN DAILY
From Monday, June 3rd.

WARING'S Antique Galleries

175-181 OXFORD STREET, W.

Diamonds.

The Goldsmiths & Silversmiths Company, Ltd.,

The Choicest Stock of Necklaces in the World, from £5.

Fine Diamond Pendant Necklace, on Platinum, £127 10s. Chain Back.

invite inspection of the choicest stock in the world of

DIAMOND & GEM JEWELLERY

IN NEW AND EXCLUSIVE DESIGNS.

Moderate Prices.

NO IMPORTUNITY TO PURCHASE.

New Illustrated Catalogue of Jewellery Post Free.

Selections sent on approval.

The Goldsmiths & Silversmiths Company, Ltd.

By Appointment to H.M. the King.

Show Rooms:—
112, Regent Street, London, W.

Lanchester Reliability.

Lanchester Cars are noted for their reliability, there is a reason for this. It is not only the perfection of design but the equally necessary perfection in construction which makes the Lanchester reliable. The design is simple and every part of the motor is accessible. A superior design added to the perfection of workmanship make a better motor car just as they make a better rifle or a better watch. Remember, a reliable motor car cannot be made "cheap." It is better to pay a good price for a good car than to buy a cheap one and spend all your time hunting round for repair shops. Practical demonstration is better than big talk and the Lanchester Motor Co. are always ready to arrange trial runs at any of their Depots. Catalogues giving detail descriptions of both the Four and Six cylinder Lanchesters may be had post free on application.

THE LANCHESTER MOTOR CO., LTD.,
Birmingham. Manchester. London.

50 Years

For over Fifty years

CAMBUS

pure Scotch Whisky has been made from the Patent Still (not the Pot Still)

7 years Old. 3/6 a Bottle.
Matured in Wood. 42/- a Case.
"Not a headache in a gallon." Ask your Wine Merchant for "CAMBUS."

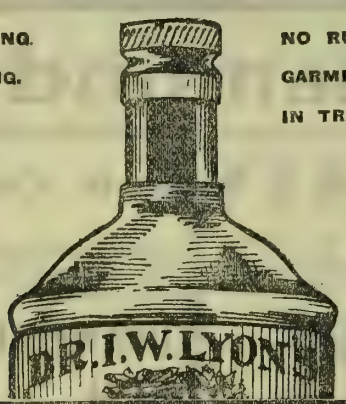
THE DISTILLERS CO., LTD., EDINBURGH.

London Distributors—
Messrs. BOWEN & McKECHNIE; W. H. CHAPLIN & Co., Ltd.; and MARSHALL & MARSHALL, Ltd.

NO BREAKING.
NO SPILLING.
NO WASTE.

NO RUINED GARMENTS IN TRAVEL.



DR. LYON'S
PERFECT
TOOTH POWDER

Cleanses, Preserves, and Beautifies the Teeth without injury; imparts a Natural Fragrance to the Breath.

Sold by all Chemists in dainty blue enamelled metal boxes, with Dr. Lyon's patent measuring tube very convenient for Tourists.

Price 1/-.

Prepared by the eminent Dental Surgeon,

J. W. Lyon, D.D.S.

157, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, LONDON, E.C.

"THE EXQUISITE EGYPTIAN."

"NESTOR"
Cigarettes
(Nestor Gianaclis, Cairo).

Guaranteed absolutely free of all drugs or chemical flavourings, the peculiar aroma being due solely to the exquisite quality of the Tobaccos used in the Blend.

Imported in two qualities—
Surfine and Extrafine.

Specialities—Gold Tipped "King" and "Queen" Cigarettes. Also special packets of ten for Golfers and Card Players, including scoring cards, rules, &c.

Of all Tobacconists and Stores throughout the World, and 10, New Bond Street, London, W.

A Drink to be Grateful for.

Not simply a thirst-quencher, not merely a stimulant, but just the purest, most inspiriting, and most health-infusing spirit that has ever been produced. This is the beverage for all times and all weathers, for men or women, the healthy or the ailing.

WOLFE'S
Aromatic Schiedam
SCHNAPPS

Its action upon the system is wonderful. It imparts lasting exhilaration and need only be taken in small quantities night and morning. For giving tone and vigour to the system its reputation is unrivalled.

Of all Spirit Merchants and Licensed Grocers.
Wholesale—The Finsbury Distillery Co., London.

OUR PUZZLES.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Building, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on postcards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand, whilst in the case of new Competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,471.

THE BEST ADVERTISEMENT ANECDOTE INTRODUCING THE GREATEST NUMBER OF FIRMS ADVERTISING IN "TRUTH" OF APRIL 3, 1907.

According to the conditions laid down for this Competition, I have had to take into account the ingenuity with which Competitors have introduced advertisements into their anecdotes, as well as the number of advertisements introduced.

Adjudicating on this two-fold basis, I have decided to award the prize of Two Guineas to ELECTRON, whose anecdote was printed in TRUTH of May 1 last.

I may add that the anecdote sent in by SAPPER was really the best, but unfortunately it exceeded the limit of 200 words.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,472.

ANSWERS TO THE QUESTION: "IS THE ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER DESIRABLE?"

This has been an exceptionally difficult Competition to judge, owing to the fact that so many answers were nearly of the same level of merit.

After careful consideration, I have decided to divide the Prize of Two Guineas equally between UNSIGNED and BELFASTIENSIS, whose answers were printed in TRUTH of May 8 last.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,473.

INSCRIPTIONS SUITABLE FOR ENGRAVING ON THE PROPOSED MEMORIAL IN HONOUR OF ROBERT, LORD CLIVE.

I find it impossible, in this Competition, to differentiate between the merits of the inscription sent in by CAMOENS and of that sent in by VOX. The Prize of Two Guineas is therefore divided equally between these Competitors, whose inscriptions were printed in TRUTH, of May 15 last.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,479.

I propose, this week, to set a Puzzle which I am sure will prove interesting to my readers of both sexes, dealing as it does with a subject of great practical importance to men and women alike.

To be specific: I offer the usual Prize of Two Guineas to that Competitor who shall send in the best answers to the two following questions:—

WHAT IS THE IDEAL AGE FOR A MAN TO MARRY?

WHAT IS THE IDEAL AGE FOR A WOMAN TO MARRY?

Only one answer must be sent in to either question, and each such answer must give a precise and definite age. Merely vague replies such as "from twenty to thirty," or anything of that sort, will not be accepted.

The ideal "ideal age," in either case, will be arrived at by averaging all replies sent in; and the Prize will be awarded to that Competitor or Competitors, whose answers come nearest to the result thus obtained.

PLEASE NOTE THAT:

All answers to above must reach TRUTH office by the first post on Monday, June 10, at latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of BRAD, winner of one-half TRUTH Prize No. 1,467, is the Rev. W. T. Wellacott, The Vicarage, Bradworthy, North Devon.

BRAD very kindly desires me to retain 10s. 6d. of the £1 1s. due to him for the Tress Barry Fund, for which I herewith ask him to accept my best thanks.

 The real name, with the address, of RAM, winner of TRUTH Prize No. 1,466, is R. A. McEwen Haslam, Esq., Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

 The real name, with the address, of ALICUJUS, winner of one-half TRUTH Prize No. 1,469, is W. H. Middleton, Esq., 236, High-street, Exeter.

 The real name, with the address, of WILL, winner of one-half of TRUTH Prize No. 1,469, is C. E. H. Edwards, Esq., The Corner, Cassio-road, Watford, Herts.

 The real name, with the address, of ENTEBBE, winner of TRUTH Prize No. 1 Special Foreign is Mrs. J. F. Cunningham, British Residency, Uganda.

COMUS.—The difficulty in the way of your otherwise good suggestion is one of space. When the solution is a short one, it may be reprinted without much inconvenience. But, even as it is, I find it impossible to find room for the numerous answers to Puzzles received week by week, and am, therefore, reluctant to do anything which would further trench on an already insufficient space. However, I will bear your suggestion in mind.

OLGA.—Your nom de plume has been duly registered.

IERE.—I much regret the misprint in your lines on Clive and duly note your correction.

PIONEER AND TWEENY.—As you will have seen, there has been an error in the numbering of several recent Puzzles, which I pointed out and corrected in last week's TRUTH. But, in any case, the accidental misnumbering of a solution by a Competitor does not disqualify.

RIMABEL AND NORFOLK.—The corrections of errors in your lines on Clive are duly noted. I may, however, point out that, in nearly all cases, such misprints, or mispunctuations, are due to a lack of distinctness in the orthography of the writers, who—as they are necessarily unable to see proofs of their productions—should be careful to fair copy them with perfect clearness.

R. A. H. GOODYEAR.—I am desired by the Editor of TRUTH to acknowledge, with many thanks, the receipt of your interesting little brochure, "Prize Competitions and How to Win Them."

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,477.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

FORECAST OF FIRST THREE HORSES IN THE FORTHCOMING "DERBY."

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Orby. 3. Bezonian.—H. W.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—Detinu.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—Ice.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—Westcliffe.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Cherry.

1. Woolwinder. 2. Galvani. 3. Slieve Gallion.—David J. Smart.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Francis.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Woolwinder.—Mengo.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. St. Petersburg. 3. Galvani.—Raspboy.

1 Slieve Gallion 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—Kinova.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Ouadi Halfa.—Aster.

1. Galvani 2. Ouadi Halfa. 3. Slieve Gallion.—Waterman.

1 Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Orby.—Togo.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—Blot.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—Stan Lad.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Galvani.—Harts.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Ouadi-Halfa.—Cassio.

1. Galvani. 2. Bezonian. 3. Slieve Gallion.—Gladiator.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Woolwinder.—Electron.

1 Galvani. 2. Bezonian. 3 St. Petersburg.—Granger.

1 Orby. 2 Slieve Gallion. 3 All Black.—Milliner.

1 Slieve Gallion. 2 Woolwinder. 3 St. Petersburg.—Crank.

1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. All Black.—Sphinx.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—Mary.

1 Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. St Petersburg.—Charper.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—Dodo.

1 Slieve Gallion. 2 Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Eve Cranham.

1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Bezonian.—N. E. L.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Galvani.—Sugar.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 2. Woolwinder.—Alicujus.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Ouadi Halfa. 3. Galvani.—Felixious.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—Eggs.

1 Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Woolwinder.—Jean qui rit.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—F. Bentham.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Bezonian.—Mushki.

1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Woolwinder.—Wyandotte.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Linacre. 3. Woolwinder.—Kingston.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. All Black.—Dean.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Woolwinder. H. T.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. St. Petersburg. 3. Woolwinder.—Khayyam.

1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Bezonian—Canning.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—Ubique.

1. Ouadi Halfa. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Slieve Gallion.—Knarf.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. St. Petersburg. 3. Galvani.—Moung Pho.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. St. Petersburg. 3. Bezonian.—The Mac.

1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Woolwinder.—Alfred Dench.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. St. Petersburgh.—Nemo.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Linacre.—Inca.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—Bill Sykes.

1. All Black. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Linacre.—Provident.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Ouadi Halfa. 3. Linacre.—Sunday School.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—Cantab.

1. Hillsprite. 2. Bezonian. 3. Slieve Gallion.—Zagloba.

1. Bezonian. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. St. Petersburg.—Blencathra.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Galvani.—Dullard.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. All Black. 3. Bezonian.—Ram.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Ouadi Halfa.—Autolycus.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—Hindu.

1. Galvani. 2. Ouadi Halfa. 3. Slieve Gallion.—Eye-opener.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Bezonian.—Jimmy Fat.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. All Black.—Bly.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—La Plata.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—Northlander.

1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Linacre.—Oiseau.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Bezonian.—Excise.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—A. J. H.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Bezonian.—Rhody.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Linacre. 3. Galvani.—Spartan.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Woolwinder. G. D.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. All Black.—Bad Luck.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—Simplex.

1. Woolwinder. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Galvani.—Ba.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. All Black. 3. Bezonian.—Alpha Beta.

Slieve Gallion, Bezonian (dead-heat). 3. Galvani. Six Knobs.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—Mormond.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Bezonian. Djalfi.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Woolwinder - Union Jack.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—Glynn.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Bezonian - Grenville.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Galvani.—Nero.

1. Bezonian. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—Gossamer.

1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Hammerkop.—Gulliver.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—Nettie.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Linacre. 3. Woolwinder.—Mart.

1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Oxo.
1. Orby. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Galvani.—Wildcat.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Merry Fox. 3. The Welkin.—G. E. F.
1. St. Petersburg. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Linacre. Etwall.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Stourton.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. All Black.—Jem.
1. Orby. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Woolwinder.—Dourt.
1. Ouadi Halfa. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. St. Petersburg.—Winkle.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Traquair. 3. Bezonian.—S. S.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—H. G. P.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Earlston.—Africanus.
1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. All Black.—Tom Nissed.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Galvani.—Rigor Mortis.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Linacre.—Minos.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Bezonian.—Georgina.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Bogey.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. St. Petersburg. 3. Bezonian.—Renwick.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Ouadi Halfa.—Difisal.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Linacre. 3. Bezonian.—Leaf Rule.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Woolwinder.—Early Morning.
1. Bezonian. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Baltinglass.—Rhamnus.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Sheen.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—Margate Hoy.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Woolwinder.—Knaresborough.
1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. St. Petersburg.—Game B.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—G. E.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Verbum Sat.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. St. Petersburg. 3. Linacre.—Dorset.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—Bucks.
1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. All Black.—Terranova.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Renoops.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—J. Sutherland.
1. All Black. 2. Galvani. 3. Slieve Gallion.—Stella.
1. Bezonian. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Woolwinder.—Ernest Roberts.
1. Bezonian. 2. Galvani. 3. Slieve Gallion.—Cosmos.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2 Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Emily Smithin.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. All Black.—Dednun.
1. St. Petersburg. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Linacre.—Svonok.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Broughton.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—De la Viere.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. St. Petersburg. 3. Bezonian.—Cromwell.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. St. Petersburg.—Hyde.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Linacre. 3. Galvani.—Rimabel.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Myram.—Emew.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. St. Petersburg. 3. Orby.—Olga.
1 Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Bezonian.—Neerg.
1. All Black. 2. Orby. 3. Ouadi Halfa.—Spectator.
1. Woolwinder. 2. Orby. 3. Galvani.—Lynx.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Linacre.—Owl.
1. Bezonian. 2. Galvani. 3. Slieve Gallion.—Sophia.
1. Woolwinder. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Galvani.—Alexander Smart.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Ouida Halfa.—W. J. Cheatle.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Orby. 3. Linacre.—Nemesis.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Keystone II. 3. Linacre.—Stansmore
1. Querido. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Polar Star.—Rho.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Ouadi Halfa. 3. Galvani.—Hogarth.
1. Galvani. 2. St. Petersburg. 3. Woolwinder.—Korah.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Laddie.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2 Orby. 3. Galvani.—Vici.
1. Orby. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Galvani—Veni.
1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Orby.—Clapa.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Bezonian. Pro Bono
1. Bezonian. 2. Galvani. 3. Linacre.—Sandstone.
1. Bezonian. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Woolwinder.—Thomas Gibson.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Woolwinder.—Robert Waugh.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Galvani.—Mary White.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Woolwinder.—Jane Gibson.
1. Sheve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Ouadi Halfa.—Iodoform.
1. Sheve Gallion. 2. Woolwinder. 3. Myram.—Kieta.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2 Woolwinder. 3. Bezonian.—Tony.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—Specular.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Petite.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani 3. Bezonian.—Pembroke.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. All Black. 3. Linacre.—Derula.
1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Woolwinder.—Mum.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Caw.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Galvani. 3. Bezonian.—Jethart.
1. Bezonian. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Linacre.—Roy
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Bezonian. 3. Galvani.—Vicamp.
1. Galvani. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Linacre.—Grosvenor.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Orby. 3. Woolwinder.—Muz Muz.
1. St. Petersburg. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Woolwinder.—Wasdale.
1. Bezonian. 2. Galvani. 3. Slieve Gallion.—Snaggard.
1. Woolwinder. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. St. Petersburg.—Selanidge.
1. Galvani. 2. Orby. 3. Slieve Gallion.—Duss
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. St. Petersburg. 3. Bezonian.—Madcap.
1. Ouadi Halfa. 2. Linacre. 3. Bezonian.—Noo Art.
1. St. Petersburg. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Bezonian.—Gapstang.
1. Slieve Gallion. 2. Orby. 3. Bezonian.—Trammy.
1. Bezonian. 2. Slieve Gallion. 3. Galvani.—Eboracum.

REGISTERED TRADE MARK
H. SAMUEL

YOU HAVE THE OPTION

of making a personal call at any of H. Samuel's London and Provincial Branch Establishments—53 in number—or sending for his and making a selection from among its 200 pages. The bargains to be seen in the shops are in the catalogue—those in the book may be inspected in the shops, and the value compared with that obtainable elsewhere.

FREE BARGAIN GUIDE AND CATALOGUE

18 ct. Three Diamonds 30/-

18 ct. Three Rubies or Sapphires & Two Diamonds 47/6

Eight Diamonds & Three Rubies or Sapphires 47/6

CALL OR WRITE TO-DAY.

H. SAMUEL, London Depot: 178, STRAND.

Central Depot: MARKET STREET, MANCHESTER.

D&J. McCALLUM'S "Perfection" SCOTCH WHISKY

A PERFECT WHISKY.
(Mellow like a Liqueur.)

The SOLE WHISKY supplied at all the Chief Edinburgh Municipal functions during the last five years.

Price, 48/- per doz. (Cases 3, 6, & 12 botts.) carr. paid in U.K.

Proprietors,
D. & J. McCALLUM, EDINBURGH,
London and Birmingham.

BRAGG'S CHARCOAL BISCUITS
Cure Indigestion

Flatulence, Acidity and all disorders of the Stomach, and are very pleasant to take. Bragg's Charcoal Biscuits are supplied to the Royal family. Recommended by the Lancet and the medical profession, and used in their own families.

Bragg's Charcoal Powder and Lozenges are equally excellent.
Of all Chemists and Stores.

The HACKNEY FURNISHING CO., Ltd.

Parties Furnishing should visit their West-End Premises, situated in the finest position in London,

93, 95, 97, 99, OXFORD STREET, W.
(Facing Newman Street).

Three minutes from Tottenham Court Road and Regent Street.

Their New Galleries are acknowledged to be the most Artistic combined with Elegance in London.

Parties can furnish on their deferred payment system as follows:—

GENERAL TERMS.

Worth	Per Month	Worth	Month	Worth	Month	Worth	Month
£10 ...	£0 6 0	£30 ...	£0 17 0	£50 ...	£1 8 0	£200 ...	£4 10 0
£20 ...	£0 11 0	£40 ...	1 5 0	£100 ...	£2 5 0	£500 ...	11 5 0

Free Life Insurance. Free Fire Insurance. No Security. No Deposit.

Head Offices { 1, 2, 3, 4, Town Hall Buildings.
and Showrooms { 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, The Grove, adjoining Mare St., London, N.E.
Catalogues and full particulars post free.

A. M. Stewart, Managing Director.

By Appointment to H.M. The King.

WEEKLY WINS TO DATE!

By Appointment to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

DAIMLER

April 6, 1907. MOTOR CYCLE UNION OF IRELAND HILL CLIMB. DAIMLER made fastest time.

May 3, 1907. HEREFORDSHIRE A.C. HILL CLIMB. FROME'S HILL. DAIMLERS made 1st and 2nd fastest times, and secured 2nd, 3rd, and 4th handicap places in their class.

May 4, 1907. ROYAL NORTH OF IRELAND YACHT CLUB MOTOR MEET. DAIMLERS made fastest times in Classes A and B.

May 4, 1907. WEST SURREY A.C. HILL CLIMB. DAIMLER made fastest time.

May 11, 1907. YORKSHIRE A.C. HILL CLIMB. DAIMLER made fastest time.

May 11, 1907. NOTTS A.C. MOTOR MEET.
Wilson Challenge Cup won by a DAIMLER.
SCRATCH EVENT. DAIMLERS made 2nd, 3rd, and 4th fastest times.
MILE HANDICAP. DAIMLER made fastest time.

THE DAIMLER MOTOR CO. (1904), Ltd.

Coventry: Daimler Works. London: 219-229, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.
Manchester: 60, Deansgate. Nottingham: 96, Derby Road. Bristol: 18, Victoria Street.

PLAYER'S NAVY MIXTURE

appeals to the discriminating smoker and the connoisseur of tobacco.

Sold in TWO STRENGTHS:
Mild, 5d. per oz. Medium, 4½d. per oz.

John Player & Sons, Nottingham, will forward testing samples post free to applicants mentioning this paper.

MAPLE & CO

DECORATIONS AND CARPETS

Starting Points in all Furnishing

NEW DESIGNS IN BRITISH CARPETS AND WALL PAPERS

WAITING YOUR SELECTION —— PATTERNS SENT ——

MAPLE & CO

LONDON PARIS

HAMPTONS

invite every reader of "Truth" to write for their New Book, T 220 (just issued),

"Taste and Distinction in Furnishing," which illustrates a large number of attractive schemes for decorating and furnishing that have recently been carried out by Hamptons, and is of exceptional interest and value to every one who is about to furnish.

Hamptons sell all goods at a minimum profit for cash. Exchange any purchase if not satisfactory. Deliver free within 30 miles or pay carriage to any Railway Station in Great Britain.

HAMPTONS

Head Offices & only Showrooms:

PALL MALL EAST, LONDON, S.W.

THE EMPIRE

Typewriter

GIVES

THE BEST VALUE.

Durability.
Simplicity.
Portability.

Price £13 2s. 6d.

THE EMPIRE TYPEWRITER CO., LTD.,
77, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
Ask for Art Catalogue.

THE BEST ON EARTH.

SIR ANDREW CLARK'S INVARIABLE ADVICE WAS

"Let the Patient have Schweitzer's Cocoatina, if you please."

SCHWEITZER'S Cocoatina

The Most Nutritious and Perfectly Digestible Cocoa.

For Invalids and Children as well as for the Strong and Healthy.

"This is Genuine Cocoa."—THE LANCET.

H. SCHWEITZER & CO., LTD., 143, York-road, London, N.

DENT'S Clocks

The Best Selection in London.

DENT'S

Watches and Jewellery.

Send for Illustrated Catalogue Free.

DENT'S NEW REGULATOR CLOCK
for Country Houses and Mansions, £21 and upwards.

Makers of the Great Westminster Clock Big Ben, and sole Custodians since its erection.

DENT
TRADE-MARK.

E. DENT & CO., LTD.,

ONLY ADDRESSES:—

61, STRAND, W.C., and 4, ROYAL EXCHANGE, E.C.

Consider Your Health!

When you consider how much depends upon it, what can be more important to you than the state of your health! If you are troubled with bad or indifferent health your capacities for work or pleasure are affected—even your life is threatened. Thousands know by old experience that are a blessing in the household and in every country of the world. No other medicine exercises so marked a control over and other painful forms of stomachic troubles.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

Biliousness, Sick-Headache, Nervous Prostration, Indigestion, Constipation

BEECHAM'S PILLS are good alike for man, woman and child, if taken according to directions. They are pre-eminently a family medicine—a remedy to have by one in readiness for every occasion when need arises.

There is yet another point in this connection that you should mark on the tablet of your memory. BEECHAM'S PILLS, in addition to their acknowledged value in Kidney, Liver, and Stomach disorders, have a specially beneficial effect in such ailments as are peculiar to women, many of whom endure needless pain and ill-health through ignorance of this important fact.

Sold everywhere in boxes, price 1/1½ (56 pills) & 2/9 (168 pills)

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & MALCOMSON, Ltd., 4 & 5, Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., & Published weekly by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st., E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.
Entered as Second Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1902.

CITY LIBRARY,
Handle Carefully.
LOWELL, MASS.

TRUTH

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1588. Vol. LXI. Wednesday, June 5, 1907. Price Sixpence.

TO OUR READERS.

We receive hundreds of letters every week from "Readers of 'Truth.'" A large majority of the writers expect replies direct. Of the work, trouble, and expense involved in doing this we say nothing. But as experience has shown that a large number of our "Constant" and "Regular" readers who inquire about individuals with whom we have dealt in our columns over and over again are not actual subscribers to the paper, but merely occasional readers of it at clubs, libraries, or at friends' houses, we consider we must protect ourselves in the matter.

We have therefore decided that henceforth every reader who writes making an inquiry that necessitates a direct reply must enclose a stamped envelope and also a Coupon which will always be found at the foot of the 3rd page of the coloured cover. Without these no notice will be taken of the communication.

Inquiries addressed to "Vigilant," which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through his "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can "Vigilant" send replies by post.

No Coupon will be available that is over a fortnight out of date, except from correspondents residing abroad.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made Payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Buildings," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE first of a series of Travel Supplements, to which I desire to direct the special attention of my readers, is included in this week's issue of Truth.

The King and Queen are to be in residence at Buckingham Palace until Monday, the 17th, when they go to Windsor Castle for a week. Their Majesties will be in town (except for two or three brief absences) from Monday, the 24th, until Monday, July 29, when they go to Goodwood House, where they are to be the guests of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon during the races, and on the evening of Friday, August 2, their Majesties will arrive in Cowes Roads on board the Royal yacht.

The King has arranged to visit the Royal Agricultural Society's show at Lincoln on Thursday, the 27th. It was understood in Lincolnshire that his Majesty would be the guest of Lord and Lady Yarborough at Brocklesby Park during his stay in the county, but it is now probable that the King's engagements in London will oblige him to make a one-day affair of the visit to Lincoln.

The announcement in a contemporary that there are to be "Court concerts" when the King and Queen of Denmark are in London is incorrect. The two "Court concerts" which were given every season at Buckingham Palace during the reign of Queen Victoria have been discontinued, and these entertainments are not likely to be resumed.

The King and Queen are to hold the third Court of the season to-morrow night in the Ball-room of Buckingham Palace, and there will be a very large attendance, including the Prince and Princess of Wales and Princess Henry of Battenberg, with a full Diplomatic Circle, and a crowded entrée. The fourth and last Court is to be held shortly after. Their Majesties return to town on Monday, the 24th, after spending Ascot race-week at Windsor Castle.

The Lord Chamberlain has issued invitations for about 2,000 guests, from lists sanctioned by the King, for the State Ball which is to be given at Buckingham Palace next Wednesday night in honour of the King and Queen of Denmark. This is the first ball which has been given at Court for two years. The guests are invited for half-past ten. The Yeomen of the Guard will be on duty in the hall, on the staircase, and in the promenade gallery, and a guard of honour will be in attendance. The Corps Diplomatique and all personages entitled to the entrée will arrive at the Pimlico entrance, for which special carriage tickets are to be issued from the Board of Green Cloth. The Prince and Princess of Wales and other members of the Royal family will arrive at the Garden entrance, where they will be received by the White Staves, who are to conduct them to the Council Room, and thence to the White Drawing-room, where the State procession to the Ball-room is to be formed. The procession of the King and Queen, which will include the Great Officers of their Majesties' Households, and the other White Staves, and the members of the various suites, is to proceed to the Ballroom through the Bow Drawing-room, the Blue Drawing-room, and the State Dining-room.

When the King and Queen have taken their seats on the daïs a quadrille d'honneur will at once be formed, his Majesty dancing with the Queen of Denmark, and the Queen having King Frederick as a partner. The Royal family will dance only at the top and bottom of the room, with Ambassadors and Ambassadresses (who have been previously summoned by the Lord Chamberlain) at the sides. The Gentlemen Ushers are to be on duty in the Ballroom, where they will be employed to keep clear the space in front of the daïs. Dancing will continue until supper is announced by the Lord Steward, when the Sovereign and the Royal family will be conducted (as on entering) to their supper room, followed by the Ambassadors and other Chefs de Mission and their wives. Supper will be served for the general company of guests in the Green Drawing-room and the two adjoining rooms. The whole of the Corps Diplomatique have been invited to the ball, and all individuals who are in office or who have ever been in office, and a great number of official and Service notables. The ball is regarded as an exceptionally important ceremonial, as it is given for the King and Queen of Denmark as the State guests of the Court.

Queen Louise has no taste for the glitter and turmoil of Court ceremonials, and she dislikes balls. She is an excellent woman of business in every department of affairs, and takes an active personal interest in practical household matters, which she has herself supervised ever since her marriage.

A contemporary is considerably astray when it refers to a report that another Chapter of the Knights of the Garter is to be held next week at Windsor Castle by the King, for the admission of the King of Denmark to the Order. As a matter of fact, King Frederick received a blue ribbon from Queen Victoria in July, 1896, on the occasion of the marriage of the present King and Queen of Norway. King Frederick had some years previously received the first class of the Order of the Bath (G.C.B., Civil Division) from Queen Victoria. The only English decoration which the King of Denmark can now receive is the Chain of the Royal Victorian Order, which is intended to be a peculiarly exclusive honour. It is in the personal gift of the King, and the number of holders (nearly all of them being Royal personages) is strictly limited.

It is expected, by the way, that the King will shortly confer the Order of the Garter upon the Crown Prince of Denmark, who, strangely enough, has never received an English decoration. Three heirs apparent to Crowns have received the Garter during the last few years—the German Crown Prince, the Crown Prince of Sweden, and the Crown Prince of Portugal, also the Archduke Francis Ferdinand of Austria. It is probable that the Crown Prince Christian and the Crown Princess will pay a visit to England before long. The Crown Princess of Denmark is a sister of the German Crown Princess and of the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, who is married to the second daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland.

The Prince and Princess of Bentheim-Steinfurt, who have been staying for several weeks at Claremont Park with the Duchess of Albany, have returned to the Continent. Their two daughters, the Princesses of Bentheim, are still staying at Claremont with their aunt.

A LITTLE MIXED.

(Lines addressed to the Tortoise at the Zoo.)

You poor old Tortoise at the Zoo,
How much I sympathise with you,
  Who leave your den, each dawn,
Expecting summer weather clear,
And in the sun, that won't appear,
  To bask upon the lawn.

You look in vain, and so do I,
For solar warmth and azure sky,
  Since neither ever comes,
But cold and soak and drip alone,
Which chills one to the very bone,
  And all one's frame benumbs.

We'd June in March, now March in June;
This comes too late; that came too soon;
  From which I seem to spell,
That, when The Weather's Clerk designed
This season's programme, he had dined
  Not wisely but too well.

A great deal of mystery has been made about Mr. Chamberlain's illness—not, it may be assumed, by himself, or by his own wish—and for this reason it has not evoked those public expressions of regret which would otherwise have been heard on all sides. When he went abroad the public was led to expect that a few weeks' rest and nursing in a southern climate would certainly restore him to his former health and activity. It is now certain that no such result has followed as yet, and every one will be unfeignedly sorry that it is so. Mr. Chamberlain has given and received many hard knocks during his political life; but when the heat of battle has evaporated even his bitterest opponents have never failed to recognise his great abilities and his perfect sincerity. There is no one who would not regret that his strenuous career should end in bodily breakdown and suffering, and everybody will cling to the hope that he may yet recover his strength sufficiently to take his place in Parliament again.

Mr. Frederick Leveson-Gower, who was known to his friends as "Freddy Leveson," died on Thursday at the age of eighty-eight. He was the younger son of the first Earl Granville (who was long Ambassador at Paris), and his mother was Lady Harriet Cavendish, sister of the sixth Duke of Devonshire, and daughter of the Duchess Georgiana. He was a clever man, blessed with a remarkably cheerful disposition, and he was an immense and universal favourite in society, being a noted and witty raconteur. From the period of his leaving Oxford he was a welcome guest everywhere,

For Appeals, see page 1416.
For the Truth Hotel List, see page 1425.
For Special for Ladies, see page 1427.
For Selected Foreign Hotels, see page 1424.
For Amusements, see page 1423.
For Estates, Auctions, see page 1416.
For Our Puzzles, see pages 1433, 1434.

and his uncle, the Duke of Devonshire, delighted in his company, and insisted on his spending months together at his various country houses. He had a reputation as a gourmet, his dinners were famous, and he was a charming host.

Except for a brief period, Mr. Leveson-Gower was a Member of the House of Commons from 1847 until 1885. He seldom spoke, but he did much useful practical work on Railway Committees. Mr. Gladstone, who was very fond of him, detected his very considerable talents early in his Parliamentary career, and twice offered him high office. Mr. Leveson-Gower was married in 1853 to Lady Margaret Compton, sister of the late Lord Northampton. It was a most happy union, for, as was well said by one of their friends after Lady Margaret's death in 1859, "No two people were ever better suited or more attached." Every one has read his very entertaining volume of reminiscences.

A complete set of "The Snob," a periodical printed at Cambridge in 1829, containing Thackeray's earliest literary work, and consisting of eleven numbers, was sold at Sotheby's on Thursday for £110. The last copy of this very rare publication came into the market sixteen years ago, and realised £51, so there has been a prodigious rise in its value. Thackeray's comic "Timbuctoo" appeared in "The Snob."

Writing the other day on the subject of newspaper advertisements, I referred in passing to "the recent conviction of the Editor of Judy." Needless to say, I meant the recent conviction of the recent Editor. The present Editor writes to point out that the paper changed hands and editors some months ago, and that as a matter of fairness I ought to have described the gentleman who got into trouble as the late Editor. I quite agree, and in saying so much I hope I have done what is necessary to put the matter right.

When the Grosvenor Hotel was first opened—it is painful to think how long ago—it was considered a marvellous addition to the hostelries of London. Things have changed a good deal in the hotel world since then. But the Gordon Hotels, Limited, have seized the opportunity offered by the reconstruction of Victoria Station for the extension of the hotel, and the additions that have been made to it, and which were opened on Saturday, once more place the Grosvenor in the front rank among its contemporaries. The new wing occupies the whole of the fine new front of the station, and contains, among other things, a hundred and sixty new bed-rooms, lit by electricity, heated by steam, sumptuously furnished, and fitted with every appliance conducive to comfort and luxury. The traffic at Victoria Station has increased, is increasing, and is certain to go on increasing, and the addition to the hotel accommodation will be a great convenience to travellers, as well as to people staying in London who want the best accommodation with the most central West-End situation.

For Approved Charities, see pages 1428, 1429.

THE GIRL WITHOUT A LAUGH.

"A wife without a smile" we've seen,
Unmoved by jest or chaff.
'Tis capped by Julia, maid serene,
The girl without a laugh;

Whom Alfred Gleed, her plighted beau,
Threw over in a pique,
Because she hadn't chuckled—no,
Not for a whole long week.

The jury held the reason not Sufficient for the deed:
And so for damages they shot
The laughter-loving Gleed.

They say the two have now changed round,
Reversed is now their case;
The laugh on Julia's lips is found—
The gloom on Alfred's face.

It has sometimes been unkindly asserted that the missionaries sent abroad to convert the heathen are over paid. The following advertisement shows that the Gillespie United Free Church is determined not to lay itself open to this reproach in connection with its engagement of a missionary to work among the heathen of Glasgow:—

Missionary wanted for Gillespie U.F. Church, Great Hamilton-street, Glasgow; salary not less than £65.

Lord Scarbrough has presented the Rev. W. D. Maclagan, late Vicar of Ruswarp, near Whitby, to the living of Skegness, Lincolnshire. Mr. Maclagan is a son of the Archbishop of York, and he has been working in Yorkshire for many years past.

The death of Bishop Lloyd is a really serious loss to the Church of England, and he will be greatly missed and long lamented in Northumberland, where he was universally beloved and esteemed. His life was one of hard and successful work. He was not renowned as a scholar or as a theologian, but he was a wonderful organiser and an admirable preacher, and his genuine goodness, his fine tact, his genial manner, and his strong common sense, were highly attractive. He was absolutely free from fads or "side." He was a reasonable High Churchman, but never became a partisan, and his wide sympathies caused him to work well with Evangelicals, while he was always on excellent terms with the Nonconformists. His father had been a staunch Evangelical of the old school.

Dr. Lloyd first came into prominent notice during the late seventies, when Vicar of Aylesbury, and he went from there to Newcastle-on-Tyne, as Vicar, in 1882, and in 1894 was appointed Suffragan for the diocese of Norwich and Rector of North Creake, a valuable benefice in the gift of Lord Spencer. In 1903 he was promoted by Mr. Balfour to the see of Newcastle. His schemes of Church extension, cathedral development, and poor livings endowment have proved great successes, thanks to his boundless energy and the confidence felt in him by both clergy and laity. He certainly shortened his life by hard and anxious work, which broke down his health about two years ago, but he continued to discharge all his duties to the last, and on the Sunday before his death he held an ordination in the morning, and preached in the evening to a vast congregation.

Dieudonné Hotel and Restaurant, Ryder Street, S.W. Excellent cuisine, prompt service, and comfort. Luncheons and Dinners Prix Fixe and à la carte. Mod. charges. Tel. No., 5265, Ger. Open on Sundays.

The see of Newcastle is worth £3,500 a year, and the episcopal residence is Benwell Tower, a very nice country place of reasonable size, which was a present to the bishopric from Mr. J. W. Pease, a well-known Quaker. The see, which comprises the whole of Northumberland, was formed in 1882 out of the diocese of Durham. Mr. Gladstone then appointed Dr. Ernest Wilberforce, who remained at Newcastle until 1895, when he accepted a translation to Chichester after the death of Bishop Durnford. The second Bishop was Dr. Jacob, who made a sacrifice in many ways in 1903 when he consented to transfer himself to the see of St. Albans.

One of my contemporaries is singularly unfortunate in its references to Canon Hervey. Last week I corrected two absurd mistakes it made in its account of that divine, but it has gone from bad to worse, for now it deplores the death of Canon Hervey, who will himself have the satisfaction of reading that "the earth should lie lightly" on him. The readers of my contemporary will be surprised to learn that Canon Hervey, Rector of Sandringham, is still alive. It is Prebendary Harvey, Rector of Navenby, who is dead. The two clergymen appear to have been confused.

The late Prebendary Harvey, who was one of the best-known ecclesiastics in Lincolnshire, had been working in that county for forty-six years. He was ordained by Bishop Jackson in 1861, being then mathematical master at Lincoln Grammar School. He held two important livings in the city of Lincoln between 1870 and 1893, and was also a priest-vicar of the cathedral. In 1893 he was presented to the college living of Navenby, and in the same year Bishop King collated him to a prebendal stall in Lincoln Cathedral. Prebendary Harvey was a familiar figure in the Lincoln district, and he was held in the highest esteem. He was for many years prominent as a most zealous supporter of the County Hospital, for which his exertions were most active. The rectory of Navenby, which is worth about £500 a year, with house, is in the gift of the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge.

I have received the following letter from Lady St. Helier with reference to her Children's Holiday Fund, and I hope that my readers will read it carefully:—

DEAR SIR,—In sending you the Report of the Holiday Fund, I beg to thank you most gratefully for your continued help; indeed, in many cases I have to thank my subscribers for a double subscription. I was compelled to make a second appeal last year, as the funds came in very slowly at the beginning of the summer, and so many new organizations for promoting somewhat similar charities diverted help which I had hitherto received. My appeal, however, was so successful that we are able to begin this year with a small balance in our favour.

The holiday was most successful in every way, and there was not the smallest accident to mar the perfect enjoyment of the children. I sent the largest number of children to homes at High Wycombe, a delightful part of the country, where they can play on the downs, and commons, which surround the town.

The children were selected, as usual, from the poorest parts of London, and were recommended by teachers, district visitors and clergy, each case being personally known to the recommender. I had many requests to send away children who could not afford the expense of a change, and delicate children requiring longer rest than the usual holiday affords, and in every case the benefit was undoubted, and in the strong healthy-looking children who went back to London there was no trace of the sickly, puny little people who had come from the great city.

May I again plead earnestly for help. The cold and privation of the winter and spring have left traces in many ways, and on no class of the community more than the children of the poor in London. The change means so much to them, and the good it does is incalculable, and I depend on your kind help to give this much-needed and deeply-prized holiday. Every day brings petitions from the teachers and district visitors, asking that their children may go again this year; and if your kind help is not forthcoming, I shall be obliged to refuse to give them what is the one pleasure they count on from year to year.

All subscriptions should be sent to "Lady St. Helier, 79, Harley Street, London, W.," and cheques and postal orders should be crossed "Children's Holiday Fund, Cox and Co."—I am, Sir, faithfully yours, MARY ST. HELIER.

From the report which accompanies Lady St. Helier's letter, I see that she received during the year ending April last £1,365 1s. 8d., and expended the whole of it except a balance of £56 15s. 10d. This money provided country holidays for 1,929 children and 132 adults, and as the schools and parishes from which all the children came are specified in detail, there is no room for doubt about Lady St. Helier's statement that they were selected "from the poorest parts of London." The financial account shows that the receipts included £205 2s. 6d. from readers of TRUTH. I hope that they will, if possible, increase their contributions this year, and I shall be pleased to receive and forward them to Lady St. Helier as heretofore. Meanwhile, I have to acknowledge the receipt of £2 2s. from Mrs. Pears towards Lady St. Helier's Fund.

I have also received the following contributions to the Tress Barry Fund. I would remind my readers that this Fund, which is intended to continue the late Sir F. Tress Barry's donation of sixpences to the children in the London workhouses at Christmas, can only be kept open till the end of July, and that a good many thousand sixpences have to be collected in the few weeks that remain:—

	No. of Sixpences.		No. of Sixpences
Rev. E. L. Browne	40	G. C. Dunn	10
F. P. S., R.N.....	20	C. L.	1
C. H. F.....	40

A schoolmaster writes:—

May I suggest that as the object of the Tress Barry Fund is to give pleasure to children, the matter might well be taken in hand by schools, whether boys' schools or girls' schools, public schools, or private schools? Probably in each scholastic centre somebody might be found to take the matter in hand and act as a collector. If you approve of the idea, I would gladly do so in this neighbourhood.

Certainly I approve of the idea, and if anybody is prepared to assist in carrying it out and to act as a collector, I shall welcome his or her services.

A BEAUTIFUL HOTEL AT BOURNEMOUTH.—The "ROYAL BATH." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Magnificent sea frontage and private grounds on East Cliff, facing due south. Only Hotel on East Cliff.

STEPHENS' TYPEWRITER CARBONS are sold in two weights medium and light; colours purple, black, and blue; foolscap or quarto at 1/6 per dozen. They are most durable and satisfactory.

The dispute between General Mends and the Canteen and Mess Co-operative Society has been referred by the War Office to Counsel for the Treasury, and Counsel has now delivered his opinion. It may be remembered that General Mends fell foul of the Society mainly on the grounds that they were making a secret profit by retaining the discount allowed by brewers, and that they had no right to apply their profits on a contract in payment of losses previously incurred. Counsel's opinion on the first of these points is that by their contract the Society were under no obligation to supply goods at cost price, or even to disclose their profits, and that even if this were not so, a sufficient disclosure was made; and, on the second point, that as a co-operative society, and having regard to the terms of its rules and of the Act of Parliament, the Society has a perfect right to apply current profits in repayment of past losses. In conclusion, counsel observes, "I should like to add, if it is within my province, that the imputations made against the good faith of the Society are, in my opinion, on the documents before me, wholly without foundation."

The action of General Mends is the most conspicuous instance that has yet come to light of the disposition prevailing in many quarters to condemn the Canteen and Mess Co-operative Society on the most unjustifiable pretexts. The Society was founded with a view of introducing the benefits of the co-operative system into the Army canteen business. Seeing its possibilities, I have always watched its operations with interest, and I have no hesitation in saying that it has always been conducted on strictly co-operative principles. But its promoters have naturally had to contend against violent opposition both from outside contractors, and from individuals within the Army whose interests were threatened by it; and unfortunately in this fight it has failed to receive the assistance that it was entitled to expect from officers who have, or ought to have, no interest in the matter except to promote the welfare of the soldier. For this reason and this only the development of the business has been hampered, and the institution has failed to do as much for the soldier as it would have done if it had been better supported by the Army itself.

The annual report of the Society issued last week indicates exactly how this process works out. Besides the direct loss of business in the Northern Command, it mentions that the Society has been much prejudiced during the year by the unfavourable rumours to which General Mends' action gave rise, and of which full use was naturally made by its competitors. In point of fact, it seems to have suffered to the extent of about £50,000 in reduction of sales. Through this, of course, every regimental institute dealing with it must suffer in some degree. Yet in spite of this the Society is able to report that it has paid during a year to regimental institutes, in the form of retail profits, £37,278. This figure shows clearly enough the benefits which the Army would receive, if a more intelligent and less prejudiced view were taken of its objects and management. It is to be hoped that, seeing the mischief he has done, no doubt with the best intentions, General Mends will now do his best to repair it by frankly admitting his mistake.

In this connection it is worthy of notice that under the Rules for the Management of the Garrison and Regimental Institutes issued with Army Orders of February 1, 1907, full provision is made for the supply and management of institutes on co-operative principles. The rules recognise all three prevailing systems, the regimental, the tenant, and the co-operative, and give directions applicable to each. The co-operative system is thus described (Par. 46, A):—

> Such societies make no guarantee of any specified rate of profit, but are under legal obligations to return all profits (less working expenses and five per cent. interest on capital) to the customer. The profits, then, will depend on the manner in which the business is conducted, and, therefore, a C.O. will first ascertain whether such society is properly registered under the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts, and whether, from its method of management and successes in similar undertakings, it is likely to make a reasonable return of profits to the customer.

It is very natural that a commanding officer should be more disposed to make terms with a contractor who offers a specific annual payment in return for his privileges than with a co-operative society which does not guarantee any fixed amount, but merely pays over such profits as it can make. But it ought to be remembered that the contractor has to make a profit for himself, while the profit of the co-operative society is limited to the payment of interest on its capital; that the publication of its accounts clearly discloses whether the financial management is satisfactory or not; and that the larger the amount of patronage given to such a society, the larger will be the profit divisible among the customers.

Colonel Bruce, the editor of the official journal of the R.A.M.C., has sent me a statement on the subject of Malta fever, which is exceedingly interesting as an object-lesson in the value of preventive methods in medicine. What is generally known as Malta fever is so called because it has worked its worst ravages in that island, though the disease is widely distributed in the world, and is especially familiar around the coasts of the Mediterranean. The garrison of Malta have been particularly liable to the disease. For a great many years the average number of sailors and soldiers falling victims to it has been 650, and as each patient stays about 120 days in hospital, this has meant a total of about 80,000 days of illness per annum. Three years ago the Royal Society, at the request of the Admiralty, the War Office, and the Colonial Office, appointed a small Commission, of which Colonel Bruce was Chairman, to investigate the causes of this fever.

As the outcome of exhaustive researches it was discovered that the goats in Malta are susceptible to this disease, and act, as it were, as a reservoir of the virus.

THE WOODLAND LAUNDRY, PARK-RD. EAST, ACTON. Tel., 627 Chiswick. "A really first class laundry at moderate prices."—The Ladies' Field. "It appeals to dainty people."—The Queen. Please apply for Price List, &c.

STAMMERING cured only by personal tuition; interview on written application.—Mr. A. C. SCHNELLE, 119, Bedford Court-mansions, London, W.C. Pupils taken in residence.

Practically all the milk used in the island is obtained from the goats, of which there are some 20,000. Half of these animals were found to be affected by the fever, and one-tenth of them to be passing in their milk the minute bacterium which sets up the disease in human beings. The remedy was obvious. Since June, 1906, goats' milk has been eliminated from the dietary of the naval and military forces in Malta, with the striking result that the cases of fever among the garrison have fallen to one-tenth of what has been their normal number. The money which this scientific investigation cost was certainly well spent, and if the Malta Government will take the necessary steps, the fever may be almost completely banished not only from the garrison but from the island.

An extraordinary story is current in South Africa with regard to certain proceedings of Brigadier-General Carter, arising out of the affairs of the Garrison Club at Harrismith. The Garrison Club is an exclusively military institution, and Brigadier-General Carter is in command of the garrison, having held the appointment since last November. It seems that in February last some of the members noticed that preliminary work was being done on the club enclosure for the construction of a croquet lawn, and put down in the club suggestion book a minute asking by whose orders and authority the work had been undertaken. The club, though not in debt, is not troubled with a plethora of funds, and the members were clearly entitled to full information respecting this expenditure, and it had been found impossible to obtain any such information before this minute was put down in the suggestion book. About a dozen officers signed the minute.

At this date Brigadier-General Carter was away, but on his return he called together all the officers of the garrison in the military theatre, and after delivering a somewhat severe lecture, he called upon those who had signed the minute to stand up, and subsequently ordered one of them to rejoin his regiment from the Mounted Infantry, another to be transferred to another station, and the remainder to have their leave stopped. This is the version of the incident which reaches me on good authority. If it is inaccurate, I shall be pleased to correct it—on equally good authority. But as it stands it is one of the most extraordinary stories that I have ever heard, and will be viewed in that light by every one in the Service. In view of the fact that certain officers have suffered in various ways by this action of the General, the matter seems one calling for the notice of superior authority.

From time to time there is an outcry in the papers over the case of some aged defender of his country who is found rusting in a workhouse or begging by the wayside, and eloquent disquisitions are published on the duty of the country to its old soldiers and sailors. The country collectively, as represented by the Government, has no absolute duty beyond the fulfilment of its engagements to its employees; but such cases appeal powerfully to individual benevolence. I would recommend that view of the matter to those who feel and speak warmly on this subject, and at the same time call their attention to the Army and Navy Veterans' Association, which makes a business of looking after old soldiers and sailors and assisting them in various ways. The last annual report shows how this has been done in specific cases, such as obtaining pensions for veterans who have fought in famous campaigns, getting children into schools, obtaining recognition of claims on the State that have been overlooked, finding employment for old men, and so forth.

The most astonishing feature in the report is that this work has been carried on for the last two years on an income for that period of £22 4s. 8d.—in other words, that the work has really been done for love. I think it will be generally felt that such work is deserving of more financial support, and those who agree should give practical evidence of their sentiments to Lieut.-Colonel Ridout, the hon. secretary and treasurer of the Army and Navy Veterans' Association, who is to be found at 101, Canterbury-street, Gillingham, Kent.

It seems that I did an injustice to the department of the War Office which is concerned with the issue of medals, when commenting last week on the grievance of an ex-warrior who had obtained the South African medal after five years' struggling, but "without the usual pin." Apparently the department does not deal in pins. I have this information from a Service correspondent who has received four medals in the last and present reigns, besides one from the Khedive, and he certainly ought to know.

For Mr. Asquith's sake, I hope that we shall not have a passive resistance movement against the income tax; but there seems to be a marked tendency in that direction. Following on the recent case at Exeter, there has just been another sale of a defaulting income taxpayer's goods at Barnsley, the victim having deliberately courted a sale by way of protest against the assessment that had been made upon him. His story, which was given fully the other day in the Sheffield Telegraph, is a very remarkable one, and deserves the personal attention of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for it is typical of hundreds of cases that occur annually in all parts of the country, and I am not sure that "hundreds" is not an inadequate estimate.

The victim in this instance was a Mr. H. Charlesworth, a provision dealer of Market Hill, Barnsley. He states that business in his particular trade has been very bad for some time past, and that he personally has made no profits for two or three years, living upon means which he possesses outside his business, and upon which income tax is duly levied. He paid income tax on his business last year under protest, and states that he was wrongfully assessed, having made no profit. During the last financial year he says that he made a loss of £200, but he was assessed to income tax at £22 10s. It is interesting to note that he appealed to the Commissioners, explaining his business accounts, and offering to submit his books, but they replied that they could do nothing for him. He subsequently had communications with the local surveyor, and suggested an independent audit of his books, mentioning the names of three firms for the purpose. He employed one of them at the surveyor's suggestion. The audit showed a loss on each of the three past years, and that in February of the present year the business was insolvent to the extent of £200. The result was communicated to the authorities, but the reply was that it was too late. Under these circumstances, Mr. Charlesworth refused to pay, and submitted to a seizure of his goods.

CHARING CROSS HOSPITAL, W.C., CONVALESCENT HOME, Limpsfield, dependent on £15,000 a year from voluntary sources. Contributions urgently solicited.

SEEGER'S HAIR DYE.—Dyes the hair by merely combing through. 2s. the Case, or Trial Bottle, mailed free from observation, 7d.—HINDE'S Ltd., 1A, Finsbury, London.

The Sheffield Telegraph has interviewed the local Inland Revenue officials on these statements, and their answer was that Mr. Charlesworth's remedy is to apply to Somerset House for a rebate, and that they have no doubt that it will be granted. People outside the Inland Revenue Department will by no means share this confidence, and Mr. Charlesworth himself states that he applied last year under similar circumstances for a rebate, and did not get it. That is more like the usual course of things. But even if the process of recovering money from Somerset House when the tax collector has once got hold of it were more simple and efficacious than it is, that would be no proper remedy for the evil of wrongful assessment and unjust extortion.

What has to be remembered is that men in business are extremely reluctant—and naturally so—to reveal the fact that their profits are dwindling, or non-existent. In the case above mentioned, Mr. Charlesworth states that he knows that there are many men in his own line of business who have been as wrongfully assessed as he has, but they do not care to go before the Commissioners and disclose the truth about their financial position. This is easy to believe, and no doubt it is constantly happening. What is more, there can be little doubt that the income tax authorities take advantage of this fact to extort payment from men who are making little or no profits. I am not one of those who object to the income tax on principle; but I am quite certain that it is made at present, in many cases, an instrument of oppression and injustice; and the tax will always be unpopular, and always be kicked against until some Chancellor of the Exchequer finds means to improve the machinery of assessment.

A correspondent writing on the same question, points out that if a professional man makes provision for his old age by buying an annuity out of his earnings, or saving money the investment of which will secure him an income on his retirement, he pays a double tax; first upon the money as he earns it, and then on the income which he derives from it. In this case the grievance seems to be in the main imaginary. Income invested in the purchase of a deferred annuity is, like that spent in life assurance premiums, exempt from taxation. The rest of the grievance, such as it is, is inherent in the nature of an income tax, because all capital is accumulated out of income, whatever the motive which prompts its accumulation, and to that extent the profits arising from it may always be said to be "taxed twice over."

There are country districts in which the extravagances of local administration are quite as pronounced as any in town. Just now an agitation is being raised in regard to the cost of the surveyor's department of the Tonbridge Rural District Council. The surveyor of this body has a salary of £440 a year, and there are in addition allowances of £100 for travelling expenses, £307 for assistants, and £45 for an office, making a total of £892. There are 121 miles of road in the district. Many other districts with a much larger mileage pay a smaller salary, and make no allowances for travelling expenses or assistants. For example, the Faversham Rural Council, with 172 miles of road, give their surveyor an inclusive salary of £255, while the Uckfield Council, with 212 miles, pay only £175. The expenditure on the surveyor's department at Tonbridge certainly seems to be excessive, and it is a decided anomaly that the surveyor, who has such a big salary and is provided with three assistants, should be allowed to hold other paid appointments and also to serve as a member of the Southborough Urban Council.

It may not have escaped my readers' notice that Mr. F. W. Horner, late M.P. for North Lambeth, has at last been formally adjudicated bankrupt. I rather think that I am a defendant in a libel action at the suit of the debtor, so I must not make any remark of my own upon his affairs. But I understand that due respect for the High Court does not preclude my recording as a matter of news the proceedings that have taken place in the Bankruptcy Court, and in that belief I reprint the following summary from the pages of the Daily Mail:—

November, 1905.—Receiving order.

February 8, 1906.—First meeting of creditors. Telegram from Mr. Horner from South Wales, "Am now negotiating to pay all in full in few weeks, leaving very large surplus." Meeting adjourned to February 28.

February 28, 1906.—Mr. Horner reported "Suffering from severe nerve prostration. Needs absolute bodily and mental rest for the next few weeks. Adjourned to March 28.

March 28, 1906.—Further adjournment for three months asked by Mrs. Horner, "Mr. Horner seriously ill." Adjournment refused.

July 12, 1906.—Mr. Horner called for third time for public examination. Medical certificate states: "Highly detrimental to his health to undergo any legal examination prior to taking a sea voyage of six or seven weeks." Sitting adjourned till October 25.

October 25, 1906.—No attendance. Adjourned till January 24, 1907.

January 24, 1907.—Again called for examination. Medical certificate says: "Imperative for his health that he should take a sea voyage of ten weeks." Adjournment for a fortnight.

February 14, 1907.—"Physically unfit to attend." Official Receiver's application for adjudication in bankruptcy adjourned until May 31.

May 31, 1907.—Adjudged bankrupt.

THE LUXURY OF A BATH is incomplete without the addition of SCRUBB'S CLOUDY FLUID AMMONIA, which refreshes and invigorates. Sold everywhere, price one shilling per bottle.

SOUTHAMPTON.—SOUTH-WESTERN HOTEL.—The new Dining-room, elegant Lounges, Smoke-room, with Restaurant and Grill-room on ground floor now open.—For tariff, apply to Manager.

Mr. J. W. Willis Bund, Worcestershire's Pooh-Bah, Chairman of the Court of Quarter Sessions and of the County Council, of the Standing Joint Committee, and I know not what besides, is such a very truculent gentleman that one needs a good deal of courage to criticise anything that he says or does. Yet even at the risk of bringing down upon myself the thunder of his wrath I feel bound to notice his latest outburst. It arose in this way. At the County Petty Sessions at Worcester two or three weeks ago a village innkeeper was convicted of permitting drunkenness under circumstances which induced the Rev. C. Poyntz Sanderson, Rector of Doverdale, to write letters to the Worcestershire Echo and other local papers, protesting against the conviction. Mr. Sanderson was interested in the matter by reason of the fact that the innkeeper is one of his parishioners. Mr. Willis Bund was not one of the magistrates whose decision was impugned. Usually he is only seen on the Bench as Chairman of Quarter Sessions, but last week he descended from that judicial pedestal and took the chair at the Petty Sessions. He did this at the request of his fellow magistrates in order that he might on their behalf deliver a philippic designed to strike terror into the hearts of the audacious cleric who had questioned the justice of the conviction and the equally audacious editors who had ventured to publish his letters.

The gist of Mr. Sanderson's complaint was that the innkeeper had become a victim of vindictive persecution by the police, whose evidence was received with too much credence, while some evidence for the defence was unfairly excluded. Among other things the reverend gentleman remarked that there was no confidence in the administration of justice in the district from which this case came, and that the impartiality and fairness of the magistrates ought to be above suspicion. These remarks were the head and front of his and the editors' offending. "A grosser libel," Mr. Willis Bund declared, "it would be impossible to imagine. He did not want in any way to be thought threatening anybody, but"—and then he went on to intimate that Mr. Sanderson and the editors, too, might have been prosecuted for criminal libel, and that they certainly would be prosecuted if those libels were repeated. He proceeded:—

> It would not be civil proceedings for libel; it would be criminal proceedings for libel upon the Court and the administration of justice. They were proceedings which he need hardly say were very serious indeed . . . and much as he should regret to see a beneficed clergyman standing in the dock, he should certainly press—after the notice they had given—not for a fine, but for imprisonment. He firmly believed the Judge whom Mr. Sanderson had referred to (the Lord Chief Justice), if he tried the case, would inflict the punishment of imprisonment.

I do not profess to know what the Lord Chief Justice or any other judge might be inclined to do, but, after all a verdict of guilty has to be given before sentence can be passed, and the result of the last case of the kind—the prosecution of Sir Edward Russell at the instance of the Liverpool licensing magistrates—showed that a jury can be trusted to stand up for the right of public comment on the administration of justice, even in the face of a judge's unconcealed opinion that there should be a conviction. Mr. Willis Bund's menacing speech does not seem to have produced quite the sort of impression that he expected—indeed, from what has since appeared in the local papers, I gather that neither Mr. Sanderson nor the editors are a bit frightened. The talk about the criminal dock and the punishment of imprisonment was, in fact, a piece of bluster which has only had the effect of making the magistrates look ridiculous.

An amusing air of innocence was assumed by a Jew named Joseph Harris in a moneylending case in the Sheffield County Court last week. He is local manager for a bloodsucker named Mark Shaffer, who runs usury shops in a number of towns in Lancashire and Yorkshire under the style of "Maurice and Co." Harris, giving evidence in support of a claim against a farmer and his wife, was asked if he was aware that the interest charged on the loan, taking into account the reduction of the principal by instalments, worked out at the rate of 300 per cent. per annum. Harris replied that they did not work by the percentage. "But you know, of course," said the defendant's solicitor, "that when the principal is paid off week by week the interest increases enormously?" Harris appeared to be quite surprised. "I never thought of that before," he replied; "I am not an expert." However, this remarkable ingenuousness did not alter the fact that the interest worked out at the rate mentioned, and instead of being awarded the £67 10s. for which he sued, Shaffer was given judgment for only £35—a very satisfactory example of the usefulness of the Moneylenders Act.

It is rather an unusual experience to hear a complaint from the Automobile Association as to the smallness of a fine inflicted upon a motorist. Such a complaint has, however, come to hand in reference to a recent case in which the defendant, an officer of high rank in his Majesty's Service, was summoned for driving to the common danger. The penalty imposed was 20s., and if the defendant had really been guilty of the offence with which he was charged the punishment would have been absurdly inadequate. But he strongly maintained that he was unjustly convicted, and he was most anxious to appeal against the decision, though well aware that even if successful the appeal would be an expensive proceeding. No appeal can be entered if the fine is not more than 20s., and the defendant's solicitor accordingly urged the Bench to increase it by a shilling or whatever amount they pleased in order that the case might be fought out in another court. Their worships refused to do this, a circumstance from which it may reasonably be inferred that they were afraid a more competent and impartial tribunal would quash the conviction. It is an obvious anomaly that it should be open to magistrates to prevent an appeal in this way by limiting the amount of the penalty. In such a case the fact that the fine is light does not make an unjust conviction any the less grievous a wrong.

Savoy Hotel & Restaurant, London.—The most beautiful garden and river view in Europe. The Restaurant of the world. Hotel rooms bright, fresh, and delightfully quiet.

Chills are frequently caught through leaving a warm sitting-room to undress in a cold bedroom. Avoid this danger by having a gas fire in every bedroom. Comfortable, Convenient, & Healthy

Without presenting any very startling example of magisterial aberration, my Legal Pillory this week contains plenty of material for those who wish to study the methods adopted by the Great Unpaid in their administration of justice. Hard labour for the tramp who shies at his task of oakum picking, and a paltry fine for the ruffians who set about a man with sticks and boots; a smart dose of imprisonment for the petty thief, and a trifling pecuniary penalty for the callous parent who allows his children to starve amidst filthy surroundings; gaol for the woman who makes an effort to obtain subsistence without first providing herself with a hawker's licence, and a demand for payment of a few shillings from the brute who smashes a woman's nose. Such are the pleasing contrasts afforded during the past week by the modern representatives of Mr. Justice Shallow.

Dunmow Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Clapham and Norrin. A. Harris and C. Barnes, charged with assaulting A. Monk. The latter was knocked down with sticks and kicked while on the ground. Fined 10s. and costs each.

Dunmow Petty Sessions. Before the same magistrates. Henry Clifford and Isaac Richardson, tramps, charged with refusing to perform their task at the workhouse, because the master would not give them a little hot water. Fourteen days' hard labour.

Reepham Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Gay, Norris, Bircham, Watson, Collyer, and Cremer. E. Jimby, farmer, charged with cruelty to a horse. He was driving it up and down a ploughed field, thrashing and prodding it with a stick until the blood flowed. Fined 10s. and costs.

Reepham Petty Sessions. Before the same bench. Robert Buck, charged with stealing two and a half stones of hay, value 1s. 6d. He was caught filling a bag from a stack by the side of the road, and a second bagful was found in his possession. One month's hard labour.

Llanelly Police-court. John Watts and Jane Watts, charged with neglecting a child, aged two years. The baby was badly nourished and dirty. The home was filthy, the mattresses full of vermin, and the stench unbearable. Fined 20s. each.

Rye County Police-court. Before Major Vidler, Dr. Skinner, Messrs. Burra and Austin. John Coster, charged with stealing an overcoat, gloves, and handkerchief, valued at £3 4s. Six months' hard labour.

Kirkcaldy Police-court. Before Bailie Peebles. Samuel Hooper, charged with assaulting two other men. One he struck in the face with his fists and the other he attacked with an axe, inflicting a severe wound on the hand. Fined 20s.

Albrighton Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Lloyd, Llewellin, Barker, Lewis, Jones, and Sandford. Joseph Cox, John Harris, and W. Lloyd, charged with trespassing in pursuit of rabbits. Cox and Harris fined £2 and costs each, and Lloyd £1 and costs.

Derby Borough Police-court. Before Sir Edwin Ann and other magistrates. James Banks, charged with assaulting Kate Stevenson. He struck her in the face because she intervened in a quarrel, breaking her nose and necessitating an operation. Fined 40s. and costs.

Ashford Police-court. Before Alderman Watson and Mr. W. F. B. Jemmett. George Nuttin, charged with killing a young pheasant, which was found dead in a hedge which he had passed while walking with his wife and a perambulator on the high road. Fined £2 and 12s. costs.

Aberavon County Police-court. Samuel Evans, charged with neglecting his seven children. They were badly fed, ill-clothed, dirty, and verminous, and the home was filthy in the extreme. His wages averaged £2 8s. per week, and one boy earned 15s. per week. Fined 20s. and costs.

Chorley Petty Sessions. Before Colonel Widdows, Messrs. Crosse and Anderton. H. Huyton and J. Bradley, charged with game trespass. They were seen at a rabbit burrow in a wood with a dog. Huyton fined 40s. and costs and a warrant issued for Bradley, who did not appear.

Wincanton Petty Sessions. Before Mr. Bailward, General Ducat, Colonel Fownes, Messrs. Dyke and Pocock. A. T. Doble charged with assault. He went to a special service at a Wesleyan Chapel, where he struck one man in the face several times and created so much disturbance that the meeting had to be closed. Fined 10s. and costs.

East Dereham Petty Sessions. Before Mr. Bulwer, Colonel Hyde, Sir G. R. L. Hare, and Mr. Daniel. John Tuttle, charged with taking ten partridges' eggs from a nest. Fined £2 or 21 days' imprisonment.

Bedford Police-court. Before the Mayor and other magistrates. Sarah Corby, charged with hawking without a licence. One month's hard labour.

Much Hadham Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Pasteur, Mott, and Sworder. E. Smith, farmer, charged with cruelty to horses. He was working a mare and gelding that could only move a few yards at a time. They were old, weak, and diseased, and the mare was in such a bad condition that an auctioneer later refused to admit it to his sale yard. He had several times been previously convicted. Fined £3.

Littlehampton Petty Sessions. Before Sir H. Aubrey-Fletcher, Captain Hills, Messrs. Henty, Mostyn, Harvey, and Tester. A. Horner, charged with cruelty to a goat. He was driving a trolley, with a goat tied on behind, so fast that the animal fell down several times and was dragged along. Its knees and sides were cut and bleeding. Fined 28s. inclusive.

Stowmarket Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Booth, Longe, Pretyman, Wade, and Colonel St. John Fancourt. George Last, charged with unlawfully having in his possession two pheasants' eggs and nine partridge's eggs. Fined £2 and 7s. 3d. costs.

Tiverton Petty Sessions. William Mogford, charged with sleeping out in a field. Fourteen days' hard labour.

Malvern Police-court. Before Colonel Heywood, Mr. Acworth and Colonel Twynam. Thomas Payne, plant hawker, charged with stealing two ferns from the garden of an unoccupied house and four ferns from the garden of another. Two months' hard labour on each charge.

Derby Police-court. Thomas Ward, charged with stealing an iron oven, value 2s. One month.

In view of certain circumstances that have come to my knowledge, I shall be glad to hear from any readers of TRUTH who may have had recent experience of the Imperial Art Supply Company, formerly of Great James-street, and now of Chancery-lane, and also of 17, Ranelagh-avenue, Fulham; or of the Albion Show Card Company, of 203, Strand. Both of these names will be familiar as those used by home employment swindlers who have been frequently referred to in TRUTH. For that reason I do not expect to find that any of my readers have had personal dealings with them, but they may happen to know of others who have, and if the transactions have occurred recently, I should feel obliged if they would communicate the information.

In the TRUTH Cautionary List will be found the name of a firm called Gerome and Co., of Fleet-street, vendors of "Happy Home Seeds." Their title to that honourable position is further strengthened by a recent circular, in which they state that they "have had over 100,000 unsolicited testimonials"; that they are "going to give away £50,000 in free prizes to their customers."; and that they "have been established over twenty years and have over a million customers on their books." Gerome and Co. are of opinion that this last statement is "a guarantee for our honesty and upright business methods." I should draw a somewhat different inference from it myself. The object of all this flim-flam is to get rid of flower and vegetable seeds, which Gerome and Co. state "are now ready." The seeds may be ready, but evidently the customers are not, or the firm would not have these vast quantities on their hands at the end of May.

That the distressed foreign artist referred to in last week's TRUTH under the name of "George Martin" is a thorough expert at the begging-letter business is further demonstrated by the evidence of the Norwegian Vice-Consul at one of our coast towns. To this gentleman Martin writes in the character of "Mrs. Mary G. Martin," forwarding a portrait of H.M. the King of Norway, which it is hoped that his Majesty's Vice-Consul will accept at the price of 6s. In the letter which I gave last week the artist was "a miniature painter in deep financial difficulties, and struggling in vain with adversity, mainly owing to failing sight." "Mary G. Martin" is "a teacher of painting and drawing, in deep financial difficulties." There are certain unmistakable family resemblances in the work of all artists of this class which can be easily recognised, if those to whom they appeal would only allow their sympathies to be governed by a little common sense.

FOR MOSQUITO BITES, WASP or BEE STINGS, nothing allays the irritation so quickly as SCRUBB'S CLOUDY FLUID AMMONIA. Price 1s per bottle. Beware of imitations.

THE CARLTON HOTEL, PALL MALL, S.W. — 1598 Gerrard. Famous for its beautiful Restaurant and Grill Room. Under the same Direction as the Ritz Hotel.

LIGHTNING PHOTOGRAPHY.

(A burglar's protest).

I sees at Deal, the other day,
A rummy thing occur,
Which in our trade—the trooth ter say—
'As made no end o' stir.

A lightnin' flash, wot charnced ter pass,
A vase snapshotted cleer,
And print it on a looking glass
As stood convenient nere.

Now, since 'twas but a vase, yer see,
The consikwence was slight;
But think, if it had photo'd ME,
While burglin' of a nite!

Which, wot with finger-prints, says I,
We've risks enuff and more,
Without them helements on 'igh
A-shuvvin' in their hoar.

Lord Milner's latest contribution deserves all the hard things that Lord Carrington has said of it, for it is singularly malevolent, singularly ill-timed, and from an ex-High Commissioner whose record is one of disastrous failure, in singularly bad taste. Lord Milner may be deeply convinced of the evils that Liberal policy is going to bring on South Africa some day, but before proclaiming his convictions he would do well to remember all that he did for that distressful country. His achievements might have been prophetically described by the late Laureate:—

> The children born of thee are sword and fire,
> Red ruin, and the breaking up of laws.

One is tempted to add:—

> And the Godless hosts
> Of heathen, swarming o'er the (China) Sea.

The first thing needful in a Government Bill is that it should satisfy all sections of the supporters of the Ministry. Mr. Harcourt's Small Holdings Bill fulfils this requirement, and it has the further advantage of being a difficult Bill for the other side to attack, except on side issues or insignificant details. It was quite time that the Ministry produced a first-class measure on which Liberals of all complexions can unite with genuine enthusiasm, and it is fortunate for them that the Bill thus produced should be a land Bill, for effective land legislation was one of the first things hoped for by the great mass of people who gave the Government its enormous majority.

I am not one of those who expect a social revolution from any agrarian legislation. Our land system is antiquated and defective enough, but it is not the only cause, nor the chief cause, of the depopulation of the rural districts which social reformers are so anxious to remedy. Even the unrestricted importation of food from the Colonies and foreign countries cannot be in any great degree responsible for that, for the same tendency is seen at work in countries where agriculture is highly protected—notably in Germany. Only a few days ago I was talking to an intelligent gentleman, following agricultural pursuits in this country, who had been passing some time on the estate of a great landowner in Silesia. He was there during the last harvest, and I was struck when he told me that there was just the same scarcity of agricultural labour in that part of the world that he had found in England, and that the obvious cause of it was the migration of all the best of the young people into the towns, leaving only the old folk and the wastrels in the villages. This seems to be the common tendency in every part of the world where there are towns big enough to offer the requisite attractions.

These attractions are rooted in human nature, and influence other people besides agricultural labourers. They cannot be removed by Acts of Parliament. All that you can do is to mitigate them by counter-attractions, and the only counter-attraction from which any substantial result can be expected is that of ownership, whether in a more or a less limited form. You can give the labourer an allotment on which he can work with the prospect of obtaining for himself the whole output of his industry, instead of subsisting entirely by selling his labour to another man at the miserable market rate; and you can give him the opportunity of acquiring by industry and thrift a holding large enough to furnish a decent home and a sufficient livelihood for himself and his family, with a security of tenure which will ensure his reaping for himself all that he may sow. Even under these conditions the life will always be a hard one, and the return scanty beside that which an equal amount of industry and self-denial may yield in other pursuits. But it is a healthy life for mind and body; it affords to the worker the satisfaction of being "on his own," and working for himself only; and for these reasons it appeals to many beyond all the attractions of town life.

Among this last class are necessarily the majority of those who still remain on the land in spite of all temptations to go elsewhere and all the disadvantages of their present lot. That "land hunger" does not exist extensively would therefore be incredible, even if it were not disproved by very clear and definite evidence. And it is an appetite which will grow with feeding, and with the opportunity of feeding. Mr. Harcourt's Bill provides that opportunity, striking away, as it does, all the causes which have made the last Small Holdings Act a dead letter. It may consequently do much good within the limits which extraneous circumstances place on the operation of all such measures. Its self-evident possibilities in that direction have already caused it to be warmly welcomed throughout the country, and if any attempt to carry out the customary process of emasculation is made in the House of Lords, it will be a very good measure for the purpose of trying conclusions with that Assembly.

IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE
IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE
IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE

After the Premier's statement on Monday, however, doubt may be felt whether the Bill will even get as far as the House of Lords this Session. The abandonment of the Irish, the Education, and other Bills, and the relegation of Licensing Reform to the unknown future still leaves the Government with an almost impossible programme for ten weeks, especially with a debate in prospect on the House of Lords question which is bound to be acrimonious and lengthy. The situation into which Government business has drifted furnished Mr. Balfour with some effective debating points, and there is a certain amount of justice in his criticism. It is not only useless to try to get a quart into a pint pot, but the attempt and the failure have an unbusinesslike appearance. What Ministers have to learn is that it is a mistake to attempt to do too much, and that the mistake is aggravated by wasting time over measures that are not certain to be acceptable to those without whose support they cannot be passed.

The debate on the second reading of the Court of Criminal Appeal Bill gave Mr. Gladstone an opportunity of defending the action of the Home Office on petitions against convictions, and of drawing a harrowing picture of the "unbearable" position in which a Home Secretary is placed by the present practice. With his general condemnation of the system of "trial by newspaper" most people will agree, and the position of a Home Secretary in those cases is always beset with so many difficulties that personally I always regard him with sympathy, and I wonder that any gentleman should have held the office for a month without bringing in a Court of Criminal Appeal Bill in self-defence. But Mr. Gladstone's defence of his Department overlooked all the more serious allegations that have been made against it at different times, and any one listening to it might have supposed that Mr. Gladstone had never heard of the Beck case and its result, and that he was unaware, when his own Committee reported the other day that the conviction of Mr. Edalji was indefensible, that the Home Office had for three years previously been refusing every application made to it on the prisoner's behalf.

Personally, in the course of a long connection with journalism, I have never devoted special attention to any criminal conviction but that of Mr. Edalji. I naturally form my opinion of Home Office methods from what I have seen of them in the course of that case. They seem to me radically wrong and inconsistent with the just exercise of the prerogative of mercy as now understood; and nothing in Mr. Gladstone's speech touches the reasons for that opinion. This aspect of the case will have to be discussed again before long, and this is not the time to go into it. But, to mention only one point, every argument for the prisoner's innocence necessarily reflected upon the conduct of the police who got up the case. Yet even to-day, when an independent committee of inquiry has reported against his conviction, and has expressly censured the police, the Home Secretary has indicated no desire to give effect to that censure, or, if he considers it undeserved, to have the issue satisfactorily tried by a further inquiry, and thus to give the police an opportunity of justifying their proceedings. Even the Chief Constable of Staffordshire, in a newspaper interview, has publicly protested against this course, and demanded a fuller inquiry into the conduct of the police. From his own point of view, he is fully entitled to do so.

Nor is this all. It must necessarily be assumed that in its inquiries into the case, the Home Office itself has had recourse privately to police evidence; in the correspondence between the Home Secretary and Mr. Edalji, Senr., subsequently to the first petition on the prisoner's behalf, this was practically admitted. The strongest observations that have been made in Truth on the Home Office procedure have had reference to this method of determining the issue raised by a petition on a prisoner's behalf by private references to parties who have a direct interest in upholding his guilt. The censure passed by Sir Arthur Wilson's Committee on the Staffordshire police adds tenfold force to this criticism.

Mr. Gladstone complains that the Home Secretary should be reviled for holding a "secret inquiry." Why? It is a secret inquiry. Evidence can be given at it which is not communicated to the other side. The Home Secretary alone ordains that this shall be so. Mr. Edalji, Senr., asked to be informed what evidence the Chief Constable of Staffordshire had furnished in answer to the petition on behalf of his son. The answer was that to give the information would be "contrary to the practice of this Department." No one can dispute that, adopted under such circumstances as the above, where the conduct of the police themselves is directly in question, the practice of the Department is an abominable one. Who is responsible for "the practice of the Department" but the Department itself and its head?

Water Glass for Egg Preserving can be obtained direct from the British Egg Preserving Co., Hinckley, 1s. and 3s. tins carriage paid. Prospectus free (30,000 customers).

Lakmé, 22, Davies-street, Berkeley-square.—Dressing gowns and fine lingerie. American Novelties. Cotillon favours. 8674 Gerrard.

SCRUTATOR.

THE CADET AND THE GRANDMOTHER.

THE influence of the grandmother in politics has been manifested in a striking way in relation to the modest clauses of the Territorial Forces Bill which touch on cadet corps. A memorial on the subject of such corps has been presented to Mr. Haldane by 150 of his supporters, and a deputation of thirty has interviewed him personally in support of the memorial. What the memorial said exactly is a secret between the memorialists and Mr. Haldane, but its general tenour may be easily guessed, and guessing is made easier by the visible result of the memorial and interview. It is clear that the 150 were deeply exercised over the demoralising influence of cadet corps on juvenile character, and Mr. Haldane has endeavoured to relieve their anxiety by adding a proviso to the clause of the Government Bill which has caused such a flutter in 150 Parliamentary bosoms. In its original shape Clause 2 enabled the county associations to "establish and maintain or foster and encourage cadet battalions and corps and rifle clubs." Mr. Haldane has consented to limit this power by a proviso that "no financial assistance shall be given by an association in respect of any person in a battalion or corps in a school in receipt of a Parliamentary grant until such boy has attained the age of sixteen." Already, however, some of the 150 are complaining that the concession is delusive, and "A Life-long Liberal," whom I should judge to be of the female sex, has written to the Tribune to explain that it amounts to "little or nothing," since the schools receiving Parliamentary grants and maintaining cadet corps are very few in number. The "Life-long Liberal" is also concerned that "no allusion has yet been made by Mr. Haldane" to the fact that drill and rifle shooting are made compulsory in many schools. How long the life of this Liberal may have been one cannot tell for certain, but the letter reads like that of quite an old woman.

No one has a higher regard than I have for elderly females, and I am not one of those who would speak with disrespect of his own grandmother, or anybody else's. But the same reasons which make me distrustful of the aspirations of the Suffragette prompt me to resist all intrusions of the female sex into those affairs which have hitherto been regarded as the exclusive business of men. The world cannot do without its grandmothers, but their sphere of utility is circumscribed. No one, I suppose, would desire to see them in the cricket or football field. I myself would not have them in Parliament, and I would sternly exclude them from the Army. I quite understand the grandmother's objection to cadet corps. To the female mind, when it is no longer young, and no longer moved to admiration by the mere contemplation of manly vigour, there is something very distressing in the spectacle of boys playing "Rugger," or knocking one another about with boxing gloves. That they should actually be entrusted with firearms is in the highest degree alarming. But though one may respect these apprehensions, one can no more take practical account of them than of the distress of the poor cackling hen when her brood of ducklings takes to the water. The world—or, at any rate, the Anglo-Saxon world—has always judged it desirable that the rough-and-tumble of life should have its counterpart and preparation in the boys' school. This judgment has been fairly justified by the results, and it cannot be reversed out of deference to the nervous apprehensions of old ladies. In the nursery the old lady may reign supreme, but the boy when he leaves it must pass out of her jurisdiction, like the hen-hatched duckling when he reaches the pond.

It is probably futile to argue seriously with apprehensions, or misapprehensions, begotten of nerves or temperament. But if Mr. Haldane has further trouble with the 150 grandmothers, there are one or two considerations which should supply him with sufficient weapons to annihilate the whole commando. In the first place, it is absolute nonsense to talk about "fostering the spirit of militarism" by giving military training to boys of fifteen years of age or upwards. If the spirit of militarism means anything that is repugnant to the British mind, it means the spirit which has always prevailed in Prussia, often in France, and occasionally in other Continental countries, the spirit which makes the military element supreme in civil life, and subordinates all public interests to those of the Army. That there is no necessary connection between this spirit and the military training of a people for national self-defence, even under compulsory conditions, is sufficiently proved by the example of Switzerland, where there is probably less of "militarism," in any obnoxious sense, in the national life than in any other country in the world—with the possible exception of China. Presumably what Mr. Haldane's 150 memorialists, and those who sympathise with them, have at the back of their minds is that to give boys any degree of military training will inspire them with a desire to sally forth and shoot some foreign enemy on the first pretext they can find. This is where the grandmother comes in, with her nervous imagination, conjuring up fanciful evils and overlooking or distorting plain facts. As regards mere Jingoism, which is what seems to be chiefly apprehended, the experience of this country and others shows that there is very little connection between the Jingo spirit and any desire for personal combat. There is even ground for saying that the liability of the civil population to military service acts as a preservative of peace, and that it is well to extend the liability on this ground. Again, whatever martial spirit may be developed among the rising generation by cadet corps can only take practical effect within the limits of the regular and territorial forces authorised by Parliament. To all this it may be added that, outside the public schools, cadet corps organisations may be made an invaluable agency for bringing healthy recreation, exercise, and discipline within the reach of the masses of working-class lads in towns who are beyond all such influences from the moment they leave school, and who deteriorate visibly in consequence in physique, morals, and manners. From that point of view it should be the business of the British grandmother, whether in Parliament or outside, to co-operate with county associations in "fostering and encouraging" them, and in supplementing their purely military purpose, rather than to seek opportunities of limiting their usefulness from an irrational fear of "militarism."

The root fact of the situation is that we want some sort of serviceable home army, if possible on the basis of voluntary service, and that it is by no means certain as yet whether we shall succeed in getting one. In the creation of such an army, an efficient system of cadet corps must be a valuable factor. Cadet corps will not only stimulate the inclination for soldiering among those youths who possess it at all, but, if really efficient, will give lads a thorough grounding in the elements of military training and discipline before they join the territorial battalions, thus reducing, if not overcoming entirely, the great difficulty of turning out a really efficient soldier without taking him away from all other work for several months to go through a course of recruit's training. In fact, it may well be contended that if the territorial army contemplated by Mr. Haldane's Bill is ever to consist of adequately trained men, it will only be by virtue of the preliminary training which the bulk of the recruits will have received in cadet battalions before they join. On that view, the opposition to this portion of the scheme is as mischievous as it is foolish—and mischievous even from the point of view of the opposers; for if the proposed army fails to fulfil the hopes of its founders, everybody knows the alternative that will have to be faced next.

A MEDIÆVAL BILL.

A Bill has been presented to Parliament with the object of incorporating King Edward's Hospital Fund for London. After passing the House of Lords, and the second reading in the Commons, it is now before a Committee. When I read the Bill I rubbed my eyes and looked at it again, feeling sure that I had received some hoary document from the Middle Ages. But no, clearly enough there is "Session 1907" and an account of the formation of the Fund by his Majesty, then Prince of Wales, in 1897. Were it not inconceivable that so good a cause as King Edward's Fund could have any enemies I should imagine that this Bill had been promoted by some one in order to deprive the Fund of the public subscriptions upon which it is dependent. Certainly no more effective way of accomplishing this sinister object could be devised than the passing of the present Bill into an Act of Parliament.

Everybody knows that in 1897 his Majesty started this Fund and took the keenest interest in its welfare. The generous support which it received from the public was at once a tribute to Queen Victoria and to our present King, as well as a recognition of the good work done by the hospitals of London. The personal influence of the founder has been a paramount influence and benefit from the start. Much of the money subscribed was, in fact, placed at the disposal of his Majesty to do what he chose with, and he devoted it to his Hospital Fund. This personal aspect of the matter has been predominant throughout, and has been largely responsible for the success of the Fund. It is now proposed to make the benevolent despotism which, because of the personality of the despot, has worked so well, a legal despotism by Act of Parliament, which, in normal circumstances would remain the legal aspect of the matter for generations, if not for centuries. Whatever theories we may hold about matters political, most of us are ready to recognise that control by the right man, however great his powers may be, is a most excellent arrangement; but the rule of a despot by Act of Parliament, who may in time to come be anything but the right man, is not the kind of arrangement calculated to obtain voluntary support.

The Bill provides that the President and Council of the Fund shall be incorporated, and that the Corporation shall be given power to hold property and other usual powers of a corporation. The President is to be appointed by, and hold office during the pleasure of, the Sovereign; future Presidents are to be recommended by the Lord Chancellor, the Prime Minister, and the Governor of the Bank of England, or a majority of them, and to hold office during the pleasure of the Sovereign. The fatal defect of the Bill, however, lies in the extraordinary powers which are given to the President. He is to appoint new members of the Council, and no act of the Council is effective unless it has the approval in writing of the President; while the powers of the Council can be delegated to a Committee, in which case the President and the Committee have absolute control, just as if their decisions were those of the President and Council. Section 7 gives practically unlimited powers to the President for the time being. He may appoint committees "for the administration of the funds and property of the Corporation, or for any purposes of this Act, and may delegate to any Committee all or any of his powers under this Act as he may think fit, including the power of approval in writing," without which no act of the general Council is of any effect. This power, "if delegated to a committee of two persons, shall be deemed to be sufficiently exercised by each of such persons signing an approval of the act, approval whereof is required." Moreover, the President may appoint any treasurers, secretaries, auditors, and other officers, and fix their remuneration. "He may at pleasure remove any member of the general Council," and therefore the whole general Council, "or of any committee, or any officer, and may dissolve any committee." Yet further, "he shall have power in his sole discretion to direct the distribution and allocation of the funds and property of the Corporation and the income thereof . . . . and the application of the income and . . . . the capital . . . . for the support of the hospitals of London or such one or more of them to the exclusion of others, as he may deem expedient"; and "he may determine whether any institution does or does not fall within the definition of hospitals of London."

There is no objection to such powers as these being exercised by one who, by his commanding position and by his personal character possesses the confidence of the Council and receives the support of subscribers. But it must be remembered that if this Bill becomes an Act, it may remain in force for centuries, the invested funds may become enormous, and some day or other an unsuitable President may be nominated. An unsuitable President might only differ from his Majesty and from the Prince of Wales in the fact that whereas they take the keenest personal interest in the Fund, he might not do so, and might delegate these unlimited powers to a committee of two, who might be unfit and unworthy of the trust reposed in them. Considering the present character of the Council it is really nothing less than an absurdity to limit their powers, as the Bill does, to making rules and regulations for managing, holding meetings, and the keeping of the corporate seal, but even for such purposes as these the approval of the President is required in writing.

Hospitals are among the few institutions which are universally recognised as deserving voluntary support. Many people specially interested in some particular neighbourhood would naturally give donations or leave legacies to the local hospital, but experience has shown that since the establishment of King Edward's Fund many benefactors have given money to the Fund, rather than to individual hospitals. This tendency is increasing, with the result that the controllers of King Edward's Fund, and of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday Funds, are acquiring more and more influence over the management of hospitals. For financial reasons, recommendations made by the controllers of these funds can scarcely be ignored by the managers of hospitals, even if they think, or know, that the recommendations are bad. With a despot by Act of Parliament in control of King Edward's Fund, mistaken judgment by himself or his nominees might be an extremely serious evil for the hospitals of London. Even supposing that the presidents in all future time are capable and interested, they may yet make mistakes. To a great extent the present Bill means that one man is to be given supreme power to dictate to all the hospitals of London what they are, and what they are not, to do; and moreover he has power in his sole discretion to delegate this dictation to others.

Of one thing I am very certain, and that is that the fundamental essential for the permanent prosperity of the Fund is representative control. Not only subscribers, but the managers of hospitals and medical men connected with the everyday work of their profession and practical questions of hospital management, should be represented on the Council of King Edward's Fund, and should be given real power. Owing to the way it has been worked hitherto, the Fund has attracted enthusiasm and won support. The present Bill is the exact reversal of the methods by which King Edward succeeded in one of the noblest of his works. Such legislation as is proposed is fraught with danger, and dooms to failure what has been hitherto a splendid success.

THE TROUBLE IN THE BOTANIC GARDENS.

From time to time correspondence breaks out in the Times or elsewhere on the affairs of the Royal Botanic Society. The public learns that a reform movement is on foot, and that it has raised the temperature to a degree which marks the melting-point of the decorum and good manners proper to a scientific association. This is a common result of reform movements, heat being a necessary element in the getting up of steam for all motive purposes. But in the case of the Royal Botanic Society no result has hitherto followed the increase of temperature. Dissatisfied Fellows hammer the Council. The Council hammers them back. Charges are made and denied. Reforms are demanded and resisted. And eventually the steam "blows off" and nothing else happens.

One of these periodical agitations is now on foot. Up to the present it presents all the features with which the public has become familiar. Whether it will end in the usual way remains to be seen; but from the point of view of the Society equally with that of the public it is becoming more and more evident that things cannot go on upon their present footing, and that the time is drawing nearer when the Society will have to be mended or ended. There are certain features in the situation which everyone can see for himself. The Royal Botanic Society is in form a learned society, constituted by Royal Charter nearly seventy years ago "for the promotion of botany in all its branches, and in its application to medicine, arts, and manufacture." It occupies one of the finest situations in London for such a purpose, an exceptionally beautiful garden in the centre of one of the Royal Parks, offering advantages from the financial point of view, which, if they were properly utilised, would be a valuable aid to purely scientific work. But, in point of fact, the Society has quite lost, if it ever really obtained, that position as a scientific body which its Royal Charter and its headquarters in the heart of London mark out for it. Practically what it has become is a mere social club, holding a charming garden in the West End for the personal convenience and delectation of a certain number of its members and their families. It is precisely in the position of a glorified West End square, of which the adjoining residents hold keys by virtue of an annual subscription. Here the nursemaids and children of the subscribers, with or without their perambulators, take the air and romp on the grass. Here the Fellows, with their families and friends, play croquet and lawn tennis. Archery used to be a favourite pursuit of the chartered botanists, but I believe that of late years it has gone out of fashion. Finally, the gardens are occasionally illuminated of an evening in order that the botanical Fellows may entertain their friends with seductive al fresco fêtes.

All this has little to do with the purposes for which the founders of the Society obtained a Royal Charter. But there is the further objection that it does not pay. It is conceivable that, as a mere club, the Botanic Gardens might be made a flourishing institution; but in that character it would have to face serious competition from other established institutions, and as a matter of fact the Gardens have been managed with less and less enterprise, considered as a mere pleasure club. On the other hand, no serious attempt has been made of late years to appeal to that large public which is interested in horticulture and botany, and to which it is the proper function of the Botanic Society to appeal. The result is that between the two stools the Society is gradually coming to the ground. For pleasure purposes it appeals only to those who live quite close at hand—the residents who use the "square" garden. As a scientific centre it appeals to nobody. Hence a marked falling off in the number of Fellows and the subscription list, and a proportionate growth of financial embarrassment. The Society has a constant difficulty in paying its way, and it is burdened with a heavy debenture debt. Attempts are periodically made to "raise the wind" by letting the Gardens, or organising public entertainments, but they are frequently ill-judged, and have probably done more harm than good.

The truth is that dry rot has got deep down into the institution, and the reason for it is easy to see. The Council which ostensibly governs the Society is neither representative of the Fellows nor entitled to respect as a body of scientific gentlemen—nor even as the committee of a fashionable club. Vacancies on the Council are nominally filled up by election at the annual meeting of Fellows; but the interim vacancies are filled up by co-optation, and it has been the custom from time immemorial, a custom obstinately upheld by the Council in spite of repeated protests, to hold the annual meeting in August, the one time of the year when it may be confidently expected that the majority of the Fellows will be away from London. Elections to the Council under such circumstances cannot represent the choice of the general body of Fellows; but apart from that, the right of co-optation has certainly been abused. Resignations from the Council have tended to occur at any time except when they may be filled by election at the annual meeting, the most conspicuous example of this occurring last year, when no less than seven gentlemen resigned simultaneously very shortly after the annual meeting, leaving their colleagues to fill up their places. Many of the Fellows learnt with surprise for the first time a fortnight ago that Mr. J. R. Diggle is the Chairman of the Council, the information coming from letters which he wrote to the Times in that capacity. Mr. Diggle only became a Fellow of the Society last August, yet it would seem that he was a few weeks afterwards co-opted to the Council, and then promoted to the Chairmanship. It may be surmised that his well-known fighting qualities suggested his selection for these honours; if so, his letters to the Times will not have disappointed his backers, for they show that he still retains his old form as a controversialist. But whatever the motive which prompted his rapid promotion, it assuredly bore no relation to his eminence in botanical science. Perhaps the most striking example of the position taken up by the Council in relation to the affairs of the Society is to be found in the statement, which I do not think can be contradicted, that when the creditors of the Society have been unusually pressing, members of the Council have themselves subscribed the money required to discharge liabilities. Such a course is wrong in principle, because it conceals from the members the financial difficulties of the Society, and it is not credible that such a thing would have been done unless the members of the Council felt a strong personal interest in averting a crisis. It is characteristic of the general methods of management that up to the present moment the annual accounts, due last January, have not been issued, and this notwithstanding the public criticism to which the administration has been exposed, and the fact that a Fellows' meeting was held only a week or two ago, at which many of the matters at issue were discussed.

During the recent controversy, specific allegations of negligence and general incompetence have been made against the Secretary and the staff. In spite of Mr. Diggle's forcible denials and graceful retorts, it is clear that there are grounds for such complaints. But for any shortcomings of the paid staff the Council are responsible. It is inevitable that under a managing body which has allowed the institution to drift into its present position, the staff should follow the general drift; and equally inevitable that they should hang together and back one another up.

In such a state of things, reform from within is obviously most difficult, if not hopeless. The only chance of it lies in a combined movement among the Fellows to lift the institution out of the rut into which it has fallen. Among them are many who fully recognise the danger before the Society and the causes from which it springs, and it is not difficult to see the direction which reform should take. A clean sweep should be made of the gentlemen who have brought matters to their present position. The by-laws should be amended; a new secretary should be appointed; and a totally new policy should be laid down for the future. The aim should be to carry out the express intentions of the charter by making the Society primarily a scientific association for promoting the study of botany and the improvement of horticulture. Its Council should be largely leavened with men distinguished in those subjects, and capable of directing a society devoted to them, and its members or Fellows should be mainly recruited from that large and constantly increasing public which has tastes and interests in the same direction. This is the public from which the Society should draw its support; and concurrently with its appeal to members it should appeal to the same public, and to London generally, by developing the beauty of its gardens, by a constant succession of exhibitions worthy of its position, and by such use of the gardens as a place of public entertainment as is not inconsistent with the constitution and objects of the Society. If a substantial majority of the Fellows can be induced to combine for these ends, and to submit to the personal inconvenience of attending in London at the next annual meeting in order to take the first steps, there is no reason, judging from the example of the many other flourishing horticultural societies in existence, why the Royal Botanic Society should not be converted into a flourishing institution, fully serving the purposes for which it was founded. Failing that, it must go on down hill until it collapses from insolvency, or until the same authority which granted its charter takes steps to reform it.

AN UNWANTED CHARITY.

For a good many years past I have had suspicions respecting the association which has been known as the Church Society for Promoting Kindness to Animals. In point of fact, they were rather more than suspicions. The society was founded and entirely controlled by the Rev. Frederick Lawrence, formerly vicar of Westow, Yorkshire; and so long as he was at Westow the whole thing was run from his vicarage, as well as two other societies on the same lines—the Church of England Burial Reform Association, and the Church Sanitary Association. Some years ago, a clergyman who had had an opportunity of observing the working of the business thought it his duty to tell me that he was quite satisfied from what he had seen that Mr. Lawrence was profiting substantially from his societies—particularly the one concerned with kindness to animals. It was, however, impossible to obtain such proof as would justify any public imputation on the bona fides of Mr. Lawrence, and I have consequently been compelled to keep my suspicions to myself.

In 1903 Mr. Lawrence resigned the living of Westow, and came up to London in order to establish the headquarters of the Society for Promoting Kindness to Animals in the Metropolis. It seems to have been the most prosperous of his undertakings, and at this point he buried the Burial Reform Association, and abandoned his efforts to improve the sanitation of the Church of England. He took a suite of offices in Vauxhall-park which he christened the "Settlement" of the C.S.P.K.A., and he appointed himself "Warden," in which capacity he lodged in the Settlement. About this time I ventured to make certain guarded observations upon the accounts of his society, as the result of which he communicated with me. He was a somewhat voluble and plausible old gentleman. He explained to me that he had given up his living and migrated to London because the work had become too much to be combined with his parochial duties; also that he was forming a committee, and putting the whole thing on a thoroughly businesslike basis. He thus succeeded in disarming criticism, though not in allaying my suspicions.

I now learn that these suspicions have been throughout fully justified, and it is necessary to state the facts plainly for the information of the public. The committee which Mr. Lawrence appointed when he removed to London was entirely composed of his own personal friends and acquaintances, all possessing unbounded faith in him. He himself filled the office of treasurer, and though he also appointed a finance committee, it exercised no control over the finances. One member of this committee was actually a paid servant of the society. In the spring of last year trouble arose through the appointment of a lady by the general committee as assistant-treasurer. The appointment was evidently inconvenient to Mr. Lawrence, and while the lady was absent from the office through illness he took upon himself to dismiss her. Subsequently this lady made certain disclosures to the committee from what she had learnt of Mr. Lawrence's relations with the association; the matter was taken up by one of the few independent members of the committee, and Mr. Lawrence was called to account. The aid of lawyers was invoked, and a sort of inquiry took place, with the result that it was agreed between the legal gentlemen on both sides that Mr. Lawrence should retire from all connection with the association, and that it should be amalgamated with the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. After this an acting secretary was appointed, the "Settlement" at Vauxhall was given up, and a new office taken for the time. Mr. Lawrence, however, in spite of the termination of his official connection with the association, seems to have kept some sort of hold on it, and he actually found living quarters in the same building as the new office. It was not long before it was discovered that he had again contrived to make free with the subscriptions. The matter was considered by the new finance committee which had been appointed, and Mr. Lawrence seems to have offered some explanation, which the majority accepted; but one member expressly dissented from the minute which they agreed upon. At the same time, Mr. Lawrence finally agreed to renounce all connection with the association.

In the meantime, negotiations with the R.S.P.C.A. were in progress, and in December last a definite agreement for amalgamation was arrived at. This agreement, however, has never yet been carried out, owing, as far as I can ascertain, to the refusal of Mr. Lawrence's friends on the committee to part with the books—presumably from a desire to avoid disclosing Mr. Lawrence's part in the above transactions. This makes it necessary that the facts should be made known for the information of the subscribers, and also of any one who may be solicited to subscribe to any other undertaking of Mr. Lawrence. That gentleman is naturally in a somewhat difficult position, and from documents in my possession it is evident that he has meditated helping himself out of it by resuscitating his defunct Burial Reform and Church Sanitary Associations. After what has happened, any such design clearly requires to be nipped in the bud. As regards the Church Society for Promoting Kindness to Animals, its raison d'être has always been obscure, except as a means of providing the late "Warden" with a livelihood. At the best its work was bound to overlap that of the R.S.P.C.A.; as a matter of fact its practical performances seem to have begun and ended with the delivery of lectures and sermons by Mr. Lawrence in its name. In order to accomplish this result, for which it may be doubted if any living animal is appreciably better, it has collected and spent for several years about £600 a year, which might otherwise have gone to the R.S.P.C.A. and been usefully employed. There can be no excuse now for prolonging its existence or wasting further money upon it. If it cannot be amalgamated with the R.S.P.C.A. it had better be wound up at once, and the subscribers should see that one thing or the other is done.

THE THEATRES.

"My Wife," at the Haymarket.

The "entente cordiale" is perhaps responsible for this flood of adaptations from the French. Anyhow, it is quite certain that the critics of the distant future will rightly conclude that the French wrote the British drama of our day, just as, owing to the efforts of the Germans and Baconians, they will gather that Shakespeare was written by Bacon, Imperial Chancellor of the German Empire.

"My Wife" is rather better than she should be. I mean that her morality is maintained above suspicion, which is not absolutely the rule in the French drama of the day. But here we have the English version of what may be the reverse of proper over the Channel. Certainly there is no doubt about the talent and exuberance of Miss Marie Löhr as the youthful heroine, virginally married to her middle-aged guardian. She effervesces with girlishness all through the play, and when at the last she discovers that after all she really loves her guardian, Mr. Aubrey Smith, better than the young man for whose sake she had arranged before marriage to divorce her middle-aged husband, we are not dumbfoundered. For Mr. Aubrey Smith gives dignity and manhood to all he touches in art, and, thanks to the humours of the original, provided us with an interesting five minutes when he challenges the would-be lover of his virgin wife. There is a good deal of rather tedious padding, as in the case of a friend of Mr. Aubrey Smith, who arrives in Switzerland in the second act, so fatigued that he can hardly keep his eyes open. Of his untidy costume and his sleepiness too much is made, though this is not the fault of Mr. Matthews, who plays the part sleepily and well. There is an amusing Frenchman, well rendered by Mr. Fred Lewis; there is an amorous Frenchman, admirably expressed by Mr. Atholl Forbes; there is the perfect representation of the omniscient butler by Mr. Holman Clark; there is the captivating English actress of Miss Millie Legard; and there is an amusing yet impossible story, which, in the capable hands of those to whom it has been entrusted by Mr. Frederick Harrison, serves to wile away an evening very pleasantly.

"A Woman of No Importance," at His Majesty's.

I looked in at His Majesty's Theatre one evening after the alarums and excursions of the first night of this revival had ceased to disturb the atmosphere. My object was partly to see how the general public of theatre-goers received one of Oscar Wilde's triad of comedies. Crammed with creamy satin and lace were the stalls, muslin roses and other etherealities of costume made the dress circle like a bed of flowers. Woman had come to look at themselves in the dramatist's glass in a proportion of three to one. Very well, I was pleased to see, were taken the brilliant lines with which this play abounds, like all of Wilde's mature work. A young Irishman who has read little but thought a good deal leaned forward and whispered to me: "Why, it's as full of quotations as 'Hamlet.'" The whirligig of time has indeed brought its revenges, and the writer of "Lady Windermere's Fan" is secure of his place among the lucida sidera.

* * * * *

This current week is notable rather for revivals than for novelties. Thus we have, for those who like the ultra-sentimental melodrama, Mr. Martin Harvey in "The Breed of the Treshams," at the Adelphi; the Follies are at the Royalty Theatre again, repeating, with variations, their admirable programme, which some time ago I extolled, and "The Walls of Jericho" at the Garrick. The Pigmies from the Congo Forest are to be visible at Earl's Court on Thursday, under the auspices of Lieutenant-Colonel James Harrison. This gentleman told me some time ago of a little episode, which, I think, never was in print. The scene was the garden of one of our big squares. A group of pigmies, observing a fat London pigeon in a tree, asked leave to shoot it. Leave being (unlawfully!) granted, an arrow was let fly, but, strange to say, missed its mark. The pigmies are expert bowmen, and great was their astonishment when the bird flew away untouched. The next point was to recover the valuable arrow. It had not fallen to the ground, and in one moment of time the pigmies were swarming over the tops of the trees in their search for it. Their agility was marvellous, and equally so the nicety of their calculation as to the weight which the slender branches from which they hung or sprung, would bear. Yet they never found their arrow. Perhaps the well-educated London pigeon had flown away with it in his beak to the South Kensington Museum as a curiosity.

As to the performance, it was interesting, but I felt might have been more interestingly done. One of the amusing secondary personages, the Ven. James Daubeny, D.D., might surely be in more skilful hands than those of Mr. Maurice. Mr. Maurice represents him as a farcical character, whereas the delicate satire of the part depended upon the unctuous suavity of the rendering. Mr. Eric Lewis would give delightfully these interesting details about "poor Mrs. Daubeny," whose mind is chiefly occupied with the events of her early childhood—I quote from memory. Mr. Tree, I think, takes the part of Lord Illingworth too slowly. Sometimes his pauses make one almost feel as if he had forgotten the words, a crime of which, I am sure, he would never be guilty. Otherwise he renders the blasé father of a strenuous son as to the paternal manner born. I tremble to think what this part would become in hands less expert than Mr. Tree's. Mrs. Calvert did pretty well as Lady Caroline Pontefract, but her vis-à-vis, Miss Kate Bishop, was not sufficiently gay and assured as the sister of the wicked Lord Weston; whereas graceful Miss Kate Cutler made a little gem of Lady Stutfield, in body, speech, and action. Miss Ellis Jeffreys' performance was less remarkable than her dress of gold paillettes or spangles, which captured one's gaze every time she made the slightest motion. I believe Mrs. Allenby was never yet so brilliant in dress as on this occasion. On leaving the theatre after their performance I felt that the mental difference between Wilde and Mr. Shaw is that between the Protagoras of the Platonic dialogues and the chauffeur into whom Mr. Shaw has breathed his own soul in "Man and Superman."

THE COMPLETE CATECHIST.

The Debutante's Catechism.

(To be carefully committed to memory by young girls who are entering on their first season.)

Q.: Who are you?

A.: A Society Débutante.

Q.: What is a Society Débutante?

A.: A girl of eighteen who is going through the important process of being brought out.

Q.: Who brings you out?

A.: My mother.

Q.: For what purpose does she bring you out?

A.: For the purpose of what is technically termed "getting me off."

Q.: Explain the meaning of this technical term, "getting you off."

A.: It means to convey me bodily, with all my contingent advantages, drawbacks, and expenses of maintenance, to the first eligible man who is willing to take an assignment of the property.

Q.: What is an eligible man?

A.: A man begins to be eligible at £10,000 a year, and his eligibility increases, upwards, in arithmetical progression.

Q.: Of what age is the eligible man?

A.: He may be of any age from twenty to eighty.

Q.: Of what appearance is he?

A.: He may be of any appearance from a Belvedere Apollo to an Ourang-Outang. But he more often inclines towards the latter appearance.

Q.: Of what character is he?

A.: He may be of any character; or, as is more frequently the case, of no character.

Q.: Of what nationality is he?

A.: The eligible man may be of any nationality, or (which is more usual), a conglomeration of all the nationalities, from Palestine Westward.

Q.: What is a Society wedding?

A.: A ceremony in the course of which, amid the most sacred surroundings and the most solemn formulas, the greatest possible amount of lies and perjury is compressed into the smallest possible compass of words.

Q.: Where are these perjuries committed?

A.: At the altar of a smart Church.

Q.: By whom are they committed?

A.: Both by the Bridegroom and the Bride, who, in the name of God, make all sorts of solemn promises that they have no intention whatever of carrying out.

Q.: Is there any sin in committing perjury under such conditions?

A.: There is no sin; but rather a virtue in so doing.

Q.: By what proofs can you support this?

A.: By the presence and approval of my dear father and mother, and by the benediction of the Bishop, or other high Ecclesiastical Dignitary, who performs the ceremony.

Q.: What is a detrimental?

A.: A good-looking but impecunious young man, whose attentions I have repelled coldly before marriage and shall encourage warmly afterwards.

Q.: What are children?

A.: The plague of married life, from which it is my most earnest and pious wish that I may be exempted.

Q.: What is the maternal instinct?

A.: A fashionable sentiment among our ancestors which went out with bonnets, chaperons, and table-centres.

Q.: What is a heart?

A.: An internal organ connected with the circulation of the blood.

Q.: What is love?

A.: A form of mental disease described by poets and writers of fiction, but only prevalent in the present day among the lower orders.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THEIR NORWEGIAN MAJESTIES.

NORWEGIANS should feel proud at having all to themselves the grand official stage of Paris for a whole week. They were not this time in the shadow of Sweden, and had a king more suitable to their notions and manners than Oscar II., who might have been the first tenor of his time had he not been the most showy and accomplished of monarchs. Haakon VII. is not showy, but produces at first sight a good impression. He looks the well-brought-up Northern man who went through a naval cadets' school and navigated in blue water. In the service he belonged to he passed for being "a very nice fellow," and so fair as to refuse promotion when he felt that it was offered to him as a fils à papa. On this ground he declined a captaincy not many weeks before he was first thought of as the best choice the Norwegians could make if they decided to break once and for all the link holding them to Sweden. Haakon VII. has a prepossessing countenance, and is said to resemble his grandfather on the Bernadotte side, but without, perhaps, his artistic sensibilities. He is much less dark than his photos make him out, is very tall and slender, and has something in the shoulders that the habit of sleeping in hammocks in youth gives. His French is correct, but the words come slowly, and do not seem an easy fit to his ideas. On making his first appearance on the Paris stage he wore a general's uniform, with a quantity of fluttering feathers on the helmet—as many as those on an Italian fusilier, but of a lively red. They are fond of bright feathers in Scandinavia. The Swedish generals are not less fluttering or voluminous, and are of sunset yellow. Haakon looks his best in a naval uniform. He is more at home in it than in the military one. Apart from the long habit of wearing the former, it allows chest freedom, and is not buttoned up to the throat. That buttoning up gives the pectoral padding helping, a pin-cushion appearance to the torso.

A touch of nature that made the democracy at the Hôtel de Ville feel akin to his Norwegian Majesty was his thrusting his hand into his cap for the sheet of paper on which his speech had been set down. He read it in a voice with a clear timbre, with careful and deliberate distinctness and emphasis. If he has not the facility of his great-uncle, he determined that there should be no mumbling or mouthing, as there might have been if he set up to improvise.

As to Queen Maud, beside Mme. Fallières she seemed extremely specialised. La Présidente comes from Nérac, and est comme tout le monde à Nérac—warm-hearted, frank, friendly, liking a good laugh, and quick to reflect popular joy or excitement. The spectators as she passed along at the side of Queen Maud exclaimed: "Quelle bonne et sympathique personne!" or words to that effect. Smiles more than wreathed the face. As she left to the young Queen the leading part, which was to bow and look gracious, she confined recognition of popular favour to very kindly laughter and to making signs of amity with a small nosegay that she held in her hand. She used the nosegay as the late Queen Isabella used to use her fan. The Queen of Norway's bouquet—a great sheaf of flowers—lay on her Majesty's lap. The dog was left at home.

Queen Maud is fond of white raiment. She entered Paris in a crême dress with a voluminous white feather boa and a white gauzy-looking hat trimmed with roses and violets, and really becoming. She is on foot not the same person as driving. On foot at the Bois de Boulogne Station, and advancing to shake hands with the Présidente, she seemed entirely her father's daughter, as cordial as he would have been, and uttering the necessary commonplaces agreeably. There was no de haut en bas nonsense—no "condescension." In the State carriage, where she would have felt herself, as it were, in front of footlights, she looked very much her mother's daughter, especially in her way of holding her head and neck, which is not short. Her style of dress is neat and rather elegant, and her whole person gives the impression of refinement. This is more suitable to her rank than chic. I do not remember to have ever seen a lady born in the purple with chic, but a few with an air of careful elegance, and not least Queen Maud's aunt, the Empress Dowager of Russia.

MALOJA, Engadine, Switzerland.—Palace Hotel, Kursaal, 6,000 ft. altitude. Completely renovated 1906. Private Baths. Golf. Tennis.—EDWARD SMART, Manager. Prospectus on application.

WIESBADEN HOTEL, NASSAU.—Recognised as the Most Fashionable and Refined Home of English and American Society in Wiesbaden.—Telegraphic Address: "Nassauerhof, Wiesbaden."

After the first shock of the Trianon accident was felt Queen Maud kept down emotion, though one of the three horses that had gone over the parapet of the bridge was still harnessed to the carriage. The water beneath looks deeper than it really is, and the mud much less so. It is absurd to take Royal and Imperial visitors about in carriages and four with jingling bells to which the horses are not used on the harness, and postilions equally unaccustomed to drive à la Daumont or à la Long-jumeau. There must be always great danger with such an equipage in turning a corner; and a very sharp one had to be turned at the foot of the Trianon Bridge—a toy affair as high arched as the one on the willow pattern plate. Mounting this bridge was easy enough, but in going down from the middle the whole weight of the vehicle came on the hams of the pair of horses nearest to it. In the turn of the road the pole ran against one of the leading pair. All grew at once skittish, and the one the pole knocked against jumped into the river. Two others jumped over the parapet, and the fourth fell down in trying to follow them. It is not certain that, if the carriage had gone over with Mme. Fallières and the Queen, a fatality would have ensued. But it might, and, at any rate, there would have been a dangerous souse in fœtid mud. The soldier of the escort who fell in as he cut the traces which held the third horse to the carriage was almost up to his throat in the mud. The Queen refused to leave until she knew his fate and could express her concern at the bath he had met with. Fortunately, pace had been slackened to allow her to linger in the Trianon Park, which in this late spring was in the freshest bloom and tenderest verdure. After the monotony of the Norwegian granite cliffs, long winter, and never-ending pine woods, it must have appeared to her as the very gardens of Armida, and the artifici village a poem. They have an artificial village in the Park of Drottningholm, which she probably saw, and a Trianon in the Park of Haga, but they are without charm, and want the amiability of a temperate climate leaning to the sunny side of nature.

I doubt whether Versailles and the Trianon picnic are in the fitness of a Royal visit to Paris. Are not both places in the nature of the memento mori? I could understand the Emperor of Annam, whom the Colonial Minister dethroned some months ago, being taken there by way of a serious lesson. If Louis XIV. created Versailles, the market women of Paris captured there the second Louis who came after him. Versailles, after figuring for a century as the seat of a despotic monarch, is now the starting-point of each President of the Republic. This is hardly flattering to Royal visitors, and it ought to be a cause of embarrassment to their host and hostess. There are at the Trianon as many souvenirs of a galant nature as in the Petits Apartements. A Hogarth might have found in both halting-places on the road to ruin, but M. de Noilhac, following his bent, which is that of a courtier, could only sentimentalise about them to the young Royal ménage rather to the confusion of King and Queen. The picnic was brought into the programme for entertainments for Royal guests on the occasion of the first visit of the Shah, Nasr-ed-Deen. As they are not inventive at the Foreign Office, they have retained it, notwithstanding its incongruities. A visit to Fontainebleau would take too much time, and the gardens and forest there are best seen in autumn. However, with eyes fresh from Christiania, a capital built in wood, Versailles and its orangery, terraces, and fountains, must have appeared enchanting, and the Mirrors Gallery glorious. After staying some time in Norway, one is so glad to see stone houses again and to enjoy a genial climate. The President promised to pay a return visit, but can fix no time until it is almost time for him to start.

The rise in prices to which I referred last week continues. The news this week is that wheat flour, and consequently bread, are going to be dearer. Mineral waters have gone up three sous a bottle. I had no idea that my prophecy would so soon come true about impending strikes as a consequence of the dearness of living. The whole seafaring population of France is now on strike. That this is due to economical conditions I have no doubt, for the latest piece of legislation concerning them, and accepted at the time by their delegates as satisfactory, is but a few months old. Sailors' widows cry out that it is no longer possible to live or even vegetate wretchedly on the 11 sous a day pension, with 2 sous for any child under sixteen. A not quite fresh egg costs more than the child's pension.

The "inscrits maritimes" who have gone out on strike include the whole population of reserve sailors and of those in the merchant service, who are also looked on as reservists. Every young man liable to military service may elect to serve on sea instead of on land. The time of naval service is longer than in the army. The "inscrit maritime," after being sent home, is free to go into the merchant service, but liable for twenty years to be called back to the navy. As a compensation for the longer service and after-liabilities, the "inscrits maritimes," thus called from the Register of Inscription created by Colbert, enjoy certain privileges. They alone have a right to employment in the merchant navy and in fishing vessels. Their families have the sole right to gather shell-fish on the open coast-places. The "inscrit maritime" is also entitled to a pension ranging from 12 louis to 40 louis. The latter is for a person who has been a captain in the merchant service and is sixty years old.

So far the advantages of the "inscription maritime" seem to have outweighed its disadvantages, for practically the whole sea-coast population elect to serve in the navy. For some years there has been trouble about pensions, and the discovery come upon the inscribed class that La Caisse Maritime was plundered by every Government since Colbert's death, under the pretence of loans never funded or refunded, and is now wholly inadequate to pay good pensions. Had it not been pillaged, it would be now worth about three and a half milliards. Louis XIV. took from it 468 millions, his successor 6 millions, the Convention 40 millions, the First Empire 80 millions, the Restoration 50 millions, and Louis Napoleon 162 millions. Since he fell there has been no further "borrowing." Those fancy balls at the Marine Ministry that dazzled the world, and afforded him opportunities for gallant adventures, were paid for out of La Caisse Maritime. La Caisse Maritime greatly facilitated the Coup. Pensions were slightly raised last year; but prices have since then bounded up, and times grow terribly hard for persons of cramped incomes. The strikers are powerfully organised, and can now ask for more with some prospect of success. The course is a novel one, but in striking they hit the companies. I sometimes think of words that I heard fall from the lips of the late Baron de Rothschild. They were: "Great changes are impending. I shall only see the beginning of them, but my children may live to see men of four thousand (cent mille francs) counted great money bags."

Buy STEPHENS' TYPEWRITER CARBONS because they yield sharp impressions, are clean to handle, and exceptionally durable. No favour is asked for them because they are British.

A PEER AMONG THE PROMOTERS.

I DON'T know much about the price of Consols and the Stock Exchange and all that sort of thing myself, but after the way every one has been talking and writing about them for the last week, it seemed to me that it was only right I should collect a few opinions from what they call eminent financiers myself, so that Truth shouldn't be left out in the cold. I made rather a false step to start with, because Jessie suggested that I should probably get more candid opinions if I went as a reporter rather than in my own character. So I started down to the City, to the offices of a man I know something about through a cousin of mine who is what they call a half-commission man. He (the financier, I mean) is the chairman—he was the promoter originally—of the—well, perhaps I had better call it the United Lunar Volcanoes Caustic Concessions, Limited, though that isn't its real name, and it has got offices that would just about fit into the first floor of Buckingham Palace, not far from the Bank of England. I went in. The place was all got up like a bank, with no end of haughty-looking office-boys and things, and at first I couldn't get any one to take any notice of me. But as soon as I said that I wanted to see Mr. Vanderfeller—that isn't his real name—and that I came from Truth, there was such a sensation as you never saw in your life. All the clerks and office-boys began to run here and there, kow-towing to me and shoving people out of my way, and in about two minutes I found myself alone with the financier in his private room. He was a queer-looking man, fat, with very little hair and a bulbous nose; but his complexion was what struck me most. When I went in first it was a sort of pale green colour, then it turned to a sort of dull purple, and when I spoke to him it went dirty white—rather in the way I've been told dolphins do when they are dying. I was so puzzled that at first I didn't know what to say, thinking he might be ill; and before I could pull my thoughts together he muttered something about, "It has come." I was just going to tell him what I had come for, when he stopped me. "You needn't speak," he said. "I know the game is up. What are you going to do?" I hadn't got my mouth open when he began again, almost as if he was speaking of himself: "Only three weeks and I could have got clear off." He pulled out a handkerchief and began to mop his forehead, which was streaming with perspiration. "Why couldn't you leave me alone? I'm no worse than others. There are hundreds of them. Look here, only let me off this once, and I'll tell you about dozens of them—Holbeagle, Droschkemann, any of them. But spare me—just this once. I'll turn over a new leaf—I swear I will. I have a wife and two little boys—such dear little fellows. Don't blast their father's name. I have done wrong, I confess it; but it was for their sake." Then he began to gabble quite incoherently to himself, until I thought he was going to have a fit, but at last he opened a drawer in a desk and got out a bottle of champagne and one of brandy. When he had drunk about a tumblerful of them mixed he seemed to get better.

Of course, I didn't understand a word of what he was driving at, and as he was quiet for a minute, I seized the chance of telling him what I had really come for. It had a wonderful effect upon him. He seemed to swell out to double his own size at once. When I had finished he sat still for a minute or two, looking at me in a sort of amazed way. "But I thought——" he muttered.

I was beginning to feel deuced uncomfortable, for, of course, I began to think that the fellow was mad, when suddenly he began to speak again, in quite a different voice. He leaned back in his chair and put the tips of his fingers together, and a sort of venerable, honest look came into his face, so that he seemed the sort of man you might have trusted with anything—as, of course, I understand he is.

"When you ask me my opinion as to the present low price of Consols," he began, "I can make but one reply. The cause is the present Radical, Socialistic, Anarchistic Government. Within the short time that it has been in power it has lowered the prestige of England all over the world, it has made us the laughing-stock of the Continent, it has made the name of Briton despised from Nova Zembla to Johannesburg. The Labour troubles in France, on the Rand, in the Argentine, the discontent of our own railwaymen, the increased price of bread, the attack of gout from which the Amir of Afghanistan is suffering, the organised attacks upon capital in the United States, the disturbances in India, the recent failures upon the Stock Exchange, the present unseasonable weather—all these things are directly traceable to the existence of a Liberal Government. Why, I give you my word, that even in the Lunar Volcanoes, where, as you know, the most valuable portion of this company's concessions are situated, our miners are in a seething state of discontent—so much so that our manager has aerotelegraphed us that unless a sound Conservative Government comes into power in the course of the next fortnight or so, he cannot answer for the consequences. And I need hardly tell you that such a step as closing down our mines would mean ruin, absolute ruin, to tens of thousands of small investors who hold shares in this company, and who would, and very likely will, owe their ruin to the disgraceful Government under which we are at present suffering.

"Take another point. So alarmed is capital by the revolutionary proposals of the Anarchistic gang which at present controls the Cabinet, that it is absolutely impossible to bring out any new companies, however unexceptionable, with the smallest chance of getting their capital subscribed. I have at this moment at least a dozen, any one of which would be certain of paying dividends of not less than cent. per cent., yet which it is impossible for me to float. Take the Catsmeat Corporation, which, as perhaps you know, has obtained a concession from the Spanish Government of the flesh of all the bulls killed in the national bull-fights, from which is produced a special concentrated catsmeat, to be put up in tins, of such excellence that, having once tasted it, cats will taste no other. The proposed capital of this most promising venture is a paltry two and a half millions, yet I venture to say that were it floated to-morrow not fifty pounds' worth of the shares would be applied for. To what can we attribute this appalling state of affairs? To nothing but the fact that a Liberal Government is in power. I do assure you, that unless the nation opens its eyes within the next few weeks, I, for one—and I know of many other large capitalists who think as I do—shall shake the dust of this ungrateful country off our feet, and depart for Monte Video or some other place where the confidence of the investor has not been shaken to its foundations by the elevation to power of a corrupt ring with no other object but the total ruin of their country."

He stopped talking and rose to his feet. He seemed to have quite recovered himself, and he was smiling, a sort of fatherly smile that made me quite cotton to him. I asked him if he would be good enough to give me the names of any other eminent financiers whom it might be worth my while to interview. He looked at me with a sort of admiration in his face. "How long have you been a journalist, young man?" I told him. "Well, you take my advice. Don't you worry about going round interviewing people. You go back to your office and write up all the interviews you want right there. You can make him say exactly what you like, and if they do contradict you, nobody will see the contradictions, or believe them if they do. That's how they do it in the ha'penny dailies. Good morning!"

I've taken his advice, and since then I've worked up about a dozen interviews, with the Rothschilds, and Lipton, and Mr. Hooley, and the Governor of the Bank of England, and people like that. As I am not quite sure what you would like them to say, I've done them twice, one interview blaming everything to the Liberal Government, and the other cracking them up to the skies no end. I enclose them both, so that you can use either of them, unless you think I've done enough with Mr. Vanderfeller. That is all I know about the reason of the low price of Consols, and it seems to me that Mr. Vanderfeller knows quite as much about it as some of the other people who've been interviewed. Jessie thinks so, too.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THE New World, dear Lady Betty, was added to the Old World as a punishment. The following letter, that has been addressed to the present writer by "An American Woman," shows how severe the correction is:—

"Ritz Hotel, Piccadilly.

"Sir,—For Europe this is the period of the Great Removal; we Americans are taking from there all that we can, and are altering all that we cannot remove. The masterpieces which the celebrated European painters produced are being transferred from every part of the Old World to the New, so are the exquisite furniture which delighted your ancestors, the valuable jewels which adorned the latter, the gorgeous brocades they worked, the delicate china they hoarded in cabinets, the rare volumes they collected, and most of the treasures your by-gone generations accumulated. Your past is crossing the Atlantic in a continuous stream. You will soon have little to show for your ages of efforts, sacrifices, and triumphs but ruined castles, stripped churches and homes, and the sites where you slaughtered each other in defence of principles which have since been discovered to be prejudices.

"Moreover, we are tapping your history; the great grand-children of Russian, Polish, German, and British refugees, exiles, paupers, and convicts have the blood of your most illustrious statesmen, conquerors, and heroes flowing in their veins—transferred there for cash. We are draining the 'blue blood' of the Old World into our children; and purifying it.

"The main complaint we Americans have now is that there is little left to buy in Europe. The cost of removing Vesuvius would be great; that alone causes one of our minor showmen to hesitate to add it to the curiosities he exhibits. The sale of the Tower of London is almost completed to another; he intends to have mimic executions every half-hour. We possess already most of the members of that strange mediæval institution, the House of Lords; the building itself is not of sufficient interest to tempt even the most enterprising. Representations of the Sittings, with real peers in a canvas reproduction of the House, will be given in New York in the autumn.

"This really is the moment of the Fall of the Upper-Class Angels!

"My husband is in London to obtain a concession to construct a pneumatic tube between England and America to convey rapidly and inexpensively to New York the multitude of titled British bachelors who wish to sell their names to New World heiresses. The marriage ceremonies, moreover, are to be performed by phonograph in batches; they are to be married in hundreds by machinery, as they slaughter pigs in Chicago!

"In a quarter of a century from this Europe will be a geographical expression.—Believe me to be, etc., etc.

"P.S.—When the catastrophe is complete, out of friendliness we might find a use for the British Isles. Moored off New York they might serve as buoys to attach little boats to."

* * * * *

We live under a new dispensation; there are the Ten Conventionalities.

. . . . .

There is the Old and the New Vulgarity. The old was the worship of the established; the new is the struggle to establish ourself.

. . . . .

Marriage is paved with good intentions.

. . . . .

Few women marry for themselves; they marry for each other.

. . . . .

The appearances of happiness are more sought for than happiness itself.

. . . . .

Genius is Nature's millionaire.

. . . . .

There is a time in youth when instinct asserts itself over instruction; that is the period of danger.

. . . . .

It is a sign of the time that to the Upper-class little is too low, and to the Lower-class little is too high.

. . . . .

Wisdom is the perception of the unimportance of the things we call great, and of the importance of the things we call small.

* * * * *

"The Millionaires' Aid Society" has been established by a combination of amiable West-End women, and well-connected destitute men, to assist the quickly-made rich to spend their money intelligently. No really rich man or woman will be rejected, whatever his or her past may have been, for true worldly charity enjoins that the sorrows of the wealthy shall be ours, and that the millionaire shall not be judged even as would the pauper. The members of the new Association have decided to devote themselves to the relief of the very rich; they will seek them out in the back-alleys of Belgravia, in the slums of the Suburbs, in the purlieus of the Provinces, and in the hot and fetid drawing-rooms, which all that are really fashionable would shrink from entering. It is a noble departure, and proves—if proof were needed—that beneath the undress of the most prominent woman of the world there beats a heart which feels for the rich. Could our obscure millionaires but be brought to play at bridge with the competent players of Mayfair, instead of hoarding their money in low securities, it is certain that a great step would have been taken in the direction of their relief; if they could be induced to buy spurious works of Art at prices only attained by the best of the genuine, much would have been done towards training them to appreciate the beautiful; and if led imperceptibly to pay the debts of prominent women, and to lend money to well-connected men, it would bind their interests more closely with those of the class to which the Empire owes so much, and which must be supported if Great Britain is to be saved from the impending ruin.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE annual London meeting of the Jockey Club is to be held at Lord Derby's house in St. James's-square on the 17th, being Monday in Ascot week. I hear there is to be a ballot on that occasion. It was formerly the custom to publish the names of candidates for the Jockey Club in the Racing Calendar, but on one occasion a man who had been blackballed complained bitterly of the inconvenience and mortification to which he had been subjected, as all the sporting world had been made aware that he was "up" for the Club and had been rejected. The publication of the names of candidates was then stopped, and now the proposer and seconder send formal notice to the Keeper of the Match-book, who forwards the particulars of the candidature to all the members at least a fortnight before the day on which the ballot is to take place. Nine members must ballot, and two blackballs exclude. There have been men who have encountered the perils of the ballot-box two and three times without success. The late Duke of Hamilton was blackballed when he first came up for election, and he was only admitted to the Jockey Club at the second time of asking because Admiral Rous made a personal appeal to the hostile members, pointing out the loss which would be sustained by the Turf generally and by Newmarket in particular if the Duke were again rejected, as he had announced his intention of giving up racing in England altogether. By the way, at one time dukes were nearly as numerous at Newmarket as jockeys, but now they are as rare as the unicorn. The Duke of Devonshire is the only one that is frequently seen there. The Dukes of Portland and Westminster own racehorses, but they are scarcely ever seen at Newmarket, or, indeed, on any racecourse whatever. The so-called "patrician" owners have considerably fallen off in numbers, and any adequate idea of the enormous weed-out of this class can only be formed by consulting the racing records of the period between 1820 and about 1890. The colours of the Dukes of Hamilton, Bedford, St. Albans, Grafton, Richmond, Beaufort, Leeds, and Rutland have long since disappeared from the Turf.

TRUTH was alone in pointing out the flagrant folly and absurdity of the egregious Racehorse Owners' Association when it was formed, and the opinions then expressed in this journal have been fully justified by the abject failure of the Association, which, having incurred general ridicule and contempt, is now to be wound up. It is difficult to imagine how any sane and sober person could expect that the managers of race meetings would provide free lodging and stabling, or that the railway companies would consent to carry racehorses at nominal rates. It was certainly funny to hear of the Jockey Club being "approached" on the free stabling question, for nobody ever heard any reference to such accommodation being provided at Newmarket. At a period when the so-called country meetings find it difficult to make both ends meet, it was preposterous to make so unseasonable a demand. As to the railway companies, the promoters of this crazy crusade might as reasonably have expected gold and silver to rain from the sky as that the rates for the conveyance of racehorses would be largely reduced. The common-sense view of the matter is that if a man cannot afford to pay such charges, or if it makes him howl with misery to do so, he had better give up the Turf altogether, for under such conditions he is not likely to derive either profit or pleasure from racing. I am afraid there are owners who are disposed to be as mean and huckstering as can by any possibility be managed, and who, like Sir Pitt Crawley, would desire to find their hands in everybody's pockets except their own. The Racehorse Owners' Association certainly received no sort of encouragement in its tiltings with race meetings and railway companies from the Jockey Club, as the Stewards seized every opportunity of snubbing it, but what was really the coup de grâce was the muddy-minded attempt to keep owners from engaging their horses in races at Sandown Park. When one recollects the glowing programme of the Racehorse Owners' Association and contrasts it with its achievements during the last two years, one is certainly reminded of the mons parturiens and the ridiculus mus. It has now come to an ignominious end, having achieved absolutely nothing whatever.

Spearmint is still on his legs, but there is no chance of his being in a condition to run for such a race as the Ascot Cup. He has been doing easy galloping work. I suspect that Mr. Gilpin is afraid to send him along at racing speed for fear of breaking him down. It is rumoured at Newmarket that a great effort will be made to get Spearmint to the post for the Princess of Wales's Stakes of £6,000 at the First July Meeting. In this race Polymelus would carry 9 st. 7 lb., while Spearmint's weight would be 9 st. 5 lb., the pair meeting at weight-for-age, as the Derby winner's penalty is reduced by a 3 lb. breeding allowance.

It may be hoped that either Spearmint or Llangibby will be able to oppose Polymelus, or the field will collapse altogether, the entry consisting of mere rubbish, putting aside Black Arrow. This horse would have 9 lb. the best of the weights, his penalty being entirely wiped out by a breeding allowance. If Black Arrow is in any condition within measurable distance of racing trim he will surely be started for this race, if only on the off-chance. There is also the consideration of £800 for second horse.

Slieve Gallion has no fewer than six engagements at Ascot, but I hear that he will be started for only one race at that meeting—the St. James's Palace Stakes on the Cup Day. This race, which will be worth about £2,700, is run over the Old Mile, and there are no penalties, which is, of course, an immense advantage when it is a question of the winner of any great race. Bezonian is the only one of the Derby horses which is engaged in the St. James's Palace Stakes.

Captain Greer's colours ought to be successfully carried on the same afternoon in the All Aged Stakes, as there is nothing in the entry which is likely to beat Rocketter.

Bridge of Canny is undergoing a special preparation for the Ascot Cup, but I shall be surprised if Lord Derby's horse proves capable of defeating either The White Knight or Querido. Lord Derby's horse is a good stayer, and his performances since his two-year-old days have been excellent, but I fancy he will be outclassed by the two four-year-olds mentioned. It is true enough that Bridge of Canny had a stone the worst of the weights at Chester, but Querido won the Cup with the most extreme ease, and it would be difficult to estimate how much the French horse had in hand. Gourd is likely to win a long-distance handicap before the season is over, but it must always be remembered in connection with Lord Derby's mare that she likes deep going and a flat course. Neither hard ground nor an uphill finish will suit Gourd.

I have expressed the opinion more than once that Keystone II. is not likely to have a successful career as a four-year-old. The mare has been scratched for her Epsom and Ascot engagements. It was stated in TRUTH several weeks ago that Keystone II. would probably start for her last race at Ascot, but I am informed that she has gone wrong, and that no attempt will be made to train her again. If all had gone well with Lord Derby's mare during the last two months she would have been reserved for the Jockey Club Cup after running at Ascot. Keystone II. was very unfortunate in not winning last year's St. Leger, but, on the other hand, she was greatly favoured by luck in not having to meet Flair in the race for the Oaks.

Sixteen horses have been engaged in the Ascot Gold Vase, but the entry is disappointing, as the class of the whole lot is moderate. The only French horse in the race is M. Jean Stern's Mont Ménale. Killeagh, Maya, Lycœus, Glasconbury, and Hammerkop are probably the best of the lot. St. Petersburg's accident will probably prevent him from starting. I wonder that Wool Winder was not entered for this race if it is true that he is a really good stayer.

KEEN GOLFERS everywhere use the BUZZARD GOLF BALL. Increases drive by 20 yards, and is the steadiest ball on the green. 2s. each of Golf professionals and dealers; or sample ball sent on receipt of P.O.—F. A. JOHNSON, 29, Paternoster-row, London.

There are twenty-two entries for the Fernhill Stakes, the most notable names among the three-year-olds being Orwell, Traquair, Saxham, Hillsprite, and Witch Elm. The list of two-year-olds includes Cheshire Cat, Sheelah, Portland Bay, and Little Goose.

Forty-nine horses are engaged in the Wokingham Stakes, which is the only T.Y.C. handicap in the Ascot programme. The list includes Acclaim, Marcovil, Hillsprite, The Welkin, Nero (a very likely horse to win this race), Cyanean, and Ulalume.

Since the new racecourse at Manchester came into use the meeting has not flourished, and the handicaps have been doing badly. The Summer Cup would obtain a much larger number of entries if the date of closing the race were altered. It is nonsensical to require owners to enter horses on the first Monday in January for a handicap which is not run until the end of May or the beginning of June. This curiously silly arrangement ought to be changed next year. The entries ought not to close until after the Liverpool Spring Meeting.

The victory of Beppo, by the way, was by no means popular. Mr. J. A. de Rothschild's horse runs for the Ascot Cup, so I hear, and he is also engaged at Ascot in the Hardwicke Stakes, and for this race Spearmint, Llangibby, and Slieve Gallion are all entered. The Hardwicke is one of the best races in the programme, being worth £2,860.

I have frequently animadverted on the exasperating absurdity of the Ascot authorities persisting in the policy of throwing away £2,000 on the Ascot Stakes, instead of reducing the added money to £1,000, and then devoting the sum thus saved to one or two of the weight-for-age races which at present are poorly endowed, notably the Fernhill Stakes. There are only thirty-four entries, which is a truly miserable result, considering the extravagantly large endowment of this handicap.

The dark St. Martin was struck out of the Derby, so the Kingsclere stable is not likely to be represented, as Dusty Miller is not engaged; but, even if the Duke of Westminster's colt were included in the entry, it would not be worth while to start him after his ignominious collapse at Chester. I hope that St. Martin may be able to make his début in the Prince of Wales' Stakes at Ascot, and if Lord Falmouth's colt can stay, and presuming him to be fairly smart, he ought to be able to win that race with a maiden allowance of 7 lb., while the best animals in the entry have extra weight to carry. I fear that the brother to Quintessence is turning out a difficult animal to train. Lord Falmouth appears to have a good chance of winning the rich Coronation Stakes at Ascot with Frugality, who finished second to Witch Elm for the One Thousand. Neither Maya, Donna Caterina, nor Witch Elm is engaged in the Ascot race, for which there are fifty-four entries. The Coronation Stakes will be worth £3,450 even if only nine start.

Fifty-six horses have been entered for the Royal Hunt Cup, and the class is decidedly higher than in the Ascot Stakes lot. The list includes Mrs. Jackson's Velocity, Mr. Hall Walker's Colonia, Mr. F. Alexander's Andover (the winner in 1905), Mr. R. Croker's Orby, M. Ephrussi's Champ d'Or, Duke of Devonshire's Hillsprite and Acclaim, Mr. G. Faber's Malua, Mr. W. Clarke's Linacre and Meadow Rue, Mr. J. B. Joel's Dean Swift and Prince William, Mr. R. Walker's Dinneford (who won this handicap last year), Mr. Farquharson's Dalkeith, Mr. Apcar's Auber, Captain Woods' Roseate Dawn, and Sir E. Vincent's Cyanean. M. Caillault has engaged Sourdene and Camisard. The weights for the Ascot Stakes and Royal Hunt Cup are to be published to-morrow.

The King is going to sell a number of his horses in training at Egerton House, and it is indeed full time these animals were weeded out of the Royal stud. Perambulator again did very badly in a gallop last week, and a couple of his Majesty's two-year-olds, which were expected to turn out smart, were beaten in a very moderate trial. The sale of the King's horses will take place at Newmarket on July 5, being Friday in the First July week. I hear that several mares from the Sandringham stud will be sold at Newmarket on the Monday in the same week. The failure of the two-year-olds Perspective and Simpatica in their trial is provoking, as they were so highly thought of as yearlings that thirty-four engagements were made for the colt, and the same number for the filly, who was generally considered last autumn to be the best-looking of the Sandringham yearlings.

The racing of last week was of very little general interest. Corinthian, who made a successful début at the Newmarket Second Spring Meeting, won the Hopeful Stakes at Doncaster very easily indeed, although he had much the worst of the weights. Corinthian is a fine colt, and evidently very smart. His next race will probably be the Triennial at Ascot, but he may run at Lewes next week. At Salisbury Llangwm won the Salisbury Stakes without an effort from Morisa, a racing-like filly, who had 13 lb. the best of the weights. Llangwm ought to win the £800 stake at Kempton Park on Saturday, and I expect he will defeat Pom if they meet in the £1,500 race at Hurst Park on Friday, the 14th. Little Flutter, who cantered away with the Salisbury Foal Stakes, runs on the last day at Ascot for the King's Stand Plate, the entry for which race includes Rocketter, Quelpart, Stron Ard, and Bon Marché. It is amazing that only sixteen horses should have been engaged in a T.Y.C. race, with £800 of added money!

Mr. Wallace's smart colt St. Elf, who was selected by many of the papers to win the Woodcote Stakes, has gone seriously amiss, and he is not likely to be seen again on a racecourse for a considerable time. It is curious that St. Elf should have gone to pieces after making a brilliantly successful début early in the season, for precisely the same thing happened last year to his half-brother Gnome, who has never been of any use for racing since his illness.

At Epsom to-morrow the Great Surrey Foal Stakes should be won by Mr. L. de Rothschild's dark filly Tsu Shima, by St. Simon out of Top Hane, who has been well galloped.

On Friday the Acorn Stakes should be a good thing for Lord Rosebery's Popinjay, half-sister, by St. Frusquin, to Traquair, who won another trial last week, and she is evidently very smart indeed. Popinjay is intended to start for the Coventry Stakes at Ascot, and a victory on Friday will not involve a penalty in the later race.

By the way, Mr. Hall Walker's filly, Call Bird, half-sister, by Gallinule, to Witch Elm, is to make her début in the Acorn Stakes.

There is likely to be a large field for the Oaks, which is considered by good judges to be a very open race. The best of the Newmarket fillies will probably be Lord Derby's Altitude, who has improved considerably, and she did well in a gallop a few days ago. Bellavista, Cornfield, Orwell, and Sixty will also be among the Newmarket lot, but I fancy the country stables will supply fillies capable of easily defeating these animals. Witch Elm won the One Thousand with extreme ease, but Frugality was then decidedly backward, and Maya certainly did not give her best running in that race. It will not at all surprise me if the Oaks is won by Frugality or Maya.

Next week there will be racing at Lingfield Park, Beverley, Lewes, and Hurst Park. It would be idiotic to attempt any predictions with the Epsom meeting going on this week. The meeting of Pom and Llangwm at Hurst Park will be the event of the week, and it may be hoped that both colts will run, and that Quelpart will be included in the field. All Black has another chance in the £1,300 race at Hurst Park.

Mortlocks. — Specialists in Luncheon, Dinner, Dessert, Breakfast, and Tea Services. Old English and French Patterns and Models. Specimens sent on Approval. Carriage paid.—Oxford-st., and Orchard-st., London, W.

THE CANKER IN GOLF.

I was very much amused to read in one or more of the daily papers that it was a great pity that the finalists in the Amateur Golf Championship did not agree to postpone the event owing to the weather. The gale and rain were tremendous. But golf is golf, and the golfers of the old school would sooner have perished than abandon a match. It is only men of the new school who object to stymies and the rigour of the old rules, who postpone matches to play bridge. The austerity of the ancient game consisted not only in obedience to the rules, but also in the glorious boast that golf could and should be played in all weathers. If at St. Andrews, of all places in the world, there had been a postponement, then, indeed, it might have been written that the glory of the game had departed. And, indeed, the game needs some preserving. For in its progress it has gathered much evil. The modern golfer lives by pot-hunting and incidental sweepstakes, not to mention rich bets of an amount that make the game savour rather of the roulette board than the putting green. As for the amateurs, it is high time that they took steps to mend their ways. I see that it is openly stated that a qualifying competition will be enforced before two years are passed, so that every Dick, Tom, and Harry may not swamp the list by entering for the championship. That refers only to their playing qualification. But if the list were scanned, I wonder how many names would be struck out because they are not genuine amateurs. I have heard of a man wanting to improve his game, and offering to play a scratch or plus man for a considerable stake, which he was almost certain to lose. He calmly said that one could not expect a player of such skill to play for nothing. These incidents are common talk in certain golf clubs. Of course, if the man likes to part with his money it may be said that it is his own affair. That is true, but let him pay it like a man to the man who makes his living by the game, and not to the man who poses as an amateur. In fact, such amateurs seem to me to be very nearly akin to cardsharpers. They make a nice little income out of golfing mugs, men who have more money than sense. I know enough of what goes on behind the scenes in golf to say that there is a wretched canker eating into the genuine spirit of the game. The professional has a far higher standard of morality. He loves the game in all its moods. He plays it for its own sake straightly and honestly, and he makes a thoroughly honest livelihood out of it. But what shall be said of clubs that have holiday competitions where men foregather from London and where the names of the competitors are sold to the highest bidders at a mock auction, and the buyer of the winner makes so much out of the pool, and so much goes to the actual winner of the event? This is not sport. Golf does not need it. But the club may; and in this highly moral age the money rather than the game is the thing. These gatherings swell the coffers of the club. Why should the committee be purists? Why should the committee interfere if men are fools enough to pay plus men to play with them? I say they should, because a golf club should consist of honourable men engaged in an honourable game. A correspondent this week sends me full particulars of a recent competition in the Midlands, including the names of the club, the donor of the prize, and the winner. I have no wish to pillory this club without giving it a chance of amending its ways. The prize was a ten pound club debenture bearing four or four and a half per cent. interest. One hundred members, I am told, competed. This prize was played for over seventy-two holes on April 27 and May 25. Logically, I suppose it is hard to say that, so far as the winner goes, there is any difference between this form of competition and the ordinary sweepstake. To my mind the action of the committee in permitting such a competition is, in the interest of the game, absolutely indefensible. Every player in that competition was, from my standpoint, disqualified from ever competing for the Amateur Championship. Pot-hunters, sweepstake scoopers, and gamblers, let alone the paid scratch or plus players, are allowed to contaminate the game. It is high time that the matter was taken up by some responsible organisation. We find the effects of this system altering the character of the game itself. The foursome is old-fashioned. Better let there be a three or four ball match where side bets and stakes can be freely made. The stymie is a wicked and unjust rule. It is grossly unfair that the sovereign on the hole and the tenner on the match should depend on such a mean and contemptible stroke. And the player who may have to play and lay a stymie to save the hole is unfitted to be accounted a respectable person. It will be necessary, I fear, for legislation to be effected in order to sweep away the evils that I have referred to. There are a large number of golfers who loathe and detest the present methods. But they have no power to act. They would support reform, but club committees have enough to do in all conscience without looking after the golfing morals of their members.

To turn now to the Championship which Ball won for the sixth time after meeting in the final Palmer, who had not begun the game until he was thirty-six. The loser had not the freedom of swing of the champion, who had won his first Championship nineteen years before. But his approach play was excellent. Over a thousand people followed in the drenching rain. Of all the players Guy Campbell, who a year or two ago was Captain of the Eton eleven, made a great name for himself. His driving was superb, and until he met Ball his putting was excellent. Then, at the critical moment, those two foot puts went astray. He went to pieces on the green. May he have better luck next time. He first learned the game when he was little more than a baby. At St. Andrews one realises how truly golf is a national game, depending not on sweepstakes and gambling. There is Robb who plays for Scotland, an artisan, and another favourite for final honours was Gallacher, a waiter at the Royal and Ancient. There are numerous caddies in Scotland who are finer players than many club professionals. They prove that golf is a game worth playing for its own sake. Those who are always worrying about alterations in rules and complaining about the unfairness of the rules are the men who rely upon sweepstakes and bets to get what they can out of the game.

The secretary-cum-editor of the C.T.C., Mr. Shipton, has been writing to the Irish Cyclist on the club. He says he is not sanguine as to the future. The artizan and servant class are not likely to join for the intangible benefit it can offer them. The only course is for the club to continue its present policy of giving the best return possible to the rider who can afford to pay the subscription, and to trust to Providence that touring may become popular. This, I fear, is rather a poor look-out for Mr. Shipton and his connections on the C.T.C., especially as he adds that, unless the present strife is ended, there will soon be no C.T.C. to fight over. I am perfectly certain there will not be if the present mismanagement continues, and I feel more than confident in advising people not to join a club of which its secretary writes so dismally, notwithstanding its specious advertising pamphlet.

In Association football the split has come to pass. The amateurs have decided to form an independent association. The professional element on the council has triumphed. It is a great pity. But it is really sheer twaddle for these professional backers to write about all that they have done for the amateurs. They have given them an amateur cup, and given them amateur international matches, the expenses being paid out of money made by the professionals. After all, the paid player is not represented on the council. He is a mere chattel. Amateurs started the game, the association, and the cup. Everything has been captured by these organisers of the paid game, who are not elected by the paid players. The robbers are very virtuous, because the robbed refuse to be further coerced and to appreciate the sops that are thrown to them.

In between rain and hail there have been cricket matches played. The South Africans beat a fairly strong M.C.C. team after a match that varied in a most exciting way. They need a Duff or Trumper to go for the bowling at once. At the Universities it is satisfactory to note that the fielding in both teams is excellent. Blythe had a great day with Northampton. That county must be getting quite tired of first-class cricket. Essex promptly avenged Kent by beating Lancashire, when Tyldesley played superbly to save his side. Middlesex, with its Colonial bowling, and Notts remain unbeaten. The County Championship is going to be exciting, and when the South Africans have fine weather they will probably add to the national gaiety.

MOTORS AND MOTORING.

THE Isle of Man races last week were largely spoiled by the weather, which was about the most unpropitious imaginable. Rain fell, the course was sloppy and soddened, causing numberless accidents, and upsetting the fuel limit calculations, and generally the conditions were unfavourable all round. In the circumstances, however, all the more credit is due to those who succeeded in "winning through" in spite of them, and the congratulations will be none the less hearty in that in the case of both races a British car came in first. The Tourist Trophy race was won by a 20 h.p. Rover car at an average speed of 28.8 miles per hour, while a 30 h.p. Beeston Humber took the prize for heavy touring cars at an average speed of 28.7 miles per hour. A 16-20 h.p. Beeston Humber came in second also in the Tourist Trophy race, so that two of the leading British firms fairly divided the honours of the day.

At the same time, they would doubtless be the first to recognise that many of their rivals had rather hard luck. Mr. Algernon Lee Guinness, for instance, on his 18-h.p. Darracq, was pulled up less than two miles from the finish when victory seemed certain, through running out of petrol, though he had repeatedly covered the course under more normal weather conditions upon the prescribed allowance; and a similar fate attended that fine Belgian car, the Métallurgique. Mr. Napier's Arrol-Johnson, which was prevented from winning last year by persistent tyre troubles, had misfortune again this time, in the shape of a choked petrol pipe. But these and like mishaps are, of course, all part of the game, and while not to be overlooked, in no wise detract from the merits of the performances of the winning cars. But in the case of the "heavy" race it was unfortunate, of course, that the entries were so small and unrepresentative, nearly all the leading foreign makers, and most of the British ones, being conspicuous by their absence. It is just possible that if such cars as Mercédès, Renault, Fiat, De Dietrich, and other famous Continental makers, had been represented the result would have been rather different. Certainly the race would have been more interesting.

As it is, the support of this particular contest has hardly been such as to encourage its repetition another year. Indeed, the ultimate fate of both the "T. T." and "H. T." races would seem to be more or less in doubt at present. Apparently the trade think that they can lay out their money to better advantage than on building special cars to take part in them, and on the thousand and one other expenses incidental to competing. Under the circumstances, would it be absolutely impossible to arrange in future years for the races to be restricted to genuine touring cars, to be picked haphazard from stock by the R.A.C.? In this way the cost to the maker would be greatly reduced, and the results would be infinitely more instructive to the public. But how to work it? There would be difficulties, doubtless, but none, I fancy, of an insuperable kind.

The Manx races were a triumph, by the way, not only for British cars, but also for British tyres. In the "T. T." and "H. T." alike, Dunlops were practically the only wear—the winners and runners-up in both races, as well as many of the other cars, having been shod with them.

The official report of the recent 10,000 miles run on a 40 h.p. Siddeley car will be read with interest by many. It shows that on the whole the number of repairs and adjustments made during the run were commendably few, though some, perhaps, will have been surprised to note that they were not even fewer. From the fact that no previous reference had been made to these adjustments, which were being made from day to day under official observation throughout the progress of the tour, some appear to have jumped to the conclusion that none such were required from start to finish, and that the car had made its run of ten thousand odd miles not only without mishaps on the road, but without even being touched by a tool in the motor-house. Such a notion, however, was absurd, and, as the official report now shows, the car was, in fact, constantly overhauled in this and that respect, and in this way enabled to perform its remarkable achievement in the matter of miles completed.

The adjustments in question seem to have been, for the most part, such as stopping leaks in radiator, chain adjustments, adjusting brakes, wheels, magneto, etc., quite of the ordinary kind. The total amount of time consumed in this way during the seventy-eight days of the trial was, it seems (in the admirably precise terms of the report), 33 hrs. 6 min. 55 sec., or at the rate of less than twenty-six minutes a day—this total including 10 hrs. 5 min. spent in repairing a leaky radiator, and 5 hrs. 40 min. as the result of an accidental collision. As regards the condition of the car after its run, the report is exceedingly favourable. No play was noticeable in the bearings of the connecting rods, the valves (which had not been touched during the trial) were in good condition, and the only signs of wear were of an unimportant character. In respect of the Elastes tyres used, they seem to have entirely obviated tyre troubles, though in consequence of defects in the detachable rims used frequent changes seem to have been necessary. Taking the trial as a whole, while plenty of other modern cars would doubtless be capable of achieving quite as good results, the 40 h.p. Siddeley certainly proved itself a credit to its makers.

It is reported, I notice, that Mr. H. R. Pope, driving an Itala car from Monte Carlo to London, beat all previous records by 4 hours and 16 minutes.

So the Darracq racers will compete in the Grand Prix after all. M. Darracq, it may be recalled, in consequence of the capture of his champion driver, Wagner, by another firm, decided to withdraw from the contest. Messrs. Huntley, Walker and Co., Ltd., the principal English agents for Darracqs, and sole concessionnaires for the six-cylinder cars of that make, have, however, stepped in and acquired certain of the cars in question, which will accordingly take part, as originally intended, in the contest for the Grand Prix, Kaiser Preis, and other Continental contests. In the Grand Prix race Mr. Huntley Walker will drive himself, while it is stated further that he has also secured a new 200 h.p. six-cylinder racer from Messrs. Darracq which has been built purposely to establish world's records.

Nothing could give a much better idea of the substantial nature of the motor-car industry of to-day than the character of some of the catalogues issued by the leading firms, which are in many cases worthy of the title of works of art. Such is that which has just been put forth by Argylls, London, Limited, under the title of "The Care of a Car." Needless to say, the car in question is the far-famed Argyll, but the slightly delusive character of the title chosen may be overlooked, in view of the interesting character of the contents of the booklet, which, apart altogether from its advertising object, affords the most interesting and instructive insight into the principles of modern motor-car construction and the many ingenious details and refinements which go to make an up-to-date modern car such a marvel of efficiency and comfort.

Another publication of the same class, reflecting equal credit on its producers, is that which Messrs. Rolls-Royce, Limited, have just issued. In "The Rise of the Rolls-Royce" the history of this famous British car is picturesquely outlined, while in the subsequent pages particulars are given of the various successes which it has achieved and of the many special features upon which its claims are based. By common consent the Rolls-Royce car is one of the most scientifically constructed and best thought out in existence, and one which, as a consequence, has no need to fear comparison with the best produced either at home or abroad. It is not without significance, as bearing on the trend of the times, that the makers are at present only cataloguing 40-50 h.p. six-cylinder cars.

MAMMON.

Another Difficult Week in the Stock Markets—Three House Failures—Embarrassment of a Large Outside Operator—Prices Mostly Lower—Poor Canadian Statements—Labour Troubles in Argentina.

THE Stock Exchange has spent another troublous week. There was next to no business doing—that is, business of the kind that makes for better markets. A fair amount of stock no doubt changed hands, but the sales were mostly of a forced character, and were connected with the difficulties encountered at the fortnightly Settlement. At the very outset the troubles of the House began by the default of a large firm of jobbers, mainly interested in copper shares, while two more failures were announced later in the week, one being that of a well-known and old-established firm of brokers. In the case of Mr. Frank Boyd May, who was hammered on Saturday, the default took a tragic turn, that gentleman committing suicide the same evening. Including one member who was expelled by the Committee, ten individuals severed their membership of the Stock Exchange during last week alone. Although actual failures were limited to three, at least six other firms were known to have been helped over at the recent Settlement. Fortunately, the speculative position open in all departments of the House is so small that the liabilities in all the cases mentioned were probably not very serious. In the case of the two large firms that were hammered a week ago, the net shortage was in one instance understood to be £6,000 and in the other only £1,500, and it is hoped that payment of debts will be made in full at an early date. The really important difficulty disclosed last week had its origin outside the Stock Exchange, a well-known operator, who had been granted extensive credits, defaulting to the tune of some £80,000. Owing, however, to the fact that the account was divided pretty equally between some twenty to thirty firms, grave trouble to individual members of the Stock Exchange was avoided. Attempts have been made to adjust matters by the formation of a Trust Company which will take over the assets of the operator concerned, but at the time of writing I am unable to say whether the arrangement has been finally agreed to by the creditors.

With all this actual trouble, and with a plentiful crop of idle rumours about alleged embarrassments, it was not to be expected that markets could make headway. The American department once again set a bad example, prices at one time falling without any show of resistance, though ultimately the market took an upward turn, upon "bear" covering. Canadian Rails suffered from the effects of poor April statements, which showed that practically the whole of the large increases in gross revenue had been absorbed by higher working costs. The showings bring forcibly to mind the prophecy of Mr. Hays, the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, made at the beginning of the year, that the railways in 1907 would show big gains in gross receipts, but little expansion in net revenue. The Argentine Railway market has been upset by a strike amongst the engine-drivers and stokers, undertaken, it is said, for the purpose of forcing better terms from the Great Western. Fortunately the trouble was promptly met by the offer of arbitration on the part of the Great Western directors. This offer the men have accepted, and work is understood to have been resumed. The new issue of £1,000,000 debentures announced by the B.A. and Pacific, and an emission of £2,000,000 preference stock by the Buenos Ayres Great Southern tended to increase the market depression, though with real holders wisely refusing to sell their stocks, and reports regarding the general state of trade in the Republic continuing good, a rebound in prices should not be far off. Domestic securities, while unable to make much improvement, have been comparatively steady, despite the indifferent news from Lombard Street. Paris is still an active competitor for gold, and has followed up the purchase last week of £800,000 bars here by a further engagement of £300,000, in addition to its withdrawal of sovereigns from the Bank of England, and the import of £400,000 from the United States. In view of this foreign demand, and the fact that the Bank's reserve is under twenty-five millions, no reduction in the official discount rate can be looked for yet awhile.

Home Rails Steadier—Scotch Lines and Forthcoming Economics—The Whitsun Traffics—Striking Effect of the Cold Weather — Aggregate Earnings Satisfactory.

There were satisfactory indications last week that the fall in Home Railway stocks had about spent itself, for the time being at any rate. At one time prices took a fresh downward plunge, but subsequently the market pulled itself together, the understanding that no strike had yet been contemplated by the Amalgamated Society no doubt having some influence, and on balance values have in the majority of cases made a little headway, as the following table indicates:—

Home Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest.	May 25, 1907.	June 1, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Caledonian 3 p.c. Pref.	80	72⅞	70½	71	+ ½
Do. Def.	42½	28⅝	26½	26½	+ ½
Central London	96½	82½	70	71	+1
City and S. London	47½	39	41	41	—
Furness	69¾	61⅜	60½	60½	—
Glasgow and South-Western Def.	42⅜	37¼	32½	32	− ½
Great Central 1894 Pref.	81⅜	69	59	59	—
Do. "B"	40⅝	32½	24½	25	+ ½
Do. "A"	19½	15½	13	13½	+ ½
Great Eastern	90⅝	79½	70½	70½	+ ½
Great Northern Pref.	105	98⅜	97⅜	97	− ⅜
Do. Def.	48¼	39½	38½	39	+ ½
Great Western	144	122¾	122½	124	+1½
Hull and Barnsley	50	42¼	46½	47½	+1
Lancashire and Yorkshire	110½	100	100	101	+1
London and Brighton "A"	130⅜	111½	88	84	−4
London, Chatham, and Dover	16⅜	13	12¾	12¾	—
Do. 4½ p.c. Arbitration Pref.	99½	85	78	77	−1
Do. do. 2nd Pref.	64½	48	48	48	—
London and North-Western	163½	147½	143½	143½	—
London and South-Western Def.	57½	44⅜	45½	47	+1⅜
Metropolitan Consolidated	89½	59	40½	40½	—
Metropolitan District	37½	18¾	13	11	−2
Midland 2½ p.c. Pref.	70⅜	64	63½	64	+ ⅜
Do. Def.	74⅜	62½	60½	61½	+ ½
North British 3 p.c. Pref.	78⅜	72⅜	68	68½	+ ½
Do. Def.	47⅛	33⅜	31⅛	32½	+⅛
North-Eastern Consolidated	147½	134½	135½	137½	+2
North Staffordshire	105⅜	96½	95	96	+1
South-Eastern "A"	55⅜	44½	38½	38	− ½

Brighton "A" was an exceptional feature of weakness, the poor traffic record of the company encouraging further action on the part of the "bears," and leading to a certain amount of real selling. The improvement, speaking generally, might have been more pronounced, but for the fact that it was checked by the offer of a certain amount of bankrupt stock, of which there has been an unwelcome plenitude all round the House of late. The issues of the Scottish lines, after being depressed by the action for compensation brought by Mrs. Black, widow of the late Mr. Black, an M.P. who was killed in the Arbroath accident, were braced up by a fresh reminder of the steps that are being taken by the northern railway directorates to economise. A meeting having this object in view is to be held early this month, when the three principal railway companies—the North British, Caledonian, and Glasgow and South-Western—will be represented. Pourparlers have already passed, and high hopes are entertained that the negotiations will result in an agreement advantageous to all three companies. It is also understood that the question of an all-round advance in haulage rates is to be discussed, in view of the great increase in the cost of materials and in working expenses, though in official circles this suggestion is not creating much enthusiasm because of the unfavourable reception which the companies met with from the Railway Commissioners on the occasion of a similar application in 1900.

The effect of the cold weather was strikingly shown in the traffic returns of our railway companies for the Whitsun holiday period. I gave a week ago the figures covering the long distance tourist receipts—which were disappointing all round—and the inclusion of the result for the Bank Holiday week does nothing to improve the situation. The showing may be seen at a glance from the following table:—

TRAFFICS.—WHITSUN FORTNIGHT.

Company.	Passengers.	Total Receipts.
	£	£
Great Central	− 1,900	+ 4,300
Great Eastern	− 13,400	− 10,500
Great Northern	− 8,800	+ 2,600
Great Western	+ 3,600	+ 19,400
Lancashire and Yorkshire	− 4,200	+ 1,700
London, Brighton, and South Coast	− 21,300	− 21,700
London and North-Western	− 21,000	− 8,000
London and South-Western	− 14,900	− 11,800
Midland	− 5,400	− 10,500
North-Eastern	− 11,300	+ 6,600
South-Eastern and Chatham	− 23,400	− 23,000
Metropolitan	− 900	− 1,400
,, District	− 900	− 800
Central London	− 1,000	− 1,000
City and South London	+ 1,200	+ 1,200

Only one of the leading lines (the Great Western) managed to increase its coaching receipts, and the merit of the performance is discounted by the fact that the company is operating seventy-seven miles more line this year than last. The little City and South London, which also put up an increase, was, of course, helped by the new Euston extension. To some extent the general falling-off in the coaching receipts is explained by the occurrence of Whitsun a fortnight earlier this year. But in the main the Arctic weather experienced at the recent holiday sufficiently explains the shrinkage, and the attempts to argue from the decline that people have less money to spend upon travel now than a year ago are unconvincing. Taking goods and passenger receipts together, the fortnight's results so far as the Heavies are concerned assume a different complexion, thanks to the continued vitality of trade at our chief industrial centres. Moreover, leaving results for the mere fortnight, and taking the broader basis of the aggregate earnings for the twenty-one weeks to date, there is no reason to take aught but a cheerful view of the position, as the following table illustrates:—

AGGREGATE TRAFFICS.—TWENTY-ONE WEEKS.

Company.	1907.	Increase or Decrease.
	£	£
Great Central	1,597,800	+ 54,000
Great Eastern	2,012,200	+ 19,800
Great Northern	2,311,800	+ 49,000
Great Western	4,863,400	+ 195,900
Lancashire and Yorkshire	2,310,081	+ 116,400
Hull and Barnsley	236,300	+ 27,700
London, Brighton and South Coast	1,149,700	− 22,900
London and North-Western	5,826,000	+ 190,000
London and South-Western	1,787,900	+ 30,100
Midland	4,772,500	+ 153,200
North Eastern	3,882,500	+ 225,900
South Eastern and Chatham	1,716,500	+ 27,300
Metropolitan	317,700	− 25,100
,, District	164,600	− 3,500
Central London	128,700	− 13,700
City and South London	62,000	+ 2,000

The four biggest lines—the North-Western, Great Western, Midland, and North-Eastern—have each gains ranging from £153,000 to £225,000; while the Great Central, Great Northern, Leeds, and Hull and Barnsley have also come out extremely well, and the question with all of these lines is not whether dividends can be maintained, but whether they can be advanced. Personally, I do not look for much in the way of increased payments to stockholders, because of the probability of expenses having been materially increased during the current year by the rise in coal and materials and wages, and the policy lately inaugurated by the companies of disbursing more liberally upon the up-keep of their lines out of revenue during prosperous times. But seeing that stocks are now selling on a 4½ to 5½ per cent. basis, and that only in one or two exceptional cases is there any likelihood of the dividends for the current year being cut down, the Home Railway market ought surely to begin to show more stamina.

HOW TO OPERATE IN STOCKS SUCCESSFULLY.—See HALFORD'S ADVISER (post free).—PALMERSTON HOUSE, LONDON, E.C. ESTABLISHED 1869. TELEGRAMS: "MONITOR, LONDON."

ERRATIC MOVEMENTS IN AMERICAN RAILS—EFFECT OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S SPEECH—VARYING CROP NEWS—THE ROCK ISLAND NEW ISSUE—GOLD WITHDRAWALS.

The American Market has experienced one of its now characteristic weeks of erratic movements. The "bears" have not failed to take full advantage of any adverse points, and although during the latter part of the week the market was not in such a depressed condition as in the earlier days, the net movements still remain in favour of the short interest, as will be seen from the following table of prices:—

Americans.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	May 25, 1907.	June 1, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Atchison	114½	89	90⅝	90⅝	—
Do. 5 per Cent. Pref.	109½	101	97	97	—
Baltimore and Ohio	129⅛	109⅜	97¾	96¾	−1
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	101¼	93½	91	91	—
Chesapeake and Ohio	68⅝	54	35	35⅞	+ ⅜
Chicago, Milwaukee	204½	152½	131½	130	−1½
Denver and Rio Grande	52½	38⅝	25⅝	25¾	+ ⅛
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	93¾	85⅞	72	72	—
Erie	52⅝	40	22⅞	21½	−1½
Do. 4 p.c. First Pref.	85¼	77	56½	57½	+1
Do. 4 p.c. Second Pref.	77	65⅞	38	36	−2
Illinois Central	188⅝	171	142	141	−1
Louisville	160⅜	143⅜	115½	114	−1½
Missouri, Kansas	45⅜	31⅞	33⅛	32⅝	− ⅛
New York Central	159½	130⅜	113½	113	− ½
N. Y. Ontario and Western	57⅛	45¼	34½	33½	−1
Norfolk and Western	100⅜	87⅛	76¾	74½	−2¼
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	96¼	91½	86	86	—
Northern Pacific	235	190¼	128	126½	−1½
Pennsylvania ($50)	75⅜	63⅜	61⅛	61⅜	− ⅛
Reading ($50)	85⅜	59⅜	52⅛	51⅜	−1⅛
Southern	43⅝	33	19⅝	18⅞	− ⅛
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	105	97	63	59½	−3½
Southern Pacific	99⅜	64⅜	81	78	−3
Union Pacific	203	144⅜	141½	136⅝	−4⅝
U.S. Steel	52½	33¾	34¼	33⅜	− ⅛
Do. 7 p.c. Pref.	117	102⅛	101⅝	100	−1⅝

One of the principal events of the week was President Roosevelt's speech at Indianapolis on Thursday last, but crop news, rumours of fresh issues of capital, and withdrawals of gold from New York for Paris, have all played their part. The anticipations of what the President would say had a worse effect than the actual statement, although it cannot be said that the speech has given any very great satisfaction either to the "bull" or the "bear" party. On first consideration a favourable view was taken of the President's pronouncements, for they were considered to indicate that his attitude towards capital was less antagonistic than expected; but there were so many points in the speech which seemed to be of a contradictory character that, after maturer reflections, New York came to the conclusion that on the whole the President did not view the railroads with any too favourable eye. It was, of course, comforting that the President should say that the census reports on the commercial value of the railroads of the country, together with the reports made to the Interstate Commerce Commission by the railroads on their cost of construction, tended to show that, as a whole, the railroad property of the country was worth as much as the securities representing it, and that in the consensus of opinion of investors the total value of stock and bonds was greater than their total face value, notwithstanding the water that had been injected in particular places, and also that his policy in no way represents hostility to corporations. It was not so pleasing to Wall Street, however, to find that at the same time as making these reassuring statements he was also of the opinion that there was less jeopardy from the Socialist and the Anarchist than from the predatory man of wealth, and that full power should be given to the Federal Government because the conditions of railroad activity are such as to make the Central Government alone competent to exercise full supervision and control. Although doubtless anxious to reassure capitalists, President Roosevelt was also striving to please the American public, and he was probably more successful in the latter direction than the former.

The position in the American Market was aggravated

INVESTOR'S HANDBOOK.—The Central Stock Exchange, Ltd. (Established 1893), 66, Cannon-street, London, E.C., now offer this, which contains particulars of Highest and Lowest Prices, Dividends, &c., for a considerable period, post free to any applicant naming this paper.

during the early part of the week by the fact that exaggerated statements were cabled over to Wall-street concerning the troubles on this side, but matters improved somewhat before the Decoration Day holiday, the short interests helping to bring about a recovery by covering. The crop reports early in the week were also of a very discouraging character for the railroad market, but more favourable news came to hand on Friday. Better weather was reported in Kansas State and other districts, and the general prospects of the crops were stated to have improved. The shares of the grain-carrying lines naturally gained under these conditions, Atchison, in addition, being helped by a statement by the president of the line to the effect that the company will earn 16 per cent. on its common stock for the current year, which terminates on the 30th inst. The expectations of new issues of stock have continued to harass the market, and the issue has been announced by the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company of $10,000,000 first and refunding mortgage four per cent. gold bonds at the price of 90 per cent. This issue could not well have been made at a worse time, for the prospectus appeared on Tuesday when the market was in a very depressed state, what with the fears regarding the settlement here, the bad crop reports and expectations of an unfavourable speech by the President. The bonds were offered both here and in New York, but it is very unlikely that very much support was forthcoming for the issue on this side. With the poor results which have attended the recent efforts to raise money of authorities much better known to the British public than the Chicago-Rock Island, I cannot see how the company could reasonably expect to obtain the favour of investors here. Rock Island stocks are very little known to British investors, and such market as exists in them here is an extremely narrow one. The New York and Ontario Company has been included among the concerns contemplating new issues, and it was currently reported last week that it had privately borrowed something between $1,000,000 and $2,500,000, but this rumour received prompt official denial. The withdrawal of gold to the amount of $2,800,000 from New York for Paris and reports that more is to follow have exercised the mind of Wall-street, but Saturday's bank statement giving the surplus reserve at $12,783,000 shows that a further moderate withdrawal would not cause very much inconvenience to the New York money market. Should there be an increase in speculation, however, loans would immediately increase and this would put a very different face on the position.

CANADIAN RAILWAY STATEMENTS—THE RISE IN WORKING EXPENSES—ARGENTINE RAILWAYS AND THE STRIKE—NEW ISSUES OF CAPITAL—BUENOS AYRES AND ROSARIO DEFERRED.

Canadian Rails, in addition to suffering with other securities in the general depression which prevailed during the greater part of last week, have had their own particular trouble in the form of disappointing monthly working statements. The returns for April in the case of both the Canadian Pacific and Grank Trunk companies showed a considerable advance in working expenses; in fact, the rate of increase in the outgoings during the month was at such a rate as to almost entirely wipe out the excellent improvements recorded in gross earnings. In the case of the Canadian Pacific, out of an increase of $901,000 in gross, only $24,000 was retained as extra net profit, working expenses having risen at the same time as much as $877,000. The ratio of expenses to gross receipts for the month works out at 62.9 per cent., as compared with 57.3 per cent. in the corresponding period of 1905. Canadian Pacifics, however, which dropped down to 170, soon got over the shock of the statement, and rallied sharply on buying for New York, where the "bears" had been taking considerable liberties with the shares, and had had a good innings. Had it not been for the liquidation of some five thousand shares on Canadian account while Wall Street was closed for its Decoration Day holiday, and further realisations of stock held by defaulters, the recovery would probably have been still more pronounced.

The Grand Trunk statement was perhaps more disappointing to the market than the Canadian Pacific. Out of an increase of £116,900 in gross earnings, the amount saved as extra net profit was only £4,100, the working expenses for the month being at the high rate of 72.7 per cent., as against 68.3 per cent. in April last year. The results of the main line were not so bad, the increase in the amount retained as net profit being £12,300, out of an advance in gross of £88,300, the working expenses being below the average for the whole system at 67.7 per cent.; but the branch lines made a poor showing. The whole of the increase of £26,900 shown in the receipts of the Western line was swallowed up by the outgoings, while the working costs of the Detroit section advanced by £6,000, although the gross earnings only improved by £1,600. On the Canada-Atlantic system the expenses again exceeded the receipts, there being a deficit on the month of £1,500; but in this case it has to be remembered that practically a reconstruction of the line is in progress. The increase in net receipts of the whole system for the four months to the end of April amounts to £17,100, out of an advance in gross of £278,800, but the present rate of working expenses is quite abnormal, and I see no reason to alter the opinion I expressed last week that Grand Trunk Third Preference at their present level are a good lock-up for investors.

Argentine Rails have had a particularly bad time just lately, what with the strike of engine-drivers and firemen and further new issues of capital. The following table shows the net movements which have taken place in Colonial and Foreign Rails during the past week:—

Colonial and Foreign Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest	May 25, 1907.	June 1, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Canadian Pacific	208	161¾	175¾	171¾	-4
Grand Trunk	29 11/16	25 1/16	29 7/16	28	-1 7/16
Do. 4 p.c. Guaranteed	105¼	101½	100½	100½	—
Do. 5 p.c. First Pref.	123⅝	114¾	118	118	—
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	115	105¾	109½	109½	- ½
Do. 4 p.c. Third Do.	70¼	60 11/16	70⅝	69¼	-1¼
Mexican	50⅝	22¼	45½	43½	-2
Do. 8 p.c. First Pref.	144¾	118⅝	137½	135	-2½
Do. 6 p.c. Second Pref.	93¾	49½	87½	85½	-2
Interoceanic of Mex. 7 p c Pref.	11 15/16	6	11⅛	10⅝	- ⅛
Do. 7 p.c. "B" Debs.	124	109	116	116	—
Mexican Central 4 p c	90¼	78½	83½	82½	-1
Do. First Incomes	30	18	20½	20½	—
Do. Securities "A" bearer	95	88 1/16	91	90	-1
Do. Do. "B" Do.	81¼	65⅛	79	77	-2
Nat. of Mexico 4 p.c. First Pref.	61⅜	37¼	52	51	-1
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	31⅝	19½	21	21	—
Bengal and North Western	149½	144	158	148	-10
Madras 5 p.c.	127½	120½	119	114	-5
Antofagasta Def.	180¼	162	130	135	+5
Nitrate Rails	16⅜	14½	14	13½	- ½
Argentine Great Western	130½	111	107½	106½	-1
Do. North-Eastern Debs.	83½	64½	73	72	-1
Buenos Ayres and Pacific	136½	120	114	111½	-2½
Do. and Rosario	120⅜	111	98½	98	-½
Do. Great Southern	145	122⅜	110½	120	+ ½
Do. Western	138¾	123½	118½	119	+ ½
East Argentine	120	87	118½	118½	—
Cordoba Cen. (C.N.S.) Income Debs.	75½	63⅜	65	63½	-1½
Cordoba and Rosario First Pref.	108⅜	85	86½	85½	-1
Entre Rios First Pref	98	85	91	89	-2
Great Western of Brazil	16 1/8	12½	10⅜	10¼	- ⅛
Leopoldina	86½	69¼	69½	69	- ½
San Paulo	214¾	199½	210	209	-1
Central Uruguay	92½	82	89	88½	- ½
Costa Rica	29 11/16	25	28½	28½	—
Cartagena (Colombia) Debs.	80½	78	71½	71	- ½
Colombian Nat. Second Debs	88½	76¾	73	69	-4
Colombian Northern 5 p.c. Debs.	81½	76¾	80	80	—
Manila 6 p.c Debs.	126	112	109	109	—
Guayaquil and Quito 6 p.c. Bonds	93½	55	43	43½	+ ½
Cuban Central	7 1/16	5⅝	5⅛	5⅝	—
United of Havana	103	105¾	93	92½	- ½
Western of Havana	15 7/16	12½	12½	11½	- ⅛
Mashonaland Debs (2nd issue)	94¾	87¾	88	88	—
Rhodesia 4 p c. Debs.	8 1/8	76	74	74	—
Ottoman (Smyrna to Aidin)	23¾	19½	21	21	—

So far as the strike is concerned, while the quarrel with the employees was only with the Argentine Great Western Railway, the whole of the railway systems of the Republic, except for a small portion in the north, were affected, for the drivers and firemen of other lines struck work in order to show their sympathy with the men of the Argentine Great Western, and to demonstrate their solidity as a trade union. The fact that the men are prepared to act with such unanimity is, of course, not very comforting, but even if the demands now made are granted, they will only entail an extra burden on the Argentine Great Western, for the other leading railways are already paying what is now asked by the Argentine Great Western men. As to the effect of the strike on the earnings of the railways, it should only be in the direction of passenger receipts that the lines have actually suffered, for the goods traffic has merely been delayed by the interruption of the train services. Even as regards the passenger side of the question, the services on the various lines were not by any means entirely suspended; in fact in some cases it was possible to run the regular trains. An interesting development in the position was the action of the Argentine Government. The attitude adopted by the Government should reassure investors in Argentine Railway securities who have had any doubts as to the feeling of the authorities in Argentina regarding foreign companies, for no attempt was made to force those lines which were involved in the strike through no fault of their own to maintain their full train services, or to threaten a fine for non-compliance, as might easily have been done had the Government been unfriendly to the railways.

THOMAS GOODE & CO.—China, glass, pottery, fireproof ware. Sole agents in the United Kingdom for the famous "Bi-Métal" (copper lined with pure sheet silver) Cooking Utensils. Illustrated catalogues free.—South Audley-street, London.

"FINANCE."—A concise weekly record of markets and prices, published by the CENTRAL STOCK EXCHANGE, LTD. (Established 1893), 66, Cannon-street, London, E.C. Post free for six months to applicants mentioning this paper.

The reports of new issues of stock, coming on top of the other adverse circumstances had a bad effect. The Buenos Ayres and Pacific company has announced the issue of £1,000,000 Four and a Half per Cent. Consolidated debenture stock, of which 60 per cent. is offering to the public, and the Buenos Ayres Great Southern is offering its shareholders £2,000,000 Five per Cent. preference shares. It cannot be said that the Buenos Ayres and Pacific company has chosen a good time to make a public issue, with the market depressed and the labour troubles. The stock itself, however, offers attractions for the investor who desires a steady security giving a fair return, for the price of £96 per cent. at which it is issued gives a yield of £4 13s. 9d. per cent. The last balance-sheet of the company showed that after paying all its debenture interest and guarantees there was a balance of £342,000, while its general reserves stood at £680,000, so that there is ample margin behind the present issue. Traffics have also steadily advanced, and to date show an increase of £394,000. The Argentine Great Western, the Buenos Ayres and Rosario, and the Buenos Ayres Western companies have all made new issues of stock within fairly recent dates, and the market naturally does not like the piling up of capital. These calls for more money, however, are the natural outcome of the enormous expansion in the agricultural industry of Argentina, and should not give rise to uneasiness among Argentine Railway shareholders. The money is wanted to extend the systems of the railways in order to bring in more business. Expenditure in this direction in the past has borne good fruit, and nobody can accuse the directors of the various companies of having spent money recklessly, while there is not the slightest doubt that those now issuing stock see their way to its profitable employment. I consider that at the present prices some of the Argentine Railway issues offer considerable attractions for investors. The following table shows the yields on six of the leading stocks on the basis of last year's dividends:—

	Yield per Cent. £ s. d.
Argentine Great Western Ord.	5 14 0
Buenos Ayres and Pacific Ord.	6 6 0
Buenos Ayres and Rosario Ord.	6 5 0
" " Def.	6 10 0
Buenos Ayres Great Southern Ord.	5 16 0
Buenos Ayres Western Ord.	5 17 0

Taken all round, I think Rosario Deferred the most promising for the man who does not mind taking a little risk. The risk, however, appears to be small, although, owing to a short maize crop, traffics have of late shown a falling-off, and working expenses have been rising. After paying 6 per cent. on the deferred stock for 1906, a sum of £50,300, or more than enough to have paid another 6 per cent., was carried forward. Out of the net earnings last year, also, a sum of no less than £105,000 was transferred to renewals and contingency fund, making the total now put by on that account £472,000, while £50,000 was placed to the general reserve account, bringing the total up to £430,000. The aggregate receipts for the current year also record an increase of £101,200. At the meeting of the company held as recently as the 18th of last month the chairman stated that the directors had always prided themselves on a conservative policy and the endeavour to keep dividends and the prices of the stock on the same level. He also pointed out that the reserve had been built up in order to provide for "rainy days." In the face of these statements and a reserve of £430,000 with which to carry out an avowed policy of maintaining dividends at a steady level, I cannot see that there is any likelihood of any reduction being made in the next dividend, even if the net earnings for the current year should show a falling off. In the matter of working expenses it was also stated at the meeting that it was not the rise in wages, per se, that had swelled the expenditure, but the large amount of useful work done which in the long run would be in relief of future contributions to the renewals fund. Apart from the matter of yield, there is also a very fair prospect of an increase in capital value, for, with a return of more normal times in the stock markets, Rosario Deferred will doubtless be placed on the level it merits. With regard to Antofagasta Deferred, to which I referred last week as an attractive purchase, it will be seen from the above table of quotations that a sharp rise has taken place in the price, in spite of the general depression that has prevailed.

Liquidation in the Kaffir Market, but the General Feeling Less Depressed—Favourable Rumours Circulated — The Miners' Strike and Engine Men's Decision—Collapse of the Movement and Benefit to the Industry Foreshadowed.

Although there has been a good deal of liquidation during the past week, and the mining markets have been chiefly affected by the difficulties experienced at the Settlement, the general tendency in these departments has not been so depressed as formerly. Repurchases by "bears" have to some extent offset the realisations in connection with weak accounts, while as a result of the more cheerful feeling entertained as regards the outlook, quotations have shown rather more resistance than they did in the recent period of depression, when almost every one seemed to take a gloomy view of the situation.

Kaffirs have been more active during the past week, and the leading speculative counters have fluctuated rather widely. On the one hand, there has been liquidation in connection with the financial troubles that have come to light; on the other, there has been "bear" covering by local professionals and a little support from Paris, induced by the better news to hand as regards the strike on the Rand. At the close on Friday Kaffirs were more animated, and displayed a stronger tone than for some time past, dealers bidding up the favourites on the strength of the favourable rumours in circulation, but the following day witnessed a renewal of liquidation, and the recovery was not maintained. On the week, however, the leading Kaffirs show some improvement, as will be seen from the subjoined table:—

Share.	May 25, 1907.	June 1, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Anglo-French	1	1 3/16	+ 3/16
Apex	2 11/16	2 3/4	+ 1/16
Consolidated Gold Fields	3 3/4	3 13/16	+ 1/16
East Rand Proprietary	3 31/32	4 3/32	+ 1/4
Geduld	1 3/8	1 1/2	+ 1/8
General Mining and Finance	1 1/8	1 3/16	+ 1/16
Goerz and Co.	1 1/16	1	− 1/16
Joh. Consolidated Investment	1 3/32	1 1/8	+ 1/32
New Modderfontein	5 3/4	5 3/4	—
Randfontein Estates	1 1/16	1 1/16	+ 1/8
Rand Mines	5 3/4	6	+ 1/4
S. A. Gold Trust	2 3/32	2 1/8	+ 1/32

HOME RAILS.—Options granted in all Home Railway securities at low rates for one, two, and three months. Treatise on Options and list of rates free on mentioning this paper to the Secretary, LONDON AND PARIS EXCHANGE, LTD., Bankers, Basildon House, Moorgate-street, London, E.C.

The most satisfactory news to hand as regards the Rand strike is that the engine-drivers have decided against joining the movement. This is of considerable importance, for, as I pointed out last week, in the event of these men joining the strikers, it would probably not be very easy to find substitutes, in which case the mills would have to stop running and gold production be suspended at the mines affected. Moreover, the fact of their having decided to remain at work will doubtless have a good influence in respect to the miners on strike, and will help towards the collapse of the movement. General Botha, who has just returned to the Transvaal, has apparently little sympathy with the strikers, for in the course of a speech the other day he said he trusted the white miners "would soon regain their common sense and end the strike." That these men are not indispensable is demonstrated by the fact that their places have been filled, and the mines have continued to produce the precious metal, and it is quite on the cards that the strike will have come to an end by the time this issue is in the hands of my readers. It seems not improbable that, so far as the mining companies are concerned, good will be the ultimate outcome of this labour trouble. In one of his latest cables the Johannesburg correspondent of the Financial Times states that payment by the day is being substituted for existing contracts, "and the economy resulting from this alteration, which is variously estimated at from 18d. to 30d. per ton, may mean that exceptionally good profits will be shown, due to the elimination of excessive and unnecessary charges." This prospect adds to the speculative attractions of Kaffir shares, and while it is not possible to gauge the extent of the "wreckage" still awaiting a home, I think those prepared to take stock off the market might well pick up the scrip of some of the dividend-paying mines at the current level of quotations. In previous notes I have named shares I favour, but for the benefit of those who have not noted or do not remember the selection made I will mention a few. Among outcrops Glencairns and New Kleinfonteins are promising, and I think Casons might now be bought, while in the deep-level list Robinson Central Deep, Knight's Deep, Wit Deep, and Ferreira Deep are about as good as any. Of the leading speculative counters I still prefer Rand Mines.

One of the rumours which temporarily helped the market last week was to the effect that a dividend of 5s. per share on East Rand Proprietary might be expected in course of the current month, but the statement was not generally credited, and I am inclined to think the sceptics are right. Another story recently circulated had reference to the Chinese on the Rand. This was to the effect that none of the coolies would be repatriated for six months, but well-informed market-men regarded this rumour also as a case where the wish was father to the thought, in view of the announcement to which I referred a few weeks ago that ships had been engaged to take back the coolies whose contracts expire this month. Whether more than the first few batches will have to be repatriated remains to be seen, however, and in this connection the market is still anxiously awaiting the promised "definite statement" as to the Government's intentions.

FORCED REALISATIONS OF COPPER SHARES—THE OUTLOOK FOR THESE DESCRIPTIONS—BROKEN HILLS CHEERFUL—ENCOURAGING REPORTS FROM THE FIELD—BRISEIS TIN RESULTS AND PROSPECTS.

The failure announced at the beginning of last week caused a break in prices of copper shares, the firm in question having been chiefly interested in these descriptions, but not so much in high-priced shares as in things like Lloyds, Central Chilis, and Caucasus. The further fall in the metal quotation to nearly £98 per ton was also a depressing influence, and when the tone became more cheerful, partly as a result of a recovery in copper to over £100 again, liquidation once more set in, this time on account of a big French speculator. The list of prices given below does not show up very well, but the latest quotations given are above the lowest touched:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	May 25, 1907.	June 1, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Abosso	1⅛	1⅛	1⅛	1⅛	− 1/16
Ashanti Goldfields (4/-)	17/9	7/9	15/-	15/-	—
Gold Coast Amalgamated	3⅜	1½	1⅝	1⅝	− 1/16
Taquah and Abosso	2¾	1 1/16	2¼	2 1/16	− 1/16
Wassau	1⅜	¼	¾	¾	—
Egyptian Mines and Exploration	10/6	1/3	1/3	1/6	+3d.
Nile Valley	13/-	3/-	1/3	1/3	—
Camp Bird	33/6	22/-	22/-	21/3	−9d.
Esperanza	5 9/16	2¼	1 15/16	1 15/16	—
Le Roi (£5)	2	1	1 7/8	1 7/8	—
British Broken Hill	58/-	30/7½	39/4½	37/-xd	+7½d.
Broken Hill Proprietary (8/-)	5⅞	3 7/16	4 5/16	4¼	+ 1/16
Zinc Corporation	2⅝	1 5/16	14/-	14/6	+ 6d.
Anaconda Copper ($25)	15⅜	11⅝	12⅜	11⅜	− ⅛
Arizona (Pref. Ord. 5/-)	3⅜	3	63/6	63/6	—
Great Cobar (£5)	9 1/16	4⅜	9 7/8	9½	− 3/16
Mount Lyell	52/6	33/-	46/-	46/6	+6d.
Mount Morgan	4¼	3½	4⅜	4 1/16	− 1/16
Rio Tinto (£5)	91⅛	63⅜	91	89⅜	−1½
Dolcoath Tin	29/6	10/-	24/-	24/6	+6d.
Pusing Lama Tin	3 9/16	¾	2 7/8	2 7/8	+ ⅛
Balaghat	36/-	22/6	15/6	16/6	+1/-
Champion Reef (2/6)	30/-	9/6	10/6	10/9	+3d.
Mysore (10/-)	7⅛	5½	5 13/16	5¾	− 1/16
Siberian Mines	—	1 1/16	1 1/16	1¼	+ 1/16
Siberian Proprietary	16¾	3⅛	3⅜	3¼	− ⅛
Waihi	9 13/16	6 5/16	8⅜	8 1/16	+ 1/16

On Monday, however, there was a fresh break in prices as a result of further liquidation and a relapse in the metal, Tintos dropping away to nearly 87. It looks as though the quotations of copper shares will continue to fluctuate rather than display a decided general tendency in one direction. Fluctuating markets afford plenty of scope for speculation on the principle of "small profits and quick returns," and I think that those who purchase at current prices will have an opportunity ere long of securing a moderate profit. Great Cobars, Mount Elliotts, and Mount Lyells seem to me to be good selections, while among the small-priced descriptions Chillagoes and Munganas are worth attention. As regards Great Cobars, it is satisfactory to learn that the strike is at an end. Apropos of the disappointment occasioned by the recent circular in that no dividend was declared, it is said by some that the announcement has only been postponed for a few weeks. Whether or not this statement proves correct, I think the shares a promising holding at the current level.

The Broken Hill group has not escaped from forced realisations arising out of the trouble disclosed at the Settlement, but on the whole prices in this section have presented a fairly firm appearance. Proprietarys have been depressed by sales on account of the outside speculator who was in difficulties, and who is stated to have realised 11,000 of these shares recently, but the price, which dropped under £4 during the week, has since recovered. Other members of the group have strengthened, the news as to good rains having fallen on the field being a stimulating influence, as there have been fears of a water scarcity. I stated in my last notes in reference to Broken Hill stocks that "intrinsic conditions seem favourable to some improvement in prices," and I still hold to this view, as the reports that have just reached me by mail show that the developments of the mines generally are being well maintained, and that close attention is being paid to treatment and labour-saving appliances, with a view to obtaining the best possible results.

A few months ago I directed attention to the high dividend yield obtainable on the shares of the Briseis Tin Mines at the price then ruling. The annual report of this concern is now to hand, and, as foreshadowed by the quarterly statements, the figures make a very satisfactory showing. For 1906 the profits were £128,500, compared with £58,000 for 1905, and in all 3s. 9d. per share was distributed amongst shareholders on account of the twelve months. On this basis the shares at the current price yield no less than 30 per cent. The directors have not divided profits up to the hilt, for in addition to distributing the amount mentioned they have written off £7,000 for depreciation, paid £5,000 out of revenue for the new property acquired, added £20,000 to general reserve, and even then have £42,200 left to carry forward. Prospects are speculative, as the life of the area now being worked is estimated at only three years, and the value of the new property remains to be proved. But it is to be borne in mind that the Briseis, in addition to its own earnings, is entitled to 58 per cent. of the profits of the No. 1 property, and it seems to me that the present market price of the shares allows little for possibilities in regard to the new leases, which are stated to contain the northern extension of the Briseis lead.

In spite of high freights—in face of prohibitive tariffs, discriminating writers, the world over, insist on having STEPHENS' INK. It costs no more. Resolutely refuse substitutes.

A New Bucket Shop.

"Am I right in supposing," asks a correspondent, "that these sort of communications come from what are called bucket-shops?" The communications in question are three in number, dated May 21, 22, and 23, from Cameron and Co., 52, Cannon-street, E.C. The name of the firm is new to me, but their mode of business is old. On May 21 they intimated that they were expecting a special cable regarding Union Pacifics, and hoped to wire the information next morning. It was added that these shares, having fallen over fifty points in the last few months, "the time is now due for a substantial recovery;" that Cameron and Co. would require a margin of £30 for every fifty shares; and that "every point rise means a profit of £10 on every fifty shares." As may be guessed, the wire next morning strongly recommended an immediate purchase of Union Pacifics. No notice was taken of it, and on the evening of May 22 Cameron and Co. wrote expressing regret that an order had not been telegraphed to them. Their regret was doubtless quite genuine, for during that day Union Pacifics had had a drop which would have more than exhausted the £30 cover. However, evidently assuming that their intended dupe would be unaware of this trifling fact, they went on to tell him that if he made the suggested purchase he might "look for a quick rise at ten points before the end of next week, meaning £100 clear profit." To save him trouble, a telegraph form was enclosed, ready filled up, with the instruction: "Buy fifty Union Pacifics; posting £30 margin." But he again failed to rise to the bait, and on May 23 Cameron and Co. once more wrote, urging him to send an order, "however small," and enclosing this time a telegraph form, in which the amount of the margin was left blank. . . . Yes, my correspondent is correct in his supposition. The cover that he was asked to send would promptly have run off, and even if there had subsequently been the predicted advance of ten points in Union Pacifics, he would not have benefited by it.

Bull and the Blazing Bays.

That blatant member of the bucket-shop fraternity who calls himself Martin Bull, but whose real name is believed to be Brown, figured in a case in the City of London Court last week, which bears out everything that I have said respecting him. One of the familiar circulars from 7, Fenchurch-buildings, beguiled a Scotch distiller into sending Bull £20 as cover for a purchase of Hudson's Bay shares, which were "sure to rise." Bull at once exhorted him to increase his holding, wiring that Bays were "buoyant," and the distiller parted with another £20. Again Bull wired, reporting this time that Bays were "blazing," and a further sum of £30, making £70 in all, was forwarded. The distiller, whose name I am considerately suppressing, is a gentleman doing a large business in his own line, but quite ignorant of the wiles and ways of outside brokers. From the fact that the contract note provided that the transaction should be carried out "according to the rules and regulations of the London Stock Exchange," he ingenuously inferred that Bull was a member of the Stock Exchange. His disillusionment came when, owing to the advance of Hudson's Bays, he found himself entitled to a profit of £97. He could not obtain payment of the profit or even the return of his £70. Bull's game is, of course, to tip for a rise of stock which is more likely to fall, so that when the cover runs off he can keep his dupe's money without further question. On the other hand, if it happens—as it did on this occasion—that there really is a rise, it does not by any means follow that Bull will pay up. I have, in fact, more than once exposed his failures to do so. In the present case, on being sued for the £167, he set up the plea that the contract was for a three-monthly settlement, though the distiller had never agreed to that, and it was, moreover, contrary to the rules and regulations of the Stock Exchange which were to govern the transaction. When this plea had been brushed aside, Bull attempted to raise the Gaming Act, but owing to an informality on his part this defence also was rejected, and Judge Rentoul gave judgment for the distiller for £100—that being the extent of the jurisdiction of the court—with costs. The course that he took in this case is a characteristic example of Martin Bull's "heads I win, tails you lose," method of gambling.

Wm. Tyler and Co.

In view of the references which have been made in these columns to the bucket-shop firm of Wm. Tyler and Co., Pinners' Hall, Old Broad-street, it may interest my readers to learn that at the Guildhall last week Wm. Henry Dacre Tyler, carrying on business at that address, was charged on a warrant with obtaining money by false pretences. The solicitor for the prosecution said that the case against the firm was that they did no genuine business. The accused was remanded, and I am, of course, precluded from making any comment upon the proceedings at present.

New Issues.

Applications are invited for an issue of £200,000 Four and a Half per Cent. Perpetual Consolidated Mortgage Debenture Stock of the Shawinigan Water and Power Company. The price of issue is fixed at 90 per cent. The company is the sole owner of the water power of the Shawinigan Falls, on the St. Maurice River, Canada, situated midway between the cities of Montreal and Quebec. The company's power is the principal source of supply for the territory between Montreal and Quebec, including various manufacturing centres, and it is being taken by a number of important consumers. It is anticipated that the net profits for the current year will be sufficient to cover the annual interest on the present issue six times over.

The Buenos Ayres and Pacific Railway Company announces an issue of £1,000,000 Four and a Half per Cent. Consolidated Debenture Stock at 96, to which reference is made in my railway notes.

"Vigilant's" Letter Box.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can I reply by post, and as there seems to be a misunderstanding in the minds of many of my readers, I wish to emphasise the fact that a coupon must be attached to every inquiry. A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the coloured cover of TRUTH.

2. Six different stocks are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks an additional coupon or coupons (one for every half-a-dozen stocks) must be forwarded. The answering of many of the inquiries I receive necessitates a great deal of careful research, and I shall therefore be compelled henceforth to enforce this regulation. Its necessity will be apparent when I state that some correspondents send lists of 20 or 30 different stocks covering every class and description of Investment.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication; cards are apt to be lost or misplaced, causing unnecessary trouble.

4. Anonymous letters will not in any case be attended to.

5. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

6. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written, and numbered.

7. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

8. I do not recommend brokers or solicitors.

Railways.

Mango.—1. They are not an attractive investment. There is no guarantee as to principal, and the guarantee of the interest expires in 1919. As the line is not at present earning its fixed charges, I should be inclined to realise. 2. Quite sound, and should recover before long. The traffics in the near future may show some falling off because of the smaller maize crop, but the company ought to have little difficulty in maintaining dividends. Rhodesia.—She first answer to "Mango." The same remarks apply to both lines. Shareholder in India.—Thanks for your letter, but I regret to say many of the statements you make are too libellous to be published in the form in which you put them. I will, however, keep the matter in mind. California.—Consult a solicitor at once. You might ascertain from the company's secretary at Euston Station whether the shares have been sold under the power of attorney. J. B.—I think you should be content with your present holding. At the present time you need have no difficulty in finding other high yielding investments at least equally attractive, and by spreading your interests you would, of course, be limiting your risk. Old Ditcher.—No. 1, despite the fall, seems still absurdly high compared with, say, Great Northern Deferred, and an exchange into the latter might be worth making. The others had better be kept at the present very depressed levels. Trader.—Thanks for your appreciative remarks. The suggestion you make is not an unreasonable one, although there are, of course, difficulties in the way of its adoption. However, if matters in regard to labour be pushed to extremes, the question of a revision of tariffs will no doubt come to the front. Evidently the address you require is Mr. Nathaniel Spens, Managing Director of the Stock Conversion and Investment Trust, 12 and 13, Nicholas Lane, E.C. Channing.—The fall is sufficiently explained by recent earnings, which suggest a reduction in the Preferred dividend. I would not buy more, and it is a question for yourself whether you sell at the present rubbish price or wait in hopes of an ultimate rally. Beta.—The shares are thoroughly sound and ought to be held. Faith.—Both sound stocks, and should be held.

MINES.

Omicron.—A financial undertaking which is understood to be largely interested in Mexican gold mines. The shares are quoted about 15s., and seem a fair speculative holding. Orlando.—The Zoroastrian was reconstructed for the third time in December last, and now figures under the title of Cardigan Mines, Limited. The Paringa is still in existence, and its property is being worked on tribute. Felspar.—Of your list I prefer Nos. 3, 4, and 5, which appear fair speculative holdings. Welshman.—1. A substantial advance does not seem very likely. 2. Yes. 3. At the present rate of sinking, the No. 1 shaft should reach the reef in about four or five months' time. 4. When the company's financial position is rearranged the shares should be worth more than the current price; but it is not possible to give anything like a definite statement pending the announcement of working costs and profits. Inquirer, Scarboro'.—Taking the new shares must be considered a pure speculation, and I am afraid the prospects of the concern are not very bright. Land Agent.—I have no information as to the standing of the promoting concern mentioned.

MIXED.

G. W.—I would suggest Japanese Five per Cent. bonds, United States Steel Five per Cent. Second Mortgage bonds, Antofagasta and Bolivia Railway Five per Cent. New debentures, Scottish American Mortgage Five per Cent. "B" preference, Argentine Great Western Railway ordinary, and Grand Trunk Railway Second Preference. N. L. B.—Japanese Four and a Half per Cent. bonds (first series) should suit you as well as anything I could name. Galen.—1. Yes. 2. No special reason for the fall has transpired. You might keep them as a speculation for dividends. Combe.—1 and 2. Hold. 3. I am afraid the stock is hopeless, though it might fetch a point or two more when general market conditions improve. 4. Worth holding. Your further inquiry will be answered under "Insurance Notes." Seek.—1. Ivanhoes and Sons of Gwalia are promising speculative purchases, but I do not see much attraction in the others at present. 2. There is a fair prospect of a moderate improvement within, say, the next three months. Fortunio.—I have no recent information about No. 8, but the rest of your investments should be kept. O. W.—1 and 2. Purchases to average should turn out well eventually. 3. They are members of the Stock Exchange.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Seivad, B. S., Rhoderic Dhu, W. T., Beverley, Slieve Gallion, Investor, J. M. D., and other correspondents.—Repeated warnings against the International Securities Syndicate, Cunliffe, Russell, and Co., and Melville, Glyn, and Co., have appeared in TRUTH. I dealt with the question of "premium bonds" in an article last week. W. B., Seedley.—Have nothing to do with either the syndicate or the Arnold and Butler bucket-shop. H. P., West Hartlepool.—Have nothing to do with H. Langenhahn and Co., or any other Continental lottery touts. The circulars are grossly misleading. Felicia.—Perfectly safe. Nitrate.—I know nothing about the firm, but you could yourself get repayment of the tax, if you are entitled to it, by sending a formal claim direct to Somerset House. As to the outside brokers whom you mention, I have had no occasion to criticise them. F. J. S.—Your questions are hardly within my province. However, the sacks should not be included in the weight, and the Weights and Measures Act (1889) entitles you to require a weighing "by any weighing instrument stamped by an inspector of weights and measures." Consult your local inspector. W. J. A. B.—Obviously it would be premature to express an opinion before the prospectus is published. Argyll.—I find that in the case of joint-holders, if one dies, proof of death only is necessary, as the shares fall to the survivor. As to duty, "Hanson's Death Duties" puts a hypothetical case thus:—"A transfers £500 Consols into the joint names of himself and his wife, and dies in his wife's lifetime; estate duty is payable on his death on the value of the Consols." R. C. F. C.—I would not recommend the concern. J. R. O., Forest.—The undertaking is suffering from the commercial depression afflicting the country. The proposed exchange might turn out profitable, as a dividend payment on the machinery Preference shares has been foreshadowed, but I do not favour the furniture shares. Perplexed.—1. An interim dividend, including 5 per cent. per annum on the deferred, has just been declared. You evidently bought at the times the shares were very active, but I would hold for a possible recovery. 2. No special reason for the decline. Hang on. W. V.—Of their type they are worth holding. The Far Eastern War inflated the profits abnormally, but still the position of the concern is hopeful. Talana.—Try to find a buyer and face the loss. Apart from active competition there is the threatened electric scheme, and the shares appear hopeless. Gee Gee.—Hold for a while in the hope of a recovery. The dividend outlook is not very encouraging. No new issue is likely. As a speculative investment the preference seem fairly attractive at the moment. Countryman.—Ultimately the company may be successful, but at present it is only in the experimental stage. 2. Price about 14s. 3. £1 shares fully paid. 4. Purely speculative. Neophyte.—You might hold until the concern reaches the productive stage. 2. They are a speculation, but would probably respond to a rally in South Africans. Talab.—It is not, properly speaking, a bank, but a concern registered under the Moneylenders Act by one Carpenter. Lieutenant R. N., and other correspondents.—Thanks for the bucket-shop circulars. R. B.—I note what you say, but it does not affect my remarks concerning the touting firms. Neglected.—Go to a local bank, which would doubtless collect them for a small charge. Patchwork.—Read my article last week on premium bonds. The Government securities you mention should be kept, and also the printing company's shares. I have no special information as to the Brixton concern. G. H.—Thanks for the paper.

MISCELLANEOUS MARKET DULL—PROSPECTS OF HUDSON'S BAYS—PEKINS AND THE SHANSI GENTRY—LIPTON'S IMPROVEMENT—BRITISH ELECTRIC TRACTION.

The Miscellaneous Market has exhibited no signs of a general change for the better during the past week, though here and there a bright spot has been temporarily visible amid the prevailing gloom. That speculative favourite, Anglo "A," remained fairly steady at about 20, and the rest of the telegraph quotations are unaltered. In Hudson's Bays there have been such fluctuations at a drop of 5 points one day, a recovery of 3 points next day, and so on, with the result at the end of the week at 92-93 there was a net gain of ½ a point on the making-up price of the previous Tuesday. The final dividend declaration for the year is due almost immediately, and in spite of the relapse on Monday, it will not be surprising if the shares are soon up to about 100 again, though only the most sanguine speculator can expect to see them go much above that figure for a long time to come. Pekin Syndicates are lower. The settlement of the difficulties in regard to the development of the Shansi Concessions seems to be as far off as ever; and in this connection it is instructive to learn that in the opinion of a newspaper correspondent in the province "a more hopeless lot than the body of men who go by the name of the Shansi gentry it would be impossible to find." He adds that if the settlement is left to them the syndicate will have to wait until the millennium; and it has still to be seen whether the hostility of these "Shansi gentry" can be overcome by means of the pressure which the British Minister is said to be bringing to bear on the Chinese Government. Lipton's have been in some demand on a report showing an improvement in the position and prospects of the company. The dividend for the year is only 6½ per cent., as compared with 7 per cent. for each of the three preceding years. There has, however, been an increase of £6,658 in the total profits for the twelve months, and the directors state that the volume of business has been increasing since the making up of the accounts in the middle of March. It would have been quite possible to maintain the 7 per cent. dividend, but instead of dividing profits up to the hilt, the directors have preferred to keep a larger balance in hand, the carry-forward being £22,488 as compared with £11,435, and this policy will be generally approved. Among textiles, Coats's have been firmer, the preferred shares particularly being in request. At the meeting of the Fine Cotton Spinners' Association it was stated that there was no sign of any falling off in their prosperity, the first two months of the current year having been equal to the best two months of the past year, when a record net profit of nearly £590,000 was made. The Bleachers' Association has experienced a small falling-off in its earnings for the past year, but the ordinary dividend is maintained at 4 per cent., and

(Continued on page 1405.)

· TRUTH ·

TRAVEL SUPPLEMENT.

No. 1,588. WEDNESDAY, JUNE 5, 1907.

THE BRITISH ISLES FOR BRITISH TOURISTS.

POSSIBILITIES AND ATTRACTIONS OF HOME TRAVEL.

THE British Isles are becoming every year more and more the resort of foreign travellers. From the United States alone the annual influx is prodigious, and the proportions thereof in the present season are, it is reported, likely to be greater than ever. The cry has even been raised that the hotels of London, big and numerous as they are already, are not yet big or numerous enough to accommodate all who would fain have lodgment in them when the "rush" is on. It is true that many of these trans-Atlantic trippers, representing the wealthier classes of American citizens, are birds of passage who come here, not only to see England, but to "do" Europe as well. There are, however, thousands of others, belonging to the great American middle-class, who cross expressly to visit the United Kingdom, either not going to the Continent at all, or else contenting themselves with a day or two in Paris, regarding that city somewhat in the light of a side-show. From their point of view, at least, the British Isles are the great attraction of the trip, and there are probably few of them who, on bidding "good-bye" to the friends they have made on this side, fail to say, "Well, we're just charmed with your country"—with a distinct emphasis on the word "charmed."

Then from Continental Europe we also have an increasing number of visitors year by year. French people, Germans, Dutch, and Belgians, especially, with representatives of other nationalities in fair proportion, come here, not merely to view the sights of London, but to see the natural beauties, and become personally acquainted with the many historical associations of our land. Nor should the continuous stream of visitors from Canada and far-off Australasia be left out of account. It is true that our colonial cousins may be influenced by a desire to visit friends or relations at "home," so that one must not regard them exactly as ordinary tourists; yet many of them also think that the Old Country is well worth visiting even for her own sake.

This world-wide and still increasing appreciation of the attractions to be found in the British Isles ought to suggest a keener appreciation thereof among ourselves. The presence and the compliments of so many visitors from other lands need not necessarily fill us with national pride, and lead us to assume that England is "the hub of the universe." But the practical testimony of swarms of visitors from elsewhere may well convince the British people that the said Isles are worth seeing—even by those who live in them.

Looking at the matter from this point of view, the question may reasonably be asked: "Does the average Briton know the British Isles as well as he ought, and as well as he might?" The answer must undoubtedly be given in the negative. The tendency with most of us, when we get a holiday, is to go further—to some foreign country—and perhaps fare worse. Apart from considerations of scenery we offer the excuse that by going abroad we have the benefit of "seeing other countries." Yet may not even that advantage be obtained in the British Isles?

Take, by way of illustration, the facilities offered by the lines of even a single railway company—the London and North-Western. Dining in London in the evening, one can join a Scotch express at Euston, and breakfast next morning in Scotland—a country whose traditions and characteristics are quite as full of interest, and quite as much deserving of study, as those of France, of Germany, or of Switzerland. As for natural beauty, Scotland presents attractions in the way of mountains, forests, lochs, passes, and wild grandeur which, as regards their own peculiar charm, could not be surpassed by any of the Continental countries, though the scenery of the latter—as in Norway, for example—may be on a larger, and hence on a grander, scale. But the special fact here to be borne in mind is that, from the point of view of the English tourist, and leaving all political considerations aside, Scotland does, to all intents and purposes, rank as "another country."

Suppose, again, that, instead of joining the Scotch express at Euston, the Englishman in question should take his seat in the express for Holyhead, cross over to Dublin, and make a tour through Ireland. There, again, he finds a land having traditions, customs, characteristics, and scenery all differing essentially from those both of England and Scotland, and offering to the tourist just as much scope for study, and just as many sources of interest, as a country in Continental Europe might.

Or, alternatively, let the traveller from Euston, instead of going to Scotland or Ireland, resolve to explore Wales. Still looking at the position from the point of view of the tourist, the same conditions apply there, and especially so when one gets away from the towns into the inner recesses of "wild Wales."

Should, again, the English tourist, indulging in home travel by way of a change to foreign travel, not feel happy unless he is struggling with a language he does not quite understand, he can try what he can do with Gaelic in Scotland, Irish in Ireland, and Welsh in Wales.

So we find that the chief advantage claimed for foreign travel, that of "seeing other countries," has already been afforded to us through one of our own railway systems, without any actual need arising to go beyond the limits of the United Kingdom; while such of the natural attractions and scenes of historic interest in England itself as can be reached by the same line of railway are so great and so manifold that, when one tries to realise their almost infinite variety, there is still less occasion for the Englishman either to wonder at the aforesaid steady influx of foreign visitors, or to assume that he must himself go to the Continent when he seeks to have an ideal holiday. If the charms and attractions to be found within the limits of our own islands were only on the Continent, instead of being at our own doors, there is little doubt that many an Englishman would visit them much more readily than he does, and be full of enthusiasm over what now, it may be, he more or less neglects.

Taking, then, the case not only of our foreign visitors, but also of home tourists, actual or prospective, it may be of advantage to remind them how wide are the possibilities offered by the line which holds the premier position among British railways—that of the London and North-Western Company—for visiting what are really the greatest of all among the many attractions and points of interest represented by that collection of different lands, diversified scenes, and varied peoples comprised in what are known as "the British Isles."

Scotland.

It is one of the commonplaces of transport literature that "steam has annihilated distance." But this phase of our advancement will be realised more clearly if one remembers that, from the point of view of the traveller, Scotland is nearer, say, to London to-day than Birmingham was in the pre-railway period, as shown by the fact that Edinburgh and Glasgow can now be reached, viâ the West Coast route, in as short a time as eight hours. The early-Victorian British citizen would have thought such a thing impossible. To-day it is regarded as a matter of course.

Then, while steam has been accomplishing these wonders, competition and combination among the railway companies have helped to bring about a succession of improvements in services, rolling stock, and general facilities, so that long journeys can now be accomplished, not only in a minimum of time, but with an amount of comfort which renders travelling on the main lines of the British railway companies to-day equal to that of any railways in the world.

The introduction of breakfast, luncheon, tea, and dining cars has alone sufficed to produce a revolution in railway travel. Leaving Euston in the morning, one can go in a through corridor carriage to Edinburgh or Glasgow, arriving in the early evening, or to Aberdeen, arriving there a little later, having had all one's meals, well served and at a reasonable cost, in the train en route. Travelling at night, one can go in a through sleeping saloon from Euston as far as Aberdeen, Inverness, or Oban, the charge made for such accommodation being only 7s. 6d. per berth in addition to the ordinary first-class fare. The sleeping-cars running on the West Coast route have been pronounced by experienced travellers the finest in Europe, while not only are they more comfortable than the ordinary sleeping cars on the American lines, but they may well be compared with the "special" compartment cars of those lines, for which extremely high supplementary fares are charged.

On many of the corresponding express trains on the Continent of Europe third-class passengers would not be carried at all; but here there is no such restriction. Not only are third-class passengers carried on these express trains, but luncheon and dining cars are provided for them as well as for first-class passengers; and, although third-class sleepers are impracticable, from a financial standpoint, the third-class passengers by night trains can borrow from the Company pillows and rugs at the nominal charge of sixpence each, and make a night journey more comfortably than is the case with the equivalent classes of travellers ("tourists," and other non-patrons of Pullman cars) on the railroads of the United States.

On this West Coast route, the London and North-Western Railway works in combination with the Caledonian Railway, the premier line in Scotland. The Caledonian engines are famous all the world over, and the West Coast corridor trains are unrivalled for their elegance and general comfort.

Everything possible having thus been done to deprive the journey to Scotland of any drawbacks with which it might seem to be invested on account of distance, the next question to consider is, What are the special attractions of Scotland which may be offered as a further inducement to tourists to make the said journey?

To answer that question aright would need a volume instead of a short article. Here, only a few leading features can be briefly indicated.

Beginning with Edinburgh, Scotland's capital, we have one of the most beautiful cities in the whole of Europe. In Edinburgh nature and art have combined to present charms which are unique in their way. Princes-street, for example, is incomparable. The traveller will recall the Rue de Rivoli in Paris, Unter den Linden in Berlin, Fifth Avenue in New York, Sackville-street in Dublin, or other famous thoroughfares in the world's great cities, but will be forced to admit that, for picturesqueness and actual beauty, Princes-street, Edinburgh, still takes the lead. What sources of delight, again, the traveller will find in the Castle, that ancient seat of Scottish kings, perched so boldly on its rocky summit; in Holyrood Palace, with its memories of Mary Queen of Scots; in the views from Calton Hill and Arthur's Seat; in the quaint streets, narrow wynds, and lofty houses of the Old Town; and in the many literary traditions which have deservedly made Edinburgh famous as "the Modern Athens!"

Glasgow may be essentially a modern city, busy with commercial and industrial interests, but she represents also the starting point for as glorious and as varied a range of excursions as any city on the face of the earth can offer. The literary pilgrim would begin, no doubt, with Ayr and the Land of Burns. The lover of the picturesque might prefer to start with short trips to the islands in the estuary of the Clyde and beyond, or with the tour of Loch Lomond, Loch Katrine, and the Trossachs, finishing up with Stirling Castle—a round which alone is worth a visit to Scotland. Then would follow a choice of longer tours. On the east the strong claims of Perth, Dundee, Aberdeen, and the wild and romantic country situate between Aberdeen and Blair Athol would claim consideration. Alternatively, the tourist might go to Oban, explore from there the natural wonders of Staffa, and indulge in the historical associations of Iona (the island where St. Columba landed from Ireland in 563, when he began his missionary work in Scotland), and proceed from Oban by the Caledonian Canal (calling at Ballachulish and the Pass of Glencoe en route) to Inverness—a starting point for another fresh series of tours. The trip thence to the Isle of Skye and Stornoway can be most strongly recommended; or the visitor not pressed for time could go still further north, to Wick and Thurso, and so on, to the Orkney and Shetland Islands. Whichever of these two routes was taken, the tourist could see some of the grandest rock and coast scenery in Europe, bringing away with him mental pictures which, if the writer of these lines may judge from his own experience, would never fade from his memory.

So, altogether, there is much that has been missed by the English tourist who has hitherto neglected Scotland in order to visit the countries of Continental Europe; and, though these may have given him much pleasure, one cannot but think that, in regard alike to a complete change of scene, improvement in health in a thoroughly bracing climate, variety of natural scenery, and an absolute wealth of historical associations, opportunities for sport, and all else that constitutes real mental or physical enjoyment, Scotland might have afforded him an even higher degree of satisfaction.

Ireland.

During the last twenty years continuous efforts have been made to convince public opinion in England of the great claims of Ireland to the attention of tourists, and to promote an increased flow in that direction of the stream of holiday traffic which to-day crosses to foreign lands rather than to the Sister Isle. There are greater hopes for the present season, by reason of the additional attraction offered by the International Exhibition in Dublin, and it may be anticipated that the majority of those who go to Dublin will allow themselves sufficient time to make or increase an acquaintance with the interior of the country as well. But, although the flow of the said stream certainly is increasing, the possibilities of Ireland as one of the most attractive of resorts for tourists have still to be recognised by tourists in general to the extent they deserve.

First among those claims is the fact that Ireland, as a country, offers physical conditions and natural charms of a type and character not to be found elsewhere in Europe. The striking of the Gulf Stream on her south-west coasts gives her an equable climate which produces a most vigorous and varied vegetation; and this in turn—whether in the form of green pastures, prolific woods, rich foliage, or lovely flowers—invests with more or less beauty every spot where there is earth enough for verdure to grow. Incidentally, be it added, these same conditions render the South-West coast of "the Emerald Isle" an ideal winter resort for invalids and convalescents, who might find themselves even better off here than in the sometimes changeable, if not occasionally treacherous, climate of the Riviera.

Then there is a much greater element of variety about Irish scenery than is met with elsewhere in Europe. Within a comparatively small compass one gets wonderful contrasts in the way of gloomy mountains and glorious vales; of placid lakes, reflecting a background of verdure-covered hills, and seas whose waves strike against rock-bound coasts with all the fury the Atlantic can give them; of gentle streams and broad rivers; of rich pastures and dreary moorlands; of ideal bays and bold headlands; of yellow sands and great rocks; while all alike are invested with wondrous variations of colour under a sky of such clearness, and in an atmosphere of such purity, that, in the words of so accomplished an artist as Lady Butler, the counterpart thereof would have to be sought in the Nile Valley itself. Turner once declared that the sun seemed to set more beautifully in Ireland than anywhere else. But well may the sun do so, for Ireland is a country of Nature's show-places—a garden-island where she must have experimented on some of her best handiwork, leaving the results as lasting examples alike of the loveliest and the wildest of her creations.

The records one finds in Ireland, however, are not those of Nature alone. Ireland is, besides, a land of legends, of history, of song, of poetry—and, also, of the sternest of prose. Her landscapes are not merely picturesque, for concerning each and every one of them there is a story to be told. Her legends are as numerous as those of the Rhine itself. Her history, illustrated by the mournful ruins of castles, of abbeys, and of tombs of kings that were already ancient when William the Conqueror came to England, goes so far back that one can hardly say where fiction ends and truth begins. Her literature—and especially her poetry—presents claims which the world has long since recognised. As for the sternness of her prose, let the tourist draw a kindly veil over that, and content himself, rather, with showing all possible friendliness to a people who, whatever their own faults and shortcomings, and whatever the faults and shortcomings with which they have been treated, are famed for their hospitality, and will be found readily responsive to the kindly words and sympathetic bearing of visitors whose only object it will be to admire the beauties of their land, and to show, in such practical form as they may, a generous appreciation thereof.

As regards the journey to Ireland, there is ample choice of routes; but, when in doubt, the traveller cannot do better than adopt the middle course, and keep to "The Old Highway" between England and Ireland, crossing from Holyhead to Dublin, either direct to North Wall, or by the mail route, viâ Kingstown. In this way a choice is offered of morning and evening boats in each direction by each of these services—a total of eight per day. Here, again, as in the case of Scotland, the traveller has all the advantages of luncheon and dining cars by day and of sleeping cars to or from Holyhead at night.

The entire journey takes about nine hours, so that, leaving, say, in the morning, the traveller reaches his destination in the evening. The open sea passage between Holyhead and either Kingstown or North Wall takes about three hours. Should the traveller wish to postpone his crossing on account of the weather, he will find accommodation at the hotels provided by the London and North-Western Railway Company both at Dublin and at Holyhead. Special arrangements are made at Holyhead for the supply of refreshments during the night. At North Wall the Company have a line of railway of their own, establishing, by means of through carriages, direct connection with the lines of the leading railways in Ireland, most of which have their termini in Dublin.

Should the traveller be proceeding to Belfast and the North of Ireland, he can avail himself of the service from Holyhead to Greenore, which is situated on the world-famed Carlingford Lough. In this case he will be able to dine en route from Euston to Holyhead, will have about four hours on the boat, and at Greenore will find awaiting him a through train to Belfast with breakfast car attached. At Greenore the London and North-Western Company have a comfortable hotel, amid very charming surroundings. Visitors at the hotel (the terms at which are very reasonable) have the free use of the excellent eighteen-hole golf links immediately adjoining, of croquet and tennis lawns, and also of a private steamer for excursions to various points of interest on the Lough. Greenore will be found, also, a convenient starting point for excursions through the Mourne Mountain district.

For travellers to the North of Ireland who do not object to a somewhat longer sea journey, there is the route from Fleetwood direct to Belfast; while those who wish for the shortest sea route of all, or who want to go to Ireland from Scotland—whether after a tour through the latter country or otherwise—can make the excellent passage from Stranraer to Larne.

When one asks what are the attractions that should be seen in Ireland, one finds them East, South, West, and North. The average tourist, in fact, would hardly be able to see them all in a single visit. He had better divide the country into sections, take one or more of them at a time, and return to Ireland in following years for the others.

Let us assume that Dublin is the starting point, and that the visitor, having done justice to the International Exhibition (with its palaces, pavilions, and grounds), to Dublin Castle, the Bank of Ireland, the University, the City Hall, the Four Courts, the Cathedrals, the National Gallery, Phœnix Park, and the other sights of the city, is about to start off on the "grand tour" of Ireland. Keeping, first, to the East coast, he may (unless he realises at once the full extent of his programme) feel disposed to linger at the popular seaside resort of Bray, or (after a glimpse of Wicklow) in delightful Glendalough and the famous Vale of Avoca, one of the finest of the Irish valleys worth visiting. The ancient town of Arklow and the old seaport of Wexford follow, with Waterford as a starting point on the South coast for Cork and the West. Alternately, he would travel viâ Kildare, Thurles, Tipperary, and Mallow to Cork, stopping at various places en route, or visiting others on branch lines, as time allowed.

From Cork he would visit the Castle of Blarney, and then go by coach viâ Glengarriff to Kenmare, either continuing thence direct to Killarney by the Prince of Wales route, or reaching the lakes by the grand coach drive viâ Parknasilla and Waterville to Cahirciveen, where the train to Killarney will be reached—an extension which, taken in either direction, should in no case be missed. From Killarney the visitor making "the round" would travel to Limerick, go by the Shannon river and lakes to Athlone, and there take train for Galway and Clifden for the coach drive, viâ Leenane, through Connemara to Westport. After a side-trip to Achill Island he would continue through Sligo and Enniskillen to the Donegal Highlands, a wild district where, as also on the extreme northern points of Ireland, he would find much to interest him. Making his way to Londonderry, he would go from thence to Portrush, see the Giant's Causeway, visit Belfast (should he resist the temptation to cross over to Scotland from Larne), make a stay at Greenore, and so on through Drogheda back to Dublin.

This is the barest possible skeleton of what might be done, and to the visitor who made such a round it would be a revelation that Ireland contained so much that was either beautiful or interesting. The ordinary circular tours of the Irish railway companies are, of course, arranged on a much less comprehensive plan, but any one of them will be found worth the taking. It need hardly be said that Ireland affords abundance of opportunity to golfers and anglers to indulge in their favourite recreation.

Irish travel has been regarded with a certain amount of prejudice by English people on the ground that the railways and the hotels both leave too much to be desired. Such prejudice is mainly the survival of conditions which existed ten or twenty years ago. On the main lines of railway the tourist finds trains—with corridor, luncheon, and dining cars—equal in comfort to those on English lines, while at the principal points of tourist resort the Irish railway companies have themselves provided hotels which afford all the comfort, and even the elegance, of the best hotels in England or on the Continent. If, of course, the tourist goes to out-of-the-way places, where visitors are rarely seen, he may well find the train connections defective, and the hotel accommodation primitive, just as he would under like conditions in his own country.

North and Central Wales.

Nor does the excuse of the Englishman who goes abroad "to see other countries" hold good if he should have neglected the claims presented by the Principality of Wales.

Still leaving political considerations aside, Wales may, assuredly, also count, from the standpoint of the English tourist, as "another country." The Welsh had an origin essentially different from that of the Anglo-Saxons in England, and, though intermarriage has done much to break down the distinctions, the separate characteristics of the two types are still abundantly manifest. The Welsh, again, have a language of their own which ranks as the most vigorous of the Celtic tongues that survive. It is spoken generally—in many places exclusively—throughout Wales and Monmouthshire, and, also, is still favoured, as their native language, by many thousands of Welsh people living in England or the United States. It represents a language of great interest to philologists, and it has a valuable literature, ancient and modern, of its own, some of the Welsh poets, such as Dafydd ap Gwilyn (1300-1368), the "Poet of Nature," who flourished in "the Golden Age" of Welsh literature, having had no equal in literary England. Welsh, again, is taught in the University Colleges of Wales; many newspapers, magazines, reviews, and periodicals are published in Welsh; while the institution known as the Eisteddfod, at which Welsh bards and musicians meet in friendly rivalry, directly aims at the preservation and cultivation of the national poetry and music, together with the national customs and traditions, such gatherings being in themselves a survival of very early times.

In regard, further, to natural attractions, the claims especially of North Wales to the favour of holiday-makers in general, and of lovers of the picturesque in particular, must be admitted by all who have even the most casual acquaintance with them.

Of deservedly popular seaside resorts, North Wales certainly has a goodly number, and there is ample choice in the series stretching from Rhyl to Llandudno (the "Queen of Welsh Watering-places") and Bangor on the North coast, in the selection offered by the Isle of Anglesey, and in those on the West coast between Carnarvon and Aberystwyth. But the special charm of most of these places lies in the fact that they are not only seaside resorts which, as such, rank among the best in the United Kingdom, but possess the additional advantage of backgrounds of woods, hills, mountains and valleys, among which delightful walks or coach drives can readily be obtained, so that visitors to the coast have abundant opportunities for a change from sand and sea, piers and pierrots. Each place, in fact, is a starting-point for excursions into an interior possessing unsurpassed attractions.

As for the varied charms of this said interior (differing essentially from the charms of Scotland and of Ireland, as already told), how can they be adequately described, or even catalogued, in the space here available? One might easily spend a month or six weeks among them—without lingering unduly at any one spot—and then not see them all. What with mountains, passes, lakes, waterfalls, ancient castles, and scenery of exceeding beauty in so many different places, a choice is offered which becomes positively embarrassing to those whose time is limited, yet who would fain see all they can in that time. There is, for instance, Bettws-y-Coed, nestling in its basin of luxuriantly wooded hills, and presenting so endless a series of pictures that the little village may well be one of the most favoured resorts of artists. There is the wild and rugged grandeur of the famous Pass of Llanberis. There is the trip, now to be made by mountain railway from Llanberis, to the summit of Snowdon. There is the exquisite centre for natural beauties represented by Beddgelert—and those who have not been there to see the Pass of Aberglaslyn have missed one of the finest sights to be found within the limits of the British Isles. There is the journey that should, positively without fail, be made by the "toy railway" from Blaenau-Festiniog to Portmadoc or vice versa. There are the castles of Flint, Denbigh, Ruthin, Beaumaris, Conway, Carnarvon, and Dolwyddelan to be seen. There are, in addition to Snowdon, such mountains as Carnedd Llewelyn, Glyder Fawr, Moel Siabod, and Moel Fammau that will repay climbing by the active. Then, still in North Wales, one should see Harlech Castle, make a stay at Barmouth, and also at Aberystwyth—each a centre for many delightful walks and excursions—while the view from the top of Cader Idris may be strongly commended to those who are equal to what is really a very easy ascent.

These are merely a few of the chief points of interest offered by a tour in North Wales, reached so easily by the train services of the London and North-Western Railway Company, who now issue special "holiday season tickets," available for a week or a fortnight, and covering the district extending from Rhyl and Ruthin on the East to Holyhead on the West, and from Llandudno on the North to Blaenau-Festiniog on the South; while the abundant coach drives, run in connection with the train services, offer a means of getting from one point to another with a minimum of trouble and a maximum of enjoyment. In fact, when one considers how great and how varied are the charms to be found in this part of the Principality, and with what ease, comfort, and economy they can be visited, there is all the greater reason for surprise when the strong claims of North Wales are overlooked by English tourists who do not hesitate to make long, tedious, and more costly journeys to the Continent in that search for the picturesque of which such ample stores are available so much nearer to their own home.

In Central Wales will be found "The Land of the Welsh Spas"—Llandrindod, Builth, Llangammarch, and Llanwyrtyd. Long renowned among residents in Wales for the virtue of their waters, these spas are now becoming much better known to English people, and the London and North-Western Railway Company have recently sought to provide increased facilities for reaching them, so that to-day they are as easy of access as any other point on the company's system. Through corridor carriages from London, Birmingham, Liverpool, and Manchester are run on the principal trains, and visitors from London, for instance, leaving Euston at 10.30 a.m., and taking luncheon in the car en route, can arrive at their destination about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The contrast—especially for those not in good health—between a journey such as this and the drawbacks necessarily attendant on the journey to a Continental spa, is self-evident, and the question naturally arises: Why go to the Continent if as much benefit can be obtained in Central Wales?

For matters of detail respecting the character of the mineral springs, and the complaints for which their waters are beneficial, the reader may be referred to a handbook issued by the London and North-Western Railway Company, entitled "Four Welsh Spas." The medical testimony there also given should lead to a conviction that the waters must be of altogether exceptional merit. But the virtues of the waters are greatly supplemented—from a health point of view—by the nature of the surroundings. The surface of the country constituting Central Wales ranges in height from sea-level to nearly 2,000 ft., and the Four Spas themselves are at elevations of 600 or 700 ft., with backgrounds of either hills or mountains. They have a mild and equable climate; winter frosts are almost unknown; the summer heat is tempered by mountain breezes; while the air is essentially bracing, and exercises as beneficial an effect on the nerves as the waters themselves do on the system. Then the whole country round about is most picturesque. It affords an abundance of enjoyable walks, rides and drives, to which may be added excellent golf, fishing, and shooting, the open-air life thus led naturally forming an important part of the "cure."

The Mid-Wales Spas may be further recommended to those who do not need to "take the waters," but, nevertheless, can appreciate a quiet and essentially restful holiday among pleasant scenes removed from the streams of ordinary—and, perhaps, somewhat disturbing—tourist traffic. For persons who are merely "run down" after the fatigues either of a London season or of a too active business life, and wish to recuperate their energies rather than to see sights and climb mountains, these Spas will fully meet their requirements. As for accommodation, this is not only abundant, but ranges from first-class hotels, with pump rooms, bath and douche rooms, lounges, grounds, and every luxury, to "private hotels" and homely "apartments," visitors of moderate means being, in fact, catered for as successfully as the well-to-do.

The Isle of Man.

Might not the Isle of Man also be added to the list of those "other countries" which the English tourist may see without going beyond the limits of the United Kingdom? English is, of course, paramount on the island; but Manx is the native, and still living, language, in which (as well as in English) the Acts passed by the independent Legislature of the Isle of Man, known as the Court of Tynwald, must be promulgated on Tynwald Hill before they become law. The Manx people themselves are mainly of Celtic origin, and, though they have no native literature beyond a few songs and carols, they have a recorded history going back to a series of Welsh Kings, followed by a Norwegian conquest, a line of Scandinavian kings, and a transfer to England in 1290. Then, for an island which is only 33¼ miles long and 12½ miles broad, the Isle of Man has a great wealth of antiquities. It has numerous so-called Druidical remains and Runic monuments, including about forty Runic crosses (the latter being especially numerous at Kirk Michael); Tynwald Hill itself has been well described as "a perfect relic of Scandinavian antiquity"; Castle Rushen, founded in 947, is an incomparably fine specimen of the architecture of that period; while other noteworthy and most picturesque ruins are represented by Rushen Abbey (1154), and Peel Castle (twelfth century). To all this may be added a wonderfully bracing air; a climate so equable that myrtles, fuchsias, and other exotics are common objects of the wayside all the year through; a succession of charming landscapes, with rocks, glens, and mountain heights; coach drives, steamboat trips, boating, bathing, theatres, etc.; and yet, also, a choice of places with peaceful surroundings for those who wish to get away from the crowd of holiday-makers flocking to this island in the height of the season. Such persons, however, would do better to visit the Isle of Man somewhat earlier in the year, when, too, its natural beauties will be seen at their best.

The ports from which the main part of the traffic reaches the Isle of Man are Liverpool and Fleetwood, comfortable turbine steamers proceeding thence to Douglas and vice versâ. Passengers leaving Euston at 10.30 a.m. can lunch in the train, and arrive at Liverpool in time for the afternoon boat to Douglas, where they are due soon after six o'clock, in time for dinner.

The Charms of England.

Thus far reference has been made to places within the limits of the United Kingdom which those desirous of seeing "other countries" might, from this particular point of view, well bring within such definition. But let us turn, also, to some of the charms and attractions of England herself, capable of being easily reached by the system of the London and North-Western Railway Company, and see whether they, also, do not deserve to be visited by holiday-makers and lovers of the picturesque, apt to overlook that which is near at hand for places—not necessarily superior—under foreign skies.

The ancient city of Chester ought, most assuredly, to be regarded as a stopping-place in connection with any tour to Ireland, or to North Wales. It should on no account be missed by foreigners visiting England, even if they should not make the further tours beyond. There are, in fact, few cities in Great Britain which recall more thoroughly the history of the English people, for here we have what was an important Roman encampment in the First Century of the Christian era, destined in later years to be occupied successively by the Welsh, the Saxons, and the Danes. Then there is, probably, no city in Great Britain which to-day presents a greater degree of quaintness, and a more interesting admixture of the mediæval and the modern. However pressed for time, no traveller who is in the neighbourhood of Chester should fail to spend a day there in making the circuit (about two miles) of the old city walls, with their towers and buildings, each of which has its historic associations; in inspecting Chester's unique feature, the "Rows" of shops in two galleries or arcades, the one above the other, in admiring the many fine specimens of old timber houses which make the streets of Chester so quaint and picturesque; in visiting the Cathedral, which occupies a site sacred to Christian churches since the Second Century; and in driving the three miles to the Duke of Westminster's palatial residence, Eaton Hall, tickets for admission to which can be readily obtained. To those who would see one of the most stately homes of the English aristocracy, this visit may be strongly recommended.

Shrewsbury, the county town of Shropshire, or Salop, is passed through by travellers on the London and North-Western Railway to Central Wales, whether from London or the North, and will be found well worth a visit. The site of an ancient British town, its present points of interest include the Castle, built in the time of William the Conqueror (a fine view of the Severn, here crossed by four bridges, is to be obtained from the modern Watch Tower); the Abbey Church (which formerly belonged to a monastery built by the founder of the Castle), where there are various interesting monuments; a Seventeenth Century Council House, with an attractive half-timbered gateway; a house in which Henry VII. is said to have spent the night before the battle of Bosworth in 1485; the house in which Darwin was born, and a number of quaint habitations that recall somewhat the appearance the town must have presented many generations ago.

To praise the English Lake District is like gilding refined gold. Whatever may be said of the lakes of Italy and of Switzerland, those of Westmorland and Cumberland will bear comparison with them, from the fact that they have a character and a beauty all their own. They even surpass their foreign rivals in the element of picturesqueness, though, admittedly, not in respect to size or absolute grandeur. In any case, they present a first claim on the admiration of English tourists, while no foreign traveller who wishes to see the best that England can offer in the way of natural attractions should fail to spend at least a few days in a district whose beauties have been so well sung by Wordsworth and others of the "Lake School" of poets. A few days, indeed, will be found far too short a time in which to see all there is to see. The glories of Windermere, Ullswater, Coniston, Grasmere, Derwentwater, Rydal Water, and of the other lakes and meres are worth more than a passing glance from the top of a coach, however great the convenience such vehicle may afford in moving from point to point; and he will not have seen the Lake District aright who has not lingered among its charms, and got off, from time to time, the beaten track of the high roads. It is true that none of the lakes exceed 10½ miles in length, and that their breadth is not often more than a mile. But this very compactness adds to their gem-like charm and to the brilliancy, if not even, at times, to the wildness of their setting. As for the mountains, none of these, in turn, are much more than 3,000 feet high; but the visitor who, on a clear day, has seen the view from the summit of Scafell Pike, Scafell, Helvellyn, or Skiddaw, will have had a panorama he will not readily forget. Nor will the practised climber fail to find among the mountains of the district difficult ascents well worthy of his powers. Then there are waterfalls such as Stockgill Force, the Rydal Falls, Dungeon Gill, and the Langdale Pikes which should be seen, while no visitor should miss the delightful village of Grasmere, with its quaint old church and its simple grave of William Wordsworth.

The facilities offered by the London and North-Western Railway Company for reaching the lakes could hardly be surpassed. The visitor from the South travels by the main line to Scotland as far as Carnforth, Oxenholme, or Penrith, according to destination (thus having all the advantages of smooth-running express trains, and luncheon or dining cars), and from those points the through carriage takes him on to Windermere, to Lake Side, or to Keswick, at each of which places he comes in touch with the splendidly organised coach and boat services operating in connection with the circular tours or otherwise.

The tourist pressed for time could not do better than proceed direct to Windermere, which is in the heart of the Lake District, and make his headquarters either there or at Bowness, immediately alongside the Lake of Windermere, or else go direct to Keswick by rail, where every facility exists for covering this interesting district in a comparatively short time.

The tourist who enters the Lake District by way of Ulverston and Lake Side skirts the shores of MORECAMBE BAY, and doubtless admires the broad stretch of sands and the wide range of views of land and water, hill and dale, cloud and sunset there obtainable. The bay is, in fact, a summer resort especially favoured by families or individuals desirous of indulging in sea-bathing, fishing, boating, and yachting, with only occasional incursions into the neighbouring lake-land. From this point of view the town of Morecambe offers every facility. It has, besides, an exceptionally long promenade, and, with a Winter Garden and various places of entertainment, it caters well for the visitors who bestow upon it a well-deserved patronage.

FURNESS ABBEY can easily be reached either from Morecambe or from Ulverston, and the morning or the afternoon spent in visiting one of the most extensive and most picturesquely situated ruins in England will be abundantly repaid. The abbey is a Cistercian foundation of the twelfth century. It was once extremely rich, and the Abbot virtually exercised the powers of a ruling prince, with almost despotic ecclesiastical authority in addition, over the country round about.

BLACKPOOL, situate on the same coast, is a sea-side resort which needs no recommendation to the people of Lancashire and Yorkshire, most of whom already know, by oft-repeated experience, the bodily invigoration afforded by its abundant ozone-laden breezes. But its attractions and advantages are, perhaps, not sufficiently appreciated by Londoners, who would often secure both a greater change and a more thorough bracing-up by spending their holiday in the North—and especially at Blackpool—than by going to the South Coast. Much has been done of late years to add to the popularity of the place by affording an abundance of opportunities for pleasure and enjoyment. In addition to the natural advantages of extensive sands and splendid sea air, Blackpool now has a fine esplanade, three piers, palatial buildings with ball-room, menagerie, aquarium, etc.; an Eiffel Tower, a gigantic wheel, three theatres, and electric tramways connecting Blackpool with St. Anne's and Lytham. At no sea-side resort in the United Kingdom, in fact, can a visitor get more pleasure for, say, sixpence than at Blackpool.

SOUTHPORT, on the same coast, aims more at securing the patronage of a select type of visitors, and at retaining the reputation of being essentially a watering-place of the first-class. It has undergone great improvements of late years, the construction, especially, of the Marine Park and Lake having fully atoned for the former drawbacks of the immense stretches of sand left dry by the sea at low tide. Lord-street, the leading thoroughfare, is one of the most charming of boulevards. Other features include the Botanic Gardens, a Winter Garden, a fine esplanade, an Opera House, an Art Gallery, and a pier, provided with a railway.

"All good Americans, when they die," Oliver Wendell Holmes once wrote, "go to Paris." But, of the good Americans who come to England, the vast majority aim at seeing STRATFORD-ON-AVON before they die. A visit there constitutes an important item in their programme of life. Granted the aspiration to "do" either Europe in general or else merely our own small islands, they feel that, without Stratford-on-Avon, something would be lacking from their tour. So of the 30,000 pilgrims who pay for admission to Shakespeare's birthplace every year, one-fourth are Americans; and it is a matter for satisfaction that, owing to the watchful care of the custodians, this one-fourth has not yet taken the said birthplace back with them to America, in sections, by way of mementoes. Happily the house, with its birth-room and well-stocked Shakespeare Museum, is still there for people of all nationalities—English included—to see. Having seen it, the pilgrim will next proceed to the Church of the Holy Trinity, where the tomb of Shakespeare and so many other relics of the poet, of his family, and of his time are to be found; he should see, also, the Shakespeare Memorial Building, the Memorial Fountain and Clock Tower (the gift of an American citizen, George W. Childs, of Philadelphia), the ancient Harvard House, formerly the home of Katharine Rogers, afterwards Harvard, whose son founded Harvard University; New Place, where Shakespeare lived in his later and more prosperous days, and where he died; the Guild Hall, in the upper part of which the Grammar School attended by Shakespeare is still held; Anne Hathaway's Cottage; and then, should time permit, explore not only Stratford-on-Avon, but the villages round about, in order to gain such suggestions as they will afford (for time has dealt most gently with them) of the character of English rural life even so far back as Shakespeare's day.

From Euston to Stratford-on-Avon is a very easy journey. Every Wednesday and Saturday during the summer the London and North-Western Company run a special trip by train and coach through "Shakespeare's country." Leaving Euston at 9.20 a.m., visitors arrive at Kenilworth at 11.18, drive by coach to Kenilworth Castle, Guy's Cliffe, Warwick Castle, and Stratford-on-Avon, and return from Warwick, the inclusive charge for third-class rail and coach drive being only 13s.

Those who can devote only a single day to the district could not do better than take this trip, which is, assuredly, one of the most interesting that could well be made from London. Others who are not pressed for time would do better to take a week-end ticket from Euston to Stratford-on-Avon, and avail themselves of the privilege of returning via Kenilworth, Warwick, or Leamington, all three of which places are well deserving of more than a hurried visit.

KENILWORTH CASTLE, supposed to have been built in the Twelfth Century, is mostly known on account of its association with Queen Elizabeth, the Earl of Leicester, and Amy Robsart, as told in Sir Walter Scott's novel "Kenilworth." Destroyed by the followers of Cromwell, it still remains one of the finest and most extensive of baronial ruins to be found either in this or in any other country, while it certainly outrivals in historic interest for the Anglo-Saxon race any of the ruins that crown the heights even of Rhineland itself.

WARWICK CASTLE, described by Sir Walter Scott as "that fairest monument of ancient and chivalrous splendour which yet remains uninjured by time," occupies the site of an older castle destroyed by the Danes, and contains a great wealth of antiquities, treasures, paintings, etc., while the noble buildings, including chapel, armoury, great hall, and magnificent drawing-rooms, are replete with interest alike for the scholar, the antiquary, and the tourist who does not claim to be either. Warwick itself is an old-world city with crooked streets and quaint houses that seem to take one back at once to the mediæval times when the castle was in the full period of its glory.

A mile and a half from Warwick is LEAMINGTON, one of the principal Spas in England, and a town which, in addition to springs of far-famed healing virtues, provides its visitors with pleasant gardens, delightful avenues, and walks and drives innumerable. For these reasons, and for the facilities offered by the rail accommodation, Leamington (reached in 112 minutes from Euston) is an excellent centre from which to visit Warwick, Kenilworth, Stratford-on-Avon, and the other towns or localities in the district that deserve to be seen.

For passengers from Manchester and the North, the London and North-Western route offers the best facilities for reaching Buxton, which ranks as one of the principal inland watering-places in England, while from Euston and the South a very excellent service is in operation. As a health resort Buxton has a great reputation, due principally to its baths—which were famous even in Roman days—but greatly increased by the pleasing nature of the town, the purity of the air, the provision made for the enjoyment of visitors, and the abundance of pleasant excursions afforded by an exceptionally beautiful district. Chief among these excursions is the one to Dovedale, easily reached from the London and North-Western Railway Company's station at Alsop-en-le-Dale. Those who have not visited Dovedale, beloved of Izaak Walton, have yet to see one of the choicest bits of typical English scenery. Though the dale is scarcely three miles in length, every turn in it offers a fresh picture for the admiration of the visitor, and on a fine day in summer no more delightful spot could well be desired.

For those unable to make up their minds as to where they should go, and who wish to have some general idea of what places are like, a good plan will be to send for the L. and N. W. series of coloured postcards (obtainable at any L. and N. W. station or town office), showing the principal points of interest in Scotland and Ireland in addition to the well-known resorts on their lines in England and Wales. Of these cards (representing 288 different varieties, and, in addition to giving views of scenery, illustrating every phase of the company's history and working past and present), no fewer than 6,100,000 have been sold.

The Moral of the Story.

The Notes already given do not in any way exhaust the list of attractive and historical places to be reached from the system of the London and North-Western Railway; but they may suffice just to indicate how much—apart from London itself—there is for the foreigners who visit us in such large numbers to see, and how much, also, there is which Englishmen themselves may find in the limits of the British Isles, without going abroad in search of either the picturesque or the historic. This was the main idea with which the writing of these Notes was started, and it is for the reader to say, in the first instance, whether or not the claims advanced have been established.

If so, then it may be hoped the result will be to increase the proportions of the stream of traffic to such places as those that have here been mentioned. It should, surely, be a part of the higher education of all British citizens to form the best possible acquaintance they can with the land in which they live. Yet, just as in the elementary education of the young, it is a common practice for the history and the geography of other countries to be taught, while the history and the geography of the British Isles are neglected, so the British citizen of maturer years often seems to think it incumbent on himself to spend his time and money on foreign rather than on home travel.

No one could wish that the British citizen should adopt the "insular" habits attributed to him in days gone by. But the amount of actual knowledge acquired of a foreign country—especially in regard to all-important economic and political considerations—in the flying visit paid thereto by the average British tourist, who may have only a very slight acquaintance with the language of such country (or none at all), is necessarily slight, and of very little value from an international standpoint. The question may well be asked, Would not the increased knowledge which the same individual might have gained, in the same time, of Scotland, of Ireland, of Wales, or of England itself, be of greater practical advantage, even regarding the matter as a purely utilitarian one?

It is doubtful, however, if the average British tourist is really influenced, in planning his holidays, by a burning desire to acquire knowledge at all. Theoretically he may be; practically he is not. Theoretically he goes abroad (as some persons think) to promote an entente cordiale with some foreign country or other; practically he goes there solely for his own pleasure. Thus we come to the further question: Leaving aside the claims and possibilities of increased knowledge, would not tours through the home countries be likely to afford as much actual pleasure to the average British tourist as visits to foreign countries? If he should really have seen all that is worth seeing in the British Isles, let him by all means go to "fresh woods and pastures new" in other lands. But, failing this condition, it might well be suggested that the woods and pastures, and the other attractions besides, of the lands at home would afford him just as much enjoyment as the others, and might, therefore, at least be seen first.

From a health point of view, also (and, surely, health is close akin to the pleasure of living?), home travel has superior advantages over a good deal of the foreign travel so often indulged in under present-day conditions. The fatigues of long Continental journeys (which a second-class passenger often makes under far less comfortable conditions than those of third-class travel by main-line expresses at home), the "rush" of sight-seeing, and the craze for "doing" as many countries as possible in a given number of days or weeks, too often combine to leave the tripper worse, physically, rather than better for the tour he has taken, and there comes over him a feeling that a second holiday—a "quiet" one this time—would be not unacceptable, so that he may recover from the effects of the first. Medical men could doubtless give many examples of ill-advised holidays spent at home. But they would be able to tell of still more cases of breakdown from "rush" tours through Continental countries; and it is obvious, from the very nature of the geographical conditions involved, that the risks must be greater in the latter case than they are in the former.

So these Notes, as the reader must have seen, resolve themselves into "A Plea for Home Travel"; and the greater reason may be suggested for this plea, not only because there is such ample justification for pressing the claims of home scenery and home attractions, but also because the craze for foreign travel may be, to a certain extent, prejudicial to the interests, not alone of the individual, but of our own country, or, rather, of our own countries. One cannot, of course, push this argument too far, as it might, naturally, be suggested that, if the Americans and other foreigners who themselves visit the British Isles remained in their own lands, we should lose the money they spend among us here. Nevertheless, we still come back to the original proposition: that, inasmuch as foreigners do come here so freely to see the attractions of our islands, therefore one may fairly assume (1) that those attractions are worth seeing by the islanders themselves; (2) that British holiday-makers should, at least, see them before they go abroad; and (3) that they will benefit their own country more by spending their money here—without any real sacrifice either of pleasure or of personal benefit—than if they take it across the seas to add to the prosperity of other lands.

England's Premier Railway Company.

Inasmuch as the facilities for travel offered by the London and North-Western Railway Company have here been especially referred to, it may be of interest to supplement the Notes already given by a few facts concerning that Company itself.

The London and North-Western Railway Company was originally formed by a combination of the London and Birmingham, the Grand Junction, and the Manchester and Birmingham Railway Companies, amalgamated under an Act of Parliament which received the Royal assent July 16, 1846. The total capital of those three companies at that date was £17,242,000. The present authorised capital of the London and North-Western Railway Company is £130,389,000, while the Company now represents a large number of companies (including the original Liverpool and Manchester Railway) which it has absorbed, leased, or agreed to work.

Of goods and minerals the Company carries over 51,000,000 tons in a year. The former are naturally of a most varied description, ranging from very small and extremely fragile parcels up to such consignments as (to mention a few which have been carried on the system) a girder 90 ft. long; 40 tons of silkworms' eggs, en route from Japan to Italy, carried from Liverpool to Boulogne for despatch thence by special steamer; and a 75 ft. launch, conveyed by special train from Euston to Lake Side Station, Windermere, and back, as the result of a wager, the owner travelling in the saloon.

Few persons, perhaps, would imagine that pigeon flying is carried on in England to such an extent that frequent special trains are run on the London and North-Western Railway to convey pigeons to the point at which they are to be liberated. On one occasion a large elephant, "Jingo," was taken by the London and North-Western Railway from London to Liverpool, en route for America. The animal was conveyed in a case which it had been induced to enter at the Zoological Gardens, case and elephant, weighing about 8 tons altogether, being placed on a trolley and taken to Camden Goods Station, there being lifted by a 20-ton crane on to a boiler trolley, on which the elephant travelled by special train to Liverpool. Special trains have also been run with 60 to 80-ton guns from the North to Woolwich; and with a ship's mast 100 ft. long (loaded on thirteen bolster wagons) from Glasgow to Southampton. Another consignment was a boa constrictor, which got loose from its case, causing the guard to take refuge on the footboard, and remain there until the train stopped.

As many as 6,250,000 separate consignments have been handled at the company's London goods stations in a year. While there are from time to time large or heavy consignments of the type referred to above, there is an increasing tendency for general merchandise to be sent in small packages.

Apart from the punctuality of the L. and N.W. service, which stands so high with the travelling public, the closest attention is paid to the details which conduce to smooth running.

More money is spent by the L. and N.W. on the upkeep of its permanent-way than by any other company. The ballasting of the track with granite chips, which entirely prevents dust; the long rails employed, measuring 60 ft. and weighing 95 lb. per yard; the pads of felt placed between the chairs and the sleepers to take up any inequalities in the latter; the simultaneous boring of the screw-holes in the sleepers, thus ensuring perfect alignment—these and other matters of detail, although apparently trivial, have helped to justify the L. and N.W. Company's boast that their permanent-way is the best in the world. The result is that the excellent meals provided in the dining cars can be partaken of with the greatest ease, even should the train be travelling at the highest speed, and the business man emerges from the car at the end of the journey as fresh as when he started.

Over 86,000,000 passengers, exclusive of season ticket holders, are carried on the system every year, and the railway tickets used by them in that period represent a total weight of sixty tons. The tickets issued in ten years, if placed end to end, would make a belt round the world 1¼ in. in width. Of meals served annually in the company's dining-cars the number is 750,000, a figure which fully proves the public appreciation of this most acceptable addition to the comforts of travel by rail. As many as 3,000 meals have been served in one day in the specials run on the occasion of the Grand National.

The provision of corridor carriages on long-distance trains is another great improvement in railway travel in which the London and North-Western Company has played a leading part. So, also, is the organisation of through services with other companies, bringing residents in the North, for example, in direct touch with favourite seaside resorts on the South Coast, and reducing practically the whole of the railways in Great Britain, more or less, to a single system as far as the traveller is concerned, since he need not trouble as to how many different lines he travels over in the course of a long journey, provided he is in a through carriage and has obtained a through ticket.

In the matter of speed, the improvements have been revolutionary; and here, again, the London and North-Western Railway Company has taken a leading part in the accelerations brought about. Take, for example, the journey between London and Birmingham. What this meant in the pre-railway days is suggested by the following reproduction of an old advertisement:—

BIRMINGHAM TO LONDON STAGE-COACH.

In Two Days and a half; begins May the 24th, 1731.

SETS out from the Swan-Inn in Birmingham, every Monday at six a Clock in the Morning, through Warwick, Banbury and Alesbury, to the Red Lion Inn in Aldersgate-street, London, every Wednesday Morning: And returns from the said Red Lion Inn every Thursday Morning at five a Clock the same Way to the Swan-Inn in Birmingham every Saturday, at 21 Shillings each Passenger, and 18 Shillings from Warwick, who has liberty to carry 14 Pounds in Weight, and all above to pay One Penny a Pound.

In the early 'forties the journey was accomplished by rail in eight hours, and this was doubtless looked upon as an enormous advance. To-day the London and North-Western Railway Company, in addition to numerous other expresses, run four non-stop trains in each direction between Euston and Birmingham, the time occupied by them on the journey of 113 miles being only two hours. A business man can leave London at 11.50 a.m., arrive in Birmingham at 1.50 p.m., fulfil an engagement, leave Birmingham at 2.45 p.m., and be back in London at 4.45 p.m., or he can leave Birmingham at 8.40 a.m., breakfast in the train, arrive Euston 10.40 a.m., spend over eight hours in town, and be back in Birmingham again at 8.55 p.m., having dined en route.

In the case of Liverpool, the journey from London, which occupied five hours thirty years ago, can now be done in three hours thirty-five minutes, passengers leaving Euston, for example, at 5.55 p.m. being due at Lime-street at 9.30 p.m. The train—to which dining cars are attached—has a non-stop run to Edge Hill (where tickets are collected), a distance of 192¼ miles, and within a mile or so of Liverpool. Then there are American specials which run direct from Euston to the landing stage at Liverpool (Riverside Station), performing the journey in under four hours.

Take, again, the London and Manchester service. One can leave Euston at 10.30 a.m., arrive in Manchester at 2.5 p.m. (taking luncheon in the train), have two hours five minutes in which to keep a business appointment, leave Manchester at 4.10 p.m., dine in the train, and be back at Euston by 7.40 p.m.

Then, on No. 6 platform at Euston, will be found a writing-room, where the business man can either write his correspondence or dictate to competent typists, use the telephone, engage a private room for interviews, see books of reference, etc. Thus a Manchester man may have breakfast in the train, afterwards going through his papers, and, on arrival at Euston, avail himself of the facilities of the writing-room, with the result that, before he returns to Lancashire, later in the day, he can sign all the letters, reports, etc., he dictated in the morning. Thus he suffers no waste of time, and he can spend the whole day in calling upon his customers.

Another inducement to make Euston a "port of call" is now provided by means of the new tubes. A passenger bound for the City, on arrival at Euston, simply has to walk down the platform and enter a lift which will convey him to the City and South London Railway Company's Station, where there is a three-minute service to the City, London Bridge, and the districts south of the Thames. A passenger can travel from, say, Liverpool to Clapham Common with only one change of carriage, and under cover the whole way. Further facilities for getting across London, or for reaching the London suburbs, from Euston station, will be available shortly with the opening of still another tube railway—the Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead. A word should also be said about the comfortable tea-room and the station dining rooms. The well-known Euston Hotel is just opposite the station.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & MALCOMSON, Ltd., 4 & 5, Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., & Published weekly by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st., E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER. "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.
Entered as Second Class Matter at the New York N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

(Continued from page 1404.)

the shares have been unaffected. The motor section has been somewhat inert, the most notable features being the advances in Humbers and Rovers, whose cars won two events in the Isle of Man races. The winning of a race, however, is manifestly in itself a very poor reason for a rise in the shares of the company making the car. Argylls had a slight decline on the sad announcement of the death of the managing director, but there was a quick recovery. I still regard these shares, and Daimlers also, as a very hopeful purchase at the current prices. London General Omnibus stock has picked up a couple of points after the recent heavy fall, while Road Car shares have declined. British Electric Traction securities have lately been stronger than for some months past. The subsidiary undertakings have been doing well, and the outlook for the parent company is now more promising, though it is, of course, possible that no dividend on the ordinary shares may be paid for this year. Following this article my readers will find reports of the meetings of the Greenwich Inlaid Linoleum Company, the Metropolitan Amalgamated Railway Carriage and Wagon Company, and Callender's Cable and Construction Company.

VIGILANT.

COMPANY MEETINGS.

THE GREENWICH INLAID LINOLEUM (FREDERICK WALTON'S NEW PATENTS) COMPANY, LIMITED.

The 13th Ordinary General Meeting of shareholders in this Company was held at Winchester House, Old Broad-street, E.C., on Wednesday, May 29. The Chairman of the Company (Sir William Treloar, J.P.) presided.

The Secretary (Mr. D. S. Mackay) read the notice convening the meeting and also the auditors' report.

The Chairman (who received an ovation from the shareholders on rising) said:—Ladies and gentlemen, my task to-day is easy and pleasant. I have such delightful recollections of these annual meetings, and the generous and sympathetic manner in which I have always been received by the shareholders on all occasions, that it is an added pleasure to me to come before you to-day with the best result we have ever had—a net profit of £76,125 12s. 11d. (Applause.) I think your directors have reason to be proud, and you to be grateful and satisfied, with such a result, especially as it has been achieved when competition is keen, and prices have been ruthlessly cut down. During the year the prices of raw material have been steadily and continuously rising, and now at this moment Hessian is nearly 4d. per square yard, while a year or so back we paid for it only 2d. Linseed oil has gone up in the last six months 25 per cent., cork has risen 50 per cent., and so it is with all the ingredients we use in our manufacture. You may ask, wonderingly, how it is that under these circumstances we can show such a good result. It is by making good honest linoleum (hear, hear), and by getting a fair price for it. (Hear, hear.) Last year I told you that, although some firms who compete with us chose to offer their linoleum at a reduced price, we made up our minds not to do so, because it is impossible to sell a first-rate inlaid linoleum at a lower price than that at which we offer it, and the result of our year's trading has fully justified us in the course we adopted. We have maintained our prices, and have had more orders for linoleum than we could supply; and we are still in that happy position. All our energies are directed, and all our ingenuity employed, in trying to make our cloth more quickly, and we hope soon to be able to do this, so that our business may still go on increasing.

It is a source of much satisfaction to know that the Greenwich Inlaid Linoleum continues to grow in public estimation despite competition. Our home trade is steadily advancing, and our foreign and colonial trade is increasing rapidly. To-day the reputation of Greenwich Inlaid Linoleum is world wide, and it is a notable feature that during the last twelve months the Greenwich Inlaid Linoleum has been largely recommended by architects, and in nearly all the large public institutions it is stipulated that nothing but Greenwich Inlaid Linoleum is to be laid down. (Hear, hear.) The balance-sheet is the best evidence of our successful policy. After years of steady application, we have built up an excellent business, and by continuing the same prudent policy we hope to accumulate a tangible reserve fund invested outside of the business in some high-class securities which are readily negotiable. (Hear, hear.) The item of "upkeep and renewals of machinery" £7,709—may appear to some of you somewhat excessive, but it is only right that the shareholders should know that during the last year the inspection of the plant has been more rigorous than ever. In both our factories we have had new foundations placed under our boilers, and a considerable amount of money has been spent in overhauling and improving our engines and working gear, rendered necessary because of the very high speed at which we have been working, owing to the great and continuous demand for Greenwich Inlaid Linoleum.

Before fixing our debtors—that is, our book-debts—at £64,333 6s. 8d., good reserves have been created, and ample allowance made for bad and doubtful debts and other contingencies. You will notice that it is our policy to keep out of debt, and by buying keenly and paying promptly our trade creditors amount to the very small sum of £153 11s. 5d., whilst our cash on hand is over £50,000. (Hear, hear.) The stock of oil on hand and what is under contract will carry us well into 1908. So far as cork is concerned, we are in the same fortunate position. The jute market is somewhat uncertain, but I hardly think that the present extreme prices can be maintained. Notwithstanding these adverse circumstances, there is no reason whatever to fear diminishing profits during the present year.

As a last word let me just give you a résumé of the position by quoting the following figures:—At the start of the year we took into the accounts the balance from last year of £6,644 10s. 9d.; to this we add the profit for the year—£79,869 3s. 7d.—making a total of £85,513 14s. 4d., and, after deducting the periodical items of special expenditure—£9,388 1s. 5d.—we are left with a balance of £76,125 12s. 11d. With your permission, we now propose to dispose of this amount by the payments of the following, namely:—Interest on our Debentures, £5,400; interest on our Five and a Half per Cent. Cumulative Preferences, £5,500; on our Ordinary shares a dividend for the year of 15 per cent., which absorbs £36,000; the reserve fund we propose to increase by, £20,000; then we add the directors' additional remuneration, £1,500. Altogether this amounts to £68,400, and when deducted from the £76,125 12s. 11d. it leaves a balance of £7,725 12s. 11d., which we propose to carry into next year's accounts. I have much pleasure in moving the adoption of the report and balance-sheet, and after that has been seconded I shall be very pleased to do my best to answer any questions that may be put to me.

Mr. William Wright seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously without discussion.

The Chairman: It requires a resolution in order that we may pay a 15 per cent. dividend. I have great pleasure in moving that we may pay a dividend of 15 per cent. on the Ordinary shares.

Mr. William Wright seconded, and the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

The Chairman: I have very great pleasure in moving "that Mr. Horatio G. Regnart and Mr. William Wright be re-elected Directors of the Company." They have both of them been directors of this concern ever since it was formed into a Company, and they are both always ready to take their share in the work. As a matter of fact, I may say that both of them have been very good to me this year; they have taken more than their share of the work, because for obvious reasons I have not been able always to attend the meetings, and, therefore, I have very much to be thankful for, not only to them, but to the other directors as well. I have very great pleasure in moving that these two gentlemen be re-elected members of the Board.

Mr. F. L. H. Collins seconded the motion, which was unanimously carried.

Mr. J. H. Horton, J.P.: I desire to say a few words, if this is a convenient time for me to do so. I am sure it has given us all very great pleasure to receive this magnificent balance-sheet, and we cannot be other than grateful to the directors and the staff generally for what they have done for us. I dare say many of us recollect that not many years ago this Company was in a very bad state; it was paying no dividend. Now, however, it is paying a magnificent dividend. Our position to-day is somewhat unique. We have the Lord Mayor of London as our Chairman, and I do not suppose that any of us will ever again see a Lord Mayor acting as Chairman of this Company.

The Chairman: There is an Alderman here. (Laughter.)

Mr. Horton: Then perhaps we may have another Lord Mayor in the Chair. We all know our Lord Mayor. (Hear, hear.) We all know the great many good gifts he has, because we see it every day in the newspapers; but the greatest of all his gifts is his charitableness. We all know his particular fad, if I may call it so—and a very good fad it is—is the benefiting of crippled children, and I was going to say that it would be a graceful act on our part—and we can very well spare it—to vote 100 guineas to the Lord Mayor's Crippled Children's Fund. (Applause.) After the way that you have received this suggestion, I will not dilate further upon it, but will simply content myself by proposing that 100 guineas be devoted to the Lord Mayor's Crippled Children's Fund.

Sir James Bailey: It gives me very great pleasure to second that resolution. Anything we can do to help the Lord Mayor in his laudable work, I am sure a successful Company like this will be only too pleased to do. (Hear, hear.)

The resolution was carried unanimously.

Mr. Arthur Skett then proposed that the auditors, Messrs. Deloitte, Plender, Griffiths, and Co., be re-appointed.

Sir James Bailey seconded the resolution, which was agreed to unanimously.

The Chairman: Now, if you will allow me, I will take what has passed as a vote of thanks to the Chairman and Directors of this Company, as it will obviate any necessity for any more speaking. I know that you mean to propose a vote of thanks to us, because you have carried by acclamation the generous gift of 100 guineas to the Lord Mayor's Crippled Children's Fund, and I should like to take the opportunity of thanking you very much for doing so. It is a very great encouragement to me in the very hard task which I have set myself to do during my Mayoralty. Many of you know that for the last 14 or 15 years I have come in contact with the poor crippled children of London every year, and all through those years I made up my mind if ever I became Lord Mayor of London that I would do my best to do something which should be of permanent benefit to these poor little cripples. (Hear, hear.) Within five days of my taking office as Lord Mayor I astonished the Fishmongers' Company at one of their banquets—where they are not accustomed to being appealed to for subscriptions—by giving an outline of what I was about to do; and ever since then I have been working very hard, and I feel quite certain that I shall, before my year of office is over, get the money that I want. It is very encouraging to me to find that you have, by acclamation, so generously given me this 100 guineas. I am sure no one could feel more grateful to you than I do, and for myself and my brother directors I can promise you that we will devote all our energies with a view to giving you an even better report next year than the one we have brought before you to-day. I thank you very much. (Applause.)

The proceedings then terminated.

Metropolitan Amalgamated Railway Carriage and Wagon Company, Limited.

The annual general meeting of the shareholders of this Company was held on Friday, May 31, at the Grand Hotel, Colmore Row, Birmingham, Mr. Frank Dudley Docker (Chairman of the Company) presiding.

The Secretary (Mr. Henry Walker) having read the notice convening the meeting,

The Chairman said shareholders would, on perusal of the balance-sheet, have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the steady progress which had characterised the Company since the amalgamation five years ago had, during the past twelve months, been adequately maintained. Their works had, throughout the whole year, been, generally speaking, fully employed, although, unfortunately, distribution of work had not been of quite such an even nature as they might have desired, and the pressure occasionally had been more than a trifle unequal. At times they had found themselves compelled to work at very high pressure, excessive overtime and unpleasant and undesirable things being sometimes absolutely necessary to enable them to comply with the urgent demands of their customers. As usual in such circumstances, the excessively busy times were occasionally preceded or followed by times comparatively slack. This kind of thing did not make for much in the way of profit, for work at extreme pressure was nearly always done at increased expense, and the increased output was not, as a rule, accompanied by a proportionate profit. He, however, was glad to be able to state that in spite of the circumstances to which he had alluded, the profit for the year had been £22,062 more than last year—(Applause)—and that in spite of the special outlay which the Directors had felt it incumbent upon them to incur in the direction of making their factories and workshops bigger, brighter, healthier, and more efficient. But for this increased outlay their profits would have been larger, but he hoped they would have their reward in more ways than one. They would be better fitted with a more perfect equipment to meet the difficult and dangerous times which came to every business, when there was not enough trade to go round, and altogether they would have occasion to congratulate themselves upon what they had done in putting their house thoroughly in order. (Hear, hear.) Their head works at Saltley were now in something like a state of completion, although it was impossible to predict how long such a state of things might continue, and how soon the necessity for still further alterations or additions might arise. At Wednesbury they were still spending money, but even here he thought he might say that the end was in sight, and while the Directors hoped and trusted that the expenditure had been wise and judicious, they found matter for great congratulation in the fact that it had been accomplished without the necessity of their approaching the shareholders to come to their aid by raising additional capital. (Applause.) On reference to the balance-sheet, it would be observed that their profit—including the sum of £86,131 carried forward—was £292,972. They suggested payments amounting to £99,679 in dividends; £100,000 to reserve, and a carry forward of £93,292. Their reserve fund thus became £250,000. They owed to creditors £141,533. On the other side their freehold land, &c., remained as last year by reason of the fact that the amount they had expended was practically balanced by the amount of their depreciation. Cash at bankers amounted to £202,574; their debtors owed them £236,281; their stock-in-trade stood at £231,558, and their investments came to £355,699. This was a balance-sheet which, he thought, they would approve of, as he might certainly claim for it that it was the strongest they had yet submitted. (Applause.) There had been reports in the Press of the shortage of rolling-stock all over the world, but his opinion was that whether shortage existed or not, they had not yet encountered any one desperately bent in providing the only remedy—in giving them the necessary instructions. (Applause.) A gentleman was reported to have said that he was prepared to buy a million pounds' worth of carriages and wagons if he could get delivery in twelve months, but when they cabled immediately offering delivery, they found that the gentleman had been incorrectly reported, and, so far, no business had come. (Laughter.) Italy was a country in which the shortage was said to be very pronounced, and they immediately took the necessary steps, and Rome was visited, but only to find that by reason of the Customs duties and the very much cheaper labour they could get no business. In various countries, and in various parts of the world, which he would not particularly specify, and where profitable business might reasonably have been anticipated, they had found cheaper labour one of the principal things they had to contend with.

There was another obstacle, however, to which he thought their particular attention should be drawn, although he did not intend on the present occasion to deal with it except in the briefest possible manner. They found the great assistance given by foreign Governments, foreign business and foreign commercial houses to the industrial enterprises of their respective countries had been a very potent factor indeed in this matter of securing business, and some were beginning to ask whether there was no prospect of undertakings in this country ever getting such assistance, and whether the day would ever come when gentlemen who came to London for money would find that one of the conditions of the loan would be that at least a portion of the money should be spent in this country. (Hear, hear.) He could assure them that this matter was becoming year by year a more important one. Our splendid isolation and superb cosmopolitanism was, no doubt, very pretty indeed, and very flattering to our vanity; but it was playing the very deuce with our business. (Hear, hear.) The time was coming, and was coming very rapidly, when this aspect of the case would call for the very serious attention of the manufacturers of this country, as well as of the great financial houses, including, of course, the bankers of the country. We should like to see our great commercial houses drawing more closely to one another for the common benefit in this matter. The game was in our own hands, and if we cared to assert ourselves, and if the existing financial conditions were not able to cope with the matter, there ought to be no great difficulty in establishing others which would meet the serious situation which was rapidly being created. (Hear, hear.) Proceeding, Mr. Docker expressed great regret that the Colonial Premiers were unable to pay a visit to Birmingham and the neighbourhood, and spend some little time in inspecting some of the world's great workshops. The one great result that he had been able to perceive from the Conference had been the more complete realisation that the Colonies, the children of the nation, were now fully grown up, and would have to be dealt with accordingly. These sturdy sons would have to be taken into partnership, or it was quite on the cards that before many years had gone by they would be making their commercial alliances elsewhere, and their political alliances would not be long in following. (Hear, hear.) He concluded by moving the adoption of the Report.

Mr. W. L. Hodgkinson seconded the motion, and reminded shareholders that the efforts of the Directors had been in the direction of maintaining a 10 per cent. return rather than to pay, say, 15 per cent. one year and 5 per cent. another.

Mr. Brady quite agreed that it was better to have a dividend which could be maintained, but there were times when the Directors might see their way to delare a bonus.

Mr. Lester congratulated the Chairman on his statesmanlike address on the position of large industrial works generally. Like Mr. Docker, he maintained that every loan that was made should have a stipulation attached to it that a certain amount, if not all, should be spent on the productions of this country. If they only heard more of such remarks at meetings of large companies it would be useful, inasmuch as it would turn the attention of the people to a point that was neglected.

The Chairman having stated that if it were possible to give a bonus or bonus shares, shareholders might be perfectly certain the Board would carry the idea into effect, the resolution was put to the meeting and unanimously adopted.

The dividend of 10 per cent. for the year on the ordinary shares having been declared, the retiring Directors (Messrs. Cay, Churchward, Hazlehurst, and Kershaw) were re-elected, and the proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

Callender's Cable and Construction Company, Ltd.

The eleventh annual general meeting of the shareholders of Callender's Cable and Construction Company, Limited, was held on Thursday, May 30, at Hamilton House, Victoria Embankment, Mr. Henry Drake in the chair.

The Secretary (Mr. H. E. Harrison) having read the notice convening the meeting,

The Chairman briefly detailed the items in the balance-sheet, and stated that the results of the year enabled them to pay a dividend on the ordinary shares at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, clear of income tax, being 10s. per share, and the payment of a bonus of 5s. per share. He concluded by moving the adoption of the Report and accounts.

Mr. C. H. McEuen seconded the motion, and Mr. George Allen and Mr. R. S. Bain having congratulated the Board on the satisfactory Report presented,

Mr. T. O. Callender, the Managing Director, addressed the meeting. He remarked that the year had been a very satisfactory one, but none the less it had been an exceedingly trying one to the management. They had had great difficulty in maintaining their position owing to various causes, most of them being well known to every person engaged in any description of manufacturing. No money was available for new enterprises, and he thought that difficulty with regard to money for undertakings still continued, and was even worse than it was last year. Added to that came the proposed legislation with regard to electric supply both in London and elsewhere, and that had considerably reduced the disposition of electric undertakers to extend or to go into new enterprises. On the top of that they had the difficulty with regard to the price of copper, which, in the early part of the year, was about £85 per ton, and at the end of July last £115 per ton. They could imagine that it was not a bed of roses to the Directors to carry on a business or to secure contracts when the main article in which they were dealing had risen no less than £30. In spite of all that they had not done badly. The English trade had been poor, the cables that had been laid having been for extensions of existing net-works rather than for new contracts, but there were so many net-works now in existence that the necessary extension of existing net-works amounted to a not insignificant sum in itself. In order to fill up the gap made by the want of natural increase in the new electrical supply companies and stations, they had devoted their attention very largely to foreign work, and in doing so they had endeavoured to hold their own, up to now, in a most effective manner. India and Burmah, Canada and South America, as well as nearly all parts of the Continent, had been visited with a view to introducing and extending their operations, and their Manager in India was leaving in a few days for China and Japan. Therefore, there were few parts of the world where cables were likely to be used in which this Company was not properly represented, and represented in a satisfactory manner. (Hear, hear.) Wherever they were doing work business was extended, and this was especially the case in India. The Directors believed that there was an immense future in the supply of electricity in bulk. Circumstances had, however, arisen which had stopped the business for the present, and had rendered it difficult to obtain the money necessary for carrying out new works and extending the enterprise, and they had to a certain extent suffered in their turnover by reason of the stoppage of the business which they anticipated receiving. They had met the difficulty by writing down very largely out of the profits of the year the shares held by the Company, so that in spite of troubles and anxieties which they had had in South Wales and elsewhere, they came before the shareholders quite satisfied that what they had done was the correct course to adopt. The shares which stood in the balance-sheet were at a fair and proper valuation, and he believed that before very long they would get very handsome returns from the forward policy adopted by the Board. With regard to the works at Erith, they had kept them in first-class order, and with regard to the coming year, it was, of course, impossible for any one to prophesy, but he could only say that they were doing everything they could to keep their business up to the high state of efficiency which it had been in in the past. In concluding, Mr. Callender said the original shareholders had received 325 per cent. on their money during twenty-five years, and the shareholders in the Company had received 157 per cent. during the eleven years that the Company had been at work.

The report and accounts were then unanimously adopted, and the dividends declared. Sir J. Fortescue Flannery, Bart., was re-elected a Director, and at an extraordinary general meeting, which was subsequently held, a resolution was passed increasing the remuneration of the Directors by the sum of £1,200 a year.

"Truth" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

INSURANCE NOTES.

Compensation Conundrums—Is Illness Accident?—Lodgings and Flats—Clubs, Hospitals, Nurses and Doctors.

ONE result of the Insurance Supplement which I published on May 15 has been a pleasant, if somewhat serious, bombardment with riddles of all sorts and kinds as to how the new Workmen's Compensation Act is likely to affect people in various described circumstances. None of my readers have pointed out one important point in which I am now disposed to think I was mistaken. I said, "with the exception of industrial diseases resulting from certain trades, employers are only liable in the event of injury by accident: they have nothing to do with illness. The cook may get the measles, but the employer is no more and no less responsible than he was before." It is perfectly true that the employer is only liable in the event of "personal injury by accident"; but I had overlooked the diabolical ingenuity of the law as decided in the case of Brinton's, Limited, v. Turvey. The decision is such that it would be quite appropriate for the defendant's Christian name to be Topsy. The House of Lords decided in this case that the contracting of the disease of anthrax is an "accident" within the meaning of the Act of 1897. The decision was founded upon the finding of fact by the County Court judge, who attributed the disease to "the accidental alighting of a bacillus on a part of the deceased person." If other judges and arbitrators find facts on similar lines, which, however, I am by no means sure many of them are likely to do, possibly measles may be held to be an accident, and if it is caught by the cook in the course of her employment, the master may be liable.

It will be remembered that people are or are not liable to "casual" workers—whatever this may prove to mean—unless such workers are employed for the purposes of the employer's trade or business. I pointed out that a precisely similar accident happening in a private house and in a boarding-house in the one case might, and in the other might not, involve liability to the employer. And now I am asked to decide whether people who have one or more "paying guests" are, or are not, to be considered as engaged in the trade or business of a boarding-house. I know of no legal definition upon this point: the nearest thing I call to mind in connection with it is a definition contained in an amusing little book on "Lodging-house Geometry." It is there stated that "a landlady is a parallelogram or other plain oblong angular figure, which cannot be described, and is equal to anything." I recognise that this flippant treatment of a serious subject exposes me to the charge of being superficial, but none the less I am tempted to quote Carroll's definition that "plain superficiality is the character of a speech in which, any two points being taken, the speaker is found to lie wholly with regard to those points."

Seriously, however, there are pitfalls for both the keepers and occupiers of lodging-houses, and many of the remarks that apply to them apply also to the owners and occupiers of flats. If a lodger, or the tenant of a flat, employs for his own purposes and himself pays a servant engaged by the keeper of the lodging-house, it seems to me entirely probable that if, in these circumstances, the servant were injured, she would be found to have a valid claim on the lodger or tenant. I should imagine there is considerable doubt about many such cases, each of which would have to be decided on its merits. It is certainly extremely likely that claims will be made upon tenants in circumstances such as these, and it would undoubtedly be the wisest plan to incur the small cost involved by insurance, so placing the onus of paying or defending a claim upon an insurance company.

The secretary of a football club has been asking whether it is necessary to insure professional players engaged by the club. I do not see how there can be any doubt about the club being liable, and insurance seems to me quite necessary. I do not know what rate of premium the insurance companies charge for this risk, but I should imagine it would be a substantial one. It appears that clubs in general ought to insure all their employees, whether regular or casual; this applies not merely to town clubs, but to amateur cricket and lawn tennis clubs as well. I do not imagine that any distinction can be made between a proprietary club, the carrying on of which is the trade or business of the proprietor, and a voluntary combination which in no way aims at making a profit. I should suppose that in the latter case, as in the former, the conduct of the club would be regarded as the business of the club, and that responsibility would attach for both casual workers and regular employees.

More conundrums come from the hospitals. Some nurses pay for their training and receive board and lodging, but no salary. Others are given board and lodging, but pay nothing and receive no salary. Others again are paid a salary, either as members of the indoor staff or as outdoor nurses. Sometimes nurses engaged in private nursing are paid by the hospital, and sometimes by the private patient. In all the above cases, except perhaps when a nurse is merely engaged through a hospital or nursing home, and is paid by the employer, I should imagine that the hospital authorities would be responsible in the event of injury by accident, and if this involves compensation in the event of disease, as is suggested by what I have said above, the responsibility of the hospital authorities is considerable. Sooner or later the law courts will find a way out of the next puzzle which has been presented to me. If I engage an ordinary nurse for my children, I am doubtless liable to pay compensation. If she is a specially trained children's nurse, presumably the training makes no difference. If a member of my family were mentally incapacitated and I engaged a trained attendant, presumably I should be liable in this case also. If I engage a medical or surgical nurse to nurse me through an accident or an illness, would not this also be regarded as a contract of service, and should I not be responsible in this instance as well? Yet if I am liable to a highly trained nurse, why should I not be liable to my medical attendant coming, not casually, but regularly, to see me through the same accident or illness? It is true that "workman does not include any person whose remuneration exceeds £250 a year." I know some nurses who altogether earn more than this, and some doctors who earn less, but the question is whether in such a case "remuneration" means the remuneration from the employer in whose service the accident happened, or the total remuneration from all employers.

Perhaps, however, there is another way out of my responsibility to my doctor. It may be that he is a "contractor," and not a "workman." The notion would probably be that he ought to do the job of either curing me or killing me in his own way, without my having any power to interfere; perhaps, therefore, although the fulfilment of the contract is practically paid for "by time" and not "piecework," he is a "contractor" to whom I am not liable, and not a "workman," to whom I am responsible. Still, if this is the case with the doctor, why is it not equally so with the nurse? And if it is so, there would arise all sorts of difficult questions as to the status of the various classes of nurses which I have just mentioned.

If the right of a man to do his work in his own way without interference from his employer is to be the criterion of distinction between a contractor and a workman—and there is some ground for thinking that it is—there arises the question as to whether a doctor, or a chaplain, or a schoolmaster, employed at a remuneration of less than £250 a year by local authorities or institutions could claim compensation in the event of injury. Most of the points here discussed have been put to me by correspondents, and, supposing them to have the slightest acquaintance with the complications of the Act, I cannot but feel flattered at the ability—not to say the omniscience—which is expected of me. As a bewildering puzzle, the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, is nothing short of fascinating; if it were not for insurance, its conditions, or what may prove to be its conditions, would be extremely serious. Since, however, insurance against the liability can be obtained at an extremely small cost, the exact interpretation of the Act becomes of relatively little importance to individuals. While I claim no infallibility in regard to my advice about the meaning of the law, I am quite certain that my advice is right when I say to all and sundry, "If in doubt, take a policy."

Answers to Correspondents.

[Every letter containing an inquiry on the subject of insurance must be accompanied by a coupon cut from the third page of the coloured cover of Truth.]

W. A. N.—The older company (a) is sound, and I think it is reasonably certain that (b) also will punctually fulfil all its obligations. You can find a good deal about both in the Report of the Royal Commission on Life Insurance, recently published by S. E. Dawson, Ottowa. East Grinstead.—All the four companies you mention are perfectly safe, and first class. Select which ever gives the best terms for your age. Darius.—The company you mention, though taken over, is quite all right to deal with. N. Jackson.—The policy you have taken is not wholly satisfactory in itself, but the company is a thoroughly sound and respectable one, and you may feel confident that your legal liabilities are adequately covered. Combe.—The Metropolitan Life Assurance Society is an extremely good and strong office, and the particular policy you mention is entirely satisfactory. Essex.—For endowment, Economic; for whole life, Clerical, Medical and General; for annuity, Legal and General. W. B. M.—The prospects have greatly improved. If you are already assured in this company keep your policy in force; if you are not already assured you can do better elsewhere. M. F.—The Corporation is quite sound and its policy affords reasonable protection against all legal liability. Macer.—The policy you mention is a good one. You probably have no liability to window cleaners hired from a firm, but if you insure against liability to casual employees you would be fully covered in any event. Doubtful.—Take the paid-up policy if it suits your purpose. The company is abundantly sound and strong. Solicitus.—Both the companies you mention are quite sound and satisfactory, but I prefer the one named in your letter to the one whose advertisement you send. In the circumstances you mention the charge for collection would probably be considerably less than 2½ per cent. The total cost would doubtless be less than in the case of a personal friend, if much of the work was done by a solicitor. The appointment of the corporation has the advantage of absolute safety.

All Rights Reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

THE DUCHESS'S DIAMONDS.

IT was generally agreed that no more ill-assorted couple could be found in the whole of the peerage than the Duke of Banstead and his young Duchess. The Duke was an elderly man, grave, sober, and methodical, careful to the verge of parsimony in financial matters, and strict to the verge of puritanism in his standard of life. The Duchess, on the other hand, was a spoiled, wayward young woman, twenty years her husband's junior, frivolous in her tastes, fond of pleasure and excitement, recklessly extravagant in money matters, and an inveterate gambler. Why the Duke, usually the most level-headed of men, had so far forgotten himself as to burn matrimonial incense at the shrine of a merely pretty face and superficial attractions was a puzzle to all who knew him. And yet these good people had no need to be puzzled. Love—that mightiest of human instincts—always was, is, and will be an unaccountable thing. And any attempt to reduce it within the four corners of logic or the laws of probability is simply waste of time. Men do not fall in love as Euclid expounded geometry. They simply fall in love, and that's all about it.

At the time of which I write their Graces had been married for some five years. They had no children, which was a source of deep disappointment to the Duke, but of considerable relief to his wife, who had no desire at all to be burdened with the care of a nursery. She liked perfect freedom to enjoy herself and amuse herself—a thing quite incompatible, in her opinion, with the discharge of maternal duties—and to have her house constantly full of lively, congenial people. In fact, nothing bored her so much as being left alone, even for a single day, with her grave, elderly, and, as she esteemed him, priggish husband. Her flirtations were many. She seldom, at any given time, had less than half a dozen good-looking young men in tow, whom she changed, however, whenever she tired of them, as lightly as one changes books at Mudie's. But there was one man whom she retained on a more permanent basis—to wit, Reggie Kibblewhite.

Reggie Kibblewhite could no longer be called young, having already completed his forty-second year. Nor was he anything more than just passably good-looking. But he had that which attracts women more than any mere youth or good looks—I mean, the air of possessing all the while, behind an apparently frivolous exterior, a strong reserve force of hidden character. Women always admire the strong in man, and are always fascinated by the inscrutable. They are naturally of an inquiring turn of mind (as was Eve, their first ancestress), and there is no surer way of attracting them than to set them some problem that stimulates, while at the same time it baffles, their curiosity.

It was this, I imagine, that accounted for Reggie Kibblewhite's influence over women in general and over the Duchess of Banstead in particular. He possessed also the further advantage that, while always being very nice and agreeable to women and flirting with them in a light-hearted sort of way, he was obviously indifferent, in any deeper sense, to feminine charms. Never in all his life had he been seriously hit. Never had he been known to make a fool of himself over a woman. Naturally, therefore, every woman was mad to have the credit of making a conquest where no other woman had ever yet succeeded. But they had directed their heaviest artillery against him in vain, until the Duchess of Banstead took him in hand; and she, at last, seemed to be making some slight impression.

You are not to suppose, however, that there was anything really wrong in their relations towards one another. The Duchess's code of ethics, though sufficiently elastic, was warranted not to stretch beyond a certain point. Her admirers might go so far as to kiss her hand. Under very exceptional circumstances, they might even respectfully salute her cheek. But that was the limit. The Duke was a tiresome old bore and an irritating prig. But she was his wife. She never forgot that, and she would not allow her admirers to forget it, either. Not that Reggie Kibblewhite ever needed to be reminded of that matrimonial fact. His manner and conversation, even when they descended to the sentimental, were always characterised by perfect propriety and decorum. Nor did he ever attempt to overstep the boundary line that divides the safe area of mere sentiment from the perilous domain of passion. It would seem, too, that the Duke of Banstead recognised that Kibblewhite was a safe admirer for his wife to have in tow. At any rate, he raised no objection to his frequent visits to the house, and was always quite civil and friendly to the younger man when they chanced to meet.

The Duchess not only liked Kibblewhite; she had also a high opinion of his judgment and savoir faire. Hence she confided in him to an extent not accorded to any other of her admirers, and consulted him about all the little difficulties in which her recklessness was perpetually landing her. The most serious difficulty of this description in which she came to him for advice is the one which I am now about to relate.

Kibblewhite, calling to see her one afternoon, about tea-time, was shown up into her boudoir. He found her looking unusually harassed and worried.

"Oh! I'm so glad you've come, Reggie," she said; "I'm up the most awful tree and don't know what on earth to do. You have never failed me in my difficulties yet, dear boy; and I look to you to help me out of this one now."

"I will do anything I can; you know that," he answered, pressing her hand gently; "what's the matter this time, Maudie?"

"Oh! the usual," she replied, "only in an aggravated form. I was playing bridge at the Bernstein's last night, and the stakes were frightfully heavy, and I had quite the most sinful run of ill-luck that could possibly be imagined. Never experienced such an absolute Moscow in all my life. I was simply panic-stricken when I came to total up my losses. Guess what they figured out at, Reggie."

LIBRARY
Handle Carefully
LOWELL, MASS.

"Don't know, I'm sure," he rejoined; "what were they? Seven hundred; eight hundred?——"

"Oh! much—much worse than that," she interposed, with an almost terrified expression. "They were within a pony of six thousand pounds!"

Kibblewhite gave vent to a prolonged, expressive whistle.

"Good Heavens, Maudie!" he said, "but that's serious."

"Serious? I should think so. If I don't pay up, there'll be a regular scandal. And yet how, with an overdrawn bank balance and my dressmaker pressing me for a long bill in addition, am I possibly to find the money?"

"You couldn't ask the Duke for it, I suppose?"

"Out of the question. You know what the Duke is. He would have a fit if I asked him for £6,000 to pay a gambling debt."

Kibblewhite nodded comprehendingly.

"And yet, of course, you must raise the money somehow," he murmured, rubbing his chin thoughtfully.

"Of course. That is self-evident," she answered. "The only question is—how?"

"I'd lend it you myself, if I had it," he rejoined. "But unfortunately such a sum is quite beyond my exiguous means. Umph. This is a matter that wants thinking out."

"I have thought it out, from every point of view; and it always comes back to this: I must borrow the money."

"Borrowing six thousand pounds is a good deal easier said than done," he replied. "No one would think of lending so much without security."

"Not a moneylender?" she inquired.

He shook his head.

"But I thought that was what moneylenders were for," she exclaimed, "to lend money without security."

Reggie Kibblewhite gave a rather cynical smile.

"You might well think so from their advertisements," he rejoined, "according to which they would appear to be the Don Quixotes of the financial world. But when it comes to doing practical business with them, you will find that they by no means live up to their philanthropic professions."

"Oh, I know, of course, that they make you pay through the nose in the shape of interest," answered the Duchess.

"Yes, and not only that. They won't advance a penny of principal to any one whose credit is in the least rocky—least of all to a married woman—unless the borrower can get them a substantial second name. And to get such a name on a bill for six thousand pounds is every bit as difficult as to get the money itself. No, my dear Maudie. There is no harm in trying, of course. But I am very much afraid that this is a case in which the Hebrews are no go."

"Well, what else can you suggest?" she demanded, with an expressive shrug of her supple shoulders.

He was silent for a few seconds.

"Have you no jewellery—diamonds, or anything of that sort, that you could pledge?" he asked.

"Well, there are the family diamonds," she said, "which the Duke gave me on my wedding-day. I had thought of dealing with them, in the last resort. But I do not wish to take such a step if it can possibly be avoided; not only because I have a weakness for fine stones, which makes me loth to part with them, but also because the Duke would be sure to miss them and want to know what had become of them."

"You can easily guard against that," he replied, "by having an exact imitation made in paste, which neither the Duke nor any other amateur could distinguish from the real stones."

"Yes; I suppose I could do that," she observed, reflectively.

"Of course you could. It is the simplest thing in the world. Half the women in Society are doing it every day. I do not speak at mere haphazard, either. For I myself have more than once been commissioned by ladies of my acquaintance to arrange such little matters for them."

"You have!" cried the Duchess, with perhaps a tinge of jealousy in her tone.

"Yes," he smiled; "and I can assure you I take it as the highest possible tribute to my discretion. I should not have been trusted in these delicate matters unless my friends knew that a secret was always safe with me."

"Well, certainly, you are not one to give your friends away. I have always known that," replied the Duchess, "otherwise you may be sure I should not have confided in you as I have done."

"Thank you, Maudie," he murmured, pressing her hand in grateful acknowledgment.

"And if I decide to pledge the family diamonds," said her Grace, coming back to the pressing and practical issue, "may I leave it with you to act as my agent in the matter?"

"May you? Of course you may. You know I am always ready to do any service for you, dear lady," he rejoined, with tender emphasis.

"So be it then, Reggie," she answered; "I confess I am loth to deal with the stones—especially as they have been in the family for so many generations. But it seems there is no other means of raising the money. Besides," she added in her sanguine way, "my luck at bridge must turn before long; and as soon as ever I am in funds, of course, I shall redeem the diamonds at once."

"Quite so. It is only a temporary affair, after all," said Reggie, "and in the meanwhile the paste imitation will preclude the discovery of your secret either by the Duke or anybody else."

On leaving the house half-an-hour later, Reggie Kibblewhite carried away with him the Duchess of Banstead's diamonds in his coat pocket. Fortunately, the Duke happened to be out of town for ten days, just then, so there was ample time to have the paste counterfeits made and delivered before his return. In the meanwhile, the man with whom the commission was placed made no difficulty about lending the money at once on the security of the real stones.

Everything, in fact, went off without a hitch. Reggie Kibblewhite brought her Grace six thousand pounds in bank notes on the following day, and a week later he came round with the paste imitations, which were certainly so like the originals as to defy detection. The Duchess wore them at a dinner party a few days after her spouse's return, and he happened to remark how well she looked in them, and what splendid stones they were.

Nearly a year passed—the period for which the loan had been effected—and the Duchess of Banstead found herself without any prospect whatever of redeeming the stones within the time prescribed. The circumstance worried her a good deal, and she was not then in a condition to stand much worry. The fact was—an event for which the Duke had long prayed, and which the Duchess had long dreaded—was now at last in a fair way to be realised. To put it plainly, her Grace was soon to become a mother.

In due course, an heir was born. But all the rejoicings which had been arranged in anticipation of that happy event were indefinitely postponed owing to the critical condition of the young Duchess, who lay for several weeks between life and death. During that terrible time the Duke's intense devotion to his wayward wife was, for the first time, made fully apparent. Naturally a shy, reserved man, under ordinary circumstances he was incapable of expressing the warmth and tenderness of heart that lay beneath his priggish exterior. But the agonising prospect of losing her whom he loved so dearly broke down all the barriers of his usual reserve, and long before she became convalescent (for, happily, she was snatched from the jaws of death) there was established between them an understanding and a sympathy that changed the whole character of their mutual relations.

Frivolous though she was, the little Duchess had a good heart at bottom, when you could reach it; and in that darkened sick room, with the solemn shadow of death brooding over it, and the patient brought, for the first time in her life, face to face with the most dreadful of all realities, the Duke reached his wife's heart, took possession of it, and never again quitted his hold.

The first thing she did when she was allowed to talk was to make a full confession to her husband of the deception which she had practised on him in the matter of the family diamonds.

"It was very wrong of me," she sobbed. "I knew how you valued them. But I meant to redeem them. I did, truly. And oh, George, do, do forgive me. I'll never deceive you again, as long as I live."

The Duke's reply was to fold her in his arms and kiss her fondly.

"Tût, tut," he said. "Don't make yourself unhappy about the affair, Maud. Of course I forgive you, so far as there is anything to forgive. After all, I gave you the stones for your very own. They were yours, to do what you pleased with."

And he got up, somewhat hurriedly, and left the room.

In a minute or two he returned, carrying something in his hand—a glittering mass of something which he deposited in his wife's lap. They were the family diamonds.

"Oh, George," she cried, in amazement, "you had found out? You have redeemed them?"

"Hardly that, my dear," he answered, smiling. "For, in point of fact, the stones have never been out of the family. When you gave them to Reggie Kibblewhite to pledge for you, he brought them straight to me, by my instructions. The truth is, my dearest, that I had long been in mortal fear lest, in some of the difficulties in which your recklessness over money matters was always landing you, you might be driven to realise these diamonds, which had been my mother's and my grandmother's, and which I valued so much, and so I arranged with Kibblewhite, who, though you were not aware of it, was in my confidence from the first, to see that, if the stones were pledged with any one, they should be pledged with me."

"Oh, George!" cried his wife, "then it was you yourself who lent me that £6,000 on the diamonds?"

"It was," he smiled. "But I am not going to drive a hard bargain with you, dearest customer. You have given me an heir and you have given me your heart. So I feel that now I cannot do less than give you the diamonds, once more, for your very own."

MUSIC.

ORCHESTRAL PLAYERS AND THEIR PAY.

AN announcement which appeared in the papers the other day had considerable interest for orchestral players. This was in relation to a joint meeting of members of the Orchestral Association and the Amalgamated Musicians' Union to consider the position of professional instrumentalists, and to decide on joint action for protection of their interests. The mere fact of such a conference having been organised was in itself rather significant, since hitherto the two bodies have not worked together at all. On the contrary, there have been considerable differences between them, the Orchestral Association having always taken exception to the low scale of pay assented to by the members of the Union, and also to the inferior standard of musicianship obtaining among the latter. The Orchestral Association, in a word, has represented the aristocracy of the profession, and has admitted to its ranks only those capable of complying with a reasonable standard of efficiency. The Union, on the other hand, has been less particular, and numbers in its ranks accordingly players of all kinds, many of whom would seek in vain admission to membership of the Association; and it is these latter, of course, who accept the shockingly low salaries which only too commonly obtain, and thereby help to pull down the rates throughout the whole of the profession. These are the performers who take salaries at the music-halls and smaller theatres of 15s., 18s., and 20s. a week—playing for this at two performances a night, providing the regulation evening dress, and possibly travelling considerable distances to and from their work every day in addition. How they do it, Heaven only knows; but, of course, players of this class do the profession no credit, and they have always been regarded as the blacklegs of the calling by those better placed.

Then came the recent strike of the variety artists, with whom the orchestral players in the music-halls made common cause, and this has been the means of bringing about an understanding between the two leading bodies which did not formerly exist. At first the managers tried to play off the one against the other, and if they had been so disposed, the Orchestral Association could quickly have filled up most of the posts vacated by the members of the Union on terms quite satisfactory to themselves. With an amount of judgment and foresight, however, which does them considerable credit, they recognised that the interests of the industry as a whole were hardly likely to be furthered in the long run in this way, so the managers appealed to them in vain for help in their extremity. Later came the arbitration, at which the striking instrumentalists, represented by the Amalgamated Musicians' Union, put forward terms which can hardly be regarded as having been extravagant or exacting. At the subsequent conference referred to above, the justice of their demands has since been endorsed by the members of both bodies, and by the resolutions passed each society has pledged its members not to play for lower terms. In all three recommendations, drawn up by the two societies, were considered:—

(1) That the members of both societies instruct their respective executives to draw up a working agreement for joint action; (2) That both societies bind their members not to play for less than 36s. per week of six performances—extra performances pro rata; and (3) That after a date to be agreed upon by the executives the members of both societies agree not to play in company with any musician in any metropolitan theatre or music-hall who is not a member of either society.

After discussion, all three recommendations were unanimously adopted; and as the two organisations in question include the vast majority of instrumental players throughout the country, the importance of the decision come to, if the resolutions are not departed from, is not to be gainsaid, and it is sincerely to be hoped in the interests of the profession generally that the executives of the two bodies will see to it that in point of fact the resolutions are adhered to by their members. In this event the managers will have no alternative but to agree to their demands, and the lot of the instrumental player—though even under the revised conditions none too rosy—should at least become a good deal better than it has been. The third recommendation is, perhaps, of a more controversial nature. "Exclusive dealing" has never a very pleasant ring, though sometimes recourse to the policy indicated may be defended as a regrettable necessity. In this particular case it will be noted, however, that the recommendation is put forward more in the form of a hint than as a policy which it has been decided definitely to put in force. It is only "after a date to be agreed upon by the executives" that the recommendation is to take effect, and it may well be that the date in question may not arrive just yet. Meanwhile the award of the arbitrator is being anxiously awaited. It was to have been delivered last Saturday, but there has been some delay, it appears, and it is not now expected to be made known before the end of this week.

There is nothing like a centenary, or like celebration, for the extension of knowledge, and so it will come about, doubtless, that many will know a good deal more about Orlando Gibbons' music after this week's commemoration performance at Westminster Abbey than they ever knew before. Truth to tell, Gibbons' music possesses a somewhat ancient, if not fish-like, smell for modern hearers, but, listened to—as, of course, all such music should be—in the spirit of its time and with the ears of 1625 rather than of 1907, it no doubt deserves all of the praise which has been bestowed on it. Gibbons was one of the greatest of a long list of famous composers whose work illuminated the spacious days of the Virgin Queen, and though his music may no longer appeal to us as it did to his contemporaries, it was a happy inspiration to erect a memorial to his memory in Westminster Abbey, where as organist he preceded his genial successor of to-day, Sir Frederick Bridge, by some two hundred and fifty odd years. Every one knows how high was the repute enjoyed throughout Europe by English music in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, and not least among those who contributed to this result was the fine old master whose memory is being honoured this week.

At Covent Garden lately the most notable performance has been, perhaps, that of "Aïda," with Mlle. Destinn in the title part, and Caruso as Radames. This is an opera which Covent Garden always does particularly well, and as a spectacle alone is worth seeing. Radames is one of Caruso's finest parts, even though he does not make quite so much noise as Tamagno used to in certain passages, and Destinn's Aïda was a capital character study. Some of the other principals were hardly so noteworthy as those of former years—who can ever hope to approach Plançon's High Priest, for one?—but the performance as a whole was more than good, and did high credit to all concerned. On Saturday, the gloomy strains of the "Flying Dutchman" came as a decided contrast, but even the brilliant singing of Destinn and Van Rooy availed not to conceal the fact that Wagner's early essay in romantic opera makes rather tiresome hearing nowadays. The more the work is heard, the more the thought suggests itself that the whole opera is in the nature of an anti-climax to its superb overture. The performance of another early Wagnerian work recently given, namely, "Tannhäuser," had a pleasant feature in the appearance of Mme. Agnes Nicholls as Venus and of Mr. Griswold as the King. Both, I believe, studied at the Royal College of Music.

The programme for next week's Gala performance has now been finally settled by the management and approved by the King. It will consist of the first acts of "Madama Butterfly" and "La Bohème," and selections from the third act of "Die Meistersinger," a work for which, as is well known, the King has a special liking. Otherwise, perhaps, it would hardly have found a place in the programme of a gala performance. As it is, Puccini will engage the major share of attention, and on occasions of this kind, when the tastes of the non-musical as well as of the musical must be considered, this arrangement will doubtless make for the greatest happiness of the greatest number. The decorations of the house promise to be even more elaborate than those of recent galas, but in other respects the arrangements will be precisely the same as in former years.

As regards other coming events at Covent Garden, one of the most interesting productions will be that of "La Gioconda," for which, it is understood, great preparations are being made. It is said, indeed, that this will be one of the heaviest productions which have ever been undertaken at Covent Garden, and that is saying not a little. Is it always realised, indeed, how excellently Covent Garden discharges its obligations nowadays in the matter of mise-en-scène? Formerly matters were often scamped in this respect, but at present there is probably no opera house in Europe where things are done more lavishly. In this connection, by the way, the rather curious statement was made the other day that Mr. Charles Manners, of the Moody-Manners Opera Company, was going to Paris to study the mounting of "Madama Butterfly" at the Opéra Comique. If that work is mounted more effectively and artistically in Paris than at Covent Garden (where Puccini himself supervised the production), it must be very well done indeed. As a matter of fact, I believe I am right in stating that the Paris production is entirely modelled on that of Covent Garden, which M. Carré visited London expressly to see.

Mme. Patti's recent reappearance in Paris at the private theatre of M. Jean de Reszke in her old part of Rosina in "Il Barbiere" seems to have been an unqualified success. Mme. Patti herself was in excellent voice, and laughingly tells her friends, indeed, that she never sang the part better in her life. M. Jean de Reszke did not take part in the performance as had been originally contemplated when this remarkable "revival" was first mooted, but Signor Anselmi proved an excellent substitute, while Signor Ancona, Signor Pini-Corsi, and M. Edouard de Reszke completed a brilliant cast.

A correspondent writes:—

With respect to your article, "Singers and Their Fees," will you allow me to point out that your statement in reference to the sums paid to M. Jean de Reszke at Covent Garden is rather wide of the mark? That great artist's services were highly esteemed, but I am in a position to state that he never received anything like £450 a night. The highest sum which he ever obtained from Sir Augustus Harris was £200 a night, and this only during one season. During the others his fees never exceeded £160 a night. I venture to make the correction since, on the lines of your own observations, it is highly undesirable that inflated and exaggerated notions should obtain currency in these matters, seeing that they can only serve to induce other vocalists still further to increase demands already, in my humble judgment, and as I gather also in your own, excessive.

From another source I have received a communication to the same effect. The figure quoted in reference to M. de Reszke was evidently one of the "greatly exaggerated" order—illustrating the truth of the remark which I ventured to make when quoting it, that it does not do always to believe quite all that is stated on these matters.

An enormous number of concerts has been given lately, only a few of which can be mentioned here. A début of considerable interest was that of Miss Beatrice Harrison, the clever young 'cellist—she is only fourteen—who fully justified what rumour had said of her. Another interesting appearance was that of Herr Emil Sjörgren, the distinguished Swedish composer, who gave an attractive concert of his own compositions. His music is not very profound, but eminently pleasing and gratefully free from affectation. Three orchestral concerts of note were those of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, the Philharmonic Society, and the London Symphony Orchestra. At the first the delicious piano playing of M. Raoul Pugno was specially attractive. At the second the appearance of Lady Hallé, who first played at these concerts fifty-eight years ago, served to remind us that there were prodigies in the land before the days of Von Vecsey and Mischa Elman. At the third, Dr. Richter's thirty years' labour in England was worthily celebrated—though there ought surely to have been some Wagner in the programme of such a concert. As to the violinists who have been heard, merely to name them all would occupy some space. Kubelik and Kreisler were the most notable, and the former had a better audience than the latter—wherein there is food for thought. Two uncommonly clever young pianists heard were Miss Alice Ripper and Miss Nellie Curzon-Smith; Frln. Tilly Koenen was the best of several vocalists who invited criticism, and one of the best for that matter of all before the public just now; while Mlle. Chaminade's concert of her own compositions attracted, as usual, a large audience of that clever lady's admirers.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—The earlier part of "George Paston's" "Lady Mary Wortley Montagu and Her Times" (1) is somewhat forbidding reading, since it is waterlogged with the love-letters of that incomparable prig, Wortley Montagu. What Lord Stanhope says of this worthy—"that he combined very moderate talents with most overweening vanity"—is written in every line of these pompous and egotistical letters; and what his lordship adds about a MS. speech of Montagu's intended to be read from his hat—that "it was marginally annotated with such hints for its delivery as 'Here pause a minute.' 'Here look round.' 'Cough here.' 'Here speak loud.' 'Here low.'"—is also borne out by these laboured love epistles, which were written and re-written, corrected and re-corrected over and over

(1) "Lady Mary Wortley Montagu and Her Times." By George Paston. With Twenty-four Illustrations. (London: Methuen & Co. 15s. net.)

(2) "Ghetto Comedies." By Israel Zangwill. With Illustrations by J. H. Amschewitz. (London: William Heinemann. 6s.)

(3) "2835, Mayfair." By Frank Richardson. (London: T. Werner Laurie. 6s.)

(4) "The Late Tennant." By Gordon Holmes. With Four Illustrations by James Durden. (London: Cassell and Co. 6s.)

again. The result of this over-elaboration is certainly not perspicuity; though the obscurity of the letters may in part be due to the caution of a calculating and suspicious lover. I am not at all as sure as "George Paston" that these suspicions of Lady Mary's coquetry were unwarranted, since a more arrant coquette than Lady Mary showed herself later could hardly be found even in that day. Not, perhaps, that she ever committed herself as Horace Walpole in a scurrilous letter, and Pope in an inexpressibly filthy couplet, suggest; for she was hardly the kind of woman to commit herself thus. Some of the maxims in her letters to her husband and to her only daughter suggest a calculating cynicism incompatible with such imprudence. "Anger and compassion," she writes to her husband, "are equal weaknesses, and a wise man never suffers himself to be influenced by either in an action of consequence." To her daughter she writes, "I shall only repeat the Turkish maxim, which, I think, includes all that is necessary in a court life: 'Caress the favourites: avoid the unfortunate: trust nobody.'" These are not precisely womanly maxims; but, then, Lady Mary would have resented nothing more rancorously than the charge of womanliness. "But one thing," she says, with her usual wit, "reconciles me to being a woman—that I am thus assured against marrying one of that gender." Here, again, is a characteristic extract from a letter written in her girlhood to another young lady, ridiculing at once her sex and the love-making of Vanbrugh, the architect and dramatist:—

I can't forbear entertaining you with our York lovers—strange monsters, you'll think, love being as much forced up here as melons. In the first form of these creatures is even Mr. Vanbrugh. Heaven, no doubt, compassionating our dulness, has inspired him with a passion that makes us all ready to die with laughing. 'Tis credibly reported that he is endeavouring at the honourable estate of matrimony and vows to lead a sinful life no more. Whether pure holiness inspires his mind, or dotage turns his brain is hard to find. 'Tis certain he keeps Monday's and Thursday's market—i.e., assembly day—constant; and for those that don't regard worldly muck, there's extraordinary good choice indeed. I believe last Monday there was 200 pieces of women's flesh (fat and lean). But you know Van's taste was always odd. His inclination to ruins has given him a fancy for Mrs. Yarborough. He sighs and ogles that it would do your heart good to see him; and she is not a little pleased that in so small a proportion of men among such a number of women, a whole man should fall to her share.

As mordant and malicious wit of this kind flavours nearly all her letters, it is staggering to find in one of them the maxim, "Nothing is more ridiculous than censuring the actions of others," followed by the Pharisaic boast, "as I never found any pleasure in malice, I bless the destiny which has conducted me to a part where people are better employed than in talking of the affairs of their acquaintance." There are, of course, letters that are witty without being malicious, that have the brightness of steel without its sharpness, and of these not the least interesting to you, with the suffragette storming of the House of Commons in your mind, will be that describing the siege of the House of Lords by the predecessors of these Amazons. It seems that a number of ladies, headed by two Duchesses—of Queensbury and of Ancaster—incensed by their exclusion from the House of Lords' Gallery during a Spanish debate, presented themselves at the door of that house at nine in the morning to demand instant admission. Sir William Saunderson respectfully informed them that the Chancellor had made an order against their admittance. "The Chancellor! A mere lawyer!" snorted the Duchess of Queensberry. "Admit us instantly and privately." Her manner was so irritating that Sir William swore, "By G—! I won't!" Whereupon the Duchess swore, "By G—! We shall come in, in spite of the Chancellor and the whole House of Lords!" Accordingly, the ladies spent the whole day till five in the afternoon—without food to sustain their strength—thumping and kicking at the door, till hardly a word said by the speakers could be heard in the chamber itself! When this failed, the Duchess suggested the infallible stratagem of a dead silence for half an hour, which the Chancellor of course considered impossible to a number of excited women. Assured of their retirement, he ordered the door to be opened, when in the women rushed pell-mell, and, shoving aside all in their path, they established themselves in the front row of the gallery. Here they remained till eleven at night—when the House rose—applauding and hissing as in a theatre, to the intense disgust and disconcertment of the speakers! If they had been mill-girls, I fancy there would in that day have been no scruple about their forcible ejectment. But Duchesses! "George Paston" seems to have made the most in this admirable volume of the Wortley Montagu MSS. at Sandon Hall, to which, by the courtesy of the Earl of Harrowby, she was allowed access.

Mr. Zangwill, in his note to "Ghetto Comedies," (2) disregards, he says, the old and crude conception that the sole distinction between a tragedy and a comedy lies in the ending—happy or unhappy. He seems to me to disregard also the accepted distinction between comedy and farce in such tales as "The Sabbath Question in Sudminster" and "The Yiddish Hamlet." The stories, whether you call them tragedies, comedies, or farces, have a double interest—as tales, and as studies of the character and of the point of view of the Jew. As a study of Jewish character and point of view, probably "The Jewish Trinity" is the most suggestive of these. The Jew, says Mr. Zangwill through his hero, is in every country a Trinity in himself—at once a patriot, a Jew, and an anti-Semite. In his heart of hearts he holds that he can never have a country of his own, because the Jews are all right only so long as they are under a foreign government; because left to themselves their quarrels would be internecine; and because left to themselves—and this seems the most weighty reason of all—"they could never live off one another." A community consisting exclusively of fleas is inconceivable! Jewish patriotism, in a word, when it is not a market matter of the country where most money is to be made, is either a sad memory or a pious aspiration. If you want at once the enjoyment of some extremely interesting tales and the instruction of some extremely shrewd glimpses into the mind of the Jew, whether British or Polish, you should read these "Ghetto Comedies." "2835 Mayfair" (3) is a clumsy and incredible Jekyll and Hyde story of a man who through mesmerism incarnated himself in the body of a woman, which he could tenant only for three days, on pain of his original body becoming corrupt and uninhabitable. She contrives that her dearest friend as a man should be her lover as a woman—to his unutterable disgust when he discovers the imposition. It would need more skill than Mr. Richardson possesses to make this plot credible or its characters natural. I cannot say that the characters and incidents, of "The Late Tenant" (4) are natural; but those who care only to have their curiosity roused and gratified by mysteries and their solution will find the dual personality of the villain and the tracking out of all the mazes of his villainies by the hero sufficiently exciting reading.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely, DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

With the publication of "The Roundabout Papers" and "Denis Duval" Messrs. Macmillan have completed their admirable edition of the works of Thackeray in three and sixpenny volumes. It consists of reprints of the first editions, with reproductions of all the original illustrations, and the editor, Mr. Lewis Melville, has included a great number of scattered pieces from Thackeray's pen, and illustrations from his pencil, which have not previously been given in any collected edition of his works. Some interesting facts respecting Thackeray's connection with the Cornhill Magazine are mentioned by Mr. Melville in his introduction to the "Roundabout Papers." When Messrs. Smith, Elder and Co. decided to start the Cornhill in 1859 Thackeray was offered £350 for a monthly instalment of a novel, to be completed in twelve numbers; while for the "Roundabout Papers" and similar contributions he received the record price of twelve guineas a page. It was not at first intended that he should be the editor, but after the post had been refused by Tom Hughes and others Thackeray took it at a salary of £1,000 a year. He resigned the editorship in 1862, but continued a contributor to the magazine—which was from the first an immense success—till his death at the end of the following year.

Mr. Murray has in the press for publication in the autumn a book by Major Gambier-Parry which may almost be described as a history of Eton during the past seventy years. It is a history of the famous Eton house known as Evans's. Jane Evans, herself the head of the house for twenty-eight years, occupies a place in many hearts, and while the volume contains numerous extracts from her diaries and letters, there are also contributions from many of those who were at the house in her day as well as in those of her father and sister.

In the Spanish Series Mr. John Lane has issued "The Prado" (3s. 6d. net). The principal pictures in the famous gallery are described by Mr. Albert F. Calvert and Mr. C. Gasquoine Hartley, and the volume is illustrated with 220 reproductions from photographs of Old Masters.

Mr. C. C. Lynam, Headmaster of the Oxford Preparatory School and an enthusiastic amateur cruiser, is the author of a book entitled "The Log of the Blue Dragon," which will be published by Mr. A. H. Bullen. Mr. Lynam has sailed the Blue Dragon from Oxford down the Thames, round Land's End, and up the West Coast of Scotland, where for a dozen years she cruised among the Hebrides. The book is a jovial record of adventures by land and sea.

Messrs. Greening are issuing what should prove to be a popular series of useful handbooks at sixpence net, written by experts and covering a wide range of subjects. One book just out is by Mr. J. Whitehead on "Practical Fruit Culture"; another is on "Cricket," various features of the game being dealt with by Dr. W. G. Grace, A. C. Maclaren, A. E. Trott, W. J. Ford, and other distinguished players.

Miss Ellen Terry alludes to her experiences with the Keans at the Princess's Theatre in the first instalment of her interesting reminiscences, "The Story of My Life." It was with the Keans that she received her early training in Shakespearean parts. "During the rehearsals," says Miss Terry, "Mr. Kean used to sit in the stalls with a loud-voiced dinner-bell by his side, and when anything went wrong on the stage he would ring it ferociously, and everything would come to a stop until Mrs. Kean, who always sat on the stage, had set right what was wrong." Of Mrs. Kean, Miss Terry gratefully remarks that no woman ever gave herself more trouble to train a young actress. "The Story of My Life," which will delight the author's host of admirers, is appearing in the columns of M.A.P.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—London is very gay and full, and invitations pour in from hospitable friends. It is a delightful time of year in town, before it gets too hot, and we are setting our minds to enjoy every day of it. A good resolution, is it not? And, unlike most good resolutions, very easy of accomplishment. There are several interesting functions coming off, and we have been buying gowns and hats wherein to do them honour. The worst of it is that, with weather so very changeable, one never knows what to wear. June, the dearest and most beautiful of all the months, arrived in torrents of tears. She wept twice round the clock—from her birth-moment at midnight until the same moment the night after; a bad beginning, but her smiles may be all the more sunny for her pluvial début.

On Wednesday of this week opens a garden fête at Aubrey House, Campden Hill, the beautiful and historic residence of Mr. W. C. Alexander. May the heavens be kind to it, for it is a beneficent undertaking, in aid of the funds of the Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants, of which Princess Christian is President. Visitors are to be admitted to the lovely garden, and there will be performances of maypole and morris dances during the two days of the Exhibition. It is to consist of lace, embroidery, miniatures, and other objects of artistic or historic interest. The kindly Association was founded in 1874 by Mrs. Nassau Senior, and the girls befriended are chiefly those placed in domestic service from the various Metropolitan Poor Law Schools. There are eight training homes kept up by the Association and eleven lodging houses, where girls can go when out of place or in need of help or advice. In case you should feel inclined to send a cheque for an institution so worthy, the central office is 66, Denison House, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W. Some cases reported in the papers prove that young servant girls are sometimes very badly in need of help, especially when they have the misfortune to fall into the clutches of a cruel, tyrannical mistress.

The proceeds of the Ascot Ball this year are to be given to the Maternity and District Nurses' Home at Plaistow. The date is Wednesday, June 26. There is a long list of distinguished patrons, headed by the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. The great charm of this annual ball is that, owing to the strictness of the entrée, hostesses of social position can make parties and entertain their friends on a generous scale at a cost that amounts to something like one-fourth of what it would cost them in their own houses. Each hostess can have a reserved rendezvous, and a special supper party. It is to be held, as usual, at the Wharncliffe Rooms. It is a lovely room to dance in, especially since the floor has been altered. Mr. Alfred de Rothschild is again lending his private band, conducted by Herr Carl Heubert. The charge for one of the eight large recesses, where hostesses can receive their guests, is twenty guineas, in addition to the tickets, which are 25s. each, including a champagne supper and refreshments, all of which they do so very well at the Hotel Great Central.

The League of Mercy is to benefit by two matinées, to be given at the Vaudeville Theatre on June 20 and 21, when a musical play, written and composed by Mr. A. S. Scott-Gatty, will be produced by Mrs. Wordsworth and her pupils. It is called "The Three Bears." Graceful little Beryl Hentschel is to be Golden Locks. Such items on the programme as Santa Claus Fairies, Snowflakes, Ballet of Kittens, all to be performed by children, are guarantees that both players and audience will enjoy themselves greatly.

Lilla gets all her lingerie at Lakmé's, in Davies-street. It is of the most luxurious kind, and the ladies who conduct the shop have quite given up dressmaking to devote themselves to "undies." Their blouses are the daintiest possible, and teagowns are of the order that may be described as simply "too-too." The petticoats match the rest of the tempting stock. Everything comes from Paris. You never saw such sweet night-caps, one a kind of mob in Valenciennes, with pale blue ribbon. Upstairs there are rooms full of the quaintest lamp-shades, cushions of every shape and size, revolving bookstands in painted velvet or brocade, and little chests of drawers with the fronts falling down, making it so easy to get at things without making hay of everything else in the drawers.

Are you going to the Oxford Pageant, to be held on the last three days of this month and the first three of the next? Richard gazes at the six dates as if he hoped by steady staring to divine which will enjoy the best weather. The programme is one of the most fascinating booklets I have ever seen, full of views of old Oxford, and maps, and with a poem by Robert Bridges and an article by "Q."—in fact, everything that can make you feel that Oxford is the one place that you long to see. The map that shows the way from the station has a red line running through the very heart of Oxford, and up "the High" of world-wide fame. The scenes have been written by a group of well-known people, ranging from Stanley Weyman to Laurence Housman; they have been arranged by masters like Beerbohm Tree and H. B. Irving, and clothed by a band of eminent artists, corrected and restrained by a number of distinguished authorities on heraldry, civic, ecclesiastic, and military costume, and the minutiæ of armour and weapons.

REDFERN.—Exclusive and original Models in Walking, Dinner and Evening Gowns, Theatre Wraps, &c. Paris millinery, lingerie, blouses, &c.—REDFERN, Conduit-street and Bond-street.

"LA SAMOTHRACE."—Every corset of the LONDON CORSET Co., 28, New Bond-street, W., is made in Paris. The very latest models. Not connected with any other establishment.

The pageant will take about three hours, and consists of fourteen scenes representing typical incidents in the growth of Oxford as a city and as a university. Those devoted to the Stuart period will be particularly full of incident, for Oxford was far from being "wrapped in scholastic peace" during those troubled times. The scene of the pageant is the spot where the Cherwell encircles the grounds of Magdalen College School, at the end of the Broad Walk, and the spectators will only have to raise their eyes from the performers to see the famous towers of Magdalen and Merton embowered in rich trees. It is a beautiful place, set in bright green meadows, and the scenes, from St. Frideswide's adventures in 727 to George III.'s visit to St. Giles's Fair, should be not only wonderfully picturesque, but interesting and stirring. Some of them will be accompanied by contemporary music, to heighten the illusion. And if our souls should for a moment desire a rest from history, there will be an extraordinarily interesting audience to study.

We had to go to Woolwich the other morning, and after a weary and expensive journey by train, we made a successful and delightful experiment, and came back in less time and for less than half the money by river. The tram from Woolwich put us down close to Greenwich Pier, where the boats start, and we played at being American tourists, and bought chocolate and a penny guide from an official little boy on board, and settled ourselves in the bow. That very morning we had seen the sleepy Thames, silver dappled with green reflections, slide under the grey arches of Maidenhead Bridge. Here we met our river on different terms. It was like meeting in his office a man whom one knows at dances. He wears quite a different expression, and women, instead of pleasantly ruling him, are interruptions, and to be dealt with quickly. No teasing and dalliance with this tawny flood in its office mood! We felt becomingly humble as we looked across at the brown wharves of the Isle of Dogs. Our penny guide, bought in fun, became a very Minerva (in an orange paper garment), and the adventures of Telemachus were not more interesting to him than ours to us. We saw for the first time places whose names we have always known—Wapping and Rotherhithe, and Shadwell. We looked upon Wapping Old Stairs, and the tower of Deptford Church, under whose shadow Marlowe, coldly called by the guide-book "Marlowe, the dramatist," is buried. And when, aided by our penny Minerva, we had recalled Saxon and Roman names, and come down the ages to Dickens, we left off the tourist-game, and became Londoners to the core. It is a fine sight, the Thames in its business mood, with Tower Bridge and St. Paul's looking down it to the domes of Greenwich. We passed by groups of shipping, some with strange foreign names; we skirted one or two leviathan steamers, pale grey giants with vermilion keels just showing above the water; and we wished that Mr. Rudyard Kipling, in an expansive mood, were on our fussy little steamer to translate to us the busy book that was open before us, written in a foreign language. However, Bee kodaked the chief things we wanted explained, with a view to receiving information from a sailor-cousin. We were sorry when we reached Charing Cross pier. The journey had been quick, cheap, comfortable, and picturesque, the worst point about it being the chocolate. We had been intensely interested, and besides, we know a great deal more now than we did before.

You would never guess how I have spent the last quarter of an hour. In watching six dozen new-laid eggs being laid away in a pail of waterglass for a few months' retirement from the world. The idea is to buy them at this time of year, when they cost 1s. for sixteen, and consume during the winter of our discontent, when each "new-laid" disposes of 2d. or 3d. Thrift is a wonderful thing.

Regardless of what people say, I do not think that bridge is losing its attractions. I am perfectly sure that the clerk of the weather is a bridge player, for anxious as we may be to "declare" for fine weather, we have to "leave it" to him, and judging from the weather he has been giving us lately, he means to go spades. We know, however, that it is an ill wind that blows no one any good, and certainly the winds we have been having have blown little good to any one but bridge players. Seriously, I believe that even Father Vaughan would admit that a little mild bridge is better than indulging in many of the evils against which he has been holding forth. Hearts and diamonds at bridge are much less harmful than hearts and diamonds in other directions. For these reasons I am glad to hear that bridge is holding its own. Apropos of this, you will be interested to know that the Berkeley Bridge Club, to which I referred a few weeks back, has found it necessary, owing to its popularity, to establish itself in larger premises, and has now moved from Upper Berkeley-street to 79, Knightsbridge. I mention this fact to show that the game is played by a large number of people for itself alone, and not for mere gambling purposes, as at the Berkeley Club the stakes are strictly limited to five shillings a hundred, while the usual stakes are only half-a-crown. I know that a great many people will declare that this modest limit is ridiculous, and that no really good players would care to sit down for such paltry stakes. On the other hand, an expert friend of mine assures me he has found in the majority of cases that the worse the player the higher the stakes he or she wishes to play. And, of course, this is the case where people only play, and do not pay.

I have received the following from Mona:—

My Dear Madge,—I really do think that the crush at the Temple Show was worse than ever. I was wedged in between four people at the entrance and remained wedged in until I was finally ejected at the other end. Then as there were long blocks, always just where you didn't want to be blocked, progress was very slow. The chief trouble is caused by people who want to buy. Every firm owning a stand should be compelled to provide little bays into which these people could be swept; the main stream would then pass on without interference. Again, everybody should be obliged to go in the same direction. When some are going one way and some another there is bound to be trouble. Some attempt is made at a later stage to direct the various streams, but it should begin with the admission of the first person and should allow no exceptions. Still, by dogged perseverance, I saw most of what was to be seen, and, in my opinion, it was quite the best show I have ever attended in the Temple Gardens. The orchids were extraordinary. Their fabulous value has been proclaimed in the daily papers, and I do not believe that such a collection has ever been brought together before. I suppose the firms who exhibited them hoped to find purchasers among the American millionaires who are said to be overrunning London. But as neither you nor I can afford to buy thousand-guinea orchids I will pass them by.

That the popularity of hardy plants is still growing was proved by the large amount of attention paid to them by almost every firm exhibiting. After the orchids they were the chief feature of the show. Last year I mentioned a new variety of Anchusa italica—the Dropmore, deep blue; this year I saw another—the Opal, pale blue, shown by Messrs. Ladham. It seemed to me to be well worth growing, as a companion for the former. Messrs. Wallace had a charming collection of lilies, irises, and ixias, and I was especially struck with a Heuchera—corallina—with flowers of a coral pink, paler and rather more effective than those of the better known Heuchera sanguinea. A very beautiful single pink pyrethrum, Margaret Moor, was shown by Messrs. Clark, the pink in this case also having a coral tint, the centre being, as usual, bright yellow. The Oriental poppies were extremely handsome. Formerly there was only a single kind, red blotched with black at the base of the petals; now there are an immense number of varieties of all shades of red. They are splendid plants for the back of the border, or for the outskirts of the shrubbery, but unfortunately, though they last longer than most other poppies, they do not retain their beauty very long. Do you like centaureas? Perhaps you call them perennial cornflowers. If so, two very fine new varieties were exhibited by Messrs. Jarman—one a soft rose, called the Bridegroom, and the other a creamy white, called the Bride. They are infinitely superior to the old blue. But of all the hardy plants I do not think any were more admired than the columbines, the new long-spurred hybrids, in a great variety of beautiful colours. At every stand where they were shown there was a block, and the booking of orders was brisk. Many firms assert that they exhibit only because others do, and that it does not pay them; but my experience of the Temple Show is that a vast amount of business is done there. Certainly, as the result of the last show, these beautiful columbines will appear in many gardens in which they were previously unknown. Among Messrs. Veitch's novelties was the handsome Meconopsis integrifolia. It was really introduced two or three years ago—their traveller originally obtained it in China—but it is still a rare plant in gardens. Its flowers are yellow in colour, the yellow of rather a strongly coloured Maréchal Niel rose, and they are not unlike those of a large poppy in shape. I think it is likely to become a favourite. As usual, Messrs. Veitch made a striking display of eremuri, and as several other firms followed their example these stately plants, with their tall spikes of flowers in various colours, were very much in evidence. Messrs. Pulham gave an interesting object lesson in the construction of rockeries—laid down great blocks of stone, planted alpines among them, and surrounded them with turf in such a natural manner that the whole thing looked as if it had always been a permanent part of the Temple Gardens. A still more elaborate rockery was made by Messrs. Cutbush, in order to serve as a setting for their fine collection of rock and water plants. How they managed it in the short time at their disposal I cannot imagine. At Kew the rock garden is the most popular part of the grounds, and there can be no question that the cultivation of rock plants—sedums, saxifrages, sempervivums, and many others—is very much in favour at the present time. Personally, I think there is not a more interesting class of plants, and when in flower they are very beautiful. The hardy rhododendrons and azaleas exhibited by Messrs. Waterer were a feast of colour. I cannot think why people grow laurels and other dingy things when they can have such shrubs as these, rather more expensive, perhaps, in the first instance, but not more troublesome afterwards, and infinitely superior. They must have peat, some say, but this is quite a mistake. Some magnificent plants were exhibited which had been grown entirely in loam. I have not said anything about the roses. I saw some very fine ones in the stands of Messrs. Paul, Cant, Mount, and other firms, but the end of May is rather early to see them at their best, especially in such a cold month as this has been. Caroline Testout was there, of course, and Mrs. John Laing and Liberty and Ulrich Brunner, all well coloured and perfectly shaped; the ramblers were also exhibited in great variety; but June is the month of roses, and in a few weeks' time we shall be better able to judge of the merits of any novelties. I must not, however, close without mentioning Frau Karl Druschski. The flowers which I saw of this rose certainly entitle it to be called the finest white in existence.—Your affectionate cousin, MONA.

Corset Krutoid.—The latest nouveauté Parisien in tricot forms an elegant and smart up-to-date contour and lengthens the waist line.—Write or call at Mesdames Sykes, Josephine, & Co., The Royal Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, London.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

DEAREST MADGE,—How sad to have to say with a sigh of relief, "Thank goodness, May is over!" It is almost as if a person were to rejoice with an unnatural joy that his youth has come to an end. Yet who could have helped feeling glad last week that the mockery of the merry month was past and gone. In what a different spirit from one of sadness came the thought, it cannot always be May; not always a long succession of grey, gloomy, and glacial days. The merciless month that was such a traitor to tradition was gone, we might hope for sunshine and summer to rejoice us at last. With June's arrival surely the sun will come again. How much worse it is to have bad days in summer than in winter! They are so much longer, so much more showy, and under our observation. So much more interfering too with our scheme of life. What is more deplorable than a "life long summer day" of rain and gloom? We are entitled to expect so much from it, that deep disappointment sinks our hearts, to add to our other feelings of discontent. Last week we often would have wished the days many hours shorter, so that we might shut them out of sight, with a clear conscience, and betake ourselves to our firesides and bright lamp-light. We were not worse off, however, than were you, on your side of the water; we had at least the consolation of knowing that we had no special Irish grievance regarding the weather.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen have been staying at the Viceregal Lodge throughout the month, and Lady Aberdeen is now almost quite recovered. The weather, however, is very trying for all who have had the misfortune to get rheumatic colds. It is hard to shake off the grim grip of rheumatism in damp, cold weather. No doubt this season will bring a great harvest to the "cure" resorts in the coming months. Lady Aberdeen has been energetically devoting herself to promoting the interests of the Irish Industries section of the Exhibition, which was opened by Lord

AT THE TELEPHONE.

SHE: Hello! Who's that?

HE: Ahem!

SHE: Oh, it's you, is it? The usual thing, I suppose; detained, important business; can't get home to dinner; sorry, and so on.

HE: Right again, but I shall be home as quickly as possible.

SHE: Well, then, bring me a bottle of Odol.

HE: Speak louder, dear, I can't hear; a bottle of what?

SHE: Odol, O-d-o-l. Odol. Are you there?

HE: Yes, all there, darling, all there.

SHE: And you know what I mean?

HE: Of course I do. It's that lovely tooth and mouth wash I've heard the fellows at the club talking so much about lately. Since they've been using it, they do nothing but smile, to show their beautiful teeth.

SHE (eagerly): Yes, Jack, yes, that's it. (Then more seriously.) But I say, Jack, if you've heard so much in its praise, why haven't you bought me some before now?

HE: Well, you see, dear, I didn't think your teeth could be improved; besides, your smiles are perfection, and——

SHE: Don't be ridiculous, Jack. You don't understand. Odol is a serious matter. It isn't a tooth-powder or a tooth-soap, or any of those antiquated things which are useless for preventing fermentation which causes the teeth to decay. Odol gets into every crevice of the mouth and between the teeth and washes the mouth clean of every impurity. Odol is a liquid antiseptic dentifrice, and its refreshing effect lasts for several hours after using it. Odol is such a famous———

HE (impatiently): Well, well, it's all right; you shall have it, and I'll bring a bottle for myself as well.

SHE: Do, Jack, do; but I say, you must bring half-a-crown bottles; they contain twice as much as the eighteen-penny ones.

HE: How economical you are getting.

SHE: And bring the Sweet-Rose-flavoured Odol for me, please, Jack. The Standard with the stronger flavour, will perhaps be best for you.

HE: I'll not forget, my dearest Odol—idol I mean. Ta-ta.

They ring off.

Aberdeen last Saturday, she accompanying him. Although the Exhibition was opened many weeks ago, this particular section was not ready to open at the time. We are always so busy making history over here, that somehow or other, industrial things get into the background and are not always up to time. Lady Aberdeen won many prizes at the Irish Kennel Club Show last week. She has the most delightful Scotch terriers, and such crowds of them, one wonders if she can know them all one from the other. Are you fond of these intelligent, independent-looking creatures? Some of her white terriers are quite adorable amongst dogs. Lord Dudley paid a visit at the Viceregal Lodge, on his way to England from his fishing lodge in Connemara, which he continues to rent since the time of his Viceroyalty. Lady Dudley's illness called him suddenly away to England.

Lady Aberdeen made a most interesting speech on opening the Irish Industry section at the Exhibition, and, above all, was able to tell of the way in which so many of them had prospered since she gave them a send-off in the time of Lord Aberdeen's first Viceroyalty. Under her very active superintendence the section is extremely interesting and very instructive, not only in what we are in our own villages, but in what we might be. However much we love to differ on most subjects over here, we are all in agreement with regard to Lady Aberdeen's warm heart for our interests, and her untiring and amazing energy in promoting them. Only those who live in the atmosphere of an infinite variety of conflicting opinions, as we do, know the difficulties of many of the works which she undertakes and carries through. Sir Antony MacDonnell was last week at the Under-Secretary's Lodge, with Lady MacDonnell. They dispense much hospitality at this most pleasant of official residences in the Phœnix Park, Lady MacDonnell being a charming hostess. We women, who don't interfere in politics, take the rumours very badly that politics might so far interfere with us as to deprive us of such pleasant members of society. Is it not enough to make us all suffragettes when our social interests are not considered in high official appointments? Lord and Lady Grenfell's departure from the Royal Hospital will be regretted by their many friends. Lord Grenfell's successor as Commander of the Forces in Ireland, Sir Neville Lyttelton, was, in his early days, in Dublin, for some time, on the staff of his cousin, Lord Spencer, during Lord Spencer's first Viceroyalty, when the Viceregal Court was very brilliant under the most popular Viceroy who ever "reigned" at Dublin Castle, and the most beautiful Vice-Queen. The old people who talk of these brilliant days say, of course, that none such will ever come again. But somehow or other they do come again, to the young; perhaps because they know no better, or perhaps just because they are young.—Yours ever, CLARE.

Next week I shall have some nice recipes.—Ever your loving cousin, MADGE.

DIAMOND RINGS & ORNAMENTS

Finest Quality, below Store and usual West End Prices.

SPINK & SON, LTD.,

DIAMOND AND PEARL MERCHANTS,

17 & 18, PICCADILLY, W., and 30, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C. Est. 1772.

Delicious

MAZAWATTEE

The "PREMIER" TEA of the World.

Pure and Exhilarating.
Sold Everywhere.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

SICKNESS, EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY, BURGLARY & FIDELITY GUARANTEE RISKS

INSURED AGAINST BY THE

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.

CAPITAL (fully subscribed) £1,000,000. CLAIMS PAID £5,000,000.

64, CORNHILL, LONDON. A. VIAN, Secretary.

EDUCATIONAL.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE. — Public School, with excellent buildings. Staff of sixteen graduates. Preparation for all public examinations. —Prospectus from The Rev. W. R. DAWSON, M.A.

AUCTIONS, &c.

TATTERSALLS.

Messrs. Tattersall beg to give NOTICE that their Thursday Sales have commenced and will be continued during the Season.

Sales every Monday and Thursday.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS, sent gratis, with full particulars. Schools also recommended. Medical &c., Association, Ltd., 22, Craven-street, Trafalgar-sq., W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 Gerrard.

APPEALS.

ROYAL MATERNITY CHARITY OF LONDON.

Founded 1757.

Patron—H M. THE QUEEN.

President—H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN OF SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

The Charity provides Midwives and Medical Attendance (Gratis) for poor Married Women in their Own Homes. Donors of £10 10s., three "Letters" annually for life; Annual Subscribers, four "Letters" per guinea.

The Committee earnestly pleads for gifts of money to extinguish the Charity's burdening Debt.

A Training School for Pupil-Midwives is attached to the Charity.

Major G. LIONEL B. KILLICK, Secretary.

Offices: 31, Finsbury square, E.C.

FRESH AIR HOMES. Slum to Sea. £2 gives two weeks' rest and change to ailing mother and three children at St. Leonards, Bexhill, or Old Windsor. FUNDS, old clothes, toys, books urgently NEEDED. Cheques crossed "Barclays'," payable Prebendary Carlile, Hon. Chief Sec., earmarked "Fresh Air Fund," to CHURCH ARMY Head-quarters, Marble Arch, W.

PHOSFERINE

The Greatest of all Tonics.

RADIATES HEALTH.

Used in Court and Cottage. Supplied by

ROYAL COMMANDS

To The Royal Family, The Empress of Russia, The King of Greece, The Queen of Roumania, The Dowager Empress of Russia, The Crown Princess of Roumania, and the principal royalty and aristocracy throughout the world.

It is the most powerful Nerve and Recuperative Tonic known. It removes Mental Depression, Want of Tone and Nerve Power. It has remarkable Health-giving, Strength-giving, Energising & Rejuvenating properties

Proprietors:—ASHTON & PARSONS, LIMITED. La Belle Sauvage, London, E.C.

SOUTH KENSINGTON HOTEL

Noted for its Comfort and Convenience. QUEEN'S GATE TERRACE, S.W. One of the most fashionable Hotels in London.

Telephone No. 573 Kensington. Telegrams—"South Kensington Hotel, London."

THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION.*

DR. ALABONE'S TREATMENT.

The remarkable success of the above method of cure, which, during the last forty years, has been the means of saving many thousands of consumptives from early graves, is vouched for both by medical men, who have proved its efficacy for themselves, and patients who by its means have been restored from what seemed certain death, to health and strength.

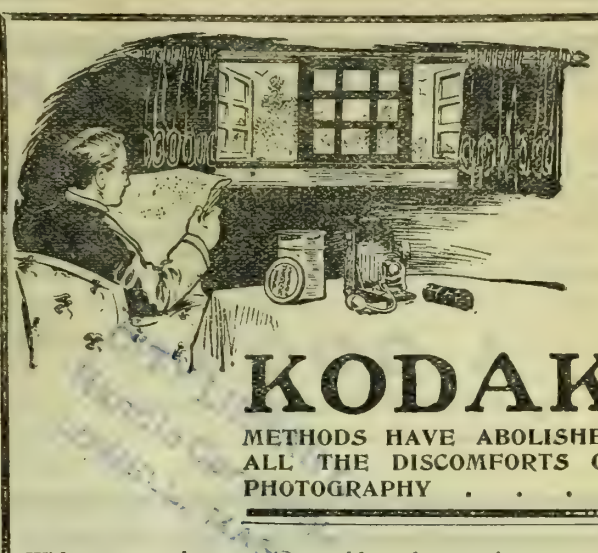
The following is a typical instance of cure when the doctor had stated that the patient "could not live more than a few months." This is only one of many similar testimonies to the efficacy of the treatment which have been received by the Editor of a contemporary :—

Shepherd's Bush.

Sir,—I have been much interested in the correspondence respecting Dr. Alabone's treatment of Consumption, and think it only right to give my experience of same. In 1899 I was very ill with affected lungs. I consulted two doctors, who told my father that 'I could not live more than a few months.' I consulted Dr. Alabone, and remained under his treatment for nine months. I have had no return of the trouble since then, and am now in perfect health. I feel so grateful to Dr. Alabone that I think it my duty to write this letter. My friends, and also my local medical adviser, were much astonished at my recovery. In writing this letter, I most sincerely trust it will be the means of giving hope and confidence to others, in the assurance that Dr. Alabone can cure Consumption. M. M. E.

We would recommend those of our readers who may unfortunately be suffering in Consumption to write to Dr. Alabone for particulars of his treatment, which he has kindly consented to send on application.

* "The Cure of Consumption, Chronic Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrh," illustrated by numerous cases "pronounced incurable" by the most eminent physicians; 39th edition, 170th thousand, price 2s. 6d., post free of Author, Edwin W. Alabone, M.D.Phil., D.Sc., ex-M.R.C.S.Eng., Lynton House, Highbury-quadrant, London, N. By the same Author: "Testimonies of Patients, with Comments on the Open-Air Treatment," price 1s.



KODAK

METHODS HAVE ABOLISHED ALL THE DISCOMFORTS OF PHOTOGRAPHY . . . .

Without any previous experience, without the necessity for a dark room at any time, and with the certainty of success, anybody can carry out the simple processes of

Kodak Photography

the features of which are

Prices, 5/- to £8
Complete Outfits from £1 1 0

DAYLIGHT LOADING
DAYLIGHT DEVELOPING DAYLIGHT PRINTING

Write for the new KODAK BOOK, free.

KODAK, Ltd., 57-61, Clerkenwell Rd., London E.C.,

Branches: 96, Bold Street, Liverpool; 72-74, Buchanan Street, Glasgow; 59, Brompton Road, S.W.; 60, Cheapside, E.C.; 115, Oxford Street, W.; 171-173, Regent Street, W.; 40, Strand, London, W.C.; and all Dealers.

CHINA & GLASS

Both Useful and Ornamental.

We cordially invite a personal inspection of our choice and thoroughly up-to-date stock. If that is not possible, write for a copy of our New Illustrated Catalogue, containing Faithful Reproductions in Colours of a wide selection of our goods.

ALFRED B. PEARCE & Co.
39, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C.

SINGER CYCLES

BEST OF ALL. BEST FOR ALL.

YOU CAN LOOK THE WHOLE WORLD IN THE FACE

without fear of criticism if your new Cycle is a SINGER—the very name suggests all that is most desirable in a Cycle. To taste the refinement of cycling pleasure one must ride with The Singer Perfect Oil Bath Case.

TERMS TO SUIT ALL INCOMES.

WRITE FOR LISTS.

Dept. T., SINGER & CO., Ltd., COVENTRY.

Fire. Burglary.

Assets exceed £2,000,000

THE OCEAN ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE CORPORATION LIMITED

The Corporation has paid over £6,000,000 in Claims

Employers' Liability. Accident Insurance

Fidelity Guarantees. All Kinds. Head Office, MOORGATE ST. LONDON, E.C.

COUNTRY HOUSE AGENTS' LIST.

BRIGHTON & HOVE.—A. F. GRAVES, Auctioneer and Estate Agent, 9, North-street-quadrant, BRIGHTON. For particulars of all houses to be LET or SOLD, apply as above.

BOURNEMOUTH.—JOLLIFFE & FLINT, Estate and House Agents. Lists of Furnished and Unfurnished Houses for Sale or Let, free by post.—Offices, 1, Arcade, Bournemouth.

COWES.—MESSRS. MARVINS, Princes Buildings. Agency for Sale, Purchase, or Charter of Yachts. Also House and Estate Agency for Isle of Wight. Established 1853 and patronised by Royalty.

EASTBOURNE HOUSES.—MESSRS. LAKE & CROWDER, Auctioneers, Surveyors, and Valuers, opposite the railway station. Telephone 8. Y. Agents for all the principal furnished and unfurnished houses.

OXFORD and READING.—HAMLET & DULAKE, Estate Agents, Auctioneers, Valuers, and Surveyors. Illustrated property list and all information gratis to applicants.

THE COLOUR OF LONDON.

By W. J. LOFTIE, F.S.A. With an Introduction by M. H. SPIELMANN, F.S.A., and Sixty Illustrations in Colour, after Water-colour Drawings by the Japanese Artist, YOSHIO MARKINO.

Large foolscap 4to, gilt top, 20s. net.

 Also 250 special copies on laid paper, the plates mounted, and the binding in whole parchment, 42s. net.

Truth.—"His wonderfully fresh and clever work brings out vividly beautiful effects in 'the colour of London' which will be a revelation even to those who imagine that they have a thorough appreciation of it."

A copy of this book has been accepted by His Majesty the King.

A COQUETTE IN CRAPE.

By FRANK DANBY, Author of "Pigs in Clover." Foolscap 8vo, cloth limp, 1s. net.

Court Journal.—"It is a tragic little book, but it is a pleasant one . . . it is very welcome."

CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

"DISTINCTLY THE BOOK OF THE SEASON."

The Crimson Azaleas

"THE MOST ABSORBING NOVEL OF RECENT YEARS." GET IT TO-DAY. PRICE 6/-

A Secret History

THE BOOK OF THE WEEK IS WILFRID S. BLUNT'S "SECRET HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH OCCUPATION OF EGYPT." (15/- NET). IT IS A CANDID PERSONAL NARRATIVE OF GREAT POLITICAL IMPORTANCE.

Army Reform

READ THE RIGHT HON. R. B. HALDANE'S VOLUME OF ADDRESSES, "ARMY REFORM." NOW READY. PRICE 7/6 NET.

"Savages"

PHIL MAY, TOM BROWNE, AND DUDLEY HARDY ARE AMONG THE ILLUSTRATORS OF THE FASCINATING VOLUME "THE SAVAGE CLUB." BY AARON WATSON, WITH CHAPTER BY MARK TWAIN. PRICE 21/- NET.

Philanthropy?

EDGAR JEPSON'S NEW NOVEL, "THE FOUR PHILANTHROPISTS," IS A DELIGHTFUL STORY OF A SCHEME FOR THE PAINLESS REMOVAL OF HARMFUL MEMBERS OF SOCIETY. 6/-.

Published by T. FISHER UNWIN, London.

PUBLISHED TO-DAY.

NEW BOOK BY THE BARONESS ORCZY.

MESSRS. GREENING have pleasure in announcing the publication of a new book by the Author of "The Scarlet Pimpernel," entitled

THE TANGLED SKEIN

A POWERFUL HISTORICAL ROMANCE.

In this new romance the BARONESS ORCZY is at her best. The story is enthralling interest throughout. The scene is laid in old Hampton Court in the days of Mary Tudor and her picturesque and brilliant Court.

6s. THE TANGLED SKEIN 6s.

Other notable Novels in Messrs. Greening's List are "The Mascotte of Park Lane," by Lucas Cleeve; "Richard, the Brazen," by Cyrus Brady; "The Loafer," by Gurney Gillman; "A Son of Helvetia," by A. Wakley; "And the Moor gave up its Dead," by Eric Harrison; "A Just Fate," by George Long.

GREENING & CO., Ltd., 91, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.

FRÄULEIN SCHMIDT

AND

MR. ANSTRUTHER:

Being the Letters of an Independent Woman.

6/- By the Author of 6/-

"ELIZABETH AND HER GERMAN GARDEN."

The PALL MALL GAZETTE says: "It is the perfection of letter writing."

The WESTMINSTER GAZETTE says: "Contains more beautiful thoughts and suggestions than any of the author's former writings."

THE CASE OF SIR JOHN FASTOLF, and other Historical Studies. By D. WALLACE DUTHIE. Large Post 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready To-day.

WAR AND THE WORLD'S LIFE. By Colonel F. N. MAUDE, C.B., Author of "Cavalry: Its Past and Future," "Evolution of Modern Strategy from 18th Century to Present Time," &c. With Diagrams, demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [In a few days.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

A BOOK ON INDIA, AND SOME NOVELS.

INDIA—THEN AND NOW.

The first reviews of MR. H. G. KEENE'S fascinating history of the early adventurers in India—the men who made the British conquest of India possible—justify us in thinking that every one interested in our Eastern Empire should not fail to read this book. The Spectator declares, in the course of a whole-page review, that HINDUSTAN UNDER FREE LANCES (15s. net) "ought to be read by all students of Indian history"; the Outlook, also in a long review, speaks of "Mr. Keene's deeply interesting book." This history of men like De Boigne, Thomas, the Skinners, and the Hessings is fuller of adventure than any novel, and has the merit of dealing with a period in Indian history that is too little known.

SOME NEW NOVELS. 6s. each.

The latest of our novels for the summer season is THE FEAST OF BACCHUS, by ERNEST G. HENHAM, a "study in dramatic atmosphere" which the Reader recommends as "a book of strange adventures, of ghostly, nightmare visions: you will want to read it at a sitting, but do not begin it at bedtime unless your nerves are in a thoroughly healthy condition." A book of somewhat similar type, that should appeal to all interested in the occult, is ONE OR TWO, by THEO. DOUGLAS. Three new novels that have been warmly received by the Press, and should on no account be missed, are FORTUNE'S FOOL, by F. E. WYNNE (a new writer of exceptional promise): THE NANCY MANŒUVRES, by CHARLES GLEIG; and THE BARONY OF BRENDON, by E. H. LACON WATSON.

BROWN, LANGHAM, & CO., LTD.,
78, New Bond Street, W.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.'s List

QUEEN HORTENSE

and her Friends

By I. A. TAYLOR

Author of "Queen Henrietta Maria," &c.

In 2 volumes, cloth gilt and gilt top, 24s. net.

Illustrated with 24 Full-page Plates and 2 Photogravure Portraits.

"Her narrative is throughout interesting. Our readers must take our word for it that if they are in search of entertainment they cannot do better than resort to these volumes."—Outlook.

ON FRIDAY NEXT

QUEENS OF BEAUTY

and their Romances

By W. WILLMOTT DIXON

With 2 Photogravure Plates and 24 other Full-page Portraits.

In 2 vols., buckgram gilt and gilt top, 24s. net.

In this book Mr. Willmott Dixon relates the histories of some of the most beautiful and witty Englishwomen. The book is written in such a form that each life-story is connected with its successor, and the volumes form a graphic account of the wit and beauty of two centuries.

READY IMMEDIATELY

COMMANDER PEARY'S

NEAREST THE POLE

A narrative of a great achievement after extraordinary dangers and privations, full of thrilling situations, with 80 Illustrations selected from a large collection of Photographs taken by the Author

THE PROBLEM OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

By Major CHARLES ROSS, D.S.O.

Author of "Representative Government and War."

In cloth gilt, 12s. net.

"Major Ross is probably the first military writer who has as yet had the courage to grapple with the most complex question of the day. As a work on strategy and on the art of war generally the work is of very great interest, it is well worth reading, and is a valuable contribution to the military literature of the day."—United Service Gazette.

THE NEWEST 6/- NOVELS

THIS DAY

LOVE AT ARMS

By RAFAEL SABATINI

Author of "The Trampling of the Lilies," "The Tavern Knight," &c.

3rd EDITION

A

DULL GIRL'S DESTINY

By Mrs. BAILLIE REYNOLDS

Author of "Thalassa," "The Man who Won," &c.

HATE OF EVIL

By KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN

Author of "Barbara West," &c.

"We congratulate Mr. Snowden on his book. It is an honest piece of work well done; take the book all through, it is one to read, enjoy, and recommend. The character-drawing is especially excellent."—Daily Chronicle.

"As Stimulating as a tonic"

A THOROUGHBRED IN TRAINING

By C. C. and E. M. MOTT

Authors of "A Man of No Family."

"A delightfully racy story. Both the hero and the heroine are thoroughbreds through and through. The authors have a breezy style which is admirably suited to the story, they can describe all the pastimes which fill up the life of a sportsman with a verve and brilliancewhich carry the reader along. One of the most considerable gifts of the authors is their power of conveying atmosphere. A delightful book for holiday reading, because it is full of the joie de vivre, and it is equally good for working days, since it is as stimulating as a tonic."

—QUEEN

London: HUTCHINSON and CO., Paternoster-row.

Inebriety can be Cured.

We guarantee that anyone who has a desire to free himself of these awful curses can do so by taking the Keeley Treatment, and will leave the Institute without the slightest crave or desire for either Alcohol or Drugs.

How often must people be told that drink, after it has reached a certain stage, is a disease, which the poor victim again and again endeavours to throw off, while his friends say: "Use your will power and knock it off!" As well say the same of any other disease; in any case, the disease must be eradicated by scientific treatment.

The Keeley Treatment is always administered by regularly qualified physicians, who have made a special study of Inebriety. After carefully inquiring into the history of each patient, and making a thorough physical examination, they treat each case according to the condition of the patient. No matter how long-standing the addiction, or how much has been taken, the result is invariably the same, a cure.

No constitution is too delicate for the Keeley Treatment, as the remedies are perfectly harmless.

Patients are given the utmost freedom; there is absolutely no confinement, and, until the remedies render it unnecessary, they are allowed their usual amount of alcohol or drugs.

"It really Cures."

"It really cures. It does what it professes to do." Such is the emphatic testimony of Mr. Eardley-Wilmot, the well-known secretary of the Church of England Temperance Society, who for some years has had the Keeley method under close observation in this country. He tells how case after case that had been considered hopeless has yielded speedily to the Keeley Cure, the patients returning to their work full of vigour, and happy in the restoration of all that makes life worth living.

Think! either for yourself or others:

will you allow them or yourself to be utterly destroyed when an absolute cure is at hand?

We can show you hundreds of letters of gratitude from patients who have taken the treatment, and who are willing that their names should be given, or they will correspond direct with prospective patients.

Write us to-day and we will prove to you that this cure is an incontrovertible fact, approved by some of our most eminent men, among them the following: Rev. Canon Fleming, B.D.; the Right Hon. Lord Montagu of Beaulieu; H. W. Forster, Esq., M.P.; Vice-Admiral Woodward, C.B.; Rev. R. J. Campbell, M.A.; W. Hind-Smith, Esq.; and Eardley-Wilmot, Esq., R.N., Secretary of the Church of England Temperance Society.

More than half a million

have taken the treatment, among them 17,000 physicians. Does not this fact alone speak volumes? And twenty per cent. of our patients come through the recommendation of their family physician.

About one-third of the patients are ladies, all of whom have apartments outside the Institute, of their own selection.

Private Treatment.

At the constant demand of Patients wishing to be treated privately, we have decided to establish a Physician at a watering-place on the South Coast, where they can be treated without the knowledge of their friends or strangers.

The treatment takes four weeks for alcohol (for drugs five to six weeks), and is carried out in the United Kingdom only at the Keeley Institute, 9, West Bolton Gardens, London, S.W.

Miss ELLEN TERRY,

WHOSE AUTOBIOGRAPHY COMMENCES IN THIS WEEK'S M.A.P.

Copyright Photo. Lallie Charles.

EVERYBODY WILL BE DELIGHTED to hear that Miss Ellen Terry has just completed her autobiography, and that its publication in serial form commences in this week's M.A.P.

"The Story of My Life," as her reminiscences are entitled, is a story of absorbing interest. It will rank as one of the most important biographical works of recent years. It is at once the story of the astonishing career of the greatest of actresses, the story of the stage for the last fifty years, and the story of a woman whose friends are as the stars in number, who has held enthralled the hearts of all who have known or seen her by her beauty and by her charm.

"The actress is great, but the woman is greater than the actress," a famous critic once wrote, "and in the final analysis of Miss Terry's acting, it will be found that her enchantment is that of a unique personality."

And this personality breathes through every line of the autobiography. "To read it is to hear her speak and see her smile," a friend who has been privileged to see the manuscript. Just as she charms when she appears in public or in private, so does she charm through her pen. As a brilliant writer, an incomparable story-teller, Ellen Terry is now to shine in a new part.

"For years," she confesses, "I have contemplated telling this story, and for years I have put off telling it. When it was suggested to me that I ought to write down my recollections in the year of my Jubilee, all the difficulties of the undertaking began to frighten me. I could not deny that I had had an eventful life, packed full of incident, and that by the road I had met many distinguished and interesting men and women. I could not deny that I had been fifty years on the stage, and this meant enough material for fifty books."

So, appalled at the task, but inspired by the knowledge that her story would be warmly welcomed by the great public that had proved so loyal to her through fifty years, she began to write of her eventful life.

All readers are well advised on no account to miss the opening chapters of Ellen Terry's "Story of My Life," appearing in this week's M.A.P.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

Landor's Suppressed Commentary.

CHARLES JAMES FOX

By WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR. Edited by Stephen Wheeler. With Portrait. 9s. net.

"We must not part company with this welcome and valuable piece of literary salvage without thanking the editor for his brief and pointed notes. They are models of commentary, since they tell us precisely what we want for understanding the text, neither more nor less."—Outlook.

SIR JAMES GRAHAM

The Life and Letters of.

By CHARLES STUART PARKER, Editor of "Life of Sir Robert Peel. With Portraits and other Illustrations. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 24s. net.

Sir James Graham was one of those 19th Century Statesmen to whom England and the Empire owe much; although his fame has been somewhat obscured by his great Parliamentary contemporaries. At once, after leaving Oxford, he plunged into active political life, taking part in the negotiations with Murat, King of Naples. Five years later he became Whig Member for Hull, and thereafter experienced a long but very chequered career in and out of the House of Commons. He was twice First Lord of the Admiralty, under Earl Grey and Lord Aberdeen, and was Home Secretary in the Ministry of Sir Robert Peel. He was an active supporter of Reform, and a sound financier.

CAPTAIN JAMES COOK

"The Circumnavigator." By ARTHUR KITSON. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

"We put down Mr. Kitson's delightful history with genuine regret. He has disproved a lot of the current tales about Cook, and he has given us the facts of the man's life in a just proportion, and with a delicate literary art. . . . No hero on our list could have a biographer more competent to show him in his habit as he lived."—Nation.

AN AUSTRALIAN NATURALIST

The Rambles of.

By PAUL FOUNTAIN, Author of "The Eleven Eaglets of the West," etc. From the Notes and Journals of THOMAS WARD. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

EUROPE & THE TURKS

(The Cause and Cure of the Trouble in the Balkan Peninsula).

By NOEL BUXTON, sometime M.P. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

"There must be many people who are anxious to aquaint themselves with outlines of the problem expressed shortly, simply, and correctly. For such persons no better book could be found than this by Mr. Noel Buxton."
—Daily News.

SMALL HOLDINGS.

Their Origin, Possibilities, and Prospects.

By L. JEBB. With Illustrations, demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.

 Two Chapters, viz.: those (I.) on the WORKING OF THE ACT OF 1902, 1s. net, and (II.) HOW LANDLORDS CAN CREATE SMALL HOLDINGS, 6d. net, are published as separate pamphlets.

The EARL OF ONSLOW, in the House of Lords, on April 25th, said:—"Their Lordships should read the evidence of Miss Jebb, who had visited all the counties of England on the question of small holdings."

THE LICENSED TRADE

An Independent Survey.

By EDWIN A. PRATT, Author of "Licensing and Temperance in Sweden, Norway and Denmark," "British Canals," etc. Large Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

THE MONTHLY REVIEW.

Edited by CHARLES HANBURY-WILLIAMS.

JUNE. 2s. 6d.

THE PRESENT STRENGTH AND DISTRIBUTION OF THE FLEET—A NAVAL OFFICER.
GREAT ACTING IN ENGLISH—ARTHUR SYMONS.
IN PRAISE OF HIPPO THE SAGE—GILBERT COLERIDGE.
LATEST LIGHTS ON SMALL HOLDINGS—FRANCIS A. CHANNING.
SPINOZA: AN ESSAY—EMANUEL STERNHEIM.
GHOSTS OF PICCADILLY—THE PALMERSTONS AND CAMBRIDGE HOUSE, G. S. STREET.
THE ESSENCE OF HARDYISM—LINDSAY S. GARRETT.
ART AS A FACTOR IN THE STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE—FELIX CLAY.
IN A BORDER MINING CAMP—F. W. BOLT.
JOHN THURTELL'S SECOND TRIAL—WALTER FRITH.
SKETCHES IN SOMALILAND—ARCTURUS.
THE CONVERSION OF WESTMINSTER—EDWIN A. PRATT.
VIRGIL'S DYING SOLILOQUY.
SOME PRINCIPLES OF IMPERIAL TAXATION—MARCUS R. P. DORMAN.
LAURENCE HOPE—JAMES FLECKER.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

VACHELL'S "HER SON"

6/-

The book by a famous author which has given rise to so great a diversity of opinion among the critics.

WHAT THEY SAY:

"Its sentiment, strong yet delicate and appealing, never degenerates into sentimentality."
—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"An original, curious, and interesting plot woven of a great-hearted and great-souled woman's love."—THE WORLD.

"Mr. Vachell has given a woman to the race that makes us proud of what modern education and civilisation can effect. It is a book for the young men and women of England."
—COUNTRY LIFE.

"'Her Son' has the same faults of sentimentality which marred 'The Hill.'"—
DAILY MAIL.

"Dorothy Fairfax is unutterably stupid."—PALL MALL.

"How false, how artificial is the underlying conception of life!"
—MORNING LEADER.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

FALL IN SECURITIES!
Capitalists' Fear of Socialism
Labour's Attack upon Capital.

The Investors' Defence
The Investors' Defence
The Investors' Defence

The Investors' Defence against Labour's Attack upon Capital.

The June number of the "Financial Review of Reviews" contains an important article, which explains how individual investors can protect themselves against the widespread attacks of Labour upon Capital. The article is based upon the Stock Exchange values, published by the "Bankers' Magazine" month by month during the last ten years, and suggests a complete plan for protecting the individual investor's capital against considerable fluctuations in the realizable value of his entire holdings.

"Financial Review of Reviews."

Other Contents of the June Number.

DUTCH EXPERIENCE OF AMERICAN INVESTMENTS. By S. F. Van Oss INVESTMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN SOUTH AMERICA. By Percy F. Martin, F.R.G.S. HOW TO READ A PROSPECTUS. By George Withers.—TOPICS OF THE MONTH. MONTH'S NEW ISSUES.—DIGEST OF 260 COMPANIES' REPORTS PUBLISHED DURING MAY.—FOUR YEARS' PRICES, DIVIDENDS' AND YIELDS OF 5,000 STOCK EXCHANGE SECURITIES.

100 PAGES READING MATTER
166 PAGES TABULAR MATTER.

THE LARGEST FINANCIAL PUBLICATION IN THE WORLD.

PRICE, 1s. Post free. ANN. SUB., 10s.

Of all Newsagents and Booksellers, or direct from the Publishers, 2, Waterloo-place, London, S.W.

"Financial Review of Reviews."

Some Recent Publications issued by Hurst and Blackett.

MADAME ALBANESI'S NEW NOVEL.

THE STRONGEST OF ALL THINGS.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A clever and ingenious plot, with some good character sketching in it. . . . For care, coherence, and varied and sustained interest this novel ranks among Madame Albanesi's best."—Daily Chronicle.

THE PASSING OF THE THIRD FLOOR BACK.

By JEROME K. JEROME. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"There is a quaint flavour about Mr. Jerome's new book of short stories . . . which is quite pleasant."—Tribune.

"All the stories are on a high level of literary quality and imaginative brilliance."—Scotsman.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

NEW NOVEL by PERCY WHITE.

COLONEL DAVERON.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A stirring tale, which will be especially welcome to the author's numerous admirers as a remarkable example of his rich and resourceful talent."—The World.

"The book is brilliant in the extreme. It is unusual in its theme, brilliant in its dialogue, firm in its grip on character, and telling in its marshalling of a unique plot."—Liverpool Daily Post and Mercury.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

NEEDLES AND PINS.

A Sequel to "If I Were King."

By JUSTIN HUNTLY McCARTHY.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A fascinating romantic tale. The book abounds in dramatic incidents . . . rich in powers of description and analysis."—Scotsman.

DEAD LOVE HAS CHAINS.

By M. E. BRADDON. 3s. 6d.

"Equal to the best of the works written in her prime in neatness of construction, in cleverly maintained interest, and in all those qualities of imagination and wise knowledge of men and things which make her books so much more than merely melodramatic."—Daily Mail.

NEW VOLUME OF STORIES BY

W. W. JACOBS.—SHORT CRUISES.

With 38 Illustrations and Cover Design by WILL OWEN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Mr. Jacobs' humour is as irresistible as ever in these tales."—Truth.

HURST & BLACKETT, Ltd., 182, High Holborn, W.C.

New Edition (17th). Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Boards, 1s. Of all Booksellers, or post free from the publishers.

THE DIETETIC CURE OF OBESITY.

("FOODS FOR THE FAT.")

With a Chapter on Gout and its Dietetic Treatment.

By Dr. YORKE DAVIES.

CONTENTS.—Evils of Corpulency. Dangerous Conditions due to Corpulency, such as Weak Heart, Gout, &c. Diet the only Safe and Permanent Cure at any age. Quack Medicines to reduce weight dangerous and useless. Evils of Over-eating and Sedentary Habits. Food in its Relation to Work, Exercise, &c.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, W.C.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY AND AFTER.

JUNE.

The Unrest in India—its Meaning. By Ameer ALI, C.I.E. (late a Judge of H.M.'s High Court of Judicature in Bengal).
Are Christian Missions in India a Failure? By the Right Rev. the BISHOP OF MADRAS.
Indian Administration and "Swadeshi." By E. B. HAVELL.
The King of Siam and His Country. By FREDERICK VERNEY, M.P. (late Councillor of the Siamese Legation).
The "White Flag" in Jamaica. By IAN MALCOLM.
The Capture of Private Property at Sea. By JULIAN S. CORBETT.
The Church Difficulties in France from a French Point of View. By the COMTESSE DE FRANQUEVILLE.
The Homes of Our Food Supply. By Lady PRIESTLEY.
Orchard Cities. By FRANK ALTON MORGAN.
The Wandering Jew. By Professor EDUARD KÖNIG.
Reviewers and Reviewed: the New Culture. By A. G. HYDE.
Britain's Task in Egypt. By Sir WALTER MIÉVILLE, K.C.M.G.
Children's Competitions II. By EVA M. MARTIN.
The Dogs of Baghdad: A Study from Life. By Major-General W. TWEEDIE, C.S.I.
Japanese Education. By BARON KIKUCHI.
How Local Government is worked in Ireland. By GERALD ARBUTHNOT.
The Irish Council Bill. By the Right Hon. the EARL OF DUNRAVEN, K.P.

London: SPOTTISWOODE & CO., Ltd., 5, New-street Square.

JUST PUBLISHED A BOOK ON

FANCY DRESS

CONTAINING

30

BEAUTIFUL BARTOLOZZI-COLOURED PLATES ILLUSTRATING THE MOST NOTABLE FASHIONS IN THE PAST HISTORY OF COSTUME POST FREE ON REQUEST

LIBERTY AND CO

REGENT STREET, LONDON.

NOTHING CAN BE ANY GOOD FOR HAIR which is FALLING OUT or PREMATURELY GREY EXCEPT CAPSULOIDS.

Because Nothing but Capsuloids Does or Can Destroy the Germs and thus Remove the Cause.

A PROMINENT PHYSICIAN says: "One of my most intelligent patients told me yesterday that I might call Capsuloids humbug but that they were a most wonderful medicine. He asked me to look at his hair and see the effect; he certainly does look well. He is not the first person who has spoken thus highly of them. Please send me six boxes under plain wrapper, as I feel I must experiment and satisfy myself."

The Largest Manufacturing Chemists in the World admit that after trying for months to analyse Capsuloids, they have failed completely, and so cannot discover how to produce them.

Capsuloids are never harmful to any part of the body; instead, they are most wonderfully beneficial. Hundreds tell us of their clear skins and exquisite complexions when writing that their hair troubles have been cured.

LOOK AT THIS PICTURE OF A HAIR GREATLY MAGNIFIED, and learn how your hair grows, why it becomes prematurely grey, why it does not grow well, and why it falls out. The whole hair is produced by the multiplication of those growing cells which lie at the bottom and form its roots. They rest upon the little blood vessels which carry the blood from which the cells draw all their nourishment. You can easily see from this picture that when the harmful germs settle in these growing cells, and go on multiplying, they will injure the cells, which causes the hair to loosen and fall out, or become prematurely grey. If those germs are not checked, they will in time quite destroy the cells, and as the roots would then be dead, it is clear no hair could ever grow from a dead root. These germs must be killed quickly, and the only medicine ever discovered which will do it is—

CAPSULOIDS.

Daly's Theatre, Leicester Square, W.

I have found Capsuloids of remarkable benefit to my hair since I commenced to take them a little time back. They are rapidly renewing my hair, which was painfully thin. I have every reason for being pleased that I tried them, and I constantly recommend them to those about me.

(Signed) W. LOUIS BRADFIELD.

Price 2s. 3d. per box. Special Sample given when this coupon is enclosed, and three boxes are ordered direct from us.

Larger Sample with six.

Come and have your Hair Examined Free between 10 to 1 and 2 to 5.

Send for valuable Free Hair Booklet which gives full Explanations.

THE CAPSULOID CO., LTD., 47, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

COUPON TRUTH, 5/6/07

Branch Offices— The Capsuloid Co., Brockville, Ontario. The Capsuloid Co., Morristown, New York, U.S.A.

HITCHING'S GOLD MEDAL BABY CARS

Under the Patronage of the English Royal Family.

LONDON.

86, NEW BOND STREET; 329, 331, OXFORD STREET (Corner of Bond-st. and Oxford-st.); 45, KNIGHTSBRIDGE, S.W.

LIVERPOOL.

74, BOLD STREET.
165, DUKE STREET.

MANCHESTER.

15, ST. MARY'S GATE.

BANKERS:—
LONDON CITY AND MIDLAND BANK.

HITCHINGS, Ltd., are the Premier Manufacturers of High Grade Baby Carriages in the World, having special facilities for the supply of High Grade Carriages at the lowest prices.

BABY CARRIAGES from 3 to 25 Guineas.
BABY CARS from 2 to 20 Guineas.

Pictorial Lists Post Free.

Telegrams: "HITCHING, LONDON." Telephone: 2543, GERRARD.

BIRKBECK BANK (established 1851), Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C. 2½ per cent. interest allowed on Deposit Accounts. 2 per cent. interest on Drawing Accounts with Cheque Book. All general Banking Business transacted. ALMANACK, with full particulars, POST FREE.—C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the Control of the Committee.

A list of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

STERILE MARRIAGE: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By a late Senior Physician to a Hospital for Women. A new Edition just published. Post free, 3s. 9d.
London: Shelley & Co., Limited, 88, Gracechurch-street.

CONCERTS.

QUEEN'S HALL.
THURSDAY AFTERNOON NEXT, at 3.
HERBERT FRYER.
THE ENGLISH PIANIST. Reappearance in London.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., 1s., at Hall; and usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION KARL JUNKERMANN, 122, Regent Street, W.
FRANK BUCKINGHAM, General Manager.

BECHSTEIN HALL.—Madame
JULIA CULP, VOCAL RECITAL.
SATURDAY NEXT, at 3.15.
At the Piano, ERICH WOLFF.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall; Usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.

BECHSTEIN HALL.
MONDAY NEXT, JUNE 10, at 3.15.
Miss FLORENCE
TRUMBULL, PIANOFORTE RECITAL.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall; usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.

QUEEN'S HALL.
MISCHA ELMAN. NEXT RECITAL.
TUESDAY AFTERNOON NEXT, June 11, at 3.
Vocalist, Miss CLARA ERLER.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., 1s., at Chappell's Box-office, Queen's Hall; and usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER,
Chatham House, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

EXHIBITIONS.

BALKAN STATES EXHIBITION, EARL'S COURT.
Open 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. 1s. Season Tickets, 10s. 6d. Weekly Tickets, 2s. 6d.
SERVIAN SECTION.—QUEEN'S PALACE.
BULGARIAN SECTION.—IMPERIAL COURT.
MONTENEGRIN SECTION.—DUCAL HALL.
WORKING TOBACCO EXHIBITS.
Manufactures, Raw Products, Arts and Industries.
IN THE BALKAN VILLAGE.
PEASANT DANCERS and GIPSY MUSICIANS FREE.
"THROUGH THE BALKANS IN TEN MINUTES."
VIEWS of MONASTIR, SHIPKA PASS, CATTARO, &c.
GRAND MILITARY AND PROMENADE CONCERTS.

ATTRACTIONS AT THE
BALKAN STATES EXHIBITION,
EARL'S COURT.
"OLD JAPAN" IN THE EMPRESS HALL,
With its Temples, Monuments, Teahouses, and Geisha.
A COLONY OF ART MISSIONARIES.
Exhibiting every phase of their wonderful Crafts.
A Wealth of Cherry, Peach, and Wistaria Blooms.
SEE THE WATERFALL AND THE LOTUS POND.
FUJI YAMA.—NIKKO TEMPLE AND NIKKO BRIDGE.
JAPANESE THEATRE. FREE.
"OLD JAPAN." "OLD JAPAN."
The New Great Chute—Maxim's Flying Machine.
Balkan Stalactite Caves—Pigmies from Ituri.
The FISHING CORMORANTS.
The Helter Skelter—The Salt Mine—The Switchback.
See the NEW ILLUMINATED GARDENS.

THOMAS McLEAN'S Forty-third Annual Exhibition of Pictures of the British and Foreign Schools is now open at T. McLEAN'S GALLERY, 7, Haymarket. Admission 1s.

GRAFTON GALLERIES, Grafton Street, W.
EXHIBITION of Works by Members of the French Society of Painters in Water colours.
Open daily 10 to 6. Admission 1s., including Catalogue.
Organised by EUGENE CREMETTI.

ROYAL DUBLIN SOCIETY.—HORSE & SHEEP SHOW.
AUGUST 27, 28, 29, 30.
For Prize Lists and Entry Forms apply to the Agricultural Superintendent, Leinster House, Dublin.
(By order) RICHARD J. MOSS, Registrar.

ROYAL HORSE SHOW,
RICHMOND, SURREY.
ROYAL HORSE SHOW,
RICHMOND, SURREY.
ROYAL HORSE SHOW,
RICHMOND, SURREY.
FRIDAY and SATURDAY, JUNE 14 and 15.
Admission, ONE SHILLING.

SELECT CONDUCTED SWISS TOURS.
CONDUCTED TOURS leave frequently for
PARIS, SWITZERLAND, and THE RHINE.
THE RHINE, BLACK FOREST, & SWITZERLAND.
PARIS and SWITZERLAND.
GRAND ALPINE TOUR
Occupying 14 to 22 days.
Travel tickets, hotel accommodation, carriage drives, steamer and rail excursions, sight-seeing, rail and hotel servants' fees, free allowance of luggage, and the services of a competent representative.
INCLUSIVE FARES from £22 10s.
NO EXTRAS.
Illustrated booklet post free, THOS. COOK & SON, Ludgate Circus, London, and Branch Offices.

AMUSEMENTS.

ROYAL OPERA, Covent Garden
GRAND OPERA EVERY EVENING.
(For full particulars see Daily Papers.)
Box-office, 10 to 10.

HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE. Mr. TREE.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30.
A WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE, By Oscar Wilde.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.30.

ST. JAMES'S, KING STREET, PALL MALL. Tel. 3903 Gerrard.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a New and Original Play,
JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOUR, by ALFRED SUTRO.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER. Miss EVA MOORE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING at 8 (doors open 7.40), a new musical play entitled
THE GIRLS OF GOTTENBERG.
MATINEE WEDNESDAY, June 12, at 2 (doors open 1.40).
Box-office open daily from 10 till 10.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.—Lessees and Managers, A. & S. GATTI. EVERY EVENING at 9.0,
MR. GEORGE,
by Mr. Louis N. Parker. Mr. Charles Hawtrey. At 8.15, JEMMY, by Louis N. Parker. Matinees, To-morrow (Thursday), & Wednesdays and Saturdays, at 2.15.

APOLLO. EVERY EVENING AT 8.10.
HENRY LOWENFELD, Sole Proprietor.
Tom B. Davis, Sole Lessee and Manager.
ROBERT COURTNEIDGE'S Production,
TOM JONES.
MATINEE SATURDAY, June 8, and EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.

DALY'S THEATRE, Leicester-square. — MR. GEORGE EDWARDES.—This Theatre will reopen on SATURDAY EVENING NEXT with a New Musical Play,
"THE MERRY WIDOW" (Die lustige Witwe).
Box-office open 10 till 6.

SAVOY.—PATIENCE, WEDNESDAY, FRIDAY, and SATURDAY, 8.25, and SATURDAY AFTERNOON, 2.30. YEOMEN OF THE GUARD, THURSDAY, 8.25. IOLANTHE, June 11.

GARRICK THEATRE. Mr. ARTHUR BOURCHIER and Miss VIOLET VANBRUGH. EVERY EVENING at 8.30 in
THE WALLS OF JERICHO, by ALFRED SUTRO.
MATINEE SATURDAY NEXT, and every following WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

CRITERION THEATRE (next door to Piccadilly Circus Tube Station). Lessee, SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM. Every Evening at 8.30, CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company in
THE LIARS,
by Henry Arthur Jones. MATINEES, SATURDAY NEXT, WEDNESDAY, June 12, and following WEDNESDAYS, at 2.30.

THE PLAYHOUSE, Northumberland-avenue.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. Cyril Maude. EVENINGS at 9. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 3 (by arrangement with Mr. Charles Frohman). CYRIL MAUDE as TODDLES. (Last Weeks.) At 8.20 and 2.20, THE DRUMS OF OUDE. All seats, including gallery, can be booked. Tel., 14,042 Central.

LYRIC THEATRE. Mr. LEWIS WALLER.
Lessee, Mr. William Greet. Under the Management of Mr. Tom B. Davis.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a play in four acts by Tom Taylor, entitled
CLANCARTY.
MATINEE WEDNESDAYS (except to-day, June 5) and SATURDAYS at 2.30

ALHAMBRA.—New Ballet, "QUEEN of SPADES," Mlle. Alexia, Danseuse de Genre; Maria Vinent, The Gignacs, Urbanora, Up-to-date Pictures, "L'AMOUR," and Grand Varieties. Doors 7.45.
Manager, GEORGE SCOTT.

EMPIRE, Leicester Sq.—New Ballet, SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY, Mlle. Adeline Genée, Première Danseuse, The Debutante, the Perezoffs, Le Pages, the Biograph, Mr. Hymack, &c. Every Evening at 8.
Manager, Mr. H. J. HITCHINS.

PALACE.—EVIE GREENE, R. G. KNOWLES, HORACE GOLDIN, CLARICE VANCE, LES TROMBETTA, &c. ISLE OF MAN MOTOR RACES, &c., on BIOSCOPE. EVENINGS 8 (doors 7.45). MATINEE, FULL PROGRAMME, SATURDAY at 2.
Managing Director, Mr. ALFRED BUTT.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION.—Brightest and most comfortable Promenade in London. Lifelike Portrait Models of T.M. The King and Queen of Spain. Madame Tussaud's Exhibition Band. Open 9 till 10.

LONDON HIPPODROME.
TWICE DAILY, at 2 and 8 p.m.
MIRTH, MYSTERY, AND SENSATION.
AQUATIC, STAGE, AND EQUESTRIAN SPECTACLE.

EXHIBITIONS.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.
SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, and includes selected Landscapes and Portraits by Early British Masters.
SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W.

DORE'S GREAT MASTERPIECES.—Architectural Drawings by P. FLETCHER-WATSON, R.B.A.; Sculpture, Paintings, and Miniatures by 13 Women Artists; Portraits by C. B. PRESCOTT; Water-colours by ESDAILE RICHARDSON; "The Liberal Government, 1906," by ARTHUR GARRATT. DORE GALLERY, 35, New Bond-st., W. 10 to 6. 1s.

TRUTH FOREIGN HOTEL LIST & CONTINENTAL GUIDE.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—GRAND HOTEL HENRION CORNELIUSBAD. The Leading English house.

BADEN-BADEN—HOTEL REGINA. Latest creation. The most up-to-date, elevated position.—J. LIPPERT, Proprietor.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL STEPHANIE. Allee of Lichtenthal. The leading Hotel.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL BRISTOL AND DÉPENDENCE. First-class. Facing baths and Sprudel. Occupying finest position.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL PRINCE OF WALES. HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL EULER. First-class. Close to Central Railway. Situated in a quiet position.—Prop. A. S. BUCHER.

BÂLE.—GD. HOTEL VICTORIA and NATIONAL. Opp. central Stn. First-class. Private apartments with bath.—Pr., PAUL OTTO.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL DE L'UNIVERS. Leading hotel. Suites of rooms with private baths.

BRUNNEN.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class, best situation of Brunnen. 250 beds. English billiards. American Bar.

BRUSSELS.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. Suites with private bath. Central heating.

CAPRI.—GRAND HOTEL QUISISANA. The leading first-class hotel. Every modern comfort.

CHAMOUNIX.—GRAND HOTEL IMPERIAL. The best-managed Hotel. Moderate charges.—H. BECKER.

CHATEAUX D'OEX.—GRAND and BERTHOD. 3,300 ft. Switzerland. Summer and Winter Sports.

COLOGNE.—HOTEL DISCH. The leading hotel in the town.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—GRAND HOTEL BELVEDERE. First-class.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—HOTEL VICTORIA. Favourite English House.

DRESDEN.—HOTEL BELLEVUE.—World-renowned. Very select. Situated on the Elbe and Opera Square. Suites and single rooms with private baths and toilet. Under the personal management of R. RONNEFELD.

EMS.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class.

EMS.—HOTEL FOUR SEASONS AND EUROPE. HOTEL FOUR TOWERS. First-class.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated. Full south.—Proprietor, CHIARI.

GENOA.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Apartments, with bath. Quiet rooms, garden on the fourth floor, splendid panorama.

GLION, above Montreux, Swiss.—NEW PARK HOTEL. First-class. Best situation. Own park. Open whole year. Winter sports.

HOMBURG (BATH).—RITTER'S PARK HOTEL. The leading hotel. Patronised by English and American Society.—Proprietor, C. RITTER.

HOMBURG (BATH).—VICTORIA HOTEL. Very first-class in every respect. The largest, also 4 villas. Finest garden.—J. BAEHL, Pr.

HOMBURG (BATH).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Suites with private bath and lavatory. "Hygienic diet at doctor's advice."

HOMBURG (BATH).—HOTEL BELLEVUE. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Vacuum cleaning indoors.—W. FISCHER, Prop.

KISSINGEN (BAD).—HOTEL VICTORIA and KAISERHOF. The leading English house.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE & RICHMOND. Motor garage. Leading hotels. Best situation. Open whole year.

LAUSANNE—HOTEL DE LAUSANNE. First-class Facing railway station. Latest comforts AD. SCHAER, Prop.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU SEJOUR. First-class family home. All latest comforts. Fine situation. Large garden.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL EUROPE. First-class. Finest situation. Very quiet. Entirely renovated. Latest improvements.—HAGEN BROS., Proprietors.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Open from March 4. In the vicinity of Station and landing boats.—G. MUTH, Proprietor.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BEAU RIVAGE. First-class family house. Write for illustrated pamphlet.—C. GIGER, Proprietor.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BELLEVUE AU LAC. First-class. Large dining-room, separate tables. Modern improvements.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. New hotel, unrivalled position, with latest improvements. The Hotel faces the English Church.—Proprietor, A. BROCCA, of Hotel Lugano.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BEAU REGARD & CONTINENTAL. First-class, beautifully situated in its own grounds. Nr. English church.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. First-class. Near Cathedral. Post, Teleg., & Rly. Office in hotel. Central heating. Suites with baths.

MONTE CARLO.—GRAND HOTEL DE LONDRES. Opposite Casino. Modern comfort. Reasonable terms. Always open.—Manager, J. KAISER.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Unrivalled situation and comforts.

MUNICH.—THE CONTINENTAL. Leading HOTEL and RESTAURANT. Entirely renewed and enlarged.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHERHOF. A good English house.—CARL POSCH, Proprietor.

NAPLES.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class. Situated in the finest and most select part of Naples. Magnificent view of town, Vesuvius, and bay. Proprietors, HAUSER & DOEPFNER.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable, in best situation. Splendid view of bay.

NAPLES.—GD. HOTEL DU VESUVE. Splendid position. Strictly first-class. Latest comfort.

NAPLES.—ELDORADO MODERN HOTEL. Good central situation. Moderate terms. Overlooking the Gulf.

NICE—GD. HOTEL DES ILES BRITANNIQUES. First-class, moderate terms.—Proprietor, ZAMBAIL. Summer, Hotel Roseg-Pontresina, Engadine.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel. Facing sea, nearest the Kursaal.—Props., HILLBRAND & BROWN.

OSTEND.—Sea bathing. The leading hotels on the beach are the CONTINENTAL, 400 beds, the SPLENDID, 400 beds. Rooms from 6 francs. Full board with room, 12 to 20 shillings, according to location.

PALERMO.—EXCELSIOR PALACE HOTEL. New. Leading hotel. Opened February, 1906.

PARIS.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Most luxurious and comfortable hotel in Paris. Entirely renovated.—A. LOTTI, Gen. Mgr.

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES and ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rendezvous of English and Americans.—Proprietor-Manager, A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—MERCEDES HOTEL, Place de l'Etoile. Most modern hotel in Paris. Opened April, 1904. Luxuriously furnished.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA, Avenue de l'Opéra. First-class. Latest and all modern improvements.—G. VAUTIER, Prop.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENÉE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PONTRESINA.—HOTEL KRONENHOF & BELLAVISTA. First-class. Best situation. Open whole year. Summer and Winter resort.

ROME.—REGINA HOTEL. New. Opposite Queen Margherita's Palace. One of the leading.—Managing Prop., E. BARBIANI.

ROME.—PALACE HOTEL. New. Up-to-date. BEAUSITE HOTEL. First-class family house.

ROME.—HOTEL ROYAL. The English House.

ROME—SAVOY HOTEL. First-class family hotel near the gardens.—Proprietor, J. LENGYEL.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family Hotel. Preferred position amongst the villas. Inclusive terms, Fr. 11 to 18.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ENGADINER KULM. Baths with suites and rooms. Golf, tennis, and all the winter sports.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL, the most fashionable. Proprietor, CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ST. PETERSBURG. Family hotel. Sunniest position, adjoining Kulm and all the Sport places. Inclusive terms, 10 to 16 fr.

TERRITET, Switzerland.—GRAND HOTEL & ALPES. Well-known rendezvous of English and American clientèle.

TERRITET.—GRAND HOTEL BON-PORT. Favourite English house. Apartments with baths. Most sheltered situation.

VEVEY.—GRAND HOTEL and PALACE HOTEL. The Fashionable Hotels. Two tennis courts.—ENG. MICHEL.

VEVEY.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. 120 rooms. Very latest improvements. Bath with private suite.—Proprietor, T. WHITE.

VEVEY.—Healthiest Swiss resort.—TROIS COURONNES HOTEL. First-class. Modern improvements. Most moderate terms.

WIESBADEN.—FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest position, opposite Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. Connected with the Magnificent Bathing Establishment. Situated at the Curplace. "The English Home."

WIESBADEN.—PALAST HOTEL. Kochbrunnen Bath establishment. Rooms with private bath. First-class, up-to-date.

FOREIGN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BEAULIEU.—HOUSES & ESTATES. E. KURZ. Opposite Station.) Villas furnished, to be let or sold.

SWITZERLAND

For Health and Pleasure.

VISIT

ST. MORITZ, Engadine,

6000 feet above Sea.

The exhilarating Alpine air, combined with the sunshine and blue sky of ST. MORITZ, promote renewed health and vigour.

GRAND HOTEL ST. MORITZ.

THE

HOTEL DE LUXE OF THE ALPS. . . . . .

Newly opened in December, 1905. Contains 300 rooms. Private Apartments with Bath and Dressing Rooms. Thorough quiet secured by double passages. Grand Society Room, with most beautiful views on the Lake and Mountains. Most modern Sanitary and Ventilating arrangements. Lift to all floors. Daily Concerts by the Milan Orchestra.

Tennis, Golf, Croquet, Boating on the Lake, Trout Fishing, Delightful Walks and Drives.

For Illustrated Booklet and Tariff address THE MANAGER.

TRUTH HOTEL LIST.

ANGLESEY.—BAY HOTEL, RHOSNEIGR.
Bracing air, unrivalled seas, sandy shores, rocky islands and headlands.
Golf, boating bathing.
Good shooting and trout fishing free to guests.
Moderate terms.

AYR.—STATION HOTEL, adjoining station. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards. For Business Gentlemen, Families, and Tourists to "The Land of Burns," and Ayrshire district. Within few minutes' walk of sea shore. Convenient Golf Courses. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Dumfries, and Turnberry.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Finest position on front.
Splendid public rooms. Orchestra twice daily.
Tepid sea-water Swimming Bath. Garage communicating with the Hotel.
Private suites, with bathrooms. Write for Illustrated Brochure.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms, sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—ROYAL CRESCENT HOTEL, MARINE PARADE. High Class, for Families and Gentlemen. Finest Position in Brighton for health and quiet. Sea view from nearly all rooms. Electric lighting throughout. Telephone, No. 1403. Telegrams—"Crescent Hotel, Brighton." Under personal supervision of GEORGE LOGAN, Proprietor.

DUBLIN.—HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE-STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High-class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

DUMFRIES.—STATION HOTEL, opposite station. Electric light. Lift. Billiards. Convenient for Firth of Solway, Castle Douglas, Sweetheart Abbey, Caerlaverock Castle, &c. Lovely Drives. Splendid centre for motor and cycle tours. Shooting. Fishing. Golf. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Turnberry.

EASTBOURNE.—The HYDRO HOTEL, a Select Residential Hotel, due south, facing sea. Spacious Lounges and Public Rooms. Garage. Special Week End Terms. Cinderella Dance Saturday. For Amusement Programme and Tariff (Illustrated), G. F. BERGANN, Manager.

GLASGOW.—ST. ENOCH STATION HOTEL. Best centre for business and pleasure. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (4 tables). Restaurant. Within shilling cab fare of all railway and steamboat termini in Glasgow. Near electric cars and opposite subway cable railways. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Ayr, Dumfries, and Turnberry.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE, facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

MALVERN.—The Premier Garden City of England.—The IMPERIAL HOTEL faces due South and offers every comfort at moderate and inclusive charges. A cheerful lounge, with electric light. The extensive baths (separate building), Brine, Turkish, &c., now open. Accommodation for Motors.—For tariff apply to Resident Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

MARGATE.—CLIFTONVILLE HYDRO. Fully licensed.
Finest position, facing sea and oval. Electric light and lift.
Roof garden. Billiards. First-class cuisine and wines.
Motor garage in own grounds. Turkish, dowsing, and electric baths.
Special week-end terms from Messrs. Cook & Sons.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
W. WORSTER, Manager.

TURNBERRY.—STATION HOTEL. "The most up-to-date Hotel in Scotland." Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (3 tables). Conservatory. Garage and stables. Sea Water Baths. Two fine golf courses for visitors. Lovely Climate. Charming district. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Dumfries.

PEEBLES HOTEL Hydropathic
Under Mr. A. M. THIEM'S Personal Management.
CONSTRUCTED FIREPROOF THROUGHOUT.
EQUIPPED on the most MODERN lines. Every Home Comfort. High-class Cuisine. Pure Bracing Air. Golf, Tennis, Croquet, and Bowling Greens. Motor Garage. Magnificent Recreation Hall.
A GERMAN BATH IN SCOTLAND.—Physician, H. Neu, M.D. (Bonn University). Every form of Electricity, Massage, and Baths. Diet—Gymnastics—also Sun, Air, and Electric Light Baths.

LEAMINGTON SPA.—REGENT HOTEL. Premier Hotel of Midlands. Ideal Summer Resort. Best centre in England for Motoring and Driving. Garage for 60 cars. Telegs. "Regent." 'Phone 109 Leamington.

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire, 500ft. alt. Bracing air, lovely scenery, 9-hole Golf course. Static Electric city. High-frequency Currents. Radiant Heat X Rays. Vibratory Massage.—J. I. KIRBY, Managing Director.

WESTGATE-ON-SEA. — WESTCLIFF HOTEL. Premier position, facing sea. Coffee, drawing, lounge, billiard rooms. Family suites. Stabling. Motor garage.—G. MARCH, Proprietor.

FOLKESTONE.—BATH HOTEL.
First class Private. Inclusive Terms.—Miss GRIFFITHS, late York House, Bath. Telephone 117.

MONTROSE ON THE NORTH SEA,
A Bracing Holiday Resort.
FAMOUS GOLF LINKS Ladies' and Gentlemen's Courses open to all at nominal charge.
SEA BATHING—Miles of Sand, with safe and commodious Bathing Station.
MONTROSE forms an attractive and healthy place of residence, and a convenient centre for Excursions to a neighbourhood of beauty and interest.
For Official Guide apply to Town Chamberlain.

Scheveningen

THE SEASIDE SUBURB OF THE HAGUE, HOLLAND.

Most Fashionable and Historic Resort on the North Sea.

ONLY 12 HOURS FROM LONDON

LUXURIOUS AND RAPID DAY AND NIGHT SERVICES.

Scheveningen affords visitors a never-ending source of interest and enjoyment, and constitutes a convenient centre for reaching all parts of the "Land of Windmills."

MILES OF MAGNIFICENT SANDS. SAFE BATHING.
GOLFING, TENNIS, CYCLING, DRIVING, RACING, AND EVERY OUTDOOR PLEASURE. EXCELLENT ROADS FOR MOTORING.

Concerts daily by the Berliner Philharmonic Orchestra. Distinguished Soloists. Balls and Theatre. Neapolitan Band in the Kurhaus Bar. Social Club.

SPLENDID HOTELS. (Opportunities for Bridge at all Hotels.) MODERATE TARIFFS.

Every information from the GENERAL MANAGER, Scheveningen; or SCHEVENINGEN BUREAU, 151, STRAND, LONDON (Adjoining Somerset House).

PEACE & PLEASURE.

SCHEVENINGEN,

forming as it does the sea-front of the

HAGUE,

is only a quarter of an hour from the centre of the city, and is connected by electric and steam trams, which run every five minutes. The forthcoming Peace Conference at the Hague gives a particular interest to Scheveningen.

LOWESTOFT GRAND HOTEL.

Standing in three acres of charming Grounds.

300 feet Sea frontage.

Special terms to competitors for the Tennis Tournament commencing June 17.

Lowestoft is the Healthiest Seaside Resort on the East Coast.

ILFRACOMBE.—CLARK'S direct principal sea fronting ARCADE PRIVATE HOTEL. Homely. Highly commended. Personal attention. Maple's furnishing. Electricity throughout. Moderate terms.

NORWAY PLEASURE CRUISES.

13 DAYS FROM £12 12s. "MIDNIGHT SUN." Two Berth Cabins. Luxurious Accommodation. Sailing June 8, 22; July 6, 20; Aug. 3, 17. Visiting Sand, Odde, Bergen, Fretheim, Gudvangen, Loen, Marok, Næss, and Molde.—Apply ALBION S.S. CO., LTD., Newcastle-on-Tyne.

R.M.S.P.

THE ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY,

LUXURIOUS TRAVEL.

Brazil, £50; Argentina, £62; West Indies, £38.

SHORT TRIPS TO

Spain, £9 15s.; Portugal, £12.

Apply to 18, Moorgate-street, E.C.; or 32, Cockspur-street, S.W.

Dine at Kettner's Restaurant

You will enjoy French dishes prepared as only Kettner's chef can prepare them, and from the wine cellar you can select your favourite vintage. The surroundings at Kettner's are pleasant and the prices moderate.

To reserve Tables or Private Rooms—
Phone 5436 Gerrard.

28-31, CHURCH ST., SHAFTESBURY AVE., W.

Adjacent to Palace Theatre.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Latest Methods. Lowest Fees.

Five years' Warranty.

"Originators of popular GUINEA Sets." -Vide Dispatch.

MR. LABOUCHERE in "TRUTH" writes:—"One of the largest practices in the world. Can do everything science and experience suggest to satisfy every customer."

PAMPHLET POST FREE,

GOODMAN'S, Limited, 2,* Ludgate Hill, E.C.

and West End Branch, 61, Seymour-street, Edgware-road End.
BRIGHTON: 10, Castle-square.

Est. nearly Quarter of a Century. W. EVANS & CO. Telephone: 327, Mayfair.

TRUTH says:—"Our latest discovery in tailoring is Evans, 77, Great Portland-street, London, W., who can actually fit."

We have a large clientele at home and abroad, and have received thousands of testimonials.

The following just to hand (original can be seen).

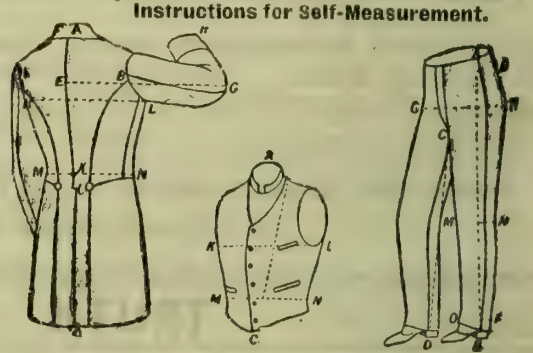
"Dear Sir,—I am much obliged for your prompt attention. For some years I have been dissatisfied with the various Tailors that have supplied me. I could get none to give me a good fit. I am therefore very pleased to find that you answer to your advertisement, and shall in future beat no loss to know where I can get so well supplied. "Yours truly, (Signed) W. C.
"W. Evans & Co."

COUNTRY ORDER DEPARTMENT.

Customers sending for any of the following clothes, stating colours, and the kind of garments required, enclosing a draft or P.O.O. (crossed London and South-Western Bank, Ltd.), will save considerable time, as all orders will be executed and despatched in about a fortnight from the date of receiving same.

Gentlemen living in any part of the world can rely on having same fit and attention as if they visited our establishment.

Instructions for Self-Measurement.



FOR COATS OF ANY DESCRIPTION.

A to C.....Inches. Breast, fairly tight, over waistcoat.....Inches.
C ,, D..... ,, E ,, B..... ,,
B ,, G..... ,, Waist, over waistcoat ..... ,,
G ,, H..... ,,
FOR WAISTCOATS: A to C ..... ,,

FOR TROUSERS AND BREECHES.

Side from A to N.....Inches. Round seat G H.....Inches.
,, ,, A ,, B..... ,, Round knee M to N ..... ,, Leg seam C ,, D..... ,,
Round waist A ..... ,, Round foot O ,, P ..... ,,

ADDITIONAL FOR KNICKERBOCKERS AND BREECHES.

Round small, just below (tight) knee.....Inches. Round widest part of Calf...Inches

Desirable to know: Height, weight; whether erect or normal.

Tweed and Blue Serge Suits, £3 3s., £3 15s., £4 4s., £4 15s., £5 5s.
Norfolk Jackets, £2 6s. 6d., £2 15s., £3 5s.
Knicker-Breeches, £1 5s., £1 10s., £1 15s., £2 5s.
Riding and Hunting Breeches, £2 5s., £2 15s., £3 5s.
Evening Dress Suits, silk lined, £5 5s., £6 6s., £7 7s., £8 8s.
Morning Coats, £2 15s., £3 5s., £3 15s., £4 4s.

77, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, London, W.

(Adjoining Queen's Hall.)

CIGARS

We will supply direct from our factories in HAVANA and Holland, Cigars at HALF BRITISH PRICES from 7/6 per hundred.

LA CUBA COMPANY,
11, N.Z. Voorburgwal,
Amsterdam, HOLLAND.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE FREE

A LOVELY CLEAR COMPLEXION

ensured by using

SULPHOLINE LOTION

The Standard Remedy for over 35 years. Quickly removes all Skin Eruptions—clears off every Pimple, Blemish, or Spot.

FREE TRIAL SAMPLE sent on receipt of 2d. to pay postage

Sold everywhere, in bottles 1/-, or on receipt of amount.

A Good Complexion is Better than a Pretty Face.

J. PEPPER & CO., Bedford Laboratory, London, S.E.

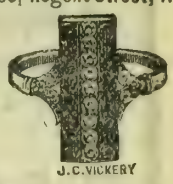
SPECIAL FOR LADIES.

"THE QUEEN OF Apollinaris TABLE WATERS."

J. C. VICKERY
Jeweller and Silversmith
To H.M. The KING and H.M. The QUEEN.
179, 181, 183, Regent Street, W.

No. M 240.
Diamonds and Rubies, £18.
Ditto, three rows Gems, £12 10s.

No. M 246.
Diamonds, Rubies, & Pearls, £16.
Diamonds, Emeralds, and Pearls, £18 18s.



No. M 244.
Diamonds and Rubies, Only £19 10s.

Novelties for Wedding, Bridesmaids', and Birthday Gifts in Jewellery, Gold and Silver Ware, Leather Goods, Watches, Clocks, Fans, Umbrellas, Walking Sticks, Dressing Bags, Suit Cases, &c.

FRILLED BUTTER MUSLIN
WITH NEW HEMSTITCH FRILLS, 3 yds. long, 8/3 per pair. PLAIN FRILLS, 6/9 per pair. Sample book of Plain and Fancy Muslins on approval. Carpets, Tapestries, Cretonnes, Art Silks, Art Serges. Patterns on approval. Book of Lace Curtains, Blinds, Carpets, Linoleum, Furniture, Bedsteads, Bedding, post free.

THE BELVOIR WICKER ARBOUR.
With let-down flap Table; Basket for Books, Needlework, &c. Being light, it is easily turned in any position.
Shelters from wind and sun.

Price Complete in Striped Tick... £3 5 0
Shower-proof 4 7 6
Made to fold flat, 15/- extra.
Catalogue Free.
GORRINGE & CO., 91A Dept., Queen's Walk, NOTTINGHAM.

Patterns and Illustrated Catalogues Post Free.

COPLAND & LYE'S
"CALEDONIAN"
SCOTCH TWEED SKIRT
21/- In Stock Sizes. 21/-
Carriage Paid in the U.K.
Made to Measure, 2/- Extra.
Handsome Golf or "rainy day" Skirt in Stylish Checks and Plain TWEEDS.
COPLAND & LYE'S
Famous SCOTCH TARTAN SKIRTS in the principal Clan Tartans.
Price 42/- Carriage Paid.
Scotch Winceys from 1/- per yard.
THE LEADING SPECIALISTS IN SCOTCH TEXTILES.
COPLAND & LYE, Caledonian House, Sauchiehall Street, GLASGOW.

PLASMON
BLANCMANGE
THE IDEAL
of Dainty and Delicious Food for Dainty Children.
3 Pint Box, 4d.

Jewsbury & Brown's
ORIENTAL
TOOTH PASTE.
In Pots and Tubes.

To H.M. THE KING.
CARPET CLEANERS
— THE —
Compressed Air Carpet & Tapestry Cleaning Company.
BROOK GREEN, W., and 135, VICTORIA STREET, S.W.
TELEGRAMS: "PURIFYING, LONDON."
TELEPHONE: 93 HAMMERSMITH. 288 WESTMINSTER.

Charities approved by the Editor of Truth.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED. £40 Annually will support a Cot, £1,000 Names a Cot FOR EVER.

HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN
GREAT ORMOND STREET, W.C.
President: The Duke of Fife, K.T. Chairman: Arthur Lucas, Esq.

THE FIRST & LARGEST CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL in the BRITISH EMPIRE.

E. S. Johnson, Secretary.

£3,060

represents the balance of a loan of £5,000 raised by the Committee of the Royal London Ophthalmic Hospital (Moorfields Eye Hospital) to tide over a time of great financial distress. They earnestly appeal for donations towards the repayment of the loan.

Donations, whether small or large, will be gratefully acknowledged by the Secretary, Royal London Ophthalmic Hospital, City Road, E.C.

WAIFS AND STRAYS
Forward Movement.
£100,000
required to develop and strengthen the work of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND WAIFS AND STRAYS SOCIETY.

ALL WHO LOVE LITTLE CHILDREN are earnestly asked to give or collect 20 SHILLINGS to mark the completion of the FIRST QUARTER-CENTURY of the existence of the above Society, during which homes have been provided for more than 12,500 DESTITUTE, OUTCAST, AND CRUELLY-TREATED CHILDREN.

DONATIONS WILL BE GRATEFULLY RECEIVED and collecting books supplied by Rev. E. DE M. RUDOLF, Church of England Waifs and Strays Society, Savoy-street, London, W.C.

Please mark envelopes "Quarter-Century Fund."

Patron: H.M. QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

NORTH EASTERN HOSPITAL FOR CHILDREN,

HACKNEY ROAD, BETHNAL GREEN, E.

125 BEDS IN CONSTANT USE.

Annual Expenditure £11,000

Endowed income under £300.

Surrounded by some of the poorest and most crowded districts of London.

T. GLENTON-KERR, Secretary.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

62,312 Children Rescued from Misery, Trained, and Placed out in Life in 40 years.

About 8,000 Boys and Girls always under the care of the Homes.

2,928 new Admissions in 1906.

1,200 EMIGRANTS going to Canada this year.

HEAD OFFICES:—
18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, LONDON, E.

BRITISH SAILORS for BRITISH SHIPS.

The "ARETHUSA" and "CHICHESTER" Training Ships prepare British Boys for the Royal Navy and Mercantile Marine.

80 Boys each Year enter Royal Navy.
6,000 have entered Merchant Service.
1,000 Children now being maintained.

No Votes Required.

18,000 BOYS and GIRLS have been rescued and trained for useful service.

SUPPORTED BY VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS.
Subscriptions and Donations will be thankfully received.
The National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children. [Incorp. 1901.
London Office: 164, SHAFTESBURY AVENUE, W.C.
Joint Secs.: H. BRISTOW WALLEN and HENRY G. COPELAND.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION AND SHAFTESBURY SOCIETY.

Founded 1844.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President—The Marquis of NORTHAMPTON.

The COUNCIL APPEAL for YOUR KIND HELP, MONEY, CLOTHING, PERSONAL SERVICE—all are wanted in the work of lifting the poor little ones, including the Cripples, from well-nigh hopeless surroundings to a better life and good citizenship.

Thousands of cases are dealt with every year.

Send for Report, and give us your liberal and prayerful assistance.

JOHN KIRK, Secretary.
32, John-street, Bedford-row, W.C.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

THE
SURGICAL AID SOCIETY.

President—THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN, P.C., G.C.M.G.

This Society supplies Spinal Supports, Leg Instruments, Artificial Limbs, Surgical Appliances, Elastic Stockings, Trusses, and every description of mechanical support to the poor without limit as to locality or disease.

36,474 Appliances given year ending September, 1906. Average of 700 per week.

Water Beds, Invalid Chairs, and Couches are lent to the Afflicted upon the Recommendation of Subscribers.

SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay & Co., Ltd., Lombard-street, or by the Secretary, at the Offices of the Society, Salisbury square, London, E.C.

RICHARD C. TRESIDDER, Secretary.

Charities Approved by the Editor of Truth.

THE
POOR CLERGY RELIEF CORPORATION,
38, TAVISTOCK-PLACE, Tavistock-square, London, W.C.
(ESTABLISHED 1856.)

President.—THE LORD BISHOP OF LONDON.

THE CONVALESCENT AND HOLIDAY FUND FOR THE POOR COUNTRY CLERGY.

The Committee of the Poor Clergy Relief Corporation earnestly ask for CONTRIBUTIONS to their FUND FOR GRANTING HELP TO COUNTRY CLERGYMEN and to those in PROVINCIAL TOWNS suffering from overwork and weakened health, to enable them to obtain a few weeks' rest and change. Cases are frequent where for six, eight, or ten years—sometimes even longer—a clergyman has not had a single Sunday from his parish.

It is requested that all sums sent for this purpose may be marked "Holiday Fund."

The Society also makes large grants periodically from its general Fund in times of emergency, and is the only Institution of the kind which gives immediate assistance to the Clergy, their Widows, and Orphan Daughters IN ALL PARTS OF THE EMPIRE. At each fortnightly meeting of the Committee some hundreds of pounds are distributed in this way.

Cheques should be crossed "London and Westminster Bank," and made payable to the Secretary, Mandeville B. Phillips.

MANDEVILLE B. PHILLIPS, Secretary.

Offices of the Corporation, 38, Tavistock-place, Tavistock-square, W.C.

TYPEWRITERS

MSS. Copied.

Great Bargains for Sale, Hire, or Exchange. Shorthand and Typists sent out with machines from £1 per week.

Ring up—4881 Holborn.
8325 Bank. 7093 Central.

TAYLORS LTD., 74, Chancery Lane, London.
And at 92, QUEEN STREET, E.C. (Cheapside End).

PEEK, FREAN, & CO., Ltd.,

OFFER

A FREE TEST

of the many merits of TILIA on the condition mentioned below.

It is important that you should know all about TILIA, and we will gladly put samples of the Biscuits, Cocoa, and Powder at your disposal, and send with them printed matter of interest.

TILIA supplies what is too often lacking from our ordinary food, viz., NOURISHMENT, and can be added to meats, soups, vegetables, pastries, milk; in fact, there is hardly anything which we eat and drink which would not be vastly improved by the addition of TILIA.

TILIA is odourless and tasteless, and can only do you good.

Grocers, Chemists, and Stores sell the Tilia preparations, in air-tight packages, as follows: Tilia Powder and Cocoa, 9d., 1/4, and 2/6; Tilia Biscuits, 1/- and 2/-

FREE SAMPLES of Tilia Powder, Biscuits, and Cocoa, packed in air-tight tins, will be sent to all who enclose a penny stamp for postage. Address: Dept. T 6, PEEK, FREAN, & CO., Ltd., 176, Drummond-road, London, S.E.

METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL = SUNDAY FUND.

35TH. HOSPITAL-SUNDAY
JUNE 9th.

9,000 Beds have been continuously occupied in the past year.

1,000 Beds have been empty for want of Funds, very many patients' admission being delayed.

The annual cost of a bed is about £100.

The cost of a patient is about £6.

Please give or send help through a Place of Worship, or to the Treasurer, The Lord Mayor, Mansion House, E.C., who, unless otherwise directed, will add it to the collection at St. Paul's Cathedral.

There is no sum too large. There can be none too small.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE (in connection with the Mansion House),
18, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.

Bankers—THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

This Prospectus has been filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies.
The List opened on June 1st, 1907, and will CLOSE on or before WEDNESDAY, June 5th, 1907.

BUENOS AYRES AND PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Limited.

(Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900.)

SHARE CAPITAL.

5 per cent. First Preference Stock, issued and fully paid	£1,200,000
5 per cent. Second Preference Stock, issued and fully paid ...	1,000,000
Ordinary Stock, issued and fully paid	4,000,000
100,000 Ordinary Shares of £10 each, issued and fully paid ...	1,000,000
100,000 Ordinary Shares of £10 each, issued (£7 paid)	1,000,000
	£8,200,000

DEBENTURE CAPITAL.

4 per cent. First Debenture Stock, issued.....	£2,755,000
4½ per cent. Second Debenture Stock, issued.....	1,945,000
5 per cent. Debenture Stock, issued	1,250,000
	£5,950,000

In addition to which further amounts of First and Second Debenture Stock have been sanctioned, but not issued, at the rate of £1,700 and £1,300 respectively per mile of new line in course of construction, but not exceeding £170,000 First and £130,000 Second Debenture Stock.

Issue of £1,000,000 Four-and-a-Half per Cent. Consolidated Debenture Stock.

Secured by a Trust Deed reserving to the Company the right to create further Debenture Stock, carrying interest at 4½ per cent. per annum and ranking in all respects pari passu with the above £1,000,000 Debenture Stock, for £4,000,000, and a further amount at the rate of £4,000 per mile of additional line hereafter acquired by the Company or of new line for the time being constructed or in course of construction, or about to be constructed (including the extra track taken at £4,000 a mile where existing lines are doubled) in excess of the mileage belonging to the Company now in operation, and also for such a further amount as shall be sufficient to redeem prior issues to an amount not exceeding the par value of the Stock for the time being redeemed and the amount of any premium payable on redemption under the terms of the issue thereof.

At 96 per cent., payable as follows:—

£5 on Application.
30 ,, Allotment.
20 ,, 15th July, 1907.
20 ,, 15th August, 1907.
21 ,, 14th September, 1907.

Total £96 per £100 Stock.

Scrip will be issued to be exchanged for Debenture Stock Certificates on completion of all the payments, the registered Debenture Stock being transferable in amounts not involving a fraction of £1.

The interest is payable by warrant to the Registered Holders of the Stock on 1st January and 1st July in each year.

The first payment of interest will be made on 1st January, 1908, and will be calculated upon the instalments as due.

Payment in full on Allotment and on the Instalment dates can be made under discount at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum.

THE DIRECTORS OF THE BUENOS AYRES PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, LIMITED, have authorised THE LONDON JOINT STOCK BANK, LIMITED, and MARTIN'S BANK, LIMITED, as Bankers of the Company, to receive applications for £1,000,000 4½ per cent. Consolidated Debenture Stock of the Company.

The whole or any part of this Stock is redeemable at any time at the Company's option after 30th June, 1920, at 110 per cent., on six calendar months' notice to the Stockholders. This Stock is secured by a charge upon the undertaking of the Company, subject to the existing issues, under a Trust Deed, dated 28th May, 1907, made between the Company and the Trustees.

The Company has the right to redeem after 30th June, 1913, at par, on six months' notice, the 5 per cent. Debenture Stock, and to redeem, at any time, on six months' notice, the Second Debenture Stock at 105 per cent.

The Company owns and has in operation 870 miles of broad gauge (5ft. 6in.) railway in the Argentine Republic, extending westward from the City of Buenos Ayres to Villa Mercedes, the main line forming part of the system which is to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Seaboards of the South American Continent. Beyond the branch lines already opened to public traffic the Company has under construction or is about to construct additional branches of a length of about 450 miles.

The Company also works under Agreement the Bahia Blanca and North-Western Railway (139 miles open) and the Villa Maria and Rufino Railway (141 miles) and has entered into an arrangement (which has been approved by the Argentine Government) for working the Argentine Great Western Railway (464 miles open) subject, however, to the sanction of General Meetings of both Companies and of Meetings of the Debenture Stockholders of the Argentine Great Western Railway Company, Limited. The Company takes over the Argentine Great Western Railway Company's working arrangement with the Argentine Transandine Railway (110 miles open), subject to the approval of the latter Company, and will thus have under its control the whole of the transcontinental line from Buenos Ayres to Valparaiso in so far as it is situated in Argentine territory. The Bahia Blanca and North-Western Railway Company is building a line 290 miles in length to connect with this Company's system, 168 miles being already open to public traffic. The completion of the remaining portion of the line is being actively proceeded with, and by August next it is anticipated that this Company will have through communication with the Port of Bahia Blanca.

The remarkable development of this Company's system since 1900 is shown by the following table:—

	1900-1901.	1901-1902.	1902-1903.	1903-1904.	1904-1905.	1905-1906
Receipts ...	£600,878	£584,267	£718,001	£959,306	£1,263,636	£1,618,365
Expenses...	332,405	304,467	347,407	533,083	719,111	882,404
Profit ...	£268,473	£279,800	£370,594	£426,223	£544,525	£735,961

As compared with the corresponding period of 1905-6, the estimated receipts to the 25th instant are £1,850,846 against £1,456,635, an increase of £394,211.

The large increase in the traffic has rendered it necessary for the Company to order more Engines and Rolling Stock, and to provide additional stations and sidings. An independent access into the City of Buenos Ayres is also under construction, and land to provide the Company with adequate terminal accommodation there, both for Passenger and Goods traffic, has been secured.

The proceeds of the present issue will be applied towards meeting the amounts expended upon the construction and equipment of branch lines open to public traffic and the further equipment thereof, the supply of Engines and Rolling Stock, stone ballasting, provision of new 100 lb. rails for relaying, for facilities to meet the increasing traffic, and for the general requirements of the Railway.

Past expenditure of Capital has been abundantly justified by results, as will be seen from the statement tabulated above. Dividends at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum have been paid on the Ordinary Stock and Shares of the Company since the year 1902-1903. The annual Interest on the Company's issued Debenture Capital is £260,225, which will now be increased by £45,000.

A preference in the allotment, as regards 40 per cent. of this Issue, will be given to applications from existing Shareholders and Debenture Stockholders of this Company, the Bahia Blanca and North-Western Railway Company, Limited, and the Villa Maria and Rufino Railway Company, Limited.

Applications on the form accompanying the Prospectus, together with the deposit of £5 per cent., should be forwarded to the London Joint Stock Bank, Limited, 5, Princes-street, London, E.C., or to Martin's Bank, Limited, 68, Lombard-street, London, E.C.

If no allotment is made the deposit will be returned without deduction. Should a smaller amount be allotted than applied for, the surplus paid on application will be appropriated towards the balance due on allotment. Non-payment of any instalment upon the due date will render the amount previously paid liable to forfeiture.

Application will in due course be made to obtain a Stock Exchange quotation for this Issue.

Apart from the contracts made by the Company in the ordinary course of business, the following have been entered into within the two years immediately preceding the date hereof:—

Contract dated 20th June, 1905, and made between the Company and the Bahia Blanca and North-Western Railway Company, Limited.

Contracts dated 24th April, 1906, and made between the Company and the Villa Maria and Rufino Railway Company, Limited.

Contract dated 16th May, 1906, and made between the Company and the Bahia Blanca and North-Western Railway Company, Limited, and the South American Light and Power Company, Limited.

Contract entered into on the 29th May, 1906, between the Argentine Government and the Company for the construction of lines from Bunge to Buchardo; from Chacabuco to the Alberdi branch; and from Rawson to a point near O'Higgins.

Contract dated 4th December, 1906, and made between the Company and the Bahia Blanca and North-Western Railway Company, Limited.

Supplemental Trust Deed dated 12th December, 1906, and made between the Company and the Trustees for the 5 Per Cent. Debenture Stock securing £500,000 of such Stock.

Provisional Contracts dated 23rd April, 1907, and made between the Company and the Argentine Great Western Railway Company, Limited.

Trust Deed dated 28th May, 1907, and made between the Company and the Trustees for securing the 4½ Per Cent. Consolidated Debenture Stock.

Contract dated the 30th May, 1907, and made between the Company and Messrs. Sheppards, Pelly, Price, and Pott, for underwriting the present issue.

The above Contracts may be inspected at the Office of the Solicitors on any day while the List remains open, between the hours of 11 and 4.

15,000 Deferred Shares of £20 each and 5,000 Second Preferred Shares of £20 each were allotted as fully paid in 1888, as part of the consideration for the construction of the Railway (subsequently converted into Second Preference and Ordinary Stock).

A Brokerage at the rate of a Quarter per Cent. will be paid by the Company on allotment made to the public in respect of applications bearing a Broker's stamp.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, Dashwood House, 9, New Broad-street, London, E.C.; of the Bankers; and of Messrs. Sheppards, Pelly, Price, and Pott, the Bankers of the Company.

Registered Offices:
Dashwood House, 9, New Broad-street, London, E.C., 31st May, 1907.

TRUSTEES FOR THE FOUR-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. CONSOLIDATED DEBENTURE STOCK.
The Rt. Hon. the EARL OF COVENTRY.
The Rt. Hon. LORD STANLEY.

DIRECTORS.
J. W. PHILIPPS, M.P. (Chairman).
T. PENN GASKELL, M.Inst.C.E.
C. E. GUNTHER.
EDWARD NORMAN.
Hon. ARTHUR STANLEY, M.P.
F. O. SMITHERS (Managing Director).

BANKERS.
THE LONDON JOINT STOCK BANK, Limited, 5, Princes-street, London, E.C.
MARTIN'S BANK, Limited, 68, Lombard-street, London, E.C.

BANKERS IN ARGENTINA.
THE ANGLO SOUTH AMERICAN BANK, Limited.

SOLICITORS.
ASHURST, MORRIS, CRISP and CO., 17, Throgmorton-avenue, London, E.C.

BROKERS.
SHEPPARDS, PELLY, PRICE and POTT, 57, Old Broad-street, London, E.C.

AUDITORS.
TURQUAND, YOUNGS and CO., 41, Coleman-street, London, E.C.

GENERAL MANAGER AND SECRETARY.
J. A. GOUDGE.

ASSISTANT-SECRETARY.
W. R. CRONAN.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY
(LIMITED),
HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.

INVESTED FUNDS - - £63,000,000.

TREATISE ON OPTIONS.

Mr. Arthur Crump, late City Editor of the Times, described "Options" as "the most scientific and prudent way of operating on the Stock Exchange." This system of operating, although well known and very popular on the Continent and in America, is not so well known amongst Investors here as its merits justify. We have just published a new Treatise on this subject which will be sent post free on application to THE SECRETARY,

LONDON & PARIS EXCHANGE, LTD.
Bankers,
BASILDON HOUSE, BANK, London, E.C.,
Or from any of its Branches.

A PROSPECTUS is now being ISSUED, which contains (inter alia) the following information.—DOMINION OF CANADA.

The SUBSCRIPTION LIST OPENED on MONDAY, June 3, 1907, and WILL CLOSE on or before 4 o'clock on THURSDAY, June 6, 1907.

The Shawinigan Water & Power Company.

(Incorporated by Statute of the Province of Quebec, Canada.)

ISSUE OF £200,000 4½ PER CENT. PERPETUAL CONSOLIDATED MORTGAGE DEBENTURE STOCK.

Authorised by Special Act of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec, and part of a total issue, limited as below mentioned.

CAPITAL:

In Shares of $100 each:— AUTHORISED..... $7,000,000
ISSUED..... $6,500,000

Bonds, 5 per Cent. Consolidated Thirty-year Mortgage, AUTHORISED AND ISSUED ... $5,000,000

THE PRICE OF ISSUE IS 90 PER CENT., PAYABLE AS FOLLOWS:—

5 per cent. on Application.
10 per cent. on Allotment.
20 per cent. on the 15th day of July, 1907.
25 per cent. on the 2nd day of September, 1907.
30 per cent. on the 18th day of October, 1907.
90 per cent.

or the whole may be paid up in full on allotment, or on any Monday prior to October 18th, 1907, under discount at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum.

Under the Statute authorising the issue the Debenture Stock is limited to an amount not exceeding in the aggregate 50 per cent. of the par value of the Common Stock outstanding, and the said Act further provides that no Debenture Stock in excess of $1,250,000, say £256,850 sterling, shall be issued unless the Company's average net earnings in the financial year preceding the date of such issue after payment of all operating expenses and interest on the Company's Mortgage Bonds, and other debts (if any), shall have been sufficient to pay twice over the interest upon the Debenture Stock then outstanding, and also upon the proposed further issue.

Interest on the Stock will be payable half-yearly, on the 1st day of June and the 1st day of December in each year, the first payment of a proportionate part of a half year's interest, calculated from the due dates of the instalments, will be made on December 1, 1907.

The Stock is secured by a Trust Deed in favour of the Royal Trust Company of Montreal. The Stock is by the above-mentioned Statute and the Trust Deed constituted a first charge upon the Bonds and Stocks, particulars whereof will be found in the body of the Full Prospectus, and a charge upon the undertaking, works, property, and effects of the Company (subject only to the above-mentioned first mortgage bonds of the Company, or other securities substituted therefor).

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is the sole owner of the water power of the Shawinigan Falls on the St. Maurice River, Canada, situate midway between the important cities of Montreal and Quebec. The Company's power is the principal source of supply for the territory between these two cities, including the city of Montreal, Three Rivers, Joliette, Sorel, Thetford Mines, Danville, and other manufacturing centres.

Shawinigan Falls, with the exception of Niagara Falls, is the greatest waterfall on the North American Continent, and is capable of developing, at all times, over 100,000 horse-power.

The Company's property includes the river bed of the St. Maurice, the adjoining land on either side of the river, and about 1,000 acres of land available for building purposes, all situate within the municipality of the town of Shawinigan Falls, a thriving manufacturing community with a present population of about 6,000.

The Company's plant consists of two hydraulic developments of a total capacity of, approximately, 100,000 h.-p., of which 70,000 h.-p. is completely equipped, 35,000 h.-p. being available for use locally in the form of water power, and 35,000 h.-p. for distribution in the form of electrical energy.

The Company's transmission system, which now serves some twenty cities and towns in the Province of Quebec, involves about 350 miles of line, and it is intended shortly to extend this system to include the City of Quebec and adjacent towns.

The town of Shawinigan Falls is served by two railway companies—the St. Maurice Valley Railway Company (Canadian Pacific system) and the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company (the Canadian Northern system).

The net proceeds of the present issue will be mainly applied in paying for the interests already acquired and to be acquired in various auxiliary companies, and in extending the Company's distributing system.

REVENUE STATEMENT. (Calculated at par of exchange, $4.86⅔.)

The gross revenue of the Company for the year ending December 31, 1906, was	$357,147 =	£73,386
The operating and general expenses, maintenance, &c., for the same period were	$52,128 =	£10,711
	$305,019 =	£62,675

The result of extensions made during the year 1906 is now being felt in the largely increased income.

The Directors are satisfied that the gross revenue of the Company for the year ending December 31, 1907, will not be less than	$600,000 =	£123,288
While the operating and general expenses, together with the interest on the existing mortgage bonds, should not, in the opinion of the Directors, exceed	$300,000 =	£61,644
Showing a profit of	$300,000 =	£61,644
A full half-year's interest on the debenture stock now offered would absorb	$21,900 =	£4,500
Leaving a surplus for the year above all charges of	$278,100 =	£57,144 or more than sufficient to cover the annual interest on the present issue six times over.

The above income will be derived from the sale of only 60,000 horse-power out of a total capacity of over 100,000 horse-power.

The full Prospectus contains material information which is omitted from this notice, and allotments will only be made upon the basis of the full Prospectus, copies of which (with Application Forms) may be obtained from the Bankers, the Bank of Scotland, Head Office, Edinburgh, London, and Branches; or the London Joint Stock Bank, Limited, London, and Branches; or from the Brokers, Messrs. Kitcat, Mortimer, and Aitken, South Sea House, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.; or from the British Empire Trust Company, Limited, 28-31, Bishopsgate-street Within, London, E.C.

Dated 3rd June, 1907.

OFFICERS OF THE COMPANY.—Hon. ROBERT MACKAY, President; J. E. ALDRED, Vice-President; HOWARD MURRAY, Treasurer; W. S. HART, Secretary.

DIRECTORS.—Hon. ROBERT MACKAY, Montreal, President (Director Bank of Montreal, Canadian Pacific Railway, &c.); J. E. ALDRED, Montreal (Vice-president); J. N. GREENSHIELDS, K.C., Montreal; JOHN JOYCE, Boston, Mass. (Director American Distributing Company); WILLIAM MACKENZIE, Toronto, Ont. (President Canadian Northern Railway); THOS. McDOUGALL, Quebec (General Manager Quebec Bank); H. H. MELVILLE, Boston, Mass. (Vice-President Canadian Northern Quebec Railway); D. MURPHY, Ottawa, Ont. (President Ottawa Transportation Company); W. R. WARREN, New York, N.Y. (President Warren-Burnham Company).

BANKERS.—THE BANK OF SCOTLAND; THE LONDON JOINT-STOCK BANK, LIMITED.

SOLICITORS.—In London: LINKLATER & CO., 2, Bond-court, Walbrook, London, E.C. In Canada: LAFLEUR, MACDOUGALL, & MACFARLANE, New York Life Building, Montreal, Canada.

BROKERS.—KITCAT, MORTIMER, & AITKEN, South Sea House, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.

REGISTRARS AND GENERAL SECRETARIES IN EUROPE. — THE BRITISH EMPIRE TRUST COMPANY, LIMITED, 28-31, Bishopsgate-street Within, London, E.C.

KUPFERBERG'S SPARKLING BERNCASTLER

This exceedingly light dry Moselle, being non-gouty and excellent as a digestive, has long enjoyed the high recommendation of the medical faculty.

KUPFERBERG'S BERNCASTLER is made exclusively from the choicest of the grapes grown in the famous Berncastle vineyards, and each bottle of genuine Berncastler (Nonpareil) bears the Kupferberg full brand and label.

Price 60/- per dozen bottles. 64/- per two dozen half-bottles. Of all Wine Merchants & Stores.

Wholesale Agents: Coverdale, Pohlmann, & Co. 5, Mark Lane, E.C.

Cool and Refresh you Face, Hands and Neck, during the Hot Weather by using Rowland's Kalydor

"For Your Skin."

which nulifies the injurious effects of Dust and Heat on

The Complexion,

removes Freckles, Tan, Sunburn, Redness and Roughness, and makes the Skin soft as Velvet.

Bottles 2s. 3d. & 4s. 6d. of Stores, Chemists, and ROWLAND'S, 67, Hatton Garden, London.

STEINWAY

VERTEGRAND

The attention of every householder is hereby directed to the fact that the pianos. Grands and Vertegrands, made by the house of STEINWAY, and sold by them through special agents at fixed net prices for cash all the world over, have a surrender value greater than that of the instruments produced by any other firm. The reason is not far to seek, viz.:—durability, general excellence in tone production, expensive workmanship in all minor details. The superiority of the STEINWAY creations in this respect is as marked as are all the other distinctive "STEINWAY" features.

Deferred Payments.

Hiring Arrangements.

STEINWAY Pianos may be obtained on hire at very reasonable rates, or may be purchased by deferred payments. If for any reason a purchaser on the Deferred Payment System is desirous of returning his instrument, the difference between the Hire Terms and the amounts paid under the deferred plan will be returned to him.

Write or call to-day for the Steinway Hire and Deferred Payment particulars, also booklet "P.," "Portraits of Musical Celebrities," post free on request.

STEINWAY & SONS
STEINWAY HALL
LONDON and NEW YORK.

A MASTER KEY

of this size.

BRAMAH LOCKS

FOR ALL PURPOSES can be made to a Master Key in suites, with subordinate keys for BUTLER, MAID or VALET, GARDENER, &c., &c., each suite independent of the other, but all opening to the MASTER KEY.

A choice selection of Despatch and Jewel Boxes, Travelling Requisites, strong and light, with real Bramah Locks, Steel Jewel Safes, &c., &c.

Illustrated Catalogues Post Free.

BRAMAH & CO.,

By Appointment to H.M. the King. Sole Makers of the Genuine BRAMAH LOCKS.

100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

The HACKNEY FURNISHING CO., Ltd.

Parties Furnishing should visit their West-End Premises, situated in the finest position in London,

93, 95, 97, 99, OXFORD STREET, W.

(Facing Newman Street).

Three minutes from Tottenham Court Road and Regent Street.

Their New Galleries are acknowledged to be the most Artistic combined with Elegance in London.

Parties can furnish on their deferred payment system as follows:—

GENERAL TERMS.

Worth	Per Month	Worth	Month	Worth	Month	Worth	Month
£10 ...	£0 6 0	£30 ...	£0 17 0	£50 ...	£1 8 0	£200 ...	£4 10 0
£20 ...	£0 11 0	£40 ...	1 5 0	£100 ...	£2 5 0	£500 ...	11 5 0

Free Life Insurance. Free Fire Insurance. No Security. No Deposit.

Head Offices and Showrooms { 1, 2, 3, 4, Town Hall Buildings. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, The Grove, adjoining Marc St., London, N.E.

Catalogues and full particulars post free.

A. M. STEWART, Managing Director.

.. THE ..

Straker-Squire

25-30 H.P. Car. Four Cylinder.

Four days absolute NON-STOP Irish Reliability Trials. . . . .

Extract from letter of one of the best-known London experts (interested in another make of car), after 100 mile trial run; his letter can be seen here:—

"You have a very fine thing indeed to handle. The engine is certainly THE LAST WORD in design and proportion, and the running the NEAREST APPROACH TO A TURBINE I have ever come across."

SIDE ENTRANCE, £650.

Limousines & Landaulettes

Immediate Delivery.

Sidney Straker & Squire

LIMITED.

75-77, Shaftesbury Avenue.

TELEPHONE: 8525 GERRARD. TELEGRAMS: "STRAQUIRE."

OETZMANN'S NEW DEPARTURE

OETZMANN & CO., in order to facilitate further development and extension, have converted their business into that of a Joint Stock Company.

GREAT INAUGURAL SALE

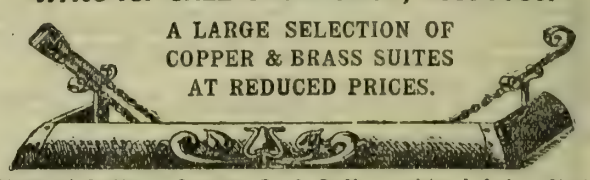
The Directors are giving their clients the full benefit of the very large discount off the actual cost of manufacture at which the Stock, amounting to about £150,000, has been transferred.

ALL Goods in Stock at Commencement of Sale reduced at least 10 per cent.,

Whilst in many instances the Reductions are as much as 50 per cent.

Write for SALE CATALOGUE, Post Free.

A LARGE SELECTION OF COPPER & BRASS SUITES AT REDUCED PRICES.



Elegant Antique Copper Curb Suite, registered design, fitted with wrought-iron Dogs, Poker, and small Tongs, as illustrated, any size up to 3 ft. 6 in., outside measurement, complete, 12/11
Larger sizes up to 5 ft., 5s. extra.
These suites are fully equal in style, quality, and finish to those usually sold at from 30s. to 40s.

Oetzmann's

OETZMANN & CO LTD.

HAMPSTEAD ROAD. W.

Continuation North of Tottenham-court Road

OUR PUZZLES.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Building, Carteret street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on postcards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand, whilst in the case of new Competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 2.—SPECIAL FOREIGN.

ORIGINAL PARODY OF TENNYSON'S "BREAK, BREAK, BREAK."

I cannot congratulate my foreign Competitors on their efforts in this Competition, which are none of them up to the mark of what I expected.

However, the Prize of Two Guineas has to be awarded, and, on the whole, I have decided to award it to FEROZY, whose Parody was printed in TRUTH of April 24 last.

It must not be inferred from this that I in any way agree with FEROZY'S political sentiments as expressed in his Parody. But, as I have pointed out in a recent issue, "Our Puzzles," as such, have no political or sectarian colour, all solutions being judged impartially on their intrinsic merits.

'TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,480.

From time to time I receive suggestions from Competitors of subjects for Puzzles likely to be popular with our readers, and among such suggestions I now and then come across a really good one of which I am able to make use.

Now I take it that of the thousand and more ingenious Competitors who are regular participants in our Puzzles, there is not one who, if he, or she, would sit down and think the matter out, could not devise some more or less brilliant idea for a Puzzle Competition. But I recognise that I can hardly expect any general and systematic response to an invitation to my competitors thus to exert themselves, unless I hold out some inducement; so I am offering, this week, the usual Prize of Two Guineas to that Competitor who shall send in –

THE BEST SUGGESTION FOR A PUZZLE OF A NOVEL AND ATTRACTIVE CHARACTER, SUITABLE FOR USE IN CONNECTION WITH OUR WEEKLY COMPETITIONS.

The suggested Puzzle may be of any kind, or deal with any conceivable subject, but it should contain some element of novelty, and should be of a character calculated to appeal to all classes of our readers. And it is by these two points that I shall be mainly guided in adjudicating upon them.

PLEASE NOTE THAT:

(i.) Every Competitor may send in three, but not more than three suggestions.

(ii.) All suggestions must reach TRUTH office by the first post on Monday June 17, at latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of BUSY BEE, winner of one-half TRUTH Prize No. 1468, is Mrs. Vincent J. Ryan, 2, Harewood Hill, Darlington.

BUSY BEE.—Thank you for kindly explaining to me that your present address is only temporary. When you return to your permanent residence, perhaps you will kindly drop me a line.

CASSIO.—I note the misprint in your anagram, and will allow for it in the adjudication.

EDGERTON.—I think your suggested Puzzle has distinct possibilities, and I hope to make use of the idea at an early date.

LA PLATA.—I note the mispunctuation of your anagram, also the erroneous small "n" insfead of the capital. These shall be duly taken into account when the competition is judged.

PIONEER.—The idea, per se, is good, but it is too much on the lines of recent Puzzles to be used just now. However, I shall hope to make use of it in the future.

MYRMIDON.—Thanks for your letter re Competition No. 1469. There is something, no doubt, in what you say, though I am inclined to think you are a little too rough on Alexander, Mohammed, and St. Paul, all of whom were indisputably great men in their way, and (especially the two latter) have left their mark indelibly on history.

H. M. LEWIS.—You will have seen that the error of numbering, which you kindly point out, was corrected in TRUTH of May 22 last.

A. F.—Thank you for your letter. I agree with you that I have an arduous task before me, but I will do my best to rise to the occasion.

K. S. A.—I am afraid that such a Competition would not be sufficiently popular, but I will file it for further consideration.

SPONGE.—Thank you for your suggestion, which I will consider. I am quite agreeable that you should substitute GRASSHOPPER for your present pseudonym, and you will be registered, in future, under that name.

ALLOS.—I am glad to hear that you are in favour of the proposed Competition, to which you allude.

NORTHLANDER.—Thank you for your suggestion, which may, I think, be developed into a good Puzzle. In reference to the other point, I am not prepared to pronounce offhand; but I shall take the opinion which you and some other Competitors put forward into careful consideration.

ISRAFIL.—Thank you for your letter. Vide reply (latter part) to NORTHLANDER above.

W. W. T.—I note your change of address, also your suggestion re Latin Verse Competition, for which I thank you.

KENT.—Your pseudonym, as herewith, duly registered.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,477.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

LISTS OF THE SIX GREATEST WOMEN IN THE WORLD'S HISTORY.

(i.) It will be noticed that a large number of Competitors include the name of the Virgin Mary in their lists of Greatest Women. Though I am printing the lists as they stand, I may say at once that, for reasons which many of our readers will doubtless appreciate, I have decided to treat the name of the Saviour's mother as hors concours. This does not mean that the lists containing The Virgin's name are disqualified, but that they will be treated as containing only five names instead of six. I have only arrived at this decision after the most careful consideration, and, while I admit that the question is a difficult one, I believe that on the whole I have taken the right course.

(ii.) Two unsigned lists sent in have been marked by me, for identification, with the letters "A. B. C." and "X. Y. Z." respectively.

Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Boadicea, Joan of Arc, Charlotte Corday, Katherine of Russia.—Chick.

Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra; Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt; Joan of Arc; Catherine II., Empress of Russia; Elizabeth, Queen of England; Catherine de Medici.—Green Pine.

Cleopatra, Boadicea, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale.—Tom Nissed.

Joan of Arc, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Virgin Mary, Queen Elizabeth.—Tina.

Sappho, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth of England, Queen Victoria of England, Florence Nightingale, Elizabeth Fry.—Sheila.

The Virgin Mary, Ethefleda, Queen Elizabeth, Elizabeth Fry, Florence Nightingale, Miss Weston.—Mary Diggens.

Joan of Arc, Queen Victoria, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Esther, Florence Nightingale, George Eliot.—Northlander.

Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra; Joan of Arc; Queen Elizabeth; Catherine the Great of Russia; Queen Victoria; Elizabeth Fry.—Violet-Angela.

The Virgin Mary, Queen Zenobia of Palmyra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth of England, Queen Victoria of England, Florence Nightingale.—Freda.

The Virgin Mary, Queen Victoria, Queen Elizabeth, Isabella of Castile, Catherine de Medici, Florence Nightingale.—F. M. K.

Queen Victoria, Queen Elizabeth, Cleopatra, Florence Nightingale, Joan of Arc, Mary Queen of Scots.—Bel.

Queen Boadicea, The Queen of Sheba, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Florence Nightingale, Queen Victoria.—Winkle.

Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth of England, Maria Theresa of Austria, Catherine II. of Russia, Queen Victoria of England.—Mac.

The Mother of Jesus Christ, Mother Eve, Helen of Troy, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Victoria.—Ecta.

The Virgin Mary, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Grace Darling.—Rachraine.

Eve, The Virgin Mary, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine of Russia, Florence Nightingale.—Ixener.

Eve, Cleopatra, Helen of Troy, Queen Elizabeth, Florence Nightingale, Adelina Patti.—Almavivi.

Cleopatra (Love), Joan of Arc (Patriotism), Elizabeth Fry (Philanthropy), Elizabeth Browning (Poetess), Angelica Kauffmann (Artist), Queen Victoria (Ruler and domestic qualities).—The Prebend.

Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Catherine II. of Russia, Margaret of Anjou, Joan of Arc, Cleopatra.—Yendig.

Queen Elizabeth, Elizabeth Fry, Grace Darling, Catherine the Great, Florence Nightingale, George Eliot.—Queensholme.

Queen Victoria, Queen Elizabeth, Madame de Staël, George Eliot, Mrs. Hemans, Florence Nightingale.—A. B. C.

Queen Victoria, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine I. of Russia, Joan of Arc, Anne Askew, Elizabeth Fry.—Bunga Malor.

Queen Victoria, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Helen of Troy, Florence Nightingale.—Dullard.

Boadicea, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Grace Darling, Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Florence Nightingale.—Renwick.

Zenobia, the Queen of Palmyra; Charlotte Corday, Elizabeth Fry, Miss Agnes Weston, Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Miss Florence Nightingale.—Blencathra.

Sappho, Margaret of Navarre (author of "Heptameron"), Isabella the Catholic Queen of Castile; Queen Elizabeth of England, Joan of Arc, Georges Sands.—Asymptote.

Eve, Sarah, Deborah, Virgin Mary, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria.—Mrs. Game B.

The Virgin Mary, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth of England, Catherine de Medici, Queen Victoria of England.—Lisette.

Queen Victoria, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine of Russia, Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Joan of Arc, Florence Nightingale.—Sclanidge.

Queen Victoria, Joan of Arc, Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Cleopatra, Florence Nightingale, Catherine of Russia.—Trammy.

Queen Victoria, Joan of Arc, Cleopatra, Carmen Sylva, Florence Nightingale, Catherine II. of Russia (The Great).—Snaggard.

Joan of Arc, Florence Nightingale, Boadicea, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Cleopatra.—Gapstang.

Queen Victoria, Queen Elizabeth, Joan of Arc, Florence Nightingale, Elizabeth Fry, Baroness Burdett-Coutts.—Muz-Muz.

Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Jane Austen, Joan of Arc, Catherine of Sienna, Sappho.—V. C. Turnbull.

Semiramis, Joan of Arc, Catherine of Sienna, Queen Elizabeth, Charlotte Corday, Florence Nightingale.—Foula.

The Blessed Virgin, Cleopatra, Zenobia, Catherine of Russia, Florence Nightingale, Elizabeth of England.—Will.

Joan of Arc, Mrs. Fry (prison visitor, etc.), Grace Darling, Miss Florence Nightingale, late Baroness Burdett-Coutts, late Majesty Queen Victoria.—Sandstone.

Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Catherine the Great, Joan of Arc, Boadicea, Cleopatra.—Creina.

Cleopatra, Helen of Troy, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Empress Catherine of Russia, Queen Victoria.—Asthore.

Joan of Arc, Sappho, Deborah, Queen Elizabeth, Isabella of Castile, Queen Victoria.—Fawcett.

Eve (original mother of all mankind), the Virgin Mary, Joan of Arc, Elizabeth Queen of England, Victoria Queen of England, Florence Nightingale.—Railway.

Cornelia (the mother of the Gracchi), Zenobia (the Queen of Palmyra), Boadicea, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, the Empress Katherine the Great.—Verbum Sat.

Hypatia, Boadicea, Catherine de Medici, Florence Nightingale, Queen Victoria.—Wildcat.

Joan of Arc, Victoria the Good, Boadicea, Florence Nightingale, Esther, Queen Elizabeth.—Mart.

Catherine II. (Russia), Florence Nightingale, Victoria (Queen of England), Cleopatra (Queen of Egypt), Isabella of Castile, Queen Elizabeth (of England).—Gem.

Cornelia, Zenobia, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale.—Provident.

Cleopatra, Queen Elizabeth, Lady Godiva, Joan of Arc, Florence Nightingale, Queen Boadicea.—Chance.

Queen Victoria of England, Queen Elizabeth, Miss Florence Nightingale, Joan of Arc, Cleopatra, Helen of Troy.—Harebell.

Queen Victoria, Queen Elizabeth, Joan of Arc, Catherine (mother of Peter the Great), Florence Nightingale, Boadicea.—Frances.

Cleopatra, Hypatia, Catherine of Russia, Elizabeth of England, Florence Nightingale, Queen Victoria.—Prior Park.

Joan of Arc, Queen Boadicea, Queen Eleanor, Miss Nightingale, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria.—Guilsborough.

Joan of Arc, Grace Darling, Mary Douglas, Queen Eleanor, Florence Nightingale, Queen Elizabeth.—Nettie.

Joan of Arc, Catherine of Russia, Queen Victoria, Boadicea, Mrs. Elizabeth Fry, Queen Elizabeth.—Cheedill.

Eve, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine II. of Russia, Queen Victoria.—Autolycus.

The Blessed Virgin, Zenobia, Catherine of Russia, Elizabeth of England, Victoria of England, Florence Nightingale.—Rubber Core.

Catherine of Russia, Elizabeth of England, Florence Nightingale, Georges Sand, St. Teresa, Mrs. Browning.—Forest.

Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, George Eliot (Mary Ann Evans), Florence Nightingale, Elizabeth B. Browning, Madame Curie.—Cameron.

Sappho, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Boadicea, Hypatia, Queen Katherine of Russia.—Petite.

Lists have also been received from the following:—Beechwood, White Heather, Harold, Hopscotch, Kent, Dorset, Bucks, Allimac, Twig, X. Y. Z., Zagloba, Ass, Korah, Eboracum, Half Acres, Charles Burdett, Felsberg, Minos, Einnim, Ursellia, Djalfi, Veronica, Bip, Bad Luck, Nemo, H. R. S., Heja, Cheltonian, Fosco, Ainsty, Cercueil, Inca, Crank, Sphinx, Mary, Diana, Iere, Detinu, Golliwog, Mab, Coral, Nemesis, Grasshopper, Khayyam, Secundus, Grenville, Rigor Mortis, Bob, Scotus Viator, Ewa, Rimabel, Clement, Eillom, Alpha Beta, Bunny, Nest, Scot, Fish, Pupa, Midge, Red Dragon, The Mac, Esneb, Blot, Hypatia, Sherlock, Alicujus, Tony, Cantab, Dwarber, Leaf Rule, Canning, Asinus, Aster, Lou-Lou, Myra, Ba, Cherry-picker, Israfil, Hattie, Usbek, Gloucester, Early Morning, Glynn, Sugar, Denmore, Sincérité, La Plata, Jackpot, Spartan, Rhody, Echo, Cashier, Myrmidon, Langdale, Haron, Belfastiensis, Wac, Prospère, Beginner, Omega, J. McGrigor Allan, A. F., Turtle, Oiseau, Qui bono, inquam, Bim, Cow

By Appointment to H.M. The King.

IN SPAIN!

By Appointment to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

DAIMLER

On the 15th of May, during the period of the Madrid Exhibition, a 45 h.p. DAIMLER CAR, driven by Mr. E. M. C. Instone, ascended the celebrated GUADARRAMA PASS in the remarkable time of 8 minutes 58 seconds, as certified by an official Timekeeper. On the 22nd ult., the GUADARRAMA Hill-Climbing Race having been abandoned, Mr. Instone made a second attempt in the presence of the Marquis de Taracena, Marquis de Valdeiglaises, Count de Berberana, and other prominent Sportsmen, in 7 minutes 20 seconds, beating his previous record by 1 minute 38 seconds. The ascent was timed from the Pillars of the Alameda to the summit by the Duke de Zaragoza, Secretary of the Royal Automobile Club of Spain. A further trial was made from the village of Guadarrama to the summit, and the Official time recorded for this ascent was 8 minutes 15 1/5 seconds, beating all records for Touring Cars.

The Daimler Co. were extremely successful at the Madrid Exhibition, and have reaped their reward in securing several of the Spanish Nobility as customers for their Cars. Among their present clients are :—

Duke de Santo Mauro. Duke de Zaragoza. Marquis de Taracena. Marquis de Berriz. Senor Don Carlos A. Levison. Senor Don Juan Harvey.

At the Madrid Exhibition Daimlers were awarded a SILVER MEDAL for their luxurious Coachwork, and a BRONZE MEDAL for the decoration of their stand.

THE DAIMLER MOTOR CO. (1904), Ltd.

Coventry : Daimler Works. London : 219-229, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.
Manchester : 60, Deansgate. Nottingham : 96-98, Derby Road. Bristol : 18, Victoria Street.

BEAUTIFUL BRITTANY

THE G.W.R. Company's S.S. "ANTELOPE" will make

EXCURSIONS from PLYMOUTH on MONDAYS and WEDNESDAYS during JUNE to Brest & Plougastel

Return 20/- Fare.

For full particulars and Illustrated Historical Booklet (postage 1d.) apply Superintendent of the Line, G.W.R., Paddington Station, W. ; or the Superintendent, G.W.R. Docks, Millbay, Plymouth.

JAMES C. INGLIS, General Manager.

The Best Tonic

For the restoration of energy and vitality; the relief of mental and nervous exhaustion, impaired digestion or appetite, there is no remedy so beneficial as

Horsford's Acid Phosphate
(Non-Alcoholic.)

It is a scientific and carefully prepared preparation of the phosphates that provides the tonic and nerve food needed to improve general health

If your chemist does not have it in stock he can obtain it from Bovril, Ltd., 152 Old Street, London, E. C.

ALCOHOLIC EXCESS

and DRUG HABIT cured at home in 3 to 7 weeks by the TURVEY TREATMENT without inconvenience. The only cure under British Medical Direction. Success tested by officials of the C.E.T.S. Mission, &c. Established 12 years. Over 5,000 recorded cases.—Write for Report of Public Test, or call, Med. Supt., TURVEY TREATMENT CO., Ltd., 24, Amberley House, Norfolk Street, Strand, London. Consultation to patients or their friends, free.

BRAGG'S CHARCOAL BISCUITS
Cure Indigestion

Flatulence, Acidity and all disorders of the Stomach, and are very pleasant to take. Bragg's Charcoal Biscuits are supplied to the Royal family. Recommended by the Lancet and the medical profession, and used in their own families.

Bragg's Charcoal Powder and Lozenges are equally excellent.
Of all Chemists and Stores.

Royal Automobile Club.

International Heavy Touring Car Race.

ISLE OF MAN, MAY 30th, 1907.

In this race to decide the premier touring car of the year following up last year's result, when HUMBERS were the only team to finish in the Tourist Trophy, thus again proving the unerring reliability of HUMBER CARS.

Humbers Won

Prices from £270.

Free Trials Arranged. Complete Specifications on application.

Humber, Limited, Beeston (Notts), and Coventry.

DEPOTS:—LONDON.—Holborn Circus, E.C.; 60-64, Brompton-road, S.W. NOTTINGHAM.—Grey Friar Gate. MANCHESTER.—33, Blackfriars-street. LIVERPOOL.—27-33, Leece-street. BIRMINGHAM.—280, Broad-street. SOUTHAMPTON.—27, London-road.

LOUNGE SUITS

Any tailor can produce a Comfortable Lounge Suit, because that is but a matter of giving plenty of room everywhere—but Comfort alone in this suit is not enough. In the making of this suit as it should be made, Comfort and Style are equally considered, and the work so done that neither the one nor the other is sacrificed to any appreciable extent.

As Mr. Bult fashions Lounge Suits, the points which make for a proper combination of Comfort and Style are most carefully dealt with, and whilst the garments are always Easy, they Fit and Hang in such a way as to give a Stylish appearance which is retained throughout hard wear. For this Season's suits Mr. Bult has stocked a very wide range of choice Materials, including the fashionable tints and mixtures in Browns and Greens and some delicate shades of Grey.

Patterns and Price List (Illustrated by Actual Photographs) will be sent Post Free on application. It should be stated for which garment the patterns are required.

John J. M. Bult
140 High Holborn, St. London, E.C. Cash Tailor

The Ideal BEDDING FACTORY

Maple & Co are admitted to be facile princeps in the manufacture of bedding. Their Highgate Rd factories are the most modern of their order, with specially devised machinery; and those interested in pure bedding are invited to call and see the bedding actually made

The same standard of value has been maintained for over 60 years, the bedding of each grade being all that a jealous pride in a product can make it

Special List of Bedding Post Free

MAPLE & CO

LONDON PARIS

DENT'S NEW REGULATOR CLOCK
for Country Houses and Mansions, £21 and upwards

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

DENT'S CLOCKS

The Finest Selection in London.

Makers of the Great Westminster Clock (Big Ben),

And Sole Custodians since its erection.

Makers of the Standard Clock (the Primary Standard Timekeeper of the United Kingdom) of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich; and of Standard Clocks in most principal Foreign and Colonial Observatories.

SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED C and W CATALOGUE FREE.

CAUTION.

E. DENT & CO., Ltd.,
61, Strand, and 4, Royal Exchange, E.C.

find it necessary to inform the public that their ONLY ADDRESSES are—Telephone: No. 14663 Central.

DENT
TRADE MARK
No instrument, from No. 88,000 upwards, is genuine without the above Trade Mark.

When selecting New

CLOTHES

Every Man is Conscious, that in the entire effect, there is no detail on the settlement of which it is more essential

That his Discriminating Taste

shall be directly exercised than in the choosing of materials, the patterns of which will either impart refinement and distinction to his appearance or be a continual adverse reflection on his good taste.

For many years past the Fame of

RHEE ELLISON & CO.'S

pre-eminence in the production of distinguished and tasteful clothing at moderate prices has been attracting the most fastidious clientèle both at home and abroad, with the result that

The Bond Street Tailor's

stocks of MATERIALS and their exclusive and tasteful execution of work is now

Acknowledged to be the Most Attractive in London.

See Booklet, Price List, and Patterns sent Free.
SELF-MEASUREMENT FORM for Customers Abroad.

Only Address:—

104, New Bond Street, W.

THE BEST ON EARTH.

SIR ANDREW CLARK'S INVARIABLE ADVICE WAS

"Let the Patient have Schweitzer's Cocoatina, if you please."

SCHWEITZER'S Cocoatina

The Most Nutritious and Perfectly Digestible Cocoa.

For Invalids and Children as well as for the Strong and Healthy.

"This is Genuine Cocoa."—THE LANCET.

H. SCHWEITZER & CO., LTD., 143, York-road, London, N.

ARE YOU TAKING

an everyday care of yourself? Prevention you know is ever so much better than cure. A little irregularity of the stomach seems such a trivial thing to-day, but next week it is a malady, ever getting more serious: little ailments soon become big complaints. Cure that little irregularity at once. Neglect it, and it leads swiftly to dyspepsia, indigestion, flatulence, constipation, biliousness, headache, and perhaps a train of greater evils. Even these will yield to but why run the risk of so much suffering? What folly to delay—waiting till one is ill.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

A dose of these famous pills taken whenever the least weariness is experienced will effectually prevent any unpleasant developments. Don't wait till you have to be cured. Take an everyday care of yourself, remember always if you keep the bowels regular and the liver in working order you will never be troubled with indigestion and it's attendant miseries.

"Taking care" of course means that the standard remedy must be always at hand. In many thousands of homes BEECHAM'S PILLS are regarded as the family medicine and are kept in an appointed place always ready for use. When you notice a symptom you want to get rid of it at once: there is no time like the present. To be always prepared, you too, must keep a box of Beecham's Pills

AT HOME.

Sold everywhere in boxes, price 1/1½ & 2/9.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

CLARKE'S BLOOD MIXTURE

THE WORLD-FAMED BLOOD PURIFIER,

Is warranted to Cleanse the Blood from all impurities from whatever cause arising. It

WILL PERMANENTLY CURE

Eczema, Scrofula, Scurvy, Glandular Swellings, Bad Legs, Abscesses, Boils, Pimples, Blood Poison, Rheumatism, Gout, and

SKIN AND BLOOD DISEASES

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts. Of all Chemists, 2/9 per Bottle.
BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

Goddard's Plate Powder

For Cleaning Silver, Electro Plate, &c.

Sold everywhere 1/- 2/6 & 4/6

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & MALCOMSON, Limited, 4 and 5, Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., and Published by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st. E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.
Entered as Second-Class Matter at the New York, N.Y. Post Office, 1903.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1589. Vol. LXI. Wednesday, June 12, 1907. Price Sixpence.

TO OUR READERS.

We receive hundreds of letters every week from "Readers of 'Truth.'" A large majority of the writers expect replies direct. Of the work, trouble, and expense involved in doing this we say nothing. But as experience has shown that a large number of our "Constant" and "Regular" readers who inquire about individuals with whom we have dealt in our columns over and over again are not actual subscribers to the paper, but merely occasional readers of it at clubs, libraries, or at friends' houses, we consider we must protect ourselves in the matter.

We have therefore decided that henceforth every reader who writes making an inquiry that necessitates a direct reply must enclose a stamped envelope and also a Coupon which will always be found at the foot of the 3rd page of the coloured cover. Without these no notice will be taken of the communication.

Inquiries addressed to "Vigilant," which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through his "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can "Vigilant" send replies by post.

No Coupon will be available that is over a fortnight out of date, except from correspondents residing abroad.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 23s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made Payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Buildings," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

A SECOND Truth Travel Supplement is published with this issue, and will be found to contain a full description of the opportunities for holiday-making, both in England and on the Continent, provided by the Great Eastern Railway Company.

The King's visit to Ireland, short though it is to be, and perhaps just because it is short, is an admirable idea, worthy of King Edward. As an indisputable matter of fact, the King of Great Britain is also King of Ireland. It was not the fault of the Irish that they learned to forget this fact during the long reign of Queen Victoria, for Royalty forgot it too. The very rare Royal visits to Ireland were made, as if to a strange country, by a British sovereign. Royalty never found itself at home in Ireland as in England and Scotland. Common sense, so rarely used in dealing with Ireland, is at last having a chance. The sovereign who shows that he looks on himself as King of Ireland, and is at home in that country as in the other parts of his kingdom, will soon teach the people, in a pleasant and an undeniable way, that they have a King.

According to present arrangements the King and Queen will pay their visit to Dublin during the second week in July. Their Majesties will leave London on Tuesday, July 9, when they are to travel by special Royal train from Euston to Bangor, where they will stop for about an hour and a half in order that the King may lay the foundation stone of the new University College of North Wales. After this ceremony the Royal train will go on to Holyhead, where the King and Queen are to embark on the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, and they will dine and sleep on board. The yacht is to proceed for Kingstown at daybreak on Wednesday, the 10th. After their arrival the King and Queen will visit the Dublin Exhibition, and they are to take a drive round the city and through the Phœnix Park. Their Majesties are again to dine and sleep on board the Victoria and Albert, and Thursday, the 11th, will be principally occupied with a visit to Leopardstown races. The Royal yacht is to leave Kingstown at night for Cardiff, after a number of guests have been entertained at dinner on board.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen left the Viceregal Lodge last week for a short stay at Buxton. They return to Ireland at the end of the month. Definite arrangements regarding a Viceregal entertainment during the short visit of the King and Queen to Dublin have not yet been made, but it is expected that a Royal garden-party will be given at the Viceregal Lodge, the gardens and lawns of which are extensive and picturesque, with the wide view over the Phœnix Park, across the valley of the Liffey, to the Dublin and Wicklow Mountains. The Royal yacht will stay in the harbour at Kingstown, which is barely a quarter of an hour distant from Dublin.

The King and Queen will arrive at Cardiff from Kingstown early on the morning of Friday, July 12. His Majesty is to open the new large dock of the Cardiff Railway, and a visit will be paid to the Town Hall, after which their Majesties are to drive to Cardiff Castle, where they will lunch with Lord and Lady Bute. The afternoon is to be occupied with an excursion to Caerphilly Castle, where tea will be served. In the evening there is to be a dinner party on board the Victoria and Albert. On Saturday morning the King and Queen will leave Cardiff by Great Western special Royal train for Paddington, travelling by the Severn Tunnel route, and arriving at Buckingham Palace in time for luncheon.

His Majesty's visit to Lincoln is definitely fixed for Wednesday, the 26th. His Majesty will travel by special train in the morning from King's Cross to Lincoln, and he is to drive from the Great Northern station direct to the West Common, where the Royal Agricultural Society's show is to be held. The show ground, which extends over upwards of 100 acres, adjoins the Carholme, where the racecourse is situated. The King will visit the various departments of the show, and there is to be a parade of the stock. His Majesty is to lunch in the Royal Pavilion which has been erected on the south side of the show ground. There are 3,948 entries, as against 3,655 at Derby last year, and 3,477 at Park Royal in 1905. The last "Royal" show at Lincoln was held in 1854, when there were 1,059 entries. It is expected that the King will pay a visit to Lincoln Cathedral in the afternoon before he returns to the railway station from the show ground.

Some of the papers have been printing a lot of strange nonsense about the unusually brilliant Ascot meeting which is alleged to be in prospect, it being stated that the King and Queen of Denmark and the King and Queen of Norway are to be among the guests of their Majesties at Windsor Castle during the race week. As a matter of fact, the King and Queen of Denmark are to leave England on their official visit to France five days before Ascot meeting begins. The King and Queen of Norway are not coming to England this summer, and they proceeded to Copenhagen, on their way back to Christiania, when they left Paris. It is also untrue that the Duke and Duchess of Sparta and the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Roumania are to be guests at Windsor Castle next week.

The King and Queen will attend Ascot races next week in state on Tuesday and on the Cup Day, driving from Windsor Castle through the Great Park to the entrance of the course, and thence up the New Mile to the Royal stand. On Wednesday and on Friday neither her Majesty nor the Princesses will go to the races, but the King and the Princes are to drive privately to the course, and his Majesty will use his motor-car on the "off" days. There will be a large luncheon at two o'clock every day of the races in the spacious dining-room of the Royal stand for the Windsor Castle house party, and a number of additional guests will be invited daily by the King. The Lord Chamberlain's officials have been engaged in redecorating the Royal stand, and several improvements have been carried out since the Queen's last visit to Ascot in 1905.

Small parties will be entertained next week for Ascot races by the Duke and Duchess of Connaught at Bagshot Park, and by Prince and Princess Christian at Cumberland Lodge.

The statement that the Queen of Denmark inherited an immense fortune from her father, King Charles of Sweden and Norway, is incorrect. Her fortune, which was estimated when she married at nearly eighty millions of francs, came from her mother, who was the daughter and heiress of Prince Frederick of the Netherlands, and at the time of his death he was said to be the richest member of the wealthy House of Orange.

The Lord Chamberlain has issued invitations for between six and seven thousand guests for the garden party which is to be given at Windsor Castle by the King and Queen on the afternoon of Saturday, the 22nd. The arrangements are to be the same as at the last garden party at Windsor Castle, which took place two years ago, a day or two before the marriage of Prince Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden and Princess Margaret of Connaught. The company will assemble on the East Terrace and Slopes and in the sunk garden. A marble staircase has been constructed connecting the East Terrace with the Slopes and the sunk garden, which is a great improvement. Refreshments are to be served in a marquee and in the Orangery, which is now adorned with Queen Victoria's collection of statuary from Osborne. The King and Queen and the Royal family will come down from the Castle and walk in a quasi-procession through the lines of guests.

The King held a private investiture of the Royal Victorian Order last week at Buckingham Palace, when his Majesty decorated the Prince Dietrichstein von Nikolsburg with the Grand Cross (G.C.V.O.) with the customary formalities. Prince Dietrichstein has come to London (with his wife) on a visit to his younger brother, Count Albert Mensdorff, at the Austro-Hungarian Embassy. He is one of the great territorial magnates of the Austrian Empire, his largest estates being situated in Moravia, and he is a persona gratissima at the Court of Vienna. Prince Dietrichstein is related to the Royal family, his grandmother having been a Princess of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, and a sister of the Duchess of Kent, and therefore an aunt of both Queen Victoria and Prince Albert. Prince and Princess Dietrichstein von Nikolsburg and Count Mensdorff are to be included in their Majesties' house party at Windsor Castle next week for Ascot races.

The Court held by the King and Queen at Buckingham Palace on Thursday night was very largely attended, but, apart from the Corps Diplomatique and the official contingent, there was no great show of the élite of society. There was an unusual number of presentations from the Diplomatic Circle, but otherwise the attendance of entrée company was not a full one. There was a larger Royal circle than usual on the daïs, including the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Princess Henry of Battenberg, all of whom appeared at Court for the first time this season. The dresses were generally very handsome, and there was a splendid

---

For APPEALS, see page 1498.
For the TRUTH HOTEL LIST, see page 1495.
For SPECIAL FOR LADIES, see page 1499.
For Selected FOREIGN HOTELS, see page 1494.
For AMUSEMENTS, see pages 1492, 1493.
For ESTATES, AUCTIONS, see page 1495.
For OUR PUZZLES, see pages 1501, 1502.

display of jewels, and some remarkably fine lace. Lady Crewe acted as "the Lady of the Secretary of State," and she named the Ambassadresses and the wives of the other Chefs de Mission. The passing the presence took over an hour and a half. People are not now allowed to linger in the Ball Room, and any who appear to be disposed to stay are politely ushered out by the State pages. All the arrangements for these ceremonials are admirable, and the presentations are got through with a striking rapidity, but without any apparent hurry or bustle.

Directly the presentations were over the King and Queen and Royal family left in procession for the Chinese Room, where the supper was served. The Corps Diplomatique, who followed the Royal party, had supper in an adjoining room, and the general company refreshed themselves in the drawing-room which adjoins the Throne Room. The supper was served at a long buffet, and there was an excellent repast provided, with an ample supply of most praiseworthy drinks. The display of fruit was remarkable, and worthy of any public show.

The Prince of Wales is to be the guest of Lord and Lady Londesborough during a part of the week after next at Blankney Hall. There is to be a large party at Blankney for the Royal Agricultural Society's Exhibition at Lincoln, and it is expected that the Prince of Wales will visit the show ground on Wednesday, the 26th, and on Thursday, the 27th. Blankney was formerly the property of Mr. Henry Chaplin, but the estate passed into the possession of the late Lord Londesborough. The house is large and uninteresting, but there are some good rooms, and the interior is well arranged. The grounds and woods are extensive, and the principal avenue is four miles long. The King (when Prince of Wales) was more than once the guest of Mr. Chaplin at Blankney Hall.

The Duke and Duchess of Sparta, who are now in Germany, will arrive in England the week after next, accompanied by their children, and they intend to stay for some time at Seaford. The Duke and Duchess will be the guests of the King and Queen at Buckingham Palace while they are in London, and they are to be present at the second State Ball.

Sir Charles Palmer had been removed to his house in Curzon-street only five days before his death from the Empire Hotel, Bath, where he had been lying ill for two months. Sir Charles was widely known as a builder of warships, and as the founder of the famous Jarrow shipyards and works, and also as one of the most enthusiastic and unswerving Liberals in the North of England. He commenced his long and brilliant commercial career as a colliery owner, and the Jarrow shipyard was started in 1851 in order to supply vessels for a regular sea service for the conveyance of coal from the Tyne to the Thames. During the Crimean war armour-plated vessels were built at Jarrow for the Government with a rapidity then quite unexampled. Sir Charles was a man of remarkable inventive genius, and he discovered the invaluable idea of rolling armour plates instead of forging them. An enormous number of warships have been built at Jarrow for the Admiralty and for foreign Governments, and the yards and works cover over 100 acres.

Sir Charles became the Liberal Member for North Durham in 1874, and since 1885 he had represented the Jarrow Division of the county. His seat was one of the safest in the House of Commons. It was generally understood that Sir Charles Palmer would be raised to the peerage on the 28th, when the King's birthday is to be officially celebrated. He was created a baronet in 1886 by Mr. Gladstone, of whom he was a staunch supporter. He had retired from business several years ago, and his firm was turned into a limited liability company, of which Sir C. B. McLaren, M.P., is at present chairman. Sir Charles himself was a just and liberal employer of labour, and he always took a warm interest in the town of Jarrow, which was really his own creation. Of late years he had resided principally at Grinkle Park, a place in the North Riding of Yorkshire which he had purchased along with a considerable estate. He was a generous and considerate landlord, and he farmed himself on a large scale, and went in for stock-raising extensively.

An exceedingly interesting and amusing exposé of one of the spiritualistic fraternity was published in the Leeds Mercury of the 6th inst. The "medium" selected was a man named Chambers, whose manifestations of the materialisation of spirits have been accepted in spiritualistic circles in the North with mingled veneration and rapture. Some of his dupes were so satisfied of the genuineness of the phenomena which were produced by his mediumship, that, with the idea of converting sceptics, they arranged for a photographer to be present at a private séance, with a view of securing negatives of some of Chambers' familiars. After the usual hocus-pocus on the part of the medium and the singing of hymns by the audience, the manifestations commenced, and from within the cabinet where the medium was concealed a variety of spirits made their appearance. One of these was a spirit known as "The Signor," who spoke broken Italian, and was announced as the medium's chief guide.

"The Signor" was persuaded to give a sitting to the photographer, and by means of a flashlight exposure a couple of excellent negatives of the spirit form were obtained. The resultant photographs were published in the Leeds Mercury, and admirably illustrate the bogus character of the manifestations. "The Signor" is obviously the medium himself, divested of his clothes and shrouded in a sheet, which he is holding in his mouth in order to conceal the lower part of his face. The quaintest element in "The Signor's" spiritual attire, however, is his headdress, which is formed out of a chest-protector which Chambers was wearing. I know that "the spirits" are frequently credited with a mischievous propensity for playing practical jokes upon seekers after light, but I cannot believe that the feeblest-minded inhabitant of the spiritual plane would pose for a photographer clad in a sheet and a chest-protector.

I have been greatly interested in a book which has been sent to me containing the rules and regulations enforced on their assistants by a firm called Edmonds, Denham, and Goyder, Ltd. My correspondent has not sent me their address, but the name of the firm does not appear in the London Directory, and apparently they are engaged in the drapery line in the provinces. There are no less than forty-one rules in this book, many of them of the most arbitrary and oppressive character, and supported by fines ranging from 2d. up to 2s. 6d. Here are a few samples:—

8. Assistants must examine their Check Books before using, and see they are in numerical order, as in all cases Assistants will be held responsible for every missing duplicate. Fine, 2s. 6d.

9. In making up bills the Letter of the Department must be written in the left-hand margin opposite each article. This rule is most important for the purpose of dissecting. Fine, 2d.

12. Purchases made by Entry Customers must be entered in the Day Book and signed by the shopwalkers before the parcel is packed. Anyone omitting to enter a line in the Day Book will be Fined 2s. 6d.

16. For giving more or less than 36 inches to the yard. Fine, 1s.

18. As goods are cut off for customers the length and price must be marked on at the time. Fine, 2d.

21. For passing a duplicate into cash desk without having it signed, or for altering a duplicate without signature of the shopwalker Fine, 1s.

30. Young ladies are not allowed to go to their bedrooms between meal times without special permission. Fine, 3d.

40. After business hours assistants must leave the shop by the iron staircase, and not on any account by way of the shop doors. Fine, 1s.

41. A collection will be made for the Library of 9d. per month from the young men and 6d. per month from the young ladies.

It will surprise no one to hear that a young lady who recently entered the service of this firm had incurred fines to the amount of 2s. 6d. by mid-day on the second day, when she left. As her wages were to be 10s. a week, she would apparently have worked for nothing had she stayed on, and it seems by no means impossible that the firm would have had a claim upon her for a few shillings. This system of arbitrary fines on every trumpery pretext at the discretion of the firm is an iniquitous one, and it ought to be absolutely forbidden by law.

"FIRST CATCH YOUR SUN; THEN——"

(Lines suggested by a recent prophecy of Sir F. Treves.)

And so believes Sir Frederick Treves
The day's at hand when folks no more,
At every ache, their tums will make
A sort of walking chemist's store,
Nor Galen's tribe will drugs prescribe
Their sick and ailing patients for.

But sun and air and simple fare—
Dame Nature's remedies—instead,
To these they'll fly to put all ri'
The coated tongue or splitting head
Or frames that pine in slow decline
Or skins with fever blotched and red.

It may befall, and yet one small
Objection arises, hard to shun;
For while fresh air and simple fare
Are in the reach of every one—
In years like this, 'twould tax, I wis,
A Newton's self to find the Sun.

Sir Thomas Lawrence's portrait of Miss Julia Peel, afterwards Countess of Jersey, which was painted in 1827 for her father, Sir Robert Peel, the Minister, was sold in London on Thursday for £8,400, the purchaser being Mr. Charles Wertheimer. This picture was engraved by Cousins in 1833 under the title "Childhood's Innocence," and it was hung at Drayton Manor for more than seventy years. The price obtained was very much lower than had been anticipated, as it was expected that at least twelve thousand guineas would have been realised, and one enthusiastic admirer had valued the picture at £17,000.

The Duke of Fife's pictures from Duff House, which were sold at Christie and Manson's on Friday, were principally purchased towards the close of the eighteenth century by James, Earl of Fife, and they were described in the catalogue after the accounts of those works which that nobleman appears to have ingenuously accepted as correct. The portrait of the Duke of Richmond, ascribed to Vandyck, is a copy of the famous picture formerly at Corsham Court, Lord Methuen's seat in Wiltshire, but now in a public gallery at New York. One portrait of Charles II. was described as "James, Duke of York," and another as "Philip, Duke of Orleans." An individual in the attire of a French nobleman of the reign of Louis XIV. figured as that Sovereign. A lady in the costume of the early part of the seventeenth century was named "Lady Jane Grey," who had been in her grave for half a century when this picture was painted. The pictures realised very low prices, as was inevitable under the circumstances. Only one picture in this large collection of about 150 works ran into four figures, and this was a river scene by A. Van der Neer, for which Messrs. Dowdeswell paid 1,400 gs. For the portrait of Frances Howard, Duchess of Richmond, ascribed to Vandyck, Messrs. Agnew paid 325 gs., and this was the highest price fetched by any of the portraits.

The indefatigable Manning Press under his latest nom-de-plume of "Ernest Gaskell" must be doing uncommonly good business at the expense of the rural nobodies whom he is prepared to raise to the rank of County Leaders at three guineas a head. He seems to be getting through quite a county a month, and "Somerset Leaders: Social and Political" is the latest "exceptionally interesting and beautiful new County Illustrated Work" to be added to his valuable collection. The most astonishing feature about this game is that wherever he undertakes a new raid he is able to find the Lord-Lieutenant of the County ready to patronise the undertaking. Somerset is no exception, and the fact that "the Most Hon. the Marquess of Bath" is to appear among the Gaskell collection of "Leaders" is used, as usual, to bait the hook for the smaller fry. Is there no County Leader who will give a lead in the opposite direction?

Dr. Alexander Hill has announced his intention of resigning the Mastership of Downing College, Cambridge, after twenty-four years of office. Dr. Hill, who is a most distinguished scientist, did much valuable work as President of the Neurological Society of London, as Chairman of the Home Reading Union, and as Treasury Commissioner to inquire into and report on University Colleges. At Downing he has been a most successful "Head," and he will be greatly missed at the College. Dr. Hill has always been keenly interested in rowing, and he has been a familiar figure on the banks of the Cam for many years. He has been connected with Downing for thirty-three years, having entered the College as a scholar in 1874, and he gained the highest honours in the Natural Sciences Tripos in 1877. The new Master will be elected about the middle of this month, as Dr. Hill vacates the office at the end of the present term.

Dr. Routh, who died at Cambridge on Friday, was generally known as "the Father of Cambridge Mathematics." His early career at the University of London and at Cambridge was one of brilliant and unbroken success, and he came out Senior Wrangler in 1854, and was bracketed for Smith's Prize with Clerk Maxwell. Having been elected Fellow of Peterhouse, he at once commenced teaching, and became the most famous mathematical tutor ever known. Twenty-seven of his pupils were Senior Wranglers, and he "coached" forty-one Smith's Prizemen. He retired in 1886. Dr. Routh was very popular in the University, and he was much liked and highly esteemed both by his colleagues, the dons, and by his pupils.

The election of Mr. Strachan Davidson to the Mastership of Balliol, in succession to Dr. Caird, had been fully expected at Oxford, and he has well earned promotion to the office by many years of excellent work in the College. The new Master is highly distinguished as a scholar, his work on Roman history having made his name widely known. He is an excellent administrator. Mr. Strachan Davidson has been for a long time past one of the most popular and successful college tutors in Oxford. His promotion has met with general and hearty approval in the University.

The Chaplaincy of the Rue d'Aguesseau Church, Paris (the Embassy Church), which has become vacant by the preferment of Dr. Noyes to a valuable living in the diocese of London, has been offered by the Colonial and Continental Church Society to the Bishop of Honduras, who has accepted it. Bishop Ormsby, who has been working in Honduras for fourteen years, has a great reputation as an eloquent preacher, and he is tactful, and has a very pleasant manner. He is an Evangelical.

The Bishop of Lichfield has instituted the Rev. Leonard Tyrwhitt to the rectory of Rolleston, near Burton-on-Trent, which is of the net value of about £500 a year, with house, and in the gift of Sir Oswald Mosley. Mr. Tyrwhitt, who is a Chaplain-in-Ordinary to the King, has been for twelve years vicar of Fenton, an immense parish in the Potteries district of Staffordshire. He is a younger son of the Baroness Berners and a brother of Lady Knollys.

The death of Bishop Lloyd has not created a vacancy on the Episcopal Bench in the House of Lords, for he was the senior of the ten junior prelates who are waiting for seats. Bishop Lloyd is the only prelate who has died without becoming a member of the House of Lords. The next vacancy will now be filled by the Bishop of Manchester, and then comes the Bishop of Southwell.

No one can object to the Home Secretary's decision in regard to the proposed "tombola" at the Mansion House Fête for the Lord Mayor's Crippled Children's Fund. No doubt the decision was strictly in accordance with the law, and it is really quite time that the law was asserted against lotteries and other gambling enterprises for charitable purposes. Only a week or two ago I mentioned the raffling of a motor car for the benefit of one of the London hospitals. I have since heard that a precisely similar gamble is being run for the benefit of the Coventry and Warwickshire Hospital, a leading firm having presented a £750 car for the purpose. Books of tickets at a shilling each for the drawing are being distributed by the thousand. Similar lotteries are going on every day all over the country, the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland being a perfect hotbed of them.

I have no goody-goody views on the subject of gambling myself, but if it is morally wrong, it must be equally wrong whatever the purpose to which the profits are applied. It may or may not be malum in se, but, so far as public lotteries and gaming-houses are concerned, it is certainly in this country malum prohibitum, and the prohibition has no reference to the motives of the gamesters. There are, of course, plenty of people who would object to play bridge for money, or still more, to bet on a horse race, yet who see no harm in taking tickets in a raffle in a charity bazaar. This can only be because they hold that the end sanctifies the means. But if the State recognises this doctrine, when the means are at variance with its own ordinances, where is it going to stop? There are really no limits to what may be condoned by spiritual authority where the interests of the Church are concerned. Religious houses abroad run distilleries—and distil uncommonly good liquor, too. Irish priests have before now got up Derby sweepstakes for the benefit of their churches. It is not fanciful, therefore, to assume that there are religious persons who would think it no sin to run an establishment of the Monte Carlo type for the benefit of their church. I would not take on myself to say whether there would be any sin in it or not; but so long as the State thinks it desirable to suppress such establishments, it must suppress them without regard to the motives for which they are conducted. The same principle applies to unlawful gambling in every shape.

Owing, I suppose, to the fact that the season for charitable country excursions is coming on—or should be in the ordinary course of nature—my old friend Reuben May is very busy collecting money for this purpose. I have received a great many samples of his appeals during the last few weeks, and nothing astonishes me more about them than the extravagant expenditure which Reuben must incur in the mere matter of printing. He issues voluminous sheets of advertisements, and they are literally packed with print, which must cost a big sum of money, apart from the expense of distributing it. The amount of sheer waste under these heads must be enormous; but one of the advantages of the system of publishing no accounts, to which May has rigidly adhered throughout his philanthropic career, is that nobody has any means of judging how much it costs to collect every pound he receives.

JEFFREY & CO.'S ARTISTIC WALL PAPERS are on view at their New Showrooms, The Wallpaper Gallery, 31, Mortimer st., W. To be had of all decorators.—Factory, 64, Essex-rd., Islington, N.

A "LIMERICK" FROM HEADQUARTERS.

There was a young yeoman of Limerick,
Who went to a farmyard to trim a rick;
But he clipped so each side,
All the neighbours they cried:
"Och, Bedad! Did you e'er see a slimmer rick?"

It has already been mentioned that the British colony at Blantyre got up among themselves a competition turning upon the TRUTH Queer Story Puzzle, "The Kenwig Street Murder." I now hear that prizes have been duly distributed in accordance with the TRUTH solution, and one of the organisers of the entertainment has kindly sent me a copy of the award. I am interested to know that it is the work of the local Judge assisted by a solicitor, so that I should hope everybody is satisfied. I often hear from people in out-of-the-way parts of the world who would like to participate in TRUTH competitions, but are unable to do so owing to the difficulty of communication with London; and the example of the colony of Blantyre may perhaps show some of them a way of getting out of their difficulty.

The following contributions have reached me during the week towards the Tress Barry Fund for providing new sixpences at Christmas to the children in the London workhouses. I am sorry to find that the sixpences are not coming in as freely as might have been hoped, and I venture to remind my readers again that the time during which the Fund can be kept open is running away very fast:—

	No. of Sixpences.		No. of Sixpences.
Rev. W. F. Wellacott	21	M. D. N.	4
M. C. S.	10	J. P. N.	2
M. E. M.	10	"For one of the least of these."	1
R. S. M.	10	Lady Nottage	40
A. C. R.	20
W. H. R.	20

I have to acknowledge the following amounts towards Lady St. Helier's Poor Children's Holiday Fund:—E. B., £1 1s.; Ascott Avenue, £1 1s.; A. C., £2; E. F. C., £3 3s.; L. T. C., £5; E. J. L., £1.

CLARIDGE'S HOTEL, BROOK-STREET, Grosvenor-square.—Over 300 rooms; nearly 100 bathrooms. Royal suite, private entrance. Situation ensures perfect quiet.

The dangers of trying to be funny over a serious subject are painfully brought home to me by a letter from a cavalry officer in India. The following extracts will sufficiently show why:—

SIR,—I have just read, and discussed with my brother officers, your article headed "Divorce and Army Reform." To say that I am indignant at its tone is to put it mildly. Hitherto, though not always agreeing with your political views, I have looked upon you, as Editor of TRUTH, as doing good work in airing the many just grievances of the British officer, but now you have undone all that good by the publication of this article of such dubious taste. I fail to see why it behoved you to express your views about a letter written by a man so singularly unfortunate in his choice of his friends and their wives. . . . My experience is that marriage increases a man's keenness for his profession, and that his wife does her best to help him. . . . The only reparation in your power is to apologise for the gratuitous insult to a body of men, who, although not plaster saints, do not foul their own nests or those of their friends. Finally, let me advise you to avoid in future quoting statistics, by your own showing inaccurate; to skip the divorce cases in the Morning Leader, or whatever your favourite daily paper may be; and to bear in mind that the pictures of Indian society drawn by Rudyard Kipling do not hold good in the present day.

I do not quite know what to make of this letter, for, according to my experience, the British officer is fond of a joke, and this may be only his fun. I do not like to think that I have lost a sincere admirer by an ill-timed jest. But of late we have all been exhorting our officers to take themselves seriously, and this may be an example of the spirit of deadly solemnity that has come over the rising generation in consequence. It is best to be on the safe side, so I will explain that I do not really think that military uniforms are the real cause of army divorce cases; or that the etiquette of the Service always requires an officer's wife to bolt, supposing she bolts at all, with a man in the same regiment; or that the safety of the country is imperilled by the philanderings of bachelor officers; or that it is desirable for all officers' wives to be placed under military discipline and brought up at orderly room when their flirtations attract attention. It is scarcely necessary, I hope, to add that my favourite newspaper is the Daily Mail.

Another Service correspondent writes:—

You are quite right to stick up for the cadet corps, but no harm will be done by refusing financial assistance in respect of schoolboy cadets under sixteen, and I would discourage them all round under that age. For the same reason that I say this, I think it would be just as well if Mr. Haldane and the War Office pronounced emphatically against compulsory cadet service in public schools. The fact is that boys under sixteen soon get tired of soldiering, and anything in the shape of compulsion aggravates that tendency. It is as likely as not to "choke off" boys who, if left to themselves, might later on in life have enlisted or joined the Volunteers without any pressure.

I have no doubt that this is quite true. It was confirmed in a striking way in a conversation I had the other day with the father of an Oxford freshman, who had been in the cadet corps at one of the leading public schools. The boy would not join the University Volunteers when he went up to Oxford. He said that he had had enough of it at school, and he added that this was the view of all the "men" who had gone up at the same time. Precisely the same thing was stated in TRUTH a few months ago on the authority of an officer of my acquaintance, who testified to the difficulty of getting ex-cadets from public-school corps to join a University Volunteer corps. As a matter of fact, he was speaking of Cambridge, so that one has the same evidence from both the Universities. Other evidence that I have had, from people who know what they are talking about, shows that in this respect the working-class boy does not differ from the public-school boy.

All this does not in the least conflict with what I said last week. It does not show that boys may not be put through their recruits' drill in cadet corps. But it shows that you must not attempt to take them in hand too young, and that you must not attempt to force them. In fact, the compulsion which so many worthy people dread from fear of fostering "militarism" is likely to have precisely the opposite effect to what they anticipate. It is very important that the truth about this should be understood at the War Office, if any good is to be done with cadet corps in connection with the coming Territorial Army; and equally important that it should be understood by the headmasters of public schools, who have been in many cases indoctrinated with Lord Roberts's gospel of universal military training.

It is easy for a schoolmaster who thinks a little military training a good thing, and who enforces "compulsory games," to jump to the idea that military training should be compulsory as well as cricket and football. But there is a great difference between the two things. A boy is forced to play games for his immediate bodily and moral advantage, not with the idea of preparing him to continue the practice when he reaches manhood. And as a matter of fact, no boy ever plays football or cricket after he has left school because he was compelled to do so in statu pupillari; on the contrary, boys who do not take naturally to the games hate them the more because of the compulsion, and drop them the moment it is removed, just as we hear of their dropping military service under the same circumstances. But the object of training a boy as a cadet is not to make a soldier of him while at school, but to prepare him for volunteering when he leaves. If you "choke him off" that, you have done more harm than good. The conclusion of the whole matter is that the value of the cadet corps should be judged exclusively by the number of recruits it furnishes to the adult battalions, and Mr. Haldane would do well to consider whether all grants to such corps should not be made on this basis.

We have heard a great deal of late about the improvement of the financial administration of the Army, from the point of view of the taxpayer, but there may be quite as much room for it from the point of view of Mr. Atkins. In proof of that, I call attention to the following recent occurrence in a certain infantry battalion. A man received at his monthly settlement 4s. 1d. short of the amount due to him as per the official company pay-list. He managed to look at the company "blue-book" containing an account of the stoppages, and saw there three small entries under specific heads, together with an item, "Other charges, 3s.," making up the total of 4s. 1d. stopped from his pay. This was the state of the book at the date of paying the company, but the whole of the entries were in pencil. Obtaining another look at the book a few days later, the man found that the items had been entered in ink, but with the omission of "Other charges, 3s.," and with the total shown as 1s. 1d. Although the original pencil figures had been more or less erased, traces of them were still visible on the sheet.

In the battalion in which this incident occurred the men have been groaning under similar extortion for some time, though, of course, they dare not give expression to their feelings, and I have good reason to believe that similar frauds are prevalent in other units. For this reason I would call the attention of the higher administration of the Army to the foregoing statements, which are susceptible of immediate proof or disproof, for there are special circumstances in the case which will make it easy to test the allegations, even if the alteration of the book is not still visible. If any one at Headquarters is disposed to have the allegations inquired into, my services are at his disposal for the purpose. It is not, I trust, necessary to dwell upon the seriousness of the matter. If a pay sergeant can on every settling day make a shilling or two out of every man in a company by fictitious entries in accounts, he is swindling the men out of a very handsome sum per annum, and it is intolerable that such practices should be perpetrated with impunity.

Whether or not any one in authority thinks it worth while to accept the invitation given above, steps ought at least to be taken to make such frauds impossible. It is scarcely necessary to point out that the practice of submitting figures in pencil for the purpose of the monthly settlement with every man in a company is utterly irregular, and it lends itself readily to fraud, and fraud which in nine cases out of ten (the above happens to be the tenth) cannot be detected. Under the existing system of account-keeping, the actual amount paid to each man is not shown in the company pay-list, but only the gross total. If, therefore, a man complains that a larger amount was stopped from his pay than is shown in the book recording the stoppages, it is simply a question of his word against the pay sergeant's, and he knows the respective weight of their two words in the scales of a commanding officer too well to make a complaint. Each pay-sergeant consequently has a free hand, unless his account of stoppages is kept in such a way as to ensure its accuracy.

The following observations of a correspondent on this matter are worth quoting:—

> The attention of the War Office should be drawn to the method of paying men in the Navy and Royal Marines, where the men are paid by the paymaster of their ship or station, and receive their full pay to a farthing, without any deduction of mysterious stoppages; company charges, if there are any, being explained to each individual, and settled up in cash. In the Army, on the other hand, a man never receives his full pay. Officers commanding companies are also at fault in not making themselves fully cognisant with the business side of their work. In many cases the frauds perpetrated are quite bare-faced, and would be easily suspected, if not detected, by any one with a little business knowledge. Too many officers consider that the mere signing of a document submitted to them is the beginning and end of their financial duty.

No business man will question that the best way of obviating all irregularities, as well as all suspicions on the part of soldiers that irregularities are going on, is that mentioned above—to pay them in full, and then present to them, for settlement in cash, an account properly vouched for and readily intelligible. The account should be made up in ink, and should be signed or initialled by the company officer after it has been made up so as to preclude any suspicion that a bogus one has been substituted. And it would be quite as well that men should have the opportunity of making any objections to the account direct to their company officer.

SEEGER'S HAIR DYE.—Dyes the hair by merely combing through. 2s. the Case, or Trial Bottle, mailed free from observation, 7d.—HINDE'S Ltd., 1A, Finsbury, London.

My attention has been called to a recent article in the Hampshire Telegraph dealing with the question of the claims of certain naval pensioners to augmentation pensions at fifty-five years of age—claims hitherto repudiated on the ground that there are no funds to meet them. The writer suggests that in the absence of other funds these pensions should be charged upon various funds, all of which have come originally out of the pockets of the lower deck. Among such funds he mentions the pay and effects of deserters, fines for leave-breaking, unclaimed prize money, spirit ration stoppages, unissued rations, and so on. As, however, all these funds are used for other purposes already, it is clear that if they were diverted for the payment of pensions, the money would have to be voted by Parliament to replace them, and in all the circumstances of the case it seems to me far more proper that Parliament should vote the money directly for the object in view.

This matter has been frequently referred to in TRUTH in time past, and is really nothing short of a national scandal; and if the facts were understood by the public and the House of Commons, there would be a unanimous demand that the grievance should be redressed. Briefly stated, the facts are that by printed recruiting regulations issued prior to 1878 all men joining the Navy and Marines were promised that, subject to good character, the ordinary pensions of their rating which they might earn would receive an augmentation of 5d. a day at the age of fifty-five, and a further augmentation subsequently. As these men have reached the age of fifty-five, their applications for fulfilment of this undertaking have been refused with regret, on the ground that the Admiralty have no funds at their disposal for the purpose. That is practically what it comes to, but I believe that in point of fact the inadequacy of the Greenwich Hospital funds is what has been pleaded.

Obviously, when the augmentation was promised it was understood by the Admiralty of that day that the payments would in due course be provided by the Treasury, and that the money would be voted by Parliament. There seems to be no shadow of justification for this not being done; but the men are few in number, and perhaps not very clear in their minds about their rights; a new official generation has grown up which knows nothing of the recruiting conditions which prevailed thirty years ago; and so the claims of the men have been allowed to slide. But a more flagrant breach of faith with those in its service has never been committed by any civilised government, and if the matter were properly brought up in Parliament to-day, it is impossible to believe that the promised augmentation of pensions would not be at once granted. What is required is that the matter should be brought before Parliament with such a precise statement of facts in support of it that neither the Admiralty nor the Treasury can wriggle out of their obligations. It seems to me that this is a matter which might engage the attention of the Army and Navy Veterans' Association, to which I referred last week.

My dear Mr. Lloyd-George,—You are a very capable administrator and a very sound democrat. May I therefore call your attention to the hardship which has been done by a recent Board of Trade Order, which lays down that no sailor shall rank as an A.B. until he has been at sea three years? The order may be excellent in principle, but it has inflicted great hardship on many men owing to its operation being retrospective. My information comes from a sailor who has been sailing as A.B. for two years, but now loses that rank in consequence of this order, and as he possesses a wife and family the consequences are felt by others besides himself. I understand that there are many in this position; and I think you will agree with me that the order should not affect men already rated as A.B. at the time when it came into operation.

One or two Indian postal officials have taken exception to the statement in a recent paragraph that dissatisfaction prevails in the department at the favour shown to members of the Indian Civil Service in the appointment of Postmasters-General. It seems that there are now nine Postmasters-General in India, six of the appointments being held by members of the I. C. S. and the remainder by postal officials. My correspondents suggest that the majority of postal officials prefer to serve under Civil Servants rather than under men promoted from the ranks of the department, whose administration is much more apt to be marked by acts of jobbery and favouritism. It is contended, moreover, that from the point of view of the public as well as of the staff the I. C. S. has supplied the most efficient and successful Postmasters-General.

THE DANGERS OF KISSING.

So kissing is a dangerous thing,
  Which poisons while it pleases,
And lips convey, as close they cling,
  All manner of diseases—
From phthisis to the worm called "ring,"
  From eczema to sneezes.

A Yankee doctor tells us this,
  And p'rhaps he may have reason,
For though I've never known a kiss
  Hand phthisis or a sneeze on,
I oft have found the lips of miss
  Pass fatal HEART-DISEASE on.

A friend of mine has often defended his lack of attention to his correspondence by saying that most letters answer themselves if they are left unanswered long enough. This also seems to be the idea of the Town Clerk of Portsmouth. A working man named Graham was for some years the tenant of a piece of allotment land in that borough. The land was acquired by the corporation for a public improvement, and Graham was served with a notice to quit signed jointly by the Town Clerk and the solicitors to the late owners of the land. On January 1 he wrote to the Town Clerk claiming compensation under the Allotments and Cottage Gardens

Compensation for Crops Act. The Town Clerk did not send even a formal reply to this letter, or to a further letter in the following month, and Graham eventually had to take proceedings, as the result of which he obtained compensation from his former landlords.

In the County Court last week Graham sued the Corporation for £1 16s., being expenses to which he represented that he had been unnecessarily put owing to the Town Clerk's negligence in omitting to answer his letters. The Judge dismissed the case, but at the same time remarked that the Town Clerk should have answered the man's letters. It may be hoped that this judicial reproof will have a salutary effect. A private person can, of course, please himself whether he answers letters or not, but a paid public official ought not to be permitted to ignore in this contemptuous way correspondence on a matter affecting the business of his office, which, if only as a matter of courtesy, requires a reply.

There is some pleasant reading for Londoners in the report of the Medical Officer of Health at Portsmouth. He states that a systematic trade in diseased animals, principally tuberculous cows, is carried on in certain country markets in Hampshire and Sussex, but that owing to the system of inspection that has been adopted the meat no longer finds its way to Portsmouth. The carcases, it seems, are now usually sent to London, and from the number of cows that are sold in the markets at prices ranging from 5s. to 65s. each, it is obvious that there must be regular channels through which such meat can be readily disposed of. Occasionally one reads of the conviction in London of some farmer or butcher engaged in this filthy and dangerous traffic. But there is little doubt that in spite of the vigilance of the inspectors a good deal of diseased meat is brought into London and sold for human consumption.

Attention was called in TRUTH some two or three years ago to the free and easy way in which one of the taxing masters of the High Court attended to his duties. The little notice had a wonderfully good effect, but I hear from learned friends that the effect has now worn off. For some time past the Master's attendances have been flagging, and at the end of the Whitsun vacation he had such a bad relapse that he did not get back from the country until June 3, legal business having been resumed on May 22. Of course, he may have been ill, but the opinion in legal circles seems to be that he was only suffering from what is called "indisposition," and considering how liberal is the regular allowance of holidays in the legal world, an official whose holiday is extended for twelve days even by real illness might well be required to provide a substitute. A taxing master receives £1,500 a year, which works out at about £7 per working day. If he himself were "taxed" at that rate when absent from duty it might possibly be found to have a good effect on his health.

A solicitor in the provinces recently asked me for information about the Maritime Legal Aid Association, of Chancery-lane, of which a Mr. D. Morgan is the general manager. It seems to be a concern of much the same class as a good many other legal aid associations which are now offering their valuable services to working men under the Compensation Acts. It occupies the same offices as the Workers' Accident Compensation Association, Ltd., which is also managed, and in great part owned, by the aforesaid Mr. Morgan. This latter company was registered in January last, its object being to carry on all insurance business except life assurance. For this purpose the promoters apparently do not think that any substantial amount of capital is necessary, as the nominal capital of the company is only £1,000, and 300 shares were issued to Morgan as fully paid, which would only leave £700 for the purpose of "all insurance business except life." In point of fact, only shares to the value of £605 have been issued, according to the returns at Somerset House, and £95 of this went in preliminary expenses. Morgan holds 401 shares altogether, and a Mr. Burnell 200 shares. The former is appointed general manager at a salary of £300 per annum, which is to increase by £25 per annum up to £500.

I understand that the Maritime Legal Aid Association, which Mr. Morgan is carrying on in conjunction with the above company, has been giving assistance of some kind to Mr. Havelock Wilson in his financial troubles. The solicitor who came to me for information about the concern states that solicitors at seaport towns have been offered the appointment of local representatives of the association on the terms that they will lend the association £100 at 5 per cent., and divide with it the profit costs arising out of litigation. It would be interesting to know what the association proposes to do with the money thus advanced, for though capital is highly desirable in a general insurance business, there seems to be no need for it in the case of a legal aid association which proposes to do all its practical work through local solicitors, and only requires money for working its London office. I should recommend any solicitors who may meditate closing with the above-mentioned offer to obtain information on this point from Mr. Morgan before putting £100 into the legal aid business.

Mr. Justice Phillimore, in his charge to the grand jury at the Norfolk Assizes, found occasion to read a much-needed lesson to some of the Norfolk Shallows. One of the cases in the calendar was that of a man charged with breaking and entering a dwelling-house and stealing a piece of bread. The judge remarked that he could not help thinking that the case could have been met by fourteen days' or a week's imprisonment, whereas the man had been committed for trial, and had already been in prison for rather more than a month. Of course, a charge of housebreaking cannot be dealt with at Petty Sessions, but it was within the power of magistrates to reduce the charge to one of larceny, and thus to have brought it within their jurisdiction, though probably the mere suggestion of taking such a course would have horrified the worthy magistrates who committed the prisoner to the assizes.

This is to inform the readers of "TRUTH" that the HOTEL ROSE, WIESBADEN, is now rebuilt and refurnished. 200 rooms. 60 bathrooms. Apartments with private bath.

The motorphobia with which some country J.P.s are afflicted is well illustrated in the cases heard before the Oakham Bench which appear in my Legal Pillory below. There can be no doubt in the mind of any reasonable man that the drunken driver of a horse is a much greater danger to the public than the motorist who by inadvertence or accident is caught driving without a light at the back of his car, yet, judged by the action of the Oakham magistrates, such a belief is precisely the reverse of the truth. Interesting comparisons are also afforded by the cases heard at Govan and Glasgow, and at Torrington and Carlisle. From the case reported from Belfast it will also be seen that the Irish magistracy are just as prone as their British confrères to treat cases of atrocious cruelty to animals with ridiculous lenity:—

Oakham Police Court. Before Sir A. J. Fludyer, Messrs. Heathcote, Belgrave, Evans-Freke, and Nutt. H. Humphries, charged with being drunk in charge of a horse and cart, and with ill-treating the horse with a whip. Fined £1 12s. 6d. for the first offence, and £2 for the second.

Oakham Police Court. Before the same bench. J. A. Doran, charged with driving a motor-car not having a light at the back, and further with failing to produce his licence when asked to produce it. Fined £5 and costs in each case.

Derby Borough Police Court. Before Messrs. Woodiwiss, Russell and Richardson. J. Shearn, charged with assaulting Mary Ann Burk. He struck her on the arm with a poker, and hit her in the face several times with a coal rake. Fined 20s. and costs.

Derby Borough Police Court. Before Messrs. Longden, Norman, Bourn and Hart. Edward King, charged with wandering abroad. Fourteen days' hard labour.

Littlehampton Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Bennett and other magistrates. Emily Bennett, charged with wandering abroad. One month.

Clydebank Police Court. Before Bailie Sinclair. Hugh Ferguson, charged with assaulting his wife. He struck her on the head, face and body, knocked her down, and kicked her. Fined 30s Grimston Petty Sessions. Before Capt. Digby, Capt. Bagge, and Mr. Wyrley-Birch. James Hudson, charged with sleeping out. Twenty-one days' hard labour.

Govan Police Court. Before Bailie M'Fadyean. Archibald M'Cullock, charged with assaulting a young shop girl. She was walking home at night when she was struck on the forehead and became insensible. Fined one guinea.

Glasgow Summons Court. Before Sheriff Mackenzie. Andrew Seaforth, charged with supplying a customer with 3½d. worth of mutton chops after 10 o'clock on a Saturday night. Fined £1 6s. 6d. inclusive.

Dunfermline Sheriff Court. R. Whyte, A. Hardy, and J. Higgins, charged with taking a pony from a stable and riding and beating it until it fell exhausted on the road. Higgins fined 12s. 6d., the others 7s. 6d. each.

Alton Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Gathorne Wood, Knight, Mangles, Seawell, Spicer, General Hall and Capt. Stephens. J. B. Suttaby, charged with stealing a pair of boots from outside a shop. One month's hard labour.

Sleaford Police Court. Before Major-General Sir W. M. Wilson, Capt. Reeve-King, Capt. Cragg, Messrs. Smith and Pattinson. A. Olive and B. Olive, charged with cruelty to a horse. It was aged, suffering from badly diseased fore legs, and though bought for exportation for £4, was set to draw heavy loads of manure. Fined 10s. each.

Pontesbury Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Tatham Warter, C. E. Jenkins, R. Blakeway Phillips and W. Swire. John Doogan and S. Blakemore, charged with having pheasants' eggs in their possession, and S. Mansell, charged with taking them from a nest. Mansell fined £3, Doogan 10s., and Blakemore 6s.

Torrington County Petty Sessions. Walter Isaacs and Grace Isaacs, charged with neglecting their three children. The eldest was five years old. They were verminous and covered with sores, their clothing putrid, and the house indescribably foul. They had been seen ravenously eating offal given to the dog of a neighbour. Fined £1 and costs each.

Carlisle Police Court. Before Sir Benjamin Scott and other magistrates. A lad named Nicholson, charged with stealing biscuits valued 3d. from his employers, and with assaulting the forewoman, who reported him for the theft. Fourteen days' hard labour for the theft, and fined 10s. 6d. and costs for the assault, or a further 14 days' hard labour in default.

Belfast Police Court. Two men, named Timoney and McGeough, charged with cruelty to a dog. Timoney held it by the tail while McGeough poured turpentine over it. Each fined 20s. and costs.

Llandudno Police Court. Before Dr. Dallon and Mr. Robert Roberts. W. T. Jones, cab-driver, charged with stealing a rug value 7s. He had been in the employ of a carriage company, and when he left the rug was found at his lodgings. One month's hard labour.

One of my readers forwards some correspondence which a lady relative of his has had with Cray, Stewart, and Co., of 25, Milton-street, whose advertisements were dealt with in my recent article on "The Cash-on-Credit Terms Trick." The grossly misleading language by means of which the aforesaid trick is worked is conspicuously shown in the following extract from one of the circulars sent out by the firm when their newspaper advertisement has been answered:—

OUR EASY PAYMENT TERMS. If it is not convenient for you to pay cash for goods, send your order along with 2s. deposit, and you can pay the balance by small weekly instalments. Credit customers receive the same careful attention as cash customers.

What is the proper name for this language, when the fact is that the firm intends to give no credit at all, and "easy payment by small weekly instalments" merely means payment in advance of the delivery of the goods?

The worst part of this trick, which is now in evidence everywhere, lies in the refusal of the parties practising it to return the first payment, or "deposit," when the customer discovers the real nature of the transaction. In the case mentioned above the customer demanded the return of her money on discovering that she was to give credit herself instead of receiving it, but Cray, Stewart, and Co. simply left her application unanswered. Many of the parties working this trick expressly declare that they make it a rule not to return money. The natural inference is that the object in view is simply to obtain and retain deposits from customers, who naturally refuse to complete the transaction when they discover how they have been had. It is the habitual advertising of tricks like this which, as Mr. Gamage pointed out the other day, tends to bring all newspaper advertising into discredit.

Here is another example of the business methods of J. N. Masters, Limited, of Rye, which have been so frequently referred to in TRUTH. The victim is once more a soldier, Masters laying himself out specially to catch men in H.M. Service. He ordered a watch at 30s., and to save trouble paid not only the deposit of 2s. 6d. required with the order, but a further 2s. 6d. which was only due on receipt of the watch. The watch not arriving, the man complained, and the reply was that it had been sent off and that Masters, Limited, "would make inquiries through their delivery company." This was at the end of March, and since that date the customer has been unable to extract any further information from Masters, although he has applied for the return of his money, and has even offered to take other goods in exchange for the watch. It would seem that soldiers are special sufferers from the operations of firms of this class—no doubt for the reason indicated above.

ROYAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS. Nearly 8,000 convictions last year. Complaints marked "Private," absolutely confidential.—SECRETARY, 105, Jermyn st., London.

Among the firms which seem to do a large business in bicycles on the instalment system of credit is Edward O'Brien, Limited, of Coventry. Some months ago this business was referred to in TRUTH in connection with the experience of certain soldiers who, after paying deposits for bicycles, discovered that it was necessary for them to obtain the signature of their commanding officer or some other responsible person to guarantee the payment of the rest of the money. When they objected to this, O'Brien, Limited, refused to return their money. In a recent advertisement O'Brien proclaims, in capital letters, "I'll give you credit without bondmen or agreements." Notwithstanding this announcement, precisely the same trick has been played in another case quite recently; and when the customer protested against being asked for a guarantee after paying his first instalment, and referred to the advertisement, O'Brien replies:—

I think that everyone should understand that when I say "no bondmen or security required," I refer to those who are at least householders, and of full age.

There is, of course, no reason why anything of the sort should be understood, and even if the wording of the advertisement were not misleading, there can be no justification for sticking to money which has been paid under a misapprehension.

In the case above mentioned, the customer—it is a soldier again in this case—paid 10s. when sending his order. When he applied for the return of it O'Brien wrote:—

You will understand it is impossible for me to refund your money, as I am at a great loss over you cancelling your order. However, I want to settle the matter as amicably as possible, and I think the best thing for me to do will be to put you in communication with Mr. G. W. Robey, the World's Provider, of this city (Coventry), and I enclose two of his lists, from which kindly make a selection of articles to the value of your deposit, and I will have them sent on to you.

It would be interesting to know, first, how O'Brien loses 10s. by the cancelling of an order, whether or not obtained by a misleading advertisement, and, secondly, how, if he has sustained that loss, he will be recouped by the expenditure of the money with another firm—if it is another firm. It is really amazing to see the effrontery with which impositions of this character are now perpetrated—where the man is in a position which makes it unlikely that he will invoke the protection of the law.

Reference was made in TRUTH recently to the "Institute of Natural Therapeutics," of 73, Queen Victoria-street, which has gone one better than the electric belt vendors by introducing "Odo-Magnetic Apparel," by means of which the vitalising forces evolved from the imaginations of advertisement writers can be directly applied to any part of the human anatomy. One of my readers forwards one of the latest circulars of this particular firm. The circular calls attention to a "reprint from one of the oldest journals in the country" in praise of the Odo-Magnetic humbug, and adds, "no journalist of standing would insert such a notice without careful investigation, and we hope to receive your measurements (for the Odo-Magnetic apparel) and instructions without delay." The publication thus referred to is the Gentleman's Journal, which, so far from being one of the oldest publications in the country, is a new periodical which has appropriated an old and respected name; and the article reprinted from it by the Institute of Natural Therapeutics—which appears to be the trade name of a Mr. A. Dennison Light—is, of course, merely an ordinary advertisement.

One of my readers gives an instructive account of dealings which he has had with a firm calling themselves "Bell Bros., Wholesale Gunmakers," 93, Waterloo-street, Glasgow. Through an attractively worded advertisement, on answering which he was favoured with an imposing catalogue, he ordered two air-guns from this firm, and remitted the price, £1 14s., by cheque. Getting no acknowledgment, in spite of two further communications, he stopped the cheque, informed Bell Bros. that he had done so, and requested them to return his cheque. This was not done, and a week or two later the two air-guns arrived. They proved to be very inferior articles, and were at once returned.

Three weeks later another parcel arrived, and my correspondent, recognising that it was from Bell Bros., refused to accept it. Another three weeks elapsed, and then came an impudent letter from Bell Bros., stating that they were taking proceedings "for the recovery of the value of the goods," with a view to showing their customer that he could not "play the fool with them." My correspondent is now awaiting these proceedings, and I imagine he is likely to wait for some time. Inquiries of the Glasgow police have in the meantime elicited that "Bell Bros." is merely a middleman who buys goods from Birmingham, and has nothing in the shape of a factory of his own. His description of his firm as "wholesale gunmakers" is therefore totally indefensible, though apparently only in keeping with his general business methods. This seems another advertisement to which the attention of the proprietors and managers of London newspapers and magazines might be directed with advantage.

I do not know of any reason why the bloodsucking brigade should be exceptionally active just now, but, judging from the number of circulars that are being passed on to me, they seem to think that this is a favourable time for making their seductively-worded offers of cash accommodation. From one correspondent alone I have received a collection of about a score of circulars with which he has been pestered by various usurers whose names figure in my Cautionary List. This correspondent, however, is a beneficed clergyman, and the beneficed clergy have ever been among the favourite—because the easiest and the safest—prey of the cent.-per-cent. extortioners. "Fred Watts" (alias David Freedman) and "A. Masters" (alias Abraham Lazarus) are apparently the busiest of all the circularisers at the present moment. Lazarus is addressing his communications to married ladies, a course to which their husbands naturally object. One husband says that if he lived in

Buy STEPHENS' TYPEWRITER CARBONS because they yield sharp impressions, are clean to handle, and exceptionally durable. No favour is asked for them because they are British.

London he would pay a visit to 9, Old Cavendish-street, and give "A. Masters" a horse-whipping, but as he cannot do that he asks me to administer a verbal castigation. I am afraid, however, that it is quite useless to do so; Lazarus is a case-hardened old extortioner.

As to Freedman, otherwise "Watts," he is at present distributing two circulars which form a rather striking contrast. One is a severely plain, business-like communication from 150, Friar-street, Reading, in which "Yours obediently, Fred Watts," takes the liberty of drawing attention to the fact that "he advances cash from £50 to any amount." The other, dated from 95, Jermyn-street, W., intimates that "Mr. F. Watts wishes to invest capital in sums from £100 to £50,000, not as a professional lender, but as a private banker to ladies and gentlemen." This is a gorgeously got-up production in the dazzling style of the famous effusions of the late Isaac Gordon, the printing being in several different colours, with a thick underlining in gold. The gaudiness of the circular has created quite a sensation, and I am being inundated with letters suggesting that it deserves a special notice.

One letter, by the way, comes from the guardian of a boy to whom "Mr. F. Watts" had directed his circular. So many moneylenders' circulars are sent to this infant that his guardian has had printed the following form of reply:—

Sir,—As guardian of Mr. ———, who for many years to come will be a minor, I must beg you not to trouble to send any more advertisements to him.—Yours faithfully, ———.

This had been forwarded to "Mr. F. Watts" on a previous occasion, and another copy has now been sent. With all respect to the guardian, however, this is not the proper method of dealing with such a shark. The proper method is to prosecute him under the Betting and Loans (Infants) Act, 1892, as amended by the Moneylenders Act. The latter Act throws upon the moneylender the onus of proving that "he had reasonable ground for believing the infant to be of full age"; and, as was shown in a case some years ago against the tout who calls himself "H. Passmore," it is no answer to the charge to say that the offence was committed unknowingly through the infant's name being included in a list—taken from a directory or other publication. If a moneylender chooses to issue circulars to all and sundry he is liable to penalties whenever one reaches a minor, and in every case of the kind the guardian ought either to institute a prosecution himself, or else communicate with the Public Prosecutor.

Yet another example of the rapacity of the "slum moneylenders" of Liverpool came before the local magistrates last week, when a woman was charged with attempting to commit suicide. It seemed that for two or three months she had been in the clutches of a usurer who on a small loan (which she had spent in drink) exacted interest at the rate of 2d. per 1s. per week. In discharging the accused the Chairman remarked that the moneylenders in the poor districts were nothing less than vampires, and no effort should be spared in their exposure. Unfortunately, however, no amount of exposure is likely to put an end to this system of moneylending among women of the working class, which appears to be particularly common in Liverpool.

By the way, I see that a Moneylenders' Victims' Defence Association has been formed by the Rev. Herbert Williams, St. John's Clergy House, Tooley-street, S.E., who has for some time past interested himself in this matter. Mr. H. Carr Gomm, M.P., is the president of the association. Its main object will be to defend persons in poor circumstances from the extortion of usurers, and I have no doubt that a great deal of good work may be accomplished by such an organisation. The moneylenders whose business is done among comparatively poor people are an even more avaricious and unprincipled crew than the Shylocks of the West End, and they succeed in enforcing many harsh and unconscionable bargains from which the borrowers might obtain relief under the Act of 1900, if they only had assistance in bringing the matter before a court. Obviously, however, it will be necessary for the association to exercise a good deal of care and discretion in determining whether a case shall be taken up or not. There are, of course, borrowers who are quite undeserving of any sympathy, and some might even be encouraged to raise loans if they thought that they could rely upon the help of a philanthropic association in extricating themselves from the hands of the moneylenders.

A lady asks my advice as to whether she would do well to undertake home work for a firm described as the Lawrence Irwin Company, of University Chambers, Birmingham. As it appears that she is to begin her work by paying 6s. to the aforesaid firm for an "outfit," on the understanding that they will pay her so much for colouring photographs with their materials, my advice is, emphatically, "don't." My reason for it is, not that I possess any special information about the firm in question, but that business conducted on these lines is apt to prove unsatisfactory, and that it is frequently the most delusive humbug. But I may add, on the strength of the literature they distribute, that the Lawrence Irwin Company appears to be extensively engaged in the business of getting money from other people on promises of putting them in the way of making money for themselves—a business the profits of which are entirely on one side.

Another effective trick for extracting money from the pockets of the unwary has lately been pushed on a large scale by somebody calling himself the London Premium and Tea Company, of 56, Ludgate-hill, E.C. This is the old trick of informing you that you are to receive a present "absolutely free," provided you apply for it in twelve days, the explanation of this generosity being suggested by appending your own autograph, cut from some letter or document. The "absolutely free" present, which includes "a set of electro-silver plated ware," and "one-eighth-pound package of our Premium Tea," is, of course, only to be obtained by paying for it, the price in this instance being 4s. 6d. A gentleman who went to inspect his present the other day, before paying for it, reports that the total value of the plated goods and the tea could not amount to half the price at which it is to be forwarded "free." I presume that the London Premium Tea Company is merely an alias of some party who has already worked this trick to a standstill under some other name.

The Ladies' League (under Royal patronage), 2, Princes street, Cavendish-square, W., successfully Recommends Gentlewomen for responsible Positions in every capacity. Telephone, 1,025 Mayfair.

Writing with reference to one of the above-mentioned circulars, which seem to have been sent out by thousands, a correspondent expresses his suspicions that the letter from which his autograph has been cut was written to one of my contemporaries, in connection with a competition that it has been holding. On behalf of the press, I should like to repudiate this suggestion with indignation, but in the present day it is unfortunately impossible to feel very confident on the subject. It is quite certain, at any rate, that the practice of selling old letters wholesale to parties who use them in connection with the above-mentioned game is now extensively adopted by many people who ought to know better.

The same trick is being worked, with all the same appliances, by the "John D. Macdonald Company," of 96, Newgate-street, the "present" offered in this case being a so-called "18-carat solid gold watch." The present will be forthcoming on paying 6s. 11d. for a "finest Asian gold chain." "I do not find," writes one of the fortunate recipients of this generous offer, "the name of the John D. Macdonald Company in your Cautionary List." That is so, but at the same address in Newgate-street will be found the name of the Brahmo Lever Watch Company, who have been practising the same trick busily for a long time past, and whose circulars, of which I have dozens before me, are precisely identical with those of the John D. Macdonald Company. The latest alias of this individual, or gang, will therefore, be duly noted for entry in the next edition of the Cautionary List.

Bunkum of a very different quality is employed by the many-aliased Beston, of Birmingham. He evidently finds that no pretensions can be too extravagant, no story too silly, for the egregious simpletons on whom he preys. In the character of the Midland Publishing Company, 21, Lonsdale-road, Harborne, he is circulating an article purporting to show "How Men make Big Money on the Turf" by taking the company's tips. These are the sort of fairy tales that it contains:—

Mr. E. P. Wilson, of Liverpool, was earning four shillings a day when he faced a proposition that now confronts you. He wanted to make money—not lose it—by his Turf investments, so his first step was to join the Midland Publishing Co. for a series of telegrams. He is now a general contractor, employing many men in his workshops.

The success of Mr. W. Green, of Exeter, would read like a romance if it were not actual fact, but being satisfied with his income and the information he had received from all other racing advisers in the country he enrolled with the Midland Publishing Co., who send four weeks' daily wires for £3 10s., or Twenty Occasionals for £5. Mr. Green is now one of the best known and wealthiest men in Devonshire.

Mr. George Morton was an engineer at £10 a month when he became a client of the Midland Publishing Co. He has now retired.

One cannot feel much sympathy for the flats who are imposed upon by such transparently mendacious twaddle as the above. Still, I agree with Lord Durham that in the interests both of the community and the Turf the law ought to suppress the practices of such sharps as Beston.

I had an interesting interview the other day with a gentleman who has a strong feeling, as everybody ought to have, respecting bogus philanthropic work, and has conceived a particular aversion to the Poor Children's Society, run by Mr. George Breton. I share this aversion, and from time to time have endeavoured to give expression to it, but my efforts now seem to me tame and ineffectual. The gentleman in question—Mr. James Day, of St. Mary Axe—deals in adhesive labels, and travels in the course of his business. He has had printed a series of adhesive labels warning all whom it may concern against the Poor Children's Society, and these he posts up in the course of his travels as opportunity offers. This is no doubt useful, but it is when he comes to Breton's collecting-boxes that Mr. Day really rises to the occasion. As soon as he sees one of these articles on a tradesman's counter, he smashes it with a stick, hands the money over to the tradesman for transfer to some more worthy object of charity, and forwards the mangled remains of the box to Breton with his compliments, and an intimation of his "address for service," if the society wishes to avail itself of any legal remedy for the outrage.

For reasons which can readily be understood, Breton and his society have adopted the policy of taking this sort of thing lying down. This naturally encourages Mr. Day to renewed efforts, and seeing that the bulk of Breton's revenue is derived from these boxes, there seems reason to hope that in course of time Mr. Day may smash the society as well as its boxes. He also tells me that, in view of recent observations in Truth, he is turning his attention to the collecting boxes of the Metropolitan and Provincial Association. An interesting correspondence has passed in consequence between him and the secretary of the concern. So far back as the beginning of March the secretary informs Mr. Day that unless he apologises and pays for the damage he has done to one of the boxes "a summons will be taken out next Thursday." Mr. Day replies "Come on." Although the correspondence has continued for nearly three months, and the invitation has been repeated, the secretary has not come on as yet, except by post. Mr. Day certainly seems to be a practical philanthropist, and a few more crusaders of the same robust type would really be useful.

Here is an instructive illustration of the justice of the warnings against the Continental lottery touts which

The Ritz Hotel, Piccadilly, W. — 8090 Gerrard. The Restaurant and Hotel overlook the Green Park. Magnificent suite of Ball and Banqueting Rooms. Under the same Direction as the Carlton Hotel.

I am continually publishing. A short time ago Colonel X., received a circular from the notorious firm of H. Langenhahn and Co., the self-styled "bankers," of Bremen, inviting him to take a ticket in Class III. of a Royal Saxon State Lottery. He did so, forwarding £3 and receiving in reply a letter enclosing an extra half ticket, price £1 10s., which he was urged to buy to get "a double chance." He took the half ticket, and in due course he received a circular purporting to give the winning numbers of the drawing, in which his were not included. H. Langenhahn and Co. at the same time pressed him to continue the speculation and remit £4 10s. for the draw in Class IV. This he also did, with the same result.

The Bremen people then invited him to go in Class V., asking this time for £4 12s., the extra 2s. being to cover "postage, etc." "I was ass enough," he says, "to comply, and by the return post I received a demand for £9 for the ticket and a half in Classes I. and II. which I had never heard of." He expressed his astonishment at this demand in very plain language, and Langenhahn and Co. replied in a letter which gave away the show. "We beg to draw your attention to the fact," they wrote, "that all tickets which are acquired at any stage of the lottery and which are to participate in the further course of the drawings must be paid in full, viz., including all the previous classes." In other words, the Colonel's subscriptions to Classes III. and IV., in the drawings for which he was supposed to have participated had really been null and void. Colonel X. claimed the return of the whole of the money that he had paid, and after some pressure he got back £4 16s. He is now trying to extract the balance of his £3 12s. from these Bremen "bankers." I hope, though I hardly expect, that he will succeed in doing so.

The foregoing is a characteristic example of the trickery of these Continental lottery touts. The prospectuses that are issued by these "bankers" from Bremen, Hamburg, Buda-Pesth, and elsewhere are grossly misleading. Hardly any of the purchasers of tickets in this country understand the complicated conditions on which the lotteries are conducted. They do not know that any ticket taken up after the first class is not entitled to participate in the drawings until the subscriptions for the previous classes have been paid. More often than not, indeed, they do not even realise that there is a whole series of drawings, with fresh subscriptions for each one, and they certainly have not the least notion that almost all the prizes in the earlier classes are so paltry in amount as to be hardly worth winning, while in the later stages of the lottery the odds against any individual winning a really big prize mount up from about 20,000 to 100,000 to 1. Against any of the very highest prizes coming to a ticket-holder in this country the odds are probably still longer, for many of the agents are quite unprincipled—in fact, the whole traffic in these lottery tickets reeks with trickery and even fraud.

A few weeks back certain observations were made in these columns upon circulars issued by a Mr. Granville H. Sharpe, of Great Tower Street, E.C., who signs himself "F.C.S.," and offers to supply analytical reports upon goods at two guineas to tradesmen who may find them useful for advertising purposes. The observations that I made were founded on the assumption that the initials "F.C.S." stood for "Fellow of the Chemical Society." I have since learned that this is not the case. Mr. Sharpe is not a Fellow of the Chemical Society. What the letters "F.C.S." stand for, he himself best knows; but whatever it may be, he is clearly not justified in using a designation which must convey to all who come across it an entirely false impression as to his status as a scientific man.

This little matter is of public interest in more ways than one. The use of the designation "F.C.S." by any one who chooses to assume it would be in any case an infringement of the rights of the Chemical Society; and used as Mr. Sharpe uses it, in the course of advertising a class of business which is open to obvious objections, it is calculated to bring that Society into discredit. Yet, as matters stand at present, the Society appears to have no remedy. This is another example of a most unsatisfactory state of the law. The degrees and diplomas of universities and other learned bodies having a recognised legal status serve a useful public purpose as the hall-marks of learning and education, or guarantees of definite scientific or professional attainments; but this purpose is in a great measure defeated if it is open to anybody to vamp up colourable imitations of these degrees or titles, and pass them off upon the public. This mischievous practice is growing in all directions, and ought to be checked in the public interest.

The Mr. Granville Sharpe above-mentioned is one of a small class of persons who make a practice of supplying tradesmen with certificates of the purity and genuineness of the goods they manufacture or sell. These certificates are intended to be offered to the public as trade advertisements. The parties who furnish certificates in this way may possibly possess the requisite scientific knowledge for making a correct analysis; but when, as most of them do, they spontaneously offer to supply firms with their certificates, and in doing so convey a definite assurance that the certificate will be everything that could be desired for advertising purposes, they lay themselves open to the suspicion that they are ready to give their certificates to any one who will pay for them, without too nice a regard for the precise results of their analysis. No scientific man of any standing would hawk about his certificates in this way. Hence the parties who follow this practice seek to convey that they really are scientists of repute and standing, by labelling themselves with worthless and even misleading titles, degrees, or diplomas. One of these gentlemen, who has frequently been referred to in Truth, purports to be a distinguished ornament of about half the learned societies in Europe—the truth being that the said societies, if they exist at all, exist only for the purpose of supplying bogus scientific distinctions to those who have no others. The whole purpose of this traffic being to impose upon the public, why should it be permitted?

Dieudonné Hotel and Restaurant, Ryder Street, S.W. Excellent cuisine, prompt service, and comfort. Luncheons and Dinners Prix Fixe and a la carte. Mod. charges. Tel. No., 5265, Ger. Open on Sundays.

CRICKET CRITICS.

Last season, when 'twas fine and dry,
And turf set firm beneath the rollers,
And batsmen had the time that's high,
And tea were taking with the bowlers,

The arm-chair critics looked askance,
And swore 'twould be the death of cricket
Unless—to give the ball a chance—
We promptly should enlarge the wicket.

But now, when wickets wet abound,
And every match produces "hats"-men
In bowlers who, the case turned round,
Are taking Pekoe with the batsmen,

These self-same critics change their stance,
And ask, in solemn accents, whether—
To give the bat but half a chance—
We oughtn't to enlarge the "leather."

The representatives of the British press seem to have had an uncommonly good time in Germany; indeed, much more has been made of them than was made of their German colleagues who visited England last year. A man must be very suspicious and very churlish who does not recognise in the lavish hospitality bestowed on the visitors, and the cordiality of their reception wherever they have gone, a really friendly feeling towards this country and its representatives, and a sincere desire for a good understanding with us. It is easy to over-estimate the value of these international junketings, but a good many British journalists ought to return from the Fatherland with much more accurate ideas than they took with them of the general sentiments of the German people towards ourselves. If the result is seen in the attitude of the English press towards Germans, it will be something worth having.

Half the misunderstandings that prevail in this country about the Germans are due to the delusion that Prussia is Germany, and to ignorance of the wide gulf which frequently separates the policy and ambitions of the Berlin bureaucracy from the ideas and sentiments of the German people generally. I am not one of those who accept everything that our journalistic guides tell us about the motives and aims of Berlin; but even if half of it were true I should generally hesitate to accept the speech of a Prussian Minister or the articles of a Berlin editor as the voice of the inhabitants of all the States that make up the German Empire. We have, of course, to reckon with Berlin in international politics, but it is well to remember that the Prussians have always been a chauvinistic and rather arrogant race, while the mass of Germans outside Prussia are the precise opposite, and many of them cherish anything but cordial feelings towards Prussia and the Prussians. It is to be hoped that some inkling of this truth will have been borne in upon our journalists during their German tour.

The Nonconformists must understand that we have no intention to favour them in any special manner at the expense of the Anglicans in the reform of our scheme of national education. They were on perfectly sound ground when they protested against public funds being voted without the expenditure being under the control of those who furnished these funds. But when they want to subordinate the entire scheme to their particular views in regard to religion, they will have to understand that this will not be tolerated. My complaint against Mr. Birrell's Bill is that it did not go far enough in separating religious from secular teaching in tax or rate aided schools, and permitted what seemed good in the eyes of Nonconformists while it excluded what seemed good in the eyes of Anglicans.

The war of the sects will continue to be waged over the schools so long as the distinction is not recognised between what it is the business of the State to teach, and what should be left to the parents or pastors of the children who are to be taught. The State has to do with this world only; the parents and the pastors have to do with the world to come. The aim of the State is to make a good and useful citizen, the aim of parents and pastors is to teach the child that there is another world, in which human beings will be rewarded or punished if they believe certain dogmas and act on that belief in this world. In regard to these dogmas there is no unity of opinion, and consequently no teaching can be satisfactory to all. No sooner is an attempt made to devise a system of religious teaching based upon the assumption of this unity, than it breaks down in its practical working. Indeed, looking at the matter from the religious standpoint, it substitutes a mere vague verbal assent to certain dogmas that are not clearly defined, and may be understood in a dozen different ways, for real living belief in them.

What the common sense of the country desires is that education should not be impeded by the quarrels of rival sects, and I think that the number of those who realise that this can only be effected by the State occupying itself solely with secular education is increasing every day. When Mr. McKenna, as Minister of Education, adjures the Nonconformists to accept the Government compromise, and not to join the Anglicans in opposing it, he seems to me to be furnishing himself the best argument against all compromise, and all attempts on the part of himself and of Liberal officialdom to effect such a compromise, for experience, not only of the past but of the present, has shown that he might as well imagine that he can unite oil and vinegar. If we are to have a really good scheme of national education we must eliminate the bone of contention. So long as it is there we shall have the dogs snapping and snarling over it.

The Daily Mail has been rather severely handled by some of its contemporaries over the Sir Robert Bond incident. Evidently it was completely misinformed as to what took place, and we all know that when we are misinformed about important matters we have to "stand the racket." But it would be interesting to know the source of the misinformation. We may at least give the Daily Mail the credit of supposing that the source was outside the office, and that it was a source primâ facie entitled to credit for accurate information as to what went on inside the Conference Room. This is so obvious that rumours are current as to the identity of the person by whom the Daily Mail fiction was inspired. The Daily Mail promised at first to enlighten us further as to how it was misled, but on second thoughts it appears to have altered its mind—doubtless from patriotic motives. But, if only in justice to innocent parties who may fall under suspicion, I really think it ought to abandon diplomatic reserve and make a clean breast of it.

THE PERSEVERING "DEASER."

(Lines suggested by the recent fate of that hardy annual, The Deceased Wife's Sister Bill.)

O poor little innocent! Wonder I do
If ever the Commons and Lords she'll go through.
Yea, if, like the spider,
When Robert Bruce eyed her,
Until success smiles she'll her efforts renew.

And if she should pass, then still wonder I do,
How many, when widowed, their "deasers" will woo
(Which odd verbal fraction
Is Oxford's contraction
Of Deceasèd-Wife's-Sister, as doubtless you knew).

"It is unfortunate," writes Ameer Ali in the Nineteenth Century, "that after nearly two hundred years of constant intercourse the Indian and European should not have come nearer; it is still more unfortunate that in some directions the gulf should have widened." There seems to be no doubt about the gulf having widened. A few weeks ago I published an extract from a private letter written by an educated Indian to an old Anglo-Indian in this country, who sent it to me. Almost precisely the same language was used in it about the recent widening of the gulf. Mr. Morley referred to the same sign of the times in his speech of Friday last, pointing out that the British administration has grown of late more out of touch with the native mind, and attributing it to over-centralisation, which he desires to correct.

It is interesting to note how completely in accord on this point are the Secretary of State and the distinguished Indian writer in the Nineteenth Century. The latter, it is true, seems in one passage to lay the blame on the English character, and the "unveiled assumption of descent from a higher sphere," which he finds that the average Englishman combines with "much natural kindliness of heart." But I doubt if he would find less of this obnoxious assumption in the average German or the average Frenchman in their dealings with subject races; and in subsequent passages he conveys the impression that the fault lies rather with the administrative machinery than with those who have to work it. Some of his remarks on this point are worth quoting at the present juncture:—

> The first duty, however, seems to be to bring the official classes in touch with the people in order to promote mutual understanding, and to neutralise, to some extent, the teachings of racial animosity. The aloofness of Europeans in their general relations with Eastern people, and the inaccessibility of British officials, had as early as 1787 formed the subject of criticism among the educated classes of India. . . . The example of Warren Hastings and many of his notable successors led to the adoption of a system of weekly durbars held by British officials for the reception of local magnates and prominent people. But as the administration grew more complicated it gradually fell into disuse. Nowadays the overworked officer has less time, and probably fewer opportunities, to come in contact or cultivate personal relations with the people over whom he is placed. The gulf which separates the two might be bridged if the old practice were resumed with broader sympathy and a better comprehension of the results that might be attained thereby. A day might be set apart by the head of the district or sub-division to receive not only magnates and persons of education and standing, but also headmen of villages. . . . I believe if some effort were made to bring about a change in the relations of the people with the official classes, it would prove of the greatest help in removing much of the ill-will that has recently grown up among certain classes against British rule.

In deciding to admit one or two Indians to the Viceroy's Council, and to establish outside it an Assembly of Notables, Mr. Morley is moving in the direction here pointed out, but it may be questioned whether he is not beginning rather at the wrong end. We want to establish an entente cordiale between the local administrator and the people whose affairs he has to manage, with the object of governing them as much as possible in accordance with their own ideas, and teaching them to look upon the British administration as their best friend under Providence; and for this purpose the regular interchange of confidences between the district officer and the local notables, down to the village headmen, as suggested in the above remarks, seems of more importance than even the voicing of Indian ideas in the higher functions of government. The commission which Mr. Morley proposes to appoint ought to keep this idea before it.

A great deal has been heard during the recent discussion of Indian affairs about the part which the spread of western education has played in the present discontent. But we cannot prevent the spread of western education in India, and we ought not to if we could. An excited Anglo-Indian declared the other day that London is the place where Indian seditious movements are hatched. Better informed people, however, believe that Indian students get into quite as much mischief in America, and Ameer Ali seems to think that Japan is quite as dangerous a place in this respect as either England or the United States. Even if we could prevent Indian students from coming to London, we cannot exclude them from Japan or America. What we can do, however, is to offer them more inducements for coming to London than going elsewhere, and to look after them while here in such a way that they will return with rational ideas as to what can be done to improve the political and social condition of their countrymen under British rule, instead of crazy notions about ejecting us "bag and baggage" and trying their own hands at running the Government.

The best antidote, however, to all such notions is that the Government, from its highest departments to its lowest, should acquire a hold upon the confidence and affection of the hundreds of millions of its subjects which will be proof against the arts of a handful of sedition-mongers; and this it will best do by keeping ever before it as the supreme aim of its policy the gradual training of India to the management of its own affairs. That is not an end to be gained in a few years; it may be the work of centuries. But on the ultimate doing of it will rest the sole justification of British rule, and it will never be done at all unless it is kept constantly in mind. The worst reproach that can be brought against our rule at present is that it has made no progress in that direction, and if it is true to-day that the gulf between rulers and ruled has perceptibly widened, this means that we are actually moving in the opposite direction. That is altogether wrong, and to that we must attribute it if we find that the progress of education brings us into hopeless conflict with the class of Indians who ought to be co-operating with us for the regeneration of their country.

THE BOY AND THE PUMP.

Wearing a Yoke, from whose twain Ends,
Both here and there, a Pail depends,
See hob-nailed Tommy Hodges stump
Important towards the Village Pump
To—as he would pronounce it—"drar"
Some Adam's Ale for his Mamma.
He reached the Spot, one Pail hung out
Upon the Pump's projecting Spout,
Then grasped the Iron Handle tight
And pumped with all his little Might.
But, try as hard as he could try,
No Water came. The Thing seemed dry.
Just then old Smockfrock passed the Place,
And, noting Tom's lugubrious Face,
Inquired: "What ails thee, eh, my Lad?
Thee looks as thee wur feelin' bad."
"It's that there Pump. 'Tis dry as Drought.
I can't a single Drop get out,
Which, if I don't," half-sobbed the Nipper,
"It means the Heel of Mammy's Slipper."
"Tut-tut," said Smockfrock, "doan't take on,
I'll make it right, my little mon."
And off he sloped to where there stand
Some Cottage Dwellings close at Hand.
Soon he returned and with him brought
A Jug of Water—p'rhaps a Quart—
Which, through the Pump's uncovered Top,
He poured in slowly Drop by Drop.
"Now pump, my little Lad," he cried;
And Tom the Handle seized and plied.
But lo! The Pump, that 'fore seemed dry,
Gave Water in ungrudged Supply,
Which copious from its Spout distilled
And quickly both the Buckets filled.
So Tommy scratched his puzzled Chump
And cried: "But yon's a funny Pump,
In which thee put in scarce a Quart
And out full Gallons five hast brought."
"Aye! aye!" says Smock, as off he stumps,
"For that's the Way, my Lad, with Pumps.
A Drop of Water, well applied,
Will draw from them a gushing Tide."

Moral.

The Cash that is discreetly spent
In sound, well-placed Advertisement,
Acts on a Public, coy to buy,
Like Water on a Pump that's dry,
And, drawing Customers galore,
Repays the Outlay ten times o'or.

SCRUTATOR.

BLACK AND WHITE IN THE TRANSVAAL.

I CANNOT be said ever to have gone out of my way to laud the mining magnates of the Transvaal. I never specially blamed them for making the acquisition of money their particular business, for it was for this that they betook themselves to the Transvaal, and I do not know that, in pursuit of this object, they were more or less unscrupulous than other financial and financing cosmopolitans to whom gold takes the place of country. What always surprised me, however, was that a sensible nation like ours accepted them at their own estimate, as patriots burning to extend the British Empire, and martyrs to our weakness in permitting the Boers to treat them as Helots. They understood more of money-making than of politics. Had it not been for this they would have thanked their gods that they had to do with a race like the Boers, who were not bitten with the mania of growing passing rich, and left them a pretty free hand to exploit the mineral wealth of their country. The greatest mistake that they made was to endeavour to substitute our direct rule for that of the Boers, and I take it that they have already realised that they jumped out of a very tepid frying-pan into the fire. Their dream of a mining oligarchy, subordinating everything to bringing out mines, good, bad, and indifferent, as companies in England, and subordinating everything in the Transvaal to their own interests, has been rudely dispelled.

But I see no reason why the Transvaal is to be converted into an Englishman's country. As the Boers settled there, and brought with them civilisation, I should rather say that if it is to be a white man's country, it should be deemed a Boer country. Primarily, however, I regard it rather as a black man's country than a white man's. The blacks vastly outnumber the whites, not only in the Transvaal, but in South Africa, and they cannot be said to be absolutely rude savages. Both Boers and British are intruders. Being there, it is only reasonable that they should be able to live under their own laws, and devote themselves to the businesses that brought them there, provided that the black race is in no way treated in a fashion that smacks of slavery. I am not so foolish as to urge that the blacks should become the ruling factor, nor do I believe that it would be possible to grant them even a share in the government, for the present, at least. They have not attained that civilisation that is requisite for such an experiment to prove successful. I object, however, to anything which may interfere with their natural or individual development, or to their being condemned to never rising above the level of manual labourers, working for the whites for an insignificant wage. The introduction of Chinese chattels under contract to compete with the blacks was a huge crime, which fortunately will soon cease. It would seem, however, that amongst the blacks many are to be found who might be employed in looking after the others. The mine-owners would employ them in this capacity, on economic grounds. At once the cry has been raised that this would throw white men out of work, and to a certain extent Liberals have joined in it.

It is here that I find myself in accord with the mine-owners. I have no particular sympathy with those who have taken shares in Transvaal mines and now find themselves losers. Mines should never be regarded as a sure investment, and gold mines even less than others. Some mines return enormous profits, others none. It used to be said that every sovereign cost double its value to produce. The whole thing is a gamble, and it is precisely this gambling element that is the attraction. In the course of my life I have occasionally yielded to this temptation, and I think that I have lost more than I have gained. But I never looked on the purchase of a mining share as a permanent investment, or indeed as anything more than a bet, and if the bet proved unfortunate, I did not whimper, or deem myself an object for compassion. In the case of the Transvaal gold mines, the good ones have been almost invariably capitalised at too high a rate, or the market quotation of their shares has risen too high. A great many were worthless, for this cause or for that, as a paying proposition. Enormous fortunes had been made, by trading on the public credulity, by individuals. But it does not follow from all this that the production of gold from the earth is not a legitimate industry, and that where it can be produced at a profit, as in the Transvaal, it ought not to be so produced. One of the factors is the cost of labour. Whilst every one engaged in this labour should receive a fair salary, there should be no endeavour to grind down the natives, nor to condemn them eternally to the hard, rough labour to which convicts are condemned. If any of them can do better work, they certainly should not be excluded from it in order that white men—whether they be Britons or any other nationality—should secure that employment at a very high wage. Where white men alone can do the work, naturally employers would give the work to them. But to give it to them merely because they are white men is contrary to the most elementary ideas of business as well as of justice to the natives.

I confess, however, that I look on the question from a higher standpoint. I hold that it is our bounden duty to recognise that the Transvaal is primarily a black man's country. The blacks are in an overwhelming majority. Brought into contact with the whites, their ideas become enlarged, and they soon learn that they have rights. They will not long rest satisfied if the more intelligent amongst them are to be permanently treated as a servile race, without any hope of bettering their condition. This will lead to discontent and outbreaks on the one hand, and repression on the other; and colonies where this system prevails will be a source of danger to the Empire.

THE CONTROL OF THE PURSE-STRINGS.

Whether Mr. Gibson Bowles is at present a supporter or an opponent of the Government I do not know, but, however this may be, it is certain that he would have proved a good deal more useful as an independent financial critic in the House of Commons than the belligerent mariner who has replaced him as member for King's Lynn. He has just published a pamphlet in which he explains how public control is exercised over public expenditure, and what have been the attempts that have been of late made to free expenditure on the Army from this control, and he warns all and sundry that these attempts are not yet given up.

Every one is aware that the control of the purse by the people is the corner-stone of our liberties, and its preservation the only security that there will be no tampering with them. Few, however, really understand precisely how great and minute is that control. They have a general conviction that money cannot be raised without the consent of Parliament, and they rest satisfied with this conviction. Mr. Bowles commences by explaining how by successive improvements in our system it has become impossible for public money, when voted by Parliament, to be spent except for the purposes for which it has been voted. The first step is to obtain an Appropriation from Parliament. Estimates for the expenditure of the year, carefully made out for each department in the public service, are submitted to Parliament. These are approved separately in Committee of the whole House, and then they are passed separately by the House, in what is called Report stage. Having been thus voted, they are embodied in an Appropriation Bill, in which the amount granted to each department is separately detailed, and the money can alone be spent after the Bill has become law. But the control over the individual department, and over the Executive collectively, would not be secured were the scheme to begin and end there. Before the Estimates are submitted to Parliament, it does not rest entirely with the head of a department what his estimate is to be. He is subject to the control of the Treasury. The head of the department submits to the Treasury what he considers ought to be the estimate asked for. The Treasury—or, in this case, the Chancellor of the Exchequer acting in the name of the Treasury—takes into account the probable revenue of the year, and often cuts down the departmental demands. Thus it is the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and not the head of a department, who finally judges the needs of the case, and the extent to which they can be provided for.

When the Appropriations are voted, no Minister can of himself make any change in the details of expenditure without the consent of the Treasury. There might, however, be collusion between the Chancellor of the Exchequer and one or more of his colleagues to evade control. A further system of checks has been elaborated which renders evasion almost impossible, and which is entirely independent of the action of Ministers. They consist of an Accounting Officer, the Controller and Auditor-General, and a Public Accounts Committee appointed by the House of Commons. The business of the Accounting Officer is supervisive, and it is for him to allow or disallow any expenditure that is being incurred. He points out to the official who makes the expenditure the limits and conditions outside of which no expenditure can be made. If the latter insists on making such expenditure, it is the duty of the Accounting Officer to report this to the head of the department, and then, if his view be not accepted, it can only be made by a written order from that head. The Comptroller and Auditor-General is an official who is appointed on behalf of the House of Commons to ascertain whether the payments made are supported by vouchers or proofs of payment, and whether the money expended has been applied to the purposes for which such grant was intended to be made. The Public Accounts Committee receives a report from the Comptroller and Auditor-General in regard to any doubtful points or any irregularities which he has detected and which have not been adequately justified by the Accounting Officer. It personally examines the Accounting Officer on these points and on any others which may have escaped the Comptroller and Auditor-General, or may have been detected by the Committee itself. It then reports to the House of Commons the result of its examination, and recommends such changes in the form of the Estimates, in the methods of account keeping, in the system of expenditure, or in respect of anything else connected with the Public Accounts, as it may deem advisable, and in cases which it may deem improper as charged against the vote. Thus the chain of control is complete. The Accounting Officer renders the account. The Comptroller and Auditor ascertains that the expenditure has been duly incurred and properly applied. The Committee of Public Accounts examines and reports to Parliament. If the Accounting Officer were cut out of the chain, or if his accountability and responsibility were impaired, the chain of responsibility would be broken.

But our soldiers have sought to free themselves from this close control in regard to military expenditure, and this attempt culminated in the Report of the War Office Reconstruction Committee of 1904. After complaining that the doling out of money in compartments, with no discretion left to generals or other officers as to its allocation, is a serious evil, this Report proposed that civilian functions in regard to Army expenditure should be limited to examination of estimated cost and expenditure, criticisms on estimates, and advice tendered to the heads of the spending branches. "By these means," it continues, "the government of the Army by soldiers, which is the keystone of the policy we have laid down, will be secured. . . . The entire system of War Office expenditure, which has its origin in a distant past, is based upon the assumption that all military officers are necessarily spendthrifts, and that all their actions must be controlled by civilians." The Report, it is true, admits that there ought to be an Accounting Officer at the War Office to certify that the expenditure has been in accordance with the limitations which Parliament imposes, but, at the same time, we are told that the members of the Army Council will be responsible for expenditure within the amounts voted by Parliament, and will be subject to no controlling authority except that of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. If this were so, it is obvious that, so far as concerns money voted by Parliament for the Army, the control of the Accounting Officer, of the Comptroller and Auditor-General, and of the Public Accounts Committee would be non-existent. General officers would be answerable to the military members of the Army Council, and the Army Council would be answerable to no controlling authority except that of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The report of the Committee making these proposals was issued in three parts between January 11 and March 9, and was addressed to Mr. Balfour, with the demand that it should be formulated at once by an Order in Council, and a warning that "our scheme of reform has been conceived and elaborated as a whole, and that any interference with the principles on which it is based would necessarily destroy its benefits." Within a few months all the financial proposals were rejected by Orders in Council. Civil control, therefore, remains intact, but these financial proposals remain on record as evidence of a disposition which it may yet be necessary to resist. It is not conceivable, as Mr. Bowles says, that the present Parliament would succumb to a direct attack, but he points out that Mr. Haldane has exhibited in some of his speeches a dangerous readiness to assume that the military claim of immunity from Parliamentary control is reasonable, and should be admitted. In support of this contention, he gives an extract from a speech made by the Secretary of State for War last February to the London School of Economics. Here it is:—

> He spoke as a civilian, and he said that they would never defeat the soldier when he fixed bayonets against them on a matter of this kind. . . . They could not check him, they could not overrule him, they might inquire minutely into his estimates, and they might destroy and very probably impede things, but they would not do the work which he alone could do. There was a better method, and that was to say to him, "You shall be responsible, you shall be the economist, you shall take upon yourself the business of working out administration in its military details, you shall tell us how to make the money go furthest, and you shall have a pretty free hand in doing so." That was what they had been—he was glad to say to some extent in defiance of the traditions of red tape—trying to do this year at the War Office.

I consider that Mr. Bowles has performed a good service in raising a note of warning against all attempts—direct or indirect—to weaken the control of the taxpayer, whether by his representatives or by his officials, over the Army expenditure. We are not a military State. We may respect our soldiers without yielding to their demands. I regard our soldiers as quite as honest as our civilians. But I do not recognise the right of the one to be exempted from a financial control which is deemed expedient in regard to the other. Robbery is not the only way to get rid of money. It may be wasted through negligence or inefficiency. The only way to prevent this is by close and independent control. A good deal of time will be wasted each year in quarrelling over minor details of the service that are better understood by soldiers than by civilians. But on one thing, I think, we are pretty well all agreed. We are not going to be forced into any course by any Minister assuring us that we must yield when soldiers replace arguments by bayonets, and we are fully determined that not one iota of that civilian control over our Army which it has been the work of centuries to establish, and which culminated in Mr. Gladstone's Exchequer and Audit Act of 1866, shall be lessened.

MR. GLADSTONE AND THE EDALJI CASE.

Several gentlemen interested in the Edalji case have written to me in reference to the Home Secretary's speech in Parliament on May 31, and there are at least two reasons for further notice of that speech. In the first place, the Court of Criminal Appeal Bill, if it should be passed, leaves the present jurisdiction of the Home Office over criminal sentences untouched, and Mr. Gladstone expressly recognised in his speech that when the Bill becomes law the prerogative of mercy will still be exercised through the Home Secretary.

The principles which govern the action of the Department when the prerogative is invoked, therefore, remain a matter of public concern, whatever the fate of the Bill. Secondly, it is now certain that the action of the Home Office in the Edalji case will be brought under discussion in Parliament at the earliest opportunity, and it is therefore desirable to appreciate beforehand what the Home Secretary has to say for his Department and himself in this connection. It is true that in his speech of May 31 Mr. Gladstone made no overt allusion to the case of Mr. Edalji, and at one point expressly disclaimed reference to any particular case. But it is impossible to read his speech without inferring that at several points he had this case in his mind—as, in the ordinary course of nature, he would have. My attention has been called to one passage which obviously refers to it, and seems to have been read in that sense by everybody familiar with the case who has studied the speech. As this passage relates to that portion of the case which affords the strongest ground for criticising the latest decision of the Home Office, I quote it verbatim from the Times report. It occurs in the course of a series of observations on the unjustifiable attitude of newspapers towards the Home Secretary:—

Even if a case was submitted to three distinguished legal authorities, what happened? Then perhaps the commissioner of a newspaper would set that aside with the cool statement that the case could not have been properly submitted, and that some material facts must have been withheld. He spoke with knowledge on this subject, from what he knew had occurred. All this might be excellent copy for a newspaper, but the Home Secretary was powerless. He could not reply. He could not keep the public straight. The particular newspaper had it all its own way. The case for the accused was set forth with every kind of literary and editorial garnishing; the case against him, perhaps, was not stated at all, or if it was stated it was stated only for the purpose of being knocked down. The public was deluded into the view that there was no case against the prisoner. . . .

The words which I have italicised make the reference to the Edalji case unmistakable. Mr. Gladstone is speaking from his own knowledge of a case which has been submitted to three distinguished legal authorities. The Edalji case is the only one to which this can apply, and, to clench the matter, it has been said in a newspaper that "the case could not have been properly submitted, and that some material facts have been withheld." This is practically what was said about the last Edalji inquiry in TRUTH of May 29, two days before Mr. Gladstone spoke. I rather think that something to the same effect was said by Sir Conan Doyle in the Daily Telegraph, but whether Mr. Gladstone had TRUTH or the Daily Telegraph in his mind is not material. He is repudiating the suggestion, for which I am quite prepared to accept responsibility, that the case was not fully submitted to the Wilson Committee.

In what I said on this point on May 29, I not only made the suggestion of which Mr. Gladstone complains, but I gave my reasons for it. The suggestion has reference to the anonymous letters. The Committee state that they had carefully examined the letters which were used in evidence against Mr. Edalji at the trial. Their report was that "they thought the jury must be taken to have held that Edalji was the writer of these letters, and that they themselves" (the Committee) "were not prepared to dissent from the finding at which they thought the jury arrived." Now, nobody has disputed that there are in these letters one or two features which appear in the ordinary handwriting of Mr. Edalji. Mr. Gurrin pointed them out at the trial, and Mr. Gurrin, though no more infallible than any one else, is an expert at this kind of work. But it is common knowledge that two handwritings not generally similar may here and there have features in common, and, what is of more importance, everybody can see that a person writing an anonymous letter with a mischievous motive, and disguising his hand, would be not unlikely to introduce peculiarities which might throw suspicion on somebody else. For these reasons, the features pointed out by Mr. Gurrin, and no doubt observed by the Wilson Committee, are far from conclusive as to the authorship; and their significance is reduced to a minimum when one of the letters thus attributed to the prisoner is a filthy libel addressed to himself which it is almost incredible that he could have written, and when he is able to prove by an impregnable alibi that even if he wrote it somebody else must have posted it. These observations arise on the letters as they stand, and would presumably occur to the Committee. But there is a mass of external evidence bearing on the authorship of these letters, which it is extremely doubtful whether the Committee had before them. Not only were other anonymous letters written at the time of the cattle-maiming outrage, in which Mr. Gurrin could detect no resemblance to the prisoner's writing, but at various dates extending from 1892 down to the last few weeks letters innumerable have been written to or about Mr. Edalji and his family, and to or about other people in the neighbourhood, all presenting similar characteristics, all apparently the work of, at most, two or three individuals, and reproducing peculiarities of style and penmanship found in those written at the time of the cattle-maiming outrages. That Mr. Edalji had any share in the writing of these letters is incredible, and there is not a particle of evidence to prove it, while there is internal evidence, as Sir Conan Doyle has shown, that all these letters, and the letters used against Mr. Edalji at the trial, were the work of one or two other persons, who can be identified. The contention on Mr. Edalji's behalf is that a proper scientific examination of the whole series of documents, or such as are still in existence, leads irresistibly to the conclusion that Mr. Edalji and his family have been for years persecuted by certain mischievous and depraved individuals in the neighbourhood, and that the letters used at the trial as tending to connect him with the cattle-maiming outrages were a part of this persecution. The evidence of this is so strong and clear that I do not myself believe that anybody with all the facts, and the documents, before him would judge Edalji to have written the letters used at the trial merely because the shaping of a letter here and there resembles his penmanship.

The question then is, did the Wilson Committee have all these facts and documents before them? My own information leads me to think that they did not; but apart from any information, their own language implies that they did not. There is not a word in their report on this branch of the case, not a word as to their having examined any anonymous letters but those used at the trial. Their report is rigidly confined to the letters handed to the jury, and all they say about them is that, after examining these letters themselves, they are not prepared to dissent from the finding at which they think the jury arrived. One is entitled to assume from this that the whole of the evidence which has led every non-official investigator of the case to dissent from the supposed finding of the jury on this point was not before the committee. If that assumption is wrong, it is easily rebutted. A question to the Home Secretary in the House will do it in a minute, and although Mr. Gladstone depicts so forcibly the helplessness of the Home Secretary in the face of those misleading insinuations on the part of newspapers, it will be news to me that a Minister has any difficulty in getting a question put to himself if he desires to correct any statement in the press about his department. At any rate, the question should be asked before any debate on the Edalji case takes place, and it should be so framed as to elicit precisely what anonymous letters bearing on the case were submitted to the Wilson Committee beyond those in evidence at the trial, and what assistance the Committee had from experts in making a critical examination of the writing. It is on the strength of the inability of the Committee to dissent from the supposed finding of the jury under this head that Mr. Gladstone has refused compensation to Mr. Edalji, and, while pardoning him, left him under the stigma of bringing his troubles upon himself by conduct utterly disgraceful to a professional man. The report of the Committee having been used in this way, we are entitled to know what opportunity the Committee really had of forming an opinion deserving of any respect.

GREAT NORTHERN CENTRAL HOSPITAL, HOLLOWAY, N.—£7,000 owing to Bankers. £10,000 needed annually from voluntary sources.—LEWIS H. GLENTON-KERR, Secretary.

POLISHED FLOORS.—"RONUK," LTD., are prepared to estimate for the polishing and maintenance of all kinds of floors in Mansions, Hospitals, and Institutions. Write for pamphlet.—Manufacturers of "Ronuk" Polish, "RONUK," LTD., Portslade, near Brighton.

LOWELL

A lawyer who has given me some help in this case, but is in no way professionally connected with it, writes at some length upon Mr. Gladstone's account of the Home Office method of "confidential inquiry." "In the interests of the prisoner," said Mr. Gladstone, "inquiries were continually being made which were of a confidential character, and information was given only because it was confidential." He went on to complain that the Home Office should be charged with holding a secret inquiry, insisting that the method adopted is entirely in the interest of the prisoner. My legal correspondent asks whether it is to be understood from this that this kind of confidential information is only received when it is favourable to the prisoner, and, if not, how it can possibly be in the interest of the prisoner that evidence tending to incriminate him should be invited under a pledge of secrecy by the Minister of the Crown who is considering an appeal for mercy on the ground of innocence. "Here," says the writer, "we seem to get the most damning revelation of the iniquitous procedure by which the prerogative of mercy is directed, and as the prerogative is untouched by the Bill, it behoves the House of Commons to insist upon an amendment of this procedure." I quite agree. It was pointed out in TRUTH last week that in the case of Mr. Edalji the procedure has resulted in statements being received from the police in opposition to the first petition on the prisoner's behalf, and information being refused to the prisoner's friends as to what these police statements were. We now have it authoritatively settled by the report of the Wilson Committee that the police gravely erred in the way they got up the case and presented their evidence. Does Mr. Gladstone mean to contend that a procedure which would enable the police, after such a breach of duty as this, to make confidential statements to the Home Office in support of the conviction, is a procedure designed wholly for the prisoner's benefit? It is difficult to believe that he is serious in making such a suggestion. He would have us believe that the Home Office is before all things the prisoner's friend, and that the remission of a sentence produces there a joy akin to that which arises in Heaven over the salvation of one sinner. Those who administer the prerogative of mercy should have the merciful instinct strong within them, and in a general way I dare say they have; but there is another characteristic of the Home Office which I have noticed in the Edalji case, and that is a rigid adherence to the "what I have said I have said" principle. If the Home Secretary goes so far as to say that when the Home Office has once said "No" to a petition, it still remains the prisoner's friend when the question is pressed further, either in the press or in Parliament, I join issue emphatically. After that point the Home Office is its own friend exclusively. Its first business is to defend itself, and if the pressure of public opinion becomes so strong that it has to give way, its first concern is how to save its face in doing so. That is the opinion to which I have been driven by the course of the Edalji case up to its present point.

A JUDICIAL "SAW-OFF" IN MANITOBA.

It has been said that the law is a sort of hocus-pocus science. I do not know whether this description is truer in the Province of Manitoba than elsewhere in the British Empire; but, judging from the curious termination of a recent case, the administration of the law there, if not the law itself, is characterised by a good deal of hocus-pocus. The case occurred at Winnipeg, and a local correspondent tells me that it has excited much indignant comment—a fact of which there is ample proof in the columns of two of the Winnipeg newspapers, the Tribune and the Free Press. It appears that for many months a man named George W. Wood had been running a bucket-shop in Winnipeg, enterprises of this kind flourishing in Canada even as in the City of London. Wood was eventually arrested on a charge of theft preferred against him by an Ontario man, and at the same time the Chief of Police made a further charge against him in connection with the bucket-shop business. Both charges were investigated by a magistrate and Wood was committed for trial before the High Court. Immediately after his committal, while he was out on bail, the police raided his office, and seized the whole of his books and papers, and the telegraphic instruments and other paraphernalia of the bucket-shop. Wood himself was re-arrested on yet another charge and again committed for trial.

At this juncture, when the whole affair was, of course, still sub judice, a paper called The Telegram came out with a sensational article in which Wood was denounced as a thief and swindler, one of "America's Human Jackals," and the Attorney-General's Department was commended for its determination to put an end to these "bucket-shop thefts." Wood thereupon instituted both a prosecution for criminal libel and a civil action for damages against the editor of The Telegram. This journal is recognised as the organ of the present Provincial Government, and that circumstance is regarded as having had an important bearing on the course that was shortly afterwards adopted by the authorities. What seems to be known in Manitoba as "a saw-off" was arranged. A semi-official announcement was made that the Attorney-General's Department agreed to withdraw the various criminal charges against Wood on which he was awaiting his trial, while Wood, on his part, agreed to quit the country and drop the proceedings for libel which he had commenced against The Telegram. It was also stated that Wood's creditors in the province would be paid, and in an interview on the subject of this extraordinary arrangement the acting Attorney-General, Mr. Agnew, said that "he thought justice was satisfied and the public adequately protected by compelling the accused to make restitution to the persons he had wronged." In view of these facts it is not at all surprising that the conduct of the officials representing the Crown in the prosecution of Wood is being very severely criticised. The assumption may or may not be correct that the "saw-off," or "deal," was arranged primarily to relieve the Government newspaper from the consequence of recklessly libellous comments in reference to a case that was sub judice. Be that as it may, however, the abandonment of the charges against Wood, coupled with the acting Attorney-General's talk about "restitution," was a very suspicious proceeding. Wood may have had a perfectly good answer to the charges, but having been committed for trial he ought to have been brought before a judge and jury. The course taken by the Government is certainly not calculated to promote confidence in the administration of justice in Manitoba, and the official plea that "justice is satisfied" when a man charged with theft and fraud makes restitution to the persons he has wronged is decidedly startling. Would the acting Attorney-General hold that justice was satisfied by such "restitution" in the case of a burglar, like the poor wretch who, as I recently mentioned, was condemned by a Winnipeg Court to twenty years' imprisonment at Stony Mountain, the Manitoban Portland? The doctrine laid down would seem to be as sound in the one case as in the other.

THE THEATRES.

Mr. Shaw and His Betters.

Mr. Bernard Shaw is soundly trounced by "Z" in the current number of "Blackwood." Cudgelled until even his sinewy sides must ache, Mr. Shaw is driven forth, "a blue-behinded ape," into the limbo of the forest. Personally, I do not approve of the style of attack employed by "Z." Nor do I think that "Z" gives Mr. Shaw credit for his astonishing cleverness. After the first performance of "Man and Superman," I was almost alone in pointing out that Mr. Shaw owed an immense debt to Nietzsche, whose style and thought he had alike borrowed. "Z" now makes a point of this, but in his haste to damn Shaw, includes also the æsthetic German philosopher in his condemnation. This, I think, shows just the lack of balance of which he accuses Shaw. "To see life steadily and see it whole," is given to very few. Nietzsche was not one of those, but he certainly saw very much further than either "Z" or Mr. Bernard Shaw.

But I can pardon "Z" the indiscretion of his remarks about other writers in his desire to find bludgeons wherewith to slay Mr. Shaw. I can pardon him for the reason that it appears Mr. Shaw has been speaking irrespectfully about the Elizabethans. I must boast, gentle reader, of having realised at an early hour that Mr. Shaw had nothing new or true to tell me about the drama or about literature. Therefore, I did not read the unspeakable nonsense, which I gather from "Z's" quotations he has penned about Shakespeare and the great Elizabethans: Marlowe, Decker, Webster, Ford, and Massinger. I knew that Mr. Shaw had said disrespectful things about Shakespeare and others, but I always imagined that everybody saw that this was only one of Mr. Shaw's monkey-tricks. I have repeatedly given Mr. Shaw a handful of nuts in these columns, and do not regret it, for I maintain that he is a capital entertainer. He danced, perhaps, better when he was hungry, but that is generally the case with his tribe. Mr. Shaw is unworthy to lick the dust from the shoes of the lesser of the Elizabethans. I feel, as I write it, that this is a mere commonplace, yet I should doubtless have written it long ago, if "Z's" contention be true that there are some people foolish enough to believe in Mr. Shaw. Give him a red flannel jacket and plenty of nuts, and he will amuse us for some time yet. But to compare such a person with our great poets is too ludicrous.

This was clearly enough demonstrated for those who may not have previously recognised the fact by the performance of Mr. Shaw's "Don Juan in Hell" and "The Man of Destiny" at the Court Theatre last week. The former is a part of the play, "Man and Superman," which contains some most amusing scenes, and is probably, with "John Bull's Other Island," the best that Mr. Shaw has to give. The wisdom of the excision of "Don Juan in Hell" from "Man and Superman" was apparent last week. As a matter of fact, it is an enormous lump of undigested theology and of other people's criticism of the Bible, mingled with blasphemy, and, as usual, strewn with plenty of Neitzsche's aphorisms.

Don Juan, Dona Ana de Ulloa, the Statue of the Commander, and the Devil are throughout this interminable dialogue seated in a semicircle in Hell. In passing I must pay genuine ocular tribute to the beautiful effect obtained by the darkness of the stage, against which stood out the players in their picturesque costumes. The contemplation of Miss Lillah McCarthy in her pinkish crinoline, with its black lace adornments, her mittened hands outstretched upon skirts like a balloon, alone served to fill the eye and to kill tedium for a time. Mr. Granville Barker should have been the Don Juan, if it were absolutely necessary to produce the play, but possibly his instinct for what is effective on the stage was the cause of his not appearing, either in this part or in that of the Devil, which also he might have filled. I feel the danger of wearying the reader with a recapitulation of the reams of other people's remarks poured forth in rotation by the Devil, Don Juan, and the Commander. In the latter alone was there anything really humorous, and Mr. Michael Sherbrooke scored now and then a genuine point with the unhappy audience, doomed to two hours in Mr. Shaw's Hell. Mr. Shaw repeatedly rings the changes on the time-worn joke about the dulness of heaven, but if hell were to consist of ratiocinative Shaws, as did the Court Theatre, personally I should prefer "hymns and a damp cloud." Almost all was Shaw, reciting other men's thoughts. There was no real attempt at characterisation, save in the Commander, to whom I have given his due. Don Juan spoke in just the way Don Juan Tenorio would never have spoken; but it is simply vain to point out the countless absurdities of the piece from any point of view. The dulness of the dialogue was enlivened with jokes about Dante having been weak and contemptible enough to fall in love with Beatrice, about the length of "Paradise Lost," which, Mr. Shaw thinks, has never been read to the end by any one. (It is rather a short poem, considering its theme and scope.) Such wit is of the kind that a clever young undergraduate at the University might evolve to amuse his callow contemporaries. Mr. Shaw is essentially an uncultivated person, to whom all literature—or, indeed, original thought of any kind—comes as something new, as a great surprise to be announced by Shaw to an ignorant world. Thus we have the disjecta membra of the consulting-room in "The Doctor's Dilemma," the crude blasphemy of all that is great in theology and literature of "Don Juan in Hell," and lastly, the absurdities of the piece which concluded the afternoon's tedium at the Court Theatre. Mr. Shaw is doubtless aware that something is known about Napoleon, and so, in "The Man of Destiny," solely in order to astonish us, he makes of the Bonaparte of Arcola and Lodi a vacillating rhetorician, ready to waste any amount of his time in arguing with an imbecile and impertinent lieutenant, gulled to the top of his bent by an Austrian female spy. Bonaparte would have had the despatches seized in about two minutes from the time he knew of their hiding-place on the young woman's person; and as for the imbecile youth who had originally been fooled out of them, he would not have hesitated to have him put under arrest, and most probably shot at once, if not for incompetence, then for impertinence. As dull as ditchwater, wrong from every point of view, is "The Man of Destiny." To judge from his own utterances, Mr. Shaw appears to be absolutely without respect or admiration for anything human or divine. That is not, I think, an enviable characteristic, and excuses, I trust, the unwonted asperity of the above remarks.

Notice.—The Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co. have opened a West End branch at 306, Vauxhall Bridge-road, South Belgravia. High-class work. Flannels specially treated.

The Times, I observe, compares Mr. Shaw to the common daisy (Bellis perennis). I should be inclined rather to liken him to the stinkweed (Datura stramonium), fortunately not so frequently met with as the other plant.

"THE MERRY WIDOW," AT DALY'S THEATRE.

My dissertation upon the dulness of Shaw has left me little space for lucubration upon the brilliant performance of Saturday night at Daly's. Yet I think that I can say all that is necessary to inspire my readers with a desire to see for themselves, which I hope may be effectual.

"The Merry Widow" comes to us with a cosmopolitan tradition. Sprung originally from the brains of Meilhac and Halévy, and called "L'Attaché"—a fact which seems generally to have been ignored—the merry widow may claim to be really a Parisian in disguise. But she early crossed the Austrian frontier and found a lover to drape her in the glories of opera. For the gorgeous robe she trails has in it as many musical embroideries of cloth of gold and silver as the robes of Miss Lily Elsie, the merry widow, Sonia. So it was as "Die Lustige Witwe" that the play made its fortune, for the original comedy had no great vogue. Over the English version there has been spilt much ink, at any rate, and I understand that the libretto as we heard it on Saturday evening is the work of Captain Basil Hood. This, it must be granted, is not a matter of grave importance, for although the witticisms would seem most lurid, especially when we are with the "sulphurous" ladies at Maxim's, yet they do not rise much above the level of that epithet and the geographical situation with which one connects it mentally. No, it is rather in the music, the song, and the dance that one finds satisfaction. Miss Elsie's singing of the lyric "Vilia," well versified by Mr. Adrian Ross, so far as I could hear in the absence of a book of the words, is in itself worth going to Daly's to hear, and when she dances with Prince Danilo to the lulling fascination of that waltz which one has heard for some time at all the restaurants, but now for the first time in its setting, then is all said, without need of words. Her "Silly Cavalier" song, and the graceful abandon of her appearances show the wisdom of her transference from the Gaiety.

The battalions of surrounding beauty were led by Miss Nina Sevening, who did well as the wife of Mr. Fred Kaye, and one of the amourettes which are laughingly woven around Prince Danilo, the much-desired. Mr. Joseph Coyne will doubtless develop the comic possibilities of this part, for it will be as well to let those of more serious import go by the board, and I look forward to seeing him soon again surrounded with the group of ladies from Maxim's, who strive so captivatingly to divert him from the widow. Mr. George Graves, as the Marsovian ambassador, determined to save the Marsovian finances by the Prince's marriage with the rich widow, has already (and we know how parts sprout in his hands) many good lines born of the British stage. In Mr. Fred Kaye, a born humorist, and in Mr. W. H. Berry, a humorist born (chronologically) a little later, he has a pair of most efficient adjutants. The operatic triumph of the evening owed much to the voice of Mr. Robert Evett, who is able to make musical love with the best of them, and sings his song, "If I might go with you," so as to leave little doubt that he would succeed in going where he wished.

The play will be the better of compression. It is full of good things, and only needs Mr. George Edwardes to go round with a pair of pruning-scissors and a rake to remove superabundant vegetation. The dresses, that feminine vegetation, pruned in the upper branches, are beyond masculine pen, but I revelled in the cloth of gold and silver of Miss Elsie. The scenery of the grounds of Sonia's house is a triumph for Mr. Joseph Harker, and Mr. George Edwardes had an all-round triumph to himself on Saturday night.

* * * * *

At the St. James's Theatre to-morrow (Thursday) Miss Fanny Coleman will be given a complimentary benefit matinée on the completion of her fiftieth year of professional work. It may be hoped that there will be a crowded house to show the esteem in which this well-known actress is held. The programme is a very attractive one, and among the artists who have consented to appear are Sir Charles Wyndham and Miss Mary Moore, Mr. John Hare, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Miss Constance Collier, Mr. Lewis Waller, Miss Marie Tempest, and Mr. Hayden Coffin.

* * * * *

The Balkan States Exhibition at Earl's Court offers an attractive lounge for those who are fortunate enough not to be engaged at any of the countless other entertainments, public and private, which make June in London so like a flood in a river. Especially in the evening is it agreeable to wander among the coloured lights, and, if of an inquiring turn of mind, to visit one or other of the countless side-shows provided by an enterprising management. The Pigmies are still to be seen, but soon will depart for their Congo forest. I suppose they have not a drop of blood in common with any European. They seemed quite alert and capable of defending themselves among their forests with their bows and arrows, which they have a habit of handling as one examines them. They are without any sort of written language or any records, and verily belong to the night of the world. It is a curious sensation to pass from their presence into the glare of the modern life which throngs the Exhibition at this season. "Old Japan" with its theatre of fan-makers and many other industries, the stalactite cave, and the aerial emotions of various sorts, dear to the youthful mind and body, serve to fill an afternoon or evening here very pleasantly.

* * * * *

Let me recommend such of my readers as have not seen Mr. Henri de Vries play the many characters in "A Case of Arson" (which long since I described in these columns) to be in time for the first piece at the Haymarket Theatre. It is well worth while.

THE COMPLETE CATECHIST.

The Turf-Tipster's Catechism.

(For the Instruction of Novices in the Profession.)

Question: Who are you?

Answer: A Turf-Tipster.

Q.: What is a Turf-Tipster?

A.: A public-spirited philanthropist who, possessing valuable and exclusive information in the shape of stable secrets, does not selfishly make his fortune out of it by keeping it to himself, but retails it to all and sundry, at a merely nominal fee, for the good of the community.

Q.: How do you acquire your valuable and exclusive information?

A.: By the unique opportunities which I derive from the intimate friendship of all the leading owners, trainers, and jockeys on the Turf.

Q.: Where did you make friends with these distinguished and useful persons?

A.: In the recesses of my own lively imagination.

Q.: Where do you continue to cultivate it?

A.: In the advertisement columns of the Sporting Press.

Q.: What is a dead cert.?

A.: My special one-horse wire for any given race—beforehand.

Q.: What is a subject for discreet silence?

A.: The same special one-horse wire—afterwards.

Q.: What is a client?

A.: A confiding and ignorant speculator to whom I tip winners, on the usual terms.

Q.: What are the usual terms?

A.: They are of two kinds, comprising either the payment of a fixed cash fee beforehand, or an agreement with my client that he shall invest a modest sum, for my benefit, on the animals which I tip him.

Q.: Which of these two methods is your favourite?

A.: I am not particular. Any method that transfers money from my clients' pockets to my own is acceptable to me. But on the whole I incline towards the latter method.

Q.: Why so?

A.: Because it possesses the double advantage of impressing my clients with my bona fides in thus making my reward contingent on the success of my tip; while, at the same time, it insures me a pecuniary return equally certain and no less lucrative.

Q.: How is it possible to convert a mere contingency into a certainty?

A.: By a judicious application of the elementary principle that of all the horses running in a race one, at least, must come in first.

Q.: Explain your answer more particularly.

A.: I will. Assume that there are ten horses in a race, and that I have undertaken to tip the winner to two hundred clients. I tip every horse in the entry, each to a different set of twenty clients, and so make sure, in twenty cases, of landing the odds that have been invested for my benefit.

Q.: Have you any other ingenious method for impressing clients with your sagacity?

A.: Yes. I run a little periodical of my own, entitled "The Backer's Bradshaw."

Q.: What do you charge for this periodical?

A.: I charge nothing at all for it. I send it out broadcast, through the post, to every potential client whose address I can get hold of.

Q.: What are the contents of your periodical?

A.: They consist chiefly of (1) a list of the extraordinary number of winners I have tipped during the preceding month, with a carefully calculated return proving how every client who has followed me during that period must have made the sum of £285 15s. on an original capital of 10s. 6d., and (2) a detailed forecast of the names of horses which I prophesy will win at various race-meetings fixed for the day after the issue of my periodical.

Q.: Are these forecasts always correct?

A.: They are, in every case, correct.

Q.: When you send out copies of the paper containing these forecasts, do you not often find the postal authorities very dilatory in despatching them?

"Truth" writes:—"I have never heard anything but favourable accounts of Dr. Lunn's Excursions." Tours to Switzerland, Norway Cruises.—Secretary, 5, Endsleigh Gardens, N.W.

A.: I always find them exceedingly dilatory.

Q.: Quote me a proof of this.

A.: The fact that whereas the date of the paper's issue, and therefore, of course, of its despatch, is the day before the race-meetings in question, it invariably happens that the date of the postmark is the day after them.

Q.: What do you do when your clients call your attention to this?

A.: I naturally inform them that I cannot be held responsible for the vagaries of the Post Office.

Q.: How long are you able to retain the confidence of your clients?

A.: With any luck, for about six months.

Q.: What happens at the expiration of that period?

A.: I change my name and address, and get to work on a fresh circle of mugs.

Q.: Are all your clients mugs?

A.: Certainly they are, otherwise they would not be my clients.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE KING AND QUEEN OF DENMARK.

THE King of Denmark will find himself, on his visit to France, treated as a sea king. He is to be spared the military review, but will witness a naval one in his honour at Cherbourg. His honorary staff will embrace three naval officers, including Vice-Admiral Caillard—a great-nephew, by the way, of Eugène Sue, the author of "Le Juif Errant" and "Les Mystères de Paris," novels that have still hundreds of thousands of readers as feuilletons of democratic papers. The military staff will be less distingué, its highest member being a brigadier-general, and its second and lowest Major Hepp, who belongs to the staff of President Fallières. The Danish colonies in the West Indies and the unfrozen parts of Greenland are so insignificant that King Frederick's navy—a highly respectable force, regard it as one may—is mainly wanted for coastguard defence, and that of the Belts and Sound.

The late King, before the breakdown of Russia, was constantly at variance with his Folkething (Chamber of Deputies) about naval and forts defences. He always ended by having his own way, through the exercise of the Royal prerogative the Constitution left him. The Folkething thought more seriously about immediate taxation than of the remote danger, as it seemed to them, of a second German invasion. In the bottom of their hearts they trusted more to what Russia and other Powers could do for them than to any self-defensive armour, military or naval, that Denmark could put on. Count Raben Levetsau comes with the King as Foreign Minister, and the Countess, his wife, with the Queen. The Count is a man of the world, of easy, obliging, and very gentlemanly manners, and his conversation reveals a sound judgment and a talent for putting complex questions in nutshells without any dryness. He chats agreeably. The care of his estate in one of the main islands in the Great Belt gives him a permanent interest in agriculture, dairy and poultry farming. His interest in yachting and fishing, owing to the extended seaboard of his property, is not less great.

The Countess Raben Levetsau, née Moulton, was brought up in the Rue de Courcelles and at Le Val, Seine et Marne, and is sister-in-law of that Countess von Hatzfeldt who was a good many years ago German Ambassadress in London. She is also daughter of Mme. Hagermann Lindencrone, whose present husband—her first husband was a Mr. Moulton, an American—had, when she moved in Parisian society, the prestige of a glorious contralto voice, of equally glorious dark eyes, and of a pale, clear, brunette complexion that matched them beautifully. The Countess Raben Levetsau is in many respects cosmopolitan, and is able to chat with ease and charm in nearly every modern language that can boast of a good literature. She claims that distinction for the Danish. In all respects she is well set-up, is very much herself, without any striking originality, aime mieux être que paraître, is très philosophe sans s'en douter, très artiste sans s'y prétendre, understands how with a mere nothing to give condiment to a plain toilette, and may be said to have completely adapted herself to the tone of the Court of Copenhagen. She is very fond of Denmark and of the quiet but interesting life she leads there, delighting in the pearl-greys of the waters on the Great Belt, and the sky and clouds they reflect, in the flashing silver white of the sea-gulls, and the air of peace which the beeches kissing the sea-water give to the coast. Nor, as a mistress of a large country house, is she unappreciative of the sea-gulls' eggs. They are as highly esteemed in Denmark as plovers' eggs are in England. I imagine that the fresh, bracing air of the Great Belt and the other waters that wash the Danish coasts must to some extent account for this.

Queen Lovisa's (I give the Scandinavian spelling) Beauharnais descent is recalled by the additional names of Eugénie Josephine. Some of the papers speak of these names being given her by the late Emperor Napoleon and the Empress Eugénie. To say so is to libel her late father, who very soon took the measure of both and of their "Vice-Empereur Rouher," whom he thought the dullest dog the French bourgeoisie perhaps ever produced. The Queen of Denmark received her names before the perpetration of the Coup d'Etat which made Louis Napoleon an Emperor. Her first name is that of her mother, her second that of her aunt on the paternal side, the much-loved Princess Eugénie, and her third name is that of Queen Josephine, née Beauharnais-Leuchtenberg, and wife of Oscar I.

Soon after the Coup d'Etat had resurrected the French Empire the Emperor proposed for the Princess Eugénie, alleging his admiration for her "person and character and his affection for the family of his grandmother and her great-grandmother, the Empress Josephine." She refused, as being too repugnant to her sentiments, the idea of marrying a man red-handed from the blood spilt on the boulevards in December in the preceding year. Not to offend him, she professed too great love for Sweden to be able to quit it permanently. That she loved Sweden with all her heart was true. She had every grace and accomplishment and saintliness besides. On inheriting the diamonds of her aunt, the Empress Dowager of Brazil, she sold them to build the orphanage called after her on the road from Stockholm to Drottningholm.

Queen Josephine transmitted to her children the Creole suavity for which her grandmother and godmother was so remarkable. The Princess Eugénie had it in the highest degree. Next to her came her eldest brother, the most seductive Sovereign of his time, and, finally, the present King, who has also great charm of manner, but not the kind that steals on one and captivates without any apparent wish to do so. The only member of the third generation of Bernadottes who shows this power to captivate is Prince Eugène. It is entirely wanting in the fourth generation, to which the Duke of Scania belongs. No doubt they have compensating qualities.

Why do people keep "golden weddings"? The silver wedding ought in reason to be enough. I never witnessed a golden wedding, save one, that did not chill me. The exception was that of a M. Boisdemoulin, brother of the Waterloo veteran, Colonel Boisdemoulin, who wrote a book with the taking title, "La Guerre s'en va," the most telling of any that I ever read on the same subject, but doomed to neglect and oblivion because written too soon. Well, the brother imagined that he had discovered a fontaine de jouvence in the guise of an elixir, with which he hoped to add to his fortune. The tout-Paris of the time attended the religious service. That of King Oscar and Queen Sophia must have been a sad anniversary, and I dare say they felt it so, inasmuch as they wished it to be as private as possible. The Swedes are too fond of festivity to obey their wish to the letter, and I dare say that they found in the date an opportunity for pleasure parties, lake excursions, concerts, and merry-making in restaurants and at Hasselbacker's circus. Stockholm is the most beautiful city in situation, and in every other way between itself and Venice. It is as rich in churches with high belfries as no matter what Dutch city. The belfries have bells of a deliciously clear timbre. They all rang out joyous chimes on the Golden Wedding Day. In the clear air of the Swedish capital the effect must have been intoxicating, except, perhaps, to the Royal family. Oscar II. is now seventy-eight. He has been for three or four years suffering from an illness that comes in "strokes." Each was heavier than the preceding one, and only a phenomenally good constitution could have rallied so often. On the eve of the great day the Crown Prince surrendered the powers that he had received as Regent, his father wanting to attend as King a religious service and receive some deputations and personal friends. He held himself erect, and those eyes of his like coals of fire flashed under the effect of passing excitement. The only trace of his different illnesses was in a slight looseness of one side of the mouth, which, however, the moustache partially concealed. It gave him lively pleasure to receive congratulations from the French Foreign Office, the Elysée, Pau, "the cradle of his family," members of the Academy, and French naval officers known to him and treated by him in their personal relations as brother seamen. The more he advanced in life the fonder he became of France. Four or five years ago he fitted up for himself a pied à terre in the house in which the Swedo-Norwegian Legation was then lodged, and he hoped often to stay there. The attention paid him by M. Pichon in calling on the Golden Wedding Day on the Swedish Minister to offer congratulations must have touched the King. The Danish Government decorated the port and public buildings of Copenhagen in honour of Queen Louise's uncle, and Norway showed every inclination to shake hands and be friends. I have not heard what they did at Carlsruhe or Luxemburg. The Crown Princess of Sweden, whose health is, and has been for years, chronically delicate, is the only daughter of the Grand Duke and Duchess of Baden. The Grand Duke of Luxemburg is Queen Sophia's nephew, but is a hopeless invalid made speechless by paralysis.

Miss Olga Nethersole and her company have come at the right time. The end of "la grande saison," the season that begins at Easter and ends in mid-June, is near. Paris is congested with idlers rich enough to spend money in amusing themselves. While awaiting the next royal visit and its attendant fêtes and the Grand Prix race, they fill the Sarah Bernhardt theatre, where Miss Olga Nethersole plays in English adaptations of French plays. The English and Americans admire her and are hardly conscious of the disadvantage under which she lies in giving Daudet and Dumas fils in British attire. I mean the disadvantage in the eyes of Parisian critics and playgoers.

The French are extremely bigoted as to their dramatic theories and practice. They think the plays now acted at the Sarah Bernhardt theatre "good for amateurs." "L'amateur" has in things comestible a special palate. Dishes à haut goût are to his taste. Otter or badger à la royale was invented for him. I knew of an amateur who revelled in dolphin stewed in port in the oven and then "smothered" in a bouillabaisse sauce—the most delicious sauce of all, the wealthy Marseillais who dine often at La Réserve will tell you. In London or New York Miss Olga Nethersole's simulations of passion would not be thought too unreserved—too much intended to fill the stage by the force and fire of action. We like here couleurs rompues, bleus lavés, rose passé, lilas effacé, jaune vieil, or, rouges ombrés, and have relegated the frank colours to the theatrical and fancy ball costumier.

Miss Olga Nethersole follows nature perhaps too closely to give complete satisfaction to critics who simply look on nature in dramatic art as a starting point, or the raw material for the artist. They may be right or they may be wrong, but for the time being they are what they are. They also like to be led or ensnared unknown to themselves into admiring, and not forced unless well disposed to surrender. Given the realistic style, Miss Olga Nethersole is judged worthy to fill the situation of a star, and is certainly an actress of talent, and has great power of expression.

Some of Miss Nethersole's effects remind me of those of the late Mlle. Croizette in "Le Sphinx," a play now as old as Queen Anne, "L'Etrangère," and "La Princesse de Bagdad." You may perhaps remember that Mlle. Croizette, not being able to find a human being disposed to commit suicide with strychnine for her sake, went to some laboratory for "scientific research" to see a baboon poisoned with that drug. She also received a course of lessons from an operator in corpore vili on the throes she proposed to simulate in the suicidal scene. With the help of limelight passing through a pale green medium, her ghastliness and convulsive agony horrified the audience. There was no finer woman on the French stage than Mlle. Croizette at that time. She controlled the great fortune which the late Baron Stern had made in Italians, and she used to take airings on the sands near Tréport mounted on a well-known park hack of the late Duc d'Aumale. Her intense realism, therefore, made a noise, and led to endless disputes at dinner tables and among the theatrical critics. Those who held that sketchy indication of corporeal pain or of the physical effects of passion is preferable to the minutiæ of realism, came out of the controversy victorious. Their view should be taken in relation to French taste and traditions, just as the Dutch school of painting should be greatly judged in relation to the climate and conditions of life that govern in the Netherlands, or the Italian school to those of Italy, which lay down a totally different æsthetic standard.

We do not want here to see all the phases—the beginning, middle, and end—of a nervous attack. It is enough to throw out a suggestion and pass on, leaving the spectator to imagine more than meets the eyes. Having a thin skin, we prefer delicate to strong impressions, and are keenly appreciative of the graces that steal on one. I do not say that London, New York, or Chicago have the same standards. These cities are feverishly active business centres. The men there go to the play, not to think out social problems or to give the rein to the imagination, but to hear, to see, to be carried along, and, in short, to be amused or well stirred up. They are mentally fatigued after a day spent at high tension in business. It may be said that in such a state imagination is torpid, and that the one thing needful is a pick-me-up in the way of stage impressionism or sensationalism. The British public does not set up to be imaginative. It rather prides itself on being matter-of-fact. I came away with this impression from witnessing in London the success of a very great actor, Wyndham, in "David Garrick." He, to my Parisianised taste, terribly overdid drunken effects, and spent too long a time in reeling about and talking incoherently. Certainly, in Garrick's time the fine gentleman was too often a hard after-dinner drinker. Still, as one does not go to the theatre to judge of the erudition of an author, it might have been better not to emphasise the inebriety that reigned in the days of Garrick. The scene I speak of, however finely played by Wyndham, could have only excited repulsion on the boards of the Vaudeville, Porte St. Martin, or Variétés, and could not have been attempted at the Français.

Likewise, in playing "Sapho," Miss Olga Nethersole has been admired, but with many reserves. French playgoers hardly see the use of mining deep down into the life of a second or a third rate cocotte. Jane Hading only took into account the outcrop features. They were quite enough. She often conveyed with little touches much more than met the eye or ear. Her knowledge of la fille was not the result of study, but of early and scarcely conscious observation. She was an enfant de la balle, and had often strange associates in early youth. Her by-play had the wild spontaneous grace of field flowers. The touch-and-go manner sufficed in her personation of Sapho for those who had kept company with damsels like her, and was more than enough for those who had not. Jane Hading's motions, so feline in their ease, her heady beauty, though a little jaded, explained much more than the author Daudet dared to put in words. She was not a Mme. Potiphar, but a Phédre in modern Bohemian life—a pantheress in woman's form, following the bent of the lower instincts. The body as Mme. Hading plays the part is weak and the spirit not merely weak, but non-existent as a curb. Jane Hading, an enfant de la balle, drew, at the rehearsals under Daudet's eye, on her recollections of the queer associates of her youth. He, moved by joy and enthusiasm at her free treatment of the part, embraced her each time she withdrew into the wings. It sometimes is as great an advantage to have kept bad company as to have no character to lose. But say that to a London or a New York audience! How own before such a house in one's by-play that the dear companions of one's youth were social outcasts?

A PEER AMONG THE PUBLICISTS.

IT is rather a curious thing that, although I have been a journalist for quite a time now, I never met another to speak to, that I can remember—except, of course, people who wanted to interview Jessie—but you, and I scarcely look upon you as one, until last Thursday. I shouldn't have then, if it hadn't been for a letter I got that morning. It was one sent to me at your office, and that your people forwarded to me, and it was in a cheap plain envelope, so that it looked like a bill, and I wasn't going to open it at first, merely as a matter of habit, until Jessie reminded me that none of my creditors know that I have anything to do with you, so they wouldn't be likely to send letters to Carteret-street. It turned out to be something very different, from a man who owns several newspapers—I didn't know his name, though I dare say you would—asking me to call at his place, as he wanted to make a proposition to me. I was going to chuck it into the fire, but Jessie got quite excited about it, and said I certainly must go and see him. She was sure he was going to offer to make me editor of something, and although she didn't think I should be any good as an editor, if I got the offer I should have an excellent lever against you to make you pay me better for these articles. When she put it in that way, I saw at once that she was right—as she always is—so I went straight off to see the chap at the time he mentioned.

Judging from the offices he's got he must be no end of a swell in the newspaper line, and the way he talked showed that he had a thoroughly good opinion of himself, and rather put my back up. He began right off by cross-examining me about how much experience I had in journalism, until I hinted that, as far as I knew, it was no business of his, and that I wasn't accustomed to being talked to in that way by a commoner. I quite admit it was pretty low down on my part, but after all it wasn't as if I had come to ask him for a job, and there are some sort of men who regularly invite that sort of thing. Any way, it fairly made him grovel, and afterwards he came straight to the point. It seems he is running a ha'penny fashion-paper, called "Society Sniplets," which, as far as I can make out, isn't paying, though, of course, he did not say so. He was thinking of incorporating it into a new paper that was to be as nearly as possible an exact copy of Truth, only it was to be a Tariff Reform organ, and to keep the fashion notes more down to the level of that sort of public. He already runs one, on the same lines, that backs up the Liberals and Free Trade, and all the rest of it, and now he wants to catch the other side as well. He didn't want his own name to be brought in as having anything to do with it, the idea being that I should pretend to be the proprietor as well as editor. He wanted me to run it under my real name and title, and have my coat of arms and coronet, and all the rest of it, on the cover, and wherever else it could be brought in. He offered me no end of a big salary, and said there would be little or no work for me to do—only to write an article about the fashions each week and act as figure-head, while he would get some one with more experience for a couple of pounds a week or so to do the rest. This sort of thing put my back up more and more; but I kept my face, because the salary was rather a temptation for one thing, and I felt it wouldn't be fair to dear Jessie to refuse it without talking it over with her first. But when he went on to say that he could only offer me the job on one condition, that I got the whole of the rest of the staff of Truth to come over with me, and wanted to discuss what was the least I could get them for, I thought it was getting a bit thick, so I told him I'd see him damned first, and came away. Because, of course, I knew it wouldn't be the slightest good my trying.

Some of the things he told me while we were talking gave me quite a new idea of journalism. When I say he told me, I mean that he just let them drop incidentally, as if they were so perfectly well understood that there was no need even to mention them. For one thing, he made out that no journalist nowadays cares in the least what opinion he personally holds about anything, but writes just what his proprietor tells him to. For instance, he mentioned one man, who is quite a well known writer on religious papers, who is a notorious atheist. And he said, too, that he—the man I was talking to, I mean—makes a practice of shifting the whole staff of one of his Tariff Reform papers on to one of his Radical ones, and vice versâ, every six months or so, because it makes them more quick-witted and keeps them from getting hide-bound. It seems, too, that whenever there is any big political question on, like Home Rule, or Tariff Reform, he always takes care to have two papers, one on each side, and as nearly alike in everything else as possible—because then he can catch all the readers whatever they think about it. He makes them attack each other no end, accuse each other of downright lying, and all the rest of it, because it makes everybody buy them both.

Somehow he got on the subject of advertisements, and incidentally he said that you were a fool because you refuse advertisements that aren't straight, although you've only got one paper. It was different, I understood him to say, if a man has several, because then he can run one on virtuous lines and get the kudos out of that, while all the while he can accept the swindling advertisements, which it seems always pay higher rates, for one of his other papers. As far as I could make out, the whole thing is worked on a regular system—the cheaper the price of the paper the bigger the swindles that you can afford to accept advertisements from, because the people who read them aren't so well educated, and are much more easily taken in. And quite the best sort of paper from this point of view is the cheapest kind of religious weekly, because its readers will swallow anything. He had had some idea of turning "Society Sniplets" into a farthing religious weekly, and keeping the same staff, at reduced salaries, but he had decided it would be better to start an entirely new one at a farthing. All the same, he wanted "The Eternal Verities," which he was thinking of as the title of the paper he was going to start for me, to have a strong religious tone, and he hinted that if I could see my way to become an eminent High Churchman, and go about speaking on platforms and abusing the Nonconformists, he wouldn't mind adding a hundred or two extra to my salary.

He hadn't finally fixed the price he was going to charge for it, and he had some idea of having two editions of it every week, one at sixpence and the other at a halfpenny, so as to get both sorts of circulations. He would have the letterpress the same in both, but with different advertisements, of course. He said I should have to make my fashion article a good deal more spicy than you have them in Truth, and keep on hinting at all sorts of scandals in society, and have weekly articles about such subjects as "What It Feels Like to be a Real Lady," or "How I Spend £10,000 a Year on Corsets," because that sort of thing goes down in the cheaper suburbs and among general servants, who are the sort of people his advertisement manager would want to get hold of. He said I needn't worry about the exact truth of what I published, as long as it wasn't legally libellous, if only it was sensational enough—and if anybody kicked I was to throw their letters into the waste-paper basket and never refer to the subject again. I was especially to remember this about the political articles, because the people who read them were not likely to read papers on the other side, and so even if the facts were contradicted none of my readers would know. One thing he insisted upon very strongly, that I must never mention any of a certain list of highly-placed people that he would supply me with, as being fashionable or in society, while he would give me another list every week of people that he wanted puffed up. I was telling Jessie about this afterwards, and she declares the explanation must be that he, or his wife if he has one, must be trying to get into society, and that the people he doesn't want mentioned are those that don't receive him. But I don't myself think there can be much in this, because he is much too clever a man to imagine that anybody would feel hurt by being boycotted by such a paper as that was going to be.

Of course, Jessie and I have been talking the whole thing over a good deal ever since, and she wants me to add that, although I have refused the fellow's offer so far, it is quite likely that it will be made again, either by him or by some other chap, very probably with an even bigger salary hung on to it. And that, of course, a man, whether peer or commoner, has to consider his wife's interests, and those of possible other responsibilities, and that there is no doubt that my articles are very clever and original, because all her friends tell her so who know that I write them; and that there are lots of men who aren't doing nearly such good work who get ever so much better paid for it than I do. (Private.—You needn't worry about this, but since dear Jessie has promised my mother to retire from the stage, she is feeling a little worried about the future, and it is quite right that she should keep her eyes open to the main chance. What?)

I must say that after what that fellow told me I am beginning to realise that journalism isn't nearly such an easy profession to understand as I thought it was at first—in fact, the writing seems the least part of it. And Jessie thinks so too.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THE purpose of the Suffragettes, dear Lady Betty, may be described in a few words; for ages the world has been governed by old men; it is proposed to govern it now by old women.

. . . . .

A Colonial Premier has described his recent experiences of London "society" in the following epigram:—"Most of our hosts and hostesses asked us, whom they did not know, as an excuse for asking those who would not know them."

. . . . .

He has also recorded his impression of the situation here as follows:—"This is the period of the Financial Conquest of England; the aliens are in possession of the money. Interest is the only capital left to the 'Governing Class'; they are selling it to the conquerors."

. . . . .

His estimate of our "Imperialism" is frankly expressed:—"In England 'Imperialism' begins at home; were there no home politics in that country there would be no 'Imperialism.'"

* * * * *

There are two disorders that are affecting the condition of the "Upper-Class" in Great Britain; incipient insanity and incipient sanity—the latter is the more serious. So long as most of the members of the "Governing Class" here were convinced that they were a superior creation, that the Divine Right of birth was unquestionable, that a Public-School education was unrivalled, and that the best form of intelligence was confined to themselves, their self-confidence was almost irresistible. Being afflicted with incipient sanity they are now beginning to perceive how irrational are their claims, and their own inefficiency—and the alteration renders them almost powerless. In politics they prefer to be led by a political "upstart," having more confidence in his judgment and fighting vitality than in the intelligence of a member of their own class. In business they defer meekly to almost every financier they encounter. Even on the Turf they are inclined to submit without hesitation to the guidance of the merest adventurer. Chronic self-sufficiency is being replaced by chronic diffidence; so rapid and complete a change has never occurred before in a combination which handled all the strings of power and enjoyed the respect of a community.

"Would that my father had been a successful bookmaker instead of the improvident Ambassador he was," some insist. "Why was I not given a rational education?" others despairingly cry. "What use are distinguished ancestors now?" moan others. "A penniless 'gentleman' is a pauper with the least opportunities," is another complaint. Incipient sanity is to be the chief circumstance in the removal of the present system.

* * * * *

The getting-on craze has complete possession of the British race of the moment; it is one of the main features of the time in this country. Political and social success were for ages the close preserve of one class, though, occasionally, there were some who contrived to overcome all obstacles, and to establish themselves in positions which the system did not contemplate their occupying. In those days even the most successful of them, however, were regarded with distrust and dislike by those for whom the enclosure was reserved, and, in a minor degree, by those from whose ranks the former had sprung. The Liberal legislation of recent times, the enormous increase of wealth amongst the middle class, the decrease of the value—and consequently of the importance—of land, the spread of education, and other circumstances, have virtually opened the enclosure, and there is a frantic endeavour on every side to take advantage of the opportunity. "You must get on," parents say to their sons, and the latter work diligently at school, take prizes and scholarships, and strain every nerve to distinguish themselves later in life. "You must marry well," is said to the daughters, and the latter aim at obtaining titled, well-connected, or rich husbands. "We must get on," say the wives, and they live in bigger houses than is necessary, dress extravagantly, entertain people who despise them, and neglect their obscure connections and former friends. "I must get on," say the husbands, and they devote themselves entirely to the making of money, and are not restrained by any principle in the endeavour. The "getting-on craze" is responsible for an enormous increase of worldliness throughout the community; everything is possible to the resolute, unscrupulous, and enterprising—the son of the crossing-sweeper, with those attributes and good fortune, may become a millionaire, a Premier, a prominent criminal, or purchase a peerage. There is another side to the picture; we hear much more frequently than did our predecessors of unhappy marriages, divorces, bankruptcies, scandals of every kind, and suicides, while madness is alarmingly on the increase. Happiness is a most important asset here; that seems to be overlooked for the moment.

"How marvellously that man has got on," was recently said of one in Hyde Park who, from being a pauper, had become possessed of two millions of money. The millionaire was a paralytic in a bath-chair, and half an imbecile!—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

The original Blue Black Ink was invented by Henry Stephens in 1834. It has been frequently imitated but never equalled, and is to-day by far the most fluid and reliable ink in the world.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE Derby excites comparatively little public interest in these days, although strenuous efforts are made every year by some of the papers to get up an elaborate fuss about the race. I had expected that Slieve Gallion and Wool Winder would finish first and second, and may at least congratulate myself upon having from beginning to end regarded Galvani as an utter impostor when considered in the light of a Derby horse, nor could I believe that Bezonian would reverse the Two Thousand running with the favourite. The race was run in a very curious way, as the pace was exceedingly fast for nearly a mile, and it then became decidedly slower. Everything was against Slieve Gallion, who had run himself out about a quarter of a mile from home, when he was hopelessly beaten. The stable must have been convinced of his stamina, or his jockey would not have been instructed to make hard running, for it is to be presumed that he was riding to orders when he made every post a winning post. Many good judges thought that the favourite looked much lighter than when he ran at Newmarket. Bezonian was in excellent condition, and he had made considerable improvement since he ran for the Two Thousand. There was no excuse for the defeat of Lord Rosebery's horse. Wool Winder was the unlucky horse of the field, as he lost a lot of ground early in the race, and he was twice considerably interfered with. If Colonel Baird's horse had been favoured throughout with a clear course, it is highly probable that he would just have won. A good many people at Newmarket had a strange fancy for Galleot, and this colt was well backed for a place. Earlston is useful in moderate company, but here he was outclassed, and All Black might as well have remained in his stable. Orby won with apparent ease at the finish. He is a fine big colt, and a great credit to Orme. I do not believe, however, that he had anything in hand, and he was lucky in that the race was run in a way which just suited him, and which certainly did not suit his most dangerous opponent, and he was admirably ridden by J. Reiff. Orby's victory was satisfactory, as he has been fairly run out for his engagements, and his form was thoroughly exposed. There had, however, been nothing in his public running to lead any one to anticipate his winning the Derby, as he had never beaten anything of really high class. Orby has no engagement at either Ascot or Goodwood, nor is he in any race at the Newmarket July Meetings. His next engagement is the Atlantic Stakes of £2,000 on July 26. Mr. Croker's colt has incurred a penalty of 12 lb., but the lot left in for this race are very moderate. Keystone II. was withdrawn more than two years ago, and Altitude paid forfeit in March, 1906. I expect that Wool Winder will win the St. Leger if all goes well with him during the next three months. Orby is engaged in this race, but the extra distance will suit Colonel Baird's horse better than the Derby winner.

The most remarkable feature in connection with the Derby has been the persistent manner in which Galvani was written up day after day in certain quarters. People sometimes become quite insanely infatuated about horses, and this must surely have been the fate of the writer who on Wednesday morning described Galvani as "a real smashing colt." Reports of a trial alleged to have been won by Galvani have been audaciously published, although the so-called trial was merely an ordinary exercise gallop. It is too bad that it should have been stated that Galvani "had been doing very little work before the Middle Park Plate," considering that only one week before that race was run Major Loder's colt won an important stake at Kempton Park. Galvani was then in the pink of condition. The fact is that his victory over Slieve Gallion at Newmarket was as "wrong" as the defeat of Flying Fox by Caiman eight years earlier, and although one hears so much about that particular success of Major Loder's colt, his poor running ten days later with Polar Star in the Criterion was buried in oblivion. Galvani will presently prove himself to be a non-stayer, and he is never likely to run up to his two-year-old form. There was no excuse for his defeat in the Derby, as he was well trained; and probably six furlongs will be found to be his best course. The Clarehaven stable appears to be altogether out of form, but when a tide of good fortune has been flowing for some years, the ebb, when it comes, is sure to be in proportion.

Polar Star collapsed ignominiously in the Coronation Cup, and so miserable was his exhibition that the colt must surely have been amiss in some way. If this was his best running it is clear that he is a non-stayer. I had fully expected the defeat of Polar Star, having written as follows a fortnight ago: "Polar Star is tolerably sure to start favourite for the Coronation Cup if he is all right, but I shall anticipate the victory of The White Knight, who is probably the best four-year-old now in training in England." I had, however, anticipated seeing Polar Star finish second, for it did not seem conceivable that he would be easily beaten by both Troutbeck and Polymelus. I have several times expressed the opinion that Polar Star's merits as a racer have been extravagantly overrated. The Coronation Cup was really a good sporting race, and more interesting to many people than the Derby. The White Knight was not long ago mentioned by me as certain to be the best English horse in the field for the Ascot Cup, and he is a really good horse, and endowed both with genuine stamina and with a fine turn of speed. He has improved vastly in all respects since last season, and his performance on Thursday fully justifies the very high opinion which I have always expressed of his merits as a racer.

Writing several weeks ago about the Woodcote Stakes, I pointed out that Mr. Hall Walker had given a wonderfully strong tip to the public by withdrawing Pom and another colt, and accepting only with White Eagle. A fortnight ago I expressed the opinion that White Eagle ought to win "if he is backed by the stable, as it may be reasonably assumed that he has been well tried." Mr. Hall Walker, of course, had a good line of the two-year-old form through Pom. White Eagle was so promising a yearling that he was entered for fifty races. He ran very green, but he won his race in a common canter. It is really nauseous to hear braying already about White Eagle being "the winner of next year's Derby," for surely the cackle-ganders who indulge in these crack-brained rhapsodies can scarcely yet have forgotten Traquair, of whom precisely the same thing was said twelve months ago, and where is he now? When Traquair's early performances were throwing people into hysterics last summer, it was predicted in Truth that Lord Rosebery's colt would show his best form as a two-year-old. I fancy it will be the same with White Eagle, who does not give one the idea of training on into a stayer. We shall probably see the best of this colt during the present season. White Eagle's next race will be the Coventry Stakes at Ascot, where he is also engaged in the Biennial. He is in two valuable races next month, the £5,000 stake at Sandown Park on July 20, and the £2,000 stake at Liverpool on the 25th. He is a grandly bred colt, being by Gallinule out of Merry Gal.

There was a large field for the Oaks, which most sensible people regarded as a very open race. Frugality lamed herself slightly on Friday morning, so she was scratched. This was a most unfortunate mishap, for Lord Falmouth's filly would probably have won this race. The dolts and doodles who tumbled over each others' heels to get anything over 2 to 1 about Witch Elm surely had not troubled themselves to inspect Mr. Hall Walker's filly before backing her. Most good judges were of the opinion that she appeared decidedly light and jaded, and by no means in such good condition as at Newmarket. It should have been disquieting to believers in the favourite that her stable companion Mimosa was backed down to 4 to 1, and I believe it was estimated that there is but little between the pair. Witch Elm got away well, but she was hopelessly beaten more than a mile from home, being apparently unable to go the pace. Mimosa ran prominently and finished fourth. It was evidently expected that Maya would improve on her One Thousand form, as she was backed for a great deal more money than any other filly from Newmarket, but she ran very badly. Altitude's trial a week before the race had been preposterously exaggerated, and she was not much fancied by the stable, but she justified my prediction last week that she would prove the best of the Newmarket lot. The betting on the race was simply idiotic, as there was no justification whatever for regarding Witch Elm as being such a good thing that 2 to 1 was a reasonable price to accept about her in a field of fourteen. The infatuation of backers was the more astonishing after the hollow defeat of Polar Star on Thursday, as it had been given out that he is 21 lb. better than the filly. The victory of Glass Doll was a veritable crash for backers, as Mr. Joel's filly had not been backed for a penny, and I believe she was only started on the off-chance, as she is in foal to Sundridge. Glass Doll is a daughter of Isinglass, and she has apparently inherited her sire's stamina, for she finished very strongly. The winner was most judiciously ridden by H. Randall, who came on with a well-timed run at the finish, to the consternation of the backers of Laomedia, who apparently had the race in hand. Mr. Singer's filly was stopping fast, and in a few more strides she would have been beaten by Lady Hasty, who had been a great tip in the morning.

The Oaks turn-up was a crowning disaster for the cautious backers who have one bet a day on a presumed certainty, as they had come to dire grief over Slieve Gallion on Wednesday, and over Polar Star on Thursday.

The good thing of Friday was supposed to be Popinjay for the Acorn Stakes, and she was so heavily backed (being regarded as a safe "retriever" after her trials at Newmarket) that she started at 6 to 4 in a field of thirteen. Popinjay was slow in beginning, but she would have won all right enough but for floundering badly at the tan road. She caught the field with wonderful rapidity, but it was too late, as she could not quite get up to Pretty Quick, who defeated her by three-quarters of a length. Of course, it was perfectly obvious that Lord Rosebery's filly ought to have won easily. Popinjay had cantered away from Alistair in a gallop over the Rous course trial ground at Newmarket, and the defeat of the colt in the Woodcote Stakes is attributed to his preferring five furlongs to six.

Mr. Raphael's filly, Zaida, who finished third for the Woodcote Stakes, wants time, but she is a very nice, racing-like filly, and will be worth remembering later on. She is in the July Stakes at Newmarket, and in the Richmond Stakes at Goodwood. Zaida, who is by Sainfoin out of Aida, was bred by the late Sir James Miller, and it was at the sale of his yearlings last summer that she was purchased by her present owner for 1,200 gs Quelpart's victory in the Wallington Plate was a highly creditable performance, as he was most seriously interfered with. He is a very game colt.

The meeting at Kempton Park on Saturday might very well have been dispensed with, after four such very heavy days at Epsom. The only race of any importance was the Redfern Plate, and Llangwm won cleverly, as I had predicted would be the case. All things considered, the bookmakers were generous in accepting such moderate odds as 2 to 1, for not one of the colt's eight opponents appeared to be really fancied, and 6 to 1 bar one was always offered.

There will be abundance of racing at Ascot next week, but it is to be feared that some of the principal events in the programme will collapse considerably, as so often happens at this meeting. There are a couple of two-year-old races on Tuesday—the Coventry Stakes and the Biennial. There are 130 entries for the Coventry

Scrubb & Co., Ltd., caution the public against the many injurious imitations of their Cloudy Fluid Ammonia that are being offered, and draw attention to their having affixed the signature of Scrubb & Co. to each bottle, without which none is genuine.

Mortlocks. — Specialists in Luncheon, Dinner, Dessert, Breakfast, and Tea Services. Old English and French Patterns and Models. Specimens sent on Approval. Carriage paid.—Oxford St., and Orchard-st., London, W.

Stakes, which race will be worth £2,300, but the field will be a small one, as there are no penalties for previous winners, the result being that this event is frequently a mere reproduction of the Woodcote Stakes at Epsom, and dark animals which have been well galloped are reserved for the New Stakes, in which race they meet winners of £500 with 7 lb. the best of the weights. The King is the largest subscriber to the Coventry Stakes, with six entries, but it is to be feared that his Majesty's two-year-olds are so moderate that his colours are not likely to be seen out. The finish for the Coventry Stakes will probably lie between Bracelet, White Eagle, Popinjay, and Llangwm, and there is no sort of line between these animals, so it is obviously not a race to bet on. The Biennial of £1,730 has 123 entries, including White Eagle, but Mr. Hall Walker's colt is sure to start for the Coventry Stakes. Lord Falmouth may win the Biennial with Bucolic, unless there is something smart among the dark lot. The New Stakes on Thursday will probably be won by either Tsu Shima or Royal Realm, both of these animals having been highly tried, and the colt is said to be better than White Eagle. There are 104 entries for the Windsor Castle Stakes on Friday, including Llangwm, Alistair, Pom, and Popinjay; but previous running during the week will probably indicate the winner of this race.

As to the three-year-old events, there are fifty-seven entries for the Prince of Wales' Stakes on Tuesday, including his Majesty's Perambulator and Slim Lad, Lord Derby's Olympian, Mr. E. Dresden's Galleot, Captain Greer's Slieve Gallion, Lord Rosebery's Bezonian, Duke of Devonshire's Acclaim, Duke of Westminster's Dusty Miller, and Lord Falmouth's St. Martin. If St. Martin has any pretensions to good form, and can stay the course, he ought to find no difficulty in winning this race. Slieve Gallion will not run. There are fifty-four entries for the Coronation Stakes on Wednesday. I expect that Frugality will win this valuable race for Lord Falmouth, and if she is not up to the mark, then Laomedia may be successful. There are forty-six entries for the Ascot Derby, which ought to be won by Lord Rosebery's Bezonian.

There are forty-two entries for the St. James's Palace Stakes on Thursday, and if only six start, the race will be worth £2,700. The list includes Bezonian, Duke of Devonshire's Hillsprite, Perambulator, Lord Falmouth's Lycœus, and Slieve Gallion, and this race ought to be a good thing for the Two Thousand winner, the course being the fairly easy Old Mile. There are fifty-one entries for the three-year-old heat of the Triennial on Friday, and Wool Winder ought to win this race without much trouble, the best of the lot engaged being Hillsprite, Acclaim, Frugality, Maya, Simon Square, Cargill, and Sixty.

Sixty-three horses are engaged in the four-year-old heat of the Triennial on Tuesday, but most of them are either out of training or hopeless non-stayers, and the course is two miles. Bridge of Canny or Troutbeck ought to win.

The Gold Vase has an exceedingly moderate entry, and I am surprised that Wool Winder was not engaged, as he could not have lost this race. Killeagh or Lycœus may be able to win. The Fernhill Stakes should be won by the Duke of Devonshire's Cheshire Cat. This smart filly will be too good for the three-year-olds or for the colts of her own age. The O.M. Biennial, on Thursday, has fifty-six entries, and Wool Winder is apparently a certainty for this race. There are sixty-eight entries for the Rous Memorial Stakes, and if Polar Star is all right he cannot lose. It is melancholy to notice the names of Flair, Pretty Polly, and Spearmint in the entry for this race. I observe that one writer has discoursed on the interest of a meeting over the Hunt Cup course between Polar Star and Slieve Gallion. The fact has been overlooked that Slieve Gallion would have to give Polar Star 10 lb. The All-Aged Stakes may be left to Rocketter. The New Biennial (five furlongs) will be won by Sagamore, if Mr. Raphael's horse is in any sort of form, and the market will afford indication as to whether he is really fancied by his stable. The King's Stand Plate of £800, on Friday, may be left to Little Flutter. There are eighty-six entries for the Hardwicke Stakes of £2,860, including Slieve Gallion, Beppo, Black Arrow, Spearmint, and Llangibby. Dusty Miller might be able to win this race for the Duke of Westminster, as he has escaped a penalty, and the field will be a poor one.

Several weeks ago I expressed the opinion that the finish for the Gold Cup would be between Querido and The White Knight. Colonel Kirkwood's horse will certainly be the best of the English lot, as was predicted some time back in Truth. Bridge of Canny, Sancy, Mintagon, Polymelus, Beppo, and Troutbeck may all start, as well as the Russian horse, Hammurabi, and the Hungarian horse Morpeth II. If The White Knight is beaten the winner will be the best of the French lot, and I shall be surprised if they send over anything better than Querido. Mordant II., winner of the Prix du Jockey Club, is engaged, but M. Ephrussi's colt would not stay this severe course, and he is not likely to be seen at Ascot, as he runs at Longchamps next Sunday for the Grand Prix. The Duc de Gramont intends to start Eider.

With regard to the Ascot handicaps, it is too soon to give any definite opinion, and I will only advise my speculative readers not to invest one shilling on either Stakes or Hunt Cup until the day of running arrives, as the early betting on these events is now all fiddle-faddle rubbish.

At Cambridge Trinity Hall has gone head of the river. I must admit that this result was rather a surprise. One has learned to discount modern sensational journalism. Jesus had been boomed in the press. Mr. Steve Fairbairn's new style was superlatively wonderful. Only one Blue in the boat and they were certain to go head. They would catch First with three Blues. As for Trinity Hall, with Stuart at seven, they were simply nonentities. They did not enter into the reckoning. Why should they? They were rowing in the rotten old Cambridge style that McKenna, Wauchope, and Escombe adopted; the sort of stuff that the University crew indulges in—and the crew only beats Oxford not because of any merit, but because Oxford happens to be exceptionally rotten. At least, this is what the critics said. And they are Oxford men, and they ought to know. An undergraduate paper, the Granta, started the term with an article on Cambridge rowing, telling the men the Cambridge style was all right. Let them row in that style, and eschew all the nonsense of the Fairbairn and sculling theory as evolved by the genius of the press. An eminent oarsman and rowing critic said it was written by some idiot who thought he knew a lot. Well, the tip has come true. First were upset by not getting Baynes into their crew until late, and they had Mr. J. B. Close to assist in the coaching. Hall had divers men without theories. Like other crews, they struck their bad patch in training. But they got over it. Third Trinity were most unfortunately weakened. The strength of Third is the strength of University rowing. For that reason one always likes to see them do well. They went down each night. On Friday First were caught by Hall 250 yards from the finish. They were splendidly stroked by Simpson. On the final day one could really estimate the value of all the nonsense that had been written about Jesus. Hall, First, and Jesus all rowed over, and there was the full distance between each crew. Of course, it must not be supposed that in anything I have written I bear any grudge against the Jesus men or the college. They are just as good fellows and just as keen about their college as other men. One has to look at the matter from the standpoint of University rowing. Cambridge rowing has suffered as Oxford never has from men with fads and fancies who have tried from one or two colleges to run a style to which others must conform to get their Blue. If the authorities do not acquiesce with the faddist, then he proceeds to make himself a centre of dissension and disloyalty. There were grave symptoms of such a revival when Mr. Fairbairn wanted to put on a trial eight composed of Jesus and Christ's men to test his style against that of the other men. That was the path of dissension. He has had his chance. His crew rowed in a procession. They gave their exposition of the famous Fairbairn form and they did not go head. I hope this is the last time that one will hear any more of this press-puffed nonsense. The University cannot afford to do without Jesus any more than Jesus can afford to do without the University.

Thomas Goode & Co.—China, glass, pottery, fireproof ware. Sole agents in the United Kingdom for the famous "Bi-Métal" (copper lined with pure sheet silver) Cooking Utensils. Illustrated catalogues free.—South Audley-street, London.

With regard to Trinity Hall, I am especially glad that it has gone head. The death of the late Master, the Rev. Henry Latham, was a severe blow to the College. He had made the College. He had recognised that rowing men were the salt of the earth in sport long before Mr. Andrew Lang wrote essays. The College had persistently held its own in rowing as no other College had done. He was succeeded by a Master and tutors who had appreciated his traditions, and who were continuing to run the College on the same lines. Between them and the men at the College there never was and never is the distant relationship of tutor and undergraduate. They are the men's friends, to whom they naturally turn in any trouble. The old Master always spoke of the men at the Hall as his boys, and that was and is the secret of the relationship that exists. Of course, it was sure to be said, and I have heard it said, that the Hall is not what it was. For one thing, it was only third or fourth on the river. Now that Wranglers are abolished, there is only one way of testing a college, and that is by its place on the river. The Hall men have answered their critics. They have shown that the best traditions of the College are maintained, and they know that their Master and tutors were as keen about the doings of the boat and as happy at its success as the keenest oarsman in the College. The Hall is where it was.

The Rev. T. Maude is a deputy chief consul for the county of Devon on behalf of the C.T.C. He has sent a letter to the C.T.C. Gazette, pointing out that the work is concentrated in few hands. He says that, instead of a body of seventy men to look after the interests of the members, the work is in the hands of some half-dozen or so, and he urges reform. His letter was refused publication by the C.T.C. editor. It shows up so clearly the need for reform. Let me summarise it. There are sixty-nine councillors. There are eight standing committees of seven members each. Necessarily the work must be done on committee. Of the sixty-nine only twenty-eight sit on any committees at all. Of the twenty-eight, sixteen have one seat each, five hold two seats, five hold three, and two hold four seats. This only accounts for forty-nine seats. The remaining seven or 15 per cent. are held by non-members of the club, and of these seven seats four are held by one member, who is a paid official, and is supposed to give his whole time to the duties of his office. (I wonder if this is the versatile Mr. Shipton.) Well, these figures work out in this way: that of the twenty-eight men, three exercise as much control as fourteen, and one of these three is not a member of the council. I have to thank Mr. Maude for so clearly showing, on the figures, that the C.T.C. is a one-man show. The only touring part of the club is the council, which, with its committees, wanders as far from London as possible in order to avoid having any control over the management. Furthermore, Mr. Maude puts his finger on another Shiptonian indiscretion. That wily gentleman in the Gazette points out that the reformers are a little London clique, and he tries to run London against the provinces. It is very unkind of Mr. Maude to demonstrate that of the eight who sit on three or more committees six hail from London or Kent. These eight hold twenty-seven committee seats out of fifty-six. Seven of them are dead against inquiry. In other words, a little London clique is bluffing the whole club and burking inquiry in the Gazette in the way I have shown.

Just as TRUTH is going to press I have seen an announcement which makes it necessary to add a line or two to modify the last sentence in the foregoing paragraph. The little London clique has been bluffing the whole club and burking inquiry, but that game is now up. By a majority of practically two to one the postal vote of the members of the C.T.C. confirms the resolution of the general meeting appointing a committee of inquiry.

There has been another week's cricket in between showers. The bowlers have had a great time, and Notts is still unbeaten. Essex very nearly spoiled their record. Notts just got home by seven runs. There was one heavy scoring match, and in that game Hants beat Kent. Sprot and Hill played splendidly. If Hill played for a greater county he would bat for England. Hants seem to have come across a really useful bowler in Smoker. To beat Lancashire Worcester needed 170 runs, and H. K. Foster and Bowley made them without the loss of a wicket. Thanks to some forceful batting by Crawford and his excellent bowling, Surrey beat Leicester, and they followed up a hard fight by overwhelming Sussex. Crawford is certain of his place in the England team against South Africa. The finest innings of the week was G. N. Foster's century for Oxford against the bowling of Tarrant, Braund, and Trott. The M.C.C. won. Cambridge cut up very badly against Yorkshire. The bad weather must be putting a strain on the resources of many of the county clubs. The South African bats did not shine against Northampton.

I have received some newspaper cuttings relative to what I wrote about Lister and the Hyde Swimming Club. It appears that Mr. Baxter was not introduced to the Manchester tramways manager, Mr. M'Elroy. But he was introduced—as his friend, Mr. Beattie, stated—to certain officials. Mr. Baxter said he was anxious to find out, for the purposes of his protest, where Lister was employed. He certainly did endeavour to get Lister to leave the Hyde Club. I said Lister was not a member of the tramways club. I should have said he was not an active polo-playing member. These corrections are mere details. They do not touch what I have said. An effort to obtain evidence as to whether the rules had been infringed is one thing; an effort to get a man away from his club is another thing, and entirely contrary to the best interests of sport. If a man does the two things, and incidentally sees a man's employer, he is pretty sure to be told that he is trying to get the employer to bring influence to bear. That is the impression such interference is bound to create, although any such idea may not have been present to his mind.

Mrs. Sterry is playing splendidly at lawn tennis. She has followed up her defeat of the champion, Mrs. Lambert Chambers, at Surbiton, by decisively defeating Miss Sutton at Newcastle. Between the two meetings Mrs. Chambers has had her revenge.

Not the least significant among many signs of the growing popularity of golf is the prominence that is given to the game in any dissertation on the attractions of a holiday resort. Montrose, for instance, has other attractions for visitors—bracing air, a fine beach, picturesque scenery, good angling in neighbouring streams, plenty of places of historic interest within easy reach, and good roads for cycling or driving excursions. But I see that in the illustrated official guide issued by the Town Council the golf course is claimed as the main asset of Montrose as a holiday resort. A high authority has pronounced the course "one of the three best in Scotland," and the local patriots contend that the other two are inferior. A friend who has played there tells me that it really is a splendid course, and, what is more, the fees for visitors are ridiculously small. There are lots of very indifferent English links in which the charge is £1 a week. At Montrose it is only half a crown.

ANTIPON, most successful of remedies for the Cure of Obesity, has received the highest praise from Press and public alike. The Illustrated London News says:—"Antipon not only speedily absorbs and throws out of the system all superabundant adipose matter, but increases strength and vitality." Price 2s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. per bottle, of all chemists, or of The ANTIPON COMPANY, 13, Olmar street, London, S.E.

MAMMON.

Another Week of Liquidation on the Stock Exchange—Trouble Inside and Outside the House—Default of an Old Established Firm of Brokers—The Outlook Still Obscured—Speculation Inadvisable—But a Golden Opportunity for Investors.

THE past week in the Stock Markets was very much like its predecessor. It has been a week of liquidation from all quarters, accompanied by reports—only too well authenticated—of financial difficulties inside and outside the House. To begin with came the announcement of the embarrassment of a leading stockbroker at Glasgow, who had, so it was understood, to make a composition with his creditors of 10s. in the £. This matter left its mark especially upon Grand Trunk and Mexican Railway stocks, which have been exposed to a steady stream of liquidation. Then came reports of the closing of the account of a prominent speculator on the Paris Bourse, which led to heavy sales of mining shares, and particularly Jagersfontein, De Beers, and Rio Tintos. Another vulnerable position was disclosed at Brussels, the failure of a financier involving losses put at £120,000. In London there has been trouble in connection with the affairs of a merchant engaged in the Far Eastern trade, who held some fair lines of Japanese bonds, while most sensational of all was the "hammering" last Friday of a well-known House firm of brokers—Messrs. Starkey, Leveson, and Cooke. Mr. Starkey, the senior partner, was one of the fathers of the House, having entered it in 1865. I have no wish to go into the painful details surrounding this default, although it is probable that more will be heard of the matter before long. So far as members of the Stock Exchange are concerned the losses are not likely to be heavy, though it may prove otherwise with some of the clients.

From the above epitome of events it may be readily understood that the House was not in a very cheerful mood during the past week. Once or twice, when the volume of liquidation appeared to have ceased, feeble efforts were made to rally prices, but each effort was met by fresh selling as some new trouble came to a head. The only department which really displayed resistance was that devoted to Americans, and here, thanks to organised support given by leading Wall Street interests, prices on balance made a very fair showing. The House is still sceptical about any long sustained revival in Yankees, and for good reasons, but members would welcome a rally none the less, as the Stock Exchange badly needs a tonic of some sort. At present things are in as hopeless a condition as could well be imagined. On the one hand, everybody agrees that prices are low—in many cases absurdly low—and that consequently investors have an unique opportunity of picking up bargains. On the other hand, the investor is doing next to nothing; probably he is waiting for a lead, but the people who usually give the lead are unable to see the way themselves, their recent experience having been that each little advance in prices merely encourages fresh liquidation on the part of people who have "taken over" stock to sell at the first favourable opportunity. For the public one thing is clear. It is not the time to speculate with the proceeds of borrowed money, for nobody cares to predict that we have yet quite reached the end of the lane of depression. On the other hand, those with money to lock away need have no fear of entering the market. They have now a chance of buying the best stocks at levels which have not been possible for a generation, and by getting in now they may count with practical certainty upon seeing their stocks showing handsome profits in the course of a few years. Granted that prices may in the immediate future fall a little lower, but even should they do so the decline can only be quite temporary, while it is equally possible that by deferring their purchases much longer the public may have missed the golden opportunity. It is just as unwise to postpone purchasing too long in the hope of getting in at the bottom as it is to delay selling too long in the hope of getting out at the top, and experience has shown that the man who always expects to get in at the basement is the man who usually climbs in at the garret.

Home Rails and the Nominal State of the Market—The Labour Question—Reassuring Letter from Lord Stalbridge—Scotch Rails and the Movement Towards Economy—Is the Ayrshire Standing Out?

Throughout last week the Home Railway Market remained in a very nominal condition. Prices were seldom tested, and when they were it was found in some instances impossible to deal at the ruling quotations, owing to the unwillingness of the jobbers to take stock, which, through the almost complete cessation of the public demand, they were unable to find an outlet for. Chatham Seconds are a case in point. The Official List quotation in the early part of the week was 47-9, whereas the offer of a very small amount of stock promptly caused a collapse to 40-3, the bargain being done at 40. Some critics have been disposed to quarrel with the jobbers for sending out what are termed fictitious prices, and others are of opinion that this practical refusal of jobbers to deal, except by negotiation, raises the whole question of the utility of the jobber as a factor in Stock Exchange business. As one who has frequently had occasion to censure the Home Railway dealers for the obsolete methods to which they adhere in the levying of contangoes, I am the more ready this time to say a word in their defence. If these were simply bad times in the Stock Exchange, there might be room for grumbling about nominal prices and the refusal of the jobber to take his customary risks. But these are not simply bad times; they are not even abnormally bad times; but rather abnormally abnormal bad times. Men whose experience of the City goes back a quarter of a century and more are in agreement that never do they remember such a condition of stagnation. It, therefore, seems hardly the time to lecture the unfortunate jobber. The whole matter of more real dealing prices rests with the public. As soon as business shows any revival, and there is a little ebb and flow about markets, we shall not find the jobbers wanting in the acceptance of the risks attaching to their calling. But, seeing that for years dealings in the Railway Market have been all one way, it is no wonder that the jobber is getting a little sick of the game and shows increasing reluctance to place stock on his books that nobody wants.

During the last few days less has been heard about the labour agitation on the part of the Amalgamated Society. People are beginning to ask themselves whether, after all, they have not been too easily scared, and whether the loud talk about a strike and the bold demands put forward in the National All-grades Programme meant more than a beating of the big drum by the Society, with the object of obtaining recruits. Before long we shall have an opportunity of hearing what the Companies themselves have to say in the matter. If, as it is to be hoped, they continue to stand firm in refusing to allow a third party—representing but a small minority of the total employees—to come between them and their men, the Railway market might easily show more backbone. The terms of the national programme, as I showed in an article that appeared on May 22, are so preposterous that the boards have ground on that score alone for refusing to negotiate with the Society. Useful light upon the position has been obtained by a Nottingham correspondent, who wrote to Lord Stalbridge, Chairman of the London and North-Western, suggesting that stockholders ought not to dispose of their investments until the next half-yearly meetings. Lord Stalbridge has replied endorsing this advice, and adds that he hopes the Chairmen of all the important companies will be able to make satisfactory and reassuring statements.

There has been a little quiet buying of Caledonian and British Deferred from the North, evidently in connection with the movement towards economy being made by the companies jointly. I have not heard that any definite working agreement has yet been arrived at, but proposals for the effecting of economies were put forward by representatives of each company at a meeting held last week in Glasgow, and these proposals will be considered and afterwards discussed at a further meeting. The Glasgow and South-Western sent no representative to last week's meeting. It is sincerely to be hoped, both in its own interests and that of its two larger neighbours, that this does not mean refusal on the part of the Ayrshire to consider a scheme for the abolition of useless competition, because only by the display of a friendly spirit of give and take on the part of the three boards can any satisfactory arrangement be effected. My usual table follows:—

Home Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest.	June 1, 1907.	June 8, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Caledonian 3 p.c. Pref.	80	72⅞	71	70⅞	- ¼
Do. Def.	42½	28⅝	26½	26½	- ¼
Central London	96½	82½	71	71	—
City and S. London	47⅛	39	41	41	—
Furness	69⅞	61⅞	60½	60½	—
Glasgow and South-Western Def.	42⅓	37½	32	31½	- ½
Great Central 1894 Pref.	81⅞	60	59	59	—
Do. "B"	40⅝	32½	25	25	—
Do. "A"	19½	15½	13½	13⅝	+ ⅛
Great Eastern	90⅝	79½	70½	70⅝	+ ⅛
Great Northern Pref.	105	98⅜	97	96	-1
Do. Def.	48⅜	39½	39	38½	- ½
Great Western	144	122⅝	124	122¼	-1½
Hull and Barnsley	60	42½	47½	46½	- ½
Lancashire and Yorkshire	110½	100	101	100	-1
London and Brighton "A"	130⅝	111½	84	83½	- ½
London, Chatham, and Dover	16⅜	13	12⅜	12⅜	- ⅛
Do. 4½ p.c. Arbitration Pref.	99½	85	77	75	-2
Do. do. 2nd Pref.	64½	48	48	41½	-6½
London and North-Western	163½	147½	143½	141½	-1½
London and South-Western Def.	57½	44⅜	47	45½	-1½
Metropolitan Consolidated	89½	59	40½	38	-2½
Metropolitan District	37½	18⅜	11	10	-1
Midland 2½ p.c. Pref.	70⅜	64	64	64½	+ ½
Do. Def.	74⅜	62½	61½	60½	- ½
North British 3 p.c. Pref.	78⅜	72⅜	68½	68½	- ½
Do. Def.	47½	38⅜	32½	32½	- ½
North-Eastern Consolidated	147½	134⅜	137¼	137	- ¼
North Staffordshire	105⅜	96⅜	96	95	-1
South-Eastern "A"	55⅛	44⅛	38	34⅛	-3⅛

Revival in Americans—Mr. Keene Understood to Have Been Employed to "Bull" the Market—Review of the Situation—Too Early to Take Down the Caution Signal.

The American market last week afforded evidence that at last some interests had awakened to the desirability of stopping the rot, and with the publicity that is given to all the plans of the New York "bosses" by the Yankee journalist, whether the latter is in the know or is merely guessing, London has been informed that Mr. James R. Keene has been employed by manipulative interests to bring about a rally. From the manner in which prices have moved during the last few days the story sounds at least plausible. There has been, since the demoralisation that characterised the opening of the week, a resistance about the market that has been lacking for a long time, and on balance, as the following table shows, quotations have made some headway:—

Americans.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	June 1, 1907.	June 8, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Atchison	114⅛	89	90⅝	90⅞	+ ¼
Do. 5 per Cent. Pref.	109½	101	97	96⅞	- ⅛
Baltimore and Ohio	129½	109⅞	96⅜	96⅜	—
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	101½	93⅜	91	91	—
Chesapeake and Ohio	68⅜	54	35⅞	36½	+ ⅝
Chicago, Milwaukee	204½	152½	130	130½	+ ½
Denver and Rio Grande	52½	38⅜	25⅞	26	+ ¼
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	93⅞	85⅞	72	73	+1
Erie	52½	40	21½	22½	+ ⅜
Do. 4 p.c. First Pref.	85½	77	57½	58	+ ⅜
Do. 4 p.c. Second Pref.	77	65⅜	36	37	+1
Illinois Central	188⅜	171	141	141	—
Louisville	160⅜	143⅞	114	115½	+1½
Missouri, Kansas	45⅞	31⅞	32⅜	33⅜	+1⅜
New York Central	150½	130⅜	113	114	+1
N. Y. Ontario and Western	57⅜	45½	33½	36½	+3
Norfolk and Western	100⅞	87½	74½	76	+1½
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	96½	91½	86	86	—
Northern Pacific	236	190½	126½	128	+1½
Pennsylvania ($50)	75⅞	63¼	61⅜	62	+ ⅜
Reading ($50)	85⅜	59⅞	51⅜	53½	+1⅜
Southern	43⅜	33	18⅜	19½	+1½
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	106	97	59½	61	+1½
Southern Pacific	99⅞	64⅜	78	79	+1
Union Pacific	203	144⅜	136⅛	138½	+1⅞
U.S. Steel	52½	33⅞	33⅜	34½	+ ⅞
Do. 7 p.c. Pref.	117	102⅜	100	100½	+ ½

How to Operate in Stocks Successfully.—See Halford's Adviser (post free).—Palmerston House, London, E.C. Established 1869. Telegrams: "Monitor, London."

Mr. James Keene is known to act for powerful people in Wall Street, including the Standard Oil party, and it is not surprising if the leading capitalists are getting somewhat concerned at the way things are going, and are acting in concert to put the peg in, and even to woo the American public once again. There were one or two influences which were made good use of to foster the recovery. The most potent was the rumour that the Cabinet at Washington had been considering the disclosures made at the recent Inter-State Commerce Commission inquiry into the Union Pacific group of companies, and that the weight of opinion was opposed to any extreme measures being taken against Mr. Harriman on account of the bad effect that such action would probably have on the general financial and industrial situation. There is something peculiarly American about the idea of letting a man off because not to do so might disturb the stock market, but the story was pretty widely believed, and was made the basis for some extensive buying of Pacific stocks. Moreover, it gave rise to another curious rumour to the effect that a well-known American financial firm that recently dissolved partnership had been actuated only by the fear of a Government overhaul of its books, and that should the threatened proceedings against Mr. Harriman be quashed, the reappearance of the firm might shortly be announced. It has since been officially intimated that the Federal Government does not intend to prosecute Mr. Harriman.

The crop news, on the whole, was claimed as helping the argument for the "bulls." This can only be conceded in a negative sense, namely, that the latest information about wheat and cotton is of a less disastrous character than the market had expected, for indications up to the present foreshadow a serious shortage in the yield of both staples. The market was on safer ground in pointing to the continuance of fine railroad gross earnings, though even on this point Wall Street's concern is not so much with the present as the future, having regard to the certainty of a much smaller harvest, and the effect it is likely to have on the general trade of the country, which has already showed incipient signs of slowing down. With the enormous rise in working expenses that has characterised revenue statements since the beginning of the current year everybody is now familiar. Against this it may be urged that prices have already undergone so great a shrinkage that moderate reductions in dividends have in many cases been allowed for. This argument is sound so far as it goes, but there are too many unfavourable features about the financial situation for this to have free play. Besides the important effect which poor crops must exercise later on upon railway traffics, the effect upon the money market may be even more serious. If the United States suffers a serious shortage in her volume of cotton and grain exports next autumn, she may find it an awkward matter to meet the short-term obligations that will be commencing to mature in Europe. At the present time the monetary situation in New York is by no means reassuring. The surplus reserves of the associated banks amount to less than $6,000,000, which is the lowest figure at this date for twenty years, except in 1903 and 1890. Further, the New York exchange continues at a level which makes further gold exports to Europe probable. Already, since May 27, between ten and eleven million dollars has been secured for Paris, and the estimate is that the total will be raised to fifteen millions before the demand is satisfied.

Again, it is surely expecting too much to suggest that the finance houses in New York have yet recovered from the effect of the enormous output of new securities issued during the last five months. Since Mr. Hill's famous prediction last autumn that the railroads would need $1,000,000,000 per annum from the money market, the market has been doing its best to live up to such a nice comfortable figure. Within the past five months the railroads have put on the market no less than $792,000,000 in new securities, of which $326,000,000 is stock, $285,000,000 short term notes, and $180,000,000 bonds. In addition, industrial companies have put out $120,400,000 in new securities, consisting of $63,000,000

(Continued on page 1471.)

· TRUTH ·

TRAVEL SUPPLEMENT.—No. 2.

No. 1,589. WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12, 1907.

THE GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY.

THE EASTERN COUNTIES.

LONDONERS of the present generation are far more alive than their predecessors to the attractions of the beautiful country which lies close to their doors. Railway enterprise is chiefly responsible for this, and no railway company has done more than the Great Eastern to provide London with ready access both to the sea and to an extensive and beautiful inland district. Nor is the benefit confined to London alone. Norfolk and Suffolk are as close to the manufacturing centres as to the Metropolis, and the Great Eastern system is, by its through express service to Lincoln, Doncaster, and York, now so closely linked with towns in the west and north of England that the journey from any of the great cities of the Midlands, Yorkshire, or Lancashire to Cromer, Yarmouth, or any point in East Anglia is as swift and comfortable as up-to-date railway enterprise can make it.

The country which the Great Eastern Railway has thus opened up was previously more unfamiliar to the majority of Englishmen than any lying within an equal distance of London. East Anglia—not being on the high road to anywhere in particular—has lain for centuries off the main current of national life, and to this fact it owes, with its old-world towns and its secluded rural districts, much of its charm as a holiday resort. But it is in many respects a most beautiful country, possessing many unique features, notably in its towns, its coast, the estuaries of its rivers and that splendid series of lakes—the Norfolk Broads. The best proof of its natural beauties is to be seen in the fact that it is the home of almost the whole of the classical school of English landscape painters—that is to say, of Gainsborough, of Constable, and of the Cromes—and every one who has in him the appreciation of English rural scenery ought to see for himself the country in which they worked.

A FEW BEAUTY SPOTS.

To notice only a few characteristic spots, there is the region of North Essex, known as Constable's Country, of which Dedham Vale and Dedham Village are the centre. It is best reached from COLCHESTER. A little further north on the borders of Essex and Suffolk is the typical English scenery which Gainsborough made famous, and which may be explored, either by road or by excursions up the Orwell, from FELIXSTOWE. The flat region of Suffolk and Norfolk, adjoining the sea-coast and extending northwards to the end of the BROADS, affords a very good counterpart of the scenery of Holland, on the other side of the North Sea, with its sluggish streams, and lazy windmills, its stretches of richly-coloured marsh and spacious common, and its seductive air of somnolent repose. For this region, ALDEBURGH and SOUTHWOLD, LOWESTOFT and YARMOUTH are the towns which will offer the traveller their hospitality. Finally, there is the now world-famous CROMER district, including not only Cromer itself, but SHERINGHAM, and a whole group of rising watering-places—a land of hill and dale, pinewood and heather, cornfields and wild flowers, rising high above the sea, and appealing to every taste and instinct of holiday-making humanity.

Nor should the famous inland towns of the Great Eastern line be forgotten. First and foremost stands CAMBRIDGE, with architectural and historical features unrivalled in England, unless at Oxford, and within an easy day's excursion of London; then ELY, with its beautiful Cathedral, and the fen country around it, rich in local colour and interest; and NORWICH, with another fine cathedral, and a great deal more worth seeing, as every visitor to the Broads should know. PETERBOROUGH, LINCOLN, and YORK, offering further objects of interest to all who appreciate mediæval towns and Gothic architecture, are also served by the Great Eastern Railway. Farther east there are BURY ST. EDMUNDS and IPSWICH, stored, like Yarmouth, with memories of Charles Dickens.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS, it may be mentioned in passing, will be specially deserving of a visit this year, during the second week in July, when it is holding a great historical Pageant, illustrative of its mediæval life. An immense amount of labour, skill, and forethought is being bestowed on this undertaking, and the result cannot fail to be most interesting and beautiful. From July 8 to 13, when the Pageant will be on, special cheap fares will be offered by the G.E.R. to visitors, not only from London, but from all parts of East Anglia.

SUBURBAN ESSEX.

Before going further, it should be pointed out that it is not merely as a holiday-resort that the county, the gate to which lies at Liverpool Street Station, deserves the consideration of Londoners. In these days every place within an hour's rail of London, and even further than that, is a possible residential district for people who are tied to town by their daily business. The merits of Essex from this point of view have been strangely overlooked by those who are able to live in the outer suburban area. This is no doubt due to a vague impression that Essex is a flat and uninteresting county. There cannot be a greater delusion, as any one may discover for himself by an hour or two's walking or cycling almost anywhere beyond the fifth or sixth milestones from Liverpool Street. If Essex cannot offer the Londoner as lofty a residential site as the Surrey Hills, it has Epping Forest, the finest woodland district in the Home Counties, and all the best of the Forest suburbs lie within about half-an-hour of the City, viâ the G.E.R.—some of them much less. Again, it has a seaside suburban district growing up along the estuary of the Thames, in the neighbourhood of Southend, and others are likely to grow up on the Crouch and the Blackwater as the advantages of that district are better known. More will be said on that point presently. There are also charming rural districts in Southern Essex well within the limits of the daily journey to and from town.

Lastly, Essex has the great advantage that land is cheap and rents low, while the train service is good and also cheap. In no respect is the progressive spirit which the Great Eastern management has developed of late years more strikingly shown than in the development of its suburban train services. For this reason Liverpool Street has now the largest passenger traffic of any London terminus, and yet room for its further growth. With all this to recommend it, Essex is certain to grow more and more in favour with Londoners who live out of town.

EAST COAST CHARACTERISTICS.

Considered purely from the holiday-maker's point of view, it is, of course, by their long stretch of coast line that the Eastern Counties make their widest appeal to the population of our towns. It is a coast of infinite variety, each stretch having beauties of its own, from those of the marshy lands around the mouths of the Thames and the Essex rivers, to those of the splendid range of Norfolk cliffs which runs from Mundesley to Sheringham. But what, perhaps, distinguishes it above all other characteristics is the tonic, health-giving virtue of its air. There are many people who declare that the seaside does not agree with them, on no better evidence than their experience of the South Coast, possibly in places that are notoriously relaxing. Let them turn their attention to the East, and it is ten to one that they will find, to their great profit and pleasure, that this is the antidote they have been seeking. And in giving this advice it must be pointed out that, while the sea and the sea-breezes are the same at every point, there are considerable varieties of climate on the East Coast. Clacton and Felixstowe, for instance, face almost due south; Yarmouth and Lowestoft, due east; Cromer and Sheringham almost due north. The range of average temperature consequently varies considerably. But at all points there is the same clear, invigorating, ozone-laden air, for all the slackness and ailments bred of town life probably the best restorative that Nature produces; and the same bountiful supply of sunshine, for there are places on the East Coast which boast of almost the highest sunshine records in the Kingdom, and sunshine has probably as much to do with health as any other remedy in Nature's medicine-chest.

There is one other indispensable feature without which no coast resort can make good its claims upon the holiday-maker, that is, the facility for sea-bathing. It is no exaggeration to say that in this respect the East Coast defies competition. This is chiefly due to the fact that nearly everywhere there is a sandy bottom, and for the most part a fairly level one. Shingle, which so many bathers object to—particularly ladies—is rare, and nowhere very extensive. Bathers are well looked after, and bathing tents and facilities for family bathing —now happily growing more and more in request— are a conspicuous feature almost everywhere.

The same reasons which make the East Coast so attractive to bathers make it a paradise for children. What children want at the seaside is a spacious beach with plenty of sand. What their parents want is that these advantages shall be supplemented by the absence of all danger, and the impossibility of getting into mischief, so that youngsters of all ages may be turned loose from morning to night, with the certainty of being able to amuse themselves while fattening on the sea air and browning in the sunshine, and without any need for their elders to be anxious either about their safety or their enjoyment. For all these ends the East Coast is adapted to perfection.

A Few Seaside Towns.

Several of the spots at which the general advantages of this coast may be most conveniently enjoyed have been already referred to in the foregoing remarks. But a few others may be briefly mentioned for the benefit of those who do not know the whole district. One begins, naturally, with Clacton-on-Sea, as the point most readily accessible from London. In the course of thirty years Clacton has grown into one of the most flourishing of coast holiday resorts—thanks largely to a speedy train service and facilities for cheap travelling, and to-day it affords all the customary attractions of seaside life, with plentiful hotel and lodging-house accommodation, to suit all purses. North of it, on the Essex coast, lies a group of smaller towns, appealing to those who like a quiet holiday, combined with first-rate bathing, boating, and golf—Walton-on-the-Naze, its rising neighbour Frinton-on-Sea, and Dovercourt. The last-mentioned resort, standing just outside Harwich Harbour, is specially favoured with the North Sea breezes, while sharing the advantages of Harwich as a yachting centre, and forming a convenient spot for excursions up the Orwell.

Felixstowe has made rapid strides in popular favour of late years, owing largely to its splendid sands and bathing, its sheltered situation, and the beautiful Suffolk country behind it, which has already been mentioned. The G.E.R. has now brought it within 1 hour 50 minutes of London. The town offers plentiful accommodation for all classes of comers, and the Felix Hotel may be specially recommended to those who find that hotel life under the most comfortable modern conditions adds materially to the enjoyment of a holiday. Northwards from Felixstowe lie Aldeburgh and Southwold, already referred to, and then Lowestoft, where the attractions of an up-to-date watering-place are combined with the local life and colour of a thriving fishing port, not to mention one of the highest sunshine records on the East Coast. Lowestoft, again, is well served by the G.E.R., and is also well supplied with hotels, among which the "Royal" deserves special mention. Of its neighbour, Yarmouth, it is scarcely necessary to make more than a passing mention, for few towns on the English coast are better known or have been more written about. But it should not be forgotten that both Yarmouth and Lowestoft have in late years acquired a new attraction as starting-points for the Broads, or headquarters from which that region may be explored. By a G.E.R. non-stop express Yarmouth is now 2½ hours from Liverpool Street, and by fast trains Lowestoft is only six minutes longer; and breakfast cars are provided on morning up-trains and dining cars on the afternoon down-trains every week-day.

Lastly, there is the beautiful group of watering-places on either side of Cromer, to which a new direct railway route from London has now been opened up by recent extensions of the G.E.R. The branch line to Sheringham, opened last year, now makes the Great Eastern the shortest route to that town, and the new Norfolk Coast Expresses, which will commence running in July, will perform the journey in 3 hours and 13 minutes, besides giving the best modern facilities for comfortable travelling in the shape of corridor trains and restaurant cars. Cromer, of course, shares in these advantages, as well as West Runton, where there is a station served by the new Sheringham branch; and the completion of the other new branch on the east side of Cromer extends them to Mundesley, Trimingham, and Overstrand. Hunstanton, which lies at the mouth of the Wash, is reached by the western main line of the G.E.R., through Cambridge. It is a rapidly growing place, with many advantages, of which some particulars will be found below in connection with the Great Eastern hotel service.

Yachting on the Essex Coast.

To the yachtsman the East Coast offers almost unrivalled attractions, especially him who is ordinarily tied to London. Within a couple of hours of departure from his London office the boating man may experience the keenest delight it is given him to know, the delight that comes to him when, moorings cast off, his hand on the tiller, he hears the musical ripple of water on the bows as his boat gathers way. To Harwich, Brightlingsea, and Burnham-on-Crouch the Great Eastern has just added a new yachting station by the opening of a pier and railway station at Tollesbury. This will increase the attractions of the Blackwater to yachting folk, for the possibility thereby afforded of being able to land or embark at all states of the tide without the necessity of donning seaboots is bound to be warmly appreciated. West Mersea, yet another yachting centre, is reached viâ Colchester by a service of motor omnibuses, which are run by the Great Eastern Railway in connection with their principal up and down trains. The fine broad estuaries of the Crouch and the Roach, the Colne and the Blackwater, and the Orwell must always appeal irresistibly to the yachtsman. The days, winter or summer, when it is impossible to sail, are comparatively few. Even when there is half a gale blowing outside it is possible to sail in perfect comfort up the broad reaches of the tidal waters. Racing is continuous through the summer, and at the regattas all the well-known yachts are to be seen. Yet it is not only to the owner of the smart racing yacht that the advantages of the well-protected Essex coast appeal. There is at every one of the spots mentioned a large and increasing water population, who have discovered that yachting is not necessarily a rich man's pastime. When it is remembered that for about £100 it is possible to acquire a boat which will comfortably accommodate from two to four persons living aboard, and that the cost of upkeep is inconsiderable, the advantage of the boat over the country cottage for week-end and holiday purposes is manifest. If, for example, such a boat is moored at Burnham-on-Crouch, the week-end railway ticket costs only 3s. 6d., and the other yachting centres are equally well served as regards cheap fares and fast trains.

The Norfolk Broads.

It is not only to the yachtsman that the G.E.R. offers unlimited opportunities for the enjoyment of his favourite sport. Equal advantages for inland sailing, rowing, fishing, and shooting are offered in the wide expanse of the Broads—and also for cycling, for it is a point not hitherto noticed, but deserving of attention, that the Broads, like the greater part of the Eastern Counties, lie in an ideal cyclist's country. A whole literature has grown up round the Norfolk Broads, and at this time of day there is no occasion to enlarge on their characteristic features, beyond saying that nowhere in the world can the delights of an open-air existence under novel conditions and health-giving surroundings be enjoyed to more perfection than in a week or two's cruise on a Norfolk wherry—as lazy a life as you choose to make it, and yet with as much active exercise as you care to extract from rowing and "quanting," and pedestrian or cycle excursions to the innumerable places of interest in the neighbourhood. What is of more importance here is to point out, whether to those who already know the country or to those who propose to explore it for the first time, that the Broads have the advantage of the excellent train service to Yarmouth, Lowestoft, and Wroxham from Liverpool-street, and also of cheap week-end tickets and holiday season tickets.

Golf on the East Coast.

Golfers are another class of sportsmen for whom the Great Eastern Railway caters magnificently; in fact, nowhere in England are there to be found a larger number of typical seaside courses, offering all the features that the keen golfer most desires. In proof of this it is sufficient to say that there are golf links at nearly all the coast towns mentioned above, and within easy reach of the few that have not clubs of their own. To particularise as to their respective merits would be not only invidious, but futile, because every golfer has his own opinion of the merits and demerits of a course, and likes to form his opinion for himself.

Special Travelling Facilities.

Incidentally, many of the advantages which the Great Eastern Railway Company offers to its passengers have been mentioned in the course of the foregoing remarks, but there are a few points deserving more particular mention. First of all it should be remembered that there are Restaurant Cars on the express trains each way between London and the principal points beyond Ipswich, on the one main line, or from Cambridge to Hunstanton on the other, as well as on the through trains between the Eastern Counties and the Midlands and the North. Clacton-on-Sea is specially favoured with a Supper Car Train on Saturday nights, leaving Liverpool-street at 12.3 a.m. and reaching Clacton at 1.44 a.m. The new Norfolk Coast Expresses to Cromer and the adjoining district, which will be put on next month, will be corridor vestibuled trains, fully equipped with every requirement for comfortable travel.

Another convenience for tourists worth noting is the motor omnibuses, with which the G.E.R. have during the past two years been experimenting as feeders to the railway from outlying villages. The fares by these 'buses are arranged on popular lines, and some of the vehicles are provided with lockers for the conveyance of light parcels, etc. The principal points between which the motor 'buses are run are Lowestoft and Southwold; Norwich, Loddon, and Beccles; Ipswich and Shotley, on the estuary of the Stour; Colchester and West Mersea (already referred to as a yachting centre); Chelmsford and the outlying villages of Danbury, Writtle, and Great Waltham.

Attention should also be directed to the Great Eastern system of Seaside Periodical Tickets. These tickets are issued from Liverpool Street for periods ranging from a week to a year, and owing to the lowness of the rates they may be regarded as one of the most attractive features of the Great Eastern line, appealing specially to those who desire a spell of temporary residence at the seaside without actually taking a holiday. The price, of course, varies with the period and also according as the tickets are or are not available at intermediate stations, but the lowest rate is, roughly, on the basis of "ten miles a penny." Another novelty to be noted has recently been introduced by the G.E.R. management in the shape of "Holiday Season Tickets" available for a given period within certain specified districts. This enables the passenger to visit at will and as often as he pleases certain parts of the district at cheap rates.

It should also be mentioned that another recent innovation of the G.E.R. management is the issue of cheap week-end tickets, on the basis of a fare and a quarter for the double journey, between any two stations on the line, and also between Great Eastern stations and those on the lines of the neighbouring companies.

Tickets for Circular Tours, starting from Liverpool-street, can be obtained so as to cover all the most interesting and attractive spots on the Great Eastern system, and by applying in advance, the tourist can have these made up precisely as he wishes.

The Harwich Route to the Continent.

Hitherto we have been looking at the services which the Great Eastern Railway has performed in opening up the Eastern Counties to holiday-seekers from London and other great towns. There remains another most important branch of the Company's business—the Continental traffic viâ Harwich. In this direction the Great Eastern Company has practically created a new international highway, improved as it has been by the construction of a quay, at the Hook of Holland, on the right bank of the New Waterway, about a mile and a half from its entrance into the sea. The quay is provided with waiting rooms, refreshment rooms, and every other requisite for a first-class passenger traffic, the station and quay being lit at night by electricity. By the opening of the Harwich-Hook-of-Holland route the distance between London and Berlin was considerably reduced, and is now the shortest and practically a straight line of communication between the two capitals. The service to other towns is accelerated proportionately, and this route gives the most direct access to Holland, North and South Germany, and Scandinavia. The London-Harwich-Hook-of-Holland corridor vestibuled trains have accommodation for about 400 passengers. The carriages are provided with lavatory accommodation, built with side corridors, or, in the case of the Restaurant Cars, with centre corridor, and the whole of them are connected by gangways, by means of which access can be had to all parts of the train. They are electrically lighted, and in winter heated by steam. The Harwich route is even more serviceable to the North of England than to London, since it enables travellers from the Midlands and the North, whether on business or pleasure, to reach the Continent without first coming to London, thereby saving both time and money. On this service also corridor vestibuled trains, with dining and breakfast cars, lighted by electricity, are run between York and Harwich, and there are through corridor carriages from and to Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and Leicester which run alongside the steamers. From Harwich, again, there is an excellent and quick service of steamers to Antwerp, bringing the North of England into direct communication with that port, and all the Continental districts which are reached from it. There is also a service between Harwich and Esbjerg (on the West coast of Denmark) three times a week by the Danish Royal Mail steamers of the Forenede Line of Copenhagen, and between Harwich and Hamburg twice weekly by the steamers of the General Steam Navigation Company.

The Great Eastern Company have built a quay at Parkeston, with hotel and spacious waiting and refreshment rooms, which are connected with the landing stage by a covered way; and to meet the demands of the increasing Continental traffic they are extending the quay so as to provide three additional berths. The Company own a magnificent fleet of steamers, admirably adapted to the vicissitudes of the North Sea transit. They sail under the British flag, are fitted with the most modern accommodation for passengers, including dining saloons, separate sleeping cabins, smoking and ladies' saloons, and are lighted by electricity. A special feature is the large number of private cabins for two passengers. The catering on the steamers and trains is under the direct control of the Company's Hotel manager, and the highest standard of excellence is maintained throughout. A turbine steamer with all the latest improvements for the accommodation and comfort of passengers is now under construction for the Hook of Holland service, and is expected to be ready for next year's holiday traffic.

Everything has been done in the arrangement of the train service on the Continental side to develop the advantages of the Harwich route, whether for purposes of business or pleasure. There are two express trains which run in connection with the steamers from the Hook of Holland, with through carriages and restaurant cars, amongst other important towns to Berlin, etc., in the North, and to Cologne and Bâle in the South, also an express train to The Hague and Amsterdam.

Thus the passenger can leave London (Liverpool Street Station) at 8.30 p.m., or Manchester in the afternoon, dine in the train before reaching Parkeston Quay, have a good night's rest on the steamer, and walk from steamer to the train under a covered way, and arrive in Berlin at 6.30 the next evening, Cologne at midday, and Bâle in the evening, having breakfasted and lunched in the train en route. The Hook of Holland service to Holland is the quickest, Rotterdam being only 9½ hours, The Hague 10 hours, and Amsterdam 11 hours from London; and this has been recognised by the Postmaster-General, the mails being sent by this route to these and other Dutch towns. The actual sea passage between Harwich and the Hook occupies on the average six and a half hours. To the mouth of the Scheldt, en route for Antwerp, the passage is only half an hour longer.

Holland via The Hook.

A question which may well suggest itself to any one meditating a Continental holiday viâ Harwich is, why go beyond Holland? It is an ideal country for the man from London, or Manchester, or any other great modern town, who desires to see, with the least effort, something entirely different from the scenes of his everyday existence. It is possible everywhere to keep expenses within 12s. a day, and in the less frequented parts a careful tourist may do it on 7s. And it may be added, in consideration for the large number of Englishmen who do not know a word of Dutch, that English-speaking waiters are to be found in all the principal hotels, and French is generally understood where English is not. The best way to do the country thoroughly and keep travelling expenses within reasonable limits is to take one or other of the Great Eastern circular tickets, which can easily be obtained so as to embrace the principal points of interest, including The Hague and Scheveningen, Leyden, Haarlem, Dordrecht, Delft, Amsterdam, and the Zuyder Zee coast and North Holland.

For the sake of the tourist whose taste would lead him to combine the amenities of modern life with the old-world fascinations of Holland, special attention should be directed to Scheveningen (the Dutch Brighton) now among the most fashionable of Continental seaside resorts. A steam tramway takes you in a quarter of an hour to the Hague, and there is ready railway communication with all the principal points of interest in Holland. The hotel accommodation is not only first-rate, but exceptionally moderate in price.

The Hague itself is a delightful place for a short holiday, and, with its ready access to Scheveningen, practically a seaside town. It is only half an hour's run by rail from Leyden, and a capital place from which to make canal excursions through some of the most characteristic scenery of Holland.

North Germany and the Harz Mountains.

Another delightful country to which the Great Eastern Railway may introduce the British tourist lies along the main line from the Hook to Berlin, and within a short journey to the north and south of it. It is rather a strange thing that while Britons flock in thousands every year to the Rhine country, the Black Forest, Bavaria, and even the Austrian Tyrol, comparatively few have ever explored the beautiful and interesting Northern German country so much nearer home. In the extreme North are the Hanseatic towns, every one of them as well worth seeing as the better-known German cities of the South, the most famous being Hamburg, Bremen, and Lubeck. On the direct route to Berlin lies Hanover, and a few miles off it Brunswick, full of many quaint and charming features; and Hildesheim, which is quite one of the most picturesque and interesting of the ancient cities of Germany. It is easy to pause at this group of towns en route for Berlin; but even better to stop at this point altogether, and make it a starting-place for a long and delightful holiday in the Harz district, quite off the ordinary beat of the British tripper. The Great Eastern Railway offers special facilities for holidays in the Harz Mountains by various circular tours from London, the most extensive of which only costs a trifle over £7, or £4 15s. 11d. second class.

In general character the Harz Mountains are a good deal like the Black Forest. The mountains themselves do not rise to very ambitious heights, but quite high enough to afford all the exercise that is required by those who do not aspire to the difficulties of snow peaks and glaciers. There is easy railway communication between the chief points of interest, and, like the Black Forest and the Vosges, the Harz Mountains are under the protection of a "Club," which looks after the roads and mountain paths and the convenience of tourists generally. Harzburg, which is quickly reached by rail from Hanover, is a good starting-point, and from here the famous summit of the Brocken will make a very satisfying day's excursion on foot, or more expeditiously by rail. In order to interview the famous "Spectre"—if he happens to be showing himself, which is not always the case—it is necessary to spend the night at the inn on the mountain and see the sun rise. One of the most famous beauty spots of the Harz Mountains is the Bodethal, which is best done from Thale, where there is abundant hotel accommodation. It may be added that from any point in the Harz district it is easy to get on to Magdeburg, Berlin, Leipsic, or Dresden, if the tourist is disposed to see something of modern Germany under very different aspects. The Great Eastern will arrange it all for you.

In passing, a word should be said of the attractions offered to tourists in the Thuringian Mountains, which lie just to the south of the Harz, and are very similar in character. Their beauties deserve to be better known than they are by Englishmen. A G.E.R. circular ticket will enable the tourist to combine this district with the Harz Mountains; but if he goes to it direct from London, viâ Harwich, he will do best to make direct for Eisenach, from which a delightful tour of the Thüringerwald may be made. Other points not to be overlooked are Oberhof, Friedrichroda, and Bad Liebenstein.

The Scandinavian Countries.

The merit of the Harwich and Hook of Holland route is the facility which it offers for reaching the North of Europe, and enjoying the famous scenic beauties of Norway, with the minimum of sea travelling. Starting for Norway by this route, the traveller will cross the North Sea at its narrowest point, between Harwich and the Hook, and thereafter he will practically have done with sea-travelling, for the passage of the Great Belt and the Sound is an insignificant business—not much more serious than crossing to the Isle of Wight. At 5 p.m.

of the same evening he will be at Hamburg, where he can halt, if he pleases, or continue his northward journey at once, and be at Copenhagen early next morning. From Copenhagen it will be a single day's journey to Christiania; and from Christiania there is rail to Trondhjem, if the tourist can go so far north.

What should certainly be done, if possible, is to extend the tour into Sweden. Stockholm—"the Venice of the North"—is by rail about the same distance as Christiania from Copenhagen, but if the tourist desires to do the two countries in one trip, a circular ticket will enable him to cross from Christiania to Stockholm and return thence to Copenhagen. The cost of a ticket from Liverpool Street covering all the points above-mentioned is less than £16 first class, and just over £10 second. A circular tour as far as Copenhagen can be obtained for £9 5s. 6d. first class, or £6 second.

The Rhine and South Germany.

By the Harwich Hook of Holland route Cologne is now reached at mid-day, and at Cologne there are railway connections for all points on the Rhine and its tributary valleys, as well as the Black Forest, and all parts of South Germany. For doing the Rhine itself, the best plan, if time permits, will of course be to take the Rhine steamer from Cologne, breaking the journey as far as possible at the various famous beauty spots. Coblence, reached from Cologne either by steamer or rail, is the starting-point for excursions up the valley of the Moselle, as picturesque in its way as the Rhine itself; and also for the valley of the Ahr, and that weird and romantic district, the Volcanic Eifel. Another delightful valley, little known except to visitors to the waters of Ems, is that of the Lahn, which may be entered from Niederlahnstein, and from here also rail may be taken to Wiesbaden, via Mosbach, which is also the junction for Frankfort and Homburg. From Bingerbrück the valley of the Nahr may be explored, leading into the beautiful mountain region of the Palatinate, for which Kreuznach is a convenient centre. Higher up the Rhine, and best reached by train from Mayence, there is the picturesque valley of the Neckar, with Heidelberg as its centre; and further south from here the railway skirts the Black Forest, for which Freiburg will be the most convenient starting-point. The whole or any portion of the points thus briefly indicated, as well as Strasburg and the "blue Alsatian mountains" on the other side of the Rhine, can be included in the circular tickets of the Great Eastern Company viâ Harwich and the Hook of Holland.

Switzerland via Harwich.

On the attractions of Switzerland for the holiday-maker it is unnecessary to dwell here. Every year they appeal to a larger number of people both in this and other countries, and every year the Swiss themselves, by the opening of new hotels, the extension of mountain and other railways, and in every arrangement that can be made for the convenience of foreign visitors, do more and more to justify the reputation of their country as "the playground of Europe." What we are concerned with specially at present is to show what the Great Eastern Company has done to bring all parts of Switzerland within easy reach of the British tourist.

By the Harwich route, Switzerland is reached viâ Bale, by an extension of the Rhine and Black Forest tours mentioned above, which may be combined with it, if desired, at the convenience of the traveller. He has a choice of two routes (1) by the Hook of Holland, Cologne, and the Rhine, (2) by Antwerp and Brussels. By the former route he travels straight through from the Hook, by a corridor train, with restaurant cars attached, reaching Bâle the same evening.

Bâle is, of course, a natural starting-point for tours through all parts of Switzerland, and from it a variety of attractive and inexpensive tours can be booked through the Great Eastern Railway. It is about equi-distant from Lake Constance and the Falls of the Rhine at Schaffhausen, from the Lakes of Lucerne and Zurich, and from Berne, and a more extended tour will take the traveller to the Lake of Geneva and the Rhone Valley, or eastward to the Engadine. To one visiting Switzerland for the first time one might suggest, for a survey of the most characteristic and familiar portions of Swiss scenery, a circular tour from Bâle, by way of Berne, and thence into the magnificent mountains of the Bernese Oberland, proceeding by Thun and its Lake to Interlaken, whence Grindelwald and all the finest mountains, glaciers, and passes of the Oberland are easily reached; thence by the Lake of Brienz to Meiringen; and from there to Lucerne, with the famous attractions of its Lake, the Rigi, and Mount Pilatus; and so back again to Bâle, or vice versâ.

Season tickets can be obtained available for longer or shorter periods over most of the Swiss railway lines, and by the lake steamers. Finally, to show how the pockets of travellers, not to mention their convenience in other respects, are studied by the G.E.R., it may be mentioned that a tour from London to Bâle by the Harwich route, including, among other points, Cologne, the Rhine country, Heidelberg, and Freiburg on the one journey, and Strasburg, Luxemburg, Brussels, and Antwerp on the other, costs only £7 9s. 9d. first class, or £4 16s. 9d. second.

Belgium via Antwerp.

By comparison with Holland, Belgium is a well-known country to the English tourist—so well known that any description of its features would be superfluous. But the comfort of the Great Eastern service should tempt many to make its acquaintance if they have not already done so. Leaving Liverpool Street at 8.40 p.m., the traveller can breakfast next morning in the calm waters of the Scheldt, within sight of the cathedral tower of Antwerp. In the other direction, a table d'hôte dinner is served on leaving Antwerp while the steamer is proceeding down the Scheldt. It may here be mentioned that there is a comfortable and convenient route this way to the Rhine, and if the passenger is going on in that direction he finds the train for Cologne waiting for him on the quay beside his steamer. If he is staying in Belgium, he finds in Antwerp itself a mine of objects of historical, architectural, and artistic interest, and is in ready communication with every other part of Belgium. The attractions of Brussels, as a "Paris in miniature," mark it down as a natural stopping-place, as well as a starting-point for excursions to Waterloo and the old Flemish cities, Oudenarde, Ghent, Bruges, Courtrai, and Tournai.

The holiday-maker, however, who goes to Belgium in these days is almost certain to be bound for The Ardennes, containing some of the finest wild forest and river scenery in Western Europe, and there is no better place for a holiday at once enjoyable, health-giving, and cheap. The district is approached from Namur, about an hour's journey from Brussels on the main line to Luxemburg. From this point a diversity of routes is open to the tourist, of which the most picturesque and the most frequented runs by the valley of the Meuse to Dinant, perhaps the best starting-point for short excursions into the finest parts of the Ardennes, notably the beautiful valley of the Lesse. One of the most famous points in the Ardennes is, of course, the Grottoes of Han (reached from Rochefort), the underground journey through which affords a weird experience never to be forgotten. If time permits, an excursion into the Luxemburg Ardennes, beyond the Belgian frontier, with its wild romantic valleys, walled in by high rocks and winding through forests, is highly desirable in order to obtain a complete idea of the whole of this beautiful district.

Not the least of the attractions of the Ardennes is that a circular tour by the Great Eastern route, embracing practically the whole district, and giving the opportunity of a stay at Antwerp, Brussels, and the other towns, may be had at the price of 65s. first class, or 43s. 9d. second. The season tickets of the Belgian State Railways, available over the whole country for various periods, may also be obtained at Liverpool Street Station.

THE LIVERPOOL STREET HOTEL.

Of late years the owning and management of hotels has become a necessary part of the business of most big railway companies. The reasons are obvious. Good hotels are indispensable to comfortable travelling, and a railway company which desires to popularise its service by looking after the welfare of its travellers cannot make more certain of doing so than by conducting its hotels itself. One of the first needs of the traveller is hotel accommodation close to the point of arrival or departure. He does not want, as the prelude to a long railway journey, to spend half an hour in a cab or a fly, still less to go through that penance when he leaves the train at what he would hope to find his journey's end. The traveller to or from the Continent, again, often yearns for a good hotel as near as possible to the water's edge, and the longer the sea passage the more this need is likely to be felt. You may reach the coast from London or any inland district to find the weather very different from what it was when you started, and may deem it expedient to postpone your crossing. You may be returning to England, and find yourself so knocked up by a bad sea passage on the top of a long railway journey that the prospect of even two hours more in the most comfortable of trains is intolerable, and a bedroom the only place for you.

The enterprise of the Great Eastern management has not failed in attending to these requirements of its passengers. What has been said above as to the advantages of the Harwich Route to the Continent would be incomplete without reference to the merits of the Great Eastern Hotels, both at Liverpool Street and at Parkeston Quay, Harwich, whether for the arriving or the departing traveller; and Liverpool Street Hotel is, of course, of equal value to travellers going to or from any of the Eastern Counties towns. And not to them only. The London terminus hotels are in these days very largely patronised by residents in the suburban and country districts making flying visits to London. People come up for a dance or any other late entertainment, and stay in town for the night. Even coming up for the theatre, and with the possibility of getting home by a late train, they find it more comfortable to go to an hotel to dine and dress and sleep there afterwards. The hotel at the London terminus, close to the railway carriage door, both on arriving and returning, is always the most convenient for these purposes. Again, residents in the suburbs and the country frequently desire to give entertainments for which their own neighbourhood offers no facilities—it may be a ball, or a dinner, or a wedding reception. For such occasions no place can be more convenient than the hotel at their London terminus, equally accessible as it will be to themselves and their neighbours and guests.

All these ends are admirably served by Liverpool Street Hotel, which is for this reason one of the most valuable conveniences of the Great Eastern Railway system, while, at the same time, its situation in the heart of the City, and with ready access to all parts of London, makes it convenient for City people in general, wherever they may live. First opened in 1884, it has shared in the growth and development of Liverpool Street Station and the railway system which has its headquarters there, and was enlarged and thoroughly modernised in the nineties. It now covers the largest area of any of the London railway hotels, and is in every respect one of the finest and most up-to-date of the great hostelries of London. In the mere matter of artistic and tasteful decoration, which counts for a great deal in these days, its interior, whether in the public or private rooms, will bear comparison with that of any of its rivals in the West End. The same thing may be said of the furnishing. Its hall and lounge, its handsome dining-room and drawing-room, not to mention its smoking-room, are at once capacious and comfortable; and its bedrooms, over three hundred in number, offer luxury and convenience in degrees suitable to the tastes and pockets of all classes of guests. The cuisine is designed not merely to satisfy the requirements of travellers and ordinary guests, but of those who give epicurean private dinners, and of public banquets on the largest scale; and, apart from the ordinary conveniences and amenities of a residential hotel, Liverpool Street Hotel serves in the City all the purposes of the most ambitious type of modern restaurant.

One of the finest features of the hotel, and the one which has added more than anything else to its popularity, is the magnificent suite of apartments known as the ABERCORN ROOMS. These are admirably designed in every respect for public and private entertainments of all kinds, and for such purposes have scarcely any equal in London. The Hamilton Hall, the largest of the rooms, is a beautiful Salon, decorated in the Louis Quinze style, and modelled on one in the Palais Soubise, Paris. Measuring about 100 ft. by 42 ft., and having a music gallery at one end, it makes a splendid ball-room, and its floor and decorations are designed with an eye to that purpose chiefly. But it is equally available for concerts (seating 800 people), as well as for banquets. When used as a banquetting hall it is served by a kitchen in close proximity, where a French chef reigns. There are many other rooms in this wing of the hotel, smaller in size, but all decorated and furnished in charming taste, and suitable, either singly or in suites, for dances, smoking concerts, and such-like entertainments. Last, but not least among the conveniences of the Abercorn Rooms should be mentioned the Masonic Temple, a characteristic apartment, decorated in the Egyptian style. It will easily be perceived how these fine suites of rooms add to the advantages of Liverpool Street Hotel which have been previously indicated.

THE SANDRINGHAM HOTEL, HUNSTANTON.

Mention has already been made of the Great Eastern Hotel, Parkeston Quay, Harwich, and of the convenience it offers to travellers who desire to break their journey either to or from the Continent, immediately adjacent as it is to the railway terminus at this point, and the point of arrival and departure of the Great Eastern mail steamers.

But the most attractive seaside quarters provided by the Great Eastern Railway are to be found at the SANDRINGHAM HOTEL, HUNSTANTON. Whether for a mere week-end visit or a more prolonged holiday, this is one of the spots on the East Coast which appeal most strongly to those in search of rest and quiet, amid the most bracing of sea breezes, and close to some of the most charming scenery in Norfolk. The Sandringham Hotel itself is a modern building, recently much enlarged and improved, standing only a few yards from the sea, and designed in every respect to minister to the wants and the comfort of seaside visitors; indeed, nowhere on the East Coast can you find yourself more thoroughly at home. Moreover, this is not one of those seaside hotels which lay themselves out to rival the charges which rule at Ostend, Trouville, or Monte Carlo. The tariff is well within recognised limits, and only during July, August, and September do the full boarding terms rise to four guineas a week. A convenient arrangement of the G.E.R. is the issue of hotel coupons from the principal stations on the line, including full board and attendance at the Sandringham Hotel from the day of arrival to that of departure.

Of the attractions offered to visitors in the neighbourhood some idea has been given in the preceding pages. Perhaps of all classes Hunstanton appeals most forcibly to golfers, the Hunstanton Club having a first-rate eighteen-hole course on a sandy soil, and a comfortable club house. The little town itself, though scarcely yet beyond the primitive stage, is well managed, and the usual seaside amusements are always going on during the summer season. The bathing is excellent and safe, and there is good fishing to be had in the Wash. The surrounding country offers endless opportunities for picturesque and interesting excursions, the most notable, of course, being to Sandringham, which is within eight miles. In short, this out of the way corner of Norfolk deserves a high place among the many new holiday resorts which have been opened up to the world by the enterprise of the G.E.R.

FELIXSTOWE

THE MOST SUNNY SEASIDE RESORT.

Hours of Sunshine in 1906—FELIXSTOWE, 2,065 ; BRIGHTON, 1,860 ; LONDON, 1,513.

HEALTH-GIVING AIR.

UNUSUAL FACILITIES FOR OUTDOOR ENTERTAINMENT.

GOLF, CRICKET, TENNIS, CROQUET, BOATING, BATHING, &c.

The "FELIX."—The Most Beautiful Hotel and Grounds.

Facing South and Sea. 250 Rooms. Lovely Gardens abounding with SPRING FLOWERS.
Hungarian Band every Week-end.

Every Friday NON-STOP EXPRESS leaves Liverpool Street 4.10 p.m., arriving Felixstowe under two hours.

OUT-OF-SEASON TERMS. Telephone 100. Illustrated Booklet, apply MANAGER.

SCHEVENINGEN

The Seaside Suburb of The Hague, Holland.

Most Fashionable and Historic Resort on the North Sea.

ONLY 12 HOURS FROM LONDON.

LUXURIOUS AND RAPID DAY AND NIGHT SERVICES.

Scheveningen affords visitors a never-ending source of interest and enjoyment, and constitutes a convenient centre for reaching all parts of the "Land of Windmills."

MILES OF MAGNIFICENT SANDS. SAFE BATHING.
GOLFING, TENNIS, CYCLING, DRIVING, RACING, & EVERY OUTDOOR PLEASURE. EXCELLENT ROADS FOR MOTORING.

Concerts daily by the Berliner Philharmonic Orchestra. Distinguished Soloists.
Balls and Theatre. Neapolitan Band in the Kurhaus Bar. Social Club.

SPLENDID HOTELS. MODERATE TARIFFS.

(Opportunities for Bridge at all Hotels.)

Every information from the GENERAL MANAGER, Scheveningen ; or
SCHEVENINGEN BUREAU, 151, STRAND, LONDON
(Adjoining Somerset House).

Peace and Pleasure.

SCHEVENINGEN,

forming as it does the sea-front of The

HAGUE,

is only a quarter of an hour from the centre of the city, and is connected by electric and steam trams, which run every five minutes. The forthcoming Peace Conference at The Hague gives a particular interest to Scheveningen.

LOWESTOFT.

Grand Hotel.

300 feet Sea Frontage.

Standing in three acres of Private Grounds. Lawns for Tennis.

Steps leading to the Beach from Hotel Grounds for Bathing.

Stabling in Grounds. Accommodation for Motors.

Royal Hotel.

OLD ESTABLISHED.

Facing Pier and Yacht Basin.

New Dining Hall. Lighted throughout by Electricity.

Garage in Grounds.

CHANNEL CROSSING.

SEA-SICKNESS.

Mr. LABOUCHERE in TRUTH writes :—

"THE ONLY REMEDY IS MY TRUSTY

YANATAS.

IT ABSOLUTELY PREVENTS SEA-SICKNESS."

May be obtained of all chemists, 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. a bottle, or per post 3d. extra from Mr. STARKIE, Chemist, Trafalgar Square, W.C. Booklet on the subject, containing Royal and other testimonials, &c. (free), address, The SECRETARY, YANATAS, Limited, 3, Arundel Street, Strand, W.C.

THE OCEAN

ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE CORPORATION, Ltd.

FOUNDED 1871. FUNDS £1,452,925.
(31st December, 1905.)

Head Offices—

36-44, Moorgate St., London, E.C.

Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

Swan & Edgar's

Piccadilly and Regent St., London, W.

Gentlemen's Dept.

We are making a Speciality of

Lounge Suits.

Ready made or to order.

Single-breasted Jacket with Trousers (no waistcoat) ... 21/6

Double-breasted Jacket with Trousers (no waistcoat) ... 23/6

To order, 2/- extra.

Sizes of Ready-made Suits.

Chest.	Waist.	Inside leg.
36	34	32
38	36	33
40	38	34
42	40	33

Patterns & Self-Measurement forms on Request.

Genuine Folding Panamas, 15/6

Extra fine quality, 25/- 35/-

We have the largest and best stock of

Pyjama Suits

in London.

In Ceylon Wool.
3 for 20/- (Special Sale Price)
Sample 6/11

In Pure Wool.
3 for 31/- (Special Sale Price)
Sample 10/6

In Silk and Wool.
3 for 40/- (Special Sale Price)
Sample 13/6

In Pure Spun Silk.
3 for 54/- (Special Sale Price)
Sample 18/6

These are suitable for present wear, and any garment shrunk in washing will be exchanged.

Patterns on Request.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & MALCOMSON, Ltd., 4 & 5, Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., & Published weekly by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st., E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.
Entered as Second Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

(Continued from page 1470.)

bonds, $42,000,000 notes, and $15,000,000 stock. In all, therefore, the money market has been asked to provide capital for $912,000,000 in those few months. How much of this scrip has actually found a home, and how much is being nursed by finance houses that wish it elsewhere, forms an interesting subject for speculation. The recent declared experiences of underwriters, who have frequently been saddled with from 70 to 90 per cent. of their guarantees, lend too much colour to the latter theory, while a large proportion of the amounts that have been taken by the public has not yet been paid beyond the first few instalments. It is admittedly something to report an abatement of the tide of forced liquidation in Yankees, and to see the controlling interests once again making attempts to turn the market upwards. Perhaps the effort will be successful in giving values a further moderate fillip, but in the face of all the adverse circumstances that surround the market, it is much too early yet to take down the caution signal.

Canadian Pacifics—Advice to Present Holders—Trunks and Mexican Rails—Forced Selling from Glasgow—Foreign Rails Steady—The B.A. and Pacific and Argentine Great Western Working Agreement.

As usual, Canadian Pacifics last week kept fairly close company with American Rails, and after sundry fluctuations, wound up with a moderate improvement on balance. At first the market was subjected to some fairly heavy realising, but there appeared to be a large number of buying limits around 170, and the execution of these started a rally which was fostered by the revival in Yankees. Several correspondents have written me lately for advice regarding their holdings of Canadas, the sharp fall in the last few months having naturally caused them anxiety. With markets all round in their present parlous state, it would be rash to predict any lasting revival in the near future, albeit, as may be gathered from my comments on Americans in another column, determined efforts are being made by New York capitalists to give values a lift. However, this is hardly the time to part with anything, least of all with stocks having such solid merits as Canadian Pacifics. If general conditions governing the Stock Markets have altered since last autumn, and many people have been forced to relinquish their holdings at a sacrifice, the fact does not in any way alter the outlook for the railroad, which continues of the brightest. Take, for instance, the traffic for the last ten days of May. The earnings of $2,232,000 represented an increase of $440,000, or more than 24 per cent. This is striking evidence of the development that is going on in the Dominion. It is true that for the present, owing to the era of high prices for wages and materials, the gross gains are yielding a disproportionately small amount as extra net gain, but this era will not last for ever, and in the meantime there is not the slightest fear about the maintenance of the dividend.

The company at present pays 6 per cent. out of its revenue from the railroad, and a bonus at the rate of 1 per cent. from the interest derived upon the proceeds of its land sales. On the basis of the present price the yield is about 4¼ per cent. This is, on the face of it, not a particularly high return, but it must be remembered first that the dividend on Canadas is better secured than upon dozens of prior charge stocks of many other railroads, and second, that quite apart from its earnings and assets as a railroad, the Canadian Pacific possesses land assets estimated to be worth from 15 to 20 million sterling, whilst the entire common stock of the company is only about 24 millions sterling. Under existing conditions the principal sum realised from the sale of lands is being invested at 6 per cent., and is to be allowed to accumulate, in the words of the chairman, "until such time as a definite plan can be evolved for its utilisation." Exactly what the board has in mind it is impossible to say, but if the idea is to eventually form a separate company to take care of the land assets, Canadian Pacific proprietors should be given a bonus in the form of new scrip that would show up the value of their holdings in a very favourable light. In the meantime, the existence of these land assets, and the retention of the proceeds of sales in the company's treasury, taken in conjunction with the big surplus earned over and above the dividend actually paid, explain why Canadas may be regarded as a high-class investment.

The Grand Trunk, like its larger neighbour, still piles up huge gross traffic increases; the gain for the last ten days of May was no less than £30,300, or nearly 13 per cent. Here, again, the company is working at such a high ratio, partly on account of dear labour and materials, and partly on account of the virtual rebuilding of the Canada Atlantic branch, that, for the present, these substantial gains in gross are hardly reflected at all upon the net receipts. It is, therefore, very unlikely that there will be anything available for the ordinary stockholders this year, but the Third preference stands a reasonable prospect of getting its full 4 per cent., as, after making allowance for the £46,000 saved this year on account of the non-repetition of the Michigan taxation arrears item, and the £17,000 net increase which the company showed to the end of April, it only requires another £9,000 additional profit to yield the £72,000 which an additional 1 per cent. on Thirds calls for. And there are the proceeds of eight months' working in which to provide this trifle. Trunks last week were brought down by sales in connection with the embarrassment of a leading broker in Glasgow. The liquidation on this account must be pretty well over now, and provided trouble does not break out in some fresh place, the market ought to soon begin looking up.

In the Foreign Railway group Mexican Rails have also been affected by the financial trouble in the north, but speaking generally the tendency last week was steadier than of late. Antofagasta and Bolivia deferred, to which I called attention a fortnight ago, when the price was 130, have had a further rise, the price at the time of writing being 137. The Argentine Railway traffics were, of course, affected by the strike, the Buenos Ayres Great Southern take showing a decrease of no less than £40,000. As, however, the trouble has been satisfactorily adjusted, this temporary falling-off need not trouble stockholders, and part of the loss has no doubt been made up since, as the goods traffic would not be lost, but only delayed, by the strike. The terms upon which the Buenos Ayres and Pacific is to lease the Argentine Great Western—and through that the Transandine Railway—have already been pretty well discussed, but so far the market does not seem to have taken sufficient notice of them. Put briefly the arrangement comes to this: The Argentine Great Western, in respect of both its preferred and ordinary capital, will be entitled to receive from the Pacific amounts which, so far as they are in excess of 5 per cent., will vary with and be ascertained by reference to the yearly dividends actually paid by the Pacific company on its ordinary stock, namely:—

(a) When the Pacific Company pays 5½ per cent., an additional ½ per cent., making the total.....	5½ per cent.
(b) When the Pacific Company pays 6 per cent., an additional ½ per cent., making the total.....	6 per cent.
(c) When the Pacific Company pays over 7 per cent., a further ½ per cent., making the total.....	6½ per cent.
(d) When the Pacific Company pays 10 per cent. or upwards, a further ½ per cent., making the total	7 per cent.

The amounts receivable by the Great Western in respect of its preferred capital cannot fall below 5 per cent. per annum unless the Pacific Company should have to reduce the dividend on its preference stock, which is cumulative, and similarly the amount receivable in respect of the ordinary capital of the Great Western cannot fall below 5 per cent. unless the Pacific Company should have to reduce the dividend on its second preference stock. Thus the Great Western's preferred and ordinary capital become in effect preferred stocks respectively, ranking for 5 per cent. pari passu with the first and second preference stocks of the Pacific Company, and entitled to the additional dividends above mentioned. Now, the Pacific Company has paid 7 per cent. on its ordinary stock for the past three years, and the chances are that the dividend will be maintained. The point to keep prominently in mind, however, is that even should the Pacific have to reduce its dividend to 6 per cent., that will not affect the present rates of 6 per cent. being paid upon Great Western preferred and ordinary. Therefore, with 6 per cent. reasonably secured, and 5 per cent. virtually assured, both these stocks present strong attractions for the investor. At present prices the preferred gives a yield of 5⅛ per cent., while the ordinary returns nearly 5¾ per cent. My usual table follows:—

Colonial and Foreign Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest	June 1, 1907.	June 8, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Canadian Pacific	208	161⅜	171¾	172¾	+1
Grand Trunk	29 11/16	25 1/16	28	—	—
Do. 4 p.c. Guaranteed	105½	101½	100½	100½	—
Do. 5 p.c. First Pref.	123½	114¾	118	117⅞	- ⅛
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	115	105¾	109¼	108⅞	- ⅜
Do. 4 p.c. Third Do.	70¼	60 15/16	69½	68¼	- ⅝
Mexican	50⅞	22¼	43½	40¼	-3¼
Do. 8 p.c. First Pref.	144¼	118⅜	135	133	-2
Do. 6 p.c. Second Pref.	93¾	49½	85½	83½	-2
Interoceanic of Mex. 7 p.c. Pref.	11 15/16	6	10⅜	10⅜	- ⅛
Do. 7 p.c. "B" Debs.	124	109	116	116½	+ ½
Mexican Central 4 p.c.	90¼	78¼	82½	82½	—
Do. First Incomes	30	18	20½	20½	—
Do. Securities "A" bearer	95	88 1/16	90	90	—
Do. Do. "B" Do.	81½	65⅛	77	77	—
Nat. of Mexico 4 p.c. First Pref.	61⅜	37½	51	49	-2
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	31⅛	19½	21	20	-1
Bengal and North Western	149½	144	148	148	—
Madras 5 p.c.	127½	120½	114	114	—
Antofagasta Def.	180⅛	162	135	137	+2
Nitrate Rails	16⅜	14 1/16	13¾	13	- ¾
Argentine Great Western	130½	111	105½	106	- ½
Do. North-Eastern Debs.	83½	64½	72	72	—
Buenos Ayres and Pacific	136½	120	111½	111½	—
Do. and Rosario	120⅜	111	98	99	+1
Do. Great Southern	145	122⅜	120	119½	- ½
Do. Western	138¾	123½	119	119½	+ ½
East Argentine	100	87	118½	118½	—
Cordoba Cen. (C.N.S.) Income Debs.	75½	63⅜	63½	64	+ ½
Cordoba and Rosario First Pref.	108¾	85	85½	85½	—
Entre Rios First Pref	98	85	89	89	—
Great Western of Brazil	16 1/16	12½	10½	10	- ½
Leopoldina	86½	69½	69	69	—
San Paulo	214⅜	193½	209	208½	- ½
Central Uruguay	92½	82	88½	88	- ½
Costa Rica	29 1/16	25	28½	28	- ½
Cartagena (Colombia) Debs.	101	78	71	71½	+ ½
Colombian Nat. Second Debs	88½	76½	69	70	+1
Colombian Northern 5 p.c. Debs.	81½	76¼	80	79	-1
Manila 6 p.c Debs.	126	112	109	109	—
Guayaquil and Quito 6 p.c. Bonds	93½	55	43½	42	-1½
Cuban Central	7 15/16	5⅝	5⅜	5¼	—
United of Havana	193	105⅝	92½	92½	—
Western of Havana	15 3/32	12½	11¾	11¾	—
Mashonaland Debs (2nd issue)	94½	87¾	88	87½	- ½
Rhodesia 4 p.c. Debs.	8 5/8	76	74	72½	-1½
Ottoman (Smyrna to Aidin)	23⅜	19¼	21	20½	- ½

KAFFIRS AND RHODESIANS QUIET AND COMPARATIVELY STEADY —WHITE MINERS' STRIKE "PRACTICALLY COLLAPSED"— THE IMPORTANCE OF THE REDUCTION IN RAND COSTS FORESHADOWED AS AN OUTCOME OF THE STRIKE — ELDORADO BANKETS.

South African mining descriptions have not been a very brisk market during the past week, the public still holding aloof, and the professionals themselves being somewhat nervous of increasing commitments in view of the financial difficulties that have come to light on the Stock Exchange, and of the uncertainty still surrounding the Rand labour outlook. But a cessation of the recent liquidation has to be reported so far as Kaffirs and Rhodesians are concerned, and on the whole they have been fairly steady. As regards the question of the repatriation or replacement of the Chinese, it is still held in certain quarters that some of the contracts will be extended for a limited period, and in any case it should not now be long before the new Government declares its intentions in regard to this important matter. As to the white miners' strike, it is an encouraging sign that the authorities contemplate withdrawing the infantry which was drafted into the district in order to preserve order. As a matter of fact, the strike is no longer regarded seriously from the point of view of the market, while as regards the working of the mines, men have been found to replace the strikers, and in no case has a whole mill had to be shut down. Last week, in dealing with the question of the outcome of the strike, I quoted from the cable of a Johannesburg correspondent that the economy resulting from the alteration that has been made by the mine managers in their policy as a consequence of the strike, "which is variously estimated at from 18d. to 30d. per ton, may mean that exceptionally good profits will be shown, due to the elimination of excessive and unnecessary charges." Such a saving would be of considerable importance, not only from the point of view of shareholders, whose chief concern is the rate of dividend paid on their investments, but also in respect to the payable career of the mines. With a reduction in expenses, material hitherto of unpayable grade may become a source of profit. For example, take the case of a mine whose working costs amount to 25s. per ton, and which has a quantity of 6 dwt. (or 24s.) ore opened up in addition to reserves of 8 dwt. material. The lower grade stuff by itself is unpayable on the basis of cost mentioned, but bring down expenses by 2s. per ton and it will become a valuable asset. As regards the effect of the foreshadowed reduction of from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per ton in costs upon profits and dividends, my readers will probably gain a better idea of the importance of such a saving on consideration of the subjoined table, which explains itself:—

Company.	Ore Treated Last Year.	2s. per ton Represents	Amount Required to Pay 1 per Cent. on Capital.
	Tons.	£	£
Glencairn	184 532	18,453	5,500
New Kleinfontein	378,519	37,851	9,000
Robinson Central Deep	201,095	20,109	4,400
Knights Deep	317,480	31,748	6,435
Ferreira Deep	251,721	25,172	9,100
Wit. Deep	335,880	33,588	5,000

It will be seen that on the basis of the past year's tonnages a saving of 2s. per ton represents sums equivalent to from 3 to 6 per cent. on the capitals of the companies concerned. I have taken these companies for the purpose of illustrating the point at issue in view of the fact that their shares are among those I have recently recommended to my readers as promising Kaffir selections.

In the Rhodesian market, the Banket issues have continued to receive a fair amount of attention, and have shown some fluctuation during the week. Eldorados have been rather dull, as the expected news of crushing having commenced has not come to hand. As a matter of fact, I now learn that crushing is not likely to be started until next month, as some of the necessary plant has not reached the property.

The total gross production of the Transvaal mines for May is now announced, and it will be seen from the subjoined table that the return is below that for April, the extra day failing to counterbalance the interruption to work caused by the strike of white miners:—

Month.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.
	Fine. oz.	Fine. oz.	Fine. oz.	Fine. oz.	Fine. oz.
January	199,279	288,824	369,258	428,638	537,633
February	196,513	289,502	363,811	407,668	493,542
March	217,465	308,242	399,823	443 723	538 497
April	227,871	305,946	399.166	439,243	537 019
May	234,125	314,480	416,595	461,202	524,477
June	238,320	368,219	412,317	475,975	—
July	251,643	307,340	419,505	491 793	—
August	271,918	312,277	428,581	500.115	—
September	276,197	312,286	416,487	505.111	—
October	284,544	325,625	415,527	510 609	—
November	279,813	330.167	424,757	533,373	—
December	286,061	362,264	431,594	550,167	—
Total	2,963,749	3,776,621*	4,897,221	5,786,617	2,631,173

* Includes 7,949 oz. or £33,706 not declared in year.

The value of the gold produced is given in the following table:—

Month.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.
	£	£	£	£	£
January	846,489	1,226,846	1,568,503	1,820,739	2,283,741
February	834,739	1,229,726	1,545,371	1,731,664	2 096 434
March	923,739	1,309,329	1,698,340	1,884,815	2,287,391
April	967,936	1,299,576	1,695,550	1,865,785	2,281,110
May	994,505	1,335,826	1,768,734	1,959,062	2,227,838
June	1,012,322	1,309,231	1,751,412	2,021,813	—
July	1,068,917	1,307,621	1,781,944	2,089,004	—
August	1,155,039	1,326,468	1,820,496	2,162,583	—
September	1,173,211	1,326,506	1,769 124	2,145.575	—
October	1,208,669	1,383,167	1,765,047	2,296,371	—
November	1,188,571	1,427,947	1,804,263	2,265,625	—
December	1,215,110	1,588,800	1,883,295	2,356,961	—
Totals	12,589,247	16,054,909	20,802,074	24,579,087	11,176,514

All the individual results are not yet to hand, so my usual comparative table must be held over until next week, when a comprehensive list of Kaffir prices will also be given. As I foreshadowed last month, the native labour returns this time show a small loss, the first for a long time past. This is no doubt due to the regular return of a certain number of the natives to agricultural pursuits during the middle months of the year.

East Rand Group Results—A Disappointing Showing for 1906, but Latest Returns Encouraging—Dividend Prospects.

In view of the rumour that has been current in the market recently as to the East Rand Proprietary announcing a dividend during the current month, and of the fact that a resumption of distributions by this company is dependent upon its subsidiaries leading the way in that respect, it will doubtless be of interest to my readers if I devote a portion of my space this week to a review of the position and prospects of the mines of this group. The reports for 1906 of the parent concern and its producing subsidiaries, the Angelo, Cason, Driefontein Consolidated, and New Comet, were presented at the annual meetings held at Johannesburg at the end of March, and were issued to shareholders on this side a few weeks ago. The past year's results in the aggregate, compared with those for 1905, appear very satisfactory, increases being shown in the quantity of ore milled, in the gold production, profits, development footage, and the amount of ore developed. But, as a matter of fact, comparison of the latest figures with those for 1905 is hardly fair, as the 1906 totals include the results of the Cason mine, which was not a producer in 1905, but contributed to the gold output for seven months of the past year. The total quantity of ore milled last year was 367,812 tons, the average number of stamps at work having been 560, and the gold recovered was 411,976 oz., of the value of £1,754,156, equal to 36s. 9d. per ton milled. The total costs for the year were £1,165,090, equal to 24s. 5d. per ton, so that the working profits were £589,066, or 12s. 4d. per ton. The working costs showed a considerable decrease towards the end of the period, which was attributable entirely to the increase in efficiency of the unskilled labour, and to the increase in tonnage which resulted therefrom. The reduction in the average working costs for the whole of the past year amounted to 1s. 1d. per ton, and the manager in his report foreshadows a further decrease.

The individual results are summarised in the subjoined table:—

Mine.		Ore Milled. Tons.	Gold Yield. Ozs.	Working Profit. £	Per Ton. Yield. s. d.	Costs. s. d.	Profit. s. d.
Angelo	1906	235,168	129,710	227 427	42 11	25 3	17 8
	1905	146,867	85,650	165,188	49 7	27 1	22 6
Cason	*1906	239,636	117,559	220,560	41 10	23 5	18 5
	1905		not crushing
Driefontein	1906	235,168	80,177	58,183	29 0	24 1	4 11
	1905	223,735	104,613	167,515	38 1	23 9	14 4
New Comet	1906	224,220	84,529	82,897	32 1	24 8	7 5
	1905	169,887	68,289	68,612	34 2	26 4	7 10

* Seven months.

In accordance with the proposal outlined by the Board last October to appropriate profits to defray capital expenditure, a sum of £166,758 was utilised last year out of the Angelo's revenue, and the unappropriated balance at the end of 1906, amounting to £69,428, was reserved to meet expenditure on excess development in the current year, and expenditure on plant not then completed. As regards the mining position, the ore reserves at the end of 1906 were 232,665 tons in excess of the tonnage a year previously, the total being 808,882 tons, of an average value of 8.4 dwt., say 34s. per ton. At the meeting of the parent company the chairman said that any apprehensions entertained concerning the development of the Angelo some little time ago had been groundless, and he directed attention to the consulting engineer's report, which foreshadowed that the mine would rapidly work up to the full complement of stamps, whilst maintaining the grade. The monthly returns for the current year, as a matter of fact, show a marked improvement, the profits reported being as follow:—

January.	February.	March.	April.
£24,912	£16,987	£23,417	£30,110

The aggregate earnings for the first four months of the current year are thus at the rate of 48 per cent. per annum on the issued capital.

The Cason, the latest member of the group to join the list of producers, reports highly satisfactory results. The ore reserves at the end of 1906 were 602,820 tons of an average value of 10.9 dwt. Some months ago it was rumoured that the mine was not developing so well, but the consulting engineer in his report states that it would appear that the poor values on the 6th level west are only a passing phase of the situation, and that the bottom levels will open up good ore as formerly. For the first four months of the current year the Cason's earnings have been:—

January.	February.	March.	April.
£35,848	£28,969	£36,155	£39,910

These earnings are at the rate of 80 per cent. per annum on the issued capital of £525,000. During 1906 a sum of £191,198 was appropriated out of profits to meet expenditure on capital account.

The Driefontein Consolidated is the most disappointing mine of the group, the profit last year amounting to under 5s. per ton. Revenue has been appropriated to meet expenditure on capital account in the case of this company also, and in the current year more is to be so applied. The ore reserves at the end of 1906 stood at 1,024,270 tons, of an average value of 6.3 dwts. Development has recently been attended with more encouraging results, and the consulting engineer in his report said that an improvement might be confidently anticipated both in respect of the tonnage crushed and the grade of ore treated. Already in the current year the monthly profits have increased considerably, as the following table shows:—

January.	February.	March.	April.
£5,727	£4,170	£6,310	£9,369

These results are at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum on the issued capital.

At the New Comet—which, by the way, was the first mine on the Rand to receive a supply of Chinese labour—the past year's working was fairly satisfactory, the profit per ton being only 5d. less than in the preceding period. The ore reserves at the end of 1906 amounted to 619,694 tons, a decrease of 28,266 tons compared with the 1905 total, which indicates that more ore was treated than developed in the last twelve months. The grade of ore in the lower levels, according to the consulting engineer, appears to be quite satisfactory. In the current year profits have been:—

January.	February.	March.	April.
£7,833	£4,991	£6,863	£3,894

These are at the rate of nearly 16 per cent. per annum on the issued capital. The Comet, as well as the Angelo and Driefontein, passed its dividend last year, profits being utilised to meet capital expenditure. A sum of £82,839 was so appropriated in 1906, and it is estimated that a further amount of £45,282 is necessary to complete the equipment.

Now as regards the outlook in regard to the important matter of the resumption of distributions by the three mines which had to pass their dividends last year. At the meeting of the parent company the chairman dealt at length with the position and held out the hope of the Angelo, Driefontein, and New Comet making an early return to the list of dividend payers, "provided the labour position is neither assailed nor threatened," and their lead, he foreshadowed, would be followed by the East Rand itself. Further expenditure on capital account was foreshadowed in respect of each of the mines in the current year. The Angelo was in possession of sufficient funds for its full requirements and the Cason had a small credit balance, but the Driefontein and New Comet had deficits. In order to permit of dividends being paid it was proposed that the parent company should make an arrangement to advance the amounts required, such amounts to be repayable in equal monthly instalments over a fixed period. The Driefontein and New Comet, it was stated, would use part of their monthly profits to reduce the advances, and any sum required by the Cason would be treated similarly. Last month operations at the four mines of this group were hindered by the strike of white miners, and some of the stamps had to be stopped, but the Cason has now its full complement at work. A first dividend declaration by the Cason is expected shortly, the amount anticipated being 7s. per share, and rumour has credited the Angelo with an intention to rejoin the dividend list this month, as well as the parent concern, but it would appear that early distributions depend upon a satisfactory settlement of the Chinese labour question, which has yet to be announced.

Investor's Handbook.—The Central Stock Exchange, L'd. (Established 1893), 66, Cannon-street, London, E.C., now offer this, which contains particulars of Highest and Lowest Prices, Dividends, &c., for a considerable period, post free to any applicant naming this paper.

[Other groups of Transvaal mines have been reviewed in TRUTH as follows:—Robinson group, April 3; Rand Mines subsidiaries, May 1; Barnato group, May 22.]

COPPER GROUP CONTINUES ACTIVE—CAMP BIRDS, ESPERANZAS AND TOMBOYS—PUSING LAMA TIN—INDIAN GOLD OUTPUT—MYSORE'S DEVELOPMENT AT DEPTH.

The group of copper shares has continued one of the most active sections of the House. During the past week the favourites have fluctuated widely in common with the price of the metal, and, as I ventured to foreshadow, there has been plenty of scope for speculation. On the whole, the "bears" have had the best of it, as the following table of prices shows:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	June 1, 1907.	June 8, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Abosso	1 5/8	1 1/16	1 1/2	1 5/8	- 1/32
Ashanti Goldfields (4/-)	17/9	7/9	15/-	14/9	- 3d.
Gold Coast Amalgamated	3 3/4	1 1/2	1 9/16	1 1/2	- 1/16
Taquah and Abosso	2 3/4	1 1/16	2 7/16	2 3/8	- 1/16
Wassau	1 3/8	1/2	3/4	3/4	—
Egyptian Mines and Exploration	10/6	1/3	1/6	1/9	+3d.
Nile Valley	13/-	3/-	1/3	1/-	-3d.
Camp Bird	33/6	22/-	21/3	22/3	-1/-
Esperanza	5 9/16	2 1/4	1 7/8	1 15/16	+ 1/4
Le Roi (£5)	2	1	1 1/16	1 1/16	—
British Broken Hill	58/-	30/7 1/2	37/-	39/4 1/2	+2/4 1/2
Broken Hill Proprietary (8/-)	5 3/4	3 1/16	4 1/2	4 1/16	- 1/16
Zinc Corporation	2 1/8	1 1/16	14/6	13/-	- 1/6
Anaconda Copper ($25)	15 3/8	11 1/8	11 3/4	11 1/8	- 1/4
Arizona (Pref. Ord. 5/-)	3 1/2	1	63/6	63/-	- 6d.
Great Cobar (£5)	9 1/16	4 3/8	9 1/2	8 9/16	- 1/16
Mount Lyell	52/6	33/-	46/6	43/6	- 3/-
Mount Morgan	4 3/4	3 1/4	4 1/16	4 1/4	- 1/16
Rio Tinto (£5)	91 1/2	63 5/8	89 3/8	87 1/2	- 2 3/8
Dolcoath Tin	29/6	10/-	24/6	24/6	—
Pusing Lama Tin	3 5/16	3/4	2 1/16	2 1/16	—
Balaghat	36/-	22/6	16/6	16/6	—
Champion Reef (2/6)	30/-	9/6	10/9	10/6	- 3d.
Mysore (10/-)	7 1/8	5 1/2	5 3/4	5 3/4	—
Siberian Mines	—	1 1/16	1 1/8	1 1/16	- 1/16
Siberian Proprietary	16 1/4	8 1/2	3 1/2	3	- 1/4
Waihi	9 13/16	6 7/16	2 1/8	9	+ 1/16

The steady decline in Camp Birds from about 30s. to under £1 at one time last week has given rise to apprehensions as to the development of the company's property. It is stated that quite recently there has been selling in connection with a deceased account, and that the mining position is satisfactory enough, but this does not explain the whole of the fall in the price of the shares and the fact that they have been a dull market for some months past. It may be remembered that in TRUTH of February 13 last I commented upon Camp Birds, pointing out that they appeared undervalued. "But," I added, "there is evidently 'a tap on' here, as selling follows any improvement in the shares, so that the price is kept below 30s." There has been some recovery in the quotation from the lowest point touched, but the position is not sufficiently clear to induce one to strongly recommend a purchase. American mining companies seem to have a knack of providing unpleasant surprises for their shareholders. There was a steady drop in Esperanzas some time ago, in face of the big dividends being paid, and it was not for a while after that there came to light facts which explained the fall. These shares, by the way, have been in better demand during the past week, and they seem a very fair speculation at the current price, though it is hardly likely that the company will find another bonanza chute like the one which has yielded such handsome dividends, and which is still not quite worked out. Failing such a discovery, the company may have a fair career as a producer on a moderate scale, like the neighbouring El Oro. From this point of view, the future of the Esperanza mine depends mainly upon developments at depth, and results so far are officially stated to be satisfactory. Another American company whose shares have come in for rather more attention during the past week is the Tomboy. On these the handsome dividend of 5s. per share is announced, and this makes the return for the financial year ending this month 7s. 6d. per share. But the shares have been sold, despite the high return, it being stated that the profits have been "somewhat abnormal." The management foreshadows monthly profits of £8,000 in future, as compared with an average of £12,000 in the last twelve months. At the lower rate, however, dividends of about 30 per cent. on the issued capital (£300,000) should be possible, and this would represent a yield of nearly 17 per cent. on the current market price of the shares. As it is stated that the lower rate "can be easily and fairly maintained for a considerable period," the shares would seem a hopeful purchase, with a view to holding them for dividends.

The dividend of 2s. per share declared and paid last week by the Pusing Lama tin mines brings the amount distributed in respect of the current financial year up to 8s. 6d. per share, and it is officially announced that upon completion of the accounts to the end of the period—namely, the 30th inst.—the directors expect to be able to declare a further distribution. Prospects are speculative, profits being largely dependent upon the course of the price of tin, but the shares at the current price yield 17 per cent. per annum on the basis of the 8s. 6d. per share already distributed, and this return seems to allow a fair margin for the speculative character of the security. The company is one of the largest of the Straits tin producers.

The gold output of the Indian mines for the past month shows a further reduction, and the return is the lowest but one recorded this year:—

	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.
	Oz.	Oz.	Oz.	Oz.	Oz.
January	48,080	51,588	52 157	52,009	46,010
February	46,268	50,151	50,660	49,576	43,224
March	48,434	51,634	52.688	49,040	45,112
April	48,573	50,609	53,374	46,033	45,026
May	48,971	51,242	52.174	48,515	44.394
June	49,368	51,606	52,717	47,816	—
July	50,989	51,233	52,191	47,247	—
August	50,717	51,517	52,017	46,817	—
September	51,714	51,666	52,039	49,688	—
October	51,824	51,238	52,291	47,101	—
November	52,016	51,664	51,906	46,487	—
December	54,457	52,690	54,201	49,981	—
Total	601,411	616,838	628,415	577,260	223,766

As regards the individual returns, that of the Mysore, which is by far the largest of the Indian producers, is 100 ounces better than for April, but the Nundydroog shows a falling-off of nearly 600 ounces, and smaller declines are exhibited by Ooregum and Mysore West and Wynaad. Touching developments on the Kolar goldfield, some interesting information has recently come to hand, it being announced by the Mysore company that the reef has been struck in its property at a vertical depth of 2,370 feet. This is the lowest point yet reached on the field, and it is an encouraging feature that the reef where struck is of satisfactory width and value. The first interim dividend for the current year is expected to be declared before the end of the month, and it is thought the amount will be the same as was declared this time last year, namely, 4s. per share.

"FINANCE."—A concise weekly record of markets and prices, published by the CENTRAL STOCK EXCHANGE, LTD. (Established 1893), 66, Cannon-street, London, E.C. Post free for six months to applicants mentioning this paper.

MORE PHILANTHROPY.

There are no bounds to the philanthropy of Hamilton Smith and Co., 80A, Fenchurch-street. In the middle of May they offered you—so they say in a circular dated June 4—500 La Luz mining shares. You were ungrateful enough not to take them, but the firm are ready to give you another chance. "Having sold 400 of the 500. . . . and having disposed of them well," they now invite you to purchase "the remaining 100 at the reduced price of 5s. per share." The reduction, you are left to infer, is a piece of pure benevolence. Not only is the price less, but you are assured that Hamilton Smith and Co. thoroughly believe in the prospects of the company, having, in fact, reliable information which makes them confident that if you invest £25 in these shares you will in two or three months "clear a profit of £100 or thereabouts." Why they should be so anxious to thrust this handsome profit upon you, a stranger, instead of making it themselves, is, of course, a question which you are not expected to raise. What you have to believe—if you are the hopeless fool that they take you to be—is that Hamilton Smith and Co. are in business for your benefit, not their own.

PREMIUM BONDS AGAIN.

In my recent article on the Continental lottery or "premium" bond traffic I did less than justice to the rapacity which the International Securities Syndicate is displaying in its raid upon the pockets of a gullible public. It was mentioned that one bond for which the syndicate charges £5 cash down or £5 5s. by instalments is worth only £3 12s. 6d. Even the latter figure, however, was an over-valuation, the bond being obtainable through reputable channels in London for £3 10s. In another instance the syndicate seeks to persuade people into paying £21 cash down or £22 by instalments for a "combination" of three bonds, the legitimate market quotations for which amount only to £14 14s. 6d. So far as I am aware—I shall be glad to hear that I am mistaken—English law affords no remedy to the purchasers who are thus imposed upon. This, however, is one of those matters that they order better in France. The Paris firms of Cunliffe, Russell, and Co., and Melville, Glyn, and Co. have long carried on, at the expense of innocent Britishers, a precisely similar game to that which is now being so actively played by the above-named syndicate in London. But a couple of years or so ago I ascertained that under French law these harpies could be compelled to disgorge their plunder, and since then I have given a number of correspondents the name and address of a solicitor in Paris—the agent of a well-known London firm—who is ready to conduct the necessary proceedings. In almost every case he has been successful. I have, for instance, just received a letter of thanks from a correspondent in the North of England. He had undertaken to pay Melville, Glyn, and Co. no less than £1,000 by instalments for a combination of lottery bonds, and had already let them have £420, when a paragraph that he saw in TRUTH caused him to make inquiries. He discovered that for his £1,000 he would become the possessor of bonds really worth only £575. I introduced him to the Paris solicitor, and he now informs me that, as the result of the action taken by that gentleman, he has recovered £378 out of the £420 that he paid Melville, Glyn, and Co.—in other words, he has got out with a loss of just over £40 instead of over £400.

TEN YEARS' PRICES AND DIVIDENDS.

The new "Stock Exchange Ten-year Record of Prices and Dividends," just published (price 10s.) by Messrs. F. C. Mathieson and Sons, 16, Copthall-avenue, E.C., is a valuable work of reference. It shows at a glance the highest and lowest prices which have been touched from 1897 to 1906 by the whole of the securities quoted in the Official List, together with the dividends that have been distributed. Not only is it useful to have this information in an easily accessible form, but the record provides a fascinating study for the investor or speculator who, instead of being carried hither and thither by the currents of the moment, prefers to take a long view of tendencies and movements.

HOME RAILS.—Options granted in all Home Railway securities at low rates for one, two, and three months. Treatise on Options and list of rates free on mentioning this paper to the Secretary, LONDON AND PARIS EXCHANGE, LTD., Bankers, Basildon House, Moorgate-street, London, E.C.

"VIGILANT'S" LETTER BOX.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can I reply by post, and as there seems to be a misunderstanding in the minds of many of my readers, I wish to emphasise the fact that a coupon must be attached to every inquiry. A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the coloured cover of TRUTH.

2. Six different stocks are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks an additional coupon or coupons (one for every half-a-dozen stocks) must be forwarded. The answering of many of the inquiries I receive necessitates a great deal of careful research, and I shall therefore be compelled henceforth to enforce this regulation. Its necessity will be apparent when I state that some correspondents send lists of 20 or 30 different stocks covering every class and description of Investment.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication; cards are apt to be lost or misplaced, causing unnecessary trouble.

4. Anonymous letters will not in any case be attended to.

5. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

6. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written, and numbered.

7. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

8. I do not recommend brokers or solicitors.

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

Security, N.B.—Not an investment of the first rank, but interest should be duly met, and I know of no reason to advise a sale.

RAILWAYS.

Bombay.—While no doubt the details to which you refer would have been useful, it was necessary to have regard to considerations of space, and in articles covering so many stocks it was not possible to do more than outline the position. Readers could easily follow up the track by means of the standard reference works, such, for instance, as the "Stock Exchange Year Book.' The Home Railway stocks, excepting City and South London, were Preferred Ordinary stocks, and not Preferences. You have rightly named the American issue indicated. Interest is payable in New York, but you could have it collected through your broker or through the English Association of American Bond and Share holders, 5, Great Winchester Street, London, E.C. Mahableshwar.—I would not buy either at present. The dividend outlook is too unfavourable. Bryan.—The railway is one of the soundest in the group, and the common stock does not look dear at the present price. At the same time, I am not at all sure that you would not be able to buy cheaper by waiting. Welshman.—I believe the fall has been due partly to a rate war between the company and another rival concern, though general market weakness also helps to account for the decline. The annual report should be published shortly, and you might wait and see what is disclosed by that document. Celtic.—1. Seeing that the line is not yet built, I can only regard the bonds as distinctly speculative. I have not heard a quotation for them lately, but your broker could doubtless obtain you a price, even if nominal. 2. An excellent purchase. The price is about the equivalent of 103½ per cent. Emeritus.—You ought to hold Brighton Preferred. The margin behind it is likely to suffer rather severely, but that has already been liberally allowed for in the recent fall, and so far as the whole year is concerned, the full interest should be earned with a liberal surplus to spare. Although a recovery may be a matter of patient waiting, it is, practically speaking, bound to come eventually. Greenhorn.—I have dealt with the matter in this week's article.

MINES.

Hippocrates.—1. I have heard no special reason for the fall beyond the general depression. A purchase at the present level should turn out well. 2. With better market conditions these should also recover. L'Ideale.—1. I would hold all for the present. 2. Yes, in a better market. Shamrock.—Such descriptions are distinctly speculative. Cosmopolitans, Australian Smelting Corporations, and Wheal Vors are fair lock-ups, but there is a liability on the last-named. Stoke.—I know of no reason for anticipating an early substantial recovery, and do not care to advise you to continue carrying over. Glad.—The shares are a pure speculation, and I think you could do better with your money elsewhere. Rover.—Better exchange into something more promising. Southwick.—They may have some recovery when markets generally improve. Royal.—1. I do not care to recommend a further purchase. See my notes this week. 2. Prospects are not at all bright. 3. A hopeful holding. P. Ealing.—The company was dissolved at the end of 1902. Aida.—All the shares named are hopeful speculative lock-ups. No mining share can be considered a safe investment. Glencairns, Chillagoes and Munganas are promising speculations. F. J. M.—Of the shares mentioned I prefer Ivanhoes and Waihis from the point of view of stability. A. K. D.—1. A further purchase to average should turn out well in the long run. 2 and 3. Very speculative, and I should be inclined to secure current prices. A. R., Newcastle, S. M., and other correspondents.—The Secretary of the Canadian Syndicate, Limited, has now explained that, "owing to a mistake," the postcards were sent to people for whom they were not intended.

CITY LIBRARY Handle carefully Love Lane

MIXED.

The Haura.—I see no objection to your exchanging the whole or a portion of the stock for higher yielding securities, provided, of course, that you are free to do so under the terms of the will. Of your alternative selections, Nos. 1 and 3 might be selected, but it would be too great a plunge from safety to speculation to select the others. I would suggest, instead, Buenos Ayres and Pacific New Four and a Half per Cent. Debentures, Antofogasta and Bolivia New Five per Cent. Debentures, Japanese Four and a Half per Cent. bonds (1st series), and United States Steel Five per Cent. Second Mortgage bonds. Calcutta.—Your investments are of the highest class, and you need have no cause to worry over any of them. You might with advantage increase your holding. Nocab.—Neither is suitable for the investment of so small a sum, and I would suggest the Post-office Savings Bank. In regard to Trunks I went fully into the matter in TRUTH of May 29. Cartagena.—1. The firm are members of the Stock Exchange, which is prima facie evidence of their respectability. 2. No. 3. A very fair investment. 4. No. 5. Quite good. Mex.—1. No reports are published, but the debentures are regarded as safe. 2. Under the guarantee the bonds ought to be all right, though the yield suggests doubts by the market on the subject. 3. No. Vet.—1. The shares should have some recovery when market conditions improve, but I would not buy more at the moment. 2. As a speculative lock-up they are a fair purchase. 3. They appear to be worth holding, everything considered. 4. From the investment point of view they could be easily improved upon. A trifle speculative. Waterloo.—1. It is an Indian concern, of which nothing is known in this country. 2. Cut the loss and put the proceeds into something with promise. Calaroga.—In view of the uncertain outlook for the country the foreign bonds could easily be improved upon as an investment holding. It is not wise to put too many eggs in one basket, and it seems desirable to realise some of the textile shares, say Bleachers and Slubbers at least. Hold 3 for a possible recovery. Humbers at the moment are much more attractive than the poor cycle shares you hold. J. W., Roehampton.—1. The depreciation is due to reduced dividend. Hold for a possible recovery. 2. A truly local concern. 3, 4, 5, and 6. Fair investments of their class. Rosebush.—1. The ordinary. 2. All doing a big business, and well managed. 3 and 4. I have no special information regarding these concerns. 5. It would be a mistake to sell the railway shares just now. Quod Vide.—1. I can hold out no definite hope of any material recovery yet awhile. You might perhaps stick to the stock you have bought and paid for, but it is not advisable to hold any on borrowed money. 2 and 3. Should not advise it in either case. 4. These shares should go better with any fresh activity in West Africans, but prospects are not good enough to justify a further purchase.

MISCELLANEOUS.

E. H. D., Leeds.—I know nothing about the promoter, but it is a wildly impracticable scheme. Simplex.—Your statement is not very clear, but apparently you have fallen a victim to the sharp practices of a bucket-shop, and I am afraid that the law affords you no remedy. I might give a more definite opinion if you sent the correspondence, contract notes, etc. Amico, N. W. S. (Woolwich), J. H. S., S. M., and other correspondents.—I have frequently cautioned my readers against the National Share Exchange, Laurie and Vincent, and other bucket-shop keepers whose circulars you forward. J. T. F., Sabina, L. A. J., T. S. (Barnsley), and other correspondents.—Repeated warnings against the International Securities Syndicate, Cunliffe, Russell, and Co., and Melville Glyn and Co., have appeared in TRUTH. Their prices are enormously in excess of the market value of the bonds. A. W. G., Cork.—See preceding reply. I do not regard the association unsafe, but some of the conditions it imposes are very unsatisfactory. Diligens.—A report of the cable company's meeting appeared in last week's TRUTH; you will find particulars of the capital, etc., in "The Stock Exchange Year Book." Clearly, it is impossible for me to say whether the bank will ever make a call for more capital, but the liability appears to be remote. It would be more prudent to sell only three of the bank shares. I cannot give advice as to the purchase of a business. Gower.—The Charing Cross Bank is not a bank at all within the ordinary meaning of the word, but a usury-shop, carried on by a man named Carpenter. Have nothing to do with it, either as a borrower or a depositor. The other concern you mention has yet to prove itself a commercial success. Chaplain.—I do not think any good purpose would be served by comments at present. Silk.—Very little reliable information is obtainable. Do not join the reconstruction, but get rid of the shares, which are valueless. Normanby.—1. They do not appear very attractive. 2. The effect of the resumption of dividends is fizzling out. 3. I know nothing against them, but use some discretion and weigh up the opinions of your broker. Patriarch.—The price of the Ordinary has been much lower, and also much higher during the specified period. The dividend of 4 2-5 per cent. has been maintained since 1903. In 1902 4 per cent. was paid, 4 2-5 per cent. in 1901, and £4 18s. for 1899. The price may possibly advance when market conditions improve. As an investment they are worth holding. Brandon.—They are a pure gamble, and do not strike me as being attractive. Fully paid £1 shares, and there are considerable arrears of preference interest outstanding. Alum Cor.—It is a new venture, its possibilities are clouded, and the shares are highly speculative. The public reception was not enthusiastic. Very few dealings have taken place. Quiois.—Would not recommend averaging, but you might hold on until the next report is published in September. K. T.—Thanks for the circular. Ignorant.—Nearly every week I publish warnings against firms of this class. Their object is, of course, to make money for themselves, not for you, and the running off of the cover is precisely what they count upon. Send me the booklets and correspondence, and I may be able to deal with these two firms. A. K., Rickmansworth.—Have nothing to do with the Mechanical Investment Trust. Hants.—No intrinsic reason for the fall. See my remarks this week. Mendip.—Keep them; a good commercial investment. Zonga.—See rule as to coupon. P. W. C.—I do not see how any action could possibly succeed. O. W. M.—1. The concern is new to me; I will make inquiries about it. 2. I regret that I have no information. H. A. J.—1. For reasons that I have frequently given I do not recommend this form of investment. 2. Apply to the Credit Lyonnais, or Messrs. N. Keizer and Co., 29, Threadneedle-street, E.C. In Nubibus.—I have no special information, but my opinion of the concern is not a favourable one, and I should advise you not to take any of the bonds. Dalesman, and other correspondents.—Your inquiries shall be answered next week.

INDUSTRIALS WEAK—MOTORS DOWN—'BUS SHARES—A PROSPEROUS COAL COMPANY—BREWERIES AND THE ABANDONED BILL—LYONS'S MEETING.

The Industrial market generally has been weak, and nowhere has the weakness been more pronounced than in the motor section, some of the favourite shares declining to an extent which has seriously alarmed many nervous holders. Fears have been excited that are really groundless. Difficulties in various quarters have lately caused a good deal of forced liquidation, and no doubt there is some truth in the suggestion in the weekly circular of Messrs. W. H. Newhouse, Sons, and Co. that the non-success of several recent flotations has compelled the sacrifice of large interests in this market to fulfil obligations in connection with underwriting agreements. Humbers have suffered severely, owing to these causes, which, of course, leave unaffected the intrinsic value of the shares. As a matter of fact, the company is doing very well, and a speedy recovery from the present price may be confidently anticipated. Daimlers have also had a sharp fall, but the remarks I made a few weeks ago in regard to this company's position and prospects still hold good. It is in a most healthy and flourishing condition, and a big dividend for the current year is confidently predicted. In the omnibus and tramway group, British Electric Traction shares have maintained their recent improvement, and London General Omnibus Company stock has gone up, being now ten or a dozen points above the low-water mark to which it dropped on the appearance of the report in March last. The very substantial decrease in the traffic receipts of the latter company for the current year is, however, a matter that should be borne in mind, while the process of transition from horse to motor traction must prove a costly one for a long time to come. Iron, steel, and armament companies' securities have been conspicuously firm, and in this department Armstrongs and Vickers can both be recommended as a good commercial investment. A very satisfactory report has been issued by the directors of Wm. Cory and Son, Limited, the company formed by a combination of coal merchants. The trading profit for the past year amounted to £222,993, as compared with £214,762, and for the sixth time in succession the dividend on the ordinary shares is at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. On these shares at the present price the yield is well over 6 per cent. Among textiles, J. and P. Coats' shares have been the strongest feature, and Calico Printers ordinary have also been in request. In this section Bradford Dyers ordinary seem to me to be attractive as an investment, considering the excellent position of the concern and the continued prosperity of the trade. Brewery securities derived no benefit from the definite announcement that the Licensing Bill will not be introduced this year. This was indeed a foregone conclusion, and as a measure on the subject is to occupy the first place in the Government programme for next Session, there will be a prolongation of the uncertainty that has had a depressing effect on the market for so many months past. The trade is always apt to take an exaggerated view of the possible consequences of coming legislation—in fact, some of the dismal prophecies that are heard at brewery meetings are transparently absurd. There is not the least likelihood that any measure which even this Government may bring forward—and that, by the way, is not quite the same thing as getting it passed into law—would prove in actual working anything like so disastrous to the liquor trade as is sometimes suggested. Still, the fears to which such continuous expression is given, though grossly exaggerated, have to be reckoned with as a factor in relation to the prices of brewery debentures and shares, and it would be extremely hazardous for any investor to count yet awhile upon any substantial improvement. At the meeting of J. Lyons and Co., Mr. Joseph Lyons fully justified the policy the directors have pursued in being content to maintain the handsome dividend of 32½ per cent. on the ordinary shares, instead of making the still larger distribution which some people seem to have expected. As he remarked, the stability, permanency, and improvement of a company's position depend upon what is earned and saved, not upon what is distributed; and the liberal writing down of assets and the building up of a substantial reserve is an eminently judicious and praiseworthy course. The company is conducted on thoroughly sound and progressive lines, and its prospects are so rosy that the shares are pretty certain to rise considerably above the present price in the not distant future. VIGILANT.

COMPANY MEETINGS.

LIPTON, LIMITED.

Sir Thomas J. Lipton presided at the ninth ordinary general meeting of Lipton (Limited), held on Monday at Winchester House, E.C.

In moving the adoption of the report, the chairman said the net profit for the year amounted to £146,053, against £139,596 for last year, or an increase of £6,457. With the amount carried forward from last account—namely, £11,435—they had thus a total of £157,488 to deal with. They had already paid one year's Debenture interest (£20,000), one year's dividend on Preference shares (£50,000), and an interim dividend on the Ordinary shares for the first half-year at 5 per cent. per annum (£25,000), making altogether the sum of £95,000, which, deducted from £157,488, left a balance of £62,488, out of which they proposed to pay a further dividend on the Ordinary shares for the second half of the year at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, amounting to £40,000, leaving a balance of £22,488 to carry forward to the next account. Some shareholders had represented to him that a higher dividend on the Ordinary shares might have been paid, and, being the largest shareholder, he had some sympathy with them, because it meant a considerable personal sacrifice. Nevertheless, he felt, in the interests of the business, it was the wisest course, owing to the largely increased trade they were now doing, to keep a larger balance in hand for the further expansion and development of their business.

The directors had, as usual, made ample allowance for depreciation, and, as hitherto, all outlays for maintenance and repairs had been charged against revenue, their system being to keep all their buildings, plant, and equipment in a thoroughly efficient working condition. It might be interesting to them to know that the total amount written off for depreciation on plant, machinery, fittings, and utensils since the business was acquired by the company was £151,060; therefore, the item of £210,171 which they saw in the balance-sheet represented little more than half the actual cost. The value of the stocks they were carrying had not varied to any appreciable extent, it being some £3,000 more than last year. They were daily shipping goods to all parts of the world, and every post brought added proof of the popularity of their wares in the shape of increased orders. They had had to greatly enlarge their stores and warehouses to meet this demand, which they had every confidence would continue to grow. In conclusion, the chairman stated that, given a reasonable time, at no far distant date, he had every reason to believe that the business of Lipton (Limited) would exceed anything it had hitherto achieved.

Mr. T. R. Smith seconded the motion, which was agreed to.

BOOTS CASH CHEMISTS (EASTERN) LTD.

The fifteenth ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of this Company was held on Monday last at the City Office of the Company, 29, Farringdon-road, E.C., Mr. Jesse Boot (Chairman and Managing Director) presiding.

The Secretary (Mr. Alexander L. Milne) read the notice convening the meeting, and the Auditors' Report was submitted by Mr. Parsons, the Auditor.

The Chairman said: After fifteen of these meetings there may seem a sense of sameness about them to any one who does not grasp the underlying activity leading up to the results shown in our Report. Personally, owing to the vivid interest with which the business appeals to me, I can never feel any detail of it as monotonous or uninteresting, least of all occasions such as this, when we publish to the world our doings and our prospects. I am sure the same feeling dominates many of those working with me in the business, and that our absorption in it has been a prime factor in its success. The Report and the figures lie before you in cold print, which leaves to your imagination and our recollection the ups and downs of another year's daily effort to keep abreast of the times. Conditions have changed since our first meeting. Then our business competition was not so keen and our competitors thought we were a negligeable quantity—a meteor of the time which would quickly expire. Since then time has proved that our system of business has come to stay, and we have now plenty of that imitation which is the most sincere form of flattery. Of course we have had very exceptional opportunities for development, both through economical buying and also in experience in equipping business premises, for, owing to our association with Boots Pure Drug Company, Limited, and the three other allied Companies, we have been enabled by joint experience, combined advertising, and general co-operative efforts to meet the greatly increased competition and still hold the premier position in the retail drug trade. Our progress has been quite open and obvious to the public by the constant improvement in our style of construction and equipment of the branches. Sixteen years ago our Goose Gate branch at Nottingham—a fine large building—seemed the last word to be spoken for Boots Cash Chemists' own style, and the average branch was of a type which is now becoming non-existent among our shops. To-day we have magnificent freehold premises of our own such as those at Scarborough and other places, and for equipment our acme up to the present is the fittings and accommodation of our Pelham-street branch at Nottingham. Another striking instance of progress is that of our Cambridge branch, where we opened twelve years ago in a shop with only 12 feet of frontage and 30 feet deep; now we have a magnificent arcade 311 feet long, lofty and commodious in every way, beautifully fitted up and with entrances from the two best thoroughfares in the town. What evolution has in store for us we cannot divulge, but we are not waiting for inspiration, but improving all the while in one form or another. Turning to the Balance Sheet I might first remark as to the quality of our assets. The first item, £143,000, represents entirely freehold properties, and you will observe that this is rather over one half of the whole of the paid up capital of the Company, which stands at £280,000. The second item represents leasehold and other properties, fixtures, fittings, and utensils amounting to £185,000. Against that you will see on the other side of the Balance Sheet a Depreciation Fund amounting to £43,000. In further relation to this item you will notice in the Profit and Loss Account a total for the year for repairs and depreciations of £12,000, a writing off in one year equivalent to about 7 per cent. of £185,000, to which item the writing off chiefly refers. I might say that in addition to the £43,000 depreciation, we have spent on repairs and renewals since the Company started another £40,000, so that you will be able to judge of the extent to which the properties are kept in a thorough state of repair and good condition generally. Our Branch Managers' Fund, which now amounts to £14,000, will at present increase automatically to the amount of £700 per annum, independent of any addition from the profits, so that if we are able to add £1,000 a year from the profits for the next four years, we shall have by that time reached the desired £20,000 of which I have spoken at previous meetings. I do not know that I can add anything further with advantage. It is, as I have said, a pleasure to me to be here, and I have not missed one of the fifteen annual meetings myself, and hope to meet the shareholders again next year and for many years with an equally good report to make to them. (Applause.) I now beg to move: "That the accounts be received, and that the distribution of the profits recommended in the Directors' Report be and is hereby adopted."

Mr. John Gibbs seconded the motion, and congratulated the shareholders that during periods of commercial depression, the effects of which were felt by many industrial companies, this company was able to proceed in an exceedingly satisfactory manner. They were not only able, on this occasion, to maintain the dividend, but to add to the reserve fund, and taking all together, the company was in a most sound position. (Applause.)

The resolution was adopted without discussion.

Mr. E. S. Waring moved, and Mr. A. Gascoyne seconded, the re-election of Mr. John Gibbs as a director of the company, which was agreed to.

On the motion of Mr. A. H. Bromley, seconded by Mr. Thompson, Messrs. Sharp, Parsons, & Co. were reappointed auditors.

Mr. Parsons, in returning thanks for the reappointment of his firm, said that personally he had conducted the audit of the Company from its inception, and he had seen the growth of the Company and its life, and he had noted a good deal of its development and vigour. He had never known of an unsuccessful year since he had been connected with the Company, and he hoped that future years would be as successful as the past years had been. At the present time the business was well consolidated and earning regular and satisfactory profits. He proceeded to say that he did not like the title Second Preference shares, he would rather wish the preference shares had been denominated "A" and "B" shares respectively. However, the Second Preferences formed, so far as his judgment went, a very sound security. In no case had valuation been strained in order to bring up the profits; the tendency had rather been on the prudent side of valuation, so that in no case were the profits overstated. The profits for the year were sufficient to pay a dividend on the First Preference, on the Second, and there was sufficient remaining to pay a dividend three times over to the Shareholders. That showed the earning power was satisfactory. In addition, they had set aside in reserve funds and carry forward sums sufficient to pay a dividend on the First and Second Preferences for eight years. Assuming their earning power dropped, they had still those reserves to meet these dividends for eight years to come. Therefore, from the dividend point of view, the position of the Second Preference Shares was unexceptional. There were no Debentures. The Chairman had told them that half of the whole capital of the Company was represented by freehold properties, and he thought he would be right in saying those freehold properties were fairly worth the money. So far as he could judge the prospects of the Company, they might anticipate that instead of becoming weaker they would become even stronger. (Applause.)

On the motion of Mr. Alderman James Duckworth, M.P., seconded by Mr. Jesse W. Hind, a vote of thanks was accorded to the Chairman, Mrs. Boot, and the staff.

The Chairman briefly acknowledged the compliment, and the proceedings terminated.

INSURANCE NOTES.

SOME GENERAL NOTIONS—INSURANCE AND NATURE—ADAPTATION TO CIRCUMSTANCES.

ONE of the best definitions of metaphysics which I ever heard was "General thoughts on things in general." For once in a way I propose to deal with insurance in a somewhat more abstract fashion than usual, neglecting for the moment concrete advice and illustrations of policies, and giving some of the reasons which appeal very strongly to my mind for regarding the whole system of insurance as one of the most ingenious and beneficial developments that have ever taken place. In dealing with the subject from this somewhat general point of view, I am, of course, in no way depreciating the testimony in favour of insurance which is afforded by everyday experience and by a comparison of well-selected life policies with other forms of investment. I am merely giving additional reasons of a somewhat unusual kind for my whole-hearted belief in the system, and stating some of the considerations which make insurance, considered merely as a science, or as a social institution, exceptionally interesting.

In these days everybody believes in evolution, and is familiar in more or less detail with the main characteristics of development which are seen to prevail in all classes of phenomena. The early stages of things exhibit a vague indefiniteness which gives place in course of time to well-defined distinctions. In astronomy we see the change from the indefinite nebula to the well-defined system of the sun and planets, and the comparatively exact and measurable shape and dimensions of the earth and the moon.

In the lowest forms of life we find little or no trace of definite organs for performing various functions; and it is only after evolution has proceeded a long way that special organs are developed for seeing, hearing, breathing, digesting, and so on. It is the same in social life. In primitive times each man did for himself all the few actions necessary to existence: obtaining and cooking his own food, making his own weapons and clothes, building his own hut, and so on. As the social organism develops this state of things changes, until in our own day we find everybody specialising. In manufacturing processes each man makes one little bit of the finished article, or confines his attention to the constant repetition of one small process. The same features are exhibited in the development of science and the arts. In early times the story of the day's fight would be told by a single warrior, who combined in his own person the primitive orator, poet, historian, novelist, newspaper, and I know not how much else besides, and from such early beginnings there has grown the whole complex social organisation which is becoming more and more complex and specialised every day.

Insurance as a whole exhibits equally clearly and very instructively corresponding characteristics, and a consideration of these features not only makes insurance a most interesting study, but brings out a number of points of considerable practical importance. In the beginnings of life assurance, for instance, the multitudinous policies which are now available were entirely unknown. The early idea was to provide a payment to a man's family in the event of his death, and, in doing this, little or no attention was paid to the man's age in determining the premium that he had to pay. An old man and a young man were charged alike, although the cost of the benefits secured was much greater in the former case than in the latter. Then, again, when the advantages of securing an income for life in return for a sum paid down in cash came to be realised people entirely failed to see that the mortality among annuitants would be very different from the mortality among the general population, or even among assured lives. The consequence was that at one time extremely large sums of money were lost by the sale of annuities at rates which were calculated according to wrong mortality tables. Annuitants were found to live much longer than people in general.

In modern times specialisation has been carried very far in life assurance, not only in regard to such things as mortality tables, but also in devising policies for meeting specified requirements. It is difficult to overestimate the advantages of policies carefully selected to suit the exact needs of the assured, and, indeed, so complex has modern insurance become that there is plenty of room for people to exercise all their time and all their ability in keeping touch with its developments in order to be able to give good advice to others.

There is another way in which life assurance is seen to be exceptionally interesting, and which, properly considered, affords an extremely convincing reason for taking advantage of the benefits which it offers. Most people are familiar with the records of naturalists, which tell how various plants and animals survive in the struggle for existence. The seeds of plants, which need be widespread in order that the species may be preserved, are sometimes provided with wings or hairs which enable them to be carried by the wind, and sometimes they have curious hooks by means of which they get attached to birds and animals, and so secure diffusion. The sea is full of equally beautiful and ingenious adaptations to circumstances. Many forms of aquatic life are differently marked above and below, so as to be invisible to their enemies when seen either from above or underneath. Corresponding conditions are found in birds' eggs and in the colouring of countless insects and animals.

All these features have their counterpart in insurance, and when we ignore that horribly truthful maxim, "familiarity breeds contempt," and remember that all the features of our social life which we are so apt to call artificial are really and truly just as much a part of Nature as the birds or the trees, we become aware of the extreme perfection and ingenuity with which insurance, among other social phenomena, accomplishes that adaptation to circumstances which we know to be essential to the survival of species of plants and animals, but fail to regard as equally essential to the well-being of a community of human beings. The various plans by which insurance protects policy-holders from the financial consequences of fire, accident, and premature death are, rightly considered, just as important to human beings as protective colouring and other such things are to animals. The consequence of neglect of these provisions by men and women is apt to be as fatal for them, or for those dependent upon them, as the unconscious neglect of protective devices is to animals. Owing to the greater complexity of human life, the effects may be masked and take longer to show themselves, but the tendency is identical, and the neglect of protection is in some ways more serious among the highest forms of life. It is especially noteworthy that in human life, as among the lower organisms, protection is most essential for the weak and the young. Life policies, when well chosen, compare very favourably with other forms of investment for the investors themselves, and it is especially in making provision for women and children that the protective adaptability of life assurance is so conspicuous. If we think of it, it is a really striking arrangement that after a man has made his first annual payment of, say, £25, the sum of £1,000 is positively assured to his dependants in the event of his death. This is a result which cannot be accomplished in any other way, and the benefit, which is so great for this man's family, is provided without any loss to others.

I have frequently commented and explained another piece of happy ingenuity characteristic of life assurance, which is that, by its very nature, the profits are largest where the security is greatest. This is the exact reversal of our ordinary experience in business matters. The explanation, which I need not repeat now, is very simple and quite convincing, and I merely refer to it as another instance of the point I am making.

I am not quite sure how such reflections as these will appeal to most of my readers. It is not quite the ordinary way in which business things are talked about, but it always seems to me that social affairs become vastly more interesting when we look at them from—as it were—a distant standpoint and compare them with other classes of phenomena. It is my good fortune to have to write a great deal about insurance. At the same time I am greatly interested in astronomy and various other sciences, and it is no exaggeration to say that insurance regarded in the sort of way that I have just been talking about is fully as interesting as the study of the stars, and is indeed a quite fascinating chapter of natural history.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

[Every letter containing an inquiry on the subject of insurance must be accompanied by a coupon cut from the third page of the coloured cover of TRUTH.]

Labour.—The Metropolitan policy is much the better. The estimated results from the other company are highly problematical. Normanby.—If you can obtain the 15 per cent. rebate under the Civil Service scheme of the North British, probably that company will be best for you. If you cannot obtain this let me know, and I will advise an office that is better than any in your list. Newark.—The policy you propose taking is quite good, and has no objectionable features, but I think the corresponding policy issued by the Metropolitan is a little better. Britisher.—The New York Life is quite sound; the reforms carried out in the American offices have been genuine, and I certainly advise you to keep your policy in force. Rebate of income tax is now allowed on life assurance premiums paid to the American offices. Solicitus.—Both companies are entirely satisfactory, and there is not much to choose between them, but of the two I should prefer the Royal Exchange. Carling.—All the three companies you mention are thoroughly sound and strong. The best policy is issued by the DEAFNESS successfully treated by the AKOUPHONE INSTRUMENTS. Also Vibratory Treatment for Neurasthenia. Mr. ARONSBERG, 9, Bentinck-street, Cavendish-square, London, W. Particulars on application.

Royal, and you cannot do better than insure with that company. Subaltern.—Your original inquiry has been mislaid, and your second letter cannot be replied to without reference to your first. Please repeat the inquiry. Essex.—Something depends on the length of the term. Atlas, Clergy Mutual and Friends' Provident are all good for these policies.

All Rights reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

THE INFIDELITY OF MADELEINE JEFFREYS.

IT is bad enough, in all conscience, for a man to find himself tied for life to a woman whom he does not love. But for a woman to find herself tied to a man whom she does not love is infinitely worse, and for this reason, that not only does love, or its absence, in married life, mean far more to a woman than it does to a man, but also that the finer sensibilities which distinguish woman from man are more easily revolted by the many repugnant circumstances incident to a loveless union.

I do not speak here of the woman who deliberately sells herself for wealth, or rank, or other material advantage. Such a woman must necessarily lack those finer sensibilities to which I have alluded. I speak of her far more-to-be-pitied sister, who, having married a man under the delusion that she loved him, afterwards wakes up to find that it has all been a hideous mistake—that the idealised lover with whom, in the days of her courtship, she had promised herself such ineffable happiness, presents a very different aspect under the close and searching intimacies of wedded life. He need not necessarily be a bad man. He may even, according to his lights, be a virtuous man. But (which is the material point) he is not the man—not, that is to say, the individual whom girls of the lower orders know as Mr. Right. Aye, much to be pitied is the woman who, believing she was marrying Mr. Right, finds out too late that she has married Mr. Wrong. And such was the unhappy experience of Madeleine Jeffreys.

George Jeffreys, her husband, was a solicitor, with a large practice, enjoying a high reputation professionally and eminently respectable in private life. But his temperament was essentially conventional and commonplace. He walked through life on a dead-level plateau of smug mediocrity, carefully avoiding alike the depths that lay to his left hand and the altitudes that soared on his right. He was equally incapable of stooping to the disgraceful and of rising to the sublime. No temptation ever seduced him into shady behaviour, and no impulse ever surprised him into a quixotic action. In short, he was a decorous and inveterate prig.

How, then, had Madeleine, the impulsive, the generous, the high-spirited, the sensitive, the passionate, come to imagine herself in love with such a man? That is a question to which I confess myself unable to give a satisfactory answer. It may have been that Jeffreys, under the novel influence of the first awakening of love within him, had been temporarily inspired with a fervour foreign to his nature, and warranted not to last; or it may merely have been that Madeleine, by some strange infatuation, read into his character qualities and sentiments that were non-existent there. Dreamy, as she was, and prone to idealise, there is nothing very unlikely in the supposition of her having done so. Anyhow, the fact remains that she did imagine herself in love with Jeffreys when she married him. Unfortunately, also, the fact remains that three months of wedded life with him opened her eyes, once and for all, to the fatal delusion.

Some women of calmer disposition would have recognised the inevitable, would have sat down by it, and have resigned themselves to making the best of it. For awhile, indeed, Madeleine did attempt to do this. But her passionate, impulsive nature was incapable of long sustaining that dutiful, if somewhat hypocritical, rôle. Her manner towards her husband grew so cold and discouraging that, though not a man of very fine or acute perceptions, he could not but see that he had somehow forfeited Madeleine's affection. What the reason might be he could not divine, being too much eaten up with self-esteem to attribute it to any shortcomings on his own part. So he formed the conclusion that some one else must have come between them—in short, that there was another man in the case. At first, I believe, there was no foundation at all for such an idea. And possibly, if Jeffreys had kept his suspicions to himself, his wife, in spite of her dislike for him, would still have remained strictly loyal to her marriage vow. But from the moment that her husband, in the course of one of the many disagreeable scenes that occurred between them, openly declared his belief that some other admirer was at the bottom of her coldness and estrangement—from that moment she appeared to regard herself as free from further obligation to the man who had thus insulted her.

For some months nothing noteworthy happened, Madeleine remaining outwardly, if somewhat coldly, civil to her husband, and discharging all her domestic duties with laudable regularity. But at last definite shape was given to her husband's suspicions by her behaviour over a letter that she received one morning while at breakfast. If it hadn't happened that his eyes chanced to be fixed upon her at that particular instant, her look of confusion as she slipped the letter under her other correspondence would have escaped his observation, for it was all a matter of half a moment. But what he saw in that half moment, including the writing on the envelope, which was in a bold, masculine hand, at once confirmed all that he had hitherto suspected. Madeleine was in clandestine correspondence with somebody, and that somebody was of the male sex. At first Jeffreys was minded to tax her with her deceit then and there, and to demand to see the letter. But, on second thoughts, he decided to hold his tongue and appear to have noticed nothing, for if she refused, as she certainly would do, to show him the letter, he could not very well use force with her, and the only effect of such a proceeding would be to put her on her guard. He concluded that the wiser course was to lie low for the present, and thus having lulled Madeleine into a false sense of security, to put himself in a more advantageous position for watching her.

This course he adopted, with the result that, little by little, he made a number of discoveries that amply confirmed his suspicions. For instance, he ascertained that Madeleine, who hitherto had been a very stay-at-home woman, was now in the habit of going out for hours at a time, nearly every afternoon, "shopping"; though the number of purchases that she bought or had sent home, was, if anything, less numerous than heretofore. Again, though no more letters in that handwriting were received at the house, he learned that his wife usually found some reason for running out to a neighbouring newspaper shop as soon as he had gone to business. He had no difficulty in discovering that the shop in question drove quite a lucrative little trade by lending itself out as an accommodation address. Hence the true inwardness of Madeleine's frequent morning calls there was tolerably apparent.

But these were only small discoveries compared with what came to light when George Jeffreys reached that stage of his investigations when he thought it necessary to interrogate the servants. He found both Martha, the housemaid, and Mrs. Holly, the cook, simply bursting with suppressed intelligence. What they had to tell him related to circumstances that occurred on two or three occasions when business had called him away from home for a few days.

"Oh yes, sir," said the voluble Martha, in the course of her revelations. "You know missis's little sitting-room, with the French windows opening on the back garding. Well, I first begin to think, I did, when, one evening, as you was away, and missis was supposed to be alone in there, I was a-passin' the door and I hear missis a-talkin' to some one, and a man's voice a-answerin' of her. Which, thinkin' it very funny—bein' then late in the evening—I came straight into the kitchen and told cook, didn't I, Mrs. Holly?"

"You did, Martha," replied the person referred to, nodding her head impressively.

"Well, sir," continued Martha in her rambling way,

"me and cook thought as this was a thing as want more lookin' into. So we goes and listens together at the door of the little sitting-room, didn't we, cook?"

"We did, Martha," rejoined Mrs. Holly, again nodding her head even more impressively than before.

"And while we was a-listenin," continued Martha, "we hear things as make us look at each other and ask ourselves whatever is respectable situations a-coming to. Yes, sir, we did—we hear the missis and the gentleman a-callin' of each other 'darling,' and all manner of loving names; and then, it's true as I'm standing there, sir, we distinctly hear them a-kissin'—didn't we, cook?"

"We did, Martha," assented her fellow-servant, the impressiveness of her nod being this time quite portentous.

"Then I tap at the door," went on Martha, "and turned the handle to go in, but find it locked. 'Who's there?' says the missis, sharply. 'Only me, m'm,' says I. 'I was a-coming to ask you if there was anything I could do afore I went to bed.' Then I hears the sound of the winder being softly opened and shut agen, and a moment later missis, she unlock the door. 'I was asleep, Martha,' she says, makin' believe to yawn, 'and had locked myself in to avoid being disturbed. I hope you didn't knock more than wunst,' she says, a-eyeing of me rather suspicious. 'Oh, no, m'm' I says; which was quite true, for I hadn't only knocked that wunst. Well, that was the first evening as you was away, sir. And the next evening as you was away, me and cook decide as it was our dooty to watch what went on this time, sir, so we slips off our white aprons and puts black shawls over our heads, and we waits outside behind the yew tree in the corner of the back garding, in case there might be anythink to see. And we hadn't been waitin' long, sir, afore a gentleman—which it was too dark for us to see his face—come quietly in by the side gate and goes up to the winder and taps gently. Which a minute later the winder's opened just wide enough for him to slip through, and then it's softly closed agen. And cook and me, we creeps up to the winder and tries to peep in, but the curtings being drawed, we couldn't a-see nuthink, though we could hear them two, quite distinct, a-calling each other lovin' names, and now and then a-kissin' of each other; which it was nearly a hour sir, afore the gentleman leave agen, going out quietly by the side gate, same as he come. And that, sir," concluded Martha, "was the last time as you was away, so we haven't had no chance of seeing nuthink since."

"You are quite sure of all this?" demanded Jeffreys, whose face was very pale and stern, fixing his eyes in a scrutinising gaze on the two domestics.

"Certing, sir," replied Martha.

"Certing sure, sir," added Cook.

"And you are prepared, if necessary, to repeat what you have told me on oath?"

"I'd swear to it anywhere, sir," answered Martha, emphatically.

"Ditto me, sir," said Cook.

"But this gentleman, now?" interrogated Jeffreys. "You say it was too dark for you to see his face. Can you give me any sort of description of him—was he a big man or a small man, for instance?"

"Well, sir," rejoined Martha, "I should say as he was neither one thing nor the other, though rather on the small side—'bout as big as the milkman, shouldn't you say, Cook?"

"Just about," nodded Mrs. Holly.

"And he'd got a beard, sir," continued Martha. "Rather a long beard, which made me think he might be a hartist, or a littery gent, or sumthink o' that sort. But that was as much as I could see."

"You have nothing further to add to what you have told me?" demanded Jeffreys, after a moment's silence.

"No, sir. We've a told you everythink," replied Martha.

"Yes, sir, we've a told you everythink," corroborated Cook.

"That will do for the present, then. I need not keep you further now. But I must impress upon you not to tell anybody—and especially not to tell your mistress—of the information you have given me."

Both domestics assured him that they shouldn't dream of such a thing and then withdrew. The upshot of the interview was that Jeffreys at once consulted a fellow-solicitor as to his best course of action, and, acting on the latter's advice, he employed an inquiry agent to watch Madeleine. Probably the lady had somehow got an inkling that her movements were under surveillance; at any rate, she was so careful in her behaviour that the man employed to spy upon her found himself persistently baffled. But Jeffreys, determined to find out the whole truth, and to find it out without more delay, took the drastic step of breaking open his wife's desk one Sunday when she was at church, in order to see whether he could discover any evidence there in the shape of compromising letters.

The result of this step was decisive. In her desk he found from thirty to forty letters in the same unmistakably masculine handwriting as he had observed on the envelope of that letter which had first aroused his suspicions, and a perusal of their contents placed Madeleine's guilt beyond doubt. The writer had so far had the prudence to conceal his identity that he had refrained from attaching his surname to the "ever your devoted Boy" with which all the letters wound up. But though he had thus been careful to hide his personality, he had taken no pains whatever to conceal the real nature of his relations with Madeleine, but had let himself go with an ardour of amorous unreserve that clearly revealed the state of the case. Jeffreys' face grew black with rage as he read them. When his wife returned from church, there was a terrible scene.

Madeleine stood up to the infuriated Jeffreys with a courage and a spirit worthy of a better cause. She refused either to admit or deny anything. Her husband had stooped to question her own servants against her, to set detectives on her track, to force open her desk and read her letters. She would have nothing to say to such a man. He had taken upon himself to ferret out things to her discredit in his own mean, underhand way, and in that way he might continue to make what investigations he pleased, and to discover what he could. She was not going to hold any communication with him on the subject.

"By Heaven!" cried out Jeffreys, almost beside himself with anger at her cool defiance of him. "You shall tell me, woman! I will wring from your false lips the name of the scoundrel who has betrayed me."

She smiled at him in cold disdain.

"Will you?" she replied. "We shall see."

"By ——," he ejaculated, now white with fury, as he shook his fist at her. "I will make you tell me, you ——"

She neither quailed at his clenched fist, nor winced at the foul name by which he addressed her.

"Nothing shall ever make me tell," she answered, drawing herself up very proud and erect. "I love him far too well to give him away."

She was utterly in the wrong. She stood convicted of that which should have bowed her down with shame, if not with repentance. Yet there was something almost splendid, almost noble, in the woman's misplaced loyalty, in the courage with which, while she was ready to face any consequences for herself, she proudly refused to betray her lover.

It was in vain that Jeffreys raved, stormed, threatened. She remained defiant and immovable.

"Look here, you shameless baggage!" he cried out, at length, "let me warn you, for the last time, that unless you give me up this fellow's name, I will drag you through the exposure of the Divorce Court without mercy and without compunction."

"Drag me where you please," she answered, with proud determination. "I do not want either your mercy or your compunction. I would not have them at a gift. I hate and despise you far too much. But I love him, and I will never betray him—never, never."

With that, she turned and left him. Half an hour later she quitted her husband's roof for the last time.

Never ask for "a bottle of ink." If you do, the dealer may give you a substitute for STEPHENS'. Insist on having STEPHENS' INK. It costs no more. Resolutely refuse substitutes.

Madeleine kept her secret faithfully and well. By no artifice or investigation could Jeffreys discover the identity of her lover. In the end, when he commenced divorce proceedings, he was obliged to cite as co-respondent "some person unknown." This circumstance of itself attracted a good deal of attention to the case, which Madeleine fought out to the bitter end. But those fatal letters (corroborated by the evidence of the servants, which remained unshaken under cross-examination) were damning and conclusive. The jury found for the petitioner without leaving the box, and the Judge, observing that he did not see how they could have come to any other conclusion, pronounced the usual decree "nisi." In due course the decree was made absolute, and about a couple of years later Jeffreys married again.

Not long after that event he was surprised and not very well pleased to find lying on his plate, when he came down to breakfast one morning, a letter addressed to him in Madeleine's handwriting. Opening it, with a moody frown, he read as follows:—

I am glad to see you have married again. I hope your present wife will make you happier than I did. I think the time has now come for me to tell you the truth about my lover, whose identity I have hitherto refused to disclose.

I certainly deceived you. But not in the way you thought. The fact is this. When I realised that I did not love you, I found it simply insupportable to remain your wife. But the law says that only sin in the man or the woman can dissolve the marriage tie. Now, there was no chance of your sinning, and I could not sin in that way. I could, however, behave in such a manner as to make you believe that I had sinned. And this is what I did, in order that you might claim release from me.

Can't you guess how I did it? It was the easiest thing in the world. For what easier than to counterfeit the bass tones of a man's voice for the deception of two suspicious maids listening at the keyhole? What easier than to disguise one's self in male attire, with a false beard, and to slip in at nightfall through one's own boudoir window? What easier than to write, and to get a confidential friend to copy, any number of compromising letters, and to take care that they should fall into your hands?

Briefly: there was no man in the case. I was my own lover. There, you have my secret. I shall not disclose it to anyone else; no more, of course, will you. M.

ART NOTES.

WHY do not our Protectionist friends start a movement for the protection of English painters against the insidious approaches of the foreigner? They may have already included works of art among the articles on which an import duty should be placed for all I know to the contrary, but, if so, their intentions have not been sufficiently made known to have reached the ears of at least one artistic correspondent, who writes to me entreating me to start such a movement in the columns of TRUTH; and, by a curious coincidence, his letter reached me just at the time when I was myself pondering over the surprising number of foreign paintings—many of them good—which are being exhibited at the various galleries just now. There are French paintings at the Grafton Galleries, there is Signor Onorato Carlandi round the corner at the Fine Art Society, there are more French paintings, by deceased painters, it is true, at Obach's; there are Dutch paintings at Tinson's, in Grafton-street; there is Mr. Gyula Tornai, of Budapest, at the Goupil Gallery; and Mr. Lazlo's (also a Hungarian) portraits at the Fine Art Society again, and Spanish paintings at Waring's; and—but there is really no end to them. No wonder that the anguished home-grown painter is beginning to wonder what is to become of him before such active foreign competition, and to find himself in the dumps in more senses than one. Moreover, quite the most successful British portrait painter of the hour is an American who is also an Academician, to say nothing of Mr. Abbey. Where is it all to end? asks my anxious correspondent, whose name, if he will forgive me for saying so, has a distinctly German ring about it, though that is a detail.

Much, of course, depends upon the point of view—whether you hold the art or the artist to be the more deserving of consideration. If the former, you can but welcome the foreign invasion, and ask for more. I am not personally a believer in internationalism in art, so long as you can find any really national art to make shift with. But the truth of the matter is that our British painters have for so long chosen to disguise themselves as foreigners of one kind or another, that English art—in the national sense of the word—has ceased to exist. It is true that a number of Scots painters of the younger school have of recent years made some effort to revive it, but English art which has its roots over the border can scarcely be called national, the more so that, in common with the rest of Scottish culture, it was originally imported from France. We must remember, too, that English art—even in its most national days, when the great English school of the eighteenth century was at its prime—was almost entirely foreign in its genesis, though it is true that it translates foreign ideals into good English, instead of attempting feeble imitations of the original, as is the fashion of to-day. Things being as they are, the picture-buying public, such as it is, can scarcely be blamed for preferring the original to the imitation, and they are likely to continue doing so until a generation of English painters arises bold enough and with sufficient artistic initiative to start a new National School on their own account. Meanwhile, let us welcome foreign artists to our galleries with open arms and purses, if only that we may profit by their experience—and mistakes—in deciding exactly what we want to do for ourselves.

Of course, if we consider that the sole purpose of English art is to provide the means of existence for a certain number of English painters, the case is somewhat altered. It is at least arguable that, supposing the price of, let us say, French pictures were artificially raised 75 per cent., the English picture buyer might prefer to adorn his walls with lower-priced work by home-grown manufacturers. They tell us that the protective duties in America have enormously increased the demand for American paintings, and that all the foremost American artists are in the happy position of having more commissions than they can find time to execute. Personally I doubt whether the Transatlantic boom in "domestic" pictures is due to anything more than the increase in the number of millionaires who believe that it is the proper thing to buy pictures and are ready to take whatever is offered to them. And however it may be with an ingenuous people like the Americans, I believe that as to the English picture-buyer, who is usually a Jew, by the way—they being the only Englishmen who have any real appreciation for the arts—did he find that the price of the pictures which he desired was artificially raised beyond his means, he would cease to buy at all, rather than take what he did not want merely because it was cheap. Pictures are a luxury, after all said and done, and the man who is buying luxuries usually sees that he gets what he wants. However it be, the present Government is hardly likely to bring in a measure putting a prohibitive import duty on foreign pictures, and my correspondent will have plenty of time to prepare a strong case before the next Protectionist Government comes into power.

While dealing with my correspondence I may briefly refer to another gentleman who accuses me of inconsistency, because, while maintaining that it is impossible for the Hanging Committee of the R.A. to properly weigh the merits of all the works of art submitted to them, I yet expressed my opinion that Mr. Dressler's portrait-bust of the Queen of Spain had been rejected on its merits. To which I might reply that, in the first place, at the time the choice was being made this year the name of the Queen of Spain was upon every lip, and that her statue would have accordingly every chance of catching the attention even of a committee of R.A.s from its subject alone. But I prefer to accept my correspondent's reproof and to merely regard the incident as proving that blessed chance is quite as capable of arriving at a satisfactory selection from the pictures submitted as were the most earnest endeavours of the most indefatigable Hanging Committee ever chosen—which is exactly what I set out to prove in the article to which my critic refers.

MALOJA, Engadine, Switzerland.—Palace Hotel, Kursaal, 6 000 ft. altitude. Completely renovated 1906. Private Baths. Golf. Tennis.—EDWARD SMART, Manager. Prospectus on application.

If we are at present given the choice of many foreign picture-shows, we may console ourselves with the reflection that they are of unusually high quality. To take two of them—as far asunder as the poles. At Messrs. Obach's gallery is a most interesting collection of works by French masters of the last century, to which I referred very briefly last week. It contains, as is customary, several canvases of the first merit, of which I would here particularly mention "The Poacher," by Diaz, a scene in the forest, with sunlight falling vividly through the leaves, the whole as striking as it is, considering all things, unexpected. Among the Corots, of which there are several, the most important, though one of the least attractive, is the large "Saint Sebastian," while, to my mind, the most desirably characteristic is the smaller "Quiet River." There is a very large Daubigny, "Le Verger," not wildly exciting in treatment, a couple of Monticellis, the "Fête Champêtre" being the more notable, and Millet's "Trait d'Union." All of which, separately and in conjunction, serve to make us thankful that the protective duties above referred to are not yet in force.

Mr. Gyula Tornai is a painter whose work has not been hitherto familiar to me, but of which I can honestly say that I hope to see more. The paintings of Japan and India which he is exhibiting at the Goupil Gallery show that not only is he a painter of more than average powers—though it must be said that his work is distinctly unequal—but that he has a freshness and originality of colour and conception which are quite tonic in these half-hearted days. His effects, it is true, are frequently barbaric, but it is a healthy barbarism, which I, for one, very much prefer to the anæmia of decadence. What is more, though we may shake our heads doubtfully before some of his colour effects, he arrives at exceedingly convincing results, and some of his faces and figures are sufficiently life-like to be startling. Incidentally, I fear, he shows only too clearly, what many of us have already suspected, that "Madame Chrysanthème" is anything but beautiful, and that for a really attractive geisha we must seek upon the boards of English musical comedy rather than in the tea-houses of Nippon.

The portraits being shown by Mr. Lazlo, the other Hungarian painter referred to, at the Fine Art Society's galleries, are chiefly remarkable socially rather than artistically. Indeed, Mr. Lazlo would seem to number the greater part of the Continental aristocracy among his clientèle, a happy state of things which places his work far above the reach of plebeian criticism. Signor Carlandi, whose paintings of the Tiber are shown at the same galleries, is certainly among the most able of modern Italian painters. His drawings have decided charm, as well as breadth and atmosphere, and although he is actually a pupil of the late Giovanni Costa, the leader of the reformers of modern Italian art, his chief external influence would seem to be derived from Peter de Windt, whose work is forcibly recalled in several of the drawings here shown, as—to choose at random—that of the old bridge at Perugia.

At the Leicester Galleries Mr. G. D. Armour brings us sharply back to England by his exhibition of a number of sporting sketches and drawings, which prove very forcibly, not only that he understands the point of a pencil, but those of a horse into the bargain. He has humour, also, as he shows in his idealisation of the facial expression proper to those who, arriving at a "bullfinch," find that their mount has unaccountably deserted them. In another room, Mr. John R. Reid shows a number of his characteristic studies of north-country fishing ports and seascapes—a little hard in colour, but brimming over with atmosphere.

Before I close I should like to call attention to the novel enterprise—though it is the third year—shown by a well-known painter, Mr. Wynford Dewhurst, in putting his pictures up to public auction. Thirty of them are to be sold at Willis's Rooms to-morrow (Thursday), and I, for one, hope that they may secure satisfactory bids, not only because Mr. Dewhurst is among the ablest of the newer Impressionists, but because everything which tends to impress upon painters in general the virtues of business initiative is warmly to be welcomed.

The Woodland Laundry, Park-rd. East, Acton. Tel., 629 Chiswick. "A really first-class laundry at moderate prices."—The Ladies' Field. "It appeals to dainty people."—The Queen. Please apply for Price List, &c.

MUSIC.

BRITISH BANDSMEN AND FOREIGN RIVALS.

The British summer having set in, in the time-honoured formula, with its usual severity, the inevitable discussion has been started as to the rights and wrongs of British instrumentalists in connection with seaside orchestras. That inveterate humorist, Mr. James Glover, playfully subscribing himself for the occasion "Giacomo Gantieri," set the ball rolling with a letter to the Referee in reference to the Duke of Devonshire's engagement of "a German band and a foreign conductor" for Eastbourne, and others have kept it vigorously on the move since. It is a subject, as it happens, which affords scope for endless controversy, so it is not surprising, perhaps, to find considerable diversity of opinion expressed. Even Mr. Glover himself hardly seems to know his own mind on the point. Thus, while he enlarges in one sentence on "the unpatriotism of the Duke of Devonshire's conduct" in looking abroad for his players, he says in another: "I have and will again engage foreigners in my orchestras," and in yet a third complains that half the musicians of most "foreign" bands are usually Englishmen in disguise. Another contributor to the discussion, Mr. Theo Ward, musical director to the Eastbourne Corporation, addresses himself to the question why foreigners are preferred, and finds the reason in their greater enthusiasm and emotionalism, the lack of which qualities in our British performers he ascribes rather oddly to our British music schools. A third sarcastically retorts that "if what we hear from the average foreign player is 'emotion,' I am not surprised at our professors instantly suppressing it," while a fourth asks why the Duke of Devonshire should consult His Worship, Giacomo Gantieri, or any one else, when choosing a conductor for his own band.

The whole question is, indeed, a rather difficult one, but most impartial outsiders, looking at the matter from the standpoint of Mill's "disinterested and benevolent spectator," would probably be agreed that the right principle to be observed is that of free trade tempered by preference for the native artist when he is as good as the foreigner. Unfortunately, this last condition is not always fulfilled. British orchestral players are, no doubt, among the finest in the world, but it is equally certain that they also include many of a very different stamp. In other words, when they are good they are very good, but when they are bad they are horrid; and this is a fact not always borne in mind by those who point proudly to the London Symphony Orchestra, that of Covent Garden, and the like. Those who would learn more on this subject should consult Mr. Orcherton, of the Orchestral Association, who make it their business to test all applicants for admission to their ranks. To which it may be added that some of the most hopelessly inefficient performers come from one of the best known teaching institutions in London. Is it any wonder that, rather than players of this class, capable foreigners get the preference? For it must always be remembered that the best of our native players are not usually to be obtained for seaside orchestras. Even in the case of this new Eastbourne band, the conditions of which as to pay and so forth are quite exceptionally attractive, it is a fact that the Orchestral Association, when applied to, was unable to supply anything like the number of players wanted from among their membership of over 700.

It therefore becomes too often a case of choosing between inefficient native players or competent foreign ones, and in these circumstances, who can blame those responsible if they choose the superior article, whether imported or home-grown? After all, indifferent musical performances will not prove any more acceptable to the hearer because the players are guaranteed British. At the same time, one may agree that every effort should be made to obtain the native article if possible. Other things equal, the claims of the British performer ought certainly to be preferred—more especially, perhaps, when the undertaking is one financed out of the rates, and this applies alike to conductors and rank and file. The notion that the public nowadays has any particular preference for the foreigner is, I imagine, quite a mistaken one. If foreign bands have often obtained the preference in the past, it has been simply because it has been more convenient to engage them on one ground or another—because they have been better players at the price, because their conductor has known his work, because they have been more amenable to discipline, and so on. It is simply a question of supply and demand, and the survival of the fittest—fittest not meaning necessarily the best, but those best adapted to a particular purpose and particular requirements.

The Gala performance at Covent Garden on Tuesday was, as it is quite safe to affirm, even though writing before the event, a great success, for this is one of those events the success of which is a foregone conclusion. In cases of bereavement the discreet hatter when applied to for a badge of woe invariably inquires what was the precise degree of relationship of the departed, in order that he may supply an article correctly adapted to the requirements of the case. Similar regard for the proprieties naturally dictated a gala of exceptional magnificence when the honoured guests were to be none other than the brother and sister-in-law of her Majesty, and if the King and Queen of Denmark do not carry back with them a very favourable opinion of our operatic resources, this will certainly be due to no lack of effort on the part of the powers that be in Bow-street.

Last week several interesting performances were given. In "Tannhäuser" Miss Gleeson-White was given a bigger opportunity than she has hitherto obtained, and made a very respectable Venus—if that is not a contradiction in terms. Another English artist was very much to the fore in "Carmen" on Thursday in the person of Mme. Kirkby Lunn, who shared the honours of the evening with Caruso, who, as it happened, was not quite at the top of his form. Saturday brought a new tenor, Signor Bassi, who gave a fine account of himself in "Pagliacci," even if he hardly impressed all his hearers at first as a second Caruso. But then Caruso took some time before he acquired his present popularity, and of Signor Bassi it may certainly be said that he is one of the finest singers who have come to us from Italy for some time. Sammarco's Tonio and Destinn's Nedda were other features of a fine all-round performance. In "Cavalleria" the new American tenor, Mr. Wheatley, made a successful if not electrifying début, Mlle. Scalar sang finely as Santuzza, and Miss Gleeson-White was the Lola.

In the concert-room lately no one has produced a more powerful impression than Frl. Julia Culp, a Dutch vocalist, who profoundly impressed all her hearers at her recital on Saturday. The number of brilliant women singers who have appeared this season, including Landi, Gerhardt, Tilly Koenen, and now Frl. Culp, has indeed been quite remarkable, and not by any means the least of them is the last-named. Another fine singer who has lately been heard is Mlle. de St. André, while a third was Herr Reinhold von Warlich, who gave a quite memorable performance of Schumann's "Dichterliebe" cycle at the Æolian Hall. One-man concerts by unknown modern composers are rather daring ventures, but several quite enjoyable works were heard at that given by Dr. Percy Rideout last week. His music is unequal, but, at its best, individual and interesting. Violinists have not been quite so numerous lately, but Joska Szigeti's recital showed this youth once again to hold a high place among living players of his age. Two gifted pianists who have been heard are Herr Backhaus and Mr. Herbert Fryer, while in the way of miscellaneous concerts that of Miss Helen Mar, who "tells stories" so delightfully, proved entertaining as usual.

The Gibbons celebration at the Abbey last week was a very interesting and enjoyable affair, and though it would be rash perhaps to anticipate an absolute boom in Gibbons' music as a consequence, it is not too much to say that a fine old English musician who was to many merely a name before, will in future mean a good deal more. It is certain, indeed, that the actual beauty and impressiveness of his music came as an absolute revelation to many who went prepared, if not to scoff, at any rate to be bored, and came away in point of fact delighted. Gibbons truly "reached a hand through time" when he penned some of the wondrously beautiful and expressive music performed so admirably under Sir Frederick Bridge's direction.

M. Messager's new opera entitled "Fortunio," based on "Le Chandelier" of Alfred de Musset, seems to have made a great success in Paris, and it may be hoped that in due course we may have the opportunity in London of making acquaintance with the latest product of M. Messager's graceful pen. From the accounts to hand one gathers that, as in his previous works, M. Messager has handled a dainty story with appropriate lightness of touch and felicity of invention. "The first two acts," reports one, "are particularly delightful. At a given moment the music, more especially in the first act, recalls Sullivan—a delicate compliment to the Entente and the composer's residence in London." Perhaps the "delicate compliment" was hardly intended by the composer, but neither Sullivan nor Messager need object to being compared with the other. When, however, the same writer gravely informs his London readers that "a work of his, which has received the joyous name of 'Les P'tites Michus,' is a little masterpiece in its way, and has achieved an immense success," one perceives that he has not by any means learnt yet the full extent of M. Messager's triumphs.

Mr. Santley's many admirers will have been glad to note that as the result of their recent efforts in recognition of his jubilee the handsome sum of £2,160 has been realised—this being the balance in hand after the payment of all expenses, and that Mr. Santley's banking account has now been enriched by this amount. Not only to Mr. Santley, but to the Earl of Kilmorey, who worked so hard on his behalf, congratulations are due.

Mme. Nordica's proposed American Bayreuth on the Hudson River is a bold project, and every one will hope that it may come to fruition and be attended by success. The establishment of a similar theatre in this country has been suggested more than once, and if its site were well chosen and the thing were properly worked out, it might conceivably succeed; but so far no one has been disposed to take up the idea seriously. Mme. Nordica, on the other hand, seems to have been more fortunate in obtaining financial backers, and we are told of millionaires who are "only too anxious" to contribute. Can it be that they think there is money in it?

Some interesting remarks ascribed to Herr Nikisch on the subject of conducting are reproduced in a recent number of the Musical Courier of New York. Nikisch is a great conductor, but not all will be prepared to endorse the principles which he seems to have laid down, whereby it would appear the composer becomes only the man who gives the conductor his opportunity. It is all very well to talk of "bringing out the real intentions of the master," but who is to know what these were if his plain directions are to be flagrantly violated in the manner apparently advocated by Nikisch? If such a course as he advocates is legitimate, where is it to stop? Why not re-score the old masters entirely, introduce new instruments, modernise their harmonies, and so on? After all, is not the public entitled to hear a Brahms symphony or a Beethoven concerto as it was actually designed to sound by the composer? Nikisch seems to take the view that a conductor is, in photographic parlance, a kind of licensed "toucher up," whose business it is to lick the composer's imperfect negative into shape. When a Nikisch wields the bâton the result, no doubt, is well enough, but what of less gifted practitioners?

Know HUMPHREYS, and be well dressed. HUMPHREYS, opposite South Kensington Station, one of the biggest and best Dressmakers. Unusual originality combines with sensible, not fancy prices.

Nikisch seems to have had some interesting things to say, too, as to the influence of the different orchestral instruments on character. Thus the playing of the oboe and bassoon induces nervousness and irritability, and these players must accordingly be petted. Their opposites are the men who play the big wind instruments and the violas, which give their players strength and composure, so that they can be handled less tenderly. the clarinet player, on the other hand, inclines to sentimentality, and must be dealt with accordingly. In short, the instrument makes the man. It is an ingenious theory, and it would be interesting to know if it is supported by the testimony of the instrumentalists themselves.

The many English admirers of the music of Edward MacDowell, the gifted American composer, will be grieved to learn that his condition remains unchanged, and that though he may live for years, there is no prospect of his ever recovering his reason. Meanwhile, good progress has been made with the fund which has been started in America for the support of the composer and his unhappy wife and family, and contributions are now further invited from those in this country disposed to help in a most distressing case. Contributions may be addressed to Mr. W. W. A. Elkin (Messrs. Elkin and Co., 8 and 10, Beak-street), or to the hon. treasurer, Mr. G. C. Ashton Jonson, 15, Pelham-crescent, S.W.

The sadly premature death of Herr Mühlfeld is very regrettable. The famous clarinettist was deservedly a great favourite with London audiences. His wonderful art inspired some of Brahms's most beautiful works, notably the glorious clarinet quintet, and his playing was worthy of them. The only difficulty was to persuade him that he deserved the praises showered on him, for his amiability of disposition was equalled only by his modesty. Brahms first met Herr Mühlfeld while on a visit to the Duke of Meiningen in 1891, and soon became one of his warmest admirers, getting him to play to him in private piece after piece from his répertoire, and discussing in detail the peculiar characteristics and resources of his instrument. Mühlfeld in his turn had the greatest admiration for Brahms's music. It will be long before we hear his like again.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—In reading "Queen Hortense and her Friends" (1) the comment of a duchess on a representation of "King Lear" recurs to me: "These Leahs," drawled her grace, "seem an odd family." The whole Napoleonic household, not excepting the Emperor's stepchildren, Eugène and Hortense Beauharnais, seem "an odd family." "Hortense," said her mother, Josephine, "must marry either a Bonaparte or a gentleman," making unintentionally an invidious distinction, which those that knew anything of Napoleon's kith and kin would make intentionally. Hortense's husband, Louis, fulfilled, as a Bonaparte, one of these two conditions—but the other? Well, he was brave and honest, but for the rest, as small and poor and mean a creature as could have been found for a husband. Hortense, who could not endure him, was forced into the marriage by the selfishness of Josephine, who, already fearing a divorce, wished desperately to strengthen by another strand her hold on the Bonapartes. If Hortense with reason detested her husband, he, on his side, and not without reason, distrusted her. A biographer is naturally sympathetic, and even partial, and the biographer of Queen Hortense is rather her counsel than her judge, yet even she fails to make her out either an exemplary wife or a grateful stepdaughter. "Both Hortense and Eugène," said Josephine, "would be monsters of ingratitude if they did not give back to the Emperor affection and thankfulness for all he had done for them"; yet both ratted in the most shameless way (Eugène even more shamelessly than his sister) when Napoleon's star was on the wane. When Hortense tried to justify herself to Napoleon for accepting from the Bourbons a title in place of the rank he had conferred upon her, the Emperor exclaimed: "You took counsel, you say, with your heart! Then it ought to have told you, madam, that when one has shared the prosperity of a family, one must know how to endure its adversities." As for Eugène, he lost not a moment in deserting the sinking ship. "I had scarcely kissed my mother," he wrote to his wife, "before I received the authorisation to present myself at the Tuileries. I have therefore offered my homage to Louis XVIII., who received me perfectly, and asked after you with much interest." Eugène even had himself announced as "The Marquis de Beauharnais"! in order to emphasise his desertion of the man to whom he owed everything. When, then, you are asked, as you are again and again asked in these two volumes, to pity fallen greatness in the persons of Hortense and Eugène, you cannot help remembering that but for Napoleon they would have lived and died in obscurity, and that they owed their rank, even after the fall of their benefactor, to what he had done for them in the day of his power. I need hardly say that "Queen Hortense," dealing, as it does, with the inner and domestic life of Napoleon and of his family, is extremely interesting.

Miss Betham-Edwards's "Literary Rambles in France" (2) appears opportunely in support of the movement to present this graceful and indefatigable author with a jubilee testimonial. Her first novel, "The White House by the Sea," was published when she was twenty-one, and since then and up to her recent serious illness she has published volume upon volume, and made her own the province of interpreting to English people the charm of French domestic character. In her latest volume, as its title suggests, she follows in the footsteps of French immortals—Flaubert, Balzac, Rouget de Lisle, Gresset, George Sand, etc. Did you know, by the way, that père Grandet, the father of the immortal "Eugénie Grandet," was a real person, who began life as a rag merchant at Saumur, blossomed into a money-lender and millionaire, purchased the chateau of Montreuil-Bellay, over which visitors were shown by himself, clothed in such thread-bare garments that they were most generous in their tips which he pocketed? Flaubert's laboured style recalls Stevenson's confession to Sidney Colvin that, "working in my constipated mosaic manner, I spent a living hour upon a single sentence." Similarly, Flaubert confesses, in a letter to George Sand, "You have no notion what it is to sit throughout an entire day with your head between your hands, beating your unfortunate brains for a word." On the other hand, what a single, sudden, and amazing inspiration was the hymn that fired all France, and fires it still to this hour, the Marseillaise? Miss Betham-Edwards tells again, and with spirit, the astonishing story of its inspiration. I hope the appeal for subscriptions to the jubilee testimonial to this admirable and indefatigable worker—to be sent in to the hon. secretary, Mr. Clodd, London Joint Stock Bank, 5, Princes-street, E.C.—will meet a generous response.

The moral of "Fräulein Schmidt and Mr. Anstruther" (3), by the author of "Elisabeth and her German Garden," seems to be that the French epigram is as true of a man as of a woman: "Une femme est comme votre ombre; courez après, elle vous fuit; fuez-la, elle court après vous." To be sure, we have only the lady's letters by which to judge herself and her lover; but from them I should infer him to be a weak creature and her less of an "independent woman" than she claims in the second title of the book to be. She shows little of the self-restraint of an independent woman in her love letters to "Mr. Anstruther," and little of the pride of an independent woman in continuing the correspondence—as a friend—after he had shamelessly jilted her. This, however, is but to criticise the frame of the picture, since "Mr. Anstruther" is but the setting, so to say, of some light, bright, humorous, and happy descriptions of Fräulein Schmidt's impressions and experiences, and of her criticisms, not always, perhaps, so happy, of German and English poets. In complaining of Christina Rossetti's dirge-like poems with their "constant cry that she wants to die, that she hopes to die, that she's going to die, shall die, can die, must die, and that nobody is to weep for her, but that there are to be elaborate and moving arrangements of lilies and roses and winding sheets," she adds: "At least in one place she gives directions as to the proper use of green grass and wet dewdrops upon her grave—implying that dewdrops are sometimes dry." Surely a child might see at a glance that in the verse the Fräulein alludes to, it is the grass, not the dew, that is wet:—

(1) "Queen Hortense and Her Friends." 1783-1837. By I. A. Taylor. With Twenty-four Full-page Illustrations and Two Photogravure Plates. Two vols. (London: Hutchinson & Co. 24s.)

(2) "Literary Rambles in France." By Miss Betham-Edwards. (London: Archibald Constable & Co. 10s. 6d. net.)

(3) "Fräulein Schmidt and Mr. Anstruther: Being the Letters of an Independent Woman." By the Author of "Elisabeth and Her German Garden." (Smith, Elder, and Co. 6s.)

> Be the green grass above me
> With showers and dewdrops wet;
> And, if thou wilt, remember,
> And, if thou wilt, forget.

However, "Fräulein Schmidt and Mr. Anstruther" will not disappoint the many ardent admirers of "Elisabeth and her German Garden."—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

The book by Walter Savage Landor, entitled "Charles James Fox: A Commentary on his Life and Character," which is now published for the first time (Murray, 9s. net), has a curious history. In 1811 the "Memoirs of Charles James Fox," by J. B. Trotter, for some years his private secretary, made a considerable stir, and it was this work which provoked Landor into the writing of his "Commentary." He sent his manuscript to the John Murray of that day, who, after it had been put into type, formed the opinion that it was too intemperate and even libellous for publication as it stood. It seems to have been a very reasonable opinion. At Murray's request Southey tried to persuade Landor to tone down certain passages. Landor appears to have been willing to do this, but a further difficulty arose about the dedication of the work to the President of the United States—a dedication full of "perilous stuff," and especially perilous at a moment when a war between England and the States was plainly imminent. Murray proposed that he should procure another publisher for the "Commentary," but the irascible author refused to consent to this, choosing to consider that the book was "condemned to eternal night." The manuscript and all the printed sheets were destroyed, with the exception of one copy, which was kept by Southey. This copy was given by Southey to Mr. Monckton Milnes, afterwards Lord Houghton, and is now in the possession of his son, the Earl of Crewe, who allowed it to be transcribed for the purpose of the present publication. The reprint has been edited by Mr. Stephen Wheeler, who supplies a most interesting introduction and many illuminating notes on Landor's work. Lord Houghton said that this "Commentary" contained "perhaps more fair and moderate political and literary judgments, delivered in his (Landor's) own humour than any work of his earlier or maturer years." One can imagine how this will surprise any reader making his first acquaintance with Landor in these pages. He will wonder what sort of a writer he was when less fair and moderate. Of Fox and Pitt, too, Landor speaks in the most bitter and scathing terms. But, of course, the "Commentary" must not be judged from these vituperative passages. Landor says many things on political matters which, as Mr. Wheeler remarks, "have their bearings on questions of our own day," and a good part of the book is, moreover, occupied with literary criticisms which, to the majority of readers, will be far more interesting.

Nobody could have been found better qualified than Mr. S. Baring-Gould to compile the volume on "Devon" (2s. 6d. net), which is the latest of Messrs. Methuen's "Little Guides." Mr. Baring-Gould has written about many places at home and abroad, but of his own fair county he has, of course, a peculiarly intimate knowledge, and the tourist in Devonshire will find this small book an invaluable companion. Incidentally, Mr. Baring-Gould makes some caustic comments on the hideous and vulgar process of so-called "restoration" which not a few beautiful old churches in Devonshire—as in every other part of the country—have suffered. The book has a number of illustrations from photographs, and two maps. To the well-known series of volumes dealing with "Ancient Cities," Messrs. Methuen have now added one on "Dublin" (4s. 6d. net), from the pen of Mr. S. A. O. Fitzpatrick, with some illustrations by Mr. W. Curtis Green. Mr. Fitzpatrick's history and survey of the city, past and present, should be especially acceptable and serviceable to the visitors who are now being attracted there by the Dublin Exhibition.

Miss Charlotte Lorrimer's "The Call of the East" (Gay and Bird, 3s. 6d.) is a series of tales and sketches of China and Japan displaying considerable literary skill in combination with a rare insight into the mystery and fascination of the Far East. Whether in such stories as "The Faith of Chun Tai" and "O Yuri San," or in "Feeler's Convoy" and "Barton's Eurasian Wife," Miss Lorrimer is equally happy, while her descriptive pieces are delightful reading.

In a book to be published by Messrs. Constable under the title of "Janus in Modern Life," Professor Flinders Petrie, the eminent Egyptologist, gives his ideas on some problems of the modern world. The work is a development from his recent Huxley lecture, and it deals with questions of race and immigration, communism, philanthropy, and individualism in relation to historical philosophy, from a modern point of view.

Mr. Arnold White contributes an introduction to a book entitled "John Bull's Army from Within," which Mr. Francis Griffiths announces for immediate publication. The book, which is an exposure of British military law and army methods, is from the pen of ex-Sergeant-Major Edmondson, whose case was dealt with in TRUTH some years ago.

Mr. Heinemann is publishing this week a new book entitled "The Industrial Republic," by Mr. Upton Sinclair, the author of "The Jungle." Mr. Sinclair has been a close observer of the organisation of the varied industrial institutions of the United States, and in this work he gives his interpretation of the present and probable future position of capital and labour.

New Zealand is the scene of another of "Alien's" novels, "His Neighbour's Landmark" (Digby, Long, and Co., 6s.), which should be quite as successful as any of her previous books. "Alien" always writes well. The characters of Paul Featherstone and the wife from whom he was parted, of Philip Stroud and Ben, are cleverly sketched, and the story holds the reader's interest to the last page.

A very interesting series of monographs devoted to the bookplate is that being issued by Messrs. Schulze and Co., of Edinburgh. The latest addition to the number contains twenty-four examples of the Ex-libris of Mr. Charles E. Dawson, and many besides collectors will welcome the opportunity of acquiring examples of Mr. Dawson's graceful art. The edition is limited to three hundred and twenty-five copies, twenty-five of which are printed on Japanese vellum.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—The third Court of the season was held at last on Thursday, and was a brilliant occasion. The Indian Princes were an item of splendour in the scene. The Queen wore mauve richly embroidered in Indian gold, and glittered with jewels not often worn together, viz., rubies and emeralds, and, of course, magnificent diamonds. Her Majesty's Orders were the Garter, the Victoria and Albert, the Crown of India, and the Danish Royal Family. Two British composers were favoured by being included in the programme given by his Majesty's band—Cowen and T. F. Dunhill.

CORSET KRUTOID.—The latest nouveauté Parisien in tricot forms an elegant and smart up-to-date contour and lengthens the waist line.—Write or call at MESDAMES SYKES, JOSEPHINE, & Co., The Royal Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, London.

There were many pretty faces, some perfectly exquisite flowers, and among the dresses several Buccleuch and Lady de L'Isle and Dudley both wore triumphs of the modiste's art. The Duchess of brocade, but satin was more favoured by the rest. Lady Waterford's ivory satin was delicately embroidered in silver, and the train was lined with rose-pink and trimmed with very fine old Irish lace. The young Marchioness's ornaments were superb diamonds and pearls. Princess Alexis Dolgorouki's dress was greatly admired. It was cloth of silver veiled with the loveliest lace, finest Brussels caught with gold roses. The train, in white and gold shot moire, was lined with cloth of gold and trimmed with trails of gold roses. A wonderful gown of grey satin, embroidered in a rich design of oxydised and bright silver, was worn by the Countess of Wharncliffe. On the train was some lovely old point d'Alençon. The Countess of Loudoun wore pale blue marquisette with a raised, tapering design in velvet outlined with silver. Her black velvet train was lined with silver tissue.

Baroness de Meyer looked poetic, as usual, in a white satin gown and black velvet train lined with coral pink. Lady Dickson-Poynder was beautiful in a white dewdrop tulle gown and train of old rose crêpe-de-chine bordered with a deep silk fringe.

A Paquin gown of great beauty, was worn by Baroness Mechlin. It was princess-shape in white satin, the white brocade train lined with white satin, and trimmed with La France roses tied with blue chiffon.

Some of the brides presented on their marriage wore lovely dresses. Lady Hyde was one. Her rich white satin had a deep hem headed with trails of roses and buds worked in raised silver tissue. The bodice was a dainty arrangement of tulle, Brussels point, and silver roses and buds. The train was pale green satin veiled with silver-embroidered net and trimmed with Brussels point. Lady Kitty Vincent also wore her wedding gown. Mrs. Tyrrell Cavendish, a very pretty American girl, wore her wedding gown—white satin with raised embroideries, and she had lovely diamonds. She carried lilies of the valley.

One of the débutantes was Lady Helen Grosvenor, presented by her mother, Katherine Duchess of Westminster. Lady Helen wore white tulle strewn lightly with silver sequins of the very smallest. Trails of silver roses and buds trimmed the bodice, and silver roses also trimmed the white satin train. A Goodyear shower bouquet of white roses and lily of the valley gave that look of completeness that only well-arranged flowers can. Lady Marjorie Dalrymple, another débutante, wore white striped gauze trimmed with dewdrop lace and tulle, and carried a perfectly exquisite Arcade bouquet of white orchids.

Two-thirds of the gowns were Princess or Empire of the demi-semi order.

Princess Henry of Battenberg distributed the prizes to the successful competitors at the seventeenth annual Children's Salon competition held last Saturday at Caxton Hall, Westminster. These children have done wonders during the seventeen years, having founded and endowed no less than seven cots for sick poor children in London hospitals. They are now working for the endowment of an eighth cot, to be called after the Young Prince of Asturias, by permission of the King and Queen of Spain. The proceedings were interesting, as usual. Mr. J. S. Wood spoke on the year's work of the Salon. Mrs. Montagu-Forbes ("Levana") addressed her "children," Dr. Edmund Cautley thanked the young workers on behalf of the Belgrave Hospital, where the next cot is to be, Mr. A. J. Warden proposed a vote of thanks to the judges, whose task is not exactly a light one, and Lady Troubridge, who speaks remarkably well, returned thanks for the judges, who included some very distinguished persons.

Eglantine is the pretty name in French of the wild rose. I saw a linen dress in this delicious colour at Humphreys' in Onslow-place. The skirt was very cleverly draped, so that without being tight or dragging as some tight skirts do, it clung to the figure and yet was very full about the hem. A little above the latter was a band of pink guipure. The bodice was embroidered white linen and lingerie, and over it the pink formed a sublimised sort of pinafore with kimono sleeves. The sweet part of it was a series of graduated strappings of the pink linen arranged at distances of about half their width from each other, making a very pretty effect round the sleeves, the neck opening, and in front under three tiny bows, also of the linen. Such a delicious river frock! Some lucky girl is having it copied in blue linen, a soft shade between cornflower and Sèvres. I admired very much a grey foulard with full cape sleeves of Irish crochet falling like deep epaulettes over foulard sleeves. The bodice was trimmed down the heart-shaped opening with painted velvet in curious tones of mauve and blue, that warmed up the cold, pure grey in a most artistic way. Two or three bands of black satin trimmed the skirt, and there was a belt of the same, with a bit of the painted velvet laid on at either side. This belt was carried up the back to a little above the waist, and there held with a clasp of fine Etruscan work. This is the kind of gown that none but a gentlewoman would think of wearing, and of which one sees so many at Humphreys'. A very uncommon looking dress was in a soft shade of mist-blue voile embroidered in a tapering design all round the skirt from the hem upwards. The bodice and sleeves were also embroidered and made full, with a silk belt caught rather high at the back. A very effective black and white stripe was so cleverly manipulated that only the black stripes showed on the hips, where one likes to look slight. A couple of frills of the material trimmed the skirt. The bodice had the stripes very deftly managed, and the sleeves were black lace over white. A capital race-gown.

One of the curious things about some of the gowns is that tarnished gold, silver, or steel is used in trimming them, and proves much more artistic in effect than bright metal. A Josephine evening gown in black chiffon embroidered in old silver was finished round the shoulders with tarnished gold and black. The chiffon was draped over gold tissue, also dulled to the artistic tint. A sweetly becoming frock, so graceful are the lines.

I have often wondered, in view of the enormous success that the Dublin Horse Show has always been, that no effort has up to this year been made to hold a really good horse show in the West End of London. Those that have been held at the Agricultural Hall from time to time have been all very well and satisfactory up to a point, but they have never got beyond that point, which has been a long way behind the standard reached in Dublin. I know, of course, that we are not supposed over here to be quite so horsy as our friends over in Ireland, but I believe that this has only been owing to a want of opportunity to show our "horsiness."

Now the Agricultural Hall is a little outside the radius of West End wanderers. It is, as a matter of fact, but little further from, say, such a centre of London as Piccadilly-circus than Olympia is, but it is a great deal further from what we are pleased to call the West End of London, and it means going East to what are to the majority of West Enders practically unexplored regions. It has, therefore, never been really popular. In Olympia we have a far more commodious building in a far more get-at-able neighbourhood. The motor shows there have proved this. What, therefore, more appropriate than that the lovers of the horse should have jumped at the idea of competing with their motor competitors on the same ground? And when two such shows enter into competition there cannot be the slightest element of doubt as to which of the two will command the greater popularity.

REDFERN.—Exclusive and original Models in Walking, Dinner and Evening Gowns, Theatre Wraps, &c. Paris millinery, lingerie, blouses, &c.—REDFERN, Conduit-street and Bond-street.

LAKMÉ, 22, DAVIES-STREET, BERKELEY-SQUARE.—Dressing-gowns and fine lingerie. American Novelties. Cotillon favours. 8674 Gerrard.

It is naturally recognised by now that from merely a utilitarian point of view the horse has to give way to the motor in the same way that the old stage coach had to give way to the railway. But we do not—thank goodness, I say—look upon everything to-day solely from a utilitarian point of view. What is the use of cricket? What is the use of golf? What is the use of football? Why, to give health, exercise, and recreation to thousands. And so it is with the horse. And so may it, so will it, remain to the end of time.

Of course you have read in the daily papers of the wonderfully effective manner in which Olympia has been decked out for the show. The decorations are on the most lavish scale, and the appearance of the interior of the great building has been completely transformed, the whole effect being extremely picturesque. Never before has Olympia presented so striking and brilliant a scene. Everything in connection with what may be called the "stage management" of the show has, indeed, been exceedingly well done. One thing which especially struck me during a somewhat hurried visit on the opening day was the remarkable punctuality with which the programme was carried out in every detail—and punctuality is always most difficult of achievement in any show of this kind. For this and all the arrangements much credit is due to the management, which, I noticed, was prominently represented by Lord Lonsdale and Mr. Euren. Among the first afternoon's competitions I personally found the class for ladies' hacks most interesting, the riders, too, coming in for a large share of admiration. The general opinion seemed to be that the elegant appearance and horsemanship of the young lady who rode the winner of the first prize possibly had something to do with the award. However, I need not tell you about the different competitions—in which England, and Ireland, too, have come out well—or even describe the varied features of the programme, to which the press has devoted so many columns. Suffice it to say that the show is a great "society," and also a great popular, success, Olympia being packed at each performance.

I have received the following from Dublin:

DEAREST MADGE,—If only we could stop talking and thinking of the weather! In May it troubled us sorely, but now in June it is simply dismaying us. We more than ever cannot get it out of our thoughts. The topic, however, is not now commonplace. The weather of last week was a real novelty, a new sensation, or series of sensations, at this season. Where were the sweetness of the sweet of the year, and the gracious charm of the month of roses? The summer lawns were marshes, and the leaves of leafy June, dripped with rain and rustled in glacial winds. We wondered if the sun would ever shine again, and if not, we wondered anxiously, how we should manage to do without him. In this month we usually desert our capital, and, crossing the water, betake ourselves to the great capital of the kingdom, or less ambitiously we go to the seaside or seek rural enjoyment in the country. The attraction of the International Exhibition, however, has made Dublin fuller than usual at this season, and the distraction of the weather has kept many wise ones still in their winter quarters. After all, a roof over our heads, and a cozy corner by the fireside, have been as yet our chief needs; as Mrs. Battle wanted but a clear fire and a clean hearth with the rigour of the game, so do we want them in the rigour of the weather. The worst of it is that we are such creatures of habit, we are not able, all at once, to adapt ourselves comfortably to circumstances. We will keep looking back, and hankering after the things we were wont to do in other years. How many of our sex, even during the cold severity of the past few weeks, have not been able to abandon the tradition of wearing light clothing at this time of the year! How many ills they have courted, in filmy costumes and thin, lace-like blouses!

Lady Aberdeen resumed last week many of her philanthropic and industrial activities before going to Buxton for a short "cure," to complete her recovery. She left Ireland at the end of the week, but will return in a fortnight or so to the Viceregal Lodge, where a garden party will be given at the end of the month. Of course, even the very flying visit of the King and Queen to Dublin, will give Lord and Lady Aberdeen a great deal to do in the way of Viceregal and other preparations. The sporting world is much excited about the "command" race meeting at Leopardstown, and especially the feminine portion of it. Every one has his or her own particular point of view, and to the majority of our sex, a Sovereign's presence at a race meeting means a most glorious occasion, and an opportunity for smart dressing. Supposing winter is over by the 11th of July, we can only faintly imagine what the splendours of a Royal Leopardstown's dressing will be. In addition to the enthusiasm for decorating ourselves in honour of Royalty will be all the stored energy in the matter of dress, which the want of summer weather has prevented our expending up to this. We must only hope that in the end the bad weather will pass away following the common law like everything else in the world. Already, Leopardstown toilettes of wondrous light and airy beauty are being ordered and planned, so hopeful is the spirit of woman when it is a matter of getting new dresses. Leopardstown is quite in luck this year; the Derby caused much excitement in its neighbourhood. Orby was trained close by, where his owner lives in a beautiful place, the demesne having a background, not far distant, of the Dublin mountains. Evidently the mountain breezes are good for beast, as for man. By the way, what an onslaught Sir Frederick Treves made on drugs! He desires to abolish the prescriptions which apothecaries make up, and to have instead the simple ones of sunshine and fresh air. As if they were always at hand, ready and compounded for us. Who can get fresh air in towns? As for sunshine, how few curative gleams have been procurable in our climes for the past few months. Lord and Lady Grenfell were staying at Rockingham, in the West of Ireland, before their departure for England. Lord Grenfell rented it for several seasons after Lord Dudley had given it up. We have not yet heard when Sir Neville Lyttelton is expected in Ireland, but Lord and Lady Grenfell will hardly again make any prolonged stay at Kilmainham. Sir Antony and Lady MacDonnell are at the Under-Secretary's Lodge, but rumour, more than ever, has it, that they may not remain there past the summer. If India does claim Sir Antony for important affairs, we hope that our regrets may not be increased by having his place filled by someone without a social talent. We women, who have no part in politics, hate to have politics interfere with our social centres over here. Don't you think our "society" interests ought to be taken into consideration, especially as we are so "good," as children say, with regard to making no political and suffragette demands? Lord and Lady Ardilaun have been staying at St. Anne's, their residence near Dublin, and given several

The ingredients of STATE EXPRESS cigarettes are well known to medical men and approved by them.

For Discriminating Smokers.

These delicious high-class Cigarettes will not produce any dry or irritating effect on the throat or nasal organs.

No. 555
4/9 per 100
2/6 per * 50
6d. per 10

* Also packed in our patent vacuum air-tight tins for tropical climates.

Of all Tobacconists and Stores throughout the World.

STATE EXPRESS
CIGARETTES

Manufactured in LONDON by
ARDATH TOBACCO CO.,
Worship Street, Finsbury, E.C.
at their
"Model hygienic factory."
—Vide Daily Press.

garden parties. The weather, needless to say, was not of an ideal garden party type. One admired the bravery of the flowers as well as their beauty; wrapped in furs we looked on in wonder at their summer bloom. The water gardens, however, were having a really good time.—Yours ever, CLARE.

Here are the recipes I promised to send you. Petites Bouchées de truite à la Cardinale are very good indeed:—

Scrape and pound 6 oz. of fillets of trout with 2 oz. of fillet of whiting, 4 oz. of bread panada, 2 oz. of butter, 2 eggs, and salt and pepper to taste. Rub it through a coarse hair sieve, and work it in a basin with ½ gill of thick cream. Fill a plain border mould with a third part of the quenelle and steam it white. Mix a dessertspoonful of passed spawn with the remainder, and with it fill half a dozen small buttered bouchée moulds, which should have a ring or a star of truffle at the bottom. Steam the moulds and serve them on the border, pour creamy-white sauce round and garnish the centre with tiny pink quenelles, a dozen button mushrooms, and few slices of truffle, all warmed in a little of the sauce.

Some day try this poulet sauté à la blanche:—

Chop a young chicken into neat small pieces, sautez them with butter and chopped onion without allowing them to colour, add a glass of white wine, which reduce to demi-glaze, after which add a pint of white chicken stock and half a pint of milk; season all with salt and pepper, and finish cooking in the oven. At the moment of serving stir in a gill of thick cream, mixed with two yolks of eggs, add a squeeze of lemon juice, and a pinch of paprika. Dish the chicken in an entrée dish and garnish it with groups of tiny onions, parboiled, and cooked separately in butter.

Cucumber à la Rosalind is quite a delectable dish:—

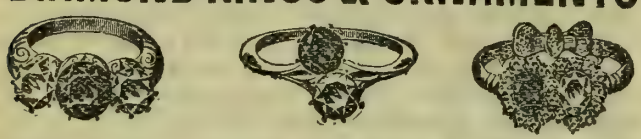
Cut a large cucumber into pieces 2 in. long, cut each one with a fluted cutter, thereby removing the skin and making them of equal size, parboil them in salted water, then drain and remove the seeds with an apple corer. Fill the cavities with a little quenelle of haddock, mixed with some chopped shrimps. Cook them on a buttered sautépan moistened with a little stock, cover all with a buttered paper. Dish the cucumber on a border of quenelle of haddock, pour a nice sauce round it, made with the stock from the stewed fish bones, place a tiny round of truffle on each and garnish the centre with scallops of cucumber, tea-spoon shaped quenelles and picked shrimps.

Finally, you will find this ham toast a very nice savoury:—

Cook a gammon rasher of ham before the fire, or in the oven, then chop it very small; put it into a stewpan with ½ oz. of butter, the yolks of two fresh eggs well beaten, season with cayenne. Stir it over a clear fire until it thickens, then pull aside and pour into it two tablespoonfuls of thick cream, spread the mixture upon square pieces of buttered toast, screen the whole with grated Parmesan cheese, hold over them a hot salamander, send to table. Garnish them with sprigs of chervil.

Ever your loving cousin, MADGE.

DIAMOND RINGS & ORNAMENTS



Finest Quality, below Store and usual West End Prices.

SPINK & SON, LTD.,

DIAMOND AND PEARL MERCHANTS,

17 & 18, PICCADILLY, W., and 30, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C. Est. 1772.

THE MUTUAL LIFE

INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Announces the issue of

NEW FORMS OF CONTRACT

providing for

ANNUAL CASH DIVIDENDS

with several options each year.

Liberal Loan and Surrender Values and Various Modes of Settlement.

FUNDS OVER £100,000,000 SECURELY INVESTED.

Apply for particulars Head Office for the United Kingdom—

16, 17, 18, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.

J. H. HARRISON HOGGE, General Manager.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE. — Public School, with excellent buildings. Staff of sixteen graduates. Preparation for all public examinations. —Prospectus from The Rev. W. R. DAWSON, M.A.

R.M.S.P. THE ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY,

LUXURIOUS TRAVEL.

Brazil, £50; Argentina, £62; West Indies, £38.

SHORT TRIPS TO

Spain, £9 15s.; Portugal, £12.

Apply to 18, Moorgate-street, E.C.; or 32, Cockspur-street, S.W.

COUNTRY HOUSE AGENTS' LIST.

BOGNOR-ON-SEA.—DAWSON SIDDAL, Estate Agent. Furnished and Unfurnished Houses for Sale or Let. Apartments Agency. Lists free. Telephone IX3 Nat.—Offices: Station-road.

BRIGHTON & HOVE.—A. F. GRAVES, Auctioneer and Estate Agent, 9, North-street-quadrant, BRIGHTON. For particulars of all houses to be LET or SOLD, apply as above.

BOURNEMOUTH.—JOLLIFFE & FLINT, Estate and House Agents. Lists of Furnished and Unfurnished Houses for Sale or Let, free by post.—Offices, 1, Arcade, Bournemouth.

COWES.—MESSRS. MARVINS, Princes Buildings. Agency for Sale, Purchase, or Charter of Yachts. Also House and Estate Agency for Isle of Wight. Established 1858 and patronised by Royalty.

EASTBOURNE HOUSES.—MESSRS. LAKE & CROWDER, Auctioneers, Surveyors, and Valuers, opposite the railway station. Telephone 8, Y. Agents for all the principal furnished and unfurnished houses.

OXFORD and READING.—HAMLET & DULAKE, Estate Agents, Auctioneers, Valuers, and Surveyors. Illustrated property list and all information gratis to applicants.

THE LADIES' GUILD (under Royal Patronage) successfully introduces Ladies as Chaperons, Companions, Secretaries, Governesses, Guides, &c. Schools recommended.
10, George-street, Hanover-square, W. Telephone, Gerrard 6006.

CANADIAN PACIFIC LINE.

FASTEST TO CANADA.

NEW "EMPRESS" ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS.
(4 DAYS OPEN SEA). Weekly Service from Liverpool.
EMPRESS OF BRITAIN ... 14,500 tons ... June 14.
LAKE CHAMPLAIN ... 7,392 ,, ... ,, 19.
For passages apply C. P. Rly., 62-65, Charing Cross, S.W.; 67, King William-street, E.C.; or Local Agents.

THROUGH TICKETS via CANADA to JAPAN, 22½ days; CHINA, 27½ days; AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND.

The Ancient Writing Paper of the Priests.

Court Envelopes, 1s. per 100. Mourning Envelopes, 1s. 6d. per 100.

Thin, for Foreign Correspondence, 5 Quires, 1s. Mourning Note, 5 Quires, 1s. 6d.

HIERATICA

NOTE PAPER 5 Quires, 1s. (Regd.).

Every Sheet and Envelope Watermarked HIERATICA. Reject imitations. Any difficulty in obtaining, send stamps to our new address, Hieratica Works, Hill-street, Finsbury, London, E.C. Sample free. Parcels carriage paid in U.K.

BAILEY'S HOTEL LONDON

The most comfortable Hotel in London. GLOUCESTER ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON. Self-contained Suites.

Telephone No. 557 Kensington. Telegrams—"Bailey's Hotel, London."

SANATOGEN

THE TONIC FOOD REMEDY.

Nourishes Brain & Body.

Improves Digestion.

Drives away Dyspepsia.

Dispels Nervousness.

Brightens the Intellect.

Our modern system of living is more or less artificial. The strenuous conditions of modern life strain the bodily powers frequently beyond endurance. To maintain health under these circumstances something more than ordinary food is needed. Mind and body need a special restorative. Such a restorative is Sanatogen. It is a scientifically prepared food, which has the unqualified approval of the most eminent physicians, and possesses the highest nutritive and digestive properties. It gets to the root of all bodily ailments by supplying to the weakened organisms the right material for building them up. Thus it strengthens the weak, the Anæmic, those who suffer from Dyspepsia, Nervous Exhaustion, or Depression, and enables the body to throw off disease. It is equally beneficial to young and old, and has been used with most satisfactory results as a recuperative for patients even in the extremity of disease. It is simply prepared, easily digested, and is absolutely non-irritating.

The action of Sanatogen in the treatment of various diseases is described in a series of booklets which may be obtained free on your naming Truth in a note to the Sanatogen Co., 83, Upper Thames Street, London, E.C. All Chemists sell Sanatogen.

SANATOGEN

"THE MOST PERFECT FORM OF COCOA."
—Guy's Hospital Gazette.

FRY'S PURE CONCENTRATED COCOA

MAKERS TO H.M. THE KING.

The MEDICAL PRESS, including the "LANCET," "BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL," and "MEDICAL ANNUAL," testifies to its Purity and UNDOUBTED EXCELLENCE.

BENSON'S

SELECTED GEM RINGS.

Brilliants, £12.

Brilliants and Rubies, or Sapphires, £17.

Amethyst, Diamond Points, £6 6s.

Brilliants, £18.

"The Times"

MONTHLY PAYMENT SYSTEM IS AVAILABLE.

Brilliant, with Ruby Eyes, £6 6s.

Illustrated Books: No. 1 of Rings, Watches, Chains; No. 2 of Clocks, Plate, Bags, and Silver Goods, post free. Mention TRUTH.

62 & 64, Ludgate Hill, E.C.
and 25, OLD BOND STREET, W.

A novel for those who are neither old nor young

A study of a strange woman.

Three Weeks.

BY

Elinor Glyn.

An episode in a young man's life.

With a Coloured Frontispiece, Cloth, 6s.

LONDON: DUCKWORTH & CO., 3, HENRIETTA STREET, W.C.

EMANCIPATION.

In the United Kingdom there are five million more females than males. The problem of woman in her relation to marriage is consequently one of the most serious in the whole range of sociology. It is this important question that forms the basis of a new novel by a new writer, Arthur Beckett, just issued as Messrs. Sisley's "Book of the Year." It is a remarkable story that will set the world talking. Ask for "Emancipation" at your Library TO-DAY. 6s.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

BERNARD QUARITCH, Bookseller, 15, Piccadilly, London, W., has transferred his business to 11, Grafton Street, New Bond Street.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY

(LIMITED),

HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.

INVESTED FUNDS - - £63,000,000.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the Control of the Committee.

A list of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.

Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

BIRKBECK BANK (established 1851), Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C. 2½ per cent. interest allowed on Deposit Accounts. 2 per cent. interest on Drawing Accounts with Cheque Book. All general Banking Business transacted. ALMANACK, with full particulars POST FREE.—C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

Rudge-Whitworth
Britain's Best Bicycle

For Service and Pleasure

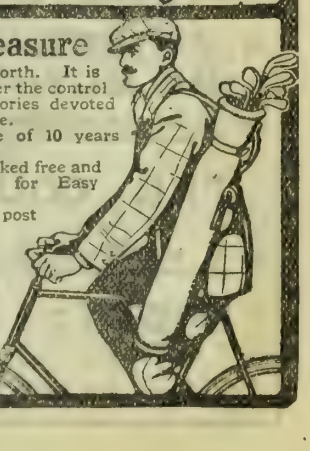
no bicycle rivals the Rudge-Whitworth. It is the only machine manufactured under the control of Chemical and Physical Laboratories devoted solely to the perfection of the bicycle.

Every machine has a Certificate of 10 years Guarantee sealed to its frame.

There are 81 models from £5; packed free and carriage paid. No extra charge for Easy Payments.

The New Catalogue, now ready, post free from

RUDGE-WHITWORTH, Ltd.,
Dept. 265 COVENTRY.
LONDON:—
230 Tottenham Court Rd. W.
100 Regent Street, W.
23 Holborn Viaduct, E.C.



MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

MEMOIRS OF

THE COMTESSE DE BOIGNE

1781-1814.

With portrait, 1 vol., 10s. net.*

"There is not a page which should be missed. From cover to cover the book is packed with wit and observation, and as a picture and a history of those wonderful years it is of enthralling interest."—Daily Telegraph.

WILD FLOWERS OF THE BRITISH ISLES

Illustrated and written by H. ISABEL ADAMS, F.L.S.

Revised by J. E. BAGNALL, A.L.S.

With 75 plates in colour. 1 vol., 4to, 30s. net.*

"No country-house library can be really regarded as complete without a copy."—Standard.

A GUIDE TO MODERN COOKERY

By A. ESCOFFIER, of the Carlton Hotel.

1 vol., 12s. 6d. net.*

"The ordinary good plain cook will discover something worth learning on every page. The book is a comprehensive one as well as a simple one. It should be in every house."—Pall Mall Gazette.

ECLIPSE AND O'KELLY

By THEODORE ANDREA COOK, M.A., F.S.A.,

Author of "A History of the Turf."

Profusely illustrated. 1 vol., crown 4to, £1 1s. net. Also an Edition de Luxe, limited to 100 copies, £3 3s. net.*

"Appeals not merely to the lover of the Turf, but to the student of society and manners in one of the most interesting periods of our social history."—Daily Telegraph.

THE INDUSTRIAL REPUBLIC

By UPTON SINCLAIR, Author of "The Jungle." 6s.

[Friday.

* Prospectus of these important works on application.

6s. THE NOVELS OF THE DAY. 6s.

By E. F. BENSON, Author of "Paul,"

THE HOUSE OF DEFENCE

By W. De MORGAN, Author of "Joseph Vance,"

ALICE FOR SHORT

By MARGARET L. WOODS, Author of "Sons of the Sword,"

THE INVADER

By ISRAEL ZANGWILL, Author of "Ghetto Tragedies,"

GHETTO COMEDIES

With 4 Coloured Illustrations.

By EMMA BROOKE, Author of "A Superfluous Woman,"

SIR ELYOT OF THE WOODS

By JOHN GALSWORTHY, Author of "The Man of Property,"

THE COUNTRY HOUSE

(Fourth Impression.)

By H. N. DICKINSON, Author of "Things that are Cæsar's,"

KEDDY: A STORY OF OXFORD

(Second Impression.)

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford-street, W.C.

JOHN LONG'S POPULAR NOVELS

SIX SHILLINGS EACH

By RICHARD MARSH, Author of "The Beetle."

A WOMAN PERFECTED

 A new story by Mr. Richard Marsh is an event which is eagerly anticipated, and "A Woman Perfected" should not disappoint the expectations, however high, of any of Mr. Marsh's innumerable admirers.

[Ready.

By AVIS HEKKING—A New Writer.

IN SEARCH OF JÉHANNE

 Readers of good historical romance should not fail to apply for this book, which promises to be the historical novel of the season. [Ready.

By BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of "The Gun Runner."

THE WHITE HAND AND THE BLACK

STANDARD: "This tale is tremendously absorbing and realistic. The men are put in with fine bold touches, and the heroine's sweetness and charm lend a fragrance of their own to the whole narrative."

[4th thousand.

By ARCHER PHILIP CROUCH, Author of "For the Rebel Cause."

A WIFE FROM THE FORBIDDEN LAND

DAILY TELEGRAPH: "The story is told with great dash, and all readers of good sensational stories should not miss this one."

By JOHN F. MACPHERSON—A New Writer.

A YANKEE NAPOLEON

ACADEMY: "If Mr. Macpherson had only one-tenth of the power of Mr. H. G. Wells for marshalling scientific details in support of his 'prophetic' inventions, 'A Yankee Napoleon' would be a wonderful book." Will you read the book, and see whether your views agree with those of the Academy?

By DANIEL DOUGLAS BREWER—A New Writer.

A FULL-LENGTH PORTRAIT OF EVE

TIMES: "Clever and vivacious drama."

By ISABEL SMITH, Author of "The Minister's Guest."

THE JEWEL HOUSE

DAILY TELEGRAPH: "The author describes real men and women with great sympathy, while she handles her plot with neatness and skill."

By HEW SCOT—A New Writer.

THE WAY OF WAR

SCOTSMAN: "The book has the rare distinction of being successful in a vein in which many writers either fail or remain commonplace. It deserves to be widely read."

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Mr. John Long will publish next week the following New Novels, 6s. each: ITINERANT DAUGHTERS, by Dorothea Gerard; INNOCENT MASQUERADERS, by Sarah Tytler. Kindly order now.

London: JOHN LONG, 12, 13, 14, Norris St., HAYMARKET.

PUBLISHED TO-DAY

A MIRROR OF SHALOTT. 6s.

By

ROBERT HUGH BENSON,

Author of "The Light Invisible," "The Sentimentalists," etc., etc.

A "Mirror of Shalott" will have a strong fascination for those readers who believe that the border between the visible and the invisible world is nothing but a line that is easily crossed and re-crossed, and not a barrier.

LONDON:

SIR ISAAC PITMAN & SONS, LTD.,

NO. 1, AMEN CORNER.

STERILE MARRIAGE: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By a late Senior Physician to a Hospital for Women. A new Edition just published. Post free, 3s. 9d.

London: Shelley & Co., Limited, 38, Gracechurch-street.

VACHELL'S 'HER SON' 6/-

The book by a famous author which has given rise to so great a diversity of opinion among the critics.

SOME OF THE OPINIONS:

"A powerful story, which holds the attention throughout with cumulative interest."
DAILY NEWS.

"An uncommonly bad novel."
STANDARD.

"None capable of appreciating fine character-drawing should fail to read the book."
SKETCH.

"Without a character which carries conviction for a moment."
GLOBE.

"It's sentiment, strong yet delicate and appealing, never degenerates into sentimentality."
DAILY TELEGRAPH.

"'Her Son' has the same faults of sentimentality which marred 'The Hill.'"
DAILY MAIL.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

HOW COULD WE ENDURE THE STURM UND DRANG OF LIFE IF IT WERE NOT FOR OUR WEEK ENDS?

FOR THE WEEK END.

A Novel by HANDASYDE, Author of "Four Gardens." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"ONLY a woman, surely, would write such deep and intimate truth about the heart of another woman and the things that give her joy when a man loves her. . . . . Perhaps if THE VISITS OF ELIZABETH had not been written we should not have had FOR THE WEEK END, for in truth there is some quality in both those books that is strangely akin."—STANDARD.

"THE story is really the narrative of how Blanche and Mortimer Keppel loved each other and loved honour more. . . . . The dialogue is piquant, wise, entertaining, and full of good things. . . . . An abundance of good feeling is shown, real delicacy is not wanting, human nature is nobly vindicated frequently."—GLOBE.

"A GENUINE story of passion. . . . . The author has set out to exhibit the relations of a pair of lovers who have met too late. The passion of this pair plays across a background of laughter and cynicism and shallow wit and horseplay and scandal."—DAILY MAIL.

JOHN LANE PUBLISHER
THE BODLEY HEAD
VIGO STREET
LONDON
W

NEW BOOKS.

At all Libraries and Booksellers'.

IRELAND IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By G. LOCKER LAMPSON. Demy 8vo, 18s. net.

The most exhaustive history of political and social events in Ireland during the past century.

SICILY AND ENGLAND.

By Mrs. WHITAKER. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

Social and Political Reminiscences by the Daughter of a Sicilian patriot—General Scalia.

REED ANTHONY, COWMAN.

By ANDY ADAMS, Author of "The Log of a Cowboy." 6s.

A fascinating story of a cowman's life written in autobiographical form.

MISS SILBERRAD'S NEW NOVEL.

THE GOOD COMRADE.

By UNA L. SILBERRAD,
Author of "The Success of Mark Wyngate."

PUNCH says of THE GOOD COMRADE:
"I like the whole book."

THE DAILY MAIL says of THE GOOD COMRADE:
"It has every quality of success."

THE MORNING LEADER says of THE GOOD COMRADE:
"One wants to read a book like this lovingly and often; it is a wholesome, single-minded, broad-minded piece of work."

THE TRIBUNE says of THE GOOD COMRADE:
"An excellent name for an excellent book."

THE WORLD says of THE GOOD COMRADE:
"A charming book over which there will be much laughter and perhaps some tears."

London: A. CONSTABLE & CO., Limited.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

READY ON FRIDAY.

THE DEVIL'S PEEPSHOW.

By the Author of "A Time of Terror." Crown 8vo, price 6s.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

MADAME ALBANESI'S NEW NOVEL.

THE STRONGEST OF ALL THINGS.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A clever and ingenious plot, with some good character sketching in it. . . . For care, coherence, and varied and sustained interest this novel ranks among Madame Albanesi's best."—Daily Chronicle.

THE PASSING OF THE THIRD FLOOR BACK.

By JEROME K. JEROME. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"All the stories are on a high level of literary quality and imaginative brilliance."—Scotsman.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

NEW NOVEL by PERCY WHITE.

COLONEL DAVERON.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A stirring tale, which will be especially welcome to the author's numerous admirers as a remarkable example of his rich and resourceful talent."—The World.

THIRD EDITION IN THE PRESS.

NEEDLES AND PINS.

A Sequel to "If I Were King."

By JUSTIN HUNTLY McCARTHY.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A fascinating romantic tale. The book abounds in dramatic incidents . . . rich in powers of description and analysis."—Scotsman.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

DEAD LOVE HAS CHAINS.

By M. E. BRADDON. 3s. 6d.

"Equal to the best of the works written in her prime in neatness of construction, in cleverly maintained interest, and in all those qualities of imagination and wise knowledge of men and things which make her books so much more than merely melodramatic."—Daily Mail.

NEW VOLUME OF STORIES BY

W. W. JACOBS.—SHORT CRUISES.

With 38 Illustrations and Cover Design by WILL OWEN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Mr. Jacobs' humour is as irresistible as ever in these tales."—Truth.

HURST & BLACKETT, Ltd., 182, High Holborn, W.C.

Ready June 17 (Monday Next).

KEBLE HOWARD'S

NEW NOVEL,

THE

BACHELOR GIRLS

and their Adventures in Search of Independence.

With about 50 Illustrations by RALPH CLEAVER.

Price Six Shillings.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Mr. ARNOLD BENNETT'S NEW BOOK.

THE GRIM SMILE OF THE FIVE TOWNS.

By ARNOLD BENNETT,

Author of "Anna of the Five Towns," &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

Also Mr. DESMOND COKE'S LATEST SUCCESS.

THE CALL.

By DESMOND COKE,

Author of "The Bending of a Twig," &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s

And the SECOND EDITION of NETTA SYRETT'S REMARKABLE STORY.

THE CHILD OF PROMISE.

By NETTA SYRETT,

Author of "The Day's Journey," &c., &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

All these books are published by CHAPMAN & HALL, LTD., and constitute a library list of great variety and interest.

New Edition (17th). Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Boards, 1s. Of all Booksellers, or post free from the publishers.

THE DIETETIC CURE OF OBESITY.

("FOODS FOR THE FAT.")

With a Chapter on Gout and its Dietetic Treatment.

By Dr. YORKE DAVIES.

CONTENTS.—Evils of Corpulency. Dangerous Conditions due to Corpulency, such as Weak Heart, Gout, &c. Diet the only Safe and Permanent Cure at any age. Quack Medicines to reduce weight dangerous and useless. Evils of Over-eating and Sedentary Habits. Food in its Relation to Work, Exercise, &c.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, W.C.

ARE BRITONS BECOMING BALD?

HOW MANY PEOPLE ARE DESTROYING THEIR OWN HAIR?

All things considered it is remarkable that the British have not already become a bald-headed race. As it is, we have already lost the luxuriant curls our Saxon ancestors possessed; Baldness, Greyness, and other hair-disorders are becoming more and more frequent every day.

Why is this?

Because most of us know very little about our hair, its life-history and its requirements, and consequently we cannot help it when it needs our assistance, and we stifle and destroy it with injurious remedies (so-called), and by wrongful treatment.

There is a certain malignant bacillus, for instance, whose sole mission in life seems to be to try and effect a lodgment at the mouth of the hair-sheath or follicle in which the hair grows. Having secured this position it multiplies exceedingly. This irritates the little oil-gland, whose function it is to keep the hair lubricated, and which, being thus excited, pours out a far larger quantity of its greasy contents than the hair can use.

The unused oil therefore spreads over the scalp, cakes into scurf, and if not immediately removed chokes up the follicle, presses on the papilla, and eventually throttles the hair to death.

And yet how many people, when they see that their hair is losing its quality, know what is perhaps causing this. They treat it with some specific, much advertised, cure-all "restorative" which very likely contains a great deal of greasy matter itself.

And the hair, already struggling against an over-plus of oil, finds that its owner, in a misguided effort to assist it, is adding a great deal more to its troubles. No wonder the hair is frequently overwhelmed.

Or again, perhaps this oil-flask is more or less dried up. Consequently the hair is falling out because it is not getting sufficiently lubricated. Here a different treatment is necessary. The remedy must fit the disorder. So-called "cure-all" remedies are of course of no use in such a case.

Or perhaps the papilla is not as healthy as it should be, and the pigment cells are not being completely formed or are not formed at all. Thereupon greyness ensues. Again, individual treatment is required, treatment different from either of the two preceding.

Here are but three examples. But there are many other disorders from which hair suffers, many other forms of attack to which it is subjected.

If you wish to help your hair and to preserve it, you must know something of its requirements. All this is contained in an interesting work entitled "The Hair: Its Growth and its Disorders," written by that eminent consultant on the hair, Mr. Warner Oliver, of 4, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, London, W.

Readers of TRUTH who are suffering from any hair-disorder have only to write to Mr. Warner Oliver, mentioning TRUTH, and stating whether they are Mr., Mrs., Miss, or Rev., and a copy of this valuable book, which contains no puff or advertisement of any specific hair-remedy, will be sent to them post paid, and free of charge whatsoever.

EXHIBITION.

BALKAN STATES EXHIBITION, EARL'S COURT.
Open 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. 1s. Season Tickets, 10s. 6d. Weekly Tickets, 2s. 6d.
SERVIAN SECTION.—QUEEN'S PALACE.
BULGARIAN SECTION.—IMPERIAL COURT.
MONTENEGRIN SECTION.—DUCAL HALL.
WORKING TOBACCO, CARPET AND OTHER EXHIBITS.
Manufactures, Raw Products, Arts and Industries.
IN THE BALKAN VILLAGE.
PEASANT DANCERS and GIPSY MUSICIANS FREE.
"THROUGH THE BALKANS IN TEN MINUTES."
VIEWS of MONASTIR, SHIPKA PASS, CATTARO, &c.
GRAND MILITARY AND PROMENADE CONCERTS.

ATTRACTIONS AT THE
BALKAN STATES EXHIBITION,
EARL'S COURT.
"OLD JAPAN" IN THE EMPRESS HALL.
With its Temples, Monuments, Teahouses, and Geisha.
A COLONY OF ART MISSIONARIES,
Exhibiting every phase of their wonderful Crafts.
A Wealth of Cherry, Peach, and Wistaria Blooms.
SEE THE WATERFALL AND THE LOTUS POND.
FUJI YAMA.—NIKKO TEMPLE AND NIKKO BRIDGE.
JAPANESE THEATRE. FREE.
"OLD JAPAN." "OLD JAPAN."
The New Great Chute—Maxim's Flying Machine.
Balkan Stalactite Caves—Pigmies from Ituri.
The FISHING CORMORANTS.
The Helter Skelter—The Salt Mine—The Switchback.
See the NEW ILLUMINATED GARDENS.

CONCERTS.

BECHSTEIN HALL.
Under the Patronage of H.R.H. THE PRINCESS OF WALES.
TO-DAY (WEDNESDAY), at 8.15,
HELENE
STAEGEMANN.—VOCAL RECITAL.
At the Piano, COENRAAD VAN BOS.
Tickets, 10s. 6d. 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall; usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.

BECHSTEIN HALL.
Under the Gracious Patronage of HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
SVEN
SCHOLANDER.
SONG RECITAL. FRIDAY NEXT, at 3.15.
With accompaniment of the Lute (Old Swedish Lute, 1793).
Tickets, 7s. 6d. 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall; usual Agents'.
CONCERT DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.

ÆOLIAN HALL.
SATURDAY NEXT, at 3.15. LEOCADIE
KASCHPEROW
(Pupil of Rubinstein). PIANOFORTE RECITAL.
Assisted by JAN HAMBOURG. BORIS HAMBOURG.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall; usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER,
Chatham House, George-street, Hanover square, W.

ÆOLIAN HALL.
MONDAY AFTERNOON NEXT, at 3.
Under the Immediate Patronage of
T.R.H. the PRINCE and PRINCESS of WALES.
T.R.H. the DUKE and DUCHESS of CONNAUGHT.
T.R.H. the PRINCE and PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.
H.R.H. the PRINCESS HENRY of BATTENBERG.
SUZANNE MORIVAL, JUNE 17.
VOCAL RECITAL with
EDOUARD DE RESZKE, JUNE 17.
MONDAY AFTERNOON NEXT, at 3.
SUZANNE MORIVAL, JUNE 17.
VOCAL RECITAL with
EDOUARD DE RESZKE, JUNE 17.
Assisted by
TITO MATTEI. BISACCIA, SIMONETTI.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., and 2s. 6d.,
at the Hall and usual Agents'.
Mlle. SUZANNE MORIVAL is now in London, and will accept engagements for Private Concerts, Soirées Musicales, and "At Homes" during the season. All communications to be addressed to N. VERT, 6, Cork-street, W.

PADEREWSKI
RECITAL.
QUEEN'S HALL,
TUESDAY AFTERNOON
NEXT, at 3.

PADEREWSKI
RECITAL.
PIANOFORTE
RECITAL.
QUEEN'S HALL.
Only 21s. and 10s. 6d. Tickets left (ALL OTHERS SOLD), at Chappell's Box Office, Queen's Hall; usual Agents', and from
W. Adlington,
18, Great Marlborough-street.

ERARD PIANO.

STEINWAY HALL.
SAPELLNIKOFF.
ONLY PIANOFORTE RECITAL
THURSDAY AFTERNOON, June 20th, at 3.15.
Steinway Grand Pianoforte.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., 1s.; at Hall, and usual Agents'.

ROYAL HORSE SHOW,
RICHMOND, SURREY.

ROYAL HORSE SHOW,
RICHMOND, SURREY.

ROYAL HORSE SHOW,
RICHMOND, SURREY.

Friday & Saturday, June 14 & 15.

ADMISSION ONE SHILLING.

AMUSEMENTS.

ROYAL OPERA, Covent Garden.
GRAND OPERA EVERY EVENING.
(For full particulars see Daily Papers.)
Box-office, 10 to 10.

HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE. Mr. TREE.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30.
A WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE, By Oscar Wilde.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.30.

ST. JAMES'S, KING STREET, PALL MALL. Tel. 3903 Gerrard.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a New and Original Play,
JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOUR, by ALFRED SUTRO.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER. Miss EVA MOORE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING at 8 (doors open 7.40), a new musical play entitled
THE GIRLS OF GOTTENBERG.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2 (doors open 1.40).
Box-office open daily from 10 till 10.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.—Lessees and Managers, A. & S. GATTI. EVERY EVENING at 9.0,
MR. GEORGE,
by Mr. Louis N. Parker. Mr. Charles Hawtrey. At 8.15, JEMMY, by Louis N. Parker. Matinees, Wednesday and Saturday, at 2.15.

APOLLO. EVERY EVENING AT 8.10.
HENRY LOWENFELD, Sole Proprietor.
Tom B. Davis, Sole Lessee and Manager.
ROBERT COURTNEIDGE'S Production,
TOM JONES.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.

DALY'S THEATRE, Leicester-square. — MR. GEORGE EDWARDES.—EVERY EVENING, a New Play, with music, entitled "THE MERRY WIDOW" (Die lustige Witwe).
Box-office open 10 till 10.

SAVOY.—IOLANTHE, EVERY NIGHT THIS WEEK, 8.25. MATINEE SATURDAY, 2.30. PATIENCE, June 18. YEOMEN OF THE GUARD, June 20. GONDOLIERS, MATINEE, June 22.

SHAFTESBURY. — The Romantic Light Opera, LADY TATTERS. EVERY EVENING at 8.15, Matinee Thursdays, at 2.
Mr. COURTICE POUNDS, Mr. WALTER PASSMORE; Miss LOUIE POUNDS, Miss CLAUDIA LASELL, Miss MARIE GEORGE.

GARRICK THEATRE. Mr. ARTHUR BOURCHIER and Miss VIOLET VANBRUGH. EVERY EVENING at 8.30 in
THE WALLS OF JERICHO, by ALFRED SUTRO.
MATINEE every WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

CRITERION THEATRE (next door to Piccadilly Circus Tube Station). Lessee, SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM. Every Evening at 8.30, CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company in
THE LIARS,
by Henry Arthur Jones. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.30.

THE PLAYHOUSE, Northumberland-avenue.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. Cyril Maude. EVENINGS at 9. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 3 (by arrangement with Mr. Charles Frohman). CYRIL MAUDE as TODDLES. (Last Weeks.) At 8.20 and 2.20, THE DRUMS OF OUDE. All seats, including gallery, can be booked. Tel., 14,042 Central.

LYRIC THEATRE. Mr. LEWIS WALLER.
Lessee, Mr. William Greet. Under the Management of Mr. Tom B. Davis.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a play in four acts by Tom Taylor, entitled
(Last Weeks.) CLANCARTY. (Last Weeks.)
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

ALHAMBRA.—New Ballet, "QUEEN of SPADES," Mlle. Alexia, Danseuse de Genre; Maria Vinent, The Gignacs, Urbanora, Up-to-date Pictures, "L'AMOUR," and Grand Varieties. Doors 7.45.
Manager, GEORGE SCOTT.

EMPIRE, Leicester Sq.—New Ballet, SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY, Mlle. Adeline Genée, Première Danseuse, The Debutante, the Perezoffs, Le Pages, the Biograph, Mr. Hymack, &c. Every Evening at 8.
Manager, Mr. H. J. HITCHINS.

PALACE.—EVIE GREENE, R. G. KNOWLES, HORACE GOLDIN, CLARICE VANCE, &c. THE DERBY, ISLE OF MAN MOTOR RACES, &c., on BIOSCOPE. EVENINGS 8 (doors 7.45). MATINEE, FULL PROGRAMME, SATURDAY at 2.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION.—Brightest and most comfortable Promenade in London. Lifelike Portrait Models of T.M. The King and Queen of Spain. Madame Tussaud's Exhibition Band. Open 9 till 10.

LONDON HIPPODROME.
TWICE DAILY, at 2 and 8 p.m.
MIRTH, MYSTERY, AND SENSATION.
AQUATIC, STAGE, AND EQUESTRIAN SPECTACLE.

EXHIBITIONS.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.
SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, and includes selected Landscapes and Portraits by Early British Masters.
SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W.

DORÉ'S GREAT MASTERPIECES.—Architectural Drawings by P. FLETCHER-WATSON, R.B.A.; Flower Pictures, etc., by ALICE VON BEDDEGHEM; Sketches by C. R. ROWBOTHAM; Water-colours by ESDAILE RICHARDSON; "The Liberal Government, 1906," by ARTHUR GARRATT.—25, New Bond-st., W. 10 to 6. 1s.

THE NEW ENGLISH ART CLUB.
38th EXHIBITION OF MODERN PICTURES.
OPEN DAILY, 10 to 6.30, at the GALLERIES, in DERING-YARD, 67a, NEW BOND-STREET, W. Admission 1s.

THOMAS McLEAN'S Forty-third Annual Exhibition of Pictures of the British and Foreign Schools is now open at T. McLEAN'S GALLERY, 7, Haymarket. Admission 1s.

TRUTH FOREIGN HOTEL LIST & CONTINENTAL GUIDE.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—GRAND HOTEL HENRION CORNELIUSBAD. The Leading English house.

BADEN-BADEN—HOTEL REGINA. Latest creation. The most up-to-date, elevated position.—J. LIPPERT, Proprietor.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL STEPHANIE. Allee of Lichtenthal. The leading Hotel.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL BRISTOL AND DÉPENDENCE. First-class. Facing baths and Sprudel. Occupying finest position.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL PRINCE OF WALES. HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL EULER. First-class. Close to Central Railway. Situated in a quiet position.—Prop., A. S. BUCHER.

BÂLE.—GD. HOTEL VICTORIA and NATIONAL. Opp. central Stn. First-class. Private apartments with bath.—Pr., PAUL OTTO.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL DE L'UNIVERS. Leading hotel. Suites of rooms with private baths.

BRUNNEN.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class, best situation of Brunnen. 250 beds. English billiards. American Bar.

BRUSSELS.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. Suites with private bath. Central heating.

CAPRI.—GRAND HOTEL QUISISANA. The leading first-class hotel. Every modern comfort.

CHAMOUNIX.—GRAND HOTEL IMPERIAL. The best-managed Hotel. Moderate charges.—H. BECKER.

CHATEAUX D'OEX.—GRAND and BERTHOD. 3,300 ft. Switzerland. Summer and Winter Sports.

COLOGNE.—HOTEL DISCH. The leading hotel in the town.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—GRAND HOTEL BELVEDERE. First-class.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—HOTEL VICTORIA. Favourite English House.

DRESDEN.—HOTEL BELLEVUE.—World-renowned. Very select. Situated on the Elbe and Opera Square. Suites and single rooms with private baths and toilet. Under the personal management of R. RONNEFELD.

EMS.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class.

EMS.—HOTEL FOUR SEASONS AND EUROPE. HOTEL FOUR TOWERS. First-class.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated. Full south.—Proprietor, CHIARI.

GENOA.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Apartments, with bath. Quiet rooms, garden on the fourth floor, splendid panorama.

GLION, above Montreux, Swiss.—NEW PARK HOTEL. First-class. Best situation. Own park. Open whole year. Winter sports.

HOMBURG (BATH).—RITTER'S PARK HOTEL. The leading hotel. Patronised by English and American Society.—Proprietor, C. RITTER.

HOMBURG (BATH).—VICTORIA HOTEL. Very first-class in every respect. The largest, also 4 villas. Finest garden.-J. BAEHL, Pr.

HOMBURG (BATH).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Suites with private bath and lavatory. "Hygienic diet at doctor's advice."

HOMBURG (BATH).—HOTEL BELLEVUE. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Vacuum cleaning indoors.—W. FISCHER, Prop.

KISSINGEN (BAD).—HOTEL VICTORIA and KAISERHOF. The leading English house.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE & RICHMOND. Motor garage. Leading hotels. Best situation. Open whole year.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL DE LAUSANNE. First-class. Facing railway station. Latest comforts.—AD. SCHAER, Prop.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU SEJOUR. First-class family home. All latest comforts. Fine situation. Large garden.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL EUROPE. First-class. Finest situation. Very quiet. Entirely renovated. Latest improvements.—HAGEN BROS., Proprietors.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Open from March 4. In the vicinity of Station and landing boats.—G. MUTH, Proprietor.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BEAU RIVAGE. First-class family house. Write for illustrated pamphlet.—C. GIGER, Proprietor.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BELLEVUE AU LAC. First-class. Large dining-room, separate tables. Modern improvements.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. New hotel, unrivalled position, with latest improvements. The Hotel faces the English Church.—Proprietor, A. BROCCA, of Hotel Lugano.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BEAU REGARD & CONTINENTAL. First-class, beautifully situated in its own grounds. Nr. English church.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. First class. Near Cathedral. Post, Teleg., & Rly. Office in hotel. Central heating. Suites with baths.

MONTE CARLO.—GRAND HOTEL DE LONDRES. Opposite Casino. Modern comfort. Reasonable terms. Always open.—Manager, J. KAISER.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Unrivalled situation and comforts.

MUNICH.—THE CONTINENTAL. Leading HOTEL and RESTAURANT. Entirely renewed and enlarged.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHERHOF. A good English house.—CARL POSCH, Proprietor.

NAPLES.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class. Situated in the finest and most select part of Naples. Magnificent view of town, Vesuvius, and bay. Proprietors, HAUSER & DOEPFNER.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable, in best situation. Splendid view of bay.

NAPLES.—GD. HOTEL DU VESUVE. Splendid position. Strictly first-class. Latest comfort.

NAPLES.—ELDORADO MODERN HOTEL. Good central situation. Moderate terms. Overlooking the Gulf.

NICE—GD. HOTEL DES ILES BRITANNIQUES. First-class, moderate terms.—Proprietor, ZAMBAIL. Summer, Hotel Roseg-Pontresina, Engadine.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel. Facing sea, nearest the Kursaal.—Props., HILLBRAND & BROWN.

OSTEND.—Sea bathing. The leading hotels on the beach are the CONTINENTAL, 400 beds, the SPLENDID, 400 beds. Rooms from 6 francs. Full board with room, 12 to 20 shillings, according to location.

PALERMO.—EXCELSIOR PALACE HOTEL. New. Leading hotel. Opened February, 1906.

PARIS.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Most luxurious and comfortable hotel in Paris. Entirely renovated.—A. LOTTI, Gen. Mgr.

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES and ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rendezvous of English and Americans.—Proprietor-Manager, A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—MERCEDES HOTEL, Place de l'Etoile. Most modern hotel in Paris. Opened April, 1904. Luxuriously furnished.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA, Avenue de l'Opéra. First-class. Latest and all modern improvements.—G. VAUTIER, Prop.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENÉE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PONTRESINA.—HOTEL KRONENHOF & BELLAVISTA. First-class. Best situation. Open whole year. Summer and Winter resort.

ROME.—REGINA HOTEL. New. Opposite Queen Margherita's Palace. One of the leading.—Managing Prop., E. BARBIANI.

ROME.—PALACE HOTEL. New. Up-to-date. BEAUSITE HOTEL. First-class family house.

ROME.—HOTEL ROYAL. The English House.

ROME.—SAVOY HOTEL. First-class family hotel near the gardens.—Proprietor, J. LENGYEL.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family Hotel. Preferred position amongst the villas. Inclusive terms, Fr. 11 to 18.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ENGADINER KULM. Baths with suites and rooms. Golf, tennis, and all the winter sports.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL, the most fashionable. Proprietor, CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ST. PETERSBURG. Family hotel. Sunniest position, adjoining Kulm and all the Sport places. Inclusive terms, 10 to 16 fr.

TERRITET, Switzerland.—GRAND HOTEL & ALPES. Well-known rendezvous of English and American clientèle.

TERRITET.—GRAND HOTEL BON-PORT. Favourite English house. Apartments with baths. Most sheltered situation.

VEVEY.—GRAND HOTEL and PALACE HOTEL. The Fashionable Hotels. Two tennis courts.—ENG. MICHEL.

VEVEY.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. 120 rooms. Very latest improvements. Bath with private suite.—Proprietor, T. WHITE.

VEVEY.—Healthiest Swiss resort.—TROIS COURONNES HOTEL. First-class. Modern improvements. Most moderat e terms.

WIESBADEN.—FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest position, opposite Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. Connected with a Magnificent Bathing Establishment. Situated at the Curplace. "The English Home."

WIESBADEN.—PALAST HOTEL. Kochbrunnen Bath establishment. Rooms with private bath. First-class, up-to-date.

FOREIGN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BEAULIEU.—HOUSES & ESTATES. E. KURZ. Opposite Station.) Villas furnished, to be let or sold.

TRUTH HOTEL LIST.

AYR.—STATION HOTEL, adjoining station. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards. For Business Gentlemen, Families, and Tourists to "The Land of Burns," and Ayrshire district. Within few minutes' walk of sea shore. Convenient Golf Courses. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Dumfries, and Turnberry.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BRIGHTON.—ROYAL CRESCENT HOTEL, MARINE PARADE. High Class, for Families and Gentlemen. Finest Position in Brighton for health and quiet. Sea view from nearly all rooms. Electric lighting throughout. Telephone, No. 1403. Telegrams—"Crescent Hotel, Brighton." Under personal supervision of GEORGE LOGAN, Proprietor.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Finest position on front.
Splendid public rooms. Orchestra twice daily.
Tepid sea-water swimming Bath. Garage communicating with the Hotel.
Private suites, with bathrooms. Write for Illustrated Brochure.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

DUBLIN.—HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE-STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

DUMFRIES.—STATION HOTEL, opposite station. Electric light. Lift. Billiards. Convenient for Firth of Solway, Castle Douglas, Sweetheart Abbey, Caerlaverock Castle, &c. Lovely Drives. Splendid centre for motor and cycle tours. Shooting. Fishing. Golf. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Turnberry.

EASTBOURNE.—The HYDRO HOTEL, a Select Residential Hotel, due south, facing sea. Spacious Lounges and Public Rooms. Garage. Special Week End Terms. Cinderella Dance Saturday. For Amusement Programme and Tariff (Illustrated), O. F. BERGANN, Manager.

GLASGOW.—ST. ENOCH STATION HOTEL. Best centre for business and pleasure. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (4 tables). Restaurant. Within shilling cab fare of all railway and steamboat termini in Glasgow. Near electric cars and opposite subway cable railways. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Ayr, Dumfries, and Turnberry.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

MALVERN.—The Premier Garden City of England.—The IMPERIAL HOTEL faces due South and offers every comfort at moderate and inclusive charges. A needful luxury, not electric light. The extensive baths (separate building; Brine, Turkish, &c.) now open. Accommodation or Motors.—For tariff apply to Resident Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

MARGATE.—CLIFTONVILLE HYDRO. Fully licensed.
Finest position, facing sea and oval. Electric light and lift.
Roof garden. Billiards. First-class cuisine and wines.
Motor garage in own grounds. Turkish, dowsing, and electric baths.
Special week-end terms from Messrs. Cook & Sons.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
W. WORSTER, Manager.

TURNBERRY.—STATION HOTEL. "The most up-to-date Hotel in Scotland." Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (2 tables). Conservatory. Garage and stables. Sea Water Baths. Two fine golf courses for visitors. Lovely Climate. Charming district. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Dumfries.

PEEBLES HOTEL Hydropathic

Under Mr. A. M. THUEM'S Personal Management.
CONSTRUCTED FIREPROOF THROUGHOUT.
EQUIPPED on the most MODERN lines. Every Home Comfort. High-class Cuisine. Pure Bracing Air. Golf, Tennis, Croquet, and Bowling Greens. Motor Garage. Magnificent Recreation Hall.
A GERMAN BATH IN SCOTLAND.—Physician, H. Neu, M.D. (Bonn University). Every form of Electricity, Massage, and Baths. Diet—Gymnastics also Sun, Air, and Electric Light Baths.

LEAMINGTON SPA.—REGENT HOTEL. Premier Hotel of Midlands. Ideal Summer Resort. Best centre in England for Motoring and Driving. Garage for 60 cars. Telegs., "Regent." 'Phone 109 Leamington.

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire, 500ft. alt. Bracing air, lovely scenery, 9-hole Golf course. Static Electricity. High-frequency Currents. Radiant Heat X-Rays. Vibratory Massage.—J. I. KIRBY, Managing Director.

WESTGATE-ON-SEA.—WESTCLIFF HOTEL. Premier position, facing sea. Coffee, drawing, lounge, billiard rooms. Family suites. Stabling. Motor garage.—G. MARCH, Proprietor.

FOLKESTONE.—BATH HOTEL.
First class Private. Inclusive Terms.—Miss GRIFFITHS, late York House, Bath. Telephone 117.

MONTROSE ON THE NORTH SEA,

A Bracing Holiday Resort.

FAMOUS GOLF LINKS—Ladies' and Gentlemen's Courses open to all at nominal charge.
SEA BATHING. Miles of Sand, with safe and commodious Bathing Station.
MONTROSE offers an attractive and healthy place of residence, and a convenient resort for Families, to a delightful combination of beauty and interest.
For Official Guide apply to Town Chamberlain.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

TRENTHAM HALL, Stoke-on-Trent, Staffordshire.—About one mile from Trentham Station, on the North Staffordshire Railway, and 3½ miles from Stoke-on-Trent.—Important announcement of SALE by AUCTION, on the premises, of the whole of the valuable SCULPTURES in marble and bronze (ancient and modern) in the gardens and hall, amongst which are examples of the best periods of early Grecian, Græco-Roman, and early Imperial times. The statues, fonts, vases, &c., are exceptionally interesting, and comprise some examples of great rarity and value. Also a collection of Pictures by or attributed to F. Frearson, H. Howard, R.A., G. G. La Count, J. Jackson, R.A., G. Jones, R.A., H. W. Pickersgill, R.A., T. Phillips, R.A., J. Varley, R. Wilson, R.A., R. Westall, R.A., and others by well-known artists. Also a small collection of Engravings of the Early Victorian Era, together with a considerable quantity of Furniture, China, etc.

MESSRS. TROLLOPE have received instructions to SELL the above by AUCTION, on the premises, on WEDNESDAY, July 17, 1907, and following days, commencing at 1 o'clock precisely each day. On view, MONDAY and TUESDAY, the 15th and 16th. Catalogues are in course of preparation. Meantime, further information may be obtained from Messrs. TROLLOPE, 14, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square; Hobart-place, Eaton-square; West Halkin-street, Belgrave-square; and 5, Victoria-street, Westminster, London.

ROSE HILL ESTATE, on the Oxfordshire Hills, close to Reading.—Notice of sale of the MANORIAL RESIDENCE, with 30 acres of Lovely Grounds, together with OUTLYING RESIDENTIAL PORTIONS of the ESTATE which Messrs. SIMMONS & SONS are instructed to SELL by AUCTION at the QUEEN'S HOTEL, READING, on SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1907, at 3 o'clock p.m., in the following Lots, viz.: Rose Hill House, with charming gardens and grounds, 7 Grand Residential Sites varying from 2 acres to 40 acres, 27 Positions for Superior Houses, 16 Villa or Cottage Sites. Almost all with good road Frontages, and with a public water supply obtainable.—Particulars, Plans, and Conditions of Sale may be obtained of Messrs. HEWETT & CHURCHILL, Solicitors, Friar street, Reading; or of the Auctioneers at their Estate and Auction Offices, Henley-on-Thames, Reading, and Basingstoke.

TATTERSALLS.

Messrs. Tattersall beg to give NOTICE that their Thursday Sales have commenced and will be continued during the Season.
Sales every Monday and Thursday.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS, sent gratis, with full particulars. Schools also recommended. Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 22, Craven-street, Trafalgar-sq., W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 Gerrard.

G.W.R. ASCOT RACES, JUNE 18, 19, 20, & 21.

EXPRESS TRAIN SERVICE EACH DAY.

	a.m.	a.m.	a.m.	a.m.	a.m.	a.m.	a.m.	a.m.	noon	p.m
PADDINGTON... dep.	9 5	9 25	9 45	10 0	10 33	10 55	11 5	11 30	12 5	1 3
SLOUGH ..... arr.	9 33	9 54	..	10 25	...	11 32	...	...	12 34	1 27
WINDSOR & ETON ,,	9 41	10 2	10 15	10 34	11 3	11 38	11 32	12 0	12 43	1 37

RETURN RAIL FARES: 1st Class. 2nd Class. 3rd Class.
PADDINGTON to WINDSOR & ETON: 5/6 3/9 3/-

FOUR HORSE BRAKES will leave WINDSOR & ETON STATION for ASCOT upon arrival of trains from PADDINGTON, returning from RACE-COURSE 15 minutes after last race.

BRAKE FARES, WINDSOR & ETON STATION to ASCOT and BACK.	Tuesday, June 18.	Wednesday, June 19.	Thursday, June 20.	Friday, June 21.
	4/-	5/-	7/-	3/-

FREQUENT TRAINS WINDSOR & ETON to PADDINGTON after the Races.
CHEAP THIRD CLASS RETURN TICKETS EACH DAY (2/6) from most stations on Metropolitan and North London Railways, and from Paddington by the 7.38, 7.55, 9.5, 9.25, 10.0, 10.55 a.m., 12.5 noon, &c., trains.
For details, see bills or send postcard to Enquiry Office, Paddington Station. Tel., 4901 Paddington. JAMES C. INGLIS, General Manager.

HOTELS, &c.

ILFRACOMBE.—CLARK'S direct principal sea fronting ARCADE PRIVATE HOTEL. Homely. Highly commended. Personal attention. Maple's furnishing. Electricity throughout. Moderate terms.

LOWESTOFT GRAND HOTEL.

Standing in three acres of charming Grounds.
300 feet Sea frontage.

Special terms to competitors for the Tennis Tournament commencing June 17.

Lowestoft is the Healthiest Seaside Resort on the East Coast.

Price 1/- NOW READY. By Post, 1/3

The Thirteenth Series of

QUEER STORIES

from "TRUTH."

PERMANENTLY ENLARGED.

This volume has a blue wrapper printed in red to distinguish it from the twelve previous issues.

Can be obtained at all Booksellers' and Bookstalls.

"TRUTH OFFICE," 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Each Purchase Convinces!

REGISTERED TRADE MARK
H. SAMUEL

Each article bought at H. SAMUEL'S affords additional proof of the truth of his assertion that he supplies
WATCHES, CLOCKS, DIAMOND and GEM JEWELLERY, ELECTRO-PLATE, CUTLERY, &c., at lowest factory prices, and moreover, experience proves that one purchase is invariably the prelude to further profitable investments.

18 ct. Three Diamonds 30/- 18 ct. Three Rubies & Two Diamonds 47/6 18ct. 8 Diamonds & 3 Rubies 95/-

Whether you purchase from one of his 53 splendidly stocked branches, or through the medium of the post, your complete and lasting satisfaction is absolutely assured.

CALL TO-DAY OR WRITE FOR FREE CATALOGUE.

H. SAMUEL, Central Depot— MARKET STREET, MANCHESTER.

London Depot—178, STRAND, W.C.

ALCOHOLIC EXCESS

and DRUG HABIT cured at home in 3 to 7 weeks by the TURVEY TREATMENT without inconvenience. The only cure under British Medical Direction. Success tested by officials of the C.E.T.S. Mission, &c. Established 12 years. Over 5,000 recorded cases.—Write for Report of Public Test, or call, Med. Supt., TURVEY TREATMENT CO., Ltd., 24, Amberley House, Norfolk Street, Strand, London. Consultation to patients or their friends, free.

CIGARS

Direct from the Growers and Importers of the Finest Havana Leaf, AT HALF BRITISH PRICES.

Write for Catalogue.

LA CUBA COMPANY,
11, N.Z. Voorburgwal,
Amsterdam, HOLLAND.

FREE

STEINWAY

VERTEGRAND

The attention of every householder is hereby directed to the fact that the pianos, Grands and Vertegrands, made by the house of STEINWAY, and sold by them through special agents at fixed net prices for cash all the world over, have a surrender value greater than that of the instruments produced by any other firm. The reason is not far to seek, viz.:—durability, general excellence in tone production, expensive workmanship in all minor details. The superiority of the STEINWAY creations in this respect is as marked as are all the other distinctive "STEINWAY" features.

Deferred Payments.

Hiring Arrangements.

STEINWAY Pianos may be obtained on hire at very reasonable rates, or may be purchased by deferred payments. If for any reason a purchaser on the Deferred Payment System is desirous of returning his instrument, the difference between the Hire Terms and the amounts paid under the deferred plan will be returned to him.

Write or call to-day for the Steinway Hire and Deferred Payment particulars, also booklet "P.," "Portraits of Musical Celebrities," post free on request.

STEINWAY & SONS
STEINWAY HALL
LONDON and NEW YORK.

By Appointment to H.M. The King.

Genuine Weekly Wins!

By Appointment to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

DAIMLER

May 22nd - 25th, 1907.

IRISH RELIABILITY TRIALS.

DAIMLER MADE FASTEST TIMES IN BOTH HILL CLIMBS, And MADE A NON-STOP RUN THROUGHOUT.

Additional wins to date:—

May 25th, 1907. SOUTH DEVON A. C. HILL CLIMB, MOORSHOP HILL, TAVISTOCK.
Daimlers made First and Second Fastest Times.

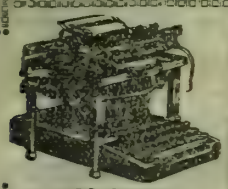
May 25th, 1907. DERBY, NOTTS, LEICESTER, and MID-STAFFS A.C.'s INTER-CLUB HILL CLIMB AT OAKAMOOR.
Daimlers made First and Second Fastest Times.

June 1st, 1907. WELSH A.C. HILL CLIMB, LLANGENNECH HILL.
Daimler Secured First Place and made Fastest Time.

THE DAIMLER MOTOR CO. (1904), Ltd.

Coventry: Daimler Works. London: 219-229, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.
Manchester: 60, Deansgate. Nottingham: 96-98, Derby Road. Bristol: 18, Victoria Street.

TYPEWRITERS



MSS. Copied.

Great Bargains for Sale, Hire, or Exchange. Shorthand and Typists sent out with machines from £1 per week.

Ring up—4881 Holborn.
8325 Bank. 7093 Central.

TAYLORS LTD., 74, Chancery Lane, London.
And at 92, QUEEN STREET, E.C. (Cheapside End).

Jewsbury & Brown's ORIENTAL TOOTH PASTE.

In Pots and Tubes.

BRAGG'S CHARCOAL BISCUITS Cure Indigestion

Flatulence, Acidity and all disorders of the Stomach, and are very pleasant to take. Bragg's Charcoal Biscuits are supplied to the Royal family. Recommended by the Lancet and the medical profession, and used in their own families.

Bragg's Charcoal Powder and Lozenges are equally excellent.
Of all Chemists and Stores.

DON'T LOOK OLD

KEEP YOUR SITUATION.

LOCKYER'S SULPHUR HAIR RESTORER

DARKENS IN A FEW DAYS.

To be obtained everywhere, 1/6 per bottle; or sent post free for 1/6 from J. PEPPER & CO., Bedford Laboratory, London, S.E.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN,

and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of Himrod's Cure for Asthma.

Established over a Quarter of a Century.

Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, J. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, MAY, ROBERTS, & CO., BUTLER & CRISPE, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale houses.

FOR GOUT, GRAVEL, RHEUMATISM, etc., DRINK

VICHY CELESTINS (State Spring)

Caution: See that each bottle has a neck label with VICHY-ETAT & the name of the Sole Agents INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd., 26, Upper Thames Street, LONDON, E.C.

TILIA SHORTBREAD

MADE BY PEEK, FREAN.

TILIA SHORTBREAD contains about 13 per cent. of Tilia, the concentrated food, and, at the same time, possesses the pleasing flavour of high-class Shortbread. It, therefore, truly combines GOODNESS with SWEETNESS.

Sold by all Grocers and Stores—Shortbread in 1/- and 2/6 tins, or loose 1/- per lb. Tilia Biscuits in 1/- and 2/- tins.

FREE SAMPLES

of Tilia Shortbread, &c., sent on receipt of 1d. stamp for postage by PEEK, FREAN, & CO., Ltd., T 6 Dept., 176, Drummond-road, S.E.

Dainty Jewellery

at the Goldsmiths & Silversmiths Company, Ltd.,
112, Regent Street, W.

¶ When Purchasing Gem Jewellery for WEDDING PRESENTS, BRIDAL GIFTS, BRIDESMAIDS', BIRTHDAY, COMPLIMENTARY, PRESENTS, &c.

do not decide until you have inspected the Goldsmiths & Silversmiths Company's Stock of Novelties at 112, Regent Street, and compared Prices and Quality. No importunity to purchase.

¶ If unable to visit 112, Regent Street, write for New Illustrated Jewellery List, sent Post Free, or for a Selection of Goods on approval, carriage paid.

The
Goldsmiths & Silversmiths Company, Ltd.

By Appointment to H.M. the King.

Show Rooms:—
112, Regent Street, London, W.

A Healthy Complexion

results from using the

'4711'

Eau de Cologne

(Blue and Gold Label).

A few drops sprinkled into a basin of hot or cold water will cheer and refresh you, and act as a SKIN TONIC.

IMPORTANT.—Cheap impure Eau de Cologne used in this way will injure your skin. Insist on seeing the Hall Mark 4711 on every bottle. It is an absolute guarantee of purity.

Sold everywhere from 1/- to 15/- per bottle.

CITY OF LONDON TRUSS SOCIETY

For the Relief of the Ruptured Poor throughout the Kingdom.

Patron—His Majesty the King. Vice Patron—H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, K.G.

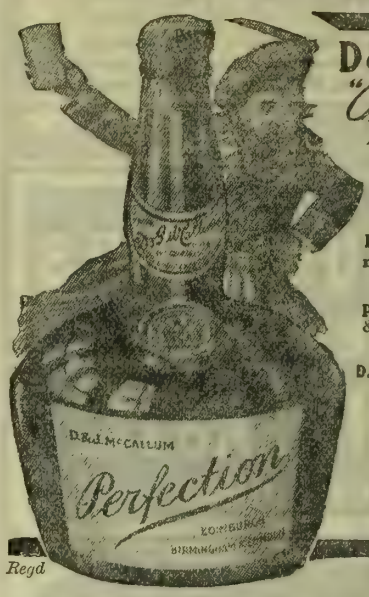
The CENTENARY FESTIVAL of this Charity, which annually relieves nearly 10,000 poor persons suffering from hernia or rupture, will be held at PRINCES' RESTAURANT, PICCADILLY, on Thursday, July 11. Sir THOMAS BROOKE-HITCHING, C.C., Mayor of St. Marylebone, in the chair.

The Committee EARNESTLY APPEALS for SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS to enable a heavy debt to the Society's Bankers to be paid off, and the beneficent work of the Institution, which has been so efficiently carried on for 100 years, to be continued.

35, Finsbury-square, E.C. W. K. TAUNTON, Secretary.



D&J. McCALLUM'S "Perfection" SCOTCH WHISKY

A PERFECT WHISKY.

(Mellow like a Liqueur.)

D. & J. McCALLUM'S name is the best guarantee of quality.

Price, 48/- per doz. (Cases 3, 6, & 12 botts.) carr. paid in U.K.

Proprietors,

D. & J. McCALLUM, EDINBURGH,

London and Birmingham.

Regd

OF ALL LEADING TAILORS.

Quality MOTOFRIEZE

Colour KILBUCK (and 23 others).

The only truly Hygienic cloth for Motor Garments.

Descriptive Booklet (with patterns) from the BALLYMENAGH WOOLLEN FACTORY, Ld.,

Great Pulteney Street, Regent Street, London, W.

The "SWAN" Fountain Pen

should be every writer's constant companion. Try one; it will prove to be an indispensable addition to the desk or pocket. For

LONGHAND, SHORTHAND, SKETCHING, MUSIC WRITING

—indeed, whenever a pen is necessary—use only the "SWAN."

Size 1 "Swan," mounted with 18ct. gold bands, handsomely chased, 21s.

Mr. H. LABOUCHERE, of "TRUTH," writes: "Your 'Swan' Pen was recommended to me by a friend, who showed me one which he had used for over two years without its getting out of order. On this I tried one, and have every reason to be perfectly satisfied."

SOLD BY ALL STATIONERS AND JEWELLERS. 10/6, 16/6, 25/- to £20

NEW CATALOGUE FREE ON APPLICATION. post free.

MABIE, TODD, & CO., 79 & 80, High Holborn, W.C.

93, Cheapside, E.C., 95a, Regent St., W., LONDON; 3, Exchange St., MANCHESTER; 37, Avenue de l'Opera, PARIS.

To Nourish the Blood and Brace up the Nerves use

COLEMAN'S "WINCARNIS"

THE WORLD'S GREATEST TONIC.

IT RESTORES & STRENGTHENS after* INFLUENZA.

8,000 MEDICAL MEN RECOMMEND IT.

FREE TRIAL.

COLEMAN & CO., Ltd., "Wincarnis" Works, Norwich, will forward sample on receipt of this coupon, with full name and address and 3 penny stamps to cover cost of carriage.

No charge whatever is made for the bottle of Restorative Wine. SIGN THIS COUPON.

Name .....

Address .....

TRUTH, JUNE 12.

SPECIAL FOR LADIES.

"Erasmic" Soap

"The Dainty Soap for Dainty Folk."

4d. per Tablet; 1s. per Box.

Guaranteed absolutely pure; deliciously fragrant.

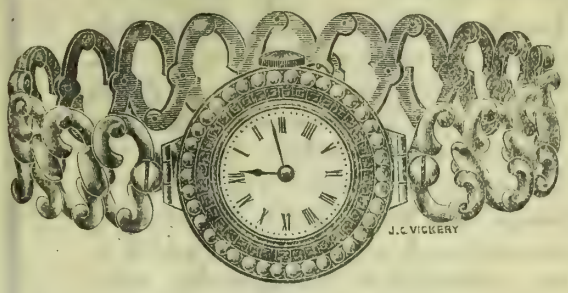
Send two penny stamps, and we will forward post free Two Dainty Bijou Sample Tablets.

THE ERASMIC CO., Ltd., Dept. 84, Warrington.

J. C. VICKERY

Jeweller and Silversmith
To H.M. The KING
and H.M. The QUEEN.

179, 181, 183, Regent Street, W.



Novelties for Gifts in all Departments.

No. M 793.—15-ct. Gold Expanding Bracelet with 15-ct. Gold Reliable Watch, set Pearls and Amethysts, Only £12 12s.

'Allenburys' The DIET

Recommended for general use in place of ordinary milk foods, gruel, &c. It is very sustaining and nourishing, and whilst acceptable to all as a light nourishment, it is especially helpful to the Invalid and Dyspeptic.

The "Allenburys" DIET is a food for ADULTS and is distinct from the well-known "Allenburys" Foods for Infants.

Tins at 1/6 & 3/- of Chemists. A large sample sent for 3 penny stamps.

ALLEN & HANBURYS, Ld., 37, Lombard-st., LONDON.

"THE QUEEN OF Apollinaris TABLE WATERS."

FRILLED BUTTER MUSLIN

WITH NEW HEMSTITCH FRILLS, 3 yds. long, 8/3 per pair. PLAIN FRILLS, 6/9 per pair. Sample book of Plain and Fancy Muslins on approval. Carpets, Tapestries, Cretonnes, Art Silks, Art Serges. Patterns on approval. Book of Lace Curtains, Blinds, Carpets, Linoleum, Furniture, Bedsteads, Bedding, &c.

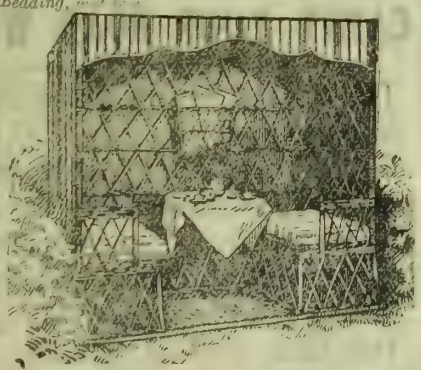
THE BELVOIR WICKER ARBOUR.

With let-down flap Table; Basket for Books, Needlework, &c. Being light, it is easily turned in any position.

Shelters from wind and sun.

Price Complete in Striped Tick....£3 5 0
Shower-proof 4 7 6
Made to fold flat, 15 - extra.

Catalogue free.



GORRINGE & CO., 91A Dept., Queen's Walk, NOTTINGHAM.

The quality of the tea is reflected in the quality of its patrons. Those who know good tea drink

Pearks' Tea

In Red Packets,
1s. 4d. and 1s. 6d. per lb.

Patterns and Illustrated Catalogues Post Free.

COPLAND & LYE'S
"CALEDONIAN"
SCOTCH TWEED SKIRT

21/- In Stock Sizes. 21/-

Carriage Paid in the U.K.
Made to Measure, 2/- Extra.
Handsome Golf or "rainy day" Skirt in Stylish Checks and Plain TWEEDS.

COPLAND & LYE'S
Famous
SCOTCH TARTAN SKIRTS
in the principal Clan Tartans.
Price 42/- Carriage Paid.

Scotch Winceys
from 1/- per yard.

THE LEADING SPECIALISTS IN SCOTCH TEXTILES.

COPLAND & LYE, Caledonian House, Sauchiehall Street, GLASGOW.

Lanchester Reliability.

Lanchester Cars are noted for their reliability, there is a reason for this. It is not only the perfection of design but the equally necessary perfection in construction which makes the Lanchester reliable. The design is simple and every part of the motor is accessible. A superior design added to the perfection of workmanship make a better motor car just as they make a better rifle or a better watch. Remember, a reliable motor car cannot be made "cheap." It is better to pay a good price for a good car than to buy a cheap one and spend all your time hunting round for repair shops. Practical demonstration is better than big talk and the Lanchester Motor Co. are always ready to arrange trial runs at any of their Depots. Catalogues giving detail descriptions of both the Four and Six cylinder Lanchesters may be had post free on application.

THE LANCHESTER MOTOR CO., LTD.,
Birmingham. Manchester. London.

BENGER'S

The particular and important feature of Benger's Food is that it can be prepared to suit any idegree of digestive power. It contains in it elf the natural digestive principles which act during the cooling process just before it is finally heated for ser ing. As the weak stomach of babe or invalid begins to strengthen by the assimilation of the Food, a gradually increasing amount of digestive work can be left to it, thus giving the advantage of a regulated exercise of the digestive functions

"Retained when all other foods are rejected."

WATSON'S

THREE STARS WHISKY

A Brightening, Bracing Blend,
A Drink of Life and Radiance

AVON TYRES

CARRY YOUR ROAD WITH YOU.

The Special Square Tread Motor Tyre, manufactured by the AVON India Rubber Co., Ltd., Melksham, Wilts, is the Ideal pneumatic tyre for heavy cars. Its peculiarity of construction and high-grade material render it the best for bad roads and a perfect luxury on good roads. The best wearing tyre on the market.

In all standard sizes from 65 m/m to 135 m/m. Round and square treads, and non-slipping cross grooves.

Price List post free from Tyre Department

AVON INDIA RUBBER Co., Ltd.
Melksham, Wilts.

OUR PUZZLES.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Building, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on postcards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand, whilst in the case of new Competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

NOTICE.

Various Prize awards will be announced next week.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,481.

The Cricket season being now in full swing, I think it may be opportune to give our numerous readers, who are followers of the national summer game, an opportunity of airing their prophetic acumen in this connection.

This week, therefore, I offer the usual Prize of Two Guineas for

THE MOST ACCURATE FORECAST, SETTING FORTH THE NAMES OF THE SIX BATSMEN AT THE HEAD OF THE FIRST CLASS BATTING AVERAGES, AND THE NAMES OF THE SIX BOWLERS AT THE HEAD OF THE FIRST CLASS BOWLING AVERAGES, AS THEY SHALL COME OUT AT THE CLOSE OF PLAY ON SATURDAY, JULY 6, 1907.

N.B.—Detailed figures—in the case of batsmen, of the number of innings played, number of times not out, gross aggregate of runs, and average to two places of decimals. In the case of bowlers, number of overs bowled, number of wickets captured, number of runs scored off them, and average cost per wicket to two places of decimals—must be appended in every case.

Further, only those batsmen are eligible who shall have played at least twelve innings, and only those bowlers are eligible who shall have captured at least fifty wickets, by the evening of July 6.

To prevent possible misunderstanding, I may add that the names of the South Africans are eligible for inclusion in the above averages.

PLEASE NOTE THAT:

(i.) No Competitor must send in more than one forecast.
(ii.) All forecasts must reach TRUTH office by the first post on Monday, June 24, at latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of UNSIGNED, winner of one-half of TRUTH Prize No. 1,472, is A. Elvey, Esq., 28w, Prince's-street, Glasgow.

 The real name, with the address, of BELFASTIENSIS, winner of one-half of TRUTH Prize No. 1472, is John Johnston, Esq., 21, Little Victoria-street, Belfast.

 The real name, with the address, of VOX, winner of one-half of TRUTH Prize No. 1,473, is Wm. Vokes, Esq., Alandale, Pinner-road, Harrow.

HAIGPATSI.—Very pleased to welcome you. Your nom de plume duly registered.

CALEDON.—Owing to the upset caused by the Whitsuntide holidays, the Anagrams were not checked before printing.

OVERDALE.—Very pleased to welcome you.

POLLYWAG, BEAD, ETHNA.—I much regret that your solutions of Puzzle No. 1,477 were received too late for inclusion.

WINKLE.—I am afraid there is no doubt that your Enigma solution was not received at TRUTH Office by the first post on closing day. I was very sorry to exclude it. But I am, of course, strictly bound by our published regulations.

CUPIDITY.—Very pleased to welcome you. I hope that, having begun, you will now compete regularly.

KHAYYAM.—Many thanks for your kind suggestions, which I am filing for future reference.

I have also to thank another Competitor who sends me a cutting from the Daily Telegraph, bearing no signature.

N.B.—In reference to our "Puzzle" Competition, announced last week, I should like to inform our readers that any suggestions for Puzzles previously sent into me hors concours, and not yet made use of in our Puzzle Columns, may be sent in again (if competitors please) for this Competition.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,478.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

NEATEST AND MOST ATTRACTIVE CATCH-NAME FOR THE GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY'S NEW CORRIDOR LUNCHEON CAR EXPRESS.

The Luxmo Express.—Redder.

Being a swift service on a very direct route, let the Cromer Express be called the Cro-flier (Crow-flier).—Sponge.

Down Service: 1. The Flying Cro'. 2. The Norycorr. 1. Up Service: The Flying Homer. 2. The Mercury (the double meaning, "sea-cured"—from the French—being implied here).—Caledon.

1. The East Coast Express. 2. Eastern Express. 3. The Coaster. 4. The Cromidor.—It.

1. The Fen Runner. 2. The Fen Flyer. 3. The Flying Fenman.—Hooubed.

1. Novocoastrian. 2. Cromaticar. 3 Coasterfolk. 4. Dinicar.—Prior Park.

1. Poppyland Express. . 2 Eastward Ho! 3. 3. Flying Anglian. 4. Silver Seas Express.—Djalfi.

Poppyland Express.—Waimarama.

1. The Norcodine Express (Nor of Norfolk, co of coast and dine). 2. The Norcolunch Express (derivation as in No. 1). 3. The Gernclet (Great Eastern Railway's Norfolk Express (Corridor) Luncheon Express Train). 4. General term for a luncheon, dining, or buffet saloon train: Dinotrav (din of dine and trav of travel).—Aldbarn.

1. Broadsway Express. 2. Poppy Express.—Twicky.

1. The Cro Flyer. 2. The Cromer Flash. (To fly as the "cro"-w is to go as fast and direct as possible, of course, while the Cromer "Flash" is in allusion to the Cromer Lighthouse, and the flash also indicates the speed of the express.)—Ainsty.

Norfeaster.—Untitunt.

1. The Seabreeze Express. 2. The Dining-flyer. 3. The Sea Whizzer. 4. The East Coaster.—Dagmar.

1. The Poppyland Express. 2. The Cromer-strand Golf Express. 3. The Norfolk Daily Sea Mail.—Sanger.

1. The Orient. 2. The Oriental Express.—Stourton.

1. Flying Norwicher. 2. East Anglian Luncher. 3. Eagle Express.—Possum.

1. The Poppyland Express. 2. The Poppyland Persimmon. 3. The Cromshermundstrand Express. 4. The Cromer Coaster.—Janes.

1. The Norcotex. 2. The Snorter. 3. The Cromovsher. 3. The E.C. Flyer—Rhody.

1. The Crow (Cro-mer). 2. Crowflier. 3. Poppyland Express. 4. Poppyflar.—Phenyl.

1. The Cromer Homer. 2. East Anglian Coaster. 3. Three Counties Luncher. 4. The Wi(t)ches' Seaside.—Mac.

1. The Cromer Roamer. 2. Tangled Tiffin.—Prior Old Jeff.

East Anglia Express.—Railway.

1. Scud East (shortened to "The Scud"). 2. Nor-Easter. 3. Dashing Dervish. 4. Terrible Turke.—Amurath.

1. V.C. 2. Coaster. 3. Velect (vestibule luncheon express car train or East Coast train). 4. Lord Cromer.—Brod.

1. Poppyland Express. 2. The Wild North-Easter (see Charles Kingsley). 3. Norfolk Flier. 4. Norfolk Seagull.—Seefeld.

1. The East Coaster. 2. The Victory. 3. The Nor'easterman. 4. The Scud East. (Note.—No. 2 suggested by the flagship of Lord Nelson, who was born in Norfolk. No. 4 suggested by the nickname of Harry East from his fleetness, in "Tom Brown's Schooldays."—A. E. L.

1. Ozone Express. 2. Cromer Comet. 3. Breezy Bounder. 4. Health Hurtler.—Oobo.

Excellency (i.e., XLNC, 'Xpress London Norfolk Coast).—Delta.

1. Flying Norfolkman. 2. Mid-East Train-de-Luxe. 3. Norfolk Coast Luncher. 3. Mid-Eastern Flyer.—Orient.

1. The Flying Anglian. 2. The Sunrise Express. 3. The N.C.E. 4. The Poppyland Flier.—Georgina.

The Gerfolk Express.—Hyde.

1. The Corridor Coaster. 2. Norfolk Pick-me-up. 3. Desideratum. 4. Pioneer.—Ovgne.

East Anglia (or Angles) Express—Frances.

1. East Anglian. 2. Strander (Strand to Overstrand). 3. Lotus Land Express. 4. Sandringham.—Cashier.

1. The Cromeries Express.—Spanish Paddy.

1. The Nor'easter. 2. The Greaser. 3. The Coaster. 4. The Strand Express.* (*Strand being abbreviated Overstrand).—Robin Adair.

1. The Broad Arrow (Norfolk Broads). 2. The Eastern Arrow.—V. B.

1. Corridor-de-Luxe. 2. Tommy Train. 3. Flying Feeder. 4. Tiffin Express. 5. Up-and-Down Rapid 6. A1 Flyer.—Chance.

1. The Golf Coast Express. 2. The Flying Golfer. 3. The Eastern Rapid. 4. The Delight of the East.—East Anglian.

1. The King's Own. 2. The Edward. 3. The Sandringham. 4. The King.—Boxer.

1. The Cromer. 2. Poppyland. 3. Eastern. 4. Royal.—Togo.

1. Poppyland Express. 2. Cromer Coaster. 3. Eastern Swift.—Harper.

1. The Poppyland Express. 2. The Poppyland Luncheon Express. 3. The Cromer and Poppyland Express. 4. Cromer and East Coast Luncheon Express.—Norvie.

1. The Vacuna Express. 2. The Whirlum Express. 3. The East Coast Magnet. 4. The Cloms Express. (The latter from the initial letters of the five stations named.)—Mono.

1. The Eastwards and Restwards Express. 2. Scott's Express. 3. The Great Orient Express. 4. The Eastern Scott's Express.—Phœnix.

1. The Great Eastern Railway's Palace on Wheels. 2. G.E.R. Record Conveyance to the Broads. 3. The Traveller's Elysium. 4. The Epicurean's Norfolk Express.—Puck.

1. The East Coast Luxurious. 2. The Rapid East Coaster. 3. Twentieth Century Great Eastern Success. 4. The Norfolk Tourists' Friend.—Shandwick.

1. (X) Cross to Cromer Express. 2. Anglian Express.—Don Carlos.

1. The Flying Coaster. 2. The Norfolk Dasher. 3. The Norfolk Eagle. 4. The Poppyland Express.—Hilary Wynotte.

1. The Poppyland Express. 2. The Poppyland Diner. 3. The Poppyland Limited. 4. The Cromer Limited.—Oldtraf.

1 The Norfolk Coast Car (The Triumph.) 2. The Norfolk and Cromer Express (Little Mary's Ideal).—Jethart.

1. East Coast Lunch-as-you-go Express. 2. East Coast Luncheon Express. 3. Norfolk Seaside Lunch Train. 4. Norfolk Sea-Breeze Express.—Chestnut.

1. The Broads Enterprise. 2. Norfolk Coast Train-de-Luxe. 3. Broads Luncheon Express.—Little Toad.

1. The Daily Female. 2. East Coast Whizzer. 3 Sea-Sea Express. 4. Brace-up Express.—Cosmos.

1. The Flying Angel. 2. The Burglar.—H. F. T. Maguire.

1. Swallow Corridor. 2. Swallow Express.—Hesomaal.

1. Eagle Luncher. 2. Norwich Luncher. 3. Flying East Anglian.—Fireplug.

1. Liverstand Express. 2. Tuckers' Express. 3. Poolover Express. 4. Norfocoo Express.—Bronks.

1. The Quo Vadis. 2. The Golf Express. 3. The Luxe Express. 4. The Sportsman's Express.—Quo Modo.

1. The Poppyland Express. 2. The North Anglia. 3. The Poppyland Luncher. 4. The Health and Happiness Express.—Heedca Needca.

1. The Cromer Roamer. 2. The Strand to Strand Express. 3. Ozonia Limited.—Leda.

1. The Poppyland Coaster. 2. The L.C.S.M.O. Billy. 3. The Norfolk Coast Town's Vestcorluncar. (New Vestibule Corridor Luncheon Car Express.)

1. The Biking Corridor Express. 2. The Flying Golfer 3 The Norfolk Flying Hotel.—Bel Demonio.

1. Eastflier. 2. Poppycoaster. 3. Poppyland Popular. 4. Poppycomer. (The G.E.R. in their pamphlets, etc, often allude to this coast round Cromer as "Poppyland." In the event of any of these names being adopted, it might not be amiss to suggest that the engine of the express be provided with red facings, or with a design including poppies.)—Crescendo.

1. The Snacksman. 2. The General (the Great Eastern's New Express Récherche Appetising Luncheon). 3. The Norfolk Dumpling. 4. The New Departure.—Cemache.

1 Cromer Luncheon Special. 2. L.C.C. Special London Cromer Corridor Special. 3. Cromer Dining Car Special. 4. C.C.C. Special (Cromer Coast Corridor Special).—Cupidity.

1. The Sportsman. 2. The Norfolk Sportsman. 3. The Sporting Express. 4. The Sporting Rover.—Petite.

1. Great-Eastern Greyhound. 2. East-Coast Greyhound. 3. Wireless East-Coaster. 4. The Poppylander.—Almaviva.

1. The Poppyland Popular. 2. The Blue Speedwell (with reference to the colour of G.E.R. locomotives) 3. The Flying G.E.R. Man. 4. The Norfolk Knife-and-Forker.—Gyges.

1. The Sea Express. 2. The Sands Express. 3. The Briny Breeze. 4. The 'Zone Express. (Some of the advertisements should be headed "Seaward Ho!"; contains references to the North Sea and the bracing ozonous air "straight from the pole," and to sails, soles, and haddies; and wind up with the quotation, "Come unto these yellow sands.")—Ox Short.

1. The Driven (Partridge) Express. 2. The Norfolk Breezes Express. 3. The Norfolk Delights. 4. The Choke Bore Express.—Portia.

1. Great Eastern Wonder. Poppyland Express. Luncheons. 2. Express de Luxe to Poppyland. 3. Poppyland Luncheon Express.—Cassio.

1. The Yellow Sands Express. 2. The Nelson Express. 3. From Street to Strand Express.—Wani.

1. Cromer Corridor Express. 2. Eastern Eating Express. 3. East Coast Eating Express. 4. East Anglian Eating Express.—Lugh.

1. The Great Eastern Prize Express. 2. The Ritz on Runners. 3. The Liverpool Street Luxury. 4. The Dream on Wheels.—Erra.

1. The Overstrand Link with the Silver Sea. 2. The Norfolk Coast Corridor Express. 3. The Mundesley and Cromer Special Car. 4. The North Sea Daylight Route.—Inea.

1. The Poppy Express. 2. The Anglian Argo. 3. The Sea Roamer of Cromer.—Beginner.

1. Norfolk Strand Express. 2. The Folks Express. 3. Norfolk Seaboard Service. 4. The Sub-Wash Route.—Jean qui Rit.

1. The Poppy-Land Paragon. 2. The Poppy-Land Estafette. 3. The Poppy-Land Vikings. 4. The Poppy-Land Express de Luxe.—Kismet.

1. Carodino.—Kohima Chert.

1. The Egyptian (Cromer, 1907). 2. Egypt's Special.—Kimberley.

1. Norfolk Pick-Me-Up. 2. Norfolk Howard, or Flying Bug. 3. Dumpling Express. 4. Norfolk Dip.—She.

1. The Norfolk Speedwell. 2. Whizzer. 3. Weldunrun. 4. Acme-de-Luxe Train.—J. Holbrook.

1. Biffintiffin (Norfolk Biffin). 2. Quickeater. 3 Antivacuum (what Nature abhors). 3. Corripresswasteater.—Wildcat.

1. The Great East Coaster. 2. The Norfolk Luncheon Flyer. 3. The Norfolk Luncheon Nonstop.—A. D. Ampler.

1. The Cromer Luncheon Car. 2. The Cromer Corridor (luncheon car, understood).—Chesy.

1. Poppyland Express. 2. East Coast Flier. 3. Norfolk Pullman Train. 4. Norfolk Luncheon.—Four Eyes.

1. Nelson Land Express. 2. Poppyland Express. 3. Norfolk Coaster. 4. Mid-day Coaster.—The Prebend.

1. Chic Dinette. 2. Car Déjeuner. 3. Quick Luncher. 4. Swift Snack.—Caer Glowe.

The Broads' Corridor Buffet.—Stansmore.

1. The Cromer Overstrand Express. 2. The Tiffin Cromer Overstrand Express (the T.C.O.). 3. The Cromer Coast Corridor Express (the C.C.C.). 4. The Cromer and Coast Luncheon Express.—Eboracum.

1. Swiftsure Luncher. 2. Norwich Swift. 3. Swiftsure Corridor.—Tom Nissed.

1. Cromerlunch. 2. Cromer Lunch Express. 3. Cromer and Overstrand Lunch. 4. Express Cromer Lunch.—Game B.

1. Alexandra Express. 2. Royal County Express. 3. Norfolkville Express.—Emlyn.

1. The Cromer Express. 2. The East Anglian Express.—Anglian.

1. City East (Coast) Lunch Express Rail, briefly "Celer" (swift). 2. London Cromer Lunch Car. 3. London Cromer Fast (or Express) Lunch Line. 4. East Coast Lunch Express.—Rho.

1. The Great Eastern Excelsior. 2. The Eastern Magnet. 3. The East Coast Maelstrom. 4. Travel Triumph.—Mab.

1. The Cromer Diner. 2. The Cromer Luncher.—Selah.

1. The Norfolk Car. 2. The Cromer Corridor. 3. The Norfolk Swift. 4. City and Sea Express.—Walfred.

1. Bloater Car (going to the Norfolk bloater county). 2. Broadway Express (going to the Norfolk Broads county). 3. The Crumber (going to the Cromer county). 4. Great Feastern (going to the Great Eastern county).—Iere.

1. Norfolk Luncher. 2. Mid-day Norfolkman. 3. Mid-east Coaster. 4. Mid-east Luncher.—Bust.

1. Cromerstrand Express. 2. Cromerstrand Luncheon Express. 3. London and Cromerstrand Express. 4. Londonorfolk Luncheon Express.—Belfastonian.

1. The Nor'-Easter Express (Norfolk and East Coast being suggested, with the swiftness of a N.E. wind). 2. The Coaster. 3. The Crowbar Express.—In Tune.

1. Gnaw-folk Nibbler. 2. Daily Diner Dyspepsia Dispeller. 3 Mundesley Muncher. 4. Daily Diner, Service, Sharingham Rapid.—Dullard.

1. The Norfolk Racer. 2. The Great Eastern Comet. 3. The Lightning Conductor. 4. The Easter Seer.—M. S. Woodfin.

1. The Eastern Coaster. 2. The Flying Comet. 3. The Eastern Flash. 4. The Flying Eagle.—Nymph.

1. The Far East (Liverpool Street being "The near East.") 2. Cromer Courier. 3. The Rapid Restaurant). 4. The Trans-Trans (i.e., Transport Transcendent).—Golliwog.

1. Oeztmann. 2. Viking. 3. Braw North-Easter. 4. The Hardy Norseman.—Nemo.

1. English Orient Express. 2. Norfolk Oriental Express. 3. Oriental Coast Express. 4. London and Orient Express.—Three Spires.

1. Norks (Norfolk Coast Express). 2. Lonoco (London and the Norfolk Coast). 3. Greast Vest (Great Eastern Vestibule). 4. Speast (Speed East).—Pyeddi.

Catch name down train: 1. Healthward Ho! Catch name up train: 2. Wealthward Ho!—Iques.

1. The Sybarite (new line). 2. The Speed and Feed at Ease (new line). 3. The Fresh Breeze Train. 4. Entente Cordiale.—Lou Lou.

1. Near East Luncheon Time Express. 2. Midday East Coast Express. 3. Near East Coast Express. 4. Near East Coast Route Express.—Sandstone.

1. The Thames. 2. The C Sharp. 3. The Wild North-Easter.—Arch. G.

1. The Flyterion. 2. The Amphlitrion. 3. The Flying Carlton. 4. The Corridorfolk Express.—Eldifee.

1. The Norfolk Coast Comfort. 2. The Norfolk Coast Luncheon Express. 3. The Overstrand Luncheon Express. 4. The Cromer and Overstrand Luncheon Special.—Arragon.

1. Egyptian Express (as being complimentary to Lord Cromer and descriptive of the places served by this service of trains). 2. Crab and Cliff Express. 3. Poppy-strand Express. 4. The Crab-catcher.—Ecud.

1. The Norfolk Coaster. 2. Norfolk Coast Runner.—Rimabel.

1. The Poppyland Luncher. 2. The Poppyland Express. 3. The Poppyland Popular. 4. The Pop.—Mon.

1. The Poppyland Corridor Express (or Train-de-Luxe). N.B.—Cromer, Mundesley, Sheringham, and Overstrand are the coast towns in "Poppyland"). 2. The North-East Norfolk Littoral Express. 3. The Norfolk Riviera Express.—Poppy.

Norfolk Orient Express.—Cadzow.

1. Cromer Vestibule. 2. Solar Express. 3. Rapid Eastern. 4. Overstrand Car.—Atom.

1. Mangerie. 2. Currodine. 3. Vivenda. 4. Caret.—Canning.

The Ozone Express.—Gille Ban.

1. The Sea and Sandwich Train. 2. The Luncheon and Lightning Train. 3. The Cromer and Collation Train. 4. The East Coast and Inner Comfort Train.—Spinel.

1. Threefold Strand. 2. North Sea Fleet. 3. Salt Dash. 4. Sunrise-on-Sea.—Chang.

The Flying Dumpling.—Necky.

1. The "C.C.C." (the Cromer Corridor Clipper.) The abbreviation "C.C.C." is also by its sound suggestive of the sea. 2. The Corridor Clipper. 3. The Boadicea (once Queen of the Iceni, the country through which the train passes). 4. The Norfolk Nonpareil.—Minos.

1. The Norfolk "Dumpling" Express. 2. The Jockey of Norfolk. 3. The Blossom Land Express.—Six Knobs.

1. Poppyland Special Express. 2. North Norfolk Nonpareil. 3. Cromer Challenger. 4. Garden of Sleep Gondola.—Caedmon.

North Sea-Side Express.—Nsse.

1. London and Cromer Car. 2. London and Anglian Car. 3. Cromer and City Car. 4. Anglian and City Train.—Kent.

1. Cromer Luncheon Car. 2. Cromer Train. 3. East Anglia Car. 4. Anglian Corridor Car.—Dorset.

1. Elsie's Motor. 2. The Norfolk Roamer Luncheon Car Express. 3. The Sherry and Ham Lunch Express. 4. The Over-strained Liver Express.—Derula.

1. Great Eastern Lun-cor-car. 2. Anglian Corridor Car. 3. Cromer Corridor Car (the three C.'s train). 4. G.E. Up-to-Date Train.—Bucks.

1. The Cromer Poppyland Express. 2. London and Cromer (the Mun-Over, Lun. Car Express). 3. London and Cromer Poppyland Ves., Cor., Lun., Car Express.—Woodpecker.

1. The Broadway. 2. The Norfolk Breezer. 3. The Eastern Enterprise. 4. Sea Switch.—Nichola.

1. The Norfolk Dumpling. 2. The Speed and Feed 'Em. 3. The Crowflier. 4. The Cromer Motor.—Aster.

1. The Peaceful Eastener. 2. The Poppyland Luncher. 3. The East Anglian Special. 4. The Eastern Sea Coaster.—W. Glover.

1. The Croshmundover Express.—Svonok.

1. The G.E. Train d'Hote. 2. The G.E. Exmess. 3. The G.E. Special Dish 'Un. 4. The G.E. Lunch On.—Northlander.

1. Cro-meringue Car. 2. The Cro-fly Lunch Car. 3. The Cro-ver Strand Mun-sher. 4. The Cromer-lunch-over 'Spress.—Overdale.

1. The Cromer Coaster. 2. The Cromer Coast Express.—Lohengrin.

1. Excelsior. 2. Norfolk Combine. 3. Here and There. 4. Non-such.—Myra.

1. Norfolkspress. 2. Cromer Lunch. 3. Norfolksidor. 4. Norfolk Coaster.—Sincérité.

The Eastern Luncher.—Patrol.

1. The Comsex. 2. The Skimoner. 3. The Ecex. 4. The Norfolk Whizzer.—Spartan.

1. Norfolk Quick Sands of Pleasure Express. 2. Near Eastern Luncheon Express. 3. Seaside and Broads Luncheon Express. 4 City Overstrand Quick Luncheon Express.—Envoy.

1. The Stephenson Express. (It is only fitting that the great originator of locomotives should be perpetuated). 2. The Travellers Ne Plus Ultra. 3. The Broads Express. 4. The Veni Vidi Vici.—Nemesis.

1. Poppyland Express. 2. City and Cromer Express. 3. Cromer Coast Express. 4. Cromer Riviera Express.—Eastrail.

1. The Cromer Luncheon Car Express. 2. The East Anglian Special Rapid. 3. The Flying East Anglian. 4. The Cromer Corridor Special Rapid.—Allegro.

1. The Cromer Corridor Express. 2. The East Coast High Flyer. 3. The East Anglian Luncheon Car Express. 4. The Cromer Coast Flier.—Sarnia.

1. Flying Coaster. 2. The Beachcomber. 3. Star of the East 4. The Sandstreak.—Nautilus.

1. Cromer Strandleyham Express. 2. Poppyland Express. 3. Poppylux Express. 4. Strandleyham Express.—Provident.

1. The Cannon Ball Express. 2. The Eastern Flier. 3. The Lightning Express. 4. Ozone Express.—Jebel Zukur.

Extra Special.—Humshaugh.

1. The Flying Viking, or Viking Coaster, or simply The Viking. 2. The Poppyland Cosy Coaster. 3. The Eastward Ho! Coast Beauties Express.—Verbum Sat.

1. The Resurrection of the Golden Age. 2. The Grateful Refuge for the Weary. 3. Flora's Enchanted Home. 4. The Friend Ever Welcome.—Milliner.

1. The Scented Garden. 2. The Health Expander. 3. The Rambler's Delight. 4. The Pilgrim's Hope.—Sphinx.

1. The Linger and Joy. 2. Aladdin's Lamp. 3. The Pure Air Lung Inflater. 3. The Happy Tramp.—Crank.

1. The Ozone Magnetiser. 2. The Linger and Speed. 3. The Woodland Bower. 4. The Couch of Diana.—Mary.

1. The Swift Sure Health Regenerator. 2. The Herald of Happy Hours. 3. The Magician's Sanatorium. 4. The Hygienic Redeemer.—Sophia.

1. Cromer Coast Correlun. 2. Poppyland Correlun. 3. Poppyland Provedor. 4. The Popcorn Special.—Caw.

1 The Norfolk Golf Express. 2. The Poppyland Express. 3. The East Anglian Express. 4. The Norfolk Coaster.—Leaf Rule.

1. The Alexandra. 2. The Welcome. 3. The Convivial. 4. The Refresher.—Roy.

The Poppyland Express.—Wormholt.

1. The Flying Coaster. 2. The Rapid Restaurant. 3. The Fast Feeder. 4. Cromer in Comfort.—Autolycus.

1. Eastward-Ho! 2. Sit Easy Express. 3. Hamilton's Flyer. 4. East Anglian Flyer.—Ursellia.

1. Swallow. 2. Excel.—Up-to-Date.

The Fen Runner.—H—cubed.

1. Crumb o'Lunch Express (Cromer Lunch Express). 2. Cromer Coast Circuiteer. 3. The Royal Norfolk Express.—Fudge.

1. The Flying Anglian. 2. Overpool Lunch Express. 3. East Anglian Express. 4. Folks' Lunch Express.—Cleo.

Poppyland Express.—Western.

Kingsway Express.—Kay-Bee.

1. The Sea Sprite. 2. The Gadabout. 3. The Ha-Ha!—Espagnol.

1. The Norfolk Noonshooter. 2. The Norfolk Seabound Ex. 3. The G.E.R. Speedwell. 4. The New Sea Serpent.—Echo.

1. The Norfolk Gobbler and Corridor Coaster. 2. The Cromer Coast Cracker. 3. The Flying Turkey and East Coast Express. 4. The G.E. Coaster.—Korah.

1. The Poppyland and Broads Express. 2. The Broads Express. 3. The Poppyland Express. 4 The Fairyland Express.—Devon.

1. Overlunex. 2. Norfcolunex.—Esneh.

Poppyland Express.—Foley.

1. The Flying Norfolk Coaster. 2. Poppyland Coast Express. 3. Norfolk Poppyland Coaster. 4. Norfolk Coast Scarlet Runner.—Winkke.

1. Ozone. 2. Marine. 3. Promenade. 4 Déjeuner.—Apératif.

1. The Cromer and Overstrand Luncheon Express. 2. The Great Eastern, Cromer and Seaside Luncheon Express. 3. The Corridor Luncheon and Seaside Express. 4. The Norfolk Seaside Luncheon Express.—Simplex.

1. Poppyland Luncheon Express. 2. East Norfolk Coaster. 3. Norfolk Flying Luncher. 4 Eastern Coast Luncher.—Railman.

The Rapid East Coaster.—Issor.

1. The East Wind. 2. The Cromer Crawler. 3. The Flying Restaurant. 4. The Centipede.—Israfil.

1. Poppyland Express. 2. Golfers' Express Train. 3. Norfolk Ozone Express. 4. Corridor Express for the Garden of Sleep.—Cherrypicker.

1. The Cromer Links. 2. The Norfolk Golfer. 3. The Flying Eastern. 4. The Seaside Queen.—W. Brazier-Martin.

1. John Bull's Corridor Commissariat. 2. Good Cheer Corridor Express. 3. The Passengers' Pick-me-up. 4. Vestibule Viands Volant.—J. McGrigor Allan.

1. The Norex—i.e., Nor' E.X.—North-East Express.—Allspice.

1. Golfland Express. 2. Norfolk Shores Sea and Scenery. 3. Norfolks' Coast-line Corridor Service. 4. Cromer Coast Special (speed and comfort).—Maison Blanc.

1. The Poppyland Flyer. 2. The Poppyland Coaster. 3. The East Anglian Coaster. 4. The Liver-Over Express.—B. A.

1. Restaurant East Coast Express. 2. Restaurant Seaside Express. 3. Norfolk Express Restaurant. 4. Norfolk Coast Restaurant Express.—Asap.

1. The Cromunsherover Express. (The name is, of course, formed out of the first parts of the names of Cromer, Mundesley, Sheringham, and Overstrand, and I think it might serve a useful purpose in stimulating inquiry as to the destination of this train.) 2. The Comsoex.—Einnim.

1. The Eagle-winged Norfolk Coast Luncheon Car Express. 2. The Norfolk Coast Rapids. 3. The Fleeting Norfolk Coast Mid-day Express. 4. London and Cromer, etc., Season Luncheon Car Express Service.—Albert Illingworth.

1. East Coast Express. 2. Norfolk Broads Express. 3. G.E.R. Safeguard Express. 4. Eastern Counties Express.—(Miss) H. G. Watts.

1. Comos (Cromer, Overstrand, Mundesley and Sheringham). 2. The Cromer Swiftsure.—Capella.

1. Cromer Café Car. 2. Cromer Coast Café Car. 3. London and Cromer Luncheon Car. 4. Cromer Luncheon Scorcher.—Haiquatsi.

1. The East Anglian Flyer. 2. The East Anglian Express. 3. The Flying East Coaster. 4. The Eastern Seasider.—Nat Danby.

1. The Link of Luxury (with the Norfolk Coast). 2. The Eastern Express Enterprise. 3. The Cosy Corridor Coaster. 4. The Overland and Overstrand.—The Creole.

1. D.C.C.* 2. Dumpling Coast Cars. 3. The Dumpling Coaster. 4. Dumpling Corridor Cars. (*Norfolk dumplings should be a standing item in the luncheon menu.)—Thersites.

1. Eastern Light. 2. Sunbeam. 3. East Anglian Express. 4. Eastward Ho!—Sceptic.

1. Norfolk Coast and London Social. 2. Norfolk and London Social Express. 3. Norfolk Coast Mid-day Sociable. 4. Norfolk Coast Luncheon Special—Try.

You cannot fare better than with

WOLFE'S

Aromatic Schiedam

SCHNAPPS

wherever you may be. It is to ordinary spirits what champagne is to ordinary wines, representing the supreme perfection of a distilled spirit, and the highest possible point of purity. It is suitable alike for women and men, and possesses tonic properties that render it healthful, invigorating, and in every sense beneficial.

The best Pick-me-up. The best Tonic. The best Digestive.

Of all Spirit Merchants and Licensed Grocers. Wholesale :—

THE FINSBURY DISTILLERY COMPANY, LONDON.

The HACKNEY FURNISHING CO., Ltd.

Parties Furnishing should visit their West-End Premises, situated in the finest position in London,

93, 95, 97, 99, OXFORD STREET, W.

(Facing Newman Street).

Three minutes from Tottenham Court Road and Regent Street.

Their New Galleries are acknowledged to be the most Artistic combined with Elegance in London.

Parties can furnish on their deferred payment system as follows :—

GENERAL TERMS.

Worth	Per Month	Worth	Month	Worth	Month	Worth	Month
£10 ...	£0 6 0	£30 ...	£0 17 0	£50 ...	£1 8 0	£200 ...	£4 10 0
£20 ...	£0 11 0	£40 ...	1 5 0	£100 ...	£2 5 0	£500 ...	11 5 0

Free Life Insurance. Free Fire Insurance. No Security. No Deposit.

Head Offices and Showrooms { 1, 2, 3, 4, Town Hall Buildings. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, The Grove, adjoining Mare St., London, N.E.

Catalogues and full particulars post free.

A. M. STEWART, Managing Director.

MAPLE & CO

Designers and Manufacturers

CHAIRS

for Dining Room, Library, Smoking, Club and Mess Rooms—Occasional and Easy Chairs for Drawing Room and Boudoir—Morning and Workroom—Chairs for Hall, Vestibule and Cloak Room—Verandah, Garden and Lawn—Servants' Hall and Kitchen—Bedrooms and Bathroom—Public Rooms and Offices—Chairs of all kinds and every purpose at lowest prices. Send particulars of requirements, and ask for quotations, or a special Catalogue of "Chairs" will be sent free to those unable to visit the warehouse

SPECIALISTS in CHAIRS of ALL SORTS

LONDON BUENOS AIRES PARIS

DENT'S NEW REGULATOR CLOCK for Country Houses and Mansions, £21 and upwards

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

DENT'S CLOCKS

The Finest Selection in London.

Makers of the Great Westminster Clock (Big Ben),

And Sole Custodians since its erection.

Makers of the Standard Clock (the Primary Standard Timekeeper of the United Kingdom) of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich; and of Standard Clocks in most principal Foreign and Colonial Observatories.

☞ SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED C and W CATALOGUE FREE.

CAUTION.

E. DENT & CO., Ltd., find it necessary to inform the public that their ONLY ADDRESSES are—61, Strand, and 4, Royal Exchange, E.C. Telephone: No. 14663 Central.

DENT TRADE MARK

No instrument, from No. 38,000 upwards, is genuine without the above Trade Mark.

CHAS. KNOWLES & Co., LTD.

The Wykeham. From 3/3 per piece.

Manufacturers of

Art Wall & Ceiling Papers

Patterns on Application.

164, King's-road, Chelsea, LONDON, S.W.

The Largest Show-Rooms in London.

THE BEST ON EARTH.

SIR ANDREW CLARK'S INVARIABLE ADVICE WAS

"Let the Patient have Schweitzer's Cocoatina, if you please."

SCHWEITZER'S Cocoatina

The Most Nutritious and Perfectly Digestible Cocoa.

For Invalids and Children as well as for the Strong and Healthy.

"This is Genuine Cocoa."—THE LANCET.

H. SCHWEITZER & CO., LTD., 143, York-road, London, N.

Why I Failed on the Stage

By AN ACTRESS.

The glamour of the footlights has proved so irresistible, especially of late years, to so many high-spirited, cultured young women who fancy they see in "the stage," as a career, an honourable outlet for their energy and talent that this unvarnished account of her actual experiences by an actress who has enjoyed quite a fair measure of popularity deserves to be perused with the closest attention by everybody interested in the question. The experiences of other women on the English stage may have been less terrible than those of the writer of this article. If so, in accordance with its standard of the strictest impartiality towards all public questions, the "Grand Magazine" will be happy to open its columns to any actress of repute who is prepared to take up the challenge here thrown down.

See the GRAND Magazine

JUNE. Now on Sale. 4½D. net.

Countless Thousands are afflicted with some slight trouble. It may be discomfort after food—or before a meal: perhaps a periodic headache: maybe constipation and consequent irregularity: possibly pains in the back arising from disordered conditions of the Liver and Kidneys. Now no such depressing sensations are experienced by those

Who Enjoy Perfect Health

It will be found on enquiry, that the majority of those happy ones owe their immunity from illness to BEECHAM'S PILLS. There is no doubt about the efficacy of this medicine. It has earned for itself a magnificient, world-wide reputation. BEECHAM'S PILLS act at once on the stomach and enable you to properly digest and enjoy your food. To remove constipation; to assist Nature in her curative efforts; to put the Liver and Kidneys in good order, you need

Take no Medicine but

BEECHAM'S PILLS

They will ensure a spotless skin, a clear complexion, and the delightful consciousness that all is well with you.

Sold in boxes, price 1/1½ (56 pills) & 2/9 (168 pills).

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & MALCOMSON, Limited, 4 and 5, Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., and Published by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st. E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.
Entered as Second-Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1590. Vol. LXI. Wednesday, June 19, 1907. Price Sixpence.

TO OUR READERS.

We receive hundreds of letters every week from "Readers of 'Truth.'" A large majority of the writers expect replies direct. Of the work, trouble, and expense involved in doing this we say nothing. But as experience has shown that a large number of our "Constant" and "Regular" readers who inquire about individuals with whom we have dealt in our columns over and over again are not actual subscribers to the paper, but merely occasional readers of it at clubs, libraries, or at friends' houses, we consider we must protect ourselves in the matter.

We have therefore decided that henceforth every reader who writes making an inquiry that necessitates a direct reply must enclose a stamped envelope and also a Coupon which will always be found at the foot of the 3rd page of the coloured cover. Without these no notice will be taken of the communication.

Inquiries addressed to "Vigilant," which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through his "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can "Vigilant" send replies by post.

No Coupon will be available that is over a fortnight out of date, except from correspondents residing abroad.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made Payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Buildings," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

A SPECIAL Supplement, dealing with Art and Photography, appears with this week's Truth.

The King is to arrive at Lincoln next Wednesday at noon by special train from King's Cross. His Majesty will be received by Lord Brownlow and Lord Yarborough, and he is to be presented with an address from the Corporation at the Great Northern station, but, in order to save time, he will return a written reply, instead of making a speech. The King is to arrive at the Royal Agricultural Society's show ground on the West Common by half-past twelve. His Majesty will leave Lincoln for London at 3.40. The carriages for the Royal special, which is to stop only at Grantham, will be provided by the London and North-Western Company.

The King and Queen will probably decide to alter the arrangements for their journey to Ireland. It is now expected that their Majesties will leave London on Monday, July 8, proceeding direct from Euston to Holyhead, and dining and sleeping on board the Royal yacht. On Tuesday, the 9th, the King and Queen will proceed by special train to Bangor, arriving at twelve o'clock. State carriages will have been sent down from Buckingham Palace, and their Majesties will drive from the station to the site of the new University College, and, after the King has laid the foundation-stone, they will proceed to the Town Hall, where there is to be a luncheon given by Lord Kenyon. In the afternoon the King and Queen will proceed for a motor drive, going by Bethesda, Ogwen Lake, Capel Curig, and Llanberis Pass, to Port Dinorwic, whence they will return to Holyhead, the Royal train having been brought hither from Bangor. Their Majesties will again dine and sleep on board the Victoria and Albert, which is to proceed next morning at daybreak for Kingstown.

His Majesty will pay a week-end visit on Saturday, the 28th, to Mr. and Mrs. Harcourt, at Nuneham Park, Oxfordshire. The house at Nuneham, which is large and well arranged, but heavy in appearance, is admirably situated on a wooded height overlooking the Thames. It contains a valuable collection of Old Masters and portraits, and a splendid Sèvres dessert service. The gardens, which were laid out by Capability Brown, combine both the picturesque and the formal styles, and there are charming walks through the woods on the banks of the river. The deer park of twelve hundred acres is famous for its fine timber, and from the higher grounds there are beautiful views. It contains the handsome conduit of Otho Nicholson, which was removed from Oxford to Nuneham in 1787.

The old village of Nuneham Courtenay stood in the park near the site of the present house until the reign of Queen Anne, when it was removed by Lord Harcourt to the side of the high road. It is neat and formal, with a church built by the late Colonel Harcourt in 1880, to replace one which was erected by Simon Lord Harcourt near the river, after he had taken down the ancient church in 1764.

The Nuneham estate, which is a very large one, was owned for centuries by the Courtenays, and afterwards by the Pollards, and during the reign of Charles II. it passed into the possession of Sir John Robinson, Lieutenant of the Tower, whose daughter married David, Earl of Wemyss, who sold the property in 1710 to Lord Chancellor Harcourt. The estate was bequeathed by the last Earl Harcourt in 1830 to his kinsman, Archbishop Vernon, who assumed the name of Harcourt, and he was the grandfather of the late Sir William Harcourt. George III. and Queen Charlotte twice visited Lord Harcourt at Nuneham. The Harcourts have been laudably generous in granting access to their beautiful domain to visitors, and Nuneham has always been the favourite spot for Oxford boating parties, for whose accommodation there is a picturesque cottage on the island, which is connected with the park by a quaint wooden bridge.

Windsor Castle will not be itself open to the guests at their Majesties' garden party on Saturday afternoon, as they are not expected to enter the house. The company will arrive by the South Terrace, proceeding thence direct to the East Terrace and Slopes, where the party is to take place. The refreshment marquees are to be erected on the Lower Slopes, where one of the bands will play, and refreshments are also to be served in the Orangery. With a vast omnium gatherum of over seven thousand guests it is most necessary that the regulations for the entertainment should be both full and precise in order that there may be no mistakes or tracasseries. The opening of the Slopes to the guests much facilitates all the arrangements, as formerly at Windsor Castle garden parties the company were limited to the East Terrace and the South Garden.

The King and Queen are expected to visit Virginia Water next Sunday afternoon, when there will probably be a Royal picnic dinner in the Fishing Temple on the bank of the lake. The Queen will probably pay a visit during her stay at Windsor Castle to Lord and Lady Alice Stanley at Coworth Park, Sunningdale. During the eighties the place was occupied for Ascot week in several successive years by the King and Queen (then Prince and Princess of Wales), who rented it from Mr. Arbuthnot. Coworth Park, which is one of the most attractive domains in the Ascot district, was purchased some years ago by Lord Derby as a residence for his eldest son, Lord Stanley.

The Ministers and Great Officers of the Household have sent out invitations for a full dress banquet on Friday, the 28th, "to celebrate his Majesty's birthday." There will be a very large Ministerial reception at the Foreign Office on the same night, and it is understood that Lady Sefton and Lady Crewe will act as hostesses at this entertainment.

The State Ball was a very full one, and both the ballroom and the picture gallery were crowded soon after ten o'clock, but it was eleven o'clock before the King and Queen's procession entered, and the band then played the British and Danish National Anthems. There was an unusually large muster of Royalties, including the Duchess of Albany and her nieces, the two Princesses of Bentheim. The Princess Royal was also present. The Royal party included the Landgrave of Hesse, who is a first cousin of King Frederick and Queen Alexandra. The quadrille d'honneur was danced directly after the King and Queen had taken their places on the dais, and was divided into two sets, the lower one being headed by the Duke of Connaught. Royalties only danced at the top and bottom, while the side places were filled with "distinguished persons," who had previously been warned by the Lord Chamberlain that they would be expected to dance.

Refreshments were served all night in two of the rooms which open out of the corridors. The acting Lord Steward announced supper to the King and Queen shortly after midnight, and the Royalties then proceeded in procession to the Chinese Room, where the tables and buffet were adorned with gold plate, the flowers being orchids and pink blooms. The famous Portland vases were filled with lovely roses. The supper rooms for the guests were opened at midnight. The floral decorations were very fine indeed, and were greatly admired. The programme of dances included three quadrilles, three polkas, a galop, all the others being waltzes. Some Indian Princes were present in magnificent Oriental dresses, and blazing with jewels. They occupied the seats at the right of the daïs, which are usually reserved for Duchesses.

The Prince and Princess of Wales are to return to Marlborough House on Monday from Windsor, and will then settle in town until the end of next month, except from July 9 to 12, when they are to be the guests of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch at Dalkeith Palace during their public visit to Edinburgh.

The Prince will be able to pay only a brief visit to Lincoln next week, so H.R.H. is not to be the guest of Lord Londesborough at Blankney Hall, as had been expected. It is probable that the Prince of Wales will accompany the King from London on Wednesday. Prince Christian, who is expected to visit the show on two days, is to be the guest of Major Laycock at Wiseton Hall, near Bawtry.

The Duke of Connaught goes to Scotland at the beginning of next week in order that he may witness some cavalry manœuvres in the Strathtay district of Perthshire. H.R.H is to be the guest of the Duke of Atholl at Blair Castle and at Dunkeld House during his stay in Perthshire.

Princess Louise Duchess of Argyll is to open the Romsey Pageant next Tuesday, and H.R.H. will be the guest of Mr. Evelyn and Lady Alice Ashley at Broadlands, where there is to be a large house party during the week, including Lord Rosebery and Lord James of Hereford. The sermon at the special service in Romsey Abbey on Tuesday morning is to be preached by the Bishop of Bristol. Broadlands, which was the favourite residence of Lord Palmerston, passed from the St. Barbes to the Temples, and the present house, which is in no way remarkable, was re-built by the father of the Minister. It contains an interesting collection of Old Masters and portraits. The lawn slopes from the house to the Test, and the grounds are pleasant and well wooded, but the park is quite small. The Broadlands estate was left by Lord Palmerston to his

For Appeals, see page 1556.
For the Truth Hotel List, see page 1557.
For Special for Ladies, see page 1561.
For Selected Foreign Hotels, see page 1558.
For Amusements, see pages 1552, 1553, and 2 of Supplement
For Estates, Auctions, see page 1560.
For Our Puzzles, see pages 1565, 1566.

stepson, Lord Mount Temple, and it now belongs to Mr. Evelyn Ashley, who is a grandson of Lady Palmerston by her marriage with the fifth Earl Cowper.

The Grand Duke of Oldenburg, who has been staying for a week at Clarence House on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, is a brother-in-law of the Duchess, his first wife having been one of her sisters. The Grand Duke has been cruising in the Mediterranean for several months in his yacht Lensahn, and he came to England on his way back to Germany.

The Duc d'Orléans, who has just started for a three months' yachting cruise in northern waters, had a private audience of the King and Queen at Buckingham Palace during his brief stay in London. He then formally announced to their Majesties the betrothal of his youngest sister, Princesse Louise d'Orléans, to the Infante Don Carlos, son of the Conte di Caserta, which was privately arranged about a month ago before the Comtesse de Paris left Spain to pass the summer in France. The wedding is not to take place at Wood Norton, the seat of the Duc d'Orléans in Worcestershire, as has been stated in the press. It will be celebrated in Spain, according to present arrangements, next November, either at Villamanrique, the beautiful estate of the Comtesse de Paris near Cadiz, or at Madrid. The first wife of Don Carlos (Prince Charles of Bourbon) was the late Princess of Asturias, sister of the King of Spain.

It was announced last week in an ingenuous provincial paper that "Our city is evidently in high favour with the King, as his Majesty has graciously commanded the attendance of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress at the garden party which is to be given at Windsor Castle on the 22nd." The fact is that Lord Mayors and Lady Mayoresses have been invited in a body to the Royal garden party. There are an immense number of quasi-official invitations, for at such a ceremonial the King kindly and sensibly suspends the old rule which limited the commands to Palace entertainments to persons ("male and female") who have been presented at Court.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen return to the Viceregal Lodge, Phœnix Park, next week. They will have some visitors next month, and many preparations to make for the King's Irish visit, short though it will be.

Lord Castletown, who is to succeed the late Lord de Ros as a Knight of the Order of St. Patrick, is a popular and genial Irishman. He has some tinge of Nationalism, and is interested in the Gaelic movement, though his practical efforts at reviving the ancient garb of Irishmen have not gone beyond the suggestion of the wear of embroidered brogues instead of the less characteristic boot or shoe of ordinary twentieth century wear. Lord Castletown is Chancellor of the Royal University of Ireland, having been elected to the post on Lord Meath's resignation of it last year.

The death of Sir Arthur Ellis vacates the office of Comptroller in the Lord Chamberlain's Department, which is in the gift of the King, and the salary (paid out of the Civil List) is £1,000 a year. Apartments in St. James's Palace are annexed to the post, but Sir Arthur Ellis never lived there. He was appointed in March, 1901, when Sir Spencer Ponsonby Fane retired, after forty-four years' service, and he survives his successor, although thirteen years his senior. Sir Spencer, who was a clerk in the Foreign Office from 1840 until he received his appointment in the Household in 1857, succeeded the well-known Norman Macdonald. Sir Arthur Ellis was equerry in ordinary to the King (then Prince of Wales) from 1866 until 1898, when Queen Victoria appointed him Serjeant-at-Arms in the House of Lords.

Sir Arthur Ellis was a general favourite among his colleagues in the Household, and he was very popular in society. His death is a real loss to the King, who will miss him greatly, as he had been intimately associated with his Majesty for over forty years, and had often been employed in confidential affairs outside the duties of his office. Sir Arthur Ellis had rendered valuable services to the King in connection with the newly established office of Secretary of the Central Chancery of the Order of Knighthood, which he quickly organised and placed in working order. Many of the new arrangements at the Court ceremonials, which have proved so successful, were also suggested by him, and have been carried out under his superintendence.

Mr. C. N. Welman, who died last week at the age of ninety-three, inherited large estates in Somersetshire from his father, who himself was born in 1746, so the two lives extended over 161 years. Mr. Welman was the head of an ancient Roman Catholic family which has been prominent in Somersetshire since the reign of Charles I.

Sir Alexander Arbuthnot, who died last week at the age of eighty-five, retired from public life ten years ago, when he vacated his seat on the Council of India, and he had then completed fifty-five years of valuable service. He was a most distinguished member of the Madras Civil Service, and particularly remarkable for his organising and administrative abilities. He did excellent practical work as Director of Public Instruction in Madras, and also many years later during the famine in Southern India. It would be difficult indeed to overrate the value of his work, while he left a permanent mark upon the Presidency of Madras. He was a man of genial manner, and every one both liked and esteemed him. Sir Alexander was a son of Bishop Arbuthnot, who held the Irish see of Killaloe, and a brother of Sir Charles Arbuthnot, formerly Commander-in-Chief in Bombay and in Madras. The two brothers were educated at Rugby under Dr. Arnold.

DISTRUST unscrupulous dealers who try to substitute inferior inks. Ridicule the excuses "out of stock," or "just as good," and—buy elsewhere. Insist on having STEPHENS' INK.

"TRUTH" writes:—"I have never heard anything but favourable accounts of DR. LUNN'S Excursions." Tours to Switzerland. Norway Cruises.—Secretary, 5, Endsleigh Gardens, N.W.

A MATRON'S VIEW OF ASCOT.

(Overheard in the Royal Enclosure.)

Eh? What will win the Cup? Oh, pooh!
Such foolish questions spare.
'Tis not the Ascot Cup to view
That hither I repair;
A race of import far more true
Absorbs a mother's care.

For I've a little filly which
To-day her début makes (And oh! how, lest there come some hitch,
My anxious bosom quakes!).
She's entered for that contest rich—
The Matrimonial Stakes.

A City Boss to-day is here
And eke His Grace of P.;
And old Earl Swipés, who gained by beer
His rank and £ s. d.
Their values thus, from front to rear,
I class as one—two—three.

For this event I've backed both ways
My precious, darling girl.
So, if she fails to win the race
And catch that City pearl—
Pray Heaven, at least she'll get a place
And pinch The Duke or Earl.

I am credibly informed that the members' enclosures at Sandown, Kempton Park, and other racing clubs are becoming infested by amateur bookmakers. There is a feeling among members who do not make books themselves that this practice, which has increased, and is increasing, ought to be diminished. There is no reason, of course, why a member of a club should not make a book, but there are obvious objections to his doing it openly in the members' enclosure. If it were made a rule that any member desiring to practise as a bookmaker should wear a band round his hat with his name on it, the rule being applied impartially to nobility and commoners, the effect would probably be that the amateurs would prefer to take their places among the professionals outside.

With reference to the extracts given last week from the rules and fines applied by Edmonds, Denham, and Goyder, Limited, to their assistants, I have received a communication from the company, who contend that I have done them a serious injustice. I should be sorry to do that. The rules seemed to speak for themselves, and I said little more than they said. The company's reply is that in point of fact the fines which look so formidable are very rarely enforced, apparently because the occasion for enforcing them rarely arises, and they absolutely deny that any girl in their employ has incurred fines to the amount of 2s. 6d. within two days of starting work. The statement to this effect must have been imaginative. Further, no fines have ever been deducted from wages, but only from bonuses or commissions, and the whole of the amounts go to the employees' recreation fund. To prove these statements the company have had their books for the past twelve months examined by Messrs. E. J. Mills and Co., of 110, Cheapside, and send me the report of the result. It shows that while over £6,000 were paid in wages to the staff (180 persons) in that time, the total fines levied were under £4, that in no case has a fine exceeded 1s. for one offence, and that 80 per cent. of the total was levied in twopences for arriving late.

In this state of things it may be wondered whether there is any real necessity for maintaining such a drastic penal code as that quoted last week. The company say:—

> The requirements of a drapery business are such that an elaborate system of rules is necessary, and it is part of the education of the assistant to thoroughly understand these rules. Every assistant is continually handling money over the counter, and moreover with the many details concerning entry customers, approbation books, day books, etc., the most stringent rules are necessary both for the proper conduct of the business, and the checking of any assistant who should be dishonestly disposed. The rules are made quite as much in the interest of the assistant as in that of the firm, and the fact that in a perfectly organised business, with a proper code of rules, so few mistakes do occur is the best possible argument for the existence of these rules.

For the existence of the rules, doubtless. No one will deny that stringent rules are necessary in a business of this kind. But it is the fines that I took exception to, not the rules. The fact that the rules are maintained practically inviolate without exacting fines, except for the incurable offence of late arrival at work, suggests that the fines are not really necessary, and that some different mode of marking an offence might be equally efficacious. Of course, there must be some punishment for breaking rules, but if I were running a business of this kind I think I could find a substitute for the fines. Messrs. Edmonds, Denham, and Goyder tell me that before my remarks appeared, instructions had been given for a revision of the rules, and I suggest to them that it is a good opportunity for experimenting with some new form of punishment. The fining system is harmless enough if the fines are not levied, but not otherwise; and as rules like these appear to be common in the trade, we cannot be sure that the fines will never be levied, or that all firms will apply them for the benefit of the assistants collectively.

In several of my contemporaries it has been stated that the Trentham Hall sale commences to-day (Wednesday). Messrs. George Trollope and Sons ask me to correct this statement, the date fixed for the commencement of the sale being Wednesday, July 17.

Professor Inge, who has replaced the Dean of Ely (Dr. Kirkpatrick) in the Lady Margaret Chair of

The Woodland Laundry, Park Rd. East, Acton. Tel. 620 Chiswick. "A really first-class laundry at moderate prices."—The Ladies' Field. "It appeals to dainty people."—The Queen. Please apply for Price List, &c.

The Cure of Consumption.—L.R.C.P., M.R.C.S., writes as follows:—"I think it only right to state that for some years I have prescribed Dr. Alabone's remedies for chest diseases, having been converted to do so by the marvellous recovery of a patient whom I had given up to die. Since then I have attended other cases of advanced tubercular disease, and have watched them gradually restored to health."—"The Cure of Consumption, Chronic Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrh," price 2s. 6d., by E. W. Alabone, Lynton House, Highbury-quadrant, N

Divinity at Cambridge, is to be succeeded in the important living of All Saints, Ennismore Gardens, by the Rev. J. H. F. Peile, Fellow and Chaplain of University College, Oxford, and Bampton Lecturer for the present year. Dr. Inge has held the vicarage of All Saints for only two years, having succeeded the Archdeacon (Steuart) of Bristol in this benefice. The living is in the gift of the rector of St. Margaret's, Westminster. Mr. Peile's Bampton Lectures have drawn very large congregations, and have met with warm approval at Oxford. His impending removal to London is much regretted, as he will be greatly missed in the University, to which he is a real loss.

The Archbishop of York has appointed the Rev. Canon Hutchings to the Chancellorship of York Minster, an office without emolument. Canon Hutchings, who was presented about twenty years ago to the valuable living of Kirkby Misperton, in the North Riding, by Lord Feversham, was last year collated by the Archbishop to a residentiary stall in York Minster. He then resigned the Archdeaconry of Cleveland, which he had held for ten years. Bishop Blunt, Rector of Hessle, is at present the Canon-in-Residence at York Minster, and he will be on duty until the end of August. The revenue of the Chapter of York has been so largely reduced by agricultural depression that the four residentiary stalls, which were formerly worth £720 a year each, now yield only £350 a year.

Bishop Webb, who died last Wednesday, was for some years Vice-Principal of Cuddesdon College under the present Bishop of Lincoln, and he was afterwards for three years Rector of Avon Dassett, Warwickshire, a benefice which he vacated in 1870 on being appointed Bishop of Bloemfontein. He was then only thirty-one, and was indebted for his promotion to Bishop Gray, the energetic but somewhat intolerant and domineering Metropolitan of South Africa. Bishop Webb worked in the colony with zeal and success for twenty-eight years, and in 1898 he returned home, and acted as assistant Bishop in the Scotch diocese of Moray and Ross until 1901, when Lord Salisbury appointed him to the Deanery of Salisbury, in the place of the brilliant and accomplished George Boyle. He was a High Churchman of the advanced school, but being a man of large experience and strong common sense, he took wide views in many departments of Church affairs. He was an admirable preacher and a most effective platform speaker, and will be a great loss to the diocese of Salisbury.

The Deanery of Salisbury was formerly a rich piece of preferment, but in 1840 the stipend was fixed at £1,000 a year, and as agricultural depression has reduced the income of the Chapter, the income has latterly fallen to about £650, so the office can be held only by an ecclesiastic possessed of adequate private means. The picturesque deanery, with its beautiful gardens, is one of the most delightful residences in England, and a perfectly ideal retreat for a scholar.

There is now proceeding a wholesale distribution in Ireland of circulars and tickets relating to a "drawing of prizes" (otherwise a lottery), which is being promoted by the Very Rev. Father Felix, Passionist, Rector of St. Joseph's, Highgate Hill, London, in aid of a fund for the building of new Catholic schools in that district. The circular states that the building of new schools is being reluctantly undertaken "to comply with the order of the bigoted educational authorities"—which doubtless means that the old schools are being closed because structural or sanitary defects render them unfit for use. However, the object of the lottery or the language in which the appeal is couched is immaterial. It is unquestionably a violation of the law, and as the Lord Mayor was prohibited from holding the proposed "tombola" for the benefit of the Crippled Children's Fund, I do not see how the Home Secretary or the police can possibly permit the Very Rev. Father Felix to carry out this more flagrantly illegal gambling scheme.

Many of my readers will doubtless have seen that the King has promised to open the Union Jack Club on Monday, July 1, and that his Majesty has also expressed the wish that the club may be opened free from debt. Roughly speaking, about £16,000 is still required for that purpose. I take it that most people know the objects of the club, which are to provide a home and meeting-place of the best class in London for non-commissioned officers and men, and at the same time to form a national memorial commemorating the services of the rank and file in the South African war. Both of those objects should appeal to our patriotic sentiments, and though £16,000 seems a big sum, if the public will look at the matter in the right light the money will yet be forthcoming by July 1.

Last summer an appeal was made to my readers for assistance in giving the old people in the Lambeth Workhouse a day's outing in the country. It is proposed to give them a similar treat again this summer, and donations for the purpose will be received by Miss Alice M. Grey (one of the Lambeth Poor Law Guardians), St. Anne's Cottage, Oxshott, Surrey.

I have received the following contributions towards the Tress Barry Fund for providing new sixpences for distribution to the children in the workhouses at Christmas, and as Christmas is such a long way off, I take the opportunity of reminding those of my readers who have not yet contributed, that the Fund must be closed at the end of July:—

	No. of Sixpences.		No. of Sixpences.
H.	200	F.	40
R. Gill	40	Rex	2
Frank A. Ferguson	50	Yankee	40
Ward Room Officers H.M.S. Revenge	65	B. H.	5

IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE
IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE
IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE IRROY'S CHAMPAGNE

LAKMÉ, 22, DAVIES-STREET, BERKELEY SQUARE.—Dressing-gowns and fine lingerie. American Novelties. Cotillon favours. 8674 Gerrard.

An officer in India who claims to have anticipated, in suggestions which he made some years ago, most of the essential features of Mr. Haldane's proposals, sends me a letter mentioning some of his own ideas, which he thinks might be incorporated with Mr. Haldane's with advantage. Here are two of them:—

1. The field officers of the Territorial Army should be pensioned officers of the Regular Army. There are many Indian Army officers, no longer able to stand the climate of India, who would jump at the opportunity of such employment at home, and be in every way fit for it.

2. The company officers of the Territorial Army should gain their commissions through the ranks of the Regular Army, doing at least five years' foreign service. This would be a great inducement to men to join the Army, as well as conducive to proficiency, and would provide the Territorial Army with a class of hard-working officers accustomed to live on their pay. . . .

These suggestions imply the officering of the Territorial Army with a class of professional soldiers, and I do not see how they can be said to "fit in" with Mr. Haldane's scheme, as the author of them claims that they do. But the efficient officering of the proposed Army is a very difficult problem, and there is no saying what may not have to be tried before it is solved.

A Volunteer officer writes:—

I do not understand the objections which were expressed by Lord Castlereagh and others during the debate on Mr. Haldane's Bill to the raising of money by County Associations outside the Government grant. Surely, if these associations are to make themselves thoroughly useful, they will want money for all sorts of purposes besides those which can be recognised in estimates and parliamentary votes. The Government declined to limit their right to raise money by private subscriptions, so that we may assume it to be contemplated by the War Office that they will do so. This is a very important matter, which ought to be thoroughly understood, which is my excuse for writing to you on the subject.

I quite agree. In the debate on this point strong objections were expressed to the County Associations "sending round the hat." If the Territorial Army is to be essentially on a volunteer basis, I see no reason why it should not be assisted by voluntary contributions. It must be assumed that there are large numbers of people who, though unable to serve personally, appreciate the duty of doing so, and would be willing to testify this appreciation in cash; and patriotism may manifest itself in cash as well as in personal service. As a matter of fact, Volunteer corps have to "send round the hat" as it is, often at considerable sacrifice of dignity. Even the Admiralty has encouraged voluntary contributions from particular localities for the benefit of particular ships, with a view of fostering local interest in the Navy. The more local interest in this shape is manifested in the territorial battalions, the better for all parties. One of the great advantages of a County Association seems to me to lie in the facilities it will have for raising substantial funds from those who cannot, or do not, serve, and at the same time relieving officers and men from the indignity of having to appeal for cash.

The grievance, recently referred to, of the men who are being deprived of first-class service pay because they are not first-class shots is not confined to South Africa. There are men everywhere who have extended their service on the understanding that the qualification for first class service pay was that they should be at least in the second class in musketry, and the third class in education. There really cannot be the slightest justification for altering these conditions, and in justice to the War Office one must suppose that the alteration has only been made in temporary forgetfulness of the agreement already entered into with the men. But it will be impossible to suppose this if the matter is not put right promptly.

With reference to the question which was discussed in TRUTH a few weeks back as to whether a soldier in India who comes home on furlough thereby breaks his period of continuous service abroad as calculated for the purpose of transfer to the home establishment, an Indian correspondent points out that the matter is at present governed by a general order by the Commander-in-Chief in India issued in 1894. This distinctly lays down that after a furlough the service required to render a man eligible for transfer to the home battalion can only count from the date of his re-embarkation for India. I am bound to say that I see nothing unreasonable in this rule. The object of the recent concessions in regard to furlough home was to induce men to prolong their service in India; and there would seem to be no object in giving a man a furlough if he desires to return to England for good at the first moment when he becomes eligible to do so. But if this is to be the rule it ought to be clearly understood by every man before he takes his furlough; and I gathered when the point was first under notice in TRUTH that there had been some misunderstanding about it.

A corporal of the Black Watch, who was desirous of settling in India on discharge to the Reserve, obtained an offer of a job on a railway, and in January was given two months' leave in order to take up the appointment. He went to Lahore for the purpose, but shortly afterwards obtained a much better post, both in regard to pay and prospects, in a private hospital conducted by a medical gentleman. Before the end of his two months he wrote to apply for another month's extension of leave, which had been promised him before he started, thereby disclosing that he was not in the service of the railway company. He was immediately recalled to his regiment, arraigned before his commanding officer, and deprived of his stripe for "irregular conduct" in taking employment elsewhere when he had obtained a furlough for the purpose of obtaining employment with the railway company.

This really seems like red tape run mad. What on earth does it matter to the military authorities whether the man enters the service of one employer or another? At the very most the worst offence that can be alleged against him is that he ought to have informed his commanding officer that he had found another berth; but this is a purely technical offence, and why should a man be punished for it to the extent of losing his rank on discharge, and possibly his situation also? I should have thought that it would be considered rather desirable than otherwise that reservists belonging to battalions in India should find employment in that country, but the above case rather suggests an intention to discourage them from doing so.

Not long since I expressed surprise that a sergeant-major should have held for four years the position of manager to the mineral water factory in a regiment in India. It would seem, however, that this state of things is not unprecedented, for I now hear of another regiment in which this position appears to be permanently attached to the sergeant-majorship. The late sergeant-major held it for seven years, and on his being pensioned some two years ago, his successor took it over, and has held it ever since. I should have thought myself that it was a job that might be better performed by someone below the rank of warrant officer, and also one which would be better passed round among the non-commissioned officers in turn.

It is still more surprising to learn that in the regiment just referred to the post of canteen manager has been held by one non-commissioned officer since the battalion arrived in India in March, 1892. There is more than one reason against keeping the same man in a post of this kind for fifteen years. The N.C.O. in question is just completing twenty-six years' service, and the case seems another illustration of the extent to which men holding desirable berths are allowed to remain in possession of them to the prejudice of juniors looking for improvement in their position.

In a well-known Irish infantry regiment a lance-sergeant was lately promoted to sergeant on the strength of no other qualification than a first-class certificate of education. Among those passed over was another man many years senior, who had served through the South African War, and holds a first-class gymnastic certificate, besides having passed the examination for promotion, but he had no first-class education certificate. This seems a striking instance of the undue regard occasionally shown to purely educational attainments, and is the more indefensible seeing that the first-class certificate of education is exalted not only above war service, but over the official test of fitness for promotion. As a mere civilian, it seems to me that this tendency might be checked with advantage. If I had to select a man to fight my battles, I know that I would rather have a man who had fought through the South African War, and proved himself a first-class gymnast, than a perfect dragon at arithmetic, history, or geography.

So far as one can judge from what Mr. Robertson has confided to the House of Commons, the report of the Committee on Naval Canteens is likely to be a useful document. The main feature in it is the recommendation that the "savings" system shall be abolished, a fixed ration, plus a messing allowance in cash, being substituted for it. In other words, the Army system is to be adopted in the Navy. With this, a certain measure of Admiralty control over the management of canteens is to be introduced. How far it will go cannot be judged accurately until one has the text of the report, but there is to be an Admiralty list of contractors from which commanding officers may select their own tenants, also apparently an official list of canteen prices, and a model agreement for the letting of canteens. Within these limits each commanding officer will be free to exercise his own discretion. As these recommendations are more or less on the lines suggested in TRUTH a few months ago, when the Committee was commencing its labours, I am naturally predisposed in their favour, but there seems to be a pretty general agreement everywhere that the time has come for making a clean sweep of the "savings" system.

Mr. Robertson justifies the abstention of the Admiralty hitherto from all interference with canteen management on the ground that "My Lords" have desired to give their men as much liberty as possible. This is a very noble motive, but the result has only shown that too much liberty is sometimes a doubtful blessing. In this instance it must have been convenient to the Admiralty, for the go-as-you-please system has saved some trouble at headquarters; but the liberty conceded has included the liberty of certain petty officers to make a good deal for themselves out of catering at sea; and it certainly has not had the effect of satisfying the men—at any rate, in recent times. A great many abuses, for which the men have suffered, will disappear when every man has behind his Government ration a fixed sum per diem which he—or at any rate the mess collectively—can spend more or less according to their own taste; and when it is the business of every commanding officer to see that the canteen affords them proper facilities for this purpose, and that it is managed on certain definite principles.

I should think it will be found that useful economies may be effected under the new system. As has been observed in these columns, the "savings" system was certainly not saving from the taxpayer's point of view, involving, as it did, the keeping of an account of the money value of rations issued in respect of each individual man. Looking at it from the other side, a contractor is obviously in a better position to make close calculations of his probable turnover, and offer favourable terms, when he can rely upon the expenditure of a definite sum per head per diem in the shape of messing allowance, instead of being more or less in the dark, as he was when the canteen expenditure was largely determined by what each man might or might not have to spend in the shape of savings. But it will be necessary to keep a very sharp eye upon your contractors, and to prevent the business falling into the hands of trade rings. It has been suggested than an inspector of canteens should be appointed, with the duty of looking into the way in which canteen contracts are carried out, and seeing that no unfair profits are made; and although the Canteen Committee does not seem to have thought this necessary, experience may yet prove that it is.

Upwards of twelve months ago a subscription of 2s. per head was collected from the ship's company of H.M.S. Jupiter towards a shooting club which was in process of formation. Apparently the club has never yet got beyond the collection of subscriptions, and I have been asked if I can do anything to discover what has become of the money. It is obviously undesirable that money should be collected in this way, more or less on compulsion, from men in H.M. Service without any visible result, and if the club cannot be got to work, the time would seem to have arrived when the members should have their money back.

THE STAR OF KNIGHTHOOD.

(Lines suggested by a recent speech of Sir R. Harington.)

I would I were a baronet,
Though not because my heart is set
On rank or title grand,
Nor 'cause I'm by ambition caught
Upon my brougham's door to sport
The sanguinary hand—

But just because—that rank procured—
Thereby I'd henceforth be insured
'Gainst Fate's most cruel slight,
Nor more need fear with Tom and Dick
And Hal to share the honour (sic)
Of being made a knight.

Recently the members of the Dawlish District Council expressed a unanimous wish that Mr. J. Shafter, their late chairman, should be appointed a Justice of the Peace, an office in which he had acted ex-officio during the year of his chairmanship. Notice was given that a formal resolution on the subject for submission to the Lord Lieutenant and the Lord Chancellor would be proposed at the next meeting of the Council. This fact got to the ears of the Dawlish county justices, and they thereupon passed and forwarded to the Council a resolution to the effect that in their opinion it would be "a mistake" to make the chairmanship a stepping-stone to the Bench, and that "such a precedent would most likely be considered in other parts of the country to be an unfortunate innovation." This is nonsense, because appointments of ex-chairmen of councils as magistrates have already been made in Devon and in other parts of the country.

The fact seems to be that the Dawlish Bench—though they lacked the courage to say so straightforwardly—object to Mr. Shafter because he is a tradesman. Their worships are obliged (no doubt much to their disgust) to put up with the presence on the Bench of the chairman of the Council for the time being, even if he is in trade; but they still want to maintain the permanent body of the magistracy as a close preserve of the "gentry." The interference of the Bench in the matter was an impertinence which any self-respecting council would have resented. The majority of the Dawlish Council, however, are poor-spirited creatures. Though they all desired that Mr. Shafter should be appointed, they servilely bowed to the opposition of the Bench, and the resolution was allowed to drop.

A citizen of Newcastle sends me a report of a meeting of the Tramways Committee at which it was decided "to discontinue the running of a special service of trams carrying members of the Corporation to church when the Lord Mayor is called upon to attend in his official capacity." It is hoped in Newcastle that the loss of the chance of a free tram ride will not cause any falling off in the attendance of the City Fathers on these occasions.

Reference was made last week to the report of Dr. Fraser, the Medical Officer of Health at Portsmouth, on the systematic trade in diseased animals, principally tubercular cows, which is carried on in country markets near that town. I quoted his statements as to the sale of the carcases of such animals for human food. In a copy of Dr. Fraser's full report, which I have now received, I find that he calls attention to an even more serious phase of the subject, namely, the sale of tubercle-infected milk. There is no doubt that a large number of the tubercular cows that are sold in the country markets are used for milking up to the time they leave the farms, and the milk from these cows largely finds its way into the towns. The seriousness of this state of things is obvious, for, as Dr. Fraser points out, while the eating of tuberculous meat is dangerous, that risk is probably small compared to that of drinking tubercle-infected milk—in fact, the Royal Commission on Human and Animal Tuberculosis has reported that a very considerable amount of disease and loss of life, especially amongst the young, is attributable to the consumption of cow's milk containing tubercle bacilli. It is high time that measures were adopted to check this evil by the establishment of a systematic inspection of live stock and a more stringent supervision of the milk supply.

Despite the wrath of Mr. J. W. Willis Bund, as evinced in the singular speech at the Worcester County Petty Sessions, to which I referred a fortnight ago, the Rev. C. Poyntz Sanderson, Rector of Doverdale, is keeping up a vigorous criticism of the local police and magistrates. He has now turned his attention to a fresh case in which a farmer was summoned for being drunk and assaulting a constable in the execution of his duty, while on a cross summons the constable was charged with assaulting the farmer. The magistrates allowed these summonses to be withdrawn on a statement by a solicitor that with the consent of both sides the whole matter would be left in the hands of the Chief Constable. Mr. Sanderson considers that there are facts in connection with the conduct of the policeman towards the farmer which make it necessary that there should be a public inquiry. Personally, I know nothing of the case beyond what is stated in the Worcester newspapers. But it is assuredly a remarkable proceeding for the police to agree to the withdrawal of summonses in this way, and the reference of the matter to the Chief Constable is not by any means a satisfactory method of disposing of it. Such a course rather suggests that there is a desire on the part of the police to hush up facts which ought to have been investigated in open court.

Dieudonné Hotel and Restaurant, Ryder Street, S.W. Excellent cuisine, prompt service, and comfort. Luncheons and Dinners Prix Fixe and à la carte. Mod. charges. Tel. No., 5265, Ger. Open on Sundays.

Know Humphreys, and be well dressed. Humphreys, opposite South Kensington Station, one of the biggest and best Dressmakers. Unusual originality combines with sensible, not fancy prices.

One of the most striking examples of magisterial fatuousness ever recorded in my Legal Pillory is supplied by the prosecution of a child of six before the Dundrum Bench chronicled below. In Ireland one might at least have expected the farcical nature of police-court proceedings against a child of such tender years to meet with ready recognition, but these Dundrum dunderheads solemnly proceeded to convict and pass sentence upon this desperado barely emancipated from the perambulator. Even if the youngster was older than his apparent years, and had passed the age limit of seven, which would make proceedings against him possible, the magistrates might have hesitated before recording a conviction, though one can naturally imagine that to a possible occupant of the pillory the offence of throwing a rotten egg must appear one of the most heinous crimes in the calendar. Noteworthy, too, in its way, is the conviction of a woman for selling a bunch of lilies in the sacrosanct streets of Malvern. I presume the Bench obtain their powers for the manufacture of criminals in this fashion under some local by-law, but if they possessed the ordinary modicum of common sense they would not merely use their discretion before convicting in such cases, but express themselves sharply as to the undesirability of such petty charges being raked up against people who try to turn an honest penny in a perfectly legitimate manner.

Midhurst Petty Sessions. Before Lieut.-Cols. Hollist and Wyndham, and Mr. J. Knight. Richard Taylor, charged with cruelty to a horse. He struck it on the head and body with a stick, cutting the eye. Fined 10s.

Wigan Police Court. J. M. Makin, charged with assaulting his mother-in-law. He knocked the old woman down and kicked her when she was removing her furniture from his house. Fined 20s. and costs.

Nottingham Police Court. Before Messrs. Halford and Allen. Herbert and Henrietta Burdell, charged with neglecting their two children, aged two and eight years. The children, the house and the bedding were in a filthy condition. Fined 20s. each.

Harlow Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Todhunter, Glyn, Johnston, and other magistrates. E. Joscelyne, charged with being asleep on a hay cart. Fined 5s.

Rotherham Police Court. Before Alderman G. Clarke and Mr. T. A. Jenkins. William Whittaker, charged with assaulting his wife. He chased her round the room, striking her on the head and shoulders with a poker. Fined 5s., and a separation order granted.

Preston Borough Police Court. John Walton and Margaret Lacey, charged with neglecting their two illegitimate children. The bedding was filthy and full of vermin, the children were dirty, verminous and ravenous with hunger. Fined 20s. each and costs.

Alloa Police Court. Before Bailie Watson. James Henderson, charged with stealing a foot-rule and some tools, of the value of 6s. 6d., from a blacksmith's shop. Thirty days' imprisonment.

Clerkenwell Police Court. Before Mr. d'Eyncourt. A man, charged with stealing two loaves of bread, valued at 9½d., from his employer. Two months' imprisonment.

Swainsthorpe Petty Sessions. Before Lord Lindley, Messrs. Gurney and Knight. J. A. Moore, charged with stealing nine hens' eggs and twenty pheasants' eggs value 10s. Three months' imprisonment.

Harlow Petty Sessions. Before the same bench. Eighteen motorists, charged with exceeding the speed limit on a measured portion of the Cambridge Road. The total fines amounted to £123, most of the offenders being fined £10 and costs.

Chelmsford Petty Sessions Before the Mayor, Cols. Wood and Pearson, Messrs. Wells, Taylor, Christy, Crittal and Pennefather. Joseph Waller, charged on remand with stealing a pair of boots, value 2s. One month's hard labour.

Mansfield Petty Sessions. Five men charged with night poaching. Each had in his possession a bag containing nets or rabbits. Two were sentenced to a month's imprisonment, the others to 14 days, and bound over for six months, or in default a further month.

Govan Police Court. Before Bailie M'Fadyen. Philip Gallagher, charged with assaulting his wife, to whom he was married only six weeks ago. Fined 30s.

Queen's Park (Glasgow) Police Court. Before Bailie Wallace. Alexander Dickson, charged with disorderly conduct and assaulting an old woman 67 years of age. Fined 40s.

Ayr Sheriff Court. Before Sheriff Shairp. William M'Clung, charged with a breach of interdict by trespassing on lands in pursuit of game. Sixty days' imprisonment.

Kirkcaldy Sheriff Court. Before Sheriff Shennan. K. M. Auchterlony, charged with trespass in pursuit of game. He was caught hunting a field with a dog. Fined £5.

Dundrum Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. R. H. Davies, R. O'Carolin and Dr. J. Usher. A little boy, named Miles M'Grath, described as apparently aged about six years, charged with flinging a bad egg over a wall. The egg struck a man on the other side. Fined 1s., 2s. 6d. compensation, and 2s. costs, or seven days' imprisonment.

Malvern Petty Sessions. Before Major Hill, Col. Heywood, Mr. H. A. Acworth, and Mr. E. Heathfield. Elizabeth Jones, charged with selling flowers in the streets of Malvern. She was caught selling a bunch of lilies of the valley to a lady. Fined 1s. and 7s. 6d. costs.

I have received the following letter:—

Chichester House, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.
June 10, 1907.

DEAR SIR,—Our notice has been drawn to a paragraph in your publication, and as a continuation of such notices is likely to injure our business we have decided to forthwith cease supplying our colouring outfits. We have instructed our advertising agent to discontinue the advertisement, and we will in future employ artists who require no coaching or training in this work, and who will use their own materials.

In justice to ourselves, we wish you to understand that we are not in any way connected with the company to which you refer, late of Great James Street, and now of 48, Edgware Road, and 11, Red Lion Square.—Yours truly, p.p., THE IMPERIAL ART SUPPLY CO.

As the notice in question referred to the "Imperial Art Supply Company" as the name used by a swindler in the home employment business, I can understand that a repetition of such notices might, as my correspondent anticipates, be likely to injure his business, and I congratulate him upon the decision to drop it. With regard to the concluding paragraph, I can only infer from it that there are two individuals who have been using this name. I presume that it is not denied that the Imperial Art Supply Company, of Chichester House, Chancery-lane, is identical with the firm of the same name in Ranelagh-road, Fulham. Whether or not the same individual formerly carried on the Imperial Art Supply Company, of Great James-street, is quite immaterial. The modus operandi is the same, and that is all that I am concerned about.

During the last few weeks I have had numerous inquiries about a Mr. Rex Trevor, or Captain Ansell, his acting representative, who has been advertising from 151, Regent-street. He professed to be running an agency for supplying gentlemen as guides and companions to American and other tourists. For these he advertised, offering salaries of £156 per annum, subject to good personal references, and deposit of "cash security" to the amount of £25. The cash security looked suspicious, and I sent a representative to see Mr. Rex Trevor or Captain Ansell, and ascertain, if possible, what cash security there was on the other side for the £156 per annum. Trevor, or Ansell, proved to be a very plausible gentleman. He insisted that he was making a good business, justified the demand for £25, and asserted that he was paying salaries regularly to those whom he had engaged. He also referred me to a professional gentleman of unimpeachable status, who, when seen, gave a good account of him.

ROYAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS. Nearly 1,000 convictions last year. Complaints marked "Private," absolutely confidential.—SECRETARY, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

In these circumstances it was impossible to say anything publicly in disparagement of Rex Trevor, but I was by no means satisfied, and I wrote privately to some of my correspondents, recommending them to be cautious about parting with their money. I can only hope they followed my advice. Last week Rex Trevor's office was closed, the salaries were unpaid, and the victims who called to make inquiries found that Rex Trevor, or Ansell, had disappeared, the flat where he lived being shut up as well as the Regent-street office. It is now certain that he has bolted, and he has really made a big coup, for he has taken several hundred pounds in hard cash from his "guides," and has let in landlords and West End tradespeople for some hundreds more. One can only hope that he will be caught. It is an elementary kind of swindle, but whenever it is started by a plausible adventurer who makes a sufficient splash, victims are always forthcoming in unlimited numbers, and it seems impossible to persuade people of the folly of paying down their money to gentry of whom they know nothing, merely on a promise of regular employment and good wages.

Having been continually pestered with circulars from a bookmaker named T. Armitage, 1, Harcourt-street, W., an Army officer a few weeks ago opened an account with him. By his first bet with Armitage he lost £1, which he promptly paid. By a bet in the middle of the following week, which Armitage had confirmed by wire, he won £2; by another bet on the Saturday he lost £1. "Accounts made up to Fridays inclusive" is one of Armitage's rules, but it is qualified by the further statement: "Thus Saturday commences my week's account, unless an important betting race makes it necessary to include that day in the current week's account for my club settling on the Monday." Obviously, this is a very convenient arrangement for the bookmaker. As he decides for himself what is an important betting race, it virtually means that he can bring the Saturday into the account or exclude it just as suits his purpose. In the present instance Armitage forwarded an account, including the Saturday bet, and so reducing the sum due to the backer to £1. Instead of sending a cheque, he wrote a note to the effect that, the amount "being under £2," he had carried it forward to the next account.

Some successful bets in the following week increased the amount due to the officer to £12. No cheque was forthcoming from Armitage, nor did he at first reply to an application for the money. On being pressed, however, he wrote that he had been making inquiries about the officer, and found that he once kept another firm waiting some time for a trifling sum. This was "very unsatisfactory," and in consequence Armitage "must decline any further dealings with him." Now the officer in question frankly admits that he did once owe another bookmaker a small amount for a few weeks, though he eventually paid him. Armitage might if he pleased have regarded that incident as a reason for refusing to take the officer's business. Clearly, however, it does not afford him a shadow of justification for refusing to pay up—as he has done—the £12 due from him on bets that he had actually booked. No doubt Armitage would have been ready to continue his dealings with the officer if the latter had gone on losing. It was only when he became a winner that he was informed that he was a very unsatisfactory customer, and the hollowness of the excuse for non-payment and the circumstances under which it was made indicate that Armitage is one of the "heads I win, tails you lose" gentry.

Service men appear to be singularly imprudent in their selection of bookmakers, sending their commissions in a happy-go-lucky fashion to any tout from whom they happen to have received a plausibly-worded circular and the usual book of rules. Close on the top of the complaint ventilated in the foregoing paragraphs I had a couple of letters concerning a betting agent named John Howard, 10, Blandford-street, W. One letter was from an Army officer who, having won £13 from Howard, has been unable to obtain the money or any sort of reply to his applications for it. The other letter is from a naval officer who has had a similar experience with this man. My second correspondent remarks that it may save other officers from being taken in if I show up Howard. Backers, however, must always run the risk of being welshed if they choose to engage in betting transactions with individuals of whom—even if they have not so far figured in Truth—they know nothing.

Several copies of a tipster's circular emanating from A. Cox, of Foxley Cottage, Holyport, Berks, have been passed on to me by correspondents who look with justifiable suspicion on gentry in this line of business. It is rather more cleverly worded than most productions of the kind, but the gist of it is more or less familiar. Cox represents himself as a modest private speculator who is making £500 a year by backing, on a system, horses about which he receives "special advice" from three training centres. He offers to impart his information to any one agreeing to send him the odds to £1 on each winner after the race, no prepayment being required. This strikes greenhorns as a very fair proposition. What they do not perceive is, in the first place, that it is a very strange proceeding for a man in the possession of such valuable information to hawk it around among strangers. In the second place, they do not see that, after all, the proposed arrangement resolves itself into a game of "heads I win, tails you lose" for Cox. There is, in fact, a dodge which I have more than once explained which enables any tipster doing business on the above terms to make it certain that he will, nevertheless, always be a winner.

It is the proud boast of W. Griffin, of Minories-chambers, Birmingham, that he trades in his own name. This certainly is a somewhat unusual thing for a professional usurer to do, but, all the same, his name appears to be too well-known in the city of his abode, for he seeks his customers in distant parts of the country through the medium of advertisements in small local papers. A correspondent draws attention to his announcement in a Berkshire paper that he makes advances "at a moderate rate of interest." Griffin's idea of a moderate rate of interest was revealed in a recent case at Shrewsbury, where he lent a farmer £40, received back £73 10s., and then sued for a further sum of £14 10s. However, instead of being awarded the £14 10s., this Birmingham bloodsucker was compelled to refund a substantial portion of the money that he had already screwed out of the borrower—a very satisfactory illustration of the usefulness of the Moneylenders Act.

---

The Luxury of a Bath is incomplete without the addition of Scrubb's Cloudy Fluid Ammonia, which refreshes and invigorates. Sold everywhere, price one shilling per bottle.

The same Act was also enforced to good purpose by Mr. Justice Grantham in a case on Saturday in which the plaintiffs were the notorious firm of Fieldings alias Samuel. The borrower applied for a loan on a promissory note for £1,000 signed by himself and a friend. Fieldings knew that as this friend had property they would be running practically no risk, but all that they advanced the borrower was a sum of £200 on which the interest or bonus for a little over three months was £100, or at the rate of about £200 per cent. per annum. Really the note rendered the defendants liable for the full £1,000 if they failed to pay when it matured. The plaintiffs, however, only sued for the £300, a fact on which they appeared to plume themselves. Mr. Justice Grantham was not impressed by this example of their moderation. On the contrary, he gave them judgment for only £200 and 20 per cent. interest, which the defendants had already paid into court. It is a very substantial drop from 200 to 20 per cent., and as the plaintiffs will have to pay the costs of the case from the date of the payment into court the decision is a nasty knock for them.

The Hebrews who constitute the firm of Fieldings run branch usury shops in a number of provincial towns. One of these establishments is at Swindon. The annual "trip" of the Great Western Railway employees and their families is about to take place, and in connection with this event Fieldings submitted the following advertisement for publication in the North Wilts Herald. The manager of that paper very properly refused to insert it. He thought, however, that I might like to comment upon the advertisement, and I am quite willing to give it gratuitous publicity, as an example of the devices which Fieldings adopt to lure victims to their —Don't.

SPECIAL TRIP NOTICE.

If you require £5 or £10 for your holiday, apply now. Many people have been disappointed in past years through leaving it till the last day or so. Don't stay in Swindon trip week. Take the wife and children to the seaside or country. We will provide the means.

Special Trip Quotation:—
£5 loan at a repayment of 2s. 6d. weekly.
£10 loan at a repayment of 4s. weekly.
No sureties required. Strictly private.
C. LEVER, Manager for Fieldings, etc.

It will be observed that the "special trip quotation" gives the amount, but not the number of the weekly payments. The exorbitance of the firm's charges for interest in such cases can, however, be guessed from the facts revealed in the action before Mr. Justice Grantham. The small borrower is usually bled even more severely than bigger customers.

I heard the other day a story of a lady who had paid £50 for the appointment of manageress of a concern called the Physio-Medical Association, of 95, Mortimer-street, W., at which address it conducts a "Naturopathic Institute." The payment was nominally for instruction in the mysteries of "physio-medication," but, of course, the chief consideration from the lady's point of view was the appointment as manageress, in which capacity she was to receive £1 11s. 6d. per week. However, after paying the money, the lady thought better of it, and consulted a solicitor, who got the £50 back for her. It is due to Mr. Lendon-Bennett, the proprietor of the business, to say that he seems to have made no difficulty about returning the money. Nevertheless, I should say the lady was well-advised in withdrawing from the arrangement, and if I had to advise any one who contemplated putting £50 into a business of this kind, whether for technical instruction, or for the sake of a paid appointment, or both, my advice would be —Don't.

For some years past I have had a distant acquaintance with Mr. Lendon-Bennett. I first knew him as a dealer in hypnotism, which probably is a relative of "naturopathy." As a physio-medico he seems to be doing things on quite a grand scale. A report of the British Physio-Medical Association gives an account of that body in five departments, and refers also to South Court, Redhill, Surrey, "now being specially adapted for Resident Open-Air Osteopathic Treatment," and also of the Lendon-Bennett Naturopathic Medical College and Hospital, "beautifully situated in a healthy and picturesque district close to Lake Neuchatel." One reads also of "The New Physio-Medical School of Pharmacy," and "The New Electro-Therapeutic Installation," which includes the "new Magnetic Ozone Oxygen Producer," also a "new regulation concerning students desirous of taking the complete physio-medical course, or the complete course in osteopathy."

All this looks very imposing, but when one comes to inquire who constitutes the British Physio-Medical Association, it is difficult to find any one but Lendon-Bennett. We are told that the Governing Body of the Association is the council, which is sub-divided into finance committee, committee of management, and officers; but no names are mentioned except those of officers, who comprise the president, Mark Lendon-Bennett, M.A., D.Sc., LL.D., an unnamed "eminent barrister-at-law" as "legal adviser," and half-a-dozen gentlemen employed in various capacities, and presumably paid for what they do. I have read the Report of the Association for 1906 from beginning to end, but although it is marked "Important," and stated to contain "the latest authorised information concerning the Association," I know no more about the Association, about physio-medication, or about osteopathy than is to be found above. This is one reason why I think the lady was wise in asking Mr.—or should one say "Dr."?—Lendon-Bennett to return her money.

My expectation that Colonel X. would not succeed in getting back any more of his money from H. Langenhahn and Co., the Bremen lottery touts, was realised. As I explained last week, he forwarded these people three sums, amounting altogether to £13 12s.—through a misprint the total was given in TRUTH as £3 12s.—for tickets in Classes III., IV., and V. of a Royal Saxon State Lottery. The firm then asked him to pay £9 in respect of Classes I. and II., at the same time stating that before a ticket could "participate" in any stage of the lottery it must be paid up in full on account of such drawings as had already been held. On their own showing, therefore, the tickets for which the Colonel had paid the £13 12s. were really worthless. He at once demanded the return of his money, and after some pressure H. Langenhahn and Co. sent him £4 16s., being the payment for Class V., the drawing in which had not at that time taken place. He sought to obtain the balance of the £13 12s., but the firm refused to part with it, declaring—in contradiction to what they had said at first—that he had participated in Classes III. and IV., "and consequently he must pay for it." There is, of course, no practicable method by which money can be recovered from these Continental lottery harpies, and Colonel X.'s experience simply shows once more how foolish it is for any one to deal with them.

Looked at in the right spirit, last week's anti-Home Rule demonstration at Queen's Hall was a delightful piece of comedy. You cannot well have a more absurd situation than for one party to assemble and denounce a measure which has already been killed by the opposite party. The Unionists, however, having arranged for a public denunciation of the Birrell Bill as a menace to the Union, declined to be thwarted because the other side had denounced and rejected it as a menace to Home Rule. And they played the farce to the end with imperturbable solemnity. Mr. Balfour has never given a more striking proof of his talents as a public entertainer than in presiding on this occasion, and never losing his gravity till the curtain fell. He was admirably supported by the rest of the company. Even when he—he, who sent Sir Antony MacDonnell to Dublin—congratulated all concerned that the phantom of "devolution" had at last been laid for ever, nobody seems to have laughed—not even Lord Lansdowne. The comic side of politics is often uppermost when the politicians appear most serious.

The Daily Mail has made a further reference to the Bond affair, but it has added little to what was previously known, and done nothing towards justifying itself—rather the reverse. There were two things to be explained: (1) how the Daily Mail came to publish a fictitious description of a sensational scene at the Conference; (2) how, when the story was officially denied in Parliament, the Mail came to assert—on the alleged authority of Sir Robert Bond, who had been seen by its representative at Bristol—that its story was substantially correct. On neither point has any explanation been given as yet, and the second point is only involved in additional obscurity by what has been published.

Sir Robert Bond's account of what passed between him and the Daily Mail is that he received at Bristol a telegram from the Editor, and replied to it. He does not expressly say that he did not see a representative of the paper; but he does expressly say that he did not tell a representative of the paper that the original story was substantially correct. All that the Daily Mail has done in reply is to state that "The telegram was to the following effect: 'Cannot admit that anything so dramatic as alleged took place.'" The "effect" of a telegram does not necessarily mean its precise words; but whether or not the words quoted are those used by Sir Robert Bond, it is clear that they do not give Sir Robert's authority for maintaining that the original story was "substantially correct" when Mr. Churchill had declared it to be a fiction.

What about the representative of the Daily Mail who is alleged to have seen Sir Robert Bond? Either he saw Sir Robert and was authorised by him to say what the paper said next day, or he deliberately lied, and the Daily Mail published his lie, and ought, therefore, to withdraw it. There is yet another possibility in regard to the lying, which one hesitates to express; but it is certainly odd that, having deputed a representative to see Sir Robert Bond, the Editor should also have telegraphed to the latter for the purpose of obtaining a statement from him, and it is also odd that, having published what it did on the authority of its representative, not on that of Sir Robert Bond's telegram, the Daily Mail should now drop all mention of its representative, and base its explanation—such as it is—upon the telegram. The Daily Mail knows its own business best, but in the interest of journalism generally it would be as well that the matter should be cleared up, for I do not remember any case in which an English newspaper has been exposed to quite so serious an imputation in a public matter of this kind.

And why not explain at the same time the original source of the whole fiction? The name of the individual who gave the Daily Mail this sensational story is being freely mentioned everywhere. If he is innocent, he ought not to remain under this imputation. On the other hand, the real offender, whoever he may have been, has no claim to protection—least of all from the Daily Mail, which he has brought into such discredit.

It is curious that the critics of the Government should, almost with one accord, deride the resolution on the House of Lords as a "fiasco" or quote our old friend the "ridiculus mus" against it. The resolution lays down plainly enough that the Lords' veto must be limited, and the only weakness about it is that it does not expressly make the limit as short in point of time as every Radical would desire. It is not necessary, however, to go into details in a resolution. A Bill giving effect to this resolution and limiting the veto to one session would satisfy the most ardent reformer. One can understand an Opposition ridiculing such a proposal on the ground that it is so drastic that it will never be carried, but I hardly understand the "ridiculus mus" view of it.

In common with many others who are for "mending or ending," with a preference for ending, I would rather see a Bill than a resolution. But no one in his senses ever supposed that the Government was going to bring in a Bill on the subject this Session, with the inevitable consequence of a dissolution before the end of the year. The resolution serves the purpose of a formal declaration of policy, and of a pledge from the Government to its supporters, from which there can be no going back. What is really required of the Government after this is that there will be no more truckling to the House of Lords by producing half-measures in the hope of conciliating the Upper House, or treating the resolution when it is carried as if it were nothing more than a threat to the Lords of what will happen next if they mutilate Government Bills.

STAMMERING cured only by personal tuition; interview on written application.—Mr. A. C. SCHNELLE, 119, Bedford Court-mansions, London, W.C. Pupils taken in residence.

The resolution purports to be a declaration of war. As such it must be followed by vigorous measures, designed solely to prepare the way for the final assault, and the final assault must be delivered at the earliest practicable moment. If this policy is not followed with all possible energy and skill, then the Government will deserve to be laughed at by its enemies—and cursed by its friends.

TO THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

O when the Commons lopped the head
Of Charles, by some a martyr reckoned,
And "hoofed," ere need were blood to shed,
That gloomy bigot, James the Second,
'Twas done by action prompt and rapid,
And not by resolutions vapid.

So now, if you the Lords would dock
Of their absurd, archaic veto,
Whereby they slay your Bills en bloc—
Give them the shrift that's short and sweet O.
You'll never harm those titled minions
By just recording sharp opinions.

The question that has arisen between the United States and Japan in California is one by no means easy of solution. All Americans are at one in a determination that the territory of the Republic shall not form a dumping-ground for a great Asiatic immigration. In part this is due to the dread of wages being reduced owing to Asiatic competition, and in part to a general desire that their country should remain a European one. On the other hand, the Japanese have just vanquished one of the greatest of European empires, and with some reason they claim for their citizens equality of treatment. They have, moreover, secured the recognition of the claim by a treaty with the United States.

There is little doubt that, were the Japanese to flock in large numbers into the Western or Southern States, the same determination to refuse to allow their children to be educated with white children, and to allow the invasion to continue, would arise. It is only the fact that California is more open to the invasion than the Atlantic States that has led to the Californians taking practical steps to give effect to their opinions. It is difficult, therefore, to see how the difficulty will be solved. And even were it solved for the moment in regard to the Japanese, it would break out again when the claim is made by Japan, as the leading Eastern Power, for the Chinese.

Whilst public opinion is excited in America, it would seem that it is equally excited in Japan, and the Japanese do not appear to be in a yielding humour. It would be surprising if they were. By their occupation of the Philippine Islands, the Americans have placed hostages in their hands. Were a war to break out between the two countries, it is not easy to see how the Americans could hold these islands. Not only are they comparatively close to Japan, but the Japanese would be able to maintain their supremacy in the Eastern seas, whilst they could severely damage American trade without much dread of retaliation.

Supposing, however, that either by peaceful agreement or by war the Japanese were to establish their contention with America, what would be their course in regard to Australia? Would they assent there to what they regard as unwarrantable treatment in America? And if they did not, what would be our position? I hardly think that we have seriously considered what the claim to equality of treatment on the part of Asiatics really means. Personally, I have always deemed the action of European Powers in regard to Asia as a monstrous wrong. I should be glad to see strong and powerful Governments established in Japan and in China. We Europeans are far too much given to regard Asia as a battleground for our ambitions, and this has been mainly due to our having been better armed, richer, and able to enforce our law on that continent. This rivalry in ambition is likely to last so long as the Asiatics cannot defend themselves against attack. That they should be able to do so would, I am convinced, make for peace.

In the meanwhile, each European Power is following our example and making a treaty with Japan. We have made a defensive treaty with that Power. The Japanese treaty with France, and probably that which is being concluded with Russia, seem not to go beyond a general recognition of the existing status quo in the East, and not to contemplate mutual assistance in the event of that status quo being attacked by some third Power. It surely would be far better were some general assent to be given to the status quo by all European Powers than that each one should seek to secure it by separate treaties, which are not identical in their scope. Wars sometimes occur in Europe, but Europe is a family of nations living under what is supposed to have at least the moral force of an international law assented to by all. Something of this sort should be established in Asia, and not only Japan, but China, should form part of the family.

If I were adviser-in-chief to the Tsar of Russia, which I thank my stars I am not, it would be my endeavour to convince him that to summon a parliament, dissolve it when it does not behave to your satisfaction, summon another, treat it in the same way, and repeat the operation indefinitely, is not only a stupid game, but an uncommonly dangerous one. In support of this proposition I should cite the leading case of King Charles the First. No doubt the Dumas have been "trying" to a monarch who thinks that when he presents his people with a "constitution" they should gratefully use it precisely as he intends, or who believes that with a stroke of his pen he can conjure into existence a parliamentary machine as efficient as if it had been at work for centuries. But the second Duma has been more reasonable than the first, and patience is the first thing needful in trying experiments of this kind. The Tsar not only appears to lack patience, but to be swayed hither and thither by conflicting influences. One day he is a Constitutionalist, the next he is an Absolutist. He cannot be both, and the sooner he elects to remain one or the other permanently, the better it will be for himself as well as for his subjects.

THE FOP AND THE TAILOR.

Algie, a Fop, whom all confess
Unrivalled for his Taste in Dress,
To Tailor Snip a Visit paid
To have a Suit of Dittoes made.
  Then Snip upon the Counter he Spread out a large Variety
Of Summer Suitings, choice and new,
Comprising every Shade and Hue,
And every Pattern you could seek,
From blatant Checks that howl and shriek
To Mixtures of such modest Sort
That scarce their whispered Tones were caught.
But Faith—to tell the Truth I'm vowed—
The Patterns that our Fop thought loud,
For Number, took what's called "The Bun,"
And beat the Rest by two to one.
  Soon Algie his Selection made—
A quiet, unobtrusive Plaid—
Then said to Snip, in scornful Voice,
"Great Scott! I can't commend your Choice
In stocking thus such blatant Checks,
Which all fastidious Eyes must vex,
And which no Man, whose Taste was nice,
Could even bear to look at twice."
  Old Snip his grizzled Head he shakes,
And this Reply, sententious, makes:
  "To false Conclusions, Sir, you haste,
In thinking them there Checks my Taste.
In Point of Fact, with you I feel,
To me such Patterns don't appeal;
But then—Experience proves it true—
To Scores and Scores of Men they do."

Moral.

'Mongst those the Papers who peruse,
You'll find no End of Tastes and Views;
And what one Man thinks good indeed,
Another simply cannot read.
Hencé Editors, if wise, take Care
To give a varied Bill of Fare,
Wherein the copious Choice embraced
Shall hit all Sorts and Kinds of Taste.

SCRUTATOR.

PEACEMAKING AT THE HAGUE.

THE speech of M. Nelidoff at the opening of the Hague Conference seems to have been a wise one. He dwelt upon the good results that have followed from the last Conference, and they are really as good as could reasonably have been expected. He hoped, as everybody must, that the repetition of these meetings will produce more and more result as time goes on. At the same time, he reminded his audience that quarrels between nations arise, like those between individual men, from the passions, ambitions, and weaknesses of human nature, and that when domestic courts of law, with all their power and authority, cannot always prevent private citizens coming to blows, it is too much to expect that an international court, with nothing but moral force behind it, will always be able to keep the peace between nations. The inference from this seems to be that the preservation of peace depends primarily upon the ability of the individuals who compose a nation to keep their tempers and restrain their passions, particularly the passions of greed and jealousy, which are at the bottom of most wars; and that the functions of an international court are chiefly limited to removing causes of friction, and limiting the mischief and suffering caused by war.

Nothing is more necessary to the success of the Hague Conference within the limits open to it than a clear appreciation of what those limits are. Gladly would the vast majority of all civilised human beings welcome any scheme which would render an appeal to brute force impossible, in the event of two or more nations falling out. Unfortunately, however, no scheme to secure this end has as yet been put forward which is likely to effect this aim. An arbitral court has been proposed, whose decisions are to replace wars. Such a court may be useful to decide on international issues in which no great interests are involved, and M. Nelidoff points out that the Hague Tribunal has already accomplished useful work. But on vital questions of policy, or in regard to those issues on which, it would be said, the honour of a country is involved, nations hold that they are the judges of their own case. They will, therefore, refuse to refer the question, and even if a reference be accepted, the party against whom the decision goes is pretty certain to find reasons for refusing to be bound by it. To meet this, it is proposed by some well-meaning theorists that the decision of the court should be enforced. But enforced by whom? Is it likely that the rest of the family of nations would declare war against the recalcitrant member of the family circle? The idea is absurd. Who can imagine England and Italy joining with Germany to coerce France into obeying an order of the court, or France joining with Germany and Italy to coerce Russia? The Power which chose to disobey would make sure first of finding a friend, and the only conceivable result of attempting to enforce an arbitration in this way would be a general war. A court which relies upon suitors, or possible suitors, to enforce its judgments, in a community of about a dozen members, would be a tribunal suitable to a comic opera, and could only create complications and breed intrigue, either behind its own back or within its own precincts.

The idea of limitation of armaments by general agreement is only a degree less visionary and impracticable. Apparently, it will be curtly dismissed as such at the present Conference. As I understand it, each nation is to agree only to spend a certain amount annually in armaments, and this amount is to be based upon what it requires in order to defend itself from aggression. and to be able to see that its citizens are not unjustly treated outside its own frontiers. How could a comparative estimate for this purpose possibly be made to which every nation would assent? Even if this preliminary difficulty were got over, what security is there that any nation would loyally hold to the arrangement, and not be constantly seeking to evade it surreptitiously? It has sometimes occurred that on the defeat of one nation by another the victor has imposed on the vanquished a clause in the treaty of peace laying down that the army of the latter must not exceed a certain number of men. Napoleon did this both in regard to Austria and Prussia. But notwithstanding his being absolute master on the Continent, both Powers managed to evade the obligation, and when the opportune moment came were able to put into the field far larger armies than they were entitled to by the treaty. To expect that the same thing would not be attempted under an international agreement is hoping too much of human nature; and the fact that this is so would lead to incessant suspicions that this or that Power was not acting "on the square," and would introduce in this way new grounds for quarrelling.

For Mosquito Bites, Wasp or Bee Stings, nothing allays the irritation so quickly as Scrubb's Cloudy Fluid Ammonia. Price 1s. per bottle. Beware of imitations.

Savoy Hotel & Restaurant, London.—The most beautiful garden and river view in Europe. The Restaurant of the world. Hotel rooms bright, fresh, and delightfully quiet.

There are, however, many practical questions to occupy the attention of the Hague Conference. International law in regard to the rights of belligerents and of neutrals is vague, and there is no general assent to any fixed rules. This might with great advantage be altered. By the Paris Conference of 1856 it was agreed that free ships should make free goods. But contraband of war remained liable to capture on the high seas, together with the neutral vessel carrying it. There is no clear definition of what is contraband of war, and I believe that it would be far better that no goods on the high seas in a neutral vessel should be liable to capture by a belligerent. There are many other such reforms which, if adopted by International agreement, would make for peace. What will happen at the advent of the millennium I no more know than when the millennium will commence. What I do know is that until men are very different from what they are now, we must dismiss all idea of a millennium, or the attempt to create one by a Conference. Man is a very quarrelsome animal. He allows himself to be influenced as often by passion as by reason. Those who would exercise sway over him are too often inclined to use this unfortunate state of things for their own ends. Amongst us there are many who deem it to be the duty of patriotism to foster a bellicose spirit by all possible means and on all possible occasions. In the present day their influence is aggravated by a new influence—that of the press. Newspapers are commercial undertakings, and are mostly in the hands of those who subordinate all other considerations to trade profit. In their competition for the latest news, they trouble themselves little whether their information be correct or the reverse, provided that it be sensational. It matters little to them whether what they announce as fact be true or false, for as Machiavel said of Princes, they do well to lie when it suits them, because a gullible public will always be inclined to believe what is boldly asserted. They are utterly reckless what ill-blood they stir up by their inventions, and if ever we find ourselves not quite in accord with some foreign nation on some little issue, they do their best to envenom the dispute until it becomes a serious one. So long as all these influences which make for war are at work, it is idle to suppose that there will be goodwill between nations, and that we shall be able to turn our swords into ploughshares, or that armaments will be reduced, or wars averted by solemn peace conferences.

I look for this end rather to the influence of the masses of the people, whose chief function in the eyes of civilised Governments in the present day is to pay taxes for the up-keep of armaments, and to provide "food for powder" when their rulers quarrel. I look forward to their gradually understanding more clearly that they can under no circumstances be the gainers by wars, and that if their lot is to be bettered by the collective action of the State, the burdens imposed upon them for purposes of war must be reduced. So far as we are concerned, the Transvaal war did more for the cause of peace than all that statesmen ever planned, or phrasemongers ever shouted. So it has been with France. That country since 1870 has ceased to crave for conquests and victories, and its citizens seem determined, unless absolutely forced into war by the action of their neighbours, to insist upon their rulers keeping the peace with all the world. In Germany the working men are nearly all united in the same intention. Notwithstanding, therefore, the vapourings of the martial "patriots" at home and abroad, every day that passes renders war more improbable. Every day that peace is maintained each nation is more apt to understand that the dangers against which it is bidden to arm by crazy alarmists or interested parties are in a great measure imaginary, and that it is even more dangerous to carry defensive measures to excess than to neglect them, because it engenders suspicions, which are the seeds of all international quarrelling, and because the possession of dangerous weapons tends to make Governments quarrelsome. What we chiefly want is a little more common sense in estimating the dangers to which we are exposed, and the means necessary for meeting them; and it is to the growth of such common sense among the masses in each country, on whom falls the chief burden of war and preparations for war, that we must look for the limitation of armaments and the maintenance of international harmony.

THE COMING EDALJI DEBATE.

The Edalji case is to be raised in the House of Commons on the Home Office vote unless unforeseen circumstances arise. Such circumstances frequently do arise in Parliament, designedly or undesignedly, but it is to be hoped that members generally will appreciate the importance of this case, and that every effort will be made to ensure its being properly discussed, and also to arrive at some conclusion which will ensure justice being done. There is a very strong public feeling on the matter, prompted, not so much by definite opinion on the merits of the question (for every one must recognise that the case is puzzling), as by firm conviction that it has been handled in a most unsatisfactory manner, and that it will be impossible to feel certain that justice has been done until an attempt has been made to elucidate the truth by totally different methods from those hitherto adopted. It will rest chiefly with the Liberals, who are so large a majority of the House, whether this public feeling is adequately voiced in Parliament, and it will be no credit to them, individually or collectively, if party or personal considerations stand in the way of this being done.

An Eminent Physician says: "Every one in any way delicate, especially on the chest, should have a gas fire in the bedroom. Not one atom less healthy than coal."

Seeger's Hair Dye.—Dyes the hair by merely combing through. 2s. the Case, or Trial Bottle, mailed free from observation, 7d.—Hinde's Ltd., 1A, Finsbury, London.

There are certain points on which it would be well to have more official information before the discussion comes off. The following extracts from a letter that I have received bear upon them. The writer is a lawyer who has followed the case from beginning to end very attentively, though he has no personal interest in it:—

First.—Neither the public, nor, I believe, Mr. Edalji or his friends, had any idea that the Committee would make, or would be asked to make, any finding as to the authorship of the letters—a subject on which no finding had been previously made. Had an intimation of intention to deal with this subject been previously given, there would probably have been other documents and other arguments before the Committee.

Secondly.—Conceding, for the sake of argument, that the members of the Committee are correctly described as "three distinguished legal authorities," is there any evidence of their special fitness to decide finally and absolutely a question of handwriting? They themselves are evidently not of this opinion. They shelter themselves behind a supposed finding of the jury, and merely say that their own inspection of the documents laid before them does not enable them to dissent from it.

Thirdly.—However eminent legal authorities may be, the correctness of their opinions cannot be relied on if the case submitted to them was incorrect. The statement "that the case could not have been properly submitted, and that some material facts must have been withheld," may be "cool," as Mr. Gladstone puts it, or otherwise; but what the public desires to know is whether it was true or false. Surely, if we are expected to rest satisfied with the finding of three eminent legal authorities on the question of handwriting submitted to them, we ought to be informed what documents were submitted to them, how classified, and with what comments, if any. Can there be any reasonable objection to furnishing this information?

Fourthly.—Some of the letters referred to at the trial were declared by Mr. Gurrin to be in the handwriting of the prisoner, but others were not. The confused reports of the trial which I have seen leave me in doubt whether all the letters were handed up to the jury or only those which Mr. Gurrin identified. Plainly those which he failed to identify ought not to have been handed up to the jury. [From Mr. Edalji's account of the trial I do not think it can be supposed that they were.—ED. TRUTH.] But the letters which Mr. Gurrin failed to identify ought to have been at the Home Office and ought to have been placed before the Committee, properly labelled, so as to prevent them from confounding the two kinds of letters. And there were also other documents which ought to have been at the Home Office and laid before the Committee, but were not referred to at the trial—letters written about the time that Green's horse was killed, and at a later date. . . .

I have already said that I think it ought to be definitely known what documents were placed before the Committee, and the Home Secretary could hardly object to furnish this information. The Committee say they have inspected the letters which were in evidence at the trial, and the "Martin Molton" letters. The value of their conclusion depends largely on whether their inspection was limited to those documents, or on the extent that it went beyond them. Another point on which it is important to have definite evidence is whether the Committee were left to examine these letters by their own unaided judgment, or whether they were assisted by any expert, or by any report of an expert upon the documents, and, if so, what expert gave this assistance. It is equally important to know definitely whether the inquiry of the Committee was limited solely to the inspection of documents, or whether any witness appeared before them, any one who had given evidence at the trial, or any representative of the police. Also, whether the documents inspected included any police reports or statements, confidential or otherwise. However these questions are answered, they have an important bearing one way or the other on the value of the inquiry by the Committee and its result, more particularly in regard to the anonymous letters, which are the principal question now at issue. The discussion in Parliament will, therefore, be greatly facilitated if this information is available beforehand.

THE BOY AND THE ARMY.

The following letter is worth the attention of all who are interested in the welfare of boys, and equally of those who are very anxious just now to turn all our small boys into soldiers. It has a special interest at the moment from its bearing on the discussion on cadet corps in Parliament on Monday. Mr. Pilkington is an expert on the subject with which he deals, and I doubt whether there is anything worth knowing about London working-class boys, their needs, their tastes, and their characters that he does not know:—

SIR,—I am glad to see that you have something to say against juvenile militarism "as she is spoke" at the present time. May I be allowed to argue the same point still further from what I should consider the true military view? Surely we do not need so much to become a nation of sharpshooters as of thoroughly sound athletes who may be successful in gaining for themselves the best tactical positions by out-marching and out-staying the enemy. I consider that late wars have definitely proved that capacity to move far and rapidly is of the first importance, and that of accurate rifle shooting of the second. Hence it follows that we should rather encourage our youth to suffer personal hardships upon the football field, strengthen hearts, lungs and legs upon running tracks and in swimming baths, and gain self-confidence in gymnasia and boxing rings, than waste their spare hours of recreation in waiting their turn to fire off miniature rifles at miniature targets, or performing unexciting evolutions in drill halls or on parade grounds. In the love of average healthy British boys for British sports we have an unique national and military asset of supreme value.

But look here, sir. British town-bred boys, on whom recruiting sergeants set greedy eyes, are being gradually robbed of their national heritage of sport. They are neither allowed time nor space to play in usefully. There is no public organisation for the recreation of working-class youth. The poor fellows are roundly blamed for becoming mere "lookers on," or even "Hooligans," when all the time they need but little encouragement to play themselves. But where and how? Who is going to see to it? Of course, old public school and 'Varsity men with leisure are the ideal instructors of youth, but, unfortunately, they have not as yet been attracted to the job. The so-called school and college "missions" are, as a rule, far too sentimental affairs for mere human muscular Christians to patronise, and, indeed, they do not acquaint our wealthy and educated youth with the urgent needs of their poorer brethren in just such directions as these, where they would be sure to sympathise, and so the nation suffers, and the cry goes up, how long?

It must also be strongly pointed out that the great non-military public schools actually provide the greater portion of officers for the army, and of the best class. To become the good officer, in fact, you must already be a good sportsman. What then is really wanted throughout the length and breadth of the land is a network of social clubs for working boys, where all British sports can be practised under the best conditions obtainable. From such centres a large proportion of the cream of the youthful population would drift naturally into the army, and more particularly if military authorities would make a better attempt to understand and cater for their physical needs. Most of all do these boys want the sympathy and guidance of the young upper classes, but it is solidly refused them, or rather, perhaps, denied them unwittingly.

Again, reform is strongly needed as to the working hours of all youths under eighteen years of age. If I were king, no youth of that age should be kept at work except between the hours of 6.30 a.m. and 6.30 p.m., whether in factory, shop, or office. Then there would be some chance for his intellectual and physical improvement, for his evenings could be devoted to such an end (with elementary military tactics thrown in, if you like), but all under the suitable and sympathetic supervision and encouragement of educated civilians. It must be that these matters will be attended to sooner or later.

In short, and taking it all round, military discipline for the young is not of much national value, nor ever will be unless some military genius will evolve a curriculum which will embrace the whole gamut of British sports. Youth requires a personal antagonist to meet and beat "on his own." There is no antagonist possible in the mere preparation for war; consequently a purely military training for the young defeats its own object. It sounds paradoxical, but I believe it is a sound argument for all that. The waste of raw material in all large towns is simply heartrending. Thousands are allowed to drift into hazardous and unremunerative employment (if it is worth such an honest name) and thence into hospitals, workhouses or gaols, at enormous expense to the community. A few millions spent in building, equipping and sustaining in town and country these suggested centres of working-class enjoyment and recreation would be the very surest safeguard of the nation's existence. They would also become centres of industry and effort, and a check upon loafing and consequent crime or sickness.

I verily believe that, as in the past, Waterloos can still only be won upon British playing-fields, and that we run counter to the national instinct (or common-sense) to attempt to win them in drill-halls, shooting galleries, and on parade grounds. Patriotic ardour is by no means wanting amongst the young working classes, but the leisured patriots who will give their time and energy to the cultivation of British attributes amongst these boys are lamentably few in number at present. The Union Jack needs to fly over the public school and college as much as over the seats of learning of the poor. There is something for all to do. If only the young upper classes will come forward to "press the button," the young working classes will assuredly do the rest! The Army will be the very first body to reap the benefit and garner the harvest. There will be opportunity for self-sacrifice as regards leisure and good living no doubt, but patriotism of this nature will surely prove its own reward.—I am, your obedient servant, E. M. S. PILKINGTON.

N.B.—When I use the word "Army" I include the auxiliary forces in the term.

There are two questions involved here—the social and the military. It is difficult to separate them, but it is desirable not to mix them up more than is unavoidable. The enthusiasts for universal military service desire to extend it as far as possible to boys—both middle-class boys in public schools and working-class boys who have left the elementary schools to earn their living. They lay stress on the physical and moral benefits of the training, and they desire at the some time to prepare boys for adult military training, thereby rendering it more effective, because you can do more with your recruit in a short time if he comes to you already perfect in the A B C of soldiering. Mr. Pilkington seems to hold, as I do, that there is not much in either of those views. There is something in them, of course. No one will deny that military exercises are better than no exercise at all, or that the discipline is better than no discipline. But the amount of either that you can give to working-class boys is from the nature of the case very limited, and, what is of more consequence, it is very distasteful to young boys. Very few of them will submit to it voluntarily, and those who will soon tire of it in most cases. Its effect, therefore, on boys is not to encourage real soldiering later in life, but the reverse, and, from the purely military point of view, it is apt to do harm rather than good. This is not a matter of theory, but is proved by experience. We are dealing, for the present, with soldiering on a voluntary basis. If universal service were compulsory, it would be a matter of indifference whether the conscript had been disgusted with military drill in a cadet corps before he was called up; he would have to come whether he liked it or not. But when it rests entirely with every youth whether he will serve or not, whether as a regular soldier or in the auxiliary army, it is all important not to check the natural growth of martial ardour; and all experience shows that genuine martial ardour does not begin to grow to any purpose until the boy begins to feel himself a man, which is generally about 16 or 17 years of age. Sir Henry Craik and other Opposition speakers on Monday professed to see no reason for Mr. Haldane's sixteen-year-old limit for Government grants. Mr. Haldane did not have an opportunity of giving his reason, but the one given above is good and sufficient.

Mr. Pilkington believes, as I understand him, that below that age the best physical and moral exercise for the boy in his playtime lies in athletic sports and games, organised and conducted under the supervision of elders, as they are in the public schools. So do I. He believes that this is a better preparation for soldiering in every shape than formal drill. So do I. He believes that the boy who has had the right sort of athletic training in the playground will be the most likely to develop martial instincts as he passes the threshold of manhood, and will make the best soldier. So do I. It is important that this view of the matter should be understood at the public schools, where it has always been the accepted view until the last few years—with the best results as regards soldiering and volunteering. But it is still more important to apply the doctrine, if we can, to the working class boy—important not for the sake of merely training soldiers, but of training men, men sound in body and mind. No doubt this is a difficult matter, but not a bit more difficult than the idea of subjecting the same number and class of boys to military training. The attempts that have been made to solve the problem have not hitherto achieved very much. But no attempts will ever be successful if they are made in the wrong direction; and the value of Mr. Pilkington's letter, to my mind, lies in its declaration that a movement for mere military drill is a movement in the wrong direction. It is inspired by a false conception of the nature of boys, as well as a false conception of our military needs.

Does this mean that there is no place for cadet corps? Not in the least. The object of it is solely to put them in their right place. That place should be an integral part of our military system. The ends in view should be military, not social, or moral, or educational. The proper raison d'être of the cadet corps is this—that the martial instinct and the capacity for military training develop two or three years before the boy becomes a full-grown man, fit to be reckoned and paid as a full-blown soldier, and that it is desirable to take advantage of this fact. We don't want soldiers under eighteen years of age, and we cannot afford to pay for them. But we can find plenty of boys a couple of years or so below that age, who feel a desire to serve, and if we can catch them and train them it is a good thing for them and for the Army, regular or auxiliary, which they will join when fully fledged. It is not necessary to lay down the age line too strictly—better not. The age when a boy is really fit to join varies considerably. Roughly, you may put it at sixteen, perhaps taking boys six months or so younger on probation, if they appear promising recruits. In the same way you may pass them out at the other end before eighteen, if they are suitable for adult battalions, and mean to join them. For boys of this age, the cadet corps may be a most useful institution from every point of view, and on these lines I would give it every encouragement. But as a medium for setting children to play at soldiers, when they ought to be playing at football or learning their lessons, I would give it no encouragement at all. It is to be hoped that this view of the matter will be officially laid down when the "territorial Army" begins to take shape, and county associations have to "foster and encourage cadet corps" under the Haldane Act—if it becomes an Act.

I have had another long letter from the Secretary of the National Service League on the question of boys and soldiering. But in view of all that has been said above, I ask to be excused from publishing it. Mr. Shee desires to accentuate what was said in TRUTH the other day about "the Cadet and the Grandmother." He will see how far I am with him and how far against him. I have no sympathy with those who would have boys kept away from soldiering as something wicked and immoral, but I have equally little with those who think that the country will be any the better or stronger for drilling its school children—especially on compulsion. "Clear thinking," based on knowledge of boys and knowledge of our military requirements, will show where the wise course between these extremes is to be found.

AN ADVERTISING STOCK EXCHANGE DEALER.

There is a general idea that for a long time past business on the Stock Exchange has been exceedingly flat and unprofitable. Apparently, readers of the Queen are supposed to be ignorant of this, or else they are expected to believe that the idea is a popular delusion—at any rate, the front page of that journal has been for several weeks adorned with the following seductive advertisement:—

30 PER CENT. per annum paid monthly on small Deposits; sound Stock Exchange business; references. Write first to "G. 478," care of Shelley's, Gracechurch Street, E.C.

This advertisement, which is obviously intended to appeal to unsophisticated ladies, attracted the attention of a gentleman who had the curiosity to write to "G 478" for particulars of the business. He received the following reply, which I print as it was written in the matter of punctuation, etc.:—

7, Bartholomews,
Brighton,
22 May, 1907.

DEAR SIR OR MADAM

I don't quite know whether I am addressing a Lady or Gentleman, in any event I am obliged by the letter in answer to my advertisement re "£30 per cent. Interest paid on small deposits." I am a large Dealer on the Stock Exchange, also Mortgage Broker, my business has been established some years, and by appointment I could see you personally in London, where I am constantly, my Bankers' cheque fo: Interest is sent monthly to clients having money on Deposit with me on sums from £5 to £100 one month's notice of Withdrawal is only required. Should you be thinking of doing business I shall be pleased to furnish References to clients (by permission) who have done business with me for considerable periods.

Awaiting your reply,
I am,
Yours faithfully,
F. A. HOLLAND.

Seeing that the inquirer lives in Ireland, a personal interview in London was—as Holland doubtless perceived—out of the question. Holland was therefore asked to give the references mentioned in the advertisement, and also to say on what amount he would guarantee 30 per cent., as the inquirer "could not afford to risk more than £20 or £30." This was the answer:—

7, Bartholomews,
Brighton,
27 May, 1907.

DEAR SIR,

I am obliged by yours, there is no risk, no one has ever lost a 1d. through dealing with me, my business has been established some years, £20 deposited with me will yield you 10s. a month, £30 yield you 15s. a month. Write or otherwise communicate with some of the following, they have done business with me for some considerable time:—

Arthur Lomas, Esq., 139, Balfour Street, Hull, Yorks;
The Rev. W. J. Woodward, Moreleigh Rectory, Halwell, R.S.O., South Devon;
Miss E. B. Crewe, Elwall Lawn, nr. Derby.

Yours faithfully,
F. A. HOLLAND.

Thereupon a letter was addressed to the Rev. W. J. Woodward at Moreleigh Rectory, asking how long he had dealt with Holland, and whether the latter had always paid him monthly interest at the rate of 30 per cent. per annum on the money deposited with him. The reply was as follows:—

Moreleigh Rectory,
Halwell, R.S.O.,
S. Devon,
May 31, '07.

DEAR SIR,

I have had dealings with Mr. F. A. Holland since 1904, and have always received the Int. at rate of 30 per cent. from him regularly,

Your faithful,
W. J. WOODWARD.

At this point the recipient of the letters passed them on to me, his curiosity having been sufficiently satisfied. I thought myself that it would be interesting to see whether any further information could be obtained—though I was not at all hopeful—about this "large Dealer on the Stock Exchange." Accordingly I had inquiries made at Brighton. My representative found—as I rather expected he would—that 7, Bartholomews, is an accommodation address, and that nothing is known there of F. A. Holland except that he calls occasionally for his letters. But what about his references? Well, if the letter reproduced above was actually written by the Rev. W. J. Woodward, Rector of Moreleigh, I am ready to assume that the statements it contains are quite correct. Mr. Woodward may have received interest at the rate of 30 per cent. per annum on the money he has deposited—the amount, by the way, is not specified—with Holland. So may Arthur Lomas, Esq., and Miss E. B. Crewe. It does not follow, however, that other people will be equally fortunate. The idea that a man can carry on a "sound Stock Exchange business" with borrowed capital on which he pays 30 per cent. is indeed transparently ridiculous, and when he affirms, as Holland does, that "there is no risk," he is palpably lying. What a man engaged in a game of this sort can well afford to do is to keep a few decoy ducks, and it is clearly as a decoy duck that the Rector of Moreleigh is acting, though he may, of course, be doing so quite unconsciously. Even with this reverend gentleman's corroboration, no person with the slightest knowledge of Stock Exchange or any kind of business would dream of entrusting money to a stranger on the strength of the story Holland tells. Unfortunately, there are plenty of women, and men, too, with no knowledge whatever of business, who are easily imposed upon by an offer such as Holland makes. Still more unfortunately, there are eminently respectable newspapers which seem to have no compunction about the insertion in their columns of what is on the face of it a swindling advertisement.

THEATRES.

"IOLANTHE," AT THE SAVOY.

We did not hear "The Mikado" in the orchestra at the Savoy last week, but snatches of that tuneful composition were wafted about the house from Olympic heights more or less in time, and there was more than a something of regret that the sapiency of the Lord Chamberlain forbids us to laugh at our ally Japan. It is true that the ban has now been removed, but unfortunately the decision has come too late to allow of the inclusion of "The Mikado" in the present series of revivals at the Savoy. However, I must pass from the ineptitude of the actual Lord Chamberlain to the antics of an ideal Lord Chancellor.

MALOJA, Engadine, Switzerland.—Palace Hotel, Kursaal, 6,000 ft. altitude. Completely renovated 1906. Private Baths. Golf. Tennis.—EDWARD SMART, Manager. Prospectus on application.

I refer, of course, to the Lord Chancellor of Mr. Workman in "Iolanthe." He makes him wondrous wise, so that his utterances—smack they never so much of folly—have yet, in the twinkle of an eye, the pursing of a lip that accompany them, the saving salt of satire. From beginning to end of his appearances Mr. Workman holds the attention. My only regret was that the affairs of Strephon and the Queen and Phyllis can progress for considerable periods without him who is

> The true embodiment
> Of everything that's excellent,
> He has no kind of fault or flaw,
> And He, my Lords, embodies the Law,
> The constitutional guardian he
> Of pretty young wards in Chancery!

Mr. Gilbert probably will not pardon me for substituting the third personal for the first personal pronoun in this citation from his excellent libretto, so I do not apologise for it, as I should otherwise have done. It is remarkable how much of the politics remains the same in application, and indeed the only political variant which I observed was the substitution by the Queen for Liberal-Unionist for Liberal-Conservative, though I am not sure that the latter term does not cover the sense or nonsense equally well. The lords in attendance upon the Chancellor were headed by Mr. Harold Wilde, who, with Mr. Moyle as Private Wills of the Grenadier Guards, did best among the men. The truth and humour of the lyric, "Spurn not the nobly born," was well brought out by the former, and both he and Private Wills on sentry-go secured heartfelt encores, though so many of the various numbers received this honour that it would be an easier matter to record those that did not.

Miss Dow made a tolerable Phyllis, ward in Chancery, and Arcadian Shepherdess, though her voice is preferably heard rather when she sings andantino than con multo furore, as an unmusical neighbour of mine in the stalls heartlessly remarked. Miss Jessie Rose was the Iolanthe, and was a delightful juvenile of mature years, mother of "a Tory down to the waist" with a couple of "confounded Radicals" for legs; Mr. Henry Lytton, in fact, who was quite in the Savoy tradition, made a Strephon more admirable than any Crichton. In reverting for a moment to Miss Rose, it is to chronicle the pleasure I had from her singing of the ballad, "He loves! if in the bygone years," which is the most poetical morcel of the evening, and received from Iolanthe its due meed of beauty in the rendering.

The song and dance in which the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Mountararat and Tolloller make hasty hay while the footlights shine were encored until it was obvious that such haymaking was hot work, and, indeed, any one less nimble than Mr. Workman might have succumbed before that at the rattling song in which orchestra and singer seem to be having a race as to which can first reach the goal, I mean the well-known account of a night spent uneasily dreaming. As Mr. Workman delivered it, we enjoyed a triumph of elocution.

"The Midnight Wedding," at the Lyceum.

Mr. Walter Howard, author of this play and of "Her Love Against the World," is undoubtedly an adept at constructing effective melodrama. He knows just the dose of heroism required from the hero, and never oversteps this into the impossible, but, on the contrary, gives us plenty of common humanity in his Paul Valmar, Sword Master of the Red Hussars, whom Mr. Norman Partridge incarnated on Saturday evening. Mr. Howard knows, too, the psychology of the modern villain of melodrama. He makes him follow the modern fashion, for who that does not follow if they cannot lead, counts for anything. So we are interested all the time in the doings of Captain Rudolf, who combines with Lieutenant Eugene to force the Princess sister of the latter into a loathed union with himself. Their machinations are of no avail, for the lady is married off secretly at the beginning of the play to Valmar, and he it is who appears to protect her in all moments of danger.

Very deftly has Mr. Howard welded together his materials, and these are well chosen, from the heroism and villainy of those already mentioned to the middle term of comic relief in the shape of those three "comrades in war but rivals in love," a group of three private soldiers in love with the same bonny waiting-maid of "The Golden Dragon." Their guileless doings serve to pass many pleasant moments, whose quality is heightened by the agreeable presence and personality of Miss Valli Valli, the waiting-maid in question, who loves the least of the three privates Mr. Gus Oxley, beloved of the gods.

Miss Nora Kerin has comely presence and far-reaching voice to help her through the arduous part of the Princess who at one time masquerades in male attire as a second lieutenant. Here, as in the previous piece, Miss Kerin soon establishes the chain of sympathy between herself and the more emotional among her audience, so that when the pathetic moments arrive she has but to pull the string, as it were, and down fall shower-baths of tears into pocket-handkerchiefs without end.

The dramatic interest is well sustained throughout, and that scene at Paul Valmar's quarters which closes the third of four acts, and finds Paul wounded in a left-handed duel with Rudolf, nursed by the Princess and visited by that neglectful Prince, his father, whose heartstrings at last are wrung by his son's bravery and misfortunes, is a fitting climax from which the descent into the level plain of the fourth act, with its marriage ceremony (duel thrown in), is made easy.

"The Midnight Wedding" comes to us from the provinces, and I cannot but applaud their good taste in melodrama, which indeed is not the only matter in which their taste sometimes excels that of the metropolis. I admit that I look forward to its supersession by Mr. Hall Caine's "Christian" with feelings of unmixed preference for the present entertainment, which so well steers clear of vexed questions and keeps us interested all the time.

* * * * *

"Divorçons" at the Duke of York's Theatre is an excuse for a "presentation" by Mr. Frohman. Miss Grace George is the Cyprienne of this edition of Sardou's well-known play, and those who like acting for acting's sake might do worse than go and see Mr. Frank Worthing play the husband of her who has married neither wisely nor well. As is the case with all Mr. Frohman's productions, no expense has been spared in mise-en-scène or in the interpretation of the original. But for all that, one cannot feel very enthusiastic about these revivals of Sardou's machines for the exhibition of new talent. One wishes that England and America would unite their forces, and see whether it be not possible to obtain a play in Anglo-Saxon out of the millions who populate the two countries.

* * * * *

The Stage Society produced two plays last week. "David Ballard," by Mr. Charles McEvoy, is a grim study of modern life in three acts, long drawn out, and yet containing a good deal to interest. This play was produced by the author, which, perhaps, accounts for its length. But Mr. McEvoy will do well to entrust the production of his future plays to some trained hand and thus gain for himself more of that goodwill which comes from a patience not overstrained with verbiage. Mr. McEvoy has certainly some talent for the theatre, and his interpreters were not to blame, for they played excellently, yet achieved but a qualified measure of applause from those who endured through the long watches of the afternoon. The other play produced by the Stage Society at the Imperial Theatre last week was not deprived of its original German title, but I will venture to translate it into "The Operatic Singer," though the dictionary gives for the German word "private singer to the prince." Be this as it will, the hero is a young gentleman who has scored success as a vocalist and is literally bombarded by lovely ladies with their love and by an antique Nestor of a composer with his opera. The opera seemed as tiresome to me when played on the piano as did the rest of this crude adaptation. I felt all the time that the young man singer was a ridiculous prig, and that the young women, especially she who shot herself, were very foolish to be thus infatuated with mediocrity, and finally I felt that I should like myself to have a shot at the prosy old composer, for I thought he would never have done with his lucubrations upon the fickleness of fame and the injustice of managers. A friend who has seen the play done in German assures me that it was taken far too seriously in the English version, that the singer should be far more light-hearted and devil-may-care. That may be so, but I admit that I am not keen to see the German version.

* * * * *

The Irish National Theatre has been giving a series of representations of the works of its protagonists this week. Mr. Synge's "The Playboy of the Western World" was the most striking of these performances, and led, I am told, to a good deal of striking when produced in Dublin. It appears that certain of the young men of Ireland objected to the ethics of murder in that country as expressed by Mr. Synge. "Parricide as an Aphrodisiac" might be given as the second title of this work, of which the main motive appears to be that to touch the virginal Hibernian heart to the point of making it throb for you, it is necessary to have assassinated one's male parent. I have always understood that the Irish were noted for the chastity of their maidens, but if Mr. Synge's contention as to their requirements be true, I cease to wonder. Fortunately, there appear to be a good many exceptions to this rule, and, unfortunately perhaps, it must be admitted that Mr. Synge has considerable talent.

THE COMPLETE CATECHIST.

The Curate's Catechism.

(For the guidance of young men newly admitted to Deacon's orders.)

Question: Who are you?

Answer: A curate in the Church of England.

Q.: What is a curate in the Church of England?

A.: A young man fresh from Oxford or Cambridge, who enters the Church with the firm intention of becoming a dean or a bishop, but usually ends his days as a missionary or a guinea-pig.

Q.: What are the duties of a curate in the Church of England?

A.: To have an agreeable person and gentlemanly manners; to be proficient in lawn tennis, croquet, and other social pastimes; and to be always ready to step into the breach as the only man at an afternoon tea-fight.

Q.: Have you other duties besides these?

A.: Yes, several others; i.e., to serve as a lure to young women to teach in the Sunday school; to visit the poor—when I can find time; and, while preaching with sufficient eloquence not to empty the church, on no account to preach so well as to draw larger congregations than the vicar.

Q.: Who is the vicar?

A.: The incumbent of the parish to which I am licensed by the bishop of the diocese.

Q.: Whether of the twain is your master—the vicar or the bishop?

A.: Neither of them. I have no master. I am under the absolute control of a mistress.

Q.: Of what mistress?

A.: Of the vicaress.

Q.: What mean you by this answer?

A.: I mean that the vicaress runs the vicar, and the vicar, in turn (so far as I am concerned), runs the bishop.

Q.: Explain your reply more particularly.

A.: I will. E.g.: In theory, the vicar cannot discharge me without the consent of the bishop, while the vicaress has no voice at all in the matter. But, in practice, if the vicaress desires to retain me, retained I am, without reference either to vicar or bishop. Again, if the vicaress wants to get rid of me, she sets the vicar—and through him the bishop—in motion, and I am discharged then and there, without more ado.

Q.: It is very important, then, to stand well with the vicaress?

A.: It is all-important.

Q.: Have you not a right of appeal to the bishop?

A.: I have. But the right is altogether nugatory.

Q.: Why so?

A.: Because the vicar reports to the bishop what the vicaress tells him to report, and the bishop always takes the word of a vicar against that of a curate.

Q.: What is a benefice?

A.: A piece of ecclesiastical preferment—also called a living—which I have no earthly chance of ever obtaining.

Q.: How is this?

A.: Because I do not happen to be related to a patron.

Q.: What is a patron?

A.: A layman, usually worldly-minded and sometimes ungodly, who is supposed to hold the said preferment in sacred trust for the benefit of the parishioners, but who, in fact, holds it in sacred trust for the benefit of his brother, cousin, or other needy relative.

Q.: Of what religion is the patron?

A.: He may be of any religion, or of no religion—Church of England, Presbyterian, Nonconformist, Jew, Mahommedan, Agnostic, Atheist. The point is too trivial to be worth considering.

Q.: Of what manner of life is the patron?

A.: Of any manner of life. He may be as moral as William Wilberforce, or as immoral as Charles II. of religious and gracious memory. It is quite immaterial.

Q.: Then religion and morality have nothing to do with the qualifications that fit a patron to appoint to a Church of England benefice?

A.: Nothing whatever.

Q.: What is merit?

A.: Merit is its own reward in the Church of England.

Q.: What is interest?

A.: That most precious of all Christian virtues, which is rewarded with canonries, deaneries, and bishoprics.

Q.: What if a minister does not happen to have this most precious of all Christian virtues?

A.: Then there is only one course open to him.

Q.: What is that?

A.: To marry a wife who has.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

"LA RIVALE," AT THE FRANCAIS.

"LA RIVALE," the new play at the Théâtre Français, is a comedy of fashion and passion bordering on drama. Its four acts are of unequal merit, there are flaws here and there, incidents albeit full of promise that lead up to nothing, improbabilities even for the stage. Several scenes will not bear too close analysis, and this would be a defect were it not that the dialogue is so captivating and the scenic suggestiveness so strong that you are unable to analyse anything until you have come home and shaken off the spell. I am not sure, therefore, that "defects" of this sort are not really qualities. At any rate, they show that the author's talent is of no mean order. The third act, however, where the conflict between the two rival women breaks like a storm, is a masterpiece, and it would alone ensure the success of the play. The authors, MM. Henry Kistemaeckers and Eugène Delard, are both well known in the literary world. The former has given, at the Théâtre Molière, a stirring drama, "L'Instinct"; the latter is the author of a drama of country life, "La Donation." Their joint work, "La Rivale," reminds one of Gabriele d'Annunzio's "Gioconda": the story is meagre enough, and might have been compressed into one act, but a fine, rushing, seething torrent of passion carries you through the four acts.

André Brizeux is a sculptor of renown. As a young man he was a careless Bohemian, penniless and full of genius. His wife, Jeanne, to whom he has been married for ten years, a sweet yet matter-of-fact woman, a typical French lady with a taste for elegance, and yet with an eye to business, has transformed the long-haired Montmartre artist of yore, with his soft felt hat, corduroy suit, and huge bow necktie of black silk, into an accomplished society favourite. They now live in a West End residence; André Brizeux is Officer of the Legion of Honour, and will not take a fee of less than twenty thousand francs for modelling a bust portrait. His wife, in short, has proved to be an admirable business manager. Perhaps, in making a marketable merchandise of her husband's talent, she has spoilt it. I wish the authors had made this point clear. Brizeux has been working for months at a statue, a woman in a dreamy attitude, and he feels that this statue, which, like the one in "Mutilated Victories" of Gabriele d'Annunzio, plays an important part in the plot, is cold, cheap, and ineffective. Or is it because the artist's mind is elsewhere? Brizeux and his wife, having no children, have centred their affections on a poor cousin, Simone de Mortagnes. Simone is a frequent visitor to their house, and as the story opens she has been their guest for several months, as well as her father (she has lost her mother), a decayed clubman, a society parasite who lives by sponging on his friends and borrowing money of them. The Brizeux make a pet of Simone, pay her dressmaker's bills (no insignificant item this, I should say), and introduce her into society. Simone, a creature of high birth and exquisite breeding, beautiful, high-strung, sensitive, chafes under the generosity of her cousins. Why did they not leave her to earn her living with her violin, in playing which she excels? Why? Probably because her own pride stands in the way. So she accepts, while resenting, the benefits of her cousins, and has not made up her mind whether to love or hate them. With all her fine dresses, she is aware that society looks down upon her as the "poor relation." Men like the Baron de Ligneuil, a stock-exchange pirate, or Sormiers, an owner of stables, are emboldened to lay their fortune at her feet—on terms that may be hinted, but not broadly declared. You should see with what queenly pride she spurns those ill-favoured men—one of whom, the Baron de Ligneuil, is a finely observed character study. Honest Pontecroix proposes to her, but she does not care for him; no doubt her pride is the cause of her rejecting her poor suitor. Her pride, however, does not save her from dishonour, and all her haughty spirit does not prevent her from falling into the arms of her cousin, André Brizeux.

Simone has the decency to go and live elsewhere. Brizeux's wife knows the truth, and is the unhappiest of women, but she keeps her sorrows to herself. She thinks her husband has no suspicion, and she hopes to reconquer him some day. But André, unable to bear the life of his twofold existence, has become irritable and despondent. In a scene of dramatic beauty and horror, Simone appears, pale, forlorn, and, after many sobs, exclamations, reticences, she whispers a word in her lover's ear. André has now made up his mind; he will leave his wife and cleave to Simone. The authors, in order to lessen the painfulness of this scene, have been careful to let us know that Jeanne is in no wise dependent on her husband. André considers he has awakened to a new life—his art, he declares, was a lie, and before leaving his studio he picks up a hammer and breaks his statue, the "Dreamy Woman," to pieces. He leaves, moreover, with the tacit consent of the unfortunate wife, who has learnt that her "rival" is about to become a mother, and relinquishes all claim on her husband. There is a scene between the wife and Simone which might have been very unpleasant, but which has been saved by dint of dramatic mastery on the part of the authors.

Months pass by; the child is dead. André comes back one night to the studio where he spent ten happy years. He meets his wife, whose hair has turned grey. The scene is pathetic, but no new situation can arise out of it. Of all solutions, the "legitimate" one would have been the most painful and absurd. Husband and wife, now separated for ever, weep over the lost happiness.

The "Rivale" belongs to the romantic school, the language is not very natural, the situations are sometimes unreal, and the construction of the plot is feeble—I had almost said jerry-built. Yet the whole has a sort of internal logic. The defects are conjured away, as if by sleight of hand, as long as the play lasts, and the authors have at their command a power of suggestion that carries everything before it. The four acts are well played by the junior company of the Français. M. Grand has made a romantic personage of the sculptor, André. Mme. Cerny, in the part of the betrayed wife, is tender, meek, unselfish, and heartbroken. Mlle. Piérat, in the part of Simone, remains one of the most youthful, charming, and bewitching figures of the modern stage.

I sent you some shirt-cuff notes made at Juvisy when the young Queen of Spain halted there under the maternal wing on the way to Madrid to be married. Here are some others jotted down in the train of President Fallières as he proceeded to Cherbourg last week:—

"Departure for Cherbourg—Pichon made heroic effort to see President off and beg him to present excuses to Danish sovereigns. He looked in low phase of a bad fever, and could hardly stand. At last moment his official private secretary helped him to the President's train. P., I heard in course of journey, suffers from tropical climates, where he passed some years, from his fever, smallpox, and other attacks at Pekin, and perhaps most of all from the terrible shaking he received in the siege of the Legations there. 'C'est un bien excellent homme,' reflected Fallières after they had parted, 'et vraiment une conscience.' Thomson has lost that joyous look which he always had in the opening days of his Ministry. What wonder? He cannot be held accountable for any of those naval catastrophes which have annihilated almost a whole fleet. Still, he came with his full staff in naval uniform, and those officers whom he had named to attend on the King of Denmark. Clemenceau's official career tells on him. He manages to keep a stiff lip, and to play his part handsomely. Fallières and he seem to pull on well together. Excellent Winter, a counterpoise to the impressionable nerves of C., accompanied him as official private secretary and homme de confiance. This background and yet important personage is short, stout, watchful, judicious, ripe, mellow, methodic, looks a good fellow, and has a firmly closed mouth and smiling eyes. He learned how to deal with cranks and suchlike in the two or three years he spent at Charenton as its Director."

"Uneasiness in train about possible reception of ministers at Cherbourg. Caillaux has been the cause of a spontaneous union of Socialists, Liberals, Radicals, and, indeed, all on whom his scheme threatens to press. The town council hostile. Dockers, sailors, officials, small and great shopkeepers, and the market fishwomen go in with the brandy slingers against the Government. Alcoholism is in the ascendant. Some wrangling went on about me on this evil. Every one agreed that tippling and universal suffrage are like behemoth high-speed motors driven by drunken chauffeurs—a thing of more common occurrence than is generally supposed."

"Cherbourg. Arrival after dark, windy, rainy night. Weather wet, gloomy, and after a night spent in the train enough to chill the marrow in one's bones. The civil and military servants drenched, and flags clinging to their staffs dripping and refusing to fly. The rain water which had poured into the boots of an old general ran over at the top. Sub-prefect about as dignified as a drenched cock. No go anywhere. Fallières with Clemenceau close behind him tried to cheer the ducked notables who came to receive him. Heard the Mayor of Cherbourg say, 'I consider you, M. le Président, the flag that covers the merchandise.' 'Thanks greatly for your courtesy towards me personally. But I claim for the merchandise the fullest confidence. In any case, let us agree to a trève de l'hospitalité in honour of our very friendly visitors.' 'Yes, yes, I subscribe with all my heart to this truce in the name of this town.'"

"The etiquette of a visit to the general hospital observed as usual only in a tearing hurry. We had shelter there from a fearful downpour. Sisters of charity serve as of old in this hospital. The aged Superior took M. Fallières round. He chatted with her, remaining always simple and natural, saying the right thing in neatly-pointed terms, and keeping down his inclination to risk a joke. He was in the house of suffering and sorrow. The patients whom he decorated with military medals were the better for this honour. It was as the touch of the king in former days for evil."

"Sea like glass, or, rather, as if oiled. Thick grey mist in the offing. A naval officer foresaw that the Victoria and Albert must feel its way and go at a slow pace. It might be an hour late. Six torpedo-boats had gone out to escort the Royal yacht. It was to be hoped that in this time of guignons of naval bad luck no mishap would occur to them. The fleet at first invisible in the roads. While awaiting the King and Queen President and Thomson, with the Ministers and their secretary, went on board the steam launch Elan to beat about the harbour, and the rest of us on the Ibis. Rain still fell. In an hour's time the Victoria and Albert signalled. The President descended to a more elegant craft, and, advancing towards the very imposing Royal yacht, a tall, massive vessel, went on board. Just as the review began there appeared at the point where the rain and fog had lifted a line of things that might have been tumbling dolphins of a peculiarly big breed. They were the torpedo-boats which had missed the Victoria and Albert and were hurrying back in the hottest haste in single file, and in a long trail of white swollen water in a sea that might have been of Indian ink. The state of the weather gave the review the air of a phantom one.

"It soon came to an end, and the Ibis brought us close to the place where the President and his guests should land. He gave his arm to the Queen, who seemed to walk with difficulty. She leant heavily on her closed umbrella. They descended the gangway slowly. She made an effort to stand erect, and succeeded. Her bearing thought fine—very independent, honest, and natural. In Norway or Sweden, where very tall women outnumber the others, she would not appear of extraordinary height. Her stature dwarfed that of M. Fallières. She had on a light grey cloth dress, a fur stole, and a black hat or bonnet with a tuft of white feathers. Frederick VIII. reminded all the official people of his brother, the King of Greece, but is of a more compact build, has a shorter neck, and apparently more coup d'œil and decision. He looks a man who is swayed, but not liable to be cowed, by a sense of his responsibilities, a man to be trusted as to word and relied on as to character. In spite of sixty-four years and the four meals a day which are obligatory in Denmark—the morgendrik, frokost, middag, and aftensmad—he keeps a clean-built and almost slender figure. The face is the colour of a Red Indian's from sea air and exposure to all weathers.

"He walked behind the President and beside M. Clemenceau. Both talked and laughed until they reached the terminus hall, where déjeuner for 120 had been laid out. The decorator and gardeners had given it a festal, and even elegant, aspect. One saw the Danish flag everywhere. It is the Geneva red cross flag reversed, as it might be on damask. The Cross of Geneva is red on a white ground, that of Denmark white on a red ground. Nobody attempted to appear in elegant raiment. Hats remained on heads at some distance from the central places. The awful draughts justified this scant ceremony. M. Fallières found, as he since said, the Queen companionable and full of ideas."

A PEER AMONG THE PRIVILEGED.

I'VE always felt rather sorry for baronets. It must be no end rough on a man to feel that he's neither fish nor fowl nor good red herring, neither peer nor commoner, looked down on by the one and not looked up to by the other. The public dearly loves a lord, as the Government is going to find out pretty soon; but who ever had even a sneaking affection for a baronet? Wherever he goes it is always the same, even in the City. We used to have a butler down at Bareacres—I think it was the butler, though now I come to think of it, it may have been the local curate—who had a brother who was a baronet, and I remember hearing how dreadfully hard it was for him to make an honest living in the City. His ambition was to be a company director, but he never could get a job with any but the most wild-cat sort of concern. The reason was that his title was not high enough for an ornamental directorship, while the fact that he had one at all, however humble, put him out of court as a man who knew anything about the working end of the business. He tried to get a private secretaryship, after that, but it was just the same story. All the rich shopkeepers and Labour members and Yankee millionaires and things wanted a peer or else a smart commoner. It wasn't until he dropped the "Bart." part of his name that he could get any start at all, and now I believe he has got about forty drapers' shops all over London, and is living somewhere at Surbiton under the name of plain Mr. Smith. Why, take another case nearer home. Do you think if I had only been a baronet when I came along to you I should be writing these articles for you now? Of course not, any more than if I had been a dustman. It was my rank that attracted you, just as it does any other commoner—thank goodness.

I was reading about a meeting held by the baronets last week, in a back-street somewhere in Westminster, in order to protect their privileges, and I couldn't help feeling that it was time they did something. I can't say I've ever been able to find out exactly what their privileges are, except having a red hand on their coat of arms, but it seems they have got some, and very naturally they don't want to lose them. I have been looking into the question, and I found that dear Jessie used to know a baronet when she was on the stage before we were married. He was what they called a "gentleman supe"—that is to say, he was just like any other super, only he was paid a pound a week, wrapped up in a piece of tissue paper, instead of so much a night. He was rather a nice boy in those days, Jessie tells me, and she advised him to give up the stage, where he would never have been any good, and go to America to find a rich wife. I am sorry to say it wasn't a success, because they won't look at anything under a German baron over there now; but at least he got an American accent, and when he came back again he was able to open a bucket-shop on the strength of it and did pretty well. We asked him to dinner a night or two since, because I wanted to pump him about the grievances of the baronetage, and, as far as I could make out, the thing they are really savage about is that they aren't knights, but everybody thinks they are. According to him it is the most frightful thing to be a knight, or even to be related to one—much worse than a convict—because it always means that you have once been a small grocer in a provincial town, and can't pronounce your h's, and are socially impossible—which a convict isn't necessarily. It made one realise what a queer place the world is to hear him talk like this. Here was a man, quite a sensible sort of man in some things, too—he gave me an excellent tip about Canpacs before he left—who looked down upon knighthood, just as I have always been accustomed to look down on the baronetcy. I shouldn't be surprised if an emperor, or an editor, and people like that, look down on an earldom in much the same way, if we only knew. What?

Well, any way, I could only find two things that the baronets are really sore about—the danger of being mistaken for knights, and the fact that half the people who are in the baronetage aren't baronets at all. Jessie and I have been discussing it, and it seems to us that we have found a way out of the difficulty for them, and if you like to suggest it, as being your own idea, you are quite welcome to it. It is quite simple, too, only that they should give up using the prefix "Sir" altogether, and not have anything—not even "Mr."—in front of their names, or behind them either. It would quite distinguish them from everybody else, because even a butcher's assistant expects to be called "Mr.," and to have his letters addressed to him as "Esquire," nowadays. And it would make them seem no end distinguished, because it is only the very greatest men that are ever spoken of by their surnames alone, and that not until they are dead, as a rule. When you talk about "Gladstone," or "Wellington," or "Shakespeare," it means that whoever it is has made a pretty big name for himself; and so in the same way it would sound ever so much more dignified to be called just plain "Sweedlepipes," instead of "Sir Thomas Sweedlepipes, Bart.," and there wouldn't be any danger of being mistaken for a provincial mayor either, because a man who has only just got the right of being spoken to by one of his customers as "Sir Robert" isn't going to lose it in a hurry, while if your family have been used to it ever since your great-great-grandfather first bought the title for £1,000 from James I., the novelty has pretty well worn off by this time.

Then, again, it would quite do away with any danger of bogus baronetcies, because the only reason that any man would ever call himself a baronet if he wasn't one would be on the chance of getting a rich middle-class or American girl to marry him; and if she knew that marrying him wouldn't give her the right to being called "my lady" by the footmen, that sort of temptation would be done away with at once. If they don't do something of the sort, or on the lines I've suggested, the poor wretches of baronets are going to find themselves in a cleft stick before long. Since the cheap newspapers came into fashion every one is levelling up, or being levelled up, all the time; and it's only the baronet who is bound where he is and can't get up any higher. It is not so very long since that a "gentleman" or a "lady" meant a certain definite rank, with millions of common people below them. By this time every one is either a lady or a gentleman, down to the dirty old woman who is run in at a police-court for getting drunk. That means that the people who used to be the "gentry" will sooner or later have to take a step upwards themselves. I only wonder they haven't all done it already. Some of them have. There is a society of some sort—political, I think—that is called the Primrose League, and I am told that all its members—who are chosen from the middle classes—call themselves knights and dames already. Then a provincial mayor, or a successful ironmonger, won't be satisfied with a plain knighthood, and he will have to be made a baronet, as he sometimes is now. So before a couple of centuries are gone by the whole population will be baronets—except the peers, of course, because any one will tell you that the British public will never allow the rights of the peerage to be infringed; they would as soon think of overthrowing the Throne itself. By that time the farthing newspaper reporters will be writing that "the honourable baronet in the dock was understood to say that he had been to a wedding and had partaken of one glass of four-'arf, which overcame him, as he was subject to attacks of giddiness," and I should like to know where the privileges of the baronetcy will be then. While, if they have the sense to take my advice—it is really Jessie's idea, to begin with, and she never makes mistakes—and drop every kind of title, even Christian names, they will get more and more distinguished from the common mob every year. And, of course, if they hadn't got any privileges, no one would ever want to infringe upon them.

I ought to add that Jessie is rather afraid that by the time the whole nation has levelled itself up to all being baronets, they may not want to stop there, but keep going on up the ladder until they are all dukes and duchesses—or, for that matter, all kings and queens. I don't think this is very likely myself, and if it should happen it will only be another kind of Socialism, and a very much better one than the sort that wants to level us all down to being one vast community of day-labourers. What? I could write a good deal more about the baronetcy and its privileges, because I always feel rather sorry for the poor devils, but I think I have said about as much as you and your readers will stand. And so does Jessie.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THIS is the Age, dear Lady Betty, of the Genius of Wealth; the following conversation is an illustration of that:—

HE: "Do you like Shakespeare?"
SHE: "How much has he?"

* * * * *

There is the New Charity. The Patrons and Patronesses of a recent charitable entertainment represented a capital sum of one hundred millions between them; the performance produced six hundred pounds. One three-hundredth of a farthing in the pound!

* * * * *

The affluent Imperialist mutters at Folkestone, with William Pitt: "Oh, my country! how I love my country!" he then takes a ticket for—Paris.

* * * * *

Toryism is always in a state of decomposition; Radicalism, in a state of development.

. . . . .

The Tories govern by expedients; they are governed by exigencies.

. . . . .

The Extremists of to-day are the Moderates of to-morrow, and the Moderates of to-morrow the Tories of the day after.

. . . . .

Politics in England was a game which was played by the upper class with the assistance of the masses; it is now played by the masses with the assistance of the upper class.

. . . . .

The West End does not live in a world; it lives in a village.

* * * * *

"The Use and Abuse of the Peers" is the title of the following letter that has been addressed to the present writer:—

"Marlborough Club.

"SIR,—It is proposed to discredit the Peers; a suicidal project. Who marry American heiresses, and bring the money of the latter into the country? The Peers. Who support the stage, and give presents and suppers to the actresses? The Peers. Who support the moneylenders? The Peers. Who support the Divorce Court, and provide sensational material for the public to read? The Peers. Who supply honourable names for the company-promoters, to enable the latter to float their undertakings? The Peers. Who provide work for hundreds of debt-collecting solicitors and their clerks? The Peers. Who attract the suburban and provincial members of the middle-class to bazaars and charitable entertainments? The Peers and Peeresses. The prosperity of the country mainly depends upon our retaining undiminished the respect which is accorded to us."

* * * * *

The English hate the foreigner, but they believe in him; which they do not in each other. There are hordes of spurious foreign Marquises and millionaires in the country; thousands of foreign clerks and servants are employed here, it being supposed that they are more intelligent, industrious, and faithful than our fellow-countrymen; the tendency is to see merit in the work of a foreign artist; a foreign play is a success which would be denounced were it literally translated into our language; the books written by foreign authors are read with avidity, though no British author is permitted even to hint at the subjects the former handle; and depravity itself is welcomed in the foreigner.

. . . . .

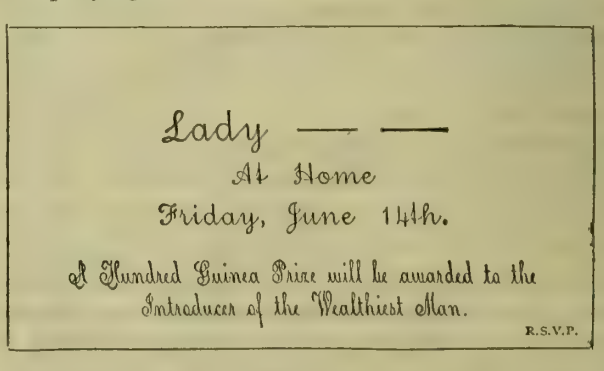
The composite John Bull of the moment is a curiosity; eating French dishes that his predecessors despised; drinking French wines they ridiculed; smoking cigarettes they abominated; reading French novels they regarded with horror; and attending French plays they avoided as vicious. There never was a race so susceptible to foreign influence as the English, when the influence reaches it.

* * * * *

The following letter directs attention to a new development:—

"316, Curzon-street, Mayfair.

"SIR,—There is now the 'Prize Party!' It recently caused me the utmost astonishment to receive the accompanying card:—



"It appears that invitations were only issued to women, and each of the latter was required to bring one millionaire, the hundred guineas were for the one who brought the richest! This was an ingenious plan of the host and hostess to obtain the acquaintance at a stroke of all the millionaires in London!"

Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

"PRETTY POLLY: The History of Her Career on the Turf," by Joscelyne Lechmere, which has just been published by John Lane (the Bodley Head), is a very handsome book, adorned with twenty-three beautiful illustrations, and containing some curious and interesting information. Pretty Polly, by Gallinule out of Admiration, by Saraband, was bred by Major Loder in 1901. She made her début at Sandown Park on June 27, 1903, when she won the British Dominion Two-year-old race by ten lengths, having started at the generous price of 6 to 1 in a field of ten. John o' Gaunt was favourite at 2 to 1, and Jack Hawthorn and Lanfine were both in much better demand than Pretty Polly. Her second race was the National Breeders' Produce Stakes of £5,000 at Sandown Park three weeks later, when there was a field of eleven, and she won by two lengths. Pretty Polly's price was 2 to 1, and Flying Star started nearly as good a favourite, for it was thought impossible that Major Loder's filly could give him 16 lb. The bookmakers were also liberal at Doncaster, as 11 to 10 was betted against her for the Champagne Stakes, although she really had only St. Amant to beat. She again easily defeated Mr. L. de Rothschild's colt in the Middle Park Plate, when odds of 2 to 1 were betted on her. As a two-year-old Pretty Polly won nine races. In 1904 she won seven races, including the One Thousand, Oaks, Coronation Stakes, and St. Leger, and long odds were always betted on her. Pretty Polly's first defeat was in the Prix du Conseil Municipal at Longchamps in October, when she was easily beaten by Presto II. The mare had no doubt been upset by a rough passage from Folkestone to Boulogne, and by a long delay on the Chemin de Fer du Nord; the ground, moreover, was very heavy. As a four-year-old Pretty Polly won the Coronation Cup at Epsom easily from Zinfandel and Caius, and then she went amiss, and was not again seen out before the Newmarket Second October Meeting. The writer of this book considers that Pretty Polly would certainly have won the Ascot Cup of 1905 if she had started. The vital fact is overlooked that at Epsom she defeated Zinfandel over an easy mile and a half, whereas at Ascot she would have been running over a severe two miles and a half, and the extra distance would have been greatly in favour of Lord Howard de Walden's horse, as the Coronation Cup course was not far enough for him. Pretty Polly came out all right again in October, when she cantered away from Hackler's Pride in the Champion Stakes, and this was one of her very best performances. During the Houghton week she won the Jockey Club Cup easily from Bachelor's Button, running at weight-for-age. As a five-year-old Pretty Polly began by winning the March Stakes at the Newmarket First Spring Meeting, odds of 30 to 1 being betted on her. A month later she won the Coronation Cup in a canter, having Achilles and St. Amant behind her. Then her Turf career closed with what the writer defines as "The Tragedy of Ascot," when Bachelor's Button defeated her very easily for the Gold Cup, Cicero being beaten a long way. The result was in accordance with my prediction. The writer of this book suffers acutely from the malady common among biographers, and defined by Macaulay as the Lues Boswellian. "To say that Pretty Polly failed to stay is absurd." Of course she failed to stay, and many good judges had always expected that when her stamina came to be thoroughly tested she would collapse. Pretty Polly's defeat was a sore blow to her quand même admirers, and, of course, one feels a sympathy with their honest sorrow. It is really going too far, though, for the writer to assert that "no one cared about the money; one would have gladly given the money twice over rather than have seen her defeated." This is all vastly fine, and a very few people no doubt were truly grieved from sentimental reasons, but as to the great majority of a racecourse crowd, they feel about as much sentiment under such circumstances as a hog devouring acorns would feel interest in the age or beauty of the oak from which they fell, and under whose shade he was munching and cramming himself. The writer maintains that no mare, not even Sceptre, could have made Pretty Polly gallop, and not many horses either. This is delirious cackle, for most people whose opinions are worth a farthing would certainly not rank Sceptre one ounce below Pretty Polly, and many would estimate the Eaton mare to be the better of the pair. Pretty Polly won all the races in which she was successful without any great effort, but she never had much to beat. Zinfandel was not running over his best distance when Major Loder's mare defeated him at Epsom. Pretty Polly's easy victory over Hackler's Pride was, as I have said, really her best performance. The ardent admiration of the writer for the mare is praiseworthy, but it is infantile ingenuousness to refer to her retirement as having left "a void in the life of the Turf which is never likely to be adequately filled." Horses are exalted to the highest places in the equine temple of fame with frantic rapidity, and are dethroned with at least equal facility. There is scarcely a season but one hears a chorus of laudatory braying about some animal as being one of the best racers ever seen, and so on and so forth. Every year we see how lavishly applause may be bestowed in one season, and how profound the silence into which it may die away in the next. The writer appears to be of the opinion that Zinfandel and Pretty Polly were the best animals which ever crossed the Channel to run in France, a view which is not likely to be accepted without protest by those who remember that the list of such animals includes Blair Athol, Cremorne, and Doncaster.

The writer gives some items of information—presumably obtained from the owner and trainer of Pretty Polly—which are really important and of great and permanent interest. In the first place, we are told that the story, which has repeatedly appeared in print with circumstantial details, of a trial between Pretty Polly and Spearmint before last year's Derby is "altogether mythical," and it is added that "the two had never been tried." It is satisafctory to have a conclusive contradiction of this story. Quite as interesting is the writer's announcement that Spearmint was really "no better than the best of a moderate lot." This is the view which I have always taken of Major Loder's horse, and, after all the gasconading gibberish which was written last summer about Spearmint, is is most satisfactory to arrive at last at the truth, for one is justified in assuming that the statements in this book have been inspired by the stable authorities. It is an interesting record of the Turf career of a racer of very high class, the heroine having been also a great popular favourite. The book is admirably got up in every respect.

The King's impending sale of racehorses and brood mares has called attention to the ignominious failure of the Sandringham stud during the last seven years, which has been due in a great measure to the reckless in-breeding which has become so fashionable of late. The Royal yearlings have always been good-looking and promising, and if they had been sold by auction they would certainly have realised very high prices; but they have proved hopeless failures for racing, and this disappointing result was the more exasperating inasmuch as most of them have always been very heavily engaged. The late Lord Falmouth, who was a thoroughly practical man, was of the opinion that the owner of a breeding stud ought not to keep a sire of his own, as he is nearly always tempted to send his mares to his own horse, instead of taking a wide range. This has been the error at Sandringham, and the same blunder has been committed in the studs of the Duke of Portland and the Duke of Westminster. Season after season Lily Agnes was sent to Doncaster after she had produced Ormonde, and Vampire, dam of Flying Fox, went to Orme several years in succession. Both mares proved utter failures as the result of this policy. The dam of Flying Fox was a daughter of Galopin, and his sire was out of a Galopin mare. The Sandringham mares have been sent too much and too often to Persimmon. Great things were expected of Laodamia as a brood mare. She was sent in her first season at Sandringham to Persimmon, and went back several times to the same sire although the cross proved a failure from the first. When it was tardily decided to try a new sire for this mare, it might have been supposed that a new strain of blood would have been fixed upon, but the only change was that Laodamia was sent to St. Simon, sire of Persimmon, which was practically no change whatever. Lord Falmouth chose the sires for his mares from the whole list, and the crosses were changed every season, but he would never have anything to do with a bad-tempered horse. Lord Rosebery has frequently acted on the same sound principles, and, instead of restricting himself to his own horses, his best mares have been sent away, and with satisfactory results. Ladas is a son of Hampton, Sir Visto was sired by Barcaldine, Velasquez by Donovan, and Cicero by Cyllene. A non-sporting paper expresses the opinion that the King must have been largely out of pocket by the failures of his racehorses during the last five seasons. This is a mistake, for the profits from the breeding stud have paid for the loss over the racehorses. The fees of Persimmon and Florizel II. must have amounted to upwards of £20,000 a year, and £30,000 was the price obtained for Diamond Jubilee, the best sold horse which was ever exported from England. If there is a complete change in the system of management at Sandringham the stud may again enjoy the prosperity of ten years ago. The home sires ought no longer to be used for the mares, which should be sent away to every suitable cross. Laodamia's foal this season is a filly by St. Simon, this being the third year in succession that she has been sent to the Duke of Portland's horse. Amphora has a filly by Flying Fox, Vane (own sister to Flying Fox) has a filly by Ayrshire; Ecila has a colt by Orme.

DIEPPE CASINO. Five hours from London. Unrivalled pleasure centre. Operas, plays, concerts nightly, by leading Parisian artistes. Orchestra of 60. Petits Chevaux, Baccarat, &c.

The egregious Racehorse Owners' Association has not been wound up, but many of the most influential members have retired, and the society is in a grievously languishing condition, and might very well cease to exist at once, without any further jargoning and wrangling. The moon will fall before either free lodging and stabling are provided at race meetings, or railway companies carry racehorses at nominal charges, and such demands are really exceedingly impudent, all things considered. The fact is that there is a general idea that the Association has been engineered by owners who are aggrieved at not having been themselves admitted to the Jockey Club, and who desired to take the wind out of the sails of the Newmarket tribunal. After a turbid existence of two years the Association has achieved absolutely nothing whatever in any shape or form, although there has been more than enough fuss and noise in connection with its doings.

I hear that all hope of bringing Spearmint to the post for another race has been abandoned. It was stated in TRUTH in January last that it was in the greatest degree unlikely that Spearmint would get through another preparation. He was then entered for a number of races just on the off-chance, and it was decided to leave him in for certain rich stakes, the final forfeits for which were declared on January 1. It is highly probable that we have also seen the last of Llangibby.

A ridiculous noise was raised over Polymelus last autumn, and this horse was eulogised by some hysterical cackle-ganders as a racer of superlative merit. There really, however, was nothing in his handicap successes which justified these rhapsodies. The withdrawal of Polymelus from the Ascot Cup need not be regretted, for Mr. Joel's horse has no pretensions to stay the course. I do not believe that Polymelus can really stay beyond a mile and a quarter, and as a three-year-old he was regarded as distinctly lacking in stamina by those who knew most about him. It is a pity that the acceptance for the Princess of Wales's Stakes of £6,000 should consist of either abject rubbish or good performers which are broken down. Polymelus (5 yrs., 9 st. 7 lb.) will apparently be seriously opposed only by Black Arrow (4 yrs., 8 st. 7 lb.), and if Mr. Hall Walker's horse is well and in form he must have an excellent chance of winning this valuable race. The Suffolk Stakes course is a severe mile and a half, but this will be against both these horses, and Black Arrow has superior speed. What a race this would have been if Cicero, Flair, and Spearmint had been still in racing condition!

The Eclipse Stakes is also likely to prove a direful failure, the only probable starters of any note being Sancy, Bezonian, Dusty Miller, Hillsprite, and Olympian. I expect that Sancy will win this race, and, by the way, Mr. Bass's horse will probably carry off the Rous Memorial Stakes at Ascot to-morrow.

The New Stakes, which will be one of the most interesting races of this week, has 137 entries, and the race will be worth £2,370. The New Stakes is one of the richest two-year-old races of the season, and is now better worth winning than the Middle Park Plate, which was worth only £2,115 to the winner last year. The King is the largest subscriber to the New Stakes with six entries, but it is to be feared that his Majesty's colours are not at all likely to be dangerous. Some of the highest-bred two-year-olds in training are engaged in this race, notably the Duke of Westminster's Vamose, own brother to Flying Fox, who made his début on the Turf in this race nine years ago; Mr. W. Hall Walker's Royal Realm, own brother to Colonia, who herself won the New Stakes two years ago; Lord Rosebery's Lauderdale, own brother to Lavengro; Baron M. de Rothschild's Le Sage, half-brother, by Ayrshire, to Sagamore; Major Loder's own sister to Pretty Polly; Lord Derby's Bridge of Sighs, half-brother, by Isinglass, to Bridge of Canny; and Sir Daniel Cooper's Lesbia, own sister to Flair.

Ob has met with an accident which will prevent his being trained again, so he is to be relegated to the stud. Ob, by Bocage out of Glare, by Minting, was purchased by M. Ephrussi at Deauville in 1901 as a yearling for 6,000 fr. He has proved a most remunerative investment, having twice won the Lincolnshire Handicap (with £20,000 in bets for his owner), besides several valuable stakes in France. He was indebted for his hollow victory at Lincoln last March to the fact that he was the only really fit horse in the field. It was superior condition that won him the race. He had been trained in the forest rides at Compiegne, where the "going" is always excellent.

There are only thirty-two entries for the Goodwood Plate of £1,000. This is the handicap which replaced the Goodwood Stakes, and it seems to me that there might as well be a return to the old name. A very moderate lot of horses have been engaged in this race, the best of them being Lord Derby's Gourd, Major Loder's Hammerkop, Mr. Buchanan's Golden Measure and Noctuiform, Mr. Singer's Torpoint, and Sir E. Vincent's Charles Edward. The weights are to be published on July 18.

There is severe depression in the entry market, both the Liverpool Cup of £1,500 and the Newbury Cup of £1,250 having failed to fill. The failure of these two handicaps is most extraordinary, and exceedingly unsatisfactory. The minor forfeit in each race is only £3, and but thirty entries were required. A few years ago there would have been no trouble whatever in obtaining more than double this very moderate number.

There was abundance of racing last week, but the only events of general interest were the two weight-for-age stakes at Hurst Park. The two-year-old race on Friday was regarded as a certainty for Quelpart or Pom, and Mr. de Rothschild's colt would most assuredly have won easily but for his being considerably interfered with, and at the start he was nearly knocked down by Pom, who himself ran very badly. The winner was Dark Ronald, against whom literally any odds were offered, and he was not backed for a penny. His victory was a flagrant fluke, and the defeat of Quelpart under such circumstances was in the greatest degree vexatious.

THE BUZZARD GOLF BALL has a reputation amongst keen golfers Latest and best. Increases your drive by 20 yds., and outlasts any other. 2s. each of Golf professionals and dealers.—Sample for P.O., from F. A. JOHNSON, 29, Paternoster-row, London.

Wool Winder won the three-year-old race on Saturday in a canter from Bilton Park, Larig being unplaced, although he had 12 lb. the best of the weights. Colonel Baird's colt is evidently in good form, and he ought to win his engagements at Ascot—the O. M. Biennial to-morrow, and the Triennial on Friday.

Next week there will be racing at Newcastle, Sandown Park, Gatwick, Folkestone, and Birmingham. It will be interesting to see how Polar Star gets on in the North Derby of £1,500, in which race a very poor lot of animals are engaged, Olympian and Linacre being the best of them. Pom is in the Seaton Delaval Plate of £1,200, but he appeared to be out of form at Hurst Park, and Vega might win this race. The Ascot running will probably indicate the winners at Sandown Park.

"MENDACITY" AND THE C.T.C.

Now that the postal vote of the Cyclists' Touring Club has confirmed the resolution of the Birmingham meeting, it looks as though attempts are to be made to discredit the committee of inquiry. Mr. G. W. Burke is the representative councillor of the grouped counties of Ireland in the C.T.C. In the interests of truth, as he says, he writes to me, and encloses the C.T.C. Gazette containing the speech delivered at Birmingham by the Hon. Gilbert Coleridge and a letter from himself to that journal. He concludes his letter to me by saying: "I do not wish to add one word to either the speech or the exposure of its transparent mendacity. I leave that to you." The charge made against the gentleman described by Mr. Burke as the leader of the Reform party seemed to me so serious that I at once communicated with Mr. Coleridge, who has placed the correspondence between himself and Mr. Burke at my disposal. Briefly, Mr. Coleridge, in his speech, referred to some recommendations that a previous committee had made of which he was a member. Mr. Burke, in commenting on that recommendation in a previous speech, had said: "In that very letter they saw there a recommendation to appoint three paid secretaries at a salary of £400 a year each." Mr. Coleridge quoted those words, and added: "Now, where did Mr. Burke get that except out of his own imagination? It was a piece of slatternly inaccuracy." Mr. Coleridge further went on to say that the proposed members of the Reform committee were not pledged to any such scheme. They were pledged to inquiry. In his lengthy letter to the Gazette Mr. Burke refers to the accusation of slatternly inaccuracy, and says that Mr. Coleridge has written courteously apologising for his remarks at Birmingham, and admitting that the reform party had undoubtedly expressed themselves in favour of the recommendations of the club membership committee. Mr. Burke adds: "I have asked for permission to publish this letter, but have been refused the same!" These words are italicised in the Gazette, and Mr. Burke then proceeds to attack the capacity of men who make such a mistake to conduct an inquiry.

The behaviour of a man who could give the substance of a letter when he attached so much importance to its writer's refusal to allow it to be published, coupled with a virulent attack in the Gazette and a request to myself to expose "transparent mendacity," naturally put me on inquiry. Mr. Coleridge did courteously apologise, and express regret for the language he had used and the mistake he had made. He says: "We had undoubtedly expressed ourselves in favour of the recommendation of the club membership committee." That is all that Mr. Burke reveals in his summary. He omits the pith of the letter, which continues: "But I wished to repudiate the suggestion that it was our scheme, and that we were pledged to that scheme. We are pledged to no scheme at all till we have inquired." For a councillor who seeks to discredit a fellow member, and who writes and accuses him of transparent mendacity, to exclude these words does not seem to me to be an act of transparent honesty. In his reply to Mr. Coleridge's letter, Mr. Burke fairly says that the letter is what he would have expected, and that he never considered the matter as anything else but a mistake made in the eagerness to score a point which would be acknowledged the moment it was looked into. Such a reply was the letter of a gentleman, and yet the man who wrote it now seeks to make party capital out of it in the Gazette, to attack and to discredit the Committee of Inquiry and to induce me to expose Mr. Coleridge as one guilty of transparent mendacity. In the face of Mr. Burke's own letter, the charges fall to the ground, and it is simply scandalous that one who in the same correspondence thinks that the agitation has got out of hand and that the club will be wrecked, should take up the position he has, and threaten as he does to give further instances of "the slatternly inaccuracies" of Mr. Coleridge and his party.

The correspondence continued between the parties, and Mr. Coleridge replied to the printed statement entitled: "Forthcoming postal vote; statement by the council." It will be remembered that the council decreed that Mr. Coleridge should print a statement for the Reform party, and the council a statement of its case. The council's statement was signed by Mr. Burke and two other gentlemen. Both were printed and circulated, but the members were not told, as was the case, that the council's statement was never, in fact, adopted by the council. This was scarcely transparently honest. Mr. Coleridge goes into this statement in his letter, and points out in detail to Mr. Burke the suppressions and misstatements he alleges that document contains. Mr. Coleridge concludes by saying that he does not comment on the epithets and personalities the statement contains, as he does not consider Mr. Burke can be responsible for them, and that he confines himself to facts to show the mass of misrepresentations to which Mr. Burke has unwittingly lent his name, no doubt because he has not been able to study the facts carefully. Mr. Burke requests leave to publish Mr. Coleridge's letter of apology, and the latter replies that it was a private letter, and declines leave unless the letter containing Mr. Coleridge's criticisms of the statement is published as well.

It will be observed that Mr. Burke carefully refrains from referring to this condition. He deliberately publishes so much of a private letter as suits his purpose. He emphasises the refusal to publish, which was, in fact, a conditional permission. He then has the effrontery to write to me and suggest that I should charge Mr. Coleridge with transparent mendacity. That letter to me and that attack in the Gazette I consider to be as mean as they are malignant. I am utterly at a loss to understand how the editor of the Gazette can have permitted a correspondent to publish the substance of a letter when so much emphasis is laid on the fact that permission to publish it has been refused. The editor clearly had the letter before him, as he inserts an editorial note in Mr. Coleridge's speech referring to it. Mr. Coleridge has written a letter of apology to the Gazette.

I trust I have shown up this nice little plot to discredit the Reform party. The Editor of the Gazette obviously prefers to publish letters that embitter controversy rather than correspondence such as the letter of Mr. Manor, that I dealt with last week, which reveals the weakness of the existing constitution of the club. The club is doomed to extinction if this editorial policy is continued. There is one more matter to which I wish to refer and then I have done, and that is that the club advertises itself as containing 40,000 members. This means that the Gazette has a monthly circulation of that extent. Intending advertisers will do well to inquire into the figures. They are entirely at variance with what Mr. Kendall Burnett's affidavit made out last year, and they are quite inconsistent with Mr. Shipton's jeremiad in the Irish cycling paper. I see that Cycling, June 11, gives the figures at the end of May as being 24,381, and says that on the headed notepaper of the advertising agent's 40,000 is given as the circulation of the journal. If

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Building, Carteret-street, S.W.

these figures are correct, and I have no doubt that the advertising agent acts in good faith on what the club officials state, then people other than club members are getting the paper. I note that communications relating to the advertisement department should be addressed to the assistant secretary. This is a Gazette notice. As this gentleman, Mr. Ewart, is brother of Mr. Shipton, the secretary, inquirers will have every opportunity of getting at the facts. In this connection I notice that Cycling has increased in circulation from just under 49,000 on April 10 to just under 54,000 on June 5. Mr. Kendall Burnett will no doubt be surprised to hear that in spite of its increased circulation the advertisements are not a loss to the paper. Strangely enough the proprietors regard this fact as a sign of success.

There has been so much rain and cold that I may be forgiven for referring to football. Mr. Clegg's return to the Football Association has meant the suppression of the amateur. Councillors make stump orations at dinners revealing all the pains and penalties that will ensue if the amateurs do not cave in. I regret the split. But if I were an amateur I would not stand being bullied in this way. If there is an atom of sport in amateurs, footballers of all sorts and conditions will band themselves together against the bullying braggarts of the Football Association.

The Southern League is a pure misnomer now that Bradford has been included. Unless a proper policy of promotion is adopted, it will soon be a third division of the League, and the lowest at that.

The Ladies' Lawn Tennis Championship should be exciting. Things that are equal to the same thing are equal to one another. Ladies who have beaten each other are neither greater nor less than each other, and this is the position of Mrs. Sterry, Mrs. Lambert Chambers, and Miss Sutton.

Cricket matches have been mostly drawn, and Oxford say they are going to beat Cambridge. It is no use getting a team out for twelve runs, as Dennett did Northampton for Gloucester, if it rains afterwards.

With reference to Cambridge rowing, I have received a long letter from Mr. Fairbairn, deprecating any notion of a "Fairbairn style," which I will deal with next week.

MOTORS AND MOTORING.

THE future of the Tourist Trophy race continues to be the theme of numerous suggestions and speculations. Every one has his own pet scheme for revising the rules and attracting greater support, and many interesting suggestions have been made, including one by the Scottish motoring paper, the Motor World, to the effect that in future years the Scottish reliability trials and the Tourist Trophy races should be run as combined events. In this way, it is argued, a splendid test would be ensured. The Scottish trial would afford a guarantee of reliability, while the Isle of Man race would supply evidence as to speed, and the car which came through both with honours would have proved its claims at all points. At the same time, the arrangement would simplify automatically the conditions of both contests, since all cars hoping to succeed in each would necessarily have to qualify both from the speed and the touring point of view; a car built purely for speed or purely for reliability would be equally useless. The suggestion is ingenious, and there is not a little to be said for it, though I am afraid it is hardly likely to be adopted.

Another suggestion is that of Mr. Claud Johnson, who, while deprecating the abolition of the fuel limit principle, thinks that its application should be modified in the light of recent experience. As he points out, it is beyond dispute that a car which has averaged thirty-five miles an hour and runs out of fuel within a couple of miles of the winning-post, has done a far better performance than a car which arrives at the winning-post having made an average of only twenty-five miles an hour, and the problem is to devise some method by which proper value should be given to speed and by which a car failing to do decently in this respect would be disqualified. He suggests, therefore, the adoption of the principle of a minimum speed, to be fixed by the performance of cars during the earlier laps of the course, and that the car which, while maintaining that average, covers the greatest distance, should be the winner. This, again, is not at all a bad idea, though I doubt if any of the great foreign firms whose co-operation Mr. Johnson desiderates would be attracted by a race in far-away Manxland on these lines.

Meanwhile, with the opening of the Brooklands motor track, which was inaugurated by a public lunch on Monday, it is possible that the desirability of abandoning motor racing of any sort on the public roads will be more and more recognised, and that the Tourist Trophy problem may, therefore, solve itself in a very simple manner. Races of this sort are always difficult to arrange; they involve great risks to life and limb, to say nothing of the necessity of passing special Acts of Parliament, and generally it is doubtful if they are not more bother than they are worth. At Weybridge, on the other hand, there is now in being what has never existed before—to wit, a track perfectly adapted in every respect to the requirements of motor racing, and that fact may well sound the knell of racing on the public roads. In time, no doubt, other tracks of the same sort will be constructed, and then the justification for employing public roads for the purpose, either at home or abroad, will be still further diminished. After all, though horses use the roads in the ordinary way, they do not race on them, but on courses specially constructed for the purpose, and it will be the same probably with motor-cars in due season. The roads have been used hitherto because no other course has been available. It may be said, no doubt, that track racing can never afford so severe a test as road racing, but this is only true in a limited sense. On track, as on road, the conditions are the same for all, and the best car will win in either event. There should be no particular difficulty either in treating a track so as to reproduce the worst road conditions if so desired.

Motorists buying cars through agents should be careful to make sure of the integrity of the firm so dealt with. This is the moral of the letter of a correspondent who was recently badly bitten by neglecting this precaution. He ordered a car of a certain make through its advertised London agents, paid the deposits, and eventually the full amount; and then experienced the utmost difficulty in obtaining delivery of the car itself—being advised eventually by his solicitors to accept one minus tyres and other important details on the principle that half a loaf is better than no bread. The point of interest to the public is to know where the responsibility of the principal ends and that of the agent begins. If a firm allows another to advertise itself as its accredited agents (as happened in this case) do they thereby make themselves responsible for their agent's good faith? Apparently not, in the legal sense, though the moral responsibility is pretty clear. Buyers would do well, therefore, to bear this in mind when making deposits to dealers of whom they know nothing on the mere fact of their calling themselves agents for this or that firm of makers.

That is an interesting suggestion which has recently been made by Lord Montagu to the effect that the railway companies should lay down motor tracks by the side of their existing lines and thus add materially to their revenues at a comparatively small outlay. A charge of, say, a penny or twopence a mile per car, Lord Montagu suggests, would bring in some thousands a year, and there would be no current expenses of a serious nature. In many cases, says Lord Montagu, it would not even be necessary to acquire additional land for the purpose. "To give an instance of this, it would be possible for the North-Western to have an up and down track alongside the main line the whole way from, say, Willesden to Bletchley at comparatively little cost, and, if built of some dustless material, such a track would be greatly used by the automobilist who was a traveller and not a tourist. The Brighton company might in the same way build a track alongside their line from London to Brighton." The notion is interesting, but one practical difficulty suggests itself. What about tunnels? And also bridges?

Mortlocks. — Specialists in Luncheon, Dinner, Dessert, Breakfast, and Tea Services. Old English and French Patterns and Models. Specimens sent on Approval. Carriage paid.—Oxford St., and Orchard-st., London, W.

Thomas Goode & Co.—China, glass, pottery, fireproof ware. Sole agents in the United Kingdom for the famous "Bi Métal" (copper lined with pure sheet silver) Cooking Utensils. Illustrated catalogues free.—South Audley-street, London.

Motorists have a new grievance. They complain that they are not being sufficiently heavily fined. The reference is, of course, to cases in which the artful magistrate imposes a fine of 20s., and declines to increase it to a guinea in order to prevent the offender from appealing. Though the question has recently cropped up again, the grievance is an old one which was formally laid before the Royal Commission on Motor Cars by the Motor Union. As a result, the Commissioners recommended in their report that there should be a right of appeal whenever the conviction has been endorsed on the licence irrespective of the amount of the fine, and having in view the notorious prejudice of the magistrates, and the large element of doubt often surrounding this class of case, the suggestion seems only reasonable.

Of the making of new motor tyres, tubes, etc., there is seemingly no end, many of them embodying ideas of the greatest ingenuity. One such seems to be a new American inner tube of which particulars have recently been published. In this case an ordinary inner tube has throughout its length a central rib of rubber, whereby the tube is divided into two separate compartments. The outer one of these, or the one that forms the tread of the tire, is filled with felt, while the inner one is pumped with air in the ordinary way. Thus, it is claimed, the benefits of a pneumatic and a non-punctur-able solid tyre are combined. On paper the thing seems feasible enough, and though a tyre of this sort would naturally be somewhat less resilient than the ordinary pneumatic, it might well prove a very excellent substitute. Unfortunately, so many inventions of this kind are brought out which never seem to get beyond the prospectus stage. Another new kind of solid filling has also been brought out lately, called "Pneumastic." This is pumped into an ordinary inner tube in a liquid condition and allowed to set, after the manner of Elastes. Pneumastic differs from Elastes, however, in that the liquefied compound is aerated by a special process as it is introduced into the tyre, with results said to yield certain decided advantages.

Is a motor beginner best advised to start on a small car or a large one? It is an interesting question which has recently been discussed. "Certainly, on a small single-cylinder car," say some. Then, it is argued, he will be beginning at the beginning, and by learning how to get the most out of a single-cylinder will qualify to handle a larger and more flexible engine later. Not so, say others. It takes experience to handle a single-cylinder engine with success. Let the novice, therefore, start straight away on one of more power which does not need the same amount of expert treatment. There is something to be said for both contentions according to the end aimed at. If a thorough knowledge of the subject be desired then there is undoubted advantage in commencing on a small car, which, just because it is less perfect, exacts so much the more from its driver. From the standpoint of mere comfort, on the other hand, a bigger car has the advantage, of course, even if one cannot quite go the length of saying, with one writer on the subject, that "the multi-cylinder car is to the single-cylinder car as a quiet carriage horse is to a buck-jumper."

MAMMON.

Healthier Stock Markets—An International Spring Clean—The Operation Nearing Completion—Support for Home Rails and Gilt-edged Securities—Yankees Disappointing—Revival in Trunks and Foreign Rails—Russian Bonds and Politics.

ALTHOUGH disturbed from time to time by fresh liquidation the Stock Markets last week presented a decidedly healthier appearance than in the few weeks immediately preceding. If buyers were not pressing their attentions it was at least possible to sell stocks with moderate freedom, as a result of the more reassured feeling amongst the jobbers, and this is more than could be said a fortnight ago. It is, perhaps, too much to expect that the dust thrown up by the international spring clean that has been going on lately can settle all at once. Still, we have witnessed a regular turn out of the drawing-room in New York, the smoking-room in London, and the bedrooms in Paris and Brussels, and the whole job ought to be nearing completion. The Settlement on the London Stock Exchange concluded last Thursday served to remove a good many groundless fears of financial difficulties. There were two failures it is true, but in both cases the liabilities were trifling. At times markets were rather seriously perturbed by foreign sales, more particularly of Rio Tinto copper shares, Diamond descriptions, and Egyptian banks. These arose from the difficulties encountered by speculators in Paris and Alexandria, which, it was understood, involved several Stock Exchange firms here, though it is to be hoped not to the extent of causing serious embarrassment.

A welcome feature last week was the greater backbone shown by gilt-edged securities and Home Rails. There appeared to be some quiet support of an influential character for the best Railway stocks, North-Westerns being particularly favoured, and the feeling seemed to spread that stocks had reached a level at which the investor might safely come in and buy. So far as actual movements in prices went, the lead was taken by the Underground stocks, which benefited from the decision to raise fares. There is no doubt about the need for an alteration in the charges for passenger traffic in the metropolis, that is, unless the various concerns engaged in the business see their way to turning philanthropists, and the only pity is that a more reasonable scale of charges could not have been agreed upon before. Among Trustee stocks some attention has been paid to Colonial Inscribed descriptions, the demand doubtless being connected with the reinvestment of moneys accruing through the redemption of short-dated Indian and Colonial securities—some £10,000,000 of which mature within the next few weeks. The inquiry has found the jobbers poorly supplied with stock, and hence a fairly general rally in quotations.

American Rails have not lived up to the expectations formed a week ago. This market is still weighed down by a crop of adverse factors, the latest being the uncertainty over the monetary situation created by the continuance of gold shipments to France. Money is now in increased demand at all the leading monetary centres, on account of the approaching end of the half-year. So far as London is concerned the discount rate has worked up to a fraction below 4 per cent., a little uneasiness being created by the recent withdrawal of sovereigns from the Bank to Egypt—an outcome probably of the financial trouble alluded to above. Lombard Street has now practically abandoned hope of a lower Bank Rate this year. The last return of the Threadneedle-street establishment was hardly a strong one. A reserve of £24,618,000 is low for mid-June, for this is the period of the year when the Bank is usually at its strongest. Money has now commenced to flow out to the provinces

William Wallace & Co., Ltd., Economical and Artistic Furniture for the Houses of Business Men of Refined Tastes. Catalogues Post Free.—Only address, 151-155, Curtain Road, London, E.C.

"Finance."—A concise weekly record of markets and prices, published by the Central Stock Exchange, Ltd. (Established 1893), 66, Cannon-street, London, E.C. Post free for six months to applicants mentioning this paper.

as usual at the end of the half-year, and much of the cash sent out will stay away in connection, first with holiday, and later with harvest requirements. After that will begin the usual late autumn drain abroad. Of course, it does not always do to argue from precedent, and the size of the weekly gold imports from the Cape will have an important bearing upon the situation in the next few months. But with trade still active the world over, and the Bank of England, as I have already said, in a comparatively weak state, it will be as well in considering the monetary position to err on the safe side.

The last few days have witnessed a fair revival in Colonial and Foreign Railway stocks. Grand Trunks have recovered from the effects of the recent Glasgow liquidation, and the same may be said about the stocks of the old Mexican Railway, while Argentine Rails have come in for attention on the score of their attractive yields and continued bright prospects. In the International group, the renewed uncertainty surrounding Russian politics has led to a fair amount of selling of Russian bonds, but other leading Government securities kept steady. Japanese bonds at one time eased off, on the exaggerated importance attached to the political question between Japan and the United States, but the bonds have since hardened up again. Among South Americans the only unfavourable feature was a decline in Brazilian bonds, which reflected the reported breakdown (since officially denied) of the coffee valorisation scheme attempted by the State Governments.

RALLY IN HOME RAILS—GOOD SUPPORT FOR THE HEAVY STOCKS—UNDERGROUND ISSUES AND THE DECISION TO RAISE FARES.

In the Home Railway market last week there was evidence that support was being given by influential interests, more particularly to the Heavy stocks, and the idea appeared to gain ground that stocks had now reached a level at which it was "safe to buy." By this, of course, was not meant that a further fall was impossible, but that values had got to such a level that they could hardly go much lower, and held out every prospect of standing distinctly higher when the present wave of depression affecting markets generally had passed away. Despite the financial disturbances that occurred at the end of the week, the market held its ground very well, as the following table shows:—

Home Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest.	June 8, 1907.	June 15, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Caledonian 3 p.c. Pref.	80	72¾	70¾	70½	– ¼
Do. Def.	42½	28⅜	26¼	26⅝	+ ⅜
Central London	96½	82½	71	74	+3
City and S. London	47½	39	41	43	+2
Furness	60⅜	61⅜	60½	60½	—
Glasgow and South-Western Def.	42⅜	37¼	31½	32	+ ½
Great Central 1894 Pref.	81½	69	59	59	—
Do. "B"	40⅝	32½	25	26½	+1½
Do. "A"	19½	15½	13⅜	13¾	+ ⅜
Great Eastern	90⅝	79½	70¾	71½	+ ¾
Great Northern Pref.	105	93⅞	96	96	—
Do. Def.	48¾	39½	38¼	38¾	+ ½
Great Western	144	122⅜	122½	122½	—
Hull and Barnsley	50	42½	46¾	48	+1¼
Lancashire and Yorkshire	110½	100	100	100	—
London and Brighton "A"	130⅜	111½	83½	83½	—
London, Chatham, and Dover	16¾	13	12⅜	12½	+ ⅛
Do. 4½ p.c. Arbitration Pref.	99½	85	75	76	+1
Do. do. 2nd Pref.	64½	48	41½	43	+1½
London and North-Western	163½	147½	141¾	142¼	+ ¼
London and South-Western Def.	57½	44⅛	45½	46	+ ½
Metropolitan Consolidated	89½	59	38	42	+4
Metropolitan District	37½	18¾	10	11½	+1½
Midland 2½ p.c. Pref.	70⅝	64	64½	65	+ ½
Do. Def.	74½	62½	60½	60¾	+ ¼
North British 3 p.c. Pref.	78¾	72⅜	68¼	68¼	—
Do. Def.	47½	38⅞	32½	32⅜	+ ⅛
North-Eastern Consolidated	147½	134⅜	137	136¾	– ¼
North Staffordshire	105⅝	96¾	95	96	+1
South-Eastern "A"	55⅛	44⅛	34⅞	34	– ⅞

So far as movements go, the most noteworthy were scored by the Underground stocks. The rise here is, of course, due to the decision to raise fares, as from July 1. It was understood that an agreement had practically been arrived at between the Central London, Metropolitan, and District Companies with a view to increasing the longer distance fares, which have been reduced to absurdly low levels in the majority of cases. That the companies would sooner or later have to revise their scale of fares has been obvious for some time. Since the opening of the Central London in 1900, the competition for passenger traffic has been growing fiercer every year. New tubes have been constructed, and the old "sewers" electrified, while the civil war waged between these various railways has been turned into a three-cornered contest by the advent of the motor-omnibus, and the extension of electric tramways. The net outcome of all this rate cutting has been good for the travelling public, but ruinous for the various companies engaged.

The latter fact is the best augury for success in the efforts now being made to obtain harmony amongst all the concerns engaged in the carrying business in the metropolis to readjust their tariffs. It does not appear that anything tangible has yet been arranged on the part of the omnibus and tramway companies, but there is little doubt that they will not be slow to follow the lead of the railways. The two largest 'bus companies have had to acknowledge that traffic obtained on the existing terms does not pay, and at the last meeting of the Road Car Company the chairman said:—"The time has now arrived when all those engaged in the gigantic carrying trade of London should mutually agree to charge fares which, while even liberal to the travelling public, would enable the business to be conducted with a reasonable margin of profit." That concerted action is now being taken towards establishing the "reasonable margin of profit" will be welcome news to all the shareholders concerned; whether it justifies higher prices for the stocks is another matter. The Metropolitan, which used to be a steady-going investment stock, and has paid 3¾ per cent., last year had to reduce its distribution to a beggarly 1 per cent. In respect of the current year, traffics show a reduction for twenty-three weeks of £26,400, equivalent to nearly ½ per cent. actual on the ordinary stock, so that the dividend on "Mets." is getting perilously near the vanishing point. It is true that gross receipts are not now showing the big decreases reported during the first three months—when the comparison was made against a period prior to the diversion of Great Central traffic—and also that the company has yet to demonstrate what economies can be effected now that dual traction has been abolished; but making all allowances the position is bad enough, and an increase in fares should be regarded, for the present, at any rate, as helping towards justifying the present price rather than as constituting a reason for any immediate rise.

As far as the District is concerned, the position from the shareholders' point of view is well-nigh hopeless. The District is practically in a state of bankruptcy, the line having failed for several half-years to meet its fixed charges out of current earnings, whilst it has no reserves to fall back upon. As regards the Central London, the present situation is not altogether a happy one, but an alteration in the fares might speedily put a better complexion upon the state of affairs. Since the company commenced business it has maintained a dividend of 4 per cent. with as much uniformity as its twopenny fare. Last year, however, the payment of the usual rate cost the company a little effort, and in respect of the current year the traffic returns for twenty-three weeks show a reduction of £14,500. This is equivalent to about ½ per cent. (actual) on the ordinary stock, and if nothing be done to arrest the fall in receipts there would be a fair possibility of the ordinary dividend being reduced to 3 per cent. in respect of the current year—which would involve the deferred dividend being cut in half, namely, from 4 to 2 per cent. Fortunately, there is reason to hope that by the revision of fares the company will arrest the decline in its earnings and perhaps turn the scale the other way. Moreover, the Central London has a valuable asset in its rents derived from offices over stations, which are a growing item of revenue. Taking all the circumstances into account, the drop in Central London ordinary seems to have gone far enough, and on any indication of traffics taking a turn in the right direction the stock would probably be quick to respond.

HOW TO OPERATE IN STOCKS SUCCESSFULLY.—See HALFORD'S ADVISER (post free).—PALMERSTON HOUSE, LONDON, E.C. ESTABLISHED 1869. TELEGRAMS: "MONITOR, LONDON."

SET BACK IN AMERICAN RAILS—REVIVAL OF GOLD EXPORTS TO PARIS—THE UNHAPPY EXPERIENCES OF BOND SYNDICATES—MR. JAMES HILL ON THE GENERAL SITUATION—THE TWO CENTS A MILE PASSENGER LIMIT—NEW YORK STATE VETOES THE PROPOSED MEASURE.

Conditions in the American Railroad market last week were a complete reversal of the week preceding. In the earlier period it looked as if the market was going to make a determined effort at revival, and with the knowledge that there was a fairly large short interest uncovered, and that prices had already had a very severe drop from the levels of a few months ago, many people were disposed to look for the "bulls" to achieve a measure of success, if only temporary. These hopes, however, have failed to materialise, and on balance, as the following table shows, prices have experienced a general set back:—

Americans.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	June 8, 1907.	June 15, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Atchison	114⅛	87	90⅞	89⅞	−1⅛
Do. 5 per Cent. Pref.	109½	101	96½	96	− ½
Baltimore and Ohio	129½	109⅝	96⅞	95½	−1½
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	101½	93½	91	89	−2
Chesapeake and Ohio	68⅝	54	36½	34½	−2½
Chicago, Milwaukee	204½	152½	130½	129	−1½
Denver and Rio Grande	52½	38⅜	26	25½	− ½
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	93⅜	85⅜	73	73½	+ ½
Erie	52½	40	22⅛	22⅝	+ ½
Do. 4 p.c. First Pref.	85½	77	58	58	—
Do. 4 p.c. Second Pref.	77	65⅜	37	38	+1
Illinois Central	188⅝	171	141	140	−1
Louisville	160⅞	148⅜	115½	114	−1½
Missouri, Kansas	45⅜	31⅞	33⅜	32⅜	−1
New York Central	159½	130⅜	114	115	+1
N. Y. Ontario and Western	57⅛	45½	36½	35½	− ½
Norfolk and Western	100⅛	87½	76	75½	− ½
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	96½	91½	88	88	—
Northern Pacific	235	190½	128	126½	−1½
Pennsylvania (50)	75⅜	63⅜	62	61½	− ⅜
Reading ($50)	85⅜	59⅞	53½	51	−2½
Southern	43⅜	33·	19½	18⅝	− ⅜
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	105	97	61	61½	+ ½
Southern Pacific	99⅝	64⅜	79	75½	−3⅜
Union Pacific	203	144⅝	138½	135⅛	−3⅜
U.S. Steel	52⅛	33⅞	34½	33⅛	−1⅜
Do. 7 p.c. Pref.	117	102⅜	100½	100	− ½

The explanation of the fresh decline may be put down to the continued abstention of the public from the market, without whose support the efforts of professionals to manipulate prices higher must end in failure. The Yankee market, thanks to the series of shocks administered one after another since last autumn—and to the doubts that exist regarding the general dividend outlook for the railroads, consequent upon very high expenses, and the indications of a poor harvest and a set back in trade, is still completely shunned by the investing public in America. Were the magnates in New York able to give sufficient support to keep values running on the up-grade for a month or two, they would doubtless stand a fair chance of re-attracting the outside buyer. But the finance houses in New York are still crippled by the effects of the recent rich man's panic, and, moreover, they are suffering from a rather bad fit of indigestion, in consequence of the prodigality with which new railroad scrip has during the last few months been created. The "bears," therefore, still seem to hold the field, and demonstrations made with the object of driving them to cover have only a temporary effect.

In support of my remark about financial indigestion, the following paragraph, taken from the New York Herald, is worth noting:—

> As a result of the unsatisfactory winding up of numerous bond syndicates there has been a long series of these. For instance, during the week [with which my contemporary is dealing] was wound up the $10,000,000 Atlanta, Knoxville and Nashville 4 per cent. divisional bond syndicate of the Louisville and Nashville system. The bonds were underwritten at 98½ and interest only about a year ago. They sold during the week at 88½ flat. A small Norfolk and Western 4 per cent. divisional bond syndicate was also wound up during the week. The bonds were underwritten at 96, and participants were seeking bids at 88 on Friday, but without success. Another Norfolk and Western syndicate—that for $10,000,000 4 per cent. convertible bonds, underwritten at 97½ has been extended for six months, and participation was offered in this at 90 this week, without takers. Lake Shore Four per Cent. Debenture Bonds, underwritten at 98½, are selling round 90, Southern Railway short-term notes were sold during the week on a nine per cent. interest basis, and Erie short-term notes are selling on an eight per cent. interest basis. A syndicate, not yet dissolved, which appears in a highly unfortunate position is one formed to underwrite $15,000,000 Southern Railway development and general mortgage four per cents. The bonds were underwritten at 94, less 2 per cent. A few were sold, and some of these have been re-offered in the market at 82, without takers.

The position of very high grade bonds is also undesirable. New York City Four per Cents of 1956, for instance, are still quoted around par. Immense quantities of securities are in consequence in bankers' and syndicate hands, which, according to the contemporary just referred to, are practically unsaleable at anything like their original cost. This fact and the actual losses through the winding up of the syndicates is probably the chief reason that Wall-street rumours, whenever spasms come, centre again and again upon bond houses.

So far as the immediate future of money is concerned Wall-street is not altogether easy in mind. When Mr. Secretary Cortelyou announced that $30,000,000 public funds on deposit with the banks would be called in for the purpose of redeeming United States 4 per cent. bonds, it was argued that the consequent hardening of loan rates would put a stop for the time being to further gold exports. Immediately afterwards, however, came the report that $2,000,000 more gold had been engaged for shipment from New York to Paris, and this news, following upon the withdrawal since May 27 of over $10,000,000 for the same destination, is leading operators to wonder when the drain is going to stop. Another matter that caused much comment last week was the interview upon the general situation given out by Mr. James J. Hill. Mr. Hill has come to the conclusion that the Government will ultimately be obliged not only to cease its antagonism towards the railroads, but to come to their assistance. Ultimately, he says, the Government will be forced to lend its credit in order to finance the needs of the railroads. Mr. Hill explains his assertion thus: "The public in exasperation will demand that the railroads lay additional rails and add to the number of cars running. The railroad companies will answer that they cannot accede to those demands because their credit has been ruined. The Government would then be obliged to step in and lend its credit in order to supply the deficiency. Such a situation would lead to Government ownership of the railroads, which would be the end of the Republican Government." Mr. Hill in this instance may be assuming too much, but his remarks appear to have made some impression on the market. He reiterates his view that the cause of the trouble is that the business of the country has outgrown the capacity of the railroads, and says the railroads are not in a position to catch up. He reminds the market of the prediction he made in January about the railroads requiring $1,100,000,000 annually for the next five years in order to put the lines into shape to move the traffic offered them, and adds that while during the last seven months the roads have raised about $800,000,000, this has not gone to increase facilities. "Most of it went to pay old bills." Against all the adverse factors besetting the market there was one point which could be put to the credit of the "bulls." Mr. Hughes, the Governor of New York State, gave his veto to the Bill passed by the State Legislative houses to reduce the maximum railroad passenger rate to two cents a mile. This has already encouraged railroads in other States to fight, and it is announced that several Western roads will seek injunctions in the Courts against the two cent maximum fare law just put into force within their territories.

RECOVERY IN TRUNKS—GOOD DEMAND FOR THE THIRD PREFERENCE—GENERAL REVIVAL IN MEXICAN RAILS—THE COMING AMALGAMATION OF THE NATIONAL AND CENTRAL ROADS—THE TERMS DISCUSSED—CORDOBA AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY—EXPECTED ABSORPTION.

Among Canadian Rails there was a fair amount of support last week for Grand Trunks, which, as I expected, have enjoyed a rebound from the depressed prices established by the recent forced selling from Glasgow. The public is displaying a great partiality for the Third Preference, and thereby, in my opinion, it shows good sense. This stock ought to easily earn its full 4 per cent. in respect of the current year, and assuming this be so a buyer at the present price of around 70 is securing a return of 5¾ per cent. upon his money without counting prospects of capital appreciation. Canadian Pacifics have fluctuated within comparatively narrow limits, the "bulls" for the time being showing a disposition to lie low, and on balance the shares show little change. The recent big rise in railway operating expenses in Canada is strikingly exemplified by the April revenue statement of the Canadian Northern. Gross receipts showed a modest increase of $25,100, while expenses rose no less than $116,100, leaving the net earnings $91,000 down. For the ten months the company has managed to put up a gross gain of $1,318,500, which is equal to a rate of over 30 per cent., but the working expenses rose by $1,377,000, which is at the rate of 48 per cent., and the net earnings for the period ($1,427,000) are $58,800 below those for the corresponding ten months.

Among Foreign Rails a distinct revival has occurred in all Mexican Railway stocks. This is a welcome development, for there is no doubt that the various Mexican Railways will well repay attention from the speculative investor. Prices have fallen considerably from the highest levels touched this year, though the decline has not been due to any change in the fortunes of the railways, which continue very bright. There seems still good scope for a levelling up of the First Preference stock of the Mexican Railway, seeing that the yield to a present purchaser is £5 18s. per cent. The Six per Cent. Second Preference, too, offers scope for a fair advance, for only about £20,000 additional net revenue is required to pay the full interest this year, and from January 1 to June 7 the company has piled up an increase in gross traffic of $443,000. The Mexican Southern is another line that is doing very well. This company, as I showed when dealing with the report a few weeks ago, raised its dividend for 1906 from 2½ to 3 per cent., in spite of the loss of interest on Mexican Government subsidy bonds repaid. At the present price the yield works out at £5 13s.; this is by no means bad in itself, but in addition it may be pointed out that the company for twenty-three weeks has a gross increase of $36,000—equivalent to $81,000 for the fifty-two weeks—and it only requires £5,000 to pay another ½ per cent.

The securities of the Mexican Central and National of Mexico have attracted a little interest on renewed talk about the forthcoming amalgamation of those lines by the Government—which, of course, already controls the latter road. The scheme for the fusion of these lines was understood to have been practically cut and dried some months ago, and so far as can be ascertained, it has only been due to the depressed condition of the stock markets that the consummation of the financial plan has been delayed. The terms have already been outlined, but it will be of interest to recapitulate them, particularly in view of the suggestion they make regarding the room there is for levelling up the quotations of existing Central and National issues. Whether any modification of the original terms has since been decided upon I cannot say, though there is no ground for expecting an alteration. So far as the Mexican Central is concerned, the old Four per Cent. Consolidated bonds were to be exchanged for the securities of the new amalgamated concern, the United National Railroads of Mexico, as follows: 60 per cent. of 4½ per cent. bonds, and 32½ per cent. of 4 per cent. bonds (both having a Government guarantee), and 7½ per cent. of Common stock. Now the market has already worked out its estimate of the value of the old bonds under the plan, and it arrived at a figure of about 98. Its calculation may be set out as follows:—

60	p.c. of 4½ p.c. bonds taken at	105	= 63
32½	p.c. of 4 p.c. bonds taken at	90	= 29¼
7½	p.c. of Common Stock taken at	25	= 1⅞
100		Total value	94⅛

The estimate of 105 for the 4½ per cent. bonds is a reasonable one, and happens to be the quotation for the existing Four and a Half per Cent. Prior Lien bonds of the National Road. In taking 90 as the value of the new four per cent. bonds, the market had something definite to go upon in the fact that the 4 per cent. sterling bonds of the Mexican Government stand in the market at about 94½. The new railway bonds, as I have already said, will be a direct obligation of the Government, and although they would doubtless rank after the existing four per cent. Government loan, the allowance of four and a half points for this difference seems sufficient. The calculation of the Common stock at 25 is more a matter for individual opinion, though this is a minor consideration in its relation to the total value of the old Fours in their expected new form.

If we agree that 94 is not an extravagant figure to place upon the scrip to be exchanged for existing Fours, it follows that the latter, quoted at 83, stand about 11 points too low. Turning to the quotations of the 4 per cent "A" and "B" debentures issued by the Mexican Central Securities Company, the anomaly seems more striking still. These debentures are equivalent to the splitting of a Mexican Central 4 per cent. bond, the "A" series ranking as a first charge upon the interest derived from the railway bonds and the "B" as a second charge. The current quotations are approximately 90 per cent. for the "A" series and 77 for the "B." Why the "B" should stand at their present level, in view of the likelihood of their being exchanged for securities estimated to be worth 94, is not easy to understand, and, providing there be no hitch in the Government's scheme, they look one of the best bargains the market has to offer. Turning to the amalgamation plan as it is believed to affect the stocks of the Mexican National, the idea is, or at any rate was, to exchange the Four per Cent. First Preference stock dollar for dollar for a new Four per Cent. First Preference of the united undertaking, guaranteed a minimum dividend of 2 per cent. for three years and $10 in cash. This would mean that the current price of 50 is written down to 40, upon which basis a 2 per cent. dividend would mean a yield of 5 per cent. Such conditions make the stock look distinctly attractive, especially as it is at the present time earning well above the guaranteed rate, and, making allowance for the steady growth in the trade of Mexico and the advantages that amalgamation under Government auspices is likely to bring, should before long get the full rate to which it is entitled. National Second Preference was to receive 110 per cent. in new Second Preference stock. At present the Seconds are not in receipt of a dividend, and therefore a purchase of the stock is a matter for the speculator rather than the investor. However, for a long shot there is many a more unlikely selection than Mexican National Seconds at 21.

In the Argentine Railway group I note with interest that Great Western ordinary, which I recommended a week ago as being worth a higher price under the terms of the working agreement made with the B.A. and Pacific, have risen 2½ on the week; to my mind the stock is still a bargain. The sensation of the week in this group was a rise of 4 points to 34 in the debentures of the Cordoba and North-Western Railway. These bonds are at present getting nothing, but from time to time during the last year or two they have come into prominence on absorption rumours. The line from a strategic point of view is of considerable value, as it forms a link between the city of Cordoba and the mining district of Famatima, which is believed to possess great unexploited mineral wealth. There is little doubt that before long the line will be taken over by one of the leading railway systems, probably the Buenos Ayres and Rosario, when most likely a guarantee will be offered to Cordoba debenture holders. Indeed, judging from the fact that the company requires the names and addresses of the debenture holders in order that a "circular now being prepared, and containing information of interest, may, when ready, be sent them," it would seem that matters in the direction

(Continued on page 1537.)

HOME RAILS.—Options granted in all Home Railway securities at low rates for one, two, and three months. Treatise on Options and list of rates free on mentioning this paper to the Secretary, LONDON AND PARIS EXCHANGE, LTD., Bankers, Basildon House, Moorgate-street, London, E.C.

· TRUTH ·

ART AND PHOTOGRAPHY SUPPLEMENT.

No. 1,590. WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19, 1907.

THE OFFICIAL

PAGEANT POSTCARDS

of

OXFORD AND ST. ALBANS

are issued under the authority of the Pageant Committees by RAPHAEL TUCK & SONS, Ltd., after the Original Pictures by well-known Artists.

Each Pageant is complete in 18 Postcards,

"REAL PHOTOGRAPH" Edition.	Six Cards in Packet.	1/=	per pkt.
"OILETTE" CONNOISSEUR Edition.	Gilt Edged ,,	1/=	,,
"OILETTE" Popular Edition.	,,	6d.	,,

TUCK'S POSTCARDS

are supplied by all leading Dealers throughout the World.

List of 50,000 TUCK'S POSTCARDS and TUCK'S POSTCARD EXCHANGE REGISTER. Free on Application to RAPHAEL TUCK & SONS, LTD.

Publishers to Their Majesties the King and Queen,

Raphael House, City, London, E.C.

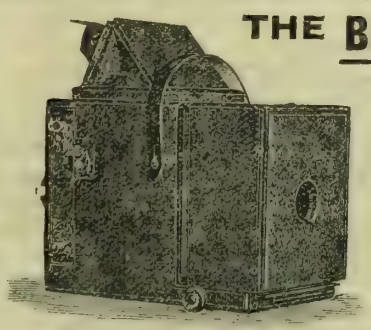
IT IS WORTH SEEING—

and you need only go to the cost of a postcard. For this insignificant outlay you will receive a complete set of designs of LI-NOLA, together with a sample piece of the actual material to show its thickness and goodness. This evidence in front of you will enable you to examine the justness of our claim that LI-NOLA is the most beautiful low-cost floor-covering made.

FREE sample pieces, together with fine book of coloured designs, sent by post. We allow a discount of 2s. in the £ for cash down. We pay carriage charges.

CATESBY & SONS, Desk 12,
"Linoland," Tottenham Court-road, London, W.

THE BIRDLAND CAMERA.



"Thoroughly practical, eminently suitable for the class of work for which it is intended, as well as all similar branches of Photography, where quick, silent, rapid exposures are essential."—Vide THE AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHER.

At the recent Reflex Camera Exhibition, 30% of the Exhibitors used THE BIRDLAND CAMERA.

☞ THE BIRDLAND BOOKLET, illustrated with Specimens of Work done with the Camera, post free of the SOLE MAKERS—

SANDERS & CROWHURST,

71, Shaftesbury Avenue, LONDON, W.; and at 55, Western Road, Hove, Brighton.

By Appointment to their Majesties the King and Queen.

Winsor & Newton, Ltd.

Manufacturers of the Choicest Colours and Materials for Artists.

TO BE OBTAINED FROM THE PRINCIPAL DEALERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

Offices:* RATHBONE PLACE, LONDON, W.

New York Branch: 298, Broadway.

BECHSTEIN HALL.
THURSDAY NEXT, at 8.15.
IRENE SCHARRER.—CHOPIN RECITAL.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall; and usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.

QUEEN'S HALL.
TILLY KOENEN.—ORCHESTRAL CONCERT.
TUESDAY NEXT, JUNE 25, at 8.30.
Assisted by the LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Conductor—Herr MAX FIEDLER.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., 1s., at Chappell's Box-office, Queen's Hall; and usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.

ÆOLIAN HALL.
MONDAY EVENING NEXT, at 8, Miss HELEN FORSYTH and Mdlle.
ADELE CLEMENT
(First Prize Paris Conservatoire)
VOCAL and 'CELLO RECITAL.
At the Piano—Mme. COEN VAN LIER and Mr. ALBERT HENNING.
Erard Pianoforte. Tickets, 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall, usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.

25, PARK LANE
(By kind permission of Lady Sassoon).
Mr. DANIEL MAYER begs to present
Mons.
REYNALDO HAHN
IN TWO "CONFERENCES."
The first will be given on
TUESDAY NEXT, JUNE 25, at 3.30.
Subject—L'ÉVOCATION PAR LA MUSIQUE.
With the kind assistance of Mons. LEON RENNAY.
Tickets, 21s. and 10s. 6d. each, from Mr. DANIEL MAYER, Chatham House, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

BECHSTEIN HALL.
THURSDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 27, at 3.15.
VOCAL and HARP RECITAL
By Miss
AMY EVANS
And Miss
GWENDOLEN MASON.
Kindly assisted by BEN DAVIES.
At the Piano, Mr. HUBERT BATH.
Bechstein Piano and Erard Gothic Harp.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall and usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 29, at 2.45,
Madame
CLARA BUTT
And Mr.
KENNERLEY RUMFORD
Will give a
GRAND CONCERT "TO SAY GOOD-BYE"
Previous to their departure for Australia.
Their last public appearance in ENGLAND for a year.
Further particulars will be duly announced.
Boxes, £4 4s., £3 3s., and £1 11s. 6d. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 5s., 3s., 2s. 6d., and (at doors only), 1s., at Royal Albert Hall; usual Agents; and IBBS & TILLETT, 19, Hanover square, W. Tele. 3129 Mayfair.

ÆOLIAN HALL.
MANIA SEGUEL.—PIANOFORTE RECITAL.
FRIDAY AFTERNOON NEXT, at 3.15.
At which the wonderful Child Harpist,
LILI LASKINE,
Will make her first London appearance.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall, and usual Agents',
IBBS & TILLETT, 19, Hanover-square, W.

STEINWAY HALL.—Mr.
LUDOVIC BREITNER.
SONATA RECITAL.
FRIDAY AFTERNOON next, at 3.15.
Kindly assisted by Mr. HANS NEUMANN.
Tickets, 21s., 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s., at the Hall, usual agents'.
N. VERT, 6, Cork-street, W.

Under the immediate Patronage of the SWEDISH MINISTER, COUNT HERMAN WRANGEL.
N. VERT begs to announce that he has made arrangements for the UPSALA STUDENTS' CHOIR (from Sweden).
Conductor—Dr. J. E. HEDENBLAD, to give CONCERTS at QUEEN'S HALL,
on June 24, 27, and 28.
Tickets 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., 1s., at Chappell's Box-office, Queen's Hall, and usual agents'. N. VERT, 6, Cork-street, W.

BECHSTEIN HALL.
Miss
FRANCES ALDA
and ALEX. Z. BIRNBAUM.
TWO VOCAL and VIOLIN RECITALS,
JUNE 25 and 28, at 3.
Solo Flute—Mons. FLEURY.
At the Piano—M. CHARLIER and Mr. R. HAGEMAN.
Tickets 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall, usual Agents'.
N. VERT, 6, Cork-street, W.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Miss
MONICA DAILEY (Pupil of Leschitizky)
Will make her début on THURSDAY, June 27, at 8.30.
Assisted by the QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA. Conductor—
ALEX. BIRNBAUM (First Appearance in England).
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., 1s., at Chappell's Box-office, Queen's Hall, and usual Agents'. N. VERT, 6, Cork-street, W.

JOACHIM COMMITTEE CONCERTS.
HAYDN-MOZART-BEETHOVEN SERIES.
SIX CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC.
BECHSTEIN HALL, JUNE 21, 24, 26, 29, and JULY 1.
The Committee regret to announce that, owing to illness, DR. JOACHIM is unable to undertake the journey to England. He has, therefore, proposed that his place in the Quartets should be taken by Prof. HALIR, Mr. KLINGLER playing second violin, Prof. WIRTH viola, and Prof. HAUSMANN violoncello. The Committee, in order to prevent further disappointment, have accepted this proposal.
Tickets for single concerts: BECHSTEIN HALL, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., and 5s. QUEEN'S HALL, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., and 1s. Concert-Direction E. L. ROBINSON, 7, Wigmore-street, W.

EXHIBITIONS.

THE NEW ENGLISH ART CLUB
38th EXHIBITION OF MODERN PICTURES.
OPEN DAILY, 10 to 6 (?), at the GALLERIES, in DERING-YARD, 67a, NEW BOND-STREET, W. Admission 1s.

DORÉ'S GREAT MASTERPIECES.—Architectural Drawings by P. FLETCHER-WATSON, R.B.A.; Flower Pictures, etc., by ALICE VAN HEDDEGHEM; Sketches by C. R. ROWBOTHAM; Water-colours by ESDAILE RICHARDSON; "The Liberal Government, 1906," by ARTHUR GARRATT.—35, New Bond-st., W. 10 to 6. 1s.

GRAFTON GALLERIES, Grafton Street, W.
EXHIBITION of Works by Members of the French Society of Painters in Water colours.
Open daily 10 to 6. Admission 1s. including Catalogue.
Organised by EUGENE CREMETTI.

THOMAS McLEAN'S Forty third Annual Exhibition of Pictures of the British and Foreign Schools is now open at T. McLEAN'S GALLERY, 7, Haymarket Admission 1s.

SHEPHERD'S EXHIBITION of Selected Pictures by Early British Masters and Eminent Modern Painters.

Messrs. SHEPHERD BROS. have the honour to invite Art Admirers and Collectors to the above Exhibition, now on view in their Fine Art Gallery.

27, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, LONDON.

THE EARLY HISTORY OF PHOTOGRAPHY.

PHOTOGRAPHY is a subject which needs no apology for its introduction in these days. From being in its earliest stages a plaything of experimenters, a kind of scientific toy, it has become a well-nigh universal pursuit. Developments of recent years have so far simplified its working and lessened the attendant expense as to bring it within the reach of all classes, until it might be said, as of some other things, that it finds a place in every household. Both from the scientific and the popular point of view, the history of photography, its inception and growth, is one of fascinating interest. It is, in common with all great movements tending to progress, a record of discoveries eagerly seized upon and developed, of difficulties overcome, often not so much by sheer intellectual effort as by the enthusiasm and love of the cause displayed by the workers. It is by no means the result of the labours of one man, or of one nation; many workers have added their quota to its progress, and in many nations—France, Germany, Italy, England—its devotees have been found. Photography as a science is in reality a combination of certain branches of chemistry and optics, and its growth has gone on side by side with the advancement of these two sciences.

Of especial interest to amateur photographers should be the fact that photography in the early days was by no means the outcome of the efforts of professional scientists, but was largely due to the discoveries and work of amateurs, among whom may be classed Niépce and Daguerre, really the pioneers of photography as it is known to-day. When one considers the perfection of modern plates and apparatus, and the facility with which the various processes of photography can be carried on in these days, it is almost astounding to remember that these remarkable developments have taken place within the last thirty years, and that up to that time photography was still in a more or less tentative and experimental stage. It is said, "there is nothing new under the sun," but photography on modern lines may be claimed as an exception to that rule. Notwithstanding the statement that lenses have been found in the remains of ancient civilisations of the East, there certainly appears to be no record of methods of pictorial reproduction comparable with those known to us to-day.

For the earliest mention of the discoveries which have led to results of such magnitude we have to go back nearly four hundred years, and the credit of that step is given to one of the old alchemists, Fabricius by name. In the mines of Freiberg there is found a substance known as luna cornea, or horn silver. This ore of silver, in reality silver chloride, while colourless in its native state, becomes darkened in a short time when exposed to the action of light. Fabricius seems to have been the first to draw attention to this fact, which attracted some comment at the time. No definite results accrued, however, and it was not until nearly two hundred years later, in 1727, that Schultze, of Hallé, a German physician, followed up the discovery of Fabricius by a series of experiments on the darkening action of light upon silver salts, notably, the chloride and nitrate. Between 1727 and 1802 further experiments in the same direction were made by Scheele, Wollaston, and others, but it is not until the latter year that in the Journal of the Royal Institution we find a record of what may be considered the first authentic photograph. This was the achievement of Wedgwood and Davy, working in conjunction, who placed opaque bodies, such as ferns and leaves of plants upon paper impregnated with nitrate of silver. The action of light on this salt blackened the parts exposed, leaving an image of the object in white on a dark background. There was no means then known, however, of fixing these images, which darkened all over on exposure to light.

An important advance, although on different lines, was made by Joseph Nicéphore Niépce about the year 1813. This was the discovery of the fact that substances such as asphaltum, or bitumen, and certain resins, while soluble in their normal state to ethereal oils, as oil of lavender, are rendered insoluble by exposure to light. Niépce placed polished metal plates, coated with bitumen, in the focus of the camera obscura, and by means of long exposures was able to obtain pictures, as the bitumen could be dissolved away in the parts not acted upon by light. Daguerre had been experimenting upon much the same lines, and eventually the two entered into partnership. The resulting process, improved upon by Daguerre, in the direction of development of the picture by the vapour of mercury is known by the name of Daguerreotype. Methods which are materially the same are still used to-day in various printing processes.

While the developments indicated above were proceeding in France, Fox-Talbot, in England, had been working with silver salts on paper, following the line of Davy and Wedgwood. But Talbot had discovered the secret of fixing, and we have as a result his "Photogenic Drawing," and, later, the Calotype process, in which the image is developed by gallic acid and fixed in potassium bromide. Later, the introduction of albumen as a medium for the sensitive salt is due to Fox-Talbot. In 1848 an albumen film on glass as the support was tried by Niépce St. Victor, a cousin of the inventor, a most important step; paper as a negative medium being subject to many disadvantages. About this time, however, collodion was introduced by M. le Gray, and this process caused almost a revolution in photographic work, rapidly superseding all other methods. It was brought into a practical form by Scott Archer, and with collodion amateur photography as a hobby may be said to have begun. Wet plates were, of course, first used, but in 1856 dry plates with a collodion emulsion were introduced and greatly facilitated the process.

With the introduction of collodion the incipient and experimental stage of photography was passed. It became thenceforward a definite and exact process, and speedily grew to the status of a profession. Inventions and modifications rapidly succeeded one another. The gelatine dry plate was first brought out by Dr. Maddox, of Southampton, in 1871, and was introduced commercially in 1878. Some time before this "roll-film" on a paper support had been used. Then rapidly followed the invention of the carbon process by Swan, with bromide paper as a printing medium, and the gelatino-chloride paper, or P.O.P.

So far I have been dealing chiefly with the progress of photography from the chemical side; simultaneously, however, skill and invention had been at work in the direction of apparatus. The camera obscura was the invention of Giambattista della Porta, of Padua, more than three hundred years ago, and the earliest cameras were adaptations of this instrument. Many of these primitive cameras were little more than a box with a lens at one end and a contrivance for holding a plate at the other. The well-known bellows form was introduced in 1854, and the first roll-film slide about the same time. The last few years have seen innumerable inventions and improvements of apparatus and lenses, until now almost every week brings forth some device to make the pathway of the amateur easier. As regards lenses, also, it is not so many years ago that the rapid rectilinear lens was looked upon as the apex of perfection, as it corrected to a large extent the forms of distortion from which the earlier forms suffered. Modern lenses of the anastigmat type have been brought to such a high state of perfection in these days, and at such a reasonable cost withal, as almost to lead one to think that ingenuity and mechanical skill can scarcely go much farther. For the ordinary amateur, however, the popular "R.R." still holds its own.

INVENTIONS OF RECENT YEARS

In regard to the inventions of recent years, there is to be noticed a decided trend in the direction of simplification. Probably much of the credit for the popularity of amateur photography is due to the Kodak Company, whose catch phrases—"You press the button, we do the rest," and the later edition, "You press the button and then do the rest"—are well known. Cameras may be divided roughly into two classes—stand and hand. The stand camera is the earlier type. It is really the ideal instrument for all classes of work—landscape, architectural, or portrait—but suffers from the disadvantage that it is not particularly light or portable, and takes some time to get into action. On this account the hand camera, from its extreme portability and readiness, is more in favour with the tourist—those to whom lightness and handiness are considerations. There is an intermediate type—the hand-stand folding camera—which is gaining ground, inasmuch as it combines to a large extent the efficiency of the stand camera with the portability of the hand type. The cheap box-form models have many adherents, and in capable hands can do good work, but they have their limitations.

One of the most noteworthy introductions in new apparatus is the daylight loading slide for plates or flat films. In these contrivances only the one dark slide is used, and the plates or films are carried in separate light envelopes and loaded as required. The daylight loading roll film is well known, and by the use of one of the many forms of developing tanks on the market the dark-room can be almost entirely dispensed with. In fact, recent advances in this direction lead one to look forward to the time when, after the exposure is made, the turning of a handle once or twice will cause the print to drop forth from the camera, printed, developed, fixed, and washed, even if not mounted.

The self-developing plate is the outcome of the last few months. These plates, of which there are two kinds, have the developer either incorporated with the film or in the form of a backing to the plate, and simply need placing in water for a short time to develop the image after exposure. In regard to sensitive materials, such as printing papers, the advance has been equally remarkable. It is really to be doubted if perfection of printing paper can be carried to a much higher pitch. Within the last few years self-toning printing-out papers have attained a large vogue, and if carefully treated are as satisfactory as the older form, which needed toning. This delicate and often expensive operation is done away with in the new papers. Platinum, too, has received attention. A paper which can be developed by being breathed upon and then fixed in a solution of common salt is a great advance on the time when a bath of boiling developer was needed, followed by several acid baths. For other platinum papers the cold developing bath largely takes the place of the old hot-bath treatment. Then there is the recently invented modification of the carbon process, in which the printing by daylight is entirely done away with; a boon to busy men. In this process a piece of carbon tissue, a certain so-called pigmenting solution, and a bromide print are all that are necessary to obtain a carbon picture, the development taking place in hot water.

One of the favourite media, both for contact printing and enlargements, is bromide paper. Its position is well deserved on account of its reliability and ease of working, and the immense variety of surface in which it can be obtained. Papers with a rough surface still have a large use, as very artistic results can be secured with them. This is largely due to the efforts of the "broad" school of photography. Quite lately, however, several grades of paper, of a semi-matt, or semi-glossy surface, have been brought out, apparently indicating that in many minds, at all events, the craze for roughness has gone too far, and that a smoother surface is desirable. These new grades of paper retain the detail in the shadows of a print, which is lost to a large extent in the rough or ordinary platino-matt surfaces.

Although it is constantly advocated that the photographer should make up his own solutions, the necessity for this has been largely obviated by the fact that the chemicals required can now be obtained in packets and compressed tablet form, which merely need dissolving in water to be ready for use. Foremost among this class is the "Tabloid" make, and it cannot be denied that by the use of these a great deal of trouble is avoided. In the case of travellers and those who only pursue

STEINWAY

VERTEGRANDS

The attention of every householder is hereby directed to the fact that the pianos, Grands and Vertegrands, made by the house of STEINWAY, and sold by them through special agents at fixed net prices for cash all the world over, have a surrender value greater than that of the instruments produced by any other firm.

The reason is not far to seek, viz.:—durability, general excellence in tone production, expensive workmanship in all minor details. The superiority of the STEINWAY creations in this respect is as marked as are all the other distinctive "STEINWAY" features.

Deferred Payments. Hiring Arrangements.

STEINWAY Pianos, Grands and Vertegrands, may be obtained on hire at very reasonable rates, or may be purchased by deferred payments. If for any reason a purchaser on the Deferred Payment System is desirous of returning his instrument, the difference between the Hire Terms and the amounts paid under the deferred plan will be returned to him.

Write or call to-day for the Steinway Hire and Deferred Payment Particulars, also booklet "P," "Portraits of Musical Celebrities," post free on request.

STEINWAY & SONS,

LONDON. Steinway Hall. NEW YORK.

photography intermittently, ability to purchase chemicals in this form is a great boon.

ART AND PHOTOGRAPHY.

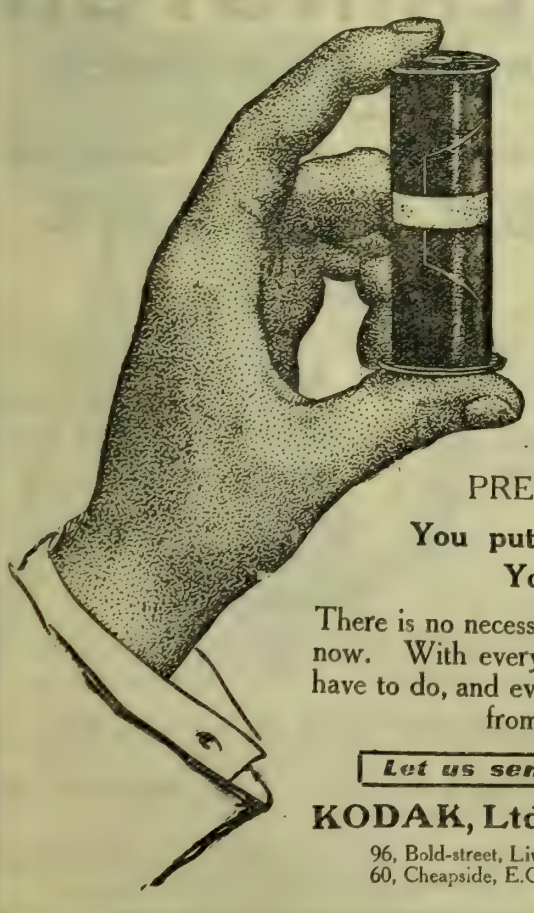
"Photographic," when referring to a work of art, has by now become as much a term of opprobrium as has "a really nice girl," applied to the premier work of Nature. Pianists have been known to praise the pianola—some of the more famous of them, at any rate—perhaps because they have suffered from the originality which minor musicians seek vainly to inveigle into their performances; and Melba is said to have a predilection for the gramophone, which shows her a woman of wide sympathies; but to hear a painter or a writer on art praise a photograph, except with infinite condescension, is as rare as it is to hear a farmer praise the weather.

Even did the painter owe nothing else to the photograph, he should yet be grateful for the moral exaltation it provides for him in his own estimation. By standing, to his mind, upon the lower step, it converts his own into the higher one. By being "photographic," it makes him "artistic." "I may be at the very bottom of my brotherhood," he reflects, "and the bottom is neither very light nor very airy; at all events, I am above the photograph, which only copies and does not create." It is largely due to the invention of photography that the painter has come to spell his Art with such an extremely large A, and that without shame. In the old pre-photographic days the painter considered himself a workman; it is true that the excellence of his work gave him some claim to be so considered. In our own time—and that largely owing to the invention of the camera—the painter has ascended to a higher, superhuman sphere; he is a creator, and it follows that mere humanity has no right to judge of the excellence of his workmanship. What is more, he indirectly owes it to the photograph that "art" tends more and more to drive photography itself out of suburbia. It is not many years since the suburban drawing-room depended for the decoration of its mantelpiece and its piano upon a phalanx of "photos" in plush or oxidised silver frames. But now that the fame of large-A'd Art has penetrated from Poplar even to Putney Vale, the painted drain-pipe and the hand-made bronze fender, direct from the Arts and Crafts, serve to set off the embroidered jumpers of their fortunate possessors, the photograph must give place to the coloured reproduction of the Velasquez "Venus" or Mr. Goetze's latest great religious allegory.

Photography has one fault, which is also a misfortune. It tells—it is, at least, capable of telling—the unvarnished truth without any extenuating circumstances. Who would not prefer to have his portrait painted by the very wildest of New English Artists rather than submit himself to the tender mercies of his younger sister's new camera? Photography is the painfully veracious witness in a court where art is too often the corrupt judge. The gods have, at last, given us the giftie, but the camera too often shows us as being even worse than others—and they our most candid friends—care to admit that they see us. Naturally, therefore, we say that photography is inartistic, and if we can afford it we go to the painter, who is ready to take us at our own value, and whose work, if unflattering, we can always denounce as a bad likeness, with the notorious fallibility of the human hand and eye to bear us out.

A good deal of the pother which chronically arises around the artistic or non-artistic claims of photography is due to our modern misuse of the word "Art." Accepted in the confused, almost technical, sense to which we are now grown accustomed, photography is not "Art"—which is by no means to say that it is not an art—and the term "artistic photography," used as we commonly use it, is as misleading and inappropriate as were "artistic tailoring" or "artistic plumbing." In the truer sense, a photograph may be, and generally is, at least as artistic as a painting—or a chest of drawers. Of course, we all know the artistic-commercial photographer who drapes our shoulders diaphanously, or accentuates our George-Alexander-iron-

WITH FIVE OF THESE and a



KODAK

You can bring back

60 Pictures

of your Summer Holiday.

PHOTOGRAPHY WITH A KODAK PRESENTS NO DIFFICULTIES WHATEVER.

You put the Film in the Kodak in broad daylight.
You Develop the Pictures in daylight.

There is no necessity for technical knowledge or experience. You can start now. With every Kodak we give a Manual explaining exactly what you have to do, and even the novice can command success. You can buy Kodaks from 5s. to £8. Complete Outfits from £1 1s.

Let us send you the new "KODAK BOOK," post free.

KODAK, Ltd., 57-61, Clerkenwell Rd., London, E.C.

96, Bold-street, Liverpool; 72-74, Buchanan-street, Glasgow; 59, Brompton-road, S.W.; 60, Cheapside, E.C.; 115, Oxford-street, W.; 171-173, Regent-street, W.; 40, Strand, London, W.C.; and all Dealers.

grey hair with high light from above, and makes us worthy of the Crown or Country Life. His are tricks of the trade—worked out by rule of thumb—and verging on the obvious. We have also the more earnestly "art" photographer, whose highest ambition is to produce photographs which shall look like etchings or copper-plate engravings, or Whistler nocturnes, who, if a man, wears a flowing tie, and if a woman, an expression of other-worldliness and no stays, these being the outstanding qualities which attend the truly artistic of our own time.

But these latter, though essentially well-meaning—and though, be it said, they frequently turn out very beautiful work—are none the less traitors to photography, in that they accept for it a subordinate, imitative rôle among the arts. It is an insult to a fine photograph to compare it, to its disadvantage, with an etching or a monotone drawing—just, as it were, to trick out a first-class county cricketer in the gaiters and apron of a Colonial bishop, and then blame him because he cannot preach in the language of the Otaheitans. Painting and its allied "arts" may be excellent in its way; so may photography. But their ways are not the same, nor their objects. It is true that the invention of the camera has vastly widened the potentialities of the painter—though few painters realise it—in that it has supplied him with a practically perfect eye, which tells him the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, as an adjunct to his too fallible human eyes, which frequently show him what is not there, and which pander to his mental prejudices like the poorest of poor relations. Every artist ought to be a photographer, and it is because so few of them realise it that we are occasionally treated to exquisitely ludicrous descriptions of the lengths to which they are driven to escape from the fallibility of their own eyes. Thus we read, only a very little time back, that a well-known French painter had hypnotised a ballet-dancer, that she might remain in a certain flying pose long enough for him to paint her. Could there be a more pathetic confession of weakness? And all the time the cinematograph is there ready and willing to assist him. Think, again, how totally the whole artistic conception of the action shown by a running horse has changed since snap-shot photography has taught us how a horse really runs. The more materials for forming a judgment that are provided for us, so much the less faith are we able to place in our eyes. The Greeks, it is said, could not always distinguish between green and blue; most of us, to this day, are more or less colour-blind. It only needs the perfecting of colour-photography to tell us that our preconceived ideas of colour—based on the evidence of our eyes—are as faulty as our notion of form has been proved to be.

If every artist should be a photographer, equally true is it that every photographer should be an artist. But he is not likely to be so until he realises that the mere pressing of a button will not make him so. The young photographer, no doubt, honestly believes that when he finds a recognisable reproduction of a near relation upon one of his dozen films he has scaled the heights of Olympus. On the other hand, the true artist-photographer may wander for a week and never use his camera—yet have none the less high artistic achievement to set to the credit of that week's work. Just as your painter may or may not be an artist, so may your photographer. In either case the odds are heavily against it.

Great as may be and have been the services which the camera has rendered to art, there is one point in which, it must be admitted, its influence has been altogether harmful. Since its invention the level of draughtsmanship has perceptibly fallen. It is as though the artist, realising that it were hopeless for him to compete against such a rival, had decided to renounce any idea of drawing correctly at all—to make a virtue of necessity and proclaim his own deficiencies of hand and eye as the one infallible sign by which you may know the Real Thing. Is there any other possible explanation of the depth of bad draughtsmanship to which many of our leading painters have descended, without perceptible shame? This more especially in

To attain success in PHOTOGRAPHY it is necessary to select a good CAMERA and SHUTTER, reliable plates, Films, &c., but the most important of all is the LENS.

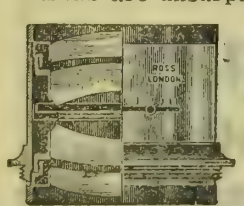
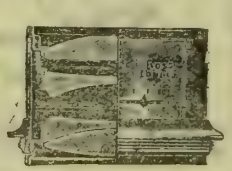
ROSS' OUTFITS include:—

THE MOST RECENT FOLDING HAND CAMERAS, WITH THE LATEST IMPROVED SHUTTERS, WHICH WITH ROSS' "HOMOCENTRIC" or ROSS-ZEISS "TESSAR" LENS are unsurpassed for every purpose.



ROSS' "HOMOCENTRIC."
f 5.6, f 6.3, f 6.8, f 8.



ROSS-ZEISS "TESSAR" LENS.
f 3.5, f 4.5, f 6.3.

Pre-eminent among First-class Lenses for use in the Studio and out of doors, for Portraits, Instantaneous Views and Groups, Snapshot Hand Camera Work, Interiors and Copying; for Line, Half-tone, Three Colour and all Process Work; and indeed, for every requirement of the Amateur or Professional Photographer.

Special descriptive List recently issued. Free by post.

ROSS' LENSES FITTED TO CUSTOMERS' OWN CAMERAS.

REVISED PRICES OF

ROSS' PRISM BINOCULARS.

With Screw-focussing adjustment.			Focussing by adjustment of Eye-pieces.
X8	...	£6 10 0	X8	...	£5 10 0
X10	...	7 10 0	X10	...	6 10 0
X12	...	8 10 0	X12	...	7 10 0

TO BE OBTAINED OF

ALL LEADING DEALERS AND OPTICIANS.

ROSS' OPTICAL WORKS, Clapham Common, LONDON, S.W.

AN

ELKINGTON

English Lever Watch.

(Keyless. Fully Jewelled.)

18 Carat Gold £10. 18 Carat Gold £10.

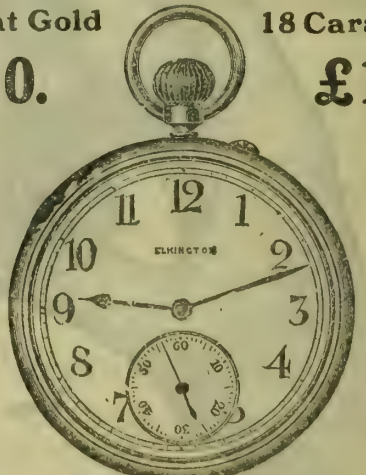
Special Compact Movement.



A Revolution in Watch-making.

(Actual Size.)

¾-plate Special Thin Movement, Breguet Sprung, Compensation Balance. The Finest Value ever offered to the public.

CATALOGUES FREE. CATALOGUES FREE.

ELKINGTON & CO., LTD.

LONDON SHOWROOMS:

22, Regent St., S.W. (Below Piccadilly Circus.) 73, Cheapside, E.C.

BIRMINGHAM: Newhall St. LIVERPOOL: Lord St. GLASGOW: St. Vincent St. MANCHESTER: St. Ann's Sq.

NEWCASTLE: Northumberland St.

CANADIAN AGENTS: A. T. Wiley & Co., Montreal.

CALCUTTA: Esplanade.

portraiture. "Let the camera attend to such worthless details as the sitters' features," they seem to say. "We will concentrate on what we think their complexions ought to be. And if any one object, we will maintain that we paint the soul and leave the body to the care of a soulless machine." Meanwhile the camera continues to extend its sway, swallowing everything in Nature, from the butt-end of a garden seat to an eclipse of the moon. And unless the painter bestir himself he will one day find himself reduced to proclaiming, urbi et orbi, that he scorns the mere external appearances of garden seats and eclipses, and that he only paints their spiritual significance. About which time the last art-critic who takes himself seriously will retire to Bedlam.

It is a curious—and unfortunate—thing that many of those who clamour most fervently for the recognition of photography as a branch of High Art, choose its lowest and most humiliating aspect as most worthy of the honour—I mean "fake" photography. It is true that it is in their common appreciation of the "fake" that Art and Photography come most closely into line. The painter is bound to understand the art of "faking" in its broader sense. He must, if he is to live, impress something upon the observer's eye which is not there. He is perfectly justified—it is the object, and a worthy one, of much of his effort. What, for instance, is perspective, but a noble form of "faking"? Your would-be "artistic" photographer, seeing this, and realising the lengths to which it is possible to carry the corruption of a poor, well-meaning camera, sets to work to produce "fake" photographs which shall seem anything in the world but what they really are. He forgets that while the great object of a painting is to produce illusion, either mental, moral, or physical, the one aim of photography should be to serve truth. Do away with its truthfulness, and where is the art of photography? It falls to such "faking" as that by which, on the day following the birth of the Spanish Heir-Apparent, a photograph of the King and Queen of Spain appeared in the shop windows, the latter nursing the Royal Infant. This may be called an intelligent anticipation of events, but it is not art, and it is scarcely a feather in the cap of photography.

Let the photographer and the painter recognise each other as brothers, setting out by different roads to accomplish different ends and wishing each other a hearty godspeed at their parting; not as the noble seigneur and his twenty-second cousin poor Mr. Camera sneaking cap in hand at the heels of My Lord Mahlstick in the hope that some day when his Lordship feels peculiarly good-tempered he may offer him his hand to kiss and acknowledge him as the least of poor relations.

PHOTOGRAPHIC TYPES.

As might be expected with a pursuit that of recent years has attained such a wide popularity, the types of the votaries of photography are as thick as leaves in Vallombrosa. Gone are the days when the worker was obliged to coat his own plates with iodised collodion and expose them while wet. These wet-plate collodion workers must have been heroes. The folding pocket camera was unknown. In its place was a bulky erection of timber, needing no small amount of thew and sinew to transport from place to place. To have one's photograph taken in those days was distinctly an event. One of these enthusiasts has told me of the auspicious occasion on which he attempted to photograph somebody's baby; a task that, even in these days, brings a pallor to the cheek of the boldest. I must draw a veil over the details of the tragedy—the gathering together of the family like lambs to the slaughter, all arrayed in festive attire; the long and painful exposure, while the victim had practically to be bound hand and foot! These are not subjects to dwell upon. I am given to understand that this pride and joy of its parents was pictured as something like the ghostly image of an Egyptian mummy. The opportune removal of my friend to a distant part of the country soon after prevented any incidents "calculated to occasion a breach of the peace"; and it is sincerely hoped that by now the mollifying hand of time has healed the wound.

A distinct type of the amateur photographer may be known as the genus "beginner." He is found in large numbers. No subject is too difficult for him to negotiate. To all kinds, whether a brightly illuminated open landscape or a portrait in a shady room, he gives the same exposure, usually the one speed of his shutter, about 1-30 of a second. His results are largely determined by the law of averages. Let him but expose enough plates and he will get something to please him. He is the plate and paper maker's best friend. His delight is a highly glazed P.O.P. print, showing with microscopic distinctness every brick in the wall, every leaf of the tree. His dark-room floor is covered with a "gravel path" of hypo, while his bench is ornamented with glittering crystals of the same useful salt.

To this same species belongs the man who presses the button and lets some one else do the rest. His negatives are printed out for him on "glossy" P.O.P. by his obliging dealer. One such, I know, who in some way had had some prints made on bromide paper, and who explained confidentially to a friend that he "did not like them so well as real photographs." What he would have thought of carbon or gum must remain a question. The "button-presser" loses a great part of the pleasure of photography, as the process of development of the plate, to watch the image slowly built up, is one of the most interesting features, apart from the satisfaction to be found in one's own work.

The raw beginner's attempts at portraiture are a terror to his friends, and often a surprise to himself. Perhaps more homes have been wrecked by this means than by any other, and more ill-feeling engendered than

. . THE . .
Westminster Photographic Exchange
119, Victoria Street, London, S.W. LTD.

The "ABBEY"
Outfit, ½ plate.

Stupendous Value.
Everything Included.

PRICE . .
72/6

Set comprises—

Camera
Beck R.R. Lens
Bi-nd Shutter
Anti ous Release
2 Levels
2 Carriers
3 Double Dark Slides
Carrying Case and 3-Fold Tripod.

GUARANTEE.—We Guarantee the "Abbey" Outfit to be exactly as described, and are prepared to send on Approval for Three Days on receipt of remittance of 72/6, which will be returned without any deduction whatever if the outfit is not to the entire satisfaction of the purchaser and is returned to us carriage paid.

Our New Catalogue, Now Ready, contains the latest of everything Photographic, 500 Illustrations, post free on application.

Write for our List of Bargains in Second-hand Apparatus, 700 Bargains.

Address, ADVT. MANAGER,
THE WESTMINSTER PHOTOGRAPHIC EXCHANGE, LTD.,
119, Victoria Street, London, S.W.
Telegrams: "Photexica, London." Telephone: No. 669 Victoria.

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

by the most bitter partisanship in politics. Great are his preparations for this event, in which the accessories play a large part; reminding us of Lewis Carroll's parody, "Hiawatha's Photography":—

First the Governor, the father,
He suggested velvet curtains
Looped about a massive pillar;
And the corner of a table,
Of a rosewood dining-table.
He would hold a scroll of something,
Hold it firmly in his left hand;
He would have his right hand buried
Like Napoleon's, in his waistcoat.
He would contemplate the distance
With a look of pensive meaning,
As of ducks that die in tempests.

When the "look of pensive meaning" is transmogrified into a stony glare, as usually happens, the victim is, as a rule, not pleased. By the amateur portraitist, the charming smile of beauty is changed into "a simper scarcely human," and the benign expression of the aged is petrified into a fixed grin of senile idiocy. No wonder grandma is vexed!

After the raw beginner stage comes the experimental period. Then the budding picture-maker tries every new brand of plates, every new kind of paper on the market, and dabbles in every process. His results do not please him so much at this stage as did his earlier efforts. He has become a kind of Jack-of-all-trades, and, finding small success in any, often becomes disgusted, and thinks photography a hollow mockery. Amateurs at this period of their career generally have with them a pocket case of more or less indifferent prints, which they exhibit with much pride to their admiring (?) friends, in season and out of season. The admiring friends bear the infliction with what grace they may.

When the photographer has finally emerged from this slough of despond a change comes o'er the spirit of the dream. And such a change. His erstwhile sharp, brilliant, shiny prints have become hazy, sometimes muddy in their aspect. He has now become a "Fuzzyist." He has aspirations to art, and is full of strange words, not easily understanded of the people. Devious is the path of the "Fuzzyist." He makes a negative like any other rational being. Then, by the application of paint and blacklead he strives to prevent his negative giving a print such as any normal negative would give. Sometimes he makes an enlarged negative, on which he scrapes, retouches, paints, until its original character is gone. From this modified negative he makes a "gum" print, and with a fearsome array of brushes he controls the effect, until the final result is as unlike anything photographic as could be imagined, and his last state is worse than the first.

DON'TS FOR AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHERS.

Don't expect a cheap single lens to do as much as an expensive anastigmat.

Don't be surprised if a friend with a cheap outfit achieves more pictorial results than you do with high-class apparatus.

Don't think the above "don'ts" contradict each other—picture-making is not entirely mechanical.

Don't develop negatives or tone prints in a dish in which fixing solution has been used.

Don't fail to test your dark-room lamp occasionally.

Don't leave your bottles of solutions unlabelled—it encourages waste.

Don't scamp the washing of plates and prints—water is cheap.

Don't put your negatives in front of the fire to dry—haste not, waste not.

Don't forget, when about to expose, to draw the shutter of the dark slide—it is false economy.

Don't rely too implicitly on the marked speeds of your shutter.

Don't "chop and change" with developers—one real friend is better than many acquaintances.

Don't buy ornate mounts—the print is the thing, or should be.

Don't imagine there is a "best" developer or a "best" plate—all are but means to an end.

Don't print in direct sunlight—what you gain in speed you lose in quality.

Don't be too prodigal in the number of your exposures—one good negative is worth many mediocre ones.

Don't think you can crowd everything between heaven and earth within the limits of a quarter-plate.

Don't think that because your picture is out of focus it is necessarily artistic.

Don't keep fishing the plate out of the solution when developing—it is neither good for the plate nor for your fingers.

Don't blame the plate or paper makers if you have one or two failures. You are more likely to be at fault than they are.

NOTES.

Specialisation in photography sometimes brings up some strange incidents. There are those who devote a good part of their time to photographing pictures and such-like, a kind of devotion well enough in its way. But perhaps one of the strangest of all was the man who carried about with him a most elaborate and complete half-plate outfit, with several colour-screens and expensive lenses, and who, like a modern Ichabod Crane, photographed practically nothing else but gravestones.

The amiable assistant had displayed most of the folding cameras in stock, but still the dainty Miss was not satisfied. "I am sorry," she said, with a sigh, "but you see this (pointing to the red leather bellows) would not go with my costume."

Though different kinds of plates and paper have their own peculiarities, it is hardly possible to name one make as the best, consequently the beginner will do well to stick to one brand, especially in regard to plates, until he has become thoroughly conversant with their use, as all the standard makes, when intelligently treated, will yield good results.

Photographers should find much to interest them in the interview with Mr. John MacWhirter, R.A., which appeared in the last number of the Grand Magazine. The great landscape painter contends that it is the artist's love of the object he paints which makes it into a picture. As regards the ability to "see" a picture, this, he considers, depends on vocation far more than on education. "Many people," he is reported to have said, "will see a picture in a landscape when other people see nothing picturesque whatever. How this faculty may be acquired I cannot tell. I cannot even always tell why I see a picture in a certain scene, and why other people do not. An artist feels it, and there, practically, is an end of the matter." Probably most pictorial photographers have remarked this, and would have said much the same under similar circumstances. Mr. MacWhirter says he cannot tell how the faculty of "seeing" a picture may be acquired. No; but if one has the gift it can be cultivated.

When the camera is used in the hand one needs to be as steady as possible, and it is better to let off the shutter by the trigger or lever than to use the pneumatic release.

In another column I have referred to the beginner as the plate and paper maker's best friend, and I notice that Photography has put in a word for the "button presser." My bright and instructive contemporary exhorts us not to be too severe on button pressers, and adds:—"It is owing to the fact that there are button pressers that we can get our materials as cheaply and as universally as we can to-day. Many of the best workers whose pictures are in the exhibitions were first led to photography by the apparent simplicity of button pressing. From the ranks of the button pressers of to-day will come the medal winners of to-morrow."

Printed for the Proprietor by Love & Malcomson, Ltd., 4 & 5 Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., & Published weekly by H. Labouchere at 10, Po't-ct., Fleet-st., E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to Reginald E. Booker "Truth" Buildings Catherine-st., Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.
Entered as Second Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

(Continued from page 1536.)

indicated have already reached an advanced stage. My usual table follows:—

Colonial and Foreign Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest	June 8, 1907.	June 15, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Canadian Pacific	208	161⅞	172¾	172⅝	− ⅛
Grand Trunk	29 11/16	25 1/16	27 1/16	28⅛	+ 1/16
Do. 4 p.c. Guaranteed	105½	101½	100½	100½	—
Do. 5 p.c. First Pref.	123½	114¾	117¾	118	+ ¼
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	115	105¾	108¾	109	+ ¼
Do. 4 p.c. Third Do.	70½	60 11/16	68½	70½	+1½
Mexican	59⅞	22½	40¼	43¼	+3
Do. 8 p.c. First Pref.	144⅜	118⅝	133	134	+1
Do. 6 p.c. Second Pref.	93¼	49½	83½	86½	+2¾
Interoceanic of Mex. 7 p.c. Pref.	11 15/16	6	10⅜	10⅝	+ ⅛
Do. 7 p.c. "B" Debs.	124	109	116½	115⅝	− ⅜
Mexican Central 4 p.c.	90¼	78½	82½	83	+ ½
Do. First Incomes	30	18	20½	20½	—
Do. Securities "A" bearer	95	88 3/16	90	90	—
Do. Do. "B" Do.	81½	65¼	77	77	—
Nat. of Mexico 4 p.c. First Pref.	61⅞	37½	49	49¾	+ ¾
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	31⅜	19½	20	21	+1
Bengal and North Western	149½	144	148	148	—
Madras 5 p.c.	127½	120½	114	112xd	+ ½
Antofagasta Def.	180¼	162	137	137	—
Nitrate Rails	16⅜	14⅛	13	12⅜	− ⅛
Argentine Great Western	130½	111	106	108½	+2½
Do. North-Eastern Debs.	83½	64½	72	72½	+ ½
Buenos Ayres and Pacific	136½	120	111½	11½	+1
Do. and Rosario	120⅜	111	99	98¾	− ¼
Do. Great Southern	145	122¾	119½	120½	+1
Do. Western	135⅜	123½	119½	119½	—
East Argentine	1.0	87	118½	114¼xd	+ ½
Cordoba Cen. (C.N.S.) Income Debs.	75½	63⅜	64	64½	+ ½
Cordoba and Rosario First Pref.	108½	85	85½	85½	—
Entre Rios First Pref	98	85	89	90½	+1½
Great Western of Brazil	16 1/16	12½	10	10½	+ ½
Leopoldina	86½	69½	69	70½	+1½
San Paulo	214¾	199½	208½	208½	—
Central Uruguay	9 2/16	82	88	88	—
Costa Rica	29 11/16	25	28	28	—
Cartagena (Colombia) Debs.	80½	78	71½	70	−1½
Colombian Nat. Second Debs	88½	76¾	70	69	−1
Colombian Northern 5 p.c. Debs.	81½	76¾	79	79	—
Manila 6 p.c. Debs.	126	112	109	109	—
Guayaquil and Quito 6 p.c. Bonds	93½	55	42	39½	−2½
Cuban Central	7 7/16	5⅝	5⅛	5⅝	—
United of Havana	103	105⅝	92½	93	+ ½
Western of Havana	15 5/16	12½	11⅝	12	+ ¼
Mashonaland Debs (2nd issue)	94½	87¾	87½	87½	—
Rhodesia 4 p.c. Debs.	8⅜	76	72½	71½	−1
Ottoman (Smyrna to Aidin)	23¾	19½	20½	20¼	− ¼

Westralians Quiet but Generally Firm—Great Fingalls Bought on the Bonus and Encouraging Development Cable—Relapse in South Kalgurlis.

While speculation in the Westralian Market has not been very brisk during the past week a fair amount of interest has been displayed in one or two specialties. On the whole the tendency in respect of this group of shares has been firm, despite the further financial difficulties that have actually come to light and the rumours of trouble which have affected most sections of the Stock Exchange. From the subjoined table of prices it will be seen that, as a rule, the changes on the week have been slight in either direction:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	June 8, 1907.	June 15, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Associated	3	1 7/32	1 1/32	1 1/32	—
Assoc. Northern Blocks	1⅜	1/2	⅝	⅝	+ 1/16
Cosmopolitan	8/3	3/6	3/9	3/6	− 3d.
Golden Horseshoe (£5)	6⅜	4¾	5¾	5 15/16	− 1/16
Great Boulder (2/-)	28/-	20/3	23/3	23/-	− 3d.
Do. Perseverance	13/-	7/3	5/3	5/6	+ 3d.
Great Fingall (10/-)	6 5/16	2½	1 15/16	2 1/32	+ 7/32
Hainault	1 1/32	1½	1¼	1¼	—
Ivanhoe (£5)	7½	6 7/16	7 7/16	7 7/16	—
Kalgurli	12⅜	8⅜	10½	10½	+ ⅛
Lake View Consols	1 7/16	½	½	9/16	+ 1/16
L. & W. A. Exploration	21/10½	8/6	10/-	10/-	—
Oroya Brownhill	3½	2	1 15/16	1 15/16	—
Sons of Gwalia	2 1/16	1 1/16	1½	1½	—
South Kalgurli	1 1/32	11/16	⅝	½	− 1/32
Australian Commonwealth Trust	3 1/32	1½	⅝	11/16	+ 1/16
Consolidated Deep Leads (4/-)	½	⅜	2/3	2/3	—
Loddon Valley Goldfields	2 1/16	1/16	¼	¼	—

The declaration by the directors of the Great Fingall of a bonus of 6d. with the quarterly dividend of 2s. 6d. per share came as a pleasant surprise to the market and probably to shareholders also. On the basis of quarterly dividends of half-a-crown the shares yield nearly 25 per cent. at the current price, but it must be remembered that for some time past developments at depth have been anything but satisfactory. It is an encouraging feature that the cable published last week reports payable values in the north end of the No. 13, the lowest level, but too much importance should not be attached to this. A good run of payable ore is necessary to ensure the maintenance of the present rate of dividends for such a period that the amount distributed would represent a return of interest in addition to the present market capitalisation. Another mine which needs to make a better showing in regard to developments is the Associated Northern Blocks, which has just earned an interim dividend of 2s. per share, the amount being the same as a year ago. The relapse in South Kalgurlis is due to the official announcement that some difficulty has been experienced in obtaining satisfactory results with the treatment plant, and that in consequence two furnaces will be shut down during part of the present month, temporarily reducing the output.

Kaffirs Irregular—The Transvaal Government's Decision on the Chinese Labour Question—Coolies to be Repatriated as their Contracts Expire—Expected Increase in Native Labour Supply.

There has been a renewal of liquidation in the Kaffir market, mainly in respect of difficulties experienced in Paris, but gold shares have not been so much affected as the leading diamond descriptions. At times during the past week the gold shares displayed a distinctly cheerful tendency, and but for the general uneasiness on the score of financial difficulties, quotations would apparently have experienced a fair measure of recovery, though whether the improvement would have been long maintained is doubtful in view of the "wreckage" from recent settlements which is awaiting a home. At last the uncertainty as to the Transvaal Government's intentions with respect to Chinese labour is removed, and having regard to the position which has to be faced, it is hardly to be expected that much expansion of speculative interest in Kaffirs will occur in the early future. General Botha has announced that it has been decided not to re-enact the Labour Ordinance, but to send the Chinese home immediately on the expiration of their contracts. This means that about a couple of thousand will leave the Rand this month, and by the end of the year the indentures of 16,000 will have expired. "The Government," according to the Transvaal Premier, "was moved not only by the unalterable conviction that the presence of the Chinese was in the highest degree inimical to the interests of the Transvaal, and should cease at the earliest possible moment, but also by the consideration that the supply of native labour had for some time, in a marked manner, been exceeding the demand." But, as I pointed out a month ago, the supply of this class of labour usually improves during the first and last quarters of the year, and this is not the first time in the history of the Rand gold-mining industry that the working mines have as many unskilled workers as they can employ. It is a condition which is likely to recur from time to time with any fluctuating supply of labour, while the fact of its being irregular instead of constant militates against the extension of working facilities. Were the supply likely to be of a permanent character, mines at the developing stage which have had to suspend operations would doubtless be started up again. In the spring of 1905 there were more natives than could be found work for, but four or five months later many mines were short of labour; and, as it happens, General Botha's statement synchronised with the first decrease for several months in the native labour returns, the May statistics showing the tide to be on the ebb once again. Whether the arrangements that are being made with a view to increase the supply of native labour will have the desired result remains to be seen. If the Government Native Labour Bureau can ensure a regular supply of unskilled workers, the mining industry may continue progressive, but if the number of natives fluctuates as much as in the past, the position will be worse than at the present time, when there are available some 50,000 Chinese, whose efficiency, on the whole, is above that of the natives. At the worst, however, the mines most likely to be kept back by the repatriation of the coolies are those which have not reached the producing stage. In the event of a shortage, the available labour would probably be concentrated on the producing mines, and those interested in shares of that class, and who are receiving dividends, should not be frightened into realising. The market took the first announcement of the Government's decision very well, and it is quite possible that the removal of the uncertainty after so much delay may make for better conditions ere long. It should be borne in mind that it would not be to the interest of the Boers to seriously interfere with the mining industry, and the wording of General Botha's remarks as summarised in the cable published in Saturday's papers appears to me to indicate that in the event of the expectations of an increased native labour supply not being fulfilled the Government would temporarily suspend the repatriation of the coolies.

Never ask for "a bottle of ink." If you do, the dealer may give you a substitute for STEPHENS'. Insist on having STEPHENS INK. It costs no more. Resolutely refuse substitutes.

Below is my usual table of individual results of Rand mining companies for the last three months, and it will be seen that in a fair number of cases the earnings for May are in advance of those for the previous month:—

COMPANY.	March.		April.		May.
	Ozs.	Profit. £	Ozs.	Profit. £	Ozs.	Profit. £
Angelo	14,125	28,417	13,890	30,110	12,948	26,791
Bonanza	2,053	2,476	2,326	3,743	2,155	3,506
Cason	18,160	36,155	18,260	39,910	15,302	30,064
City and Suburban	10,091	16,658	9,985	16,655	9,653	15,510
Comet, New	7,842	6,863	7,842	6 894	7,791	7,054
Consolidated Langlaagte	7,238	8,479	7,413	9,061	7,432	9,135
Consolidated Main Reef	6,277	7,420	6,358	7,459	6,431	7,237
Crown Deep	14,356	26,600	14,660	27,600	14,845	30,200
Crown Reef	10,814	22,507	10,355	22,000	9,564	20,006
Driefontein	7,698	6,310	8,220	9,369	8,210	9,305
Durban-Roodepoort	4,598	5,960	4,352	—	4,408	6,100
Do. Deep	4,093	2,200	4,094	2,550	4,402	2,750
Ferreira	12,900	30,184	13,142	30.043	12,850	36,523
Ferreira Deep	13,442	34,550	13,189	33.150	13,175	33,200
French Rand	6,483	5,009	6,545	5,096	5.629	3,402
Geldenhuis Estate	6 581	13,957	6,629	14,028	6,702	14,355
Geldenhuis Deep	10,630	13.700	10,760	13,850	10,722	14,100
Ginsberg	2,679	2 443	2,696	2,118	3,048	3,339
Glencairn	5,027	6,069	4,866	5,609	4,742	5,646
Glen Deep	7,360	9,800	7,492	10,500	7,369	10,050
Glynn's Lydenburg	1,619	3,673	1,523	3,005	1,676	3,945
Goch, New	6,658	5,019	6,921	7,324	7,440	9,720
Heriot, New	3,897	4,727	3,997	5,121	4,166	5,962
Jubilee	1,855	—	1,653	—	1,792	—
Jumpers	5,881	7,086	5,968	7,003	5,699	6,501
	6,683	4,000	6,760	4,500	6,559	4,750
Jumpers Deep	[illegible]	[illegible]	12,925	20,030	12,262	19,075
Kleinfontein, New	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	16,815	10,681	16,912
Knight's (Witwatersrand)	10,635	16,796	10,800	18,268	10,892	15,164
Knight's Deep	11,725	18.317	11,513	[illegible]	4.244	1,545
Lancaster	4,208	3,189	4,210	2,937	2,100	800
Lancaster West	2.340	2,082	2,270	1,856	9,825	9,200
Langlaagte Deep	10 960	10.550	11,174	10,250	10.445	16,000
Langlaagte Estate	10,031	16,000	10,049	14,000	5,387	9,429
Luipaard's Vlei	5,263	7,318	4,884	6 509	3,749	11,474
May Consolidated	5,818	11,771	5,672	12,041	5,361	9,385
Meyer & Charlton	5,902	11,818	5,820	11,593	8,210	10,003
Modderfontein, New	8,163	9.959	8,571	11,105	2,807	2,016
New Unified	2,646	1,333	2.751	1,831	4,099	6,864
Nigel	4,126	6,611	4.105	6,388	2,257	2.614
Nigel Deep	1.933	1,363	2,086	2,152	6,310	7,000
North Randfontein	6,317	7,200	6,034	7,400	13,328	18,550
Nourse Mines	12,741	17,800	12,933	18,150	6.154	8,600
Porges Randfontein	6,003	7,500	6,173	8,700	7,756	14,375
Primrose, New	7,295	13,956	7,914	14.840	2,888	4,065
Princess	3,844	4,721	3,564	3,500	9,583	16,611
Rietfontein, New	9,678	17,533	9,648	17,306	23,449	65,430
Robinson	22,259	60,424	22,612	60,424	11,376	31,609
Robinson Central Deep	11,287	31,103	11,217	31,175	14,447	23,587
Robinson Deep	42,919	44.032	18,802	34,966	5,828	4,600
Robinson Randfontein	6,008	6,800	5,766	5,600	3,587	3,470
Roodepoort Central Deep	3,243	3,693	3,335	3,255	6,077	7,012
Roodepoort United	5,888	7,322	5,853	6,838	10,465	13,100
Rose Deep	10,359	13,000	10,669	13,050	1,750	1,505
Salisbury	1,840	1,850	1,720	1,225	—	—
Sheba	2,345	—	2,455	—	10,200	3,079
Simmer East	10,633	5,316	10,441	5,432	20,649	35,616
Simmer & Jack	23,143	43,852	23,741	46,308	5,911	6,300
South Randfontein	5,723	6,600	6,002	6,900	4,768	6,264
Transvaal G. M. Estates	4,642	7,761	4,567	6,482	2,929	819
Treasury	2 931	1,003	2,877	703	10,303	19,160
Van Ryn	9,975	19,131	9,914	19,503	7,829	4,226
Village Deep	8,464	5,250	7,199	1,904	15,160	26,061
Village Main Reef	15,578	25,007	15,030	25,007	2,807	—
Vogelstruis Estates	2,457	—	2,624	—	961	500
West Rand Central	909	475	906	425	13,368	498*
Windsor	1,424	2	1,416	8	12,769	22,048
Witwatersrand Deep	12,358	20,882	12,399	20,892	1,162	—
Worcester	1,063	—	1,175	—	5,917	5,013
Wolhuter	5,576	4,020	5,907	4,605

* Loss.

Substantial increases are shown by the Robinson, Crown Deep, Luipaards Vlei, Witwatersrand Deep, and New Goch, the improvement being, perhaps, particularly pleasing in the case of the last mentioned, in view of past disappointment, and of the debt that still remains to be cleared off by the company. On the other hand, of the companies principally affected by the strike of white miners, the Knights Deep, Robinson Deep, and Simmer and Jack report much reduced profits for May, considerably less ore having been treated at each of these mines than in April. It appears that the total number of men paid off in connection with the strike amounted to 4,067. Of these, about 600 are stated to have returned to work in the original positions, and many others have gone to work at other mines, but about 1,900 of the strikers remain unemployed because their places have been filled. The mining authorities have agreed to take as many strikers as possible back into their employment again, but they have declined—and reasonably so, it seems to me, having regard to all the circumstances—to dismiss the "blacklegs" in order to make room for the strikers.

The following table shows how share values compare with those of a month ago:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	May 11, 1907.	June 15, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Angelo	5 5/16	2 1/4	3 1/16	3 1/2	+ 7/16
Anglo-French	2 1/4	1 7/16	1 5/32	1 3/32	- 1/16
Apex	6 3/8	2 3/4	3 1/8	2 15/16	- 1/2
Boksburg	1 7/8	5/16	3/32	3/32	—
Cinderella Deep	2 1/2	1 3/8	1 3/8	1 3/8	- 1/4
City and Suburban (£4)	5 1/2	3 1/4	3 5/16	3 1/16	- 3/8
Consolidated Goldfields	6 3/8	3	4 3/32	3 5/16	- 17/32
Consolidated Main Reef	1 1/16	1/4	5/8	5/8	—
Crown Deep	13 1/2	10 1/4	11 3/4	12 1/4	+1 1/2
Crown Reef	13	7 1/2	8 3/8	7 3/8	-1
De Beers Pref. (£2 10s.)	18 1/4	16 3/4	18 1/4	17 1/4	- 3/4
" " Def. (£2 10s.)	24 1/4	16 3/8	26 1/4	23 1/4	-3 3/8
Driefontein	3 5/16	1 1/4	1 3/4	1 3/4	—
Durban Roodepoort	4	2 3/8	2	2	—
East Rand Proprietary	7 3/8	3 1/8	4 7/32	3 31/32	- 1/4
Ferreira	20 1/2	17 1/2	19	18 3/4	- 1/4
Ferreira Deep	5 5/8	4 1/2	5 1/4	4 1/2	- 3/8
Geduld	5 1/16	1 5/8	1 3/4	1 11/16	- 1/16
Geldenhuis Estate	4 1/2	3 3/8	2 15/16	2 15/16	—
General Mining and Finance	2 9/16	1 3/8	1 1/2	1 7/16	- 1/16
Goerz A. & Co.	3 3/16	1 3/16	1 1/4	15/16	- 5/16
Henderson's Transvaal	16/3	7/-	9/3	7/9	-1/6
Jagersfontein Def.	10 3/8	7 7/8	9 1/2	8x	-24/-
Johannesburg Con. Inv't	1 1/8	1	1 5/16	1 1/8	- 3/16
Jubilee	3 1/4	1 7/8	1 15/16	1 7/8	+ 1/16
Jupiter	2 1/4	11/16	15/16	7/8	- 1/16
Knight's	4 1/2	2 5/16	3 1/2	3 1/8	- 1/8
Langlaagte Estate	3	2 5/16	2 7/16	2 5/16	- 1/8
May Consolidated	3 1/16	2 1/16	2 1/4	2 1/16	+ 1/16
Meyer and Charlton	4 1/4	3 3/4	3 3/4	4	+ 1/4
New African	1 5/16	3/4	3/4	3/4	- 1/16
New Comet	3	1 3/8	1 3/8	1 5/16	- 1/16
New Goch	2 3/8	1	1	1	—
New Heriot	4 1/2	2 3/8	3 1/4	3 3/32	- 1/4
New Kleinfontein	1 7/8	13/16	1 5/32	1 1/8	- 3/32
New Modderfontein (£4)	8 1/16	4 5/8	6 5/16	5 1/16	-1
New Primrose	3 1/2	2 3/8	2 3/4	2 3/4	—
Nigel	3 1/4	2 3/8	2 7/8	2 3/8	- 1/2
Oceana Consolidated	1 3/8	11/16	17/3	15·9	-1/6
Premier Dia'md Def. (2s. 6d.)	19 3/8	8	12 5/8	9 3/4	- 2 7/8
Randfontein Estate	2 1/8	1 1/8	1 5/32	1 1/32	- 3/32
" North	1 13/16	1 1/16	1 1/16	1 1/8	- 1/16
" Porges	1 15/16	1 5/8	1 5/8	1 1/16	- 1/16
" Robinson	1 1/2	25/32	1 1/16	13/16	- 1/8
" South	1 3/4	1	1 1/4	1 1/4	—
Rand Mines (5s. sh.)	7 15/16	5 3/32	6 11/32	5 5/8	- 23/32
Robinson (£5)	8 5/8	6 3/4	8 1/8	8 1/4	- 1/8
Robinson Central Deep	6 3/4	4 3/4	5 3/4	5 1/4	- 1/2
Robinson Deep	5 9/16	4 1/16	4 1/16	4 1/16	- 1/8
Roodepoort United	2 3/8	1 1/4	1 1/4	1 1/8	- 1/8
South African Gold Mines	6	1 3/8	1 3/4	1 3/4	- 1/8
South African Gold Trust	4 3/8	1 7/8	2 5/8	2 1/8	- 3/8
Simmer and Jack	1 13/16	1 1/8	1 1/2	1 3/8	- 3/32
Transvaal Consd. Land	2 1/8	1 1/16	2 1/16	1 15/16	- 1/8
Transvaal Est. and Dev'mt.	21/3	9/6	13/3	10/9	-2/6
Transvaal Goldfields	1 1/8	15/16	15/16	7/8	- 1/16
Treasury	2 3/4	1 1/16	1 1/16	1 3/4	+ 1/16
Van Ryn	3 3/8	2 5/16	3 1/16	3	- 1/16
Village Deep	3 3/8	1 3/8	1 3/4	1 3/4	—
Village Main Reef	4 3/4	3 1/4	3 1/4	3 1/16	- 1/16
Welgedacht	6	2 3/8	3 3/8	2 3/8	- 1
Witwatersrand Deep	3 1/8	2 1/16	3 1/8	3 1/16	—
Wolhuter	3 1/4	2 1/8	1 15/16	1 7/8	- 1/16

Business in Rhodesians has continued on a limited scale, but the tendency latterly has been a trifle better, and when general market conditions become more settled the leading shares of this department will possibly pick up a little. Meanwhile, it is worthy of note that the Rhodesian gold production increased materially again last month—in fact, the May figures are a record, beating the previous highest by over two thousand ounces:—

——	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.
	Oz.	Oz.	Oz.	Oz.	Oz.
January	16,245	19,359	32,531	42,950	47,048
February	17,090	18,073	30,131	38,037	40,482
March	19,626	17,756	34,927	44,574	46.887
April	20,727	17,862	33,268	42,423	49,772
May	22,137	19,424	31,332	46,729	52,068
June	22,166	20,402	35,256	47,664	—
July	23,571	24,339	34,693	48,485	—
August	19,187	24,669	35,765	50,127	—
September	18,741	26,029	35,785	48,410	—
October	17,918	24,919	33,333	45,644	—
November	15,714	26,183	32,861	48,503	—
December	18,750	28,100	37,116	48,520	—
Total	231,872	267,715	407,048	551,875	236,857

UNIVERSITY LIBRARY, Handle Carefully, LOWER HUTT, N.Z.

INDICATIONS OF A REVIVAL IN THE BROKEN HILL GROUP—SIGNIFICANCE OF THE COLONIAL DEMAND—DIVIDEND POSSIBILITIES AND INTRINSIC MERITS.

In view of the indications of a revival in the Broken Hill group some particulars of the present position of the mines, supplementary to the article I gave in TRUTH of January 2 last, may be of interest. During the last few months the Zinc Corporation disappointment, the fears of a water famine on the field, and financial difficulties in the Stock Exchange have somewhat overshadowed the group. Within the last fortnight heavy rains on the Barrier have apparently removed the worst of these troubles, and the colony has begun picking up shares on the London market. The turn in the tide is the more appropriate in that it comes at the beginning of the Australian winter, when the Colonial speculators are usually most active. They are always credited with being a very shrewd crowd, paying more attention to intrinsic merits than to insiders' talk, and the British operator who is content to watch how the Colonial cat jumps, and jumps himself as soon after as possible, is likely to do well. The following table shows the course of quotations for Broken Hill shares in the past three years compared with current prices:—

Share.	1905.		1906.		1907.		Present Price.
	High'st.	Lowest.	High'st.	Lowest	High'st.	Lowest
British Broken Hill	38/3	15/-	58/-	30/6	2 3/16	1 1/4	2
Broken Hill Prop. (3s. share)	78/-	41/3	117/6	63/9	5 5/16	4 1/16	4 1/4
B. H. Block 10, (£10 shares, £9 13s. pd.)	5 1/8	1	6 1/4	3 15/16	5 1/2	4 1/8	5
B. H. Block 14 (£1 5s. shares)	1 1/2	7/8	2	1 1/4	1 15/16	1 1/8	1 5/8
B. H. Block Pref. (6s. shares)	—	—	1 5/8	1 1/2	1 15/16	1 1/8	1 5/8
B. H. Junc., North	—	—	2	1 7/16	2	1 3/16	1 5/8
Broken Hill North	3 1/8	1 1/8	5 1/16	2 1/4	4 3/8	3 1/16	3 15/16
Broken Hill South	4 7/16	2 1/16	8 1/4	3 1/2	8 1/2	7	7 1/8
B. H. South Blocks	—	—	2 1/16	1	2 3/4	1 1/32	1 7/8
Sulphide Corporation (15s. share)	—	—	20/6	11/-	25/-	15/6	18/-
Sulphide Corporation Pref.	—	—	31/-	22/6	1 1/16	1 1/4	28/6
Lead per ton	£ s. d. 17 17 6	£ s. d. 11 17 6	£ s. d. 20 5 0	£ s. d. 15 17 6	£ s. d. 21 15 0	£ s. d. 19 7 6	£ s. d. 21 15 0

From the above table it will be seen that prices generally are well below the highest of last year, although intrinsic conditions have further improved. As regards that most important factor, the price of lead, the present quotation of £21 15s. per ton is a fresh record, and what it means to the companies may be gathered from the fact that the Proprietary has paid dividends with lead under £10 per ton, and when working costs were higher than now. As to the delay in realising zinc profits, which the Zinc Corporation's troubles have entailed on the British, Block 10, South and Block 14 companies, the matter is really of minor importance compared with the earnings now being secured at the current high price of lead, and we have not allowed for possible zinc profits in the following calculations. Lead and silver profits, therefore, form the basis of the following analysis of the dividend prospects of the individual mines. The particulars furnished should enable readers to make up their minds as to purchases in the Broken Hill group, according to whether they fancy good present yields, or more speculative possibilities.

The Broken Hill Proprietary is indisputably the premier company of the group. During its existence of just over twenty years it has distributed over £9,000,000 in dividends to its fortunate shareholders. The Proprietary's capital now stands at £384,000, in 960,000 shares of 8s. each, the majority of which are held in Great Britain and on the Continent. Recent quarterly dividends have been at the rate of 1s. 6d., plus a bonus of 1s. per share, which at 10s. per annum is equal to a yield of nearly 12 per cent. on the present price of 4¼. The company, however, has been placing its financial position in an unprecedentedly strong condition, and its reserve fund now stands at £250,000, so that future profits should be available to increase dividends. Profits for the half-year ended May 31 have not yet been announced, but must have scored a further substantial advance on the previous six months, and it would not be surprising if the dividend due to be announced about the middle of July is raised to 3s. or 3s. 6d. per share. The ore reserves are conservatively estimated at five years' supply. The Proprietary Company has several extra strings to its bow, in the shape of the zinc works (which as yet seem to have involved more expense than profit), the option on the Pinnacles leases, and the possible establishment of an iron smelting business.

British Broken Hills, like Proprietaries, have always been a favourite on this side, and this company shares with the Sulphide Corporation and the Broken Hill South Blocks the distinction of holding its meetings in London, not in the Colony. The British has a capital of £264,000, in 240,000 ordinary £1 shares and 60,000 privileged 8s. shares. The only difference between the two classes of shares is that in the event of liquidation the latter would merely rank in the division of assets in the proportion of their nominal value as compared with the nominal value of the ordinary. An interim dividend is paid in December of each year, and a final in the following May. For 1906, 5s. 6d. per share was distributed, against 4s. 6d. for 1905, the yield at the present price of 2 being, therefore, 13¾ per cent. It would be premature to estimate the results for the current year, but since the company has been fully distributing its profits no very great advance in dividends can be looked for on account of 1907. At the end of 1906 the ore reserves were four years ahead of the mill, and since then the continuity of the lode over a horizontal distance of 1,300 ft. at the 800 ft. level has been pretty conclusively proved.

In next week's issue I propose to deal with the position of the other principal mines of this group.

"MONEY MAKING METHODS."

On the principle that when rogues fall out honest men come by their own, a pot and kettle controversy among the bucket-shop brigade cannot but be advantageous to the simple-minded investor. Between them they may open his eyes to all the various tricks of the trade. I rejoice, therefore, to see that the stress of competition in this line of business is generating what promises to be a very pretty quarrel between rival firms. Here, for instance, is an amusing sign of it in the latest circular of the cover-snatcher who calls himself the National Share Exchange. This individual evidently considers that he is being cruelly deprived of a good deal of his legitimate prey by the International Securities Syndicate. Accordingly, the first part of an article headed "Three Money-Making Methods Analysed," which occupies the front page of his circular, is devoted to an examination of the speculative merits of those premium bonds which the Syndicate is unloading on the public at outrageously exorbitant prices. The gist of this part of the article is that the bonds are a delusion and a snare, the chance of any single bondholder drawing a prize being extremely remote. The circular next has a shot at a firm which "offers cartloads of shares at three-pence, six-pence, and a shilling a share—stuff which is not worth the paper on which the certificates are printed"—a firm which "dares to attack straightforward methods of finance in order to get rid of their veritable trash." This is plainly an allusion to the Consolidated Securities Company, which, as I showed a few weeks ago, points out the folly of speculation on margin only with the object of persuading people into an equally foolish speculation in "low-priced shares." The third of the "money-making methods" discussed by the National Share Exchange is, of course, the cover system of "speculative investment," which is strongly recommended "to the small investor and to the novice in Stock Exchange business" as a system "whereby their incomes may be increased without work by thoroughly legitimate means." This statement, coupled with the fact that the novice is advised to try a deal in American Rails on a 1 per cent. margin, is a sufficient indication of the character of this concern. Its whole aim is to grab the money deposited with it by its unfortunate dupes.

ROMANO'S RESTAURANT, STRAND.—Truth says:—"On the way down the Strand I dropped in to dine at Romano's—I was glad to see how well the place maintains its old reputation. A better-cooked and better-served dinner no one need desire."

A great many of the victims of the cover-snatchers do not really understand that they have been gambling until they have lost their money. They actually imagine that they are making a safe investment, when they are merely betting on the rise and fall of shares—betting, too, with enormously long odds against them. Only a day or two ago I had a letter from an elderly miner in the North of England, who, credulously believing what he was told in one of the flamboyant advertisements of the notorious firm of Arnold and Butler, drew his small savings out of the Post Office, in the hope that an "investment" on their "marginal system" would be a provision for his old age. There was the usual result—the cover ran off—and the poor old fellow then wrote to me to know whether the law sanctioned such transactions. I am sorry to say that it does, and as a journalist I am still more sorry to see that innumerable newspapers, including the Times, aid and abet this disgraceful business by publishing Arnold and Butler's grossly misleading advertisements. Another correspondent, who appears to have been equally innocent, tells me of two similar experiences that he has had with Barry, Hutton, and Co., Pinner's-court, Old Broad-street, and Fraser, Greig, and Co., 65, Gracechurch-street. Judging, indeed, from the correspondence that I am getting, the bucket-shops are just now doing a roaring trade. Lee, Bailie, and Co., Eastwood and Co., J. B. McKenzie, the Stock Exchange Investment Corporation, Milne, Son, and Hamilton, and other cover-snatchers whose circulars I have frequently noticed, are all on the warpath, and almost every week some fresh bucket-shop is opened. People who are tempted to indulge in this species of gambling should remember that not only is it always extremely probable that the stocks tipped for an advance will decline—that is what the tipster naturally counts upon—but that even in the unlikely event of a rise occurring, it is ten to one that they will be unable to obtain the profit that is supposed to have been made. The bucket-shop keeper, if he is sued, can always plead the Gaming Act, and, as is constantly shown by cases in the courts, he rarely fails to do so.

THE COALITE PROSPECTUS.

The long-expected prospectus of the British Coalite Co., Limited, is now published. By this time most people are aware that coalite is manufactured from ordinary coal by a refining process, the invention of Mr. Thomas Parker. Exhaustive experiments have been made with it, and great advantages are claimed for coalite as an economical and smokeless fuel, while its manufacture yields various valuable by-products. The company has been formed to purchase the patent rights for manufacturing and dealing in coalite in the United Kingdom, to acquire freehold sites at Barking and Wednesfield, together with the coalite plant capable of an output of about 15,000 tons per annum which is now in operation, and to take over a contract with Wm. Cory and Son, Ltd., under which they agree for twenty-one years to collect and sell the whole of the company's output, in the metropolitan and other areas. The capital is £2,000,000, divided into 1,500,000 ordinary shares of £1 each, and 500,000 deferred ordinary shares of £1 each. Out of the profits the ordinary shares will be first entitled to a non-cumulative dividend of 6 per cent. per annum, and the surplus profits will be distributed equally between the ordinary shares and the deferred ordinary shares. The ordinary shares are now offered for public subscription, the list closing for London to-morrow (Thursday), and for the country on Friday. The directors are men of high reputation in the commercial world, and the vendors have shown their confidence in the prospects of the company by taking practically the whole of the purchase consideration in deferred ordinary shares. It must be borne in mind, however, that at the best an undertaking of this kind must be to some extent speculative.

BRUNNEN.—GRAND HOTEL. The most exquisite spot on Lake Lucerne. Thoroughly first class. 250 rooms and saloons. American Bar. English and French billiards.

"VIGILANT'S" LETTER BOX.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can I reply by post, and as there seems to be a misunderstanding in the minds of many of my readers, I wish to emphasise the fact that a coupon must be attached to every inquiry. A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the coloured cover of TRUTH.

2. Six different stocks are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks an additional coupon or coupons (one for every half-a-dozen stocks) must be forwarded. The answering of many of the inquiries I receive necessitates a great deal of careful research, and I shall therefore be compelled henceforth to enforce this regulation. Its necessity will be apparent when I state that some correspondents send lists of 20 or 30 different stocks covering every class and description of Investment.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication; cards are apt to be lost or misplaced, causing unnecessary trouble.

4. Anonymous letters will not in any case be attended to.

5. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

6. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written, and numbered.

7. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

8. I do not recommend brokers or solicitors.

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

Beaulieu.—The scrip was issued a few months ago, and since my recommendation to which you refer the discount has narrowed from 3 to about 1½ per cent. I still think the bonds a desirable purchase.

RAILWAYS.

R. W. C.—None of the suggested securities is suitable for your purpose. I would suggest the new Four and a Half per Cent. debentures of the Buenos Ayres and Pacific railway, quoted at about 96. These are a high-class investment, and, seeing that the yield is more than 4⅝ per cent., they possess prospects of a fair rise in value. With regard to your last question, you might make the exchange with advantage. Tu Haura.—No. 2 is worth buying, and you need have no doubts about the soundness of No. 6. No. 1 is hardly suitable, as it is redeemable at par in 1915. Atchison Five per Cent. Ten Year Convertible Bonds would be a better selection. The three ordinary stocks are sound of their kind, but the dividend outlook during the next few years is somewhat uncertain, and I hardly regard them as attractive. You could get value by substituting for them Buenos Ayres and Pacific New Four and a Half per Cent. Debentures, Antofagasta and Bolivia New Five per Cent. Debentures and National of Mexico Four per Cent. First Mortgage bonds.

MINES.

R. L. B.—New Kleinfontein, Wit Deep and Ferreira Deep should suit you. T. T.—1. It would be as well to exchange into something more promising, but I do not care to recommend the copper shares mentioned. 2. There was, I believe, heavy forced liquidation some time ago, and latterly there has been practically no interest in the shares. 3. The shares have declined in view of the suspension of dividends, but I would not sell now. 4. A fair speculative holding. 5. Hold. Mac.—Both very speculative, and you could employ your money more hopefully elsewhere. J. L.—As holdings for dividends, I prefer the South Africans to the Indians. East Anglian.—I have heard nothing recently as to the company's affairs. On the terms of the prospectus the shares seemed a fair purchase, but little speculative interest has been taken in them so far.

MIXED.

Deccane.—You could obtain 4½ to 5 per cent. with excellent security by spreading the money over the following ten descriptions:—Japanese Four and a Half per Cent. bonds (first series), Antofagasta and Bolivia Railway Five per Cent. new debentures, Buenos Ayres and Pacific Four and a Half per Cent. new debentures, National Railroad of Mexico Four per Cent. First Consolidated Mortgage bonds, United Railways of the Havana Five per Cent. Irredeemable debentures (1906), United States Steel Corporation Five per Cent. Second Mortgage bonds, Atchison Railroad Five per Cent. Convertible Ten Year bonds, Grand Trunk Railway Five per Cent. Second Preference stock, Imperial Tobacco Six per Cent. Preferred Ordinary, and Home and Colonial Six per Cent. Preference. Cura peculi.—1. You might transfer the whole or part to the London County Council Three and a Half per Cent. new loan, upon which the yield is about 3⅝ per cent. 2. The security is good enough, and I do not think it is likely to be affected by political happenings. At the same time the fact that the debentures are redeemable by drawings at par precludes any material advance in the price. You might do better by exchanging into the new Four and a Half per Cent. debentures of the Buenos Ayres and Pacific Railway, quoted at about 96. 3 and 4. Perfectly sound and worth keeping. 5 and 6. These are safe investments. G., Dublin.—1. A moderate recovery is not unlikely, provided traffic returns in the near future shape a little better. 2. No. 3. If you had read my remarks during the last few weeks you would have had no need to ask such a question. Trunk Thirds, among Canadian Railways, have big speculative possibilities. Better leave Americans alone. 4. An entirely different publication. Woodrobin.—1. Defer a purchase of Bostons, while the copper outlook remains uncertain. 2. Yes. 3. Make a selection from the list of ten stocks given to "Deccane." 4. Sorry, but I am unable to decipher the name. 5. Gross earnings were splendid. The fault was with the rise in operating expenses, and I do not see how the railroad expenditure for the month could have been affected by the strike. 6. I have not heard that the line suffered by the earthquake. 7. Worth holding. 8. Not very hopeful. 9. The company is in debt, and prospects appear almost hopeless. Negwhead.—1. This question is answered by the special article on the East Rand group in last week's issue 2. Good enough, but the option to redeem at par will prevent much rise. With regard to both this stock and the other four you name, I do not see any great attraction. You might do better by selecting five out of the ten securities recommended to "Deccane." Intertrigs.—Your investments have been carefully chosen, and you may safely sleep on them. A. H. B.—1-5. All good for permanent investment, but No. 2, though well secured, might possibly be further depreciated by threatened legislation. 6. Hold what you have, but do not buy more just now. Lambert, Kilkenny.—1. See answer under "Insurance Notes." 2, 3, and 4. Very speculative purchases just now, but might yield a small profit. O. K.—1. Would advise you to cut the loss. You would have to prove such an assertion, which is a difficult matter. The shares stand at a discount. 2. I do not regard either with favour. Togo.—1. They do not appear interesting as a speculation. 2. The shares move in sympathy with the South African market. 3. Their chief attraction is the high yield. 4. Humbers and Daimlers. Van.—Hold all for a possible recovery. Ilford are perhaps a trifle risky. 2. For various reasons it might be best to look on for a while. Charles Benny.—1. Would make a fair investment holding. 2. Could be improved upon, I think. Calcutta —1. The name of the firm mentioned does not appear in the latest list of members of the Stock Exchange. 2. I do not recommend a purchase. 3. You could make a better selection than these at the present time. In the same market I should prefer Eldorados. 4. A fair speculation. Present price about 2s. 5. They may have some recovery when general market conditions improve. I cannot say when a dividend will be paid. Wanderer.—1. I have not a high opinion of these. 2. I am afraid the stock is hopeless, and think you could do better by transferring the proceeds into some sound dividend-paying security. 3. Speculative, but may have a moderate recovery. 4. Hold for the present. E. M. F.—1. These should have some recovery sooner or later. 2. I have no recent information as to this company; write to the secretary. 3. I cannot in any way recommend it.

MISCELLANEOUS.

E. J. H.—Probably a would-be buyer would find that the firm was not, after all, ready to deliver your company's shares at the price named, but anxious to unload others of a less desirable character. I referred to a similar circular from the same parties on March 20. Spes.—I am not acquainted with any similar concern. Delta.—1 and 2. Yes. S. and Co.—Your letter shall receive consideration. Tu Haura.—I have never had occasion to criticise them, but I always recommend dealing through a member of the Stock Exchange. Argyll.—1. See "Insurance Notes" in another column. 2. Imperial Tobacco Preferred Ordinary would be a thoroughly sound commercial investment. 3. A hopeful purchase. J. W., Roehampton.—Hold them. H. L. S.—1. See "Insurance Notes." 2. The International Securities Syndicate, like the Paris firms of Cunliffe, Russell, and Co., and Melville, Glyn, and Co., charge prices for the bonds which are enormously in excess of their current market value. Read my articles of May 29 and June 12 on this premium bond business. F. E., Spendthrift, Old Bird, and other correspondents. — See preceding answer. Malplaquet.—You have already had my opinion in the article you send me. If you still want to buy them apply to Messrs. N. Keizer and Co., 29, Threadneedle-street, E.C. As to English securities, I would make a recommendation if you would say what amount you have to invest. P. W.—Unless you wish to throw away your money the objection as to the price ought to make you avoid the firm; but, apart from that, I have had no occasion to criticise them. Worried.—The National Share Exchange is a cover-snatching bucket-shop, with which you should have nothing to do. M. O. M.—The preceding answer also applies to Arnold and Butler. Reader.—I will give the suggested warning. F. H., Bridgetown.—I think he was dealt with in TRUTH a great many years ago, but he shall have another notice. F. B.—I published an exposure of "A. Lawrence and Co." on May 22. R. V. M.—The Lee, Baillie and Co. bucket-shop shall again receive my attention. Rusticus Expectans.—Apply to the Crédit Lyonnais or to Messrs. N. Keizer and Co., whose address is given above. I have forwarded the name of the Paris solicitor. Illustrious.—1. They would make a fair commercial investment. 2. I have heard nothing against them. Bantam.—You are mistaken. The prospectus had not been published up till Monday morning, but if it appears in time it will be dealt with in this week's issue. Trafalgar.—The resumption of dividend payments ought to be possible within a year. The Preference being cumulative the arrears of interest will have to be paid. K. C. W.—Provided some discretion is exercised in selecting them, such Preference shares would make a fair commercial holding. Calcutta.—As the contemplated legislation has been postponed, the securities may recover a little when domestic conditions improve. Cut the loss then and put the proceeds into something with promise. Bobs.—Joining the reconstruction would involve some risk, but there is a possibility that the concern will benefit in the long run. Colt —1. See answer to "Bobs." 2. Prospects are more hopeful. 3 and 4. Should be held. A. J. R., Bath.—I have continually warned my readers against this system of speculation. The legal question is one for a solicitor's opinion. F. C. F.—Thanks for your communication, of which I may make use some time when again dealing with the firm. W. Athill.—I am afraid that you have no legal remedy against this bucket-shop.

MISCELLANEOUS—HUDSON'S BAY DIVIDEND DISAPPOINTMENT—COATS'S RISE AND RUMOURS—IRON AND COAL COMPANIES—MOTORS RALLY—'BUS SHARES AND THE FARES QUESTION.

In the Miscellaneous market the most interesting event of the week was the announcement of the Hudson's Bay dividend. With the £3 5s. now to be paid the total distribution for the year is made up to £4 5s. per £10 share, which is 5s. more than was distributed twelve months ago, but at least 5s. less than some of the "bulls" had anticipated. The addition that has been made to the dividend absorbs £25,000, a similar sum has been placed to the credit of the building account, and £10,000 to the employees' benefit fund. These two allocations correspond with those of last year, but whereas £15,000 was then set aside for irrigation, no such expenditure is mentioned now. The carry-forward is, however, increased from £96,300 to £117,900, and on the whole it is evident from the preliminary statement that the company has enjoyed a very prosperous year. All the same, it is obvious that there never was the smallest intrinsic justification for the booming of the shares to 130, the high-water mark which they touched towards the end of last year. Though the merits of Bays were frequently emphasised in this column when they stood at a reasonable figure, my readers were always warned of the inevitable consequences of the wild gamble that was in progress last year. It is amusing to remember that in December, when the interim dividend was doubled, some people actually talked of the probable doubling of the total distribution for the year—a prediction which I characterised as ludicrously over-sanguine. Since then Bays have come down about 40 points, the fall having been recently accelerated by the forced liquidation of a very large account. On the dividend announcement last week there was a further relapse to 88½—a price from which some recovery may be expected, though there is not the least likelihood that the shares will again be hoisted to their former high level. In the Textile section the outstanding feature has been the recent steady rise in J. and P. Coats shares. There does not seem to have been any foundation for the rumour as to a new working arrangement with the English Sewing Cotton Company, while the suggestion that in view of the huge reserves that have now been accumulated the directors will in future distribute the whole of the profits is generally received with a good deal of scepticism. The Coats' concern undoubtedly occupies an extraordinarily strong position, and its securities are among the very soundest of industrial investments. The yield, however, is so small—on the ordinary shares at last week's making-up price it is only £3 5s. 6d. per cent.—that the average investor is inclined to regard it as inadequate. Among Textiles, by the way, a return of nearly 4½ per cent. can be obtained from Fine Cotton Spinners cumulative preference shares, while the ordinary yield over 6¼ per cent. Bradford Dyers ordinary return just over 5½ per cent.

In the Iron and Coal list hardly any changes have been registered. Apart from the possibilities of troubles in regard to wages and hours of labour, to which Mr. A. F. Pease alluded at the meeting of Pease and Partners, the outlook for these trades continues good; and yet another proof of their present flourishing condition has been afforded by the report of the Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron, and Coal Company. The net profits have increased from £43,107 to £118,947, and for the first time the company pays its ordinary shareholders a dividend of 10 per cent. There was a general rally in motor shares, and though neither Humbers nor Daimlers have maintained the whole of the advance that had been secured at the beginning of the week, both these shares can still be recommended as promising purchases. In connection with the reported decision of the underground railways to raise their fares, an advance has occurred in the securities of the two leading 'bus companies, on the assumption that they will follow the example of the railways. It is unquestionable that some of the present 'bus fares—more especially for the longer journeys—are unremunerative. It does not follow, however, that the raising of fares would bring about that improvement in the position and prospects of the London General and the London Road Car Companies which some people seem to anticipate. Some, at least, of the gilt would be taken off the gingerbread by a diminution in the number of passengers. Another thing to be borne in mind is that so far as its commercial success is concerned, the motor 'bus is still in a more or less experimental stage. Meanwhile, both the London General and the Road Car traffic receipts last week again exhibited a falling off, making a decrease to date of £49,409 in the case of the former company, and of £6,907 in the case of the latter.

VIGILANT.

COMPANY MEETINGS.

Wm. Cory & Son, Limited.

The eleventh annual ordinary general meeting was held on June 11 at the Cannon Street Hotel, E.C., Sir Francis Cory-Wright, Bart., Chairman of the Company, presiding.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said: We propose—as we have done for the past six years—to pay you 10 per cent., and I may say that, in my opinion, in a commercial undertaking 10 per cent. is a very fair dividend to pay, and is quite as much as a commercial undertaking ought to be expected to pay. If more money than that can be made it should be spent, in my opinion, in further depreciating, if possible, and adding to our reserve. The reserve has had no addition to it—the main reserve of £250,000—for six years. We have gone through a series of what I might call quite normal years—not very good years, though they might have been worse; but, at any rate, we have managed to pay you 10 per cent., and if the time comes, as I hope it will, when we shall do somewhat better, the time will also have come when your reserve should be increased; £250,000 is not sufficient for an undertaking of this character, and it is in the interests of the shareholders and of everybody concerned in this Company that we should build up a substantial reserve. We do not know what will happen, or what may take the place of coal. A great deal of our assets may in course of time, for aught we know, be of little value, and we must be prepared to have as large a reserve as possible. I have no doubt you will all be expecting that I should say something to you about this new invention of coalite. Coalite, as I understand it, is the product of a new invention of Mr. Parker, of Wolverhampton. It is claimed, and I think on good grounds, that this fuel will result to a great extent in clearing London of the thick fogs from which we suffer, and which are caused largely by the smoke emitted from the domestic and factory chimney. If this new fuel proves, as it is claimed to be, absolutely smokeless, it should, consequently, have a great future before it. This Company has entered into an agreement with the new Coalite Company, which is to exploit this invention, to act with them in the purchase of coal and in the sale of coalite, and if it meets with the success anticipated it should prove a source of great revenue to this Company; and I maintain that our services will prove equally advantageous to the new Company—British Coalite, Limited—as soon as it is put upon the market. I cannot say anything more about that Company, because I believe it is coming out to the public in a very short time, and you will be able to read the prospectus and make inquiries for yourselves. But this Company's connection with coalite is this: If coalite is going to be the great success that many people anticipate—and I myself think there will be a great demand for it, as it will be a splendid thing to do away with the smoke from the chimneys, and there is no doubt, too, that it makes a very hot fire—Wm. Cory and Son ought to be in it. We are making an arrangement, extending over a term, to act as their agents practically for the purchase of coal and for the sale of coalite in a certain area, which will be defined by the agreement so soon as the new Company gets to work.

Mr. F. D. Lambert (Deputy Chairman) seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

INSURANCE NOTES.

Domestic Servants' Insurance.

In my special Insurance Supplement of May 15, under the heading of "Points about Policies," I wrote at some length about the essential features of a policy which would effectively cover an employer's liability. On June 10 I was glad to see that the Daily Telegraph dealt with the same subject, laying stress upon the same points that I did. This paper also gave a specimen policy embodying the Daily Telegraph's views and mine, and I am glad to see that several of the best and strongest companies have announced their intention to revise their policies in accordance with the views which I expressed a month ago, and which the Daily Telegraph enunciated last week. At a later date the Daily Mail did something of the same sort, and they, too, have persuaded a company to adopt a more satisfactory policy than it formerly issued.

This, of course, means that all the other companies will follow the example that has been set by the principal offices, and that adequate insurance protection will be obtainable from almost every sound company. It is important to lay stress upon this latter qualification, since financial stability is the most essential requisite in any office which undertakes liabilities of the serious nature involved by the Workmen's Compensation Act, especially when it is remembered that compensation may involve an annuity for life, and that it is quite possible for an office to be solvent to-day and insolvent ten or twenty years hence.

I am rather wondering what has become of the Employers' Liability Insurance Companies Bill, which, as originally drafted, was to come into force on July 1. Subject to certain important changes in the wording, this would make an extremely valuable Act, and tend to eliminate, either by amalgamation or by evaporation, a number of companies which "never would be missed." It is a measure which I should imagine even the partiest politician would not wish to obstruct.

Inasmuch as insurance cannot with prudence be delayed any longer, it is worth while to consider once again the points that should be and the points that should not be included in a good policy for domestic servants' insurance. The first thing is that the employer should make sure that he is covered, not merely against legal liability, but against having to defend at his own cost any claim which may be made upon him. If a servant claimed against his master and the case were decided in the master's favour, the employer, under some of the policies, would have no legal claim on the insurance company for the costs of defending the case. A provision to pay the costs of defending claims, as well as indemnifying the employer against his legal liability, ought therefore to be included in every policy. It, of course, is included when the employer is indemnified against all claims.

A little matter of words, which in a respectable insurance company is not of importance, but which in an inferior office might give a loophole of escape, is that the person insured had better be described in a policy as the "employer," rather than as the "insured." This is one of the points about this subject which would have delighted the subtle school men of the Middle Ages, who debated how many angels could balance themselves on the point of a pin, and whether the owner, or the boy, or the rope led the pig to market. To quote the "Mikado," "the fool of an Act" says, "In this Act, 'employer' includes . . . the legal personal representative of a deceased employer." If a man dies, his executors are therefore responsible to his servants, but if "the insured" dies I am not at all certain that an insurance company would be liable to his executors, in which case the executors would have to pay an injured servant out of the estate. This is a legal point raised by a friend of mine, and it is just possible there is something in it.

Another point, which is very important, is that the policy should not limit the indemnity to the happening of an accident when the servant is employed only in the kind of employment mentioned in the schedule to the policy. If the housemaid does the cooking while the cook is on her holiday, and has an accident while cooking, she is not insured under such a policy. This condition is even more important in regard to outdoor servants, since in the case of, for instance, a gardener attending to a horse, he is meant to be excluded from the liability an insurance company undertakes when "employed as set forth" is the wording. It is, therefore, important to see that the words "servants named in the schedule," or some such phrase is employed, rather than "servants engaged in the employment described in the schedule." A great many of the companies retained an arbitration clause in their policy, but this has already been abandoned by several of them, and there is little doubt that it will in the future disappear from them all. I can quite understand an insurance company liking it, but I can also understand private individuals objecting to it, and on the whole it seems distinctly better for it to be left out.

Some policies expressly limit their sphere of operations to the United Kingdom, but it is by no means clear that the employer's liability is limited in this way, and it therefore seems to me much better that the policy should contain no such restriction. If a company thinks the Act does not apply outside the limits of the United Kingdom, then the omission of the limiting words is of no moment to the office, while if the Act does apply to the chauffeur or lady's maid taken abroad by an English employer, then it is necessary that the employer should be protected.

A good many of the policies require notice of every accident, and, technically, the policy is invalidated if such notice is not given. In these circumstances nobody would feel quite sure when they need, and when they need not, write to insurance companies about petty injuries to their domestics. It is very necessary that the offices should have early advice of all accidents likely to bring about serious consequences, since it is a great advantage to be able to investigate the circumstances of the accident as soon as possible after it happens. A modification of this condition that adequately protects the companies and yet leaves no doubt in the minds of the policy-holders as to what they ought to do, is to put a clause in the policy providing that notice should be sent to the company of accidents which result in disablement, but not notice of every accident.

A further condition in regard to which opinion may well differ is about the engagement of additional permanent servants. It seems to me best for the policy-holder to be free to take on additional servants without being required to send notice to a company, and for the policy to provide that these extra servants are insured from the date of their engagement. In such a case it is necessary that the policy-holder should tell the company of any extra servants engaged when paying the next renewal premium, and, of course, pay the extra premium required for the insurance for such additional servants. The objection to this course is that it requires a statement from each policy-holder when the renewal premium is sent. It seems to me that if the policy were worded so as to be null and void in regard to all employees if the condition as to notifying (when paying the next premium) the engagement of additional servants were not complied with, the companies would have very little trouble in obtaining the requisite statement in the relatively few cases where it would be required. I think, therefore, that a clause providing for the insurance of additional servants without notification until the next renewal premium falls due is a desirable feature.

Of course, one of the most important points to be attended to is the wording in regard to casual employees. These can quite well be included in the schedule, and such expressions as "all casual employees," or "temporary servants," or "all workmen in the employer's temporary or casual service," meet this requirement in quite satisfactory fashion.

The conditions above referred to cover all that it is necessary for an employer to see included in the policy, but there are sundry conditions found in some policies which he ought to be careful to have excluded. There should be no power to terminate the policy before the end of any insurance year, though naturally every company must retain the right to decline to renew the insurance. Then it seems undesirable to require the employer to take reasonable care and comply with all statutory requirements; there is no such clause as this in the policies of many of the best companies, and it limits the comprehensiveness of the policy if it is inserted. Yet, again, there should be no positive statement required from the employer to the effect that his servants are healthy or sound. It seems not unreasonable that such a statement might be required to "the best of the knowledge and belief" of the employer, but even this is not asked for by some of the best offices. If these points are attended to in the selection of a policy, and if care is taken to select an office of undoubted stability, an employer may feel confident that he is fully protected.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

[Every letter containing an inquiry on the subject of insurance must be accompanied by a coupon cut from the third page of the coloured cover of TRUTH.]

Chick.—Ocean Accident Corporation. Lambert.—Quite good. Ask for their revised policy. H. L. A. S.—The company is good; the insurance policy not so good as it might be at present. Silvio Pellico.—Tell me your age and I can advise you better. Argyll.—The company and the prospects are good. There seems no need to wait. L. W.—The company is sound, and at your age you had better keep your policy in force rather than sacrifice the premium and assure elsewhere. Nip.—The Northern Accident has been taken over by the Royal, and the revised policy of the Royal is one of the best. Probably you could get a revised Royal policy for the one you have. Grainge.—Clergy Mutual, Rock, Economic, Norwich Union. Carnation.—You are rather young to buy an annuity. The probable return for £1,000 would only be about £50 a year. The Yorkshire or the Clergy Mutual Insurance Company would quote you the exact rate.

All Rights reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

AURELIA'S ASCOT.

THE whole trouble arose out of Aurelia St. Ruth's insane determination to go to Ascot; and I say "insane," because she was so circumstanced just then that her contemplated visit to the great Royal and annual function on the Berkshire heath really did constitute an act of madness. For consider the facts of the case. She was going to stay the week with the "Tommy" Johnstons, who were entertaining a distinguished party at Pangbourne Castle for the races; and to spend Ascot week at such a house and in such company was an exceedingly expensive amusement. It involved four smart new race-course toilettes and an equal number of smart new dinner frocks. Put the total cost of these at £200, and you would be rather inside than outside the mark. But this was not all. There would be high play at bridge every night. Another £100 must be reserved for that. Then it was no fun going to races unless you had a bit of spare cash for betting; while even the merely incidental expenses, such as tipping servants and that sort of thing, would run into a tidy sum. Altogether, Aurelia did not see how she could go, with any satisfaction, on less than £350. Yet she couldn't, at the moment, put her finger on a £5 note. How was the difficulty to be got over?

You will say, perhaps, that as far as the frocks, at any rate, went, she might have procured them on credit. But that was just what she couldn't do. Her credit was so bad that not a modiste or a milliner in London would trust her for a penny. Whatever she had she must pay cash for. That was abundantly clear. But how was the cash to be obtained? This problem exercised the fair Aurelia's brain long and painfully. It also set certain astute and unscrupulous schemes revolving in the brain of Millicent Foxcroft.

Millicent Foxcroft was by way of being a dear friend of Aurelia's. She knew her position, and appeared to sympathise with her. But then she was, as everybody was aware, an utterly selfish and unprincipled young woman, in whom appearances were seldom to be trusted, and who never hesitated to turn the necessities of her friends to her own advantage, when she could see her way clear to such a course. This may seem strong language; but I think you will admit that the circumstances which I am about to relate go far to justify my estimate of the fair Millicent's character.

You have heard, of course, of Blithersole's, the well-known Bond-street jeweller. The head of the business, at this time, was Mr. Percy Blithersole, who, while still a comparatively young man, had succeeded (by the recent death of his father) to the position of senior partner, and an income of some £15,000 a year.

Young Blithersole had been educated at Harrow and Oxford, and now imagined himself a gentleman. It was quite a delusion. For though he had acquired something of the outer polish that enables a man to pass muster among strangers, he was essentially one of those sow's ears out of which it is impossible to make a silk purse. His mind was coarse and common. His way of looking at things was vulgar and underbred. And no one could have much to do with him without discovering that he was, at heart, a cad.

However—as is usually the case with such persons—he was sublimely unconscious of his own shortcomings, quite believing that he was, to all intents and purposes, the social equal of any man in clubland. And it was his intention to consolidate his position by marriage with some smart society girl. The girl, whom, after looking about him, he had at length selected for his future wife, was Aurelia St. Ruth.

Aurelia, you see, was pretty, well connected, and undeniably smart. On the other hand, she was notoriously hard up, and a perfect vulture after money. That she would refuse him, with his handsome person (for he was a good-looking fellow in his coarse style) and his £15,000 a year, was a contingency that scarcely entered into his calculations. He began to pay her marked attentions, and, before she had quite realised what he was after, he made her an offer of marriage. This was when she had only known him for about six weeks.

Aurelia was absolutely furious at his impudence. He, a rank outsider—a bounding shopkeeper as she styled him—whose conceited pretensions to be a man of fashion had, from the first, moved her hilarious contempt—he to dare to lift up his eyes to her, in whose veins ran some of the bluest blood in England!—was ever heard such consummate cheek? The fellow wanted a lesson in the wholesome duty of knowing his place. He should get it, too. . . . And he did get it, Aurelia refusing him in terms which would literally have crushed most people, and which made even this thick-skinned and self-sufficient young man wince.

"Never have the audacity to speak to me on this subject again," she said. "I do not like you; there is no possibility of my ever liking you; and even if there were, I certainly should not dream of marrying a man in your social position. Now be good enough to leave me."

Percy Blithersole could hardly believe his ears. His vanity had received a shock from which it took it some weeks to recover. But he was a persistent young man, not easily turned aside from any purpose on which he had set his mind. And even now, he told himself, with clenched teeth, that he would make the haughty Aurelia climb down from her high horse yet.

It was while his refusal by Aurelia was still rankling in his mind, that Millicent Foxcroft—two or three weeks before Ascot—came sailing one morning into the Bond-street shop and asked to see Mr. Percy Blithersole. She was shown into his office, where she found him yawning over a society paper.

"Good morning, Mr. Blithersole," she said, smiling at him sweetly and extending her hand to him with the utmost affability.

"Good morning, Mrs. Foxcroft," he answered, taking her hand in his and bending over it with an exaggerated bow.

He knew her quite well in business (for she had long been a customer) and slightly out of it. Moreover, he admired her for her undoubted beauty and was anxious to improve the acquaintance.

"Pray be seated," he said, politely, placing a chair for her.

Millicent took the seat and regarding the young jeweller with a glance half-arch, half-tentative, began to unfold the object of her visit.

"The fact is, Mr. Blithersole," she said, "it has occurred to me that you and I are in the position to do each other a good turn. Before I go any further, however, I must ask you to treat whatever I may say to you as strictly confidential."

"You may rely on me, my dear Mrs. Foxcroft," he replied, ogling his fair visitor in his most killing manner.

Millicent ogled back. She was not above using her fine eyes on any man whom she desired to get something out of—even though he were only a dustman or a foreign waiter.

"Oh! I know I can trust you," she remarked, with a subtle emphasis on the pronoun, "otherwise I should not be here to-day; for the proposal I have to make is of a very private character. Let me begin by saying that I am fully aware of your sentiments towards Aurelia St. Ruth."

Blithersole frowned and coloured. Aurelia's scornful words were still ringing in his ears; and the recollection was by no means agreeable to him.

"I must say," continued Millicent, sympathetically, "that I was very much surprised to hear that Aurelia had refused you. She has certainly made a great mistake; for she is not likely to get such another offer. I have told her so, candidly."

The frown faded from Blithersole's face at these soothing words. He even began to smile to himself quite complacently. Perhaps—the idea flashed across him—Aurelia had already repented of her refusal and had sent Mrs. Foxcroft to re-open negotiations. As a matter of fact, he was entirely wrong in this surmise, as Millicent's subsequent remarks soon showed. But, for the moment, the thought flattered him.

"Dear Aurelia is one of those headstrong girls," went on Millicent Foxcroft, deliberately, "who not only seems absolutely blind to her own interests, but also appears to entertain a foolish horror of matrimony on any terms. I do not think any man will ever win her by merely wooing her. She wants to be mastered, coerced, frightened. That is really the only way to deal with Aurelia."

As Millicent said this, she fixed her eyes on Blithersole, meaningly. That she had something ulterior in her mind her glance showed him; though what it might be he could not yet conjecture. However, she soon enlightened him.

"You must get Aurelia under your thumb," she said, "you must place her in such a position that you can apply the screw. Then she will yield, but not before. Do you understand me?"

"But how am I to get her under my thumb—to place her in such a position that I can apply the screw?" he inquired, in some evident perplexity.

"That is exactly what I have come here to-day to tell you," she replied, with perfect sangfroid. "Now, please, give me your most careful attention. The state of affairs is this."

And she proceeded, with cool deliberation, to tell him the whole story of her friend's contemplated visit to Pangbourne Castle for the Ascot races, and of the insuperable financial difficulties that stood in her way.

"At this moment," she concluded, "Aurelia would sell her soul for £350 in hard cash. But fortunately—or unfortunately, according as you regard it—her soul is not a marketable commodity, and she cannot realise upon it. Joking apart, however, she would stick at nothing to get the money; and in that fact," said Millicent, fixing her gaze on Blithersole very impressively, "lies our great hope."

"Are you—are you—suggesting that I should lend her the money?" inquired Blithersole.

"By no means. If you were to do anything of the kind, you would ruin the whole thing. My scheme is far more subtle and effective than that. In short, it amounts to this (you mustn't be shocked, since it is really for dear Aurelia's good), it amounts, I say, to this—that temptation should be put in her way to get the money dishonestly, and when she has succumbed—as I am perfectly sure that, under the circumstances, she will succumb—why, then you will be able to make your own terms with her.

Blithersole's look invited more specific information, which the lady made haste to supply:

"Take it this way," she said. "I am called out of town unexpectedly, and at short notice, for a week or two. I have a valuable emerald necklace, which I want reset. But as I have no time to bring it round to you myself, I leave it with Aurelia, and ask her to bring it round to you for me. Well, what does Aurelia do? Does she bring it round to you? Not she. On the contrary—if I know anything of her character—she takes it to the nearest pawnbroker's and raises the needful upon it to go to Ascot with."

It was all said with the most cynical coolness in the world, as though she felt no shame whatever in making this wicked suggestion. Nor, in fact, did she. If Millicent had ever possessed a heart or a conscience, they had both run to seed long ago from sheer lack of cultivation. Indeed, if you had searched London at that moment, it is doubtful whether you could have found a more utterly callous and unabashed young woman.

Even Blithersole, who was not exactly a model of scrupulosity himself, was rather shocked by the calm Machiavellianism of the proposal.

"You suggest that we should—should deliberately tempt Miss St. Ruth to steal your necklace?" he exclaimed.

"Oh, my dear Mr. Blithersole, 'steal' is a hard word," she replied, with a deprecating little laugh. "Aurelia would not look upon it as stealing. She would merely regard it as borrowing my necklace for a week or two, and would console herself with the certain prospect of redeeming it—Aurelia is always so sanguine, poor dear—out of her Ascot winnings. However, you had better first hear the remainder of my scheme. . . . Having given Aurelia time to pledge the emeralds, I suddenly change my mind. I write to you asking you not to proceed with the resetting of the emeralds which my friend Miss St. Ruth has left with you by my instructions, but to retain them pending further advice. You are utterly astonished. You cannot understand it. There must surely be some mistake. Possibly Miss St. Ruth can explain it. Before answering my letter, you send her round a note inviting her to do so. She then realises what an awkward position she has placed herself in (for she knows me well enough to be aware that I sha'n't show her any indulgence), and so she is forced to come round to you, confess the truth, and implore you not to give her away to me. You accede to her request—on conditions. There now! What do you think of that? Tut-tut. You needn't pretend to look shocked, my dear Mr. Blithersole. You are a man of the world, after all. Besides, it is, as I have said, really for dear Aurelia's good. If she continues much longer in her present state of hard-uppishness, she is sure, sooner or later, to land herself badly. She will be ever so much safer and happier as the wife of a rich man like yourself."

Percy Blithersole kept silence for some moments before replying. It was a shamefully mean and wicked plot in which he was invited to participate. Yet the prospect which it held out to him of getting proud Miss Aurelia under his thumb was tremendously alluring. He really didn't feel that he could resist it. Before committing himself, however, there was one point he should like to have cleared up. Why was Millicent Foxcroft taking all this trouble for his benefit. She was not doing it out of philanthropy. He knew her too well to imagine that. What was she after?

"Well, my dear Mrs. Foxcroft," he said, "your scheme is certainly a very clever one, and it is very good of you to put yourself to all this trouble in order to serve me—but—excuse my saying so—where do you yourself expect to come in? I mean——"

"Oh, I quite understand what you mean," interposed Millicent, with perfect composure. "You wish to know—if one may put the thing bluntly—in what way I expect you to scratch my back in return for my scratching yours. I will tell you. The fact is this, my dear Mr. Blithersole. I very much want a diamond tiara. And there is one in your window, priced at 700 gs., which I think would suit me to a T. There you have the milk inside the cocoanut. I do not make any bones about admitting it."

The murder was out. Millicent Foxcroft's selfish and unscrupulous greed was laid bare. She had set herself deliberately to sell her friend into Blithersole's power for no other object than to get a diamond tiara out of him, without paying for it. And yet, in making the disgraceful admission, she betrayed not the slightest token of shame or confusion, but sat smiling serenely at the young jeweller with all the coolness of the proverbial cucumber. Truly, when women do lose their sense of shame, they are the most shameless creatures in the whole of God's creation.

"What do you say, my dear Mr. Blithersole?" she inquired. "Am I to have that tiara, or am I not?"

For a moment he hesitated, then he answered:

"You shall have it, dear lady, on the terms specified."

A few minutes later Millicent left the shop, very well pleased with herself, and carrying the 700-guinea tiara in her wrist bag.

That astute young matron's forecast of what would happen was soon justified by the event. Aurelia St Ruth, looking as pale as death and evidently frightened out of her wits, did come round to see Percy Blithersole, in response to his note, made a clean breast of what she had done with Millicent's emeralds, and, throwing herself on his mercy, implored him not to give her away. Blithersole, cad that he was, rather enjoyed the situation, and had no scruple about taking advantage of it:

"I will do what you ask, my dear Aurelia," he said with smirking familiarity, "on one condition."

"What condition?" she inquired, her breath coming short and her face turning white to the very lips.

"That you will reconsider your answer to a certain question which I asked you some weeks ago," he said, with the calm superiority of one who knows that he holds the winning trump.

"You would force me to marry you, knowing how I—I—dislike you?" she said, in tones half-indignant, half-appealing.

"I would not force you to do anything," he replied, shrugging his shoulders. "I merely indicate the conditions on which I am willing to compound—excuse my plain speaking, Aurelia—compound your felony."

She shuddered at the ugly word. She shuddered still more, when he stepped forward and took her hand.

"Say, my dear, which is it to be—do you again refuse my offer of marriage, or do you accept?" he inquired, looking into her eyes with amorous insolence.

"You leave me no alternative. I accept," she answered, sullenly.

The next few days must have been a week of torture to poor Aurelia, owing to the insistence with which Blithersole would dance attendance upon her. And it was doubtless a merciful respite for her when the time came for her visit to Pangbourne Castle, where she was free, for awhile, from his odious attentions. She had an exceptionally good Ascot week, both as regards her bridge and her betting speculations, with the result that she won altogether three or four hundred pounds. And the effect of this (enabling her, as it now did, to put that little matter of the emeralds right), was to inspire her with sufficient courage to cry off her distasteful engagement with Blithersole.

"I find I can't marry you, after all," she wrote to him. "I really dislike you too much. Herewith I return your letters and presents. Please consider everything over between us."

Blithersole was furious at being thus cavalierly jilted. He went round to see Aurelia, and threatened, in plain language, to expose her at once to Millicent Foxcroft, unless she kept her promise to marry him.

Aurelia, however, treated his threats with contempt.

"I am now free from anxiety on that score," she answered, coldly. "I have redeemed Mill's emeralds and sent them back to her, with a full explanation. She has accepted my apologies and agreed to treat the incident as closed. So there is an end of it."

"Then I will expose you to the world at large," he cried, with vicious venom.

"What?" exclaimed Aurelia, mockingly. "And admit that you were cad enough to extort a promise of marriage from me under compulsion? No, no! Mr. Blithersole, your social tenure is pretty precarious already. But if that came out, you would very soon be kicked outside the pale."

The truth of the jibe made him the more infuriated.

"I will pay you out somehow, you vixen," he ejaculated.

"Do your worst," she rejoined, contemptuously. "There is the door. Please go."

He went; there was nothing else to do. On reaching his shop, he found Millicent Foxcroft awaiting him. Millicent appeared to be much perturbed.

"Oh, my dear Mr. Blithersole," she exclaimed. "I am so distressed that things have fallen out so. I never calculated on Aurelia's winning enough money to redeem my emeralds. That, you see, has placed, her in an independent position. And she can now snap her fingers at us."

"At least, you need not have told her that you accepted her apologies, and regarded the incident as closed," he retorted.

"But what else could I do?" said Millicent deprecatingly. "She had restored my necklace. I could not prosecute her. And it was no use making an enemy of her."

"After coaxing 700 guineas' worth of diamonds out of me, you might at least have tried to bluff her a little more than you have done," he ejaculated, angrily.

"Oh, as to that," replied Millicent, suddenly assuming a dignified air, "I quite realise that, as my part of the scheme has failed, I cannot honestly keep the tiara. That is the reason for my present visit. I have come to bring it back. Here it is."

And she laid the leathern case containing the jewels on his office table.

"It is the only reparation I can make you," she said. "I wish the fates had willed otherwise. But they have decided against us; and there is nothing more to be said. Good morning, Mr. Blithersole."

And with a somewhat distant bow, she sailed out.

Blithersole mechanically took up the case, opened it, and examined the tiara. Presently his experienced eye detected something on the back of it that caused him to turn very white and give vent to a furious oath. The something in question was a pawnbroker's private mark.

Then, as in a flash, the truth dawned upon him. The story of the emerald necklace had been pure fiction, purposely concocted between the two women for the purpose of getting the temporary use of his diamond tiara. And it was upon that tiara that Aurelia had raised the needful to go to Ascot.

MUSIC

THE ART OF LISTENING.

IT is sometimes overlooked that there is art in hearing music as well as in making it. Some day, perhaps, listeners will be trained as carefully at our academies and schools as performers, and when that time arrives it is certain that music will be much more intelligently heard than at present. As it is, how many really listen to music in what learned folk tell us is the right way—that is, take intelligent note of the themes and their treatment, appreciate details of structure, key relationship, and so on? The said learned folk would be astonished if they learnt how small a proportion do this. Yet the Philistine would probably reply unabashed that he enjoys the music in his own way just as much as the most learned theorist who dissects every bar as it proceeds. Music may be heard, in truth, in many ways. In the case of some it affords delight chiefly as a stimulus to the imagination, and the music itself is of less importance than the fancies which it conjures up. These are they who see visions and dream dreams when they hear a symphony or a sonata.

Such a one, for instance, is Carmen Sylva, the poet Queen of Roumania, who had an interesting article in the Nineteenth Century some time ago, in which she analysed her musical impressions from this point of view. In this she narrated how, hearing the simplest piece, a pictorial image invariably suggested itself—sometimes it might be merely a vague impression of a colour, at other times a definite picture or series of pictures. Even Bach's fugues, she told her readers, affected her in like manner, and sometimes so vividly as to convince her that the picture was inherent in the music. Thus, the B flat minor prelude and fugue of the "Forty-eight" obviously depicted the tale of Jephtha's daughter, and "I would venture to wager that I have really guessed the great master's meaning." To others the same piece of music is merely an affair of subject and answer, episodes, strettos, and the rest. Who gets the greatest enjoyment? It is difficult to say. This involves the question of the critical versus the uncritical hearer. Who has the advantage here? The more cultivated listener, one is tempted to say. But does this necessarily follow? Certainly the less learned have their compensations. To the one that may be a sheer delight which affords excruciating agony to the more sophisticated. Yet the enjoyment of the latter is perhaps keener than anything which the uncultivated one can know when hearing a work which really satisfies the critical judgment.

For that matter, do any two listeners, trained or untrained, ever hear the same work in precisely the same way? "To Newton and to Newton's dog Diamond," said Carlyle in the famous passage, "what a different pair of universes!" And the saying holds in music. The doctrine of the relativity of pains and pleasures nowhere finds more forcible illustration than in the concert room, and this would be more apparent still if people could always be persuaded to say what they really thought and felt. As it is, few hearers are bold enough to do this. They have the courage only of other people's convictions. And in this case the rather curious thing is that the more cultivated the hearer the greater often is the hesitation to express an opinion. It is usually the least informed who declare themselves most fearlessly. The former are afraid of making mistakes, and realise, moreover, how easy it is to do this. The Philistine is undeterred by any such fears, and reports faithfully according to the impression actually produced. Hence the fact, perhaps, that the popular judgment has sometimes been in advance of that of the cultivated. The real difficulty of hearing music properly is, indeed, well illustrated by some of the adverse criticisms passed in the first instance on the greatest works by the most learned hearers. Every one knows how such works as the C minor symphony and the "Tannhäuser" overture, which to-day provoke the least learned audiences to frenzied enthusiasm, were voted incomprehensible and impossible by the experts when first produced. The music was just the same then as now, but they had not learned yet to hear it aright.

This brings up, by the way, the question of new works versus old ones—which has sometimes been a subject of controversy. Habitual concert-goers, including the critics, like new works, whether good or ill, simply because they are new. The general public, on the other hand, prefer as a rule those which they have heard a thousand times before. It is curious, indeed, how tastes differ in this respect. The average amateur, who only goes to a concert now and again, revels in the C minor symphony and Tchaikowsky's "Pathetic," in the "Tristan" prelude and the Siegfried Idyll. The more blasé concert-goer, on the other hand, groans when he sees these and the like in the programme, but brightens up immediately the item marked "First time" is reached. He does not necessarily reckon Slapoffski's symphonic poem or Schlechthammer's concerto of greater value than the masterpieces of Beethoven and Wagner. But the latter are vieux jeu and the former new, and that makes all the difference. So much depends upon the point of view.

At Covent Garden lately one of the most interesting performances was, perhaps, that of "Rigoletto," on Monday, with Bassi as the Duke, and Selma Kurz making her re-appearance as Gilda. The former sang particularly well, and with Sammarco, admirable as ever in the title part, the faded old work, which yet has so much of life in it, went excellently under the direction of Mr. Panizza, a new Italian conductor, who evidently knows his business. Last week "La Tosca" was revived, with Giachetti, Scotti, and Caruso in their old parts. All were in fine form, and the opera, which owes even more perhaps to its melodramatic story than to its music, achieved its usual success. On Friday Gounod's "Faust" was put on, with Donalda, Carpi, and Journet in the leading parts, and a quite respectable, if not epoch-making, performance was obtained.

The gala performance is ancient history now. Apart from the melancholy death of General Sir Arthur Ellis—of which the audience were happily ignorant—everything went off exceedingly well, and the honours bestowed on Dr. Richter and Mr. Forsyth by King Edward and King Frederick were only a fitting recognition of the perfection of all the arrangements on both sides of the curtain. In the case of the "Meistersinger," excerpts a somewhat amusing commentary on the amount of musical knowledge prevailing was supplied by the general uprising when the curtain descended at the conclusion of the first scene. "What a very tame ending" was one comment overheard, and only after some minutes was it realised that there was another scene to come. The gallant generals and eminent politicians and other distinguished folk whose presence adds lustre to a gala audience are not, as a rule, ardent Wagnerites.

There has been the usual swarm of concerts during the last few days, but none of exceptional note, save perhaps M. Paderewski's only recital, fixed for Tuesday, which was the great pianist's first appearance in London after an absence of some years. A younger pianist recently heard to good advantage was Mr. Percy Grainger, and another was Mlle. Leocadie Kaschperow, a brilliant Russian player. More novel than any piano recital was the entertainment given by Mr. Sven Scholander, the Swedish lutenist, who contrives to act and sing and play all at once in a manner uncommonly fascinating and effective. Among vocalists of a more orthodox order Mr. Hugo Heinz, Frln. Staegemann and two promising pupils of M. Jean de Reszke, Miss Olga Lynn and Mlle. Suzanne Morivale, may be named. Saturday's festival performance of "Elijah" at the Crystal Palace was notable for the participation of Mr. Santley, who sang in wonderful fashion, all things considered.

The mystery of "Lunch in F" is explained. This was a mystic announcement, it may be recalled, recently put forth in connection with the services at St. Thomas's, Regent-street. From a friendly communication to hand from the vicar (the Rev. P. Bainbrigge), it appears that the announcement was a mystic one only to those unaware that the Lunch referred to is a living composer of that name. In point of fact he is, as it appears, one of Mr. Bainbrigge's own parishioners who, it is still more interesting to learn, cultivates the art of composition in the leisure hours snatched from the humble and exacting but eminently useful calling of a barber. No longer, therefore, is there cause for unseemly mirth over "Lunch in F."

It is interesting to take note now and again of the actual cost of running a national opera house after the manner sometimes advocated by misguided enthusiasts in this country. Among the credits asked for in the French estimates this year is one of £24,000 for repairs to the opera house, "necessitated," as it is rather oddly put in one of the reports, "by the change of management." This might almost suggest that M. Gailhard, the retiring director, had wrecked the house before taking his final departure, but that, I presume, was not the case. At the same time, it may be noted that the large sum in question is required over and above the very liberal annual subvention granted by the State which is not voted nowadays, one of the correspondents tells us, without a good deal of grumbling from provincial members of Parliament. "Why should my electors give money to an opera house in Paris that they never go to? Parisians would certainly not contribute towards a market-place for Bar-sur-Seine." This view, we are told, is becoming more and more general.

Apropos of operatic affairs across the Channel, a Parisian correspondent writes:—

A good deal of surprise has been aroused in artistic circles here by the action of the manager of the Opéra Comique in objecting to Miss Olga Nethersole's production of "Carmen," thus making himself suddenly the protector of the authors, who are M. Halevy and the heirs of M. Georges Bizet. Parisians have not forgotten that last year a member of the Chamber of Deputies, M. Levrand, called the attention of the Government to the fact that M. Carré, himself the director of a State-subsidised theatre, did not entirely respect the rights of dramatists, the cases referred to being those of MM. Lazzari and Henry Bataille, authors of "La Lepreuse," and M. Auguste Chapius, author of "Les Demoiselles de St. Cyr." As a consequence an investigation was ordered, the result of which is still awaited. It would seem, therefore, that M. Carré would have been better inspired if he had waited before coming forward in the unwonted rôle of champion of the authors at the expense of a distinguished English actress whose performances could not possibly have affected in any material way the interests involved.

An interesting "Talk with Mr. Wilhelm Ganz," in Cassell's Magazine for June, serves to remind us that that popular musician celebrates this year the artistic jubilee of his residence in London. It was in 1857, when he was twenty-four years of age, that Mr. Ganz actually settled in this country, though he first came to London nearly ten years earlier. No wonder that he has an almost unrivalled store of reminiscences of the many famous singers and other artists with whom he has come in contact. For half a century and more Mr. Ganz has known every one worth knowing in the musical world, from Braham to Clara Butt, and of one and all he has entertaining recollections. Of course, he has much to say concerning Mme. Patti, who has always numbered the veteran musician among her most intimate friends; and after reading the list of her accomplishments which he enumerates who shall wonder that Mr. Ganz reckons her the most gifted woman he has ever known? There is talk of a concert in the autumn in commemoration of Mr. Ganz's long services in the cause of music in this country, and if the project is realised, the profession and the public alike may be trusted to co-operate heartily in the interests of one who enjoys such well-deserved popularity.

Some well-known singers have been invited to express their opinion as to who is the greatest living composer, and the answers returned are not without interest. In Mme. Clara Butt's judgment, speaking "from a singer's point of view," the title should be awarded to Saint-Saëns. Mme. Blanche Marchesi shies at "greatest," but confesses, "the most interesting to me of the young generation are, in France, Debussy, and in England Holbrooke." Mme. Fleischer-Edel awards the palm to Grieg, "in spite of my love for Saint-Saëns." In the judgment of Miss Ruth Vincent, "the best living composer of serious music is Puccini, and in lighter music Edward German." Puccini should certainly feel flattered. Miss Margaret Cooper, whose opinion naturally carries weight on such a subject, was "very much inclined to favour Coleridge Taylor from a vocal point of view. From the point of view of an orchestra, I choose my friend Edward German." This will cause heart-burning on the Continent, but there is balm for Germany in the verdict of Mr. Bispham, who writes that "in my opinion Richard Strauss is the most remarkable by far of living composers."

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—Major-General Sir Henry Colville's "The Allies" (1) goes deeper than any of the whole library of books I have read into the differences and into the causes of the differences between the European and the Japanese. The root of these differences seems to be like the root of the difference between the bee and the spider—the bee communistic, the spider individualistic; the bee living, working, and dying for the commonwealth, the spider for himself. Here is one out of a hundred instances cited by Sir Henry of this difference between the European and the Japanese point of view, for the American in this story is only the European "writ large":—

Within the last few months a Japanese officer perfected a warlike invention, of which an American expert, in the temporary employ of the Japanese Government, happened to hear. The invention so impressed the American that he offered the inventor 100,000 dollars for it. This offer the officer indignantly refused, saying, "I was educated by my Government, and to it I owe everything. Anything my brain can produce belongs to my country."

Or take, again, Commander Yuasa's address to his men when they were about to make the desperate attempt to block the entrance to Port Arthur:—

Let every man set aside all thought of making a name for himself, but let us all work together for the attainment of our object. It is a mistaken idea of valour to court death needlessly. Death is not our object, but success, and we die in vain if we do not attain success. If I die, Lieutenant Yamamoto will take the command, and, if he is killed, you will take your orders from the chief warrant officer. Let us keep at it till the last man, until we have carried our mission.

And when the war was over Sir Henry had himself an opportunity of noting the modest self-effacement of the victors. After a dinner given by Admiral Ijuin to the officers of Admiral Sir A. Moore's squadron, a fine

(1) "The Allies." By Major-General Sir Henry Colville, K.C.M.G., C.B. With a Frontispiece. (London: Hutchinson & Co. 16s. net.)
(2) "The Coward in Eden." By Vincent Brown. (London: Hutchinson & Co. 6s.)
(3) "Keddy." A Story of Oxford." By H. N. Dickinson. (London: William Heinemann. 6s.)
(4) "The Great Craneboro' Conspiracy." By John Oakley. Frontispiece by Harold Piffard. (London: Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd.)
(5) "The Queen of a Day." By [illegible] Unwin. 6s.)

oil-painting by a Japanese artist of the battle of Tsu-Shima was shown to Sir Henry amongst the rest. Nearly all the Japanese present had taken part in the fight, and, while some of them were giving an intensely interesting description of it with the help of the picture as an illustration, Sir Henry, happening to look round, "noticed in the back row, behind all his captains, listening with the air of a modest subaltern to a lecture on minor tactics, him whom Carlyle might well have chosen for his epithet, 'greatest sea-king of all.'" On the other hand, Sir Henry admits that all German and American tourists in Japan tell the same story of the conceit and arrogance of the Japanese. Perhaps, however, a wise and witty saying of Swift's may suggest an explanation of this universal German and American experience of Japanese arrogance. "The selfish man," says Swift, "complains most of selfishness in others, just as the fat man in a crowd complains most of the crush to which he contributes most." A similar explanation might also go some way to account for the low commercial morality of the Japanese, since in this they have only bettered the instruction given them in the seventeenth century by the Spanish, Portuguese, and Dutch, and, as Sir Rutherford Alcock testifies, by the British in the nineteenth century. However, you have Sir Henry's assurance that Japan's reputation for commercial morality is rapidly improving. "An English merchant of Yokohama of great experience told me that the Japanese merchants did not now deserve the bad name which they have got, and that he found them more trustworthy than the Chinese." As for the Chinese, Sir Henry laughs to scorn the idea that they are likely, either of themselves, or under Japanese leadership, organisation, or instigation, to overwhelm the West. In the first place, the Chinese are the peacefullest of peoples, holding warriors and war in scorn. In the second place, there is neither loyalty nor patriotism, nor even coherence in China. She has not even one spoken language.

> The people of Canton and Pekin can no more talk together than those of Rome and Madrid, while they take even less interest in each other's affairs. The Cantonese said, when told of the Japanese victories, "That belongey Pekin side; no my pidgin."

In the third place, if Japan organised China for conquest, she would unquestionably be a Frankenstein creating a monster for her own destruction. China and Japan have always hated each other heartily. On one occasion the Japanese Government beheaded the members of a mission sent by the Chinese Emperor to demand the submission of Japan; while, on another, the Emperor of Japan opened thus an answer to a discourteous letter from the Emperor of China: "The Emperor of the land where the sun rises addresses himself to the Emperor of the land where the sun sets." Only the other day, when the Prince Fushimi, whom our King delighted to honour, visited Peking—the first Japanese Prince to pay it an official visit—he was snubbed by the Emperor of China. The truth is, as a Japanese official said to Sir Henry, "China is the Turkey of the East." She is, like Turkey, an obstructive anachronism, and, like Turkey, she will owe her sickly existence to the protective jealousy of the vultures hovering ever over her. Nor is Japan herself likely to head a yellow crusade against the West. She has, to begin with, her hands full with Russia, China, and Korea, all more or less lying in wait to trip her up, while, besides, she is the most peacefully disposed of nations. By all accounts—and not by Sir Henry's only—the Japanese practise the virtues of the Sermon on the Mount, which are preached only in Christian countries; and when Sir Henry again and again urges the advantages of an interchange between us and Japan of special products, I feel inclined to suggest a wholesale export of our Christian dogmas in return for the import of their Christian practice. "The Allies" is incomparably the most thoughtful of all the multitude of books I have read upon Japan.

In "The Coward in Eden" (2) Mr. Vincent Brown has made the most of a commonplace plot, for the coward is the unconscious bigamist of so many novels who marries the heroine under the impression that his first wife was dead. With the discovery that she was still alive the novel opens dramatically, and ends no less dramatically with his second wife's accidental stumbling upon this discovery, which her cowardly husband had kept from her. Over against him is set his chivalrous brother, whose reverent love for his sister-in-law leads him to take upon himself the guilt of the scandal at the cost of his own character and of her respect. The curtain falls most dramatically of all upon a scene where a little girl's shoe and its suggestions bring about a reconciliation between the injured wife and the "coward in Eden." Perhaps the good characters are too goodily good, but you believe in them while you read. On the other hand, the coward in Eden is a subtle study of a not uncommon blend of physical strength and courage with moral weakness and cowardice. If only for its admirably described breach of promise case, which is the culminating scene of "Keddy; A Story of Oxford" (3), the novel would stand out from its fellows; but in addition you have some vivid Oxford scenes, and at least one character which arrests you. This character is not its hero, Keddy, but the black sheep, Bobby, whose redeeming heroism is in perfectly natural keeping with his iniquities. You tire a little, to say the truth, of the gushing priest, Carpenter, who plays a disproportionate part in the piece, but, for the rest "Keddy" has all the go and vim and brightness of young Oxford to recommend it. You had need to be a young man, perhaps a boy even, to accept all the villainies and mysteries, incredible incidents and coincidences in Mr. John Oakley's "The Great Craneboro' Conspiracy" (4). It is a conspiracy to get hold of a quarter of a million of money, and the desperate game between the plotters and counter-plotters is played with all the sang froid and deliberation of a game of chess. The hero himself is on both sides, first in the conspiracy, and presently—cherchez la femme—in the counter-plot. Finally, after a breathless succession of ingeniously contrived moves and counter-moves, poetic justice is amply done all round. "The Queen of a Day" (5) is another Balkan Royalty, or is, at least, presumed to be such, and if you are not tired of romances of this type you will certainly enjoy her Majesty's difficulty, and welcome her escape from it, even though it turns on the time-honoured device of an exchange of babies and of the subsequent identification of the Royal infant by "the strawberry mark on the left arm."—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

If intended as a jest, "The Clash of Empires" (Heinemann, 2s. 6d.) is rather too laboured; if written with a serious purpose, it is not unamusing. On the whole, the probability is that the author, Mr. Rowland Thirlmere, takes himself quite seriously, though his ravings are so often suggestive of an over-done travesty. It seems that he wishes to "drive home into the thick skulls of complacent and lethargic Radicals the real meaning of the minatory attitude of German progress." He evidently regards as a thick-skulled Radical every one who is not suffering like himself from an attack of Teutophobia in its most ludicrously malignant form. There is, in Mr. Thirlmere's opinion, only one plan by which we can be saved from the terrible Teuton, and that is the adoption of Colonial Preference. Those advocates of Colonial Preference who read this foolish book will pray to be delivered from such a friend as the author.

Mr. H. G. Keene, C.I.E., who some months ago published a very readable volume of Anglo-Indian reminiscences, is the author of a fascinating work entitled "Hindustan Under Free Lances, 1770-1820" (Brown, Langham, and Co., 15s.). It narrates the stirring and romantic careers of a number of famous European adventurers, who "fought, conquered, conducted, or endured sieges, and managed provinces" during that troubled period of Indian history. Perhaps, though, one should hardly speak of them as famous, for the extraordinary exploits of most of these soldiers of fortune are for the most part unknown to the vast majority of English people. The story of their adventures and achievements is stranger and more interesting than many works of fiction, and it is admirably set forth by Mr. Keene.

The Carlton Hotel, Pall Mall, S.W. — 1598 Gerrard. Famous for its beautiful Restaurant and Grill Room. Under the same Direction as the Ritz Hotel.

In the colour-book on "Canada" which Messrs. A. and C. Black have just added to their well-known series a Canadian artist and a Canadian author have collaborated. The author is Mr. Wilfred Campbell, whose poetry has won him a wider fame than any other living Canadian writer has achieved. In his descriptions in this volume of the great natural features of the Dominion, its mountains and prairies, coasts, rivers, and lakes, its physical beauties and sublime effects of nature, Mr. Campbell shows that he is, too, a master of eloquent prose. The pictures, of which there are seventy-six full-page reproductions in colour, are from the brush of Mr. T. Mower Martin, a member of the Royal Canadian Academy.

Mr. John Long will have ready this week Sarah Tytler's new novel, "Innocent Masqueraders," and Dorothea Gerard's "Itinerant Daughters." The latter is an original and amusing story relating to an experiment which an up-to-date doctor invented and tried on four girls to whom home life had become irksome. The same publisher also announces a novel by Mrs. L. T. Meade, entitled "Kindred Spirits," and "One Eventful Summer," a Devonshire story from the pen of a new writer, Miss Ethel Grace Tapner.

Mr. A. G. Bradley is the author of some books on North and South Wales and the Lake Country which are among the best in a well-known series. In "Rambles about Wiltshire" (Methuen, 6s.) he deals on similar lines with his own county, and what he speaks of as "the reminiscent and personal note," gives an additional charm to the volume. Wiltshire is a county possessing considerable distinction and individuality, and Mr. Bradley's account of it, interspersed with not a few entertaining personal reminiscences, is extremely readable. The book has some excellent illustrations, including fourteen in colour by Mr. T. G. Gotch.

Mr. Noel Buxton's little book, "Europe and the Turks" (John Murray, 2s. 6d.), gives an admirably lucid and interesting sketch of the history and the present position of "the Balkan question." Mr. Buxton has long been distinguished for his gallant championship of the unhappy victims of Turkish oppression and cruelty; and his object in this work is to bring home to the minds of the public here the fact that England, by reason of her action at the Congress of Berlin, has a responsibility before all other Powers for the scandal of Macedonia.

In another book on the same subject, entitled, "An Observer in the Near East" (Eveleigh Nash, 16s.), the anonymous author gives much information that he has gathered from interviews with prominent personages in the Balkan States, and makes a fierce attack upon the policy of the German Emperor towards Turkey.

"Army Reform, and Other Addresses," by Mr. R. B. Haldane, Secretary for War, is a volume issued by Mr. Fisher Unwin, price 7s. 6d. It contains three of Mr. Haldane's speeches on his military scheme, three on the subject of Free Trade, and two miscellaneous addresses: "Modern Logicians and Economic Methods" and "The Dedicated Life," the latter being his Rectorial address at Edinburgh University.

"Wild Flowers of the British Isles" (Heinemann, 30s.) is a handsome volume, illustrated and written by Miss H. Isabel Adams, F.L.S., which, on account of the remarkable excellence of the coloured plates, will be prized not only by the botanist but many unlearned lovers of wild flowers. The general reader may, indeed, wish that the letterpress had been a little less technical; but in a book of this kind the letterpress is not, after all, of such importance as the pictures, and Miss Adams's beautiful drawings have been reproduced with a perfection rare even in these days of fine colour-printing.

Buy STEPHENS' TYPEWRITER CARBONS because they yield sharp impressions, are clean to handle, and exceptionally durable. No favour is asked for them because they are British.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—What a week we have had here in town! Our Danish State visitors must have gone away longing for at least a week's sleep. Other countries do not keep our sophisticated late hours, and their inhabitants find them very trying. And then there were interesting day-time functions as well. On Tuesday our Majesties and Denmark's Majesties visited the Horse Show at Olympia and faced the battery of at least 10,000 pairs of eyes as they sat in the flower-decked Royal box. The Queen of Denmark, immensely tall, was in heliotrope, our Queen in her favourite mauve. Both Queens wore toques with white feathers at the left side. Queen Alexandra's was much wider than Queen Louise's, but there was no sort of exaggeration about either lady's. The whole party laughed when the donkeys came in. So did every one else. The sound of ten thousand laughs is as the voice of running waters in full flood. We had met the Coster King in the Bayswater-road and wondered at his buttons. There are 15,000 of them, all pearl in various sizes, and it is said that the gentleman has sewn them all on himself. In the evening there was the gala at the Opera. Each of these occasions seems to be more brilliant than the last. The Royal box was a pretty thing, like a very lovely bonbonnière filled with beauty, jewels, and flowers. Unconsciously, it must be supposed, the great ladies in the boxes had done wonders for the effectiveness of the scene by almost all choosing white, mostly satin. An occasional black or coloured gown only served to emphasise the pervading whiteness and the wonderful jewels that answered each other in myriad flashes across the house.

On Wednesday there was a review at Aldershot in the afternoon and a State Ball at the Palace in the evening. Next day the Danish King and Queen concluded their visit and they must both have had "an exposition of sleep upon them" in the train.

The London streets were almost deserted. Ten thousand or so were at Olympia, and another few thousands thronged the Park in spite of the showers, which came down like tropical deluges. It would have been funny, if it had not been pathetic, to see the scurrying figures, their draperies huddled round them, making for the various gates, eager for cabs, of which there is always such a short supply. A policeman at Stanhope Gate picked up a dainty little shoe out of the roadway and handed it to a girl in a hansom as it drove off. She laughed and blushed in a fascinating way. "The button came off," she explained to an inattentive crowd, all of whom envied her for having secured a cab.

I saw a remarkable object in the Park one day; a short, stout woman, tidily dressed, and with even some smartness about her headgear, but without stockings, and wearing shoes with bars crossing each other on the instep. Does this phenomenon betoken some new league? I should think that shoes without stockings must be extremely uncomfortable. What on earth will be the next fad? The hatless brigade led off; the stockingless seems about to follow. Perhaps gloves or collars will be the next things to go overboard. Or will bare feet come in? So many strange things happen that one would be surprised at nothing.

We whistle, usually artificially, when we want a cab. What ought we to do when we wish for a taximeter? There ought to be some special call provided for this agreeable vehicle. As it is, one does not know how to secure one. Don't you think the authorities ought to come to the rescue in this dilemma? Would whistling three times meet the case? We have already once for a four-wheeler, twice for a hansom. Not that this is by any means perfect as a mode of "calling" cabs, but at least it is something. With respect to taximeters, there is absolutely nothing.

Has it occurred to you that our tribulations of noisy motor-'buses and screaming railway whistles are as nothing to what there is in store for us? When ballooning becomes general we shall not dare to look at the sky, the moon, the stars, the clouds, lest a rain of sand should strike us in the face; and when the airships come along, as they are pretty sure to do, there will be nice little showers of petrol from on high, if nothing worse. Tennyson's "airy navies" and "ghastly dew" are within too, too measurable distance. What an effect on the stage a duel "in the central blue" would make.

REDFERN.—Exclusive and original Models in Walking, Dinner and Evening Gowns, Theatre Wraps, &c. Paris millinery, lingerie, blouses, &c.—REDFERN, Conduit-street and Bond-street.

By the way, there is to be a great aeronautical gathering at Ranelagh on the 29th, when the Aerial Longest Distance race is to be run. No! not "run." Should you call it "flown," or what? To plane would seem a suitable verb, only that it means in ordinary English such a very different thing.

But oh! the weather. The first half of June was more like October, or a cantankerous April, than the lovely month. What is it going to do for Ascot?

Every one thought it so nice of the Queen to drive in an open carriage through the pouring rain to the Mansion House on Thursday, when her Majesty opened the Lord Mayor's Fête for Crippled Children. The great ambition of the stallholders on such occasions is to sell something to the Queen, and the American Embassy stall was particularly favoured on this occasion, the Royal purchases including a Virginian peach-fed ham, a bottle of some special liqueur, and a pineapple cheese. An order given personally by her Majesty to a little crippled basketmaker rejoiced the poor little girl, Barbara Jeans. Princess Alexander of Teck disposed of some Roumanian embroideries, and the Duchess of Albany some lovely Wedgwood to their distinguished relative, and Princess Henry of Battenberg an Eastern dagger and an African assegai. At the French Embassy stall a lovely embroidered dress front became her Majesty's property. I noticed an assortment of maisettes at this stall, some of them with folding handles, and others combined with eye-glasses—a capital idea. These maisettes will be seen in hundreds at Ascot and Henley, for they keep away the glare of racecourse and river, and are now recognised as extremely chic. The curve of the arm in holding them is so pretty.

The Queen continues to wear glittering embroideries on her dresses, and looks so sweet in them that they are in greater demand than ever. "How beautiful her Majesty looked in that gold embroidered gown," says some one, and with a vague thought that perhaps it was the gown that caused the charm, she hopefully orders one for herself. We are all like that. We see an illustration of hats on very pretty heads, and in our Innerste we forget to distinguish between the hat and the head, and send off our money for a hat "exactly like number such-an-one on p. so-and-so of the 'Ladies' Temptation Gazette.'"

Lucky if we remember to enclose name and address. I was in a hat shop last week, and overheard the following conversation:—

"Another order for the blue and white with neither name nor address. This is the third for that hat alone."

Geese! And yet we expect to get into Parliament! Did you read the debate on admitting women to be county councillors? Lord Crewe, one of the most chivalrous of men, referred to the ideal woman of those who opposed the measure, "a sort of combination of the maid-of-all-work and the ministering angel." Lord Halsbury said women are too hysterical, too much disposed to be guided by feeling and not cold reason, unwilling to compromise and disposed to do what they think right. This last was rather complimentary. You think so, don't you? But apparently it does not answer for governing bodies to do what they think is right. Lord Lansdowne referred to the "noisy and unwise demonstrations" made by the suffragist women, but did not think that ought to influence the Bill. He had served with women on boards of guardians, district councils, and parish councils, and regarded their co-operation as of the utmost value. So, you see, we are growing in usefulness, after all.

I heard of a "dealing sleeve" for the first time at a dressmaker's the other day. Lady —— has very prettily shaped white arms, and is a great bridge-player. She instructs her dressmaker to construct sleeves of a kind that will show to advantage the form and colour of the arms. Hence a "dealing sleeve." You know how gracefully some women deal cards, how very ungracefully others; how irritatingly slowly some, how deftly and swiftly others. Shall I describe the dealing sleeve? It turned the elbow, which possibly may not be so perfect as the rest of the arm. Then it flew out in frills of lace, which always form a most becoming setting for a well-modelled arm. "Du reste," spoke Madame, "elle possède un nombre infini de bracelets, en diamants, en rubis, en saphir; et, vous savez, porter les bracelets, c'est très chic à ce moment."

Yes, bracelets came in with short sleeves, and will remain in favour until the latter lengthen. When will that be—who can say?

Hot weather usually comes in at the end of June, and we always close the kitchen range for the summer somewhere about quarter day, allowing it holiday of at least three months, and using the gas cooker instead. It is the only way of making life pleasant to the servants in hot weather. Keeping up a fire all day in the ordinary kitchener is simply cruel; but with gas, which can be turned off when the cooker is not in use, the basement can be kept cool during all the hottest hours of the day. The only difficulty about this was that the gas cooker failed to supply hot water all day long for various purposes, including baths. But we have found the gas-heated hot-water circulator an immense success. They were only put on the market last summer, but the intelligent and enterprising persons (like your cousin Madge!) who immediately perceived their utility and at once secured them, reaped their reward in cool houses and good-tempered servants. These circulators are to be had on hire or bought. Do get one. You will be delighted with their comfort and convenience. The fitting of them is a simple matter, as they can quite easily be fixed to the existing flow and return pipes attached to the kitchen boiler. Circulator and boiler can then be used either separately or in conjunction, without any trouble whatsoever. Send to the Gas Light Company, Horseferry-road, S.E., for their booklet on the subject.

The Hospital Commission on the dietetic value of wines reports favourably of French wines, and terms them "a temperance beverage." This will astound many who condemn wine in every form. But it seems that the quantity of alcohol in these light wines is extremely small.

We have read with much interest the part of the report dealing with champagne. The good brands, it seems, are powerful stimulants to digestion, but it is well to sip the wine if one is troubled with dyspepsia, and also to dilute it, whether in the glass or by sipping Apollinaris throughout the meal. As champagne is the only wine we ever care to drink, Richard and I are very well pleased with the Commission!

Mr. George Grossmith entertained the members of the Atlantic Union and their friends one day last week in his pleasant house in Russell-square. The English and American flags were tastefully and tactfully combined above the chimney-pieces and elsewhere, and the crowded audience thoroughly enjoyed hearing their host's amusing address. The Union has a very full programme for the next month, including the Greek play at Bradfield College, a party at Dulwich College, Mr. Browning's party at Cambridge, the Romsey Pageant, Founder's Day at Dr. Barnardo's, Henley Regatta (where Balliol offers the hospitality of its barge), a garden-party at Lambeth Palace given by the Bishop of London, Canon Lyttelton's luncheon at Eton, and the Marquis of Northampton's luncheon at Compton Wynyates. Any one wishing to offer hospitality during August and September should address the Hon. Sec., at 13A, Cockspur-street, S.W.

Amy dear, which would you rather be—sly, cunning, and successful, or frank, open, generous, and a failure? It is horrid to be sly, but then it is hateful to be poor; and it is all very well to be "loving and giving," but if it means having a narrow income all one's days, the generosity seems to cost too much.

"LA SAMOTHRACE."—Every corset of the LONDON CORSET CO., 28, New Bond-street, W., is made in Paris. The very latest models. Not connected with any other establishment.

And yet—what does it profit a man or a woman to have millions if the soul is small, mean, and shrunken, shut in from all bright influence in its narrow, darkened chamber of Gain, untouched by song of bird or gleam of sun, by deed heroic or grand achievement? Money is all very well, but a great quantity of it has a shrivelling influence on mind and spirit. The very persons who have it are in this way precluded from enjoying it, so shut in is their atmosphere. They buy great estates, but get little pleasure from them. Mammon, the great maleficent god, has hardened them against such pleasures as others find in blue skies, gliding streams, green trees, and little bridges over little brooks. They buy pictures worth a king's ransom, but to them the canvases are but an investment. This idea shuts away from the owner any real appreciation of the artistic beauty of the things. They buy jewellery for their wives and for their own honour and glory, but they appraise it while she wears it, and it is huge figures they see instead of diamonds and rubies and emeralds. To be too rich is to lose touch with happiness. The soul grows sordid, and what of real good can life offer after that? It is the modern rendering of King Midas' asses' ears.

Poverty is relative. Thousands who call themselves poor would be rich on their incomes if they would abandon a senseless and vulgar competition with their neighbours, and live more simply. What Pierre de Coulvain, in "L'Ile Inconnue," calles our "snobisme," obliges thousands and thousands to live in houses larger than they need, to keep more servants than they require, and in other ways to follow a much more costly plan of life than they would but for emulation. The few who have emancipated themselves from this have their reward in enjoying that agreeable margin to their income which, like the mount of a picture, adds a charm of its own. A smaller house, fewer servants, two dinner-parties a year instead of one every six weeks, a moderate, instead of an excessive, outlay on dress—all this brings into reach the joys of travel, a sweet leisure for books, pictures, music, and above all, freedom from the carking care that is inseparable from living up to one's income. And how much more dignified is such a plan of life. You remember the Luces in the first wife's time? Always in debt and difficulties, duns always at the door, county-court cases reported in the papers, and yet a constant racket of entertaining, dressing, driving, riding, river-parties, amusements, huge bills at the florists, and every kind of expensive food (it was the first Mrs. Luce's boast that she always had the first salmon, the first strawberries, asparagus, plovers' eggs, green peas, etc., of the season), and all owed for! Even the servants had to summon them for their wages.

There is such a difference now. The debts are nearly all paid off, and there is a sweet sanity in the conduct of the household. Lily Luce's motto is: "If you have no money, do not spend any." It is just as well, for it would be difficult for them to get credit, even if they wanted it. Weekly books paid punctually on Thursday are the rule. The food is not only excellent, but deliciously cooked, thanks to their treasure of a French woman who does all the marketing and economises pounds every month with her thrifty ways and good management.

Several of John Luce's friends advised him to be made bankrupt after his first wife died, and he found himself up to the ears in debt, but he would not do anything so dishonourable. He asked his creditors to give him four years to pay off all in instalments, with 2½ per cent. interest. He then reduced his expenses, and has never missed a payment. Lily helps him in every way, and he must bless the day he married her.

Saving and hoarding to pay one's debts is not the sort of shivering over sixpences that shrinks the soul to the size of a shrivelled shrimp. Is it?

Richard has just come in and told me a story of a small boy who, on his father showing him a skeleton in a museum, asked, after a long, attentive look: "Dad, how did that man keep his dinner in?" This pleasing anecdote has completely switched off my thoughts from the homily I was inflicting upon you.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

Dearest Madge,—One wonders if history is much affected by weather, and cannot but think that it must be. Just as "oft the sight of means to do ill deeds, makes ill deeds done," so perhaps do dark days dispose to dark deeds, whilst sunshine, on the contrary, has a beneficent influence on human minds and actions. Do we not all feel much better disposed towards one another in genial, bright weather, than on lowering, gloomy days? We like to live and let live; we are in charity with every one else and with ourselves; everything is for the best in the best of all worlds. What different moods wild, fierce, dismal weather causes! Most of us have sad experience of days in which nothing seems good; it is hard to think well even of our nearest and dearest, our nerves are jarred, our kindly feelings strained to the utmost. And no wonder, when Nature shows a shocking, destructive example, if we get led astray by hers, as by other bad examples. If ordinary, every day mildness and amiability are strained in dark, direful weather, what must not the influence be on the fierce natures of those who make the most sensational chapters of history!

We ought to be inured to the bad weather by this time; but as we always will keep hoping for a change, week and week we go through the heart sickness of hope deferred. It is such an aggravation of the case over here, that the tourists who are already with us, will take—our climate having a bad reputation—the present phenomenal summer as the common, ordinary one of our island. Notwithstanding all our disappointments we are all convinced that July will bring us summer, and the King's flying visit will show him an Ireland of sunshine and fresh air, such as the fourth century travellers saw so long ago, and such as we, for several months, have ceased to see, with regard to sunshine. The quality and, in especial, the quantity of the fresh air has, however, been undoubted.

The Viceregal Lodge was shut up last week, no Royal standard floating in the strong winds over its roof. Lord and Lady Aberdeen are staying at Buxton, where the rigours of June are less favourable to a cure than would be the weather usually expected

A PRICELESS SECRET.

There is a secret which is guarded more closely than the making of Bank of England Notes—it is the secret of Craven Mixture.

There is only one man alive who knows it.

Rival Manufacturers would give thousands of pounds for it, but it is a secret which money could not buy.

In Craven Mixture there are several kinds of tobacco—some of which are so precious as to be almost beyond price, and it is these tobaccos which give Craven its unequalled charm—which make it the tobacco of kings, of princes, of men of action, and men of thought the world over.

No tobacco in the world can compare with it. In taste and aroma it stands alone.

In every good tobacco shop all over the world you will find Craven Mixture. It is packed in four sizes, in patent vacuumised tins.

2 oz. 1/3; 4 oz. 2/6; 8 oz. 5/-; 16 oz. 10/-.

Craven

from the month of roses. They are to be back in Ireland shortly, and as already arranged, give a garden party at the Viceregal Lodge on the 27th inst. Of the rumoured garden party later on, for the King and Queen, however, nothing further has been announced. Even Royalty, with its prodigious capacity for ceremonial work, is limited in the arrangements which will fit into the short space of two short days. What a pity there is not a Royal residence in our country, that we should be treated as a colony, though we lie so close to Great Britain. Some of us, that is we women who are not politicians, often wonder why our country should have a Viceroy, when Scotland has not one, why we should not be in line with England and Scotland in every way. As a matter of fact we are not a colony. The old Irish race predominates largely in Ireland; we have been annexed by England, not colonised. It all happened so long ago, we ought to be ready to pull together by this.

The Kingstown Regatta last week was very much a water festival, water both by sea and land. It was naturally shorn of much of its usual glory and was without Viceregal patronage, owing to the absence of Lord and Lady Aberdeen from Ireland. Lord Dudley was a visitor to Dublin last week, and paid several visits to the exhibition, which grows in favour, notwithstanding the direful weather, which is so much against it. The Phœnix Park races on Saturday brought the sporting world together in great force. The horse-worshipping Roman Emperor of old was hardly in it with our people over here. Only think of Orby on his return home to Leopardstown, being received at the railway by two bands, who played him triumphantly to his stable, no doubt to the strains of "See the conquering hero comes." The marriage is announced of Miss Henrietta O'Neill, which is soon to take place, with Mr. Leith Hay. They were both staying at Dublin Castle during the season. Miss H. O'Neill is the daughter of Lord and Lady O'Neill, of Shane's Castle. Their eldest son is married to one of Lord Crewe's daughters. Of late years Dublin Castle has a pleasant record of the number of marriages brought about within its "portals," so that to many they cannot be the "gloomy portals" they are to Mr. Birrell, who, by the way, formed his opinion of them after wonderfully little experience. Lord and Lady Ardilaun, who have been staying near Dublin, are placed in mourning by the death of Lady Ferrers, a sister of Lady Ardilaun's. The title of their father, Lord Bantry, is now extinct.—Yours, CLARE.

I shall have some nice recipes for you next week.

Ever your loving cousin, MADGE.

P.S.—Just had yours. Delighted you are coming up for the Ascot ball. You will have to send at once for the tickets you want, as they are going fast, and only a limited number is issued. It will be a lovely ball. The decorations are to be in the Spanish colours—red and yellow—and in the courtyard there will be a Spanish cabaret, with waitresses in Spanish costume.

M.

DIAMOND RINGS & ORNAMENTS

Finest Quality, below Store and usual West End Prices.

SPINK & SON, LTD.,

DIAMOND AND PEARL MERCHANTS,
17 & 18, PICCADILLY, W., and 30, CORNHILL,
LONDON, E.C. Est. 1772.

The Triumph of a Great Tea.

MAZAWATTEE

Acclaimed by the Press
The "PREMIER" TEA of the World.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
SICKNESS, EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY, BURGLARY & FIDELITY GUARANTEE RISKS
INSURED AGAINST BY THE
RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.
CAPITAL (fully subscribed) £1,000,000. CLAIMS PAID £5,000,000.
64, CORNHILL, LONDON. A. VIAN, Secretary.

COUNTRY HOUSE AGENTS' LIST.

BOGNOR-ON-SEA.—DAWSON SIDDAL, Estate Agent. Furnished and Unfurnished Houses for Sale or Let. Apartments Agency. Lists free. Telephone IX3 Nat.—Offices: Station-road.

BRIGHTON & HOVE.—A. F. GRAVES, Auctioneer and Estate Agent, 9, North-street-quadrant, BRIGHTON. For particulars of all houses to be LET or SOLD, apply as above.

BOURNEMOUTH.—JOLLIFFE & FLINT, Estate and House Agents. Lists of Furnished and Unfurnished Houses for Sale or Let, free by post.—Offices, 1, Arcade, Bournemouth.

EASTBOURNE HOUSES.—MESSRS. LAKE & CROWDER, Auctioneers, Surveyors, and Valuers, opposite the railway station. Telephone 8. Y. Agents for all the principal furnished and unfurnished houses.

ISLE OF WIGHT.—Houses to let, furnished or unfurnished, and properties for sale.—Apply to ALBERT BULL & PORTER, Ventnor, Shanklin, Sandown, and Totland Bay. Telephone 63X, Ventnor.

OXFORD and READING.—HAMLET & DULAKE, Estate Agents, Auctioneers, Valuers, and Surveyors. Illustrated property list and all information gratis to applicants.

SERGEANT-MAJOR of Royal Artillery, leaving the Service owing to reduction of establishment, wishes for employment as Drill Instructor to Schools, Bank Messenger, or any position of trust. Used to horses, good cyclist, married, exemplary character, highly recommended by his officers, security if required.—Address, A.R., care of Messrs. CROSSLEY & Co., 57, Coleman street, E.C.

THE LADIES' GUILD (under Royal Patronage) successfully introduces Ladies as Chaperons, Companions, Secretaries, Governesses, Guides, &c. Schools recommended.
10, George-street, Hanover-square, W. Telephone, Gerrard 6006.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE. — Public School, with excellent buildings. Staff of sixteen graduates. Preparation for all public examinations.—Prospectus from The Rev. W. R. DAWSON, M.A.

AMUSEMENTS.

ALHAMBRA.—New Ballet, "QUEEN of SPADES," Mlle. Maria Bordin; Maria Vinent, The Gignacs, Urbanora, Up-to-date Pictures, New Electrical Ballet, and Grand Varieties. Doors 7.45.
Manager, GEORGE SCOTT.

EMPIRE, Leicester Sq.—New Ballet, SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY, Mlle. Adeline Genée, Première Danseuse, The Debutante, the Perezoffs, Le Pages, the Biograph, Mr. Hymack, &c. Every Evening at 8.
Manager, Mr. H. J. HITCHINS.

PALACE.—EVIE GREENE, R. G. KNOWLES, HORACE GOLDIN, CLARICE VANCE, THE BOGANNYS, &c. THE INTERNATIONAL HORSE SHOW and THE DERBY, &c., on BIOSCOPE. EVENINGS 8 (doors 7.45). MATINEE, FULL PROGRAMME, SATURDAY at 2.
Managing Director, Mr. ALFRED BUTT.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION.—Brightest and most comfortable Promenade in London. Lifelike Portrait Models of T.M. The King and Queen of Spain. Madame Tussaud's Exhibition Band. Open 9 till 10.

SOUTH KENSINGTON HOTEL

Noted for its Comfort and Convenience. QUEEN'S GATE TERRACE, S.W. One of the most fashionable Hotels in London.
Telephone No. 573 Kensington. Telegrams—"South Kensington Hotel, London."

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES;

Founder's Day Fête

GIRLS' GARDEN CITY,
BARKINGSIDE, ESSEX.

SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1907.

PATRONESS:
H.R.H. PRINCESS ALEXANDER OF TECK.

Singing; Musical and Naval Drills; Maypole; Handicrafts at Work; Bell-ringers; Action Songs; Cookery Exhibits; Gun Drill by Little Handy Men; March Past of 300 Young Emigrants, etc. Charming Grounds (60 acres). 65 Cottages, Schools, Laundry, Church, Infirmary, Open-air Sanatorium, etc., can be inspected.

Open 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Morning Service, 11.30. Short Meeting, 3.30.

LORD BRASSEY presides.

THE BISHOP of ST. ALBANS and others WILL SPEAK.

SPECIAL TRAINS, 10.35 a.m. and 2.45 p.m., from Liverpool Street.

HER GRACE THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND WILL OPEN THE NEW GYMNASIUM.

TICKETS OF ADMISSION, 1s. each. Also Cheap Return Railway Tickets, available by any train (9d. Third, 1s. 1d. Second, 1s. 5d. First), and Refreshment Tickets (Lunch, 1s. 6d.; Tea, 1s.), can be obtained beforehand from the

Honorary Secretary,
18 to 26, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY,
London, E.

EXHIBITIONS.

THE UNIQUE ATTRACTION OF THE YEAR.

THE

DUBLIN EXHIBITION

(Irish International).

One of the most charming panoramas of Exhibition Buildings the world has ever seen.

The World in Epitome, its Latest Inventions, its Historical Treasures, its Newest Machinery, its Most Recent Products, its Modern Methods of Manufacture.

AN OBJECT LESSON IN TWENTIETH CENTURY PROGRESS.

Its delightful environment makes Dublin an ideal place in which to hold such an Exhibition, and the many noted places of historical interest and picturesque beauty within easy reach give the trip all the charm of an ideal and inexpensive holiday, combined with an exceptional opportunity to see the world's progress in Science, Art, and Commerce.

All the Railway and Steamship Companies are offering special facilities and low excursion rates, which may be obtained on application at the various stations.

J. LYONS & CO., LTD. Caterers. JAMES SHANKS, J.P. Chief Executive Officer.

S.H.D.

ROYAL DUBLIN SOCIETY.—HORSE & SHEEP SHOW, AUGUST 27, 28, 29, 30.
For Prize Lists and Entry Forms apply to the Agricultural Superintendent, Leinster House, Dublin.
(By order) RICHARD J. MOSS, Registrar.

LONDON HIPPODROME.
TWICE DAILY, at 2 and 8 p.m.
MIRTH, MYSTERY, AND SENSATION.
AQUATIC, STAGE, AND EQUESTRIAN SPECTACLE.

AMUSEMENTS.

ROYAL OPERA, Covent Garden.
GRAND OPERA EVERY EVENING.
(For full particulars see Daily Papers.)
Box-office, 10 to 10.

HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE. Mr. TREE.
EVERY EVENING at 8.45.
A WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE, By Oscar Wilde.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.30.
Preceded every evening at 8 by
THE DOOR UPON THE LATCH.
Dramatised by F. Kinsey Peile from Robert Louis Stevenson's story "Le Sire de Maletroit."

ST. JAMES'S, KING STREET, PALL MALL. Tel. 3903 Gerrard.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a New and Original Play,
JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOUR, by ALFRED SUTRO.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER. Miss EVA MOORE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, MR. GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING at 8 (doors open 7.40), a new musical play entitled
THE GIRLS OF GOTTENBERG.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2 (doors open 1.40).
Box-office open daily from 10 till 10.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.—Lessees and Managers, A. & S. GATTI. EVERY EVENING at 9, Messrs. A. & S. GATTI'S PRODUCTION OF
MRS. PONDERBURY'S PAST,
By F. C. Burnand,
Under the direction of Mr. CHARLES HAWTREY.
Preceded at 8.30, by THE ANONYMOUS LETTER.
MATINEES WEDNESDAYS and SATURDAYS, at 2.30.

DALY'S THEATRE, Leicester-square.
Produced by Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING at 8.15.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY at 2.30.
A New Play, with music, entitled
THE MERRY WIDOW
("Die lustige Witwe").

APOLLO. EVERY EVENING AT 8.10.
HENRY LOWENFELD, Sole Proprietor.
Tom B. Davis, Sole Lessee and Manager.
ROBERT COURTNEIDGE'S Production,
TOM JONES.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY at 2.

SAVOY.—IOLANTHE, WEDNESDAY, FRIDAY, SATURDAY 8.25. YEOMEN OF THE GUARD, THURSDAY, 8.25. GONDOLIERS, MATINEE SATURDAY, 2.30.

GARRICK THEATRE. Mr. ARTHUR BOURCHIER and Miss VIOLET VANBRUGH. EVERY EVENING at 8.30 in
THE WALLS OF JERICHO, by ALFRED SUTRO.
MATINEE every WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

CRITERION THEATRE (next door to Piccadilly Circus Tube Station). Lessee, SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM. Every Evening at 8.30, CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company in
THE LIARS,
by Henry Arthur Jones. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.30.

SHAFTESBURY. — The Romantic Light Opera, LADY TATTERS. EVERY EVENING at 8.15, Matinee Thursdays, at 2.
Mr. COURTICE POUNDS, Mr. WALTER PASSMORE; Miss LOUIE POUNDS, Miss CLAUDIA LASELL, Miss MARIE GEORGE.

THE PLAYHOUSE, Northumberland-avenue.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. Cyril Maude. EVENINGS at 9. LAST MATINEE TO-DAY (WEDNESDAY) at 3 (by arrangement with Mr. Charles Frohman), CYRIL MAUDE as TODDLES. (Last 4 nights.) At 8.20 and 2.20, THE DRUMS OF OUDE. All seats, including gallery, can be booked. Tel., 14,042 Central.

LYRIC THEATRE. Mr. LEWIS WALLER.
Lessee, Mr. William Greet. Under the Management of Mr. Tom B. Davis.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a play in four acts by Tom Taylor, entitled
(Last Weeks.) CLANCARTY. (Last Weeks.)
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

WALDORF THEATRE, Aldwych, Strand, W.C.
On MONDAY, JUNE 24, and EVERY EVENING, at 8.30,
"IN THE BISHOP'S CARRIAGE,"
A new play in three acts by Channing Pollock, Messrs. Frank Cooper, Charles Cartwright, Henry Vibart, Charles Collette, Arnold Lucy; Mesdames Agnes Hewitt, Edith Cartwright, Elspeth Dudgeon, Margaret Fuller, Fannie Ward.

MATINEE WEDNESDAY, June 26, at 2.30.
Box-office now open 10 to 6. Tel. 3,830 Ger.

EXHIBITION.

BALKAN STATES EXHIBITION, EARL'S COURT.
Open 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. 1s. Season Tickets, 10s. 6d. Weekly Tickets, 2s. 6d.
SERVIAN SECTION.—QUEEN'S PALACE.
BULGARIAN SECTION.—IMPERIAL COURT.
MONTENEGRIN SECTION.—DUCAL HALL.
WORKING TOBACCO, CARPET AND OTHER EXHIBITS.
Manufactures, Raw Products, Arts and Industries.
IN THE BALKAN VILLAGE.
PEASANT DANCERS and GIPSY MUSICIANS FREE.
"THROUGH THE BALKANS IN TEN MINUTES."
VIEWS of MONASTIR, SHIPKA PASS, CATTARO, &c.
GRAND MILITARY AND PROMENADE CONCERTS.

ATTRACTIONS AT THE
BALKAN STATES EXHIBITION,
EARL'S COURT.
"OLD JAPAN" IN THE EMPRESS HALL,
With its Temples, Monuments, Teahouses, and Geisha.
A COLONY OF ART MISSIONARIES,
Exhibiting every phase of their wonderful Crafts.
A Wealth of Cherry, Peach, and Wistaria Blooms.
SEE THE WATERFALL AND THE LOTUS POND.
FUJI YAMA.—NIKKO TEMPLE AND NIKKO BRIDGE.
JAPANESE THEATRE. FREE.
"OLD JAPAN." "OLD JAPAN."
The New Great Chute—Maxim's Flying Machine.
Balkan Stalactite Caves—Pigmies from Ituri.
The FISHING CORMORANTS.
The Helter Skelter—Pharos the Egyptian—The Salt Mine—The Switchback.
See the NEW ILLUMINATED GARDENS.

A COQUETTE IN CRAPE.

By Frank Danby, Author of "Pigs in Clover." 1s. net.

COURT JOURNAL.—"A tragic little book, but a pleasant one."
SCOTSMAN.—An amusing and well-written 'tragedy in circumstances.'"
GLASGOW HERALD.—"Lightly touching dangerous ground at one place, pleasantly illustrates the author's constructive nimbleness and her literary accomplishment."

AFFAIRS OF STATE.

By Burton E. Stevenson, Author of "The Marathon Mystery," &c. 3s. 6d.

SCOTSMAN.—"Audacious, smart, witty, and amusing. The plot is ingenious, the dramatic farcicalities delightful, the style the crispest American, and the whole a scintillating triumph of literary frivolity."
TIMES.—"An entertaining comedy of European diplomacy in a Dutch watering place. Two American girls, who are, of course, delightful, become concerned, both politically and matrimonially, in 'affairs of State.'"
MORNING LEADER.—"The gaiety, simplicity, and naturalness of his book are very engaging, and the whole book is fresh and original."

SECOND EDITION.

THE COMPENSATION ACT 1906: Who pays, to whom, to what, and when.

By A. Clement Edwards, Barrister-at-Law, M.P. 1s. net; cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"Perfectly simple and intelligible to the man in the street. An excellent index and a small price are other qualifications which make this a good handbook for employers and employed alike."
DAILY CHRONICLE.—"A wholly admirable book. We commend this handbook without reserve."

CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.

"An author may be considered as a merciful substitute to the legislature."—GOLDSMITH.

Messrs. METHUEN'S NEW ANNOUNCEMENT LIST is fully illustrated, and contains descriptions of a number of highly important books. Kindly send a postcard to the publishers and a copy will be sent you.

Mr. Maurice Baring knows Russia as well as any living man, and he has just written a book called A YEAR IN RUSSIA. This should be read both by those who are interested in political problems and by those who are attracted by a delightful style. On no account miss this book.

You should ask to see the following new books at your booksellers' and libraries. A delightful biography, by George Paston, of LADY MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU is now ready. It contains a large number of hitherto-unpublished letters, and is a vivid picture of the life of this remarkable woman. The life of that interesting and pathetic personality, FALKLAND, has just been published by Messrs. METHUEN. The author is J. A. R. Marriott, M.A. The Times says it is "a delightful book on a delightful subject."

DAYS IN CORNWALL, by C. Lewis Hind, is a new volume in Messrs. METHUEN'S wonderfully cheap series of six-shilling topographical books. It has coloured illustrations by William Pascoe. The whole country is charmingly described. A companion book is ROUND ABOUT WILTSHIRE, by A. G. Bradley, with coloured illustrations by T. L. Gotch. Other volumes in this series deal with NORFOLK BROADS, NEW FOREST, OXFORD, LONDON, HOLLAND, UMBRIA, SPAIN, RHINE, NAPLES.

Messrs. METHUEN have been publishing Sixpenny Novels for many years, and their novels still remain the best and have a constant sale. They include an edition of the novels of ALEXANDRE DUMAS, which in time will form a complete series. Kindly write for a prospectus.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex-street, London, W.C.

FIVE FASCINATING NOVELS.

THE CANKER. By JAMES BLYTH. 6s.

"A powerful and convincing picture of life in an East Country village . . . . The book has something of the power of Zola's 'La Terre,' and it is written with Zolaesque purpose, Mr. Blyth using his story as a means of drawing attention to the evils that follow the freedom given to the mentally deficient to marry. 'The Canker' is a very powerful book."
—Daily Express.

HIS NEIGHBOUR'S LANDMARK

By 'ALIEN,' Author of "Another Woman's Territory, &c." 6s.

The Times says: "'Alien' has written a fine story—eloquent in its description moving and acute in its play of motive, and not without a touch of real poetic romance."

NATHAN TODD. By LUCAS CLEEVE. 6s.

"The story possesses considerable charm. It is a book to be enjoyed."
—Literary World.

DIABELLA. By HILDA FORBES. 6s.

"The authoress is a born story-teller. From start to finish a remarkable fertility of imagination keeps the interest fresh. . . . . A highly entertaining story."—Scotsman.

BEATEN AT THE POST.

By BURFORD DELANNOY. 6s.

"The story grips and holds one from the commencement to the finish."
—Liverpool Post.

London: DIGBY, LONG & CO., 18 Bouverie St., Fleet St., E.C.

HOW TO KNOW A GOOD NOVEL

Look for these two short names on the cover,* JOHN LONG.

Every cover bearing them signifies that it contains a good novel. Below are JOHN LONG'S latest novels, now in great demand.

SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

ITINERANT DAUGHTERS DOROTHEA GERARD
INNOCENT MASQUERADERS SARAH TYLER
A WOMAN PERFECTED - RICHARD MARSH
IN SEARCH OF JÉHANNE - AVIS HEKKING
THE WHITE HAND and the BLACK BERTRAM MITFORD
A WIFE FROM THE FORBIDDEN LAND ARCHER PHILIP CROUCH
A YANKEE NAPOLEON JOHN F. MACPHERSON
A FULL-LENGTH PORTRAIT OF EVE DANIEL DOUGLAS BREWER
THE JEWEL HOUSE - - ISABEL SMITH
THE WAY OF WAR - - - HEW SCOT

☞ Kindly watch this List of JOHN LONG'S, as important and brilliant new novels will be added to it throughout the summer.

LONDON: JOHN LONG, 12, 13, 14, Norris-st., Haymarket.

New Edition (17th). Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Boards, 1s. Of all Booksellers, or post free from the publishers.

THE DIETETIC CURE OF OBESITY.

("FOODS FOR THE FAT.")

With a Chapter on Gout and its Dietetic Treatment.
By Dr. YORKE DAVIES.

CONTENTS.—Evils of Corpulency. Dangerous Conditions due to Corpulency, such as Weak Heart, Gout, &c. Diet the only Safe and Permanent Cure at any age. Quack Medicines to reduce weight dangerous and useless. Evils of Over-eating and Sedentary Habits. Food in its Relation to Work, Exercise, &c.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, W.C.

STERILE MARRIAGE: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By a late Senior Physician to a Hospital for Women. A new Edition just published. Post free, 8s. 9d.
London: Shelley & Co., Limited, 38, Gracechurch-street.

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

MEMOIRS OF THE

COMTESSE DE BOIGNE

1781-1814.

With portrait, 1 vol., 10s. net.

 The first instalment of Memoirs which have awaited publication for years and for the passing away of the many illustrious personages who came into contact with this witty, gossip-loving writer.*

THE

COMTESSE DE BOIGNE

"She is a good talker, and we cannot have too much of her. She is a shrewd, sagacious, witty, unexaggerative Frenchwoman, with enough heart to serve our turn and enough experience to make her wise."—Times.

THE

COMTESSE DE BOIGNE

"From cover to cover the book is packed with wit and observation, and as a picture and a history of those wonderful years it is of enthralling interest."—Daily Telegraph.

A GREAT RACE-HORSE.

ECLIPSE AND O'KELLY

By THEODORE ANDREA COOK, M.A., F.S.A.,
Author of "A History of the Turf."

Profusely illustrated. 1 vol., crown 4to, £1 1s. net. Also an Edition de Luxe, limited to 100 copies, £3 3s. net.

"Appeals not merely to the lover of the Turf, but to the student of society and manners in one of the most interesting periods of our social history."—Daily Telegraph.

A GUIDE TO MODERN COOKERY

By A. ESCOFFIER, of the Carlton Hotel. 1 vol., 12s. 6d. net.

"The ordinary good plain cook will discover something worth learning on every page. The book is a comprehensive one as well as a simple one. It should be in every house."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Prospectus of these works on application.

6s. THE NOVELS OF THE DAY. 6s.

THE HOUSE OF DEFENCE

By E. F. BENSON, Author of "Paul."

ALICE FOR SHORT

By W. De MORGAN, Author of "Joseph Vance."

THE INVADER

By MARGARET L. WOODS, Author of "Sons of the Sword."

GHETTO COMEDIES

With 4 Coloured Illustrations.

By ISRAEL ZANGWILL, Author of "Ghetto Tragedies."

SIR ELYOT OF THE WOODS

By EMMA BROOKE, Author of "A Superfluous Woman."

THE COUNTRY HOUSE

By JOHN GALSWORTHY, Author of "The Man of Property." (Fourth Impression.)

KEDDY: A STORY OF OXFORD

By H. N. DICKINSON, Author of "Things that are Cæsar's." (Second Impression.)

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford-street, W.C.

Inebriety can be Cured.

We guarantee that anyone who has a desire to free himself of these awful curses can do so by taking the Keeley Treatment, and will leave the Institute without the slightest crave or desire for either Alcohol or Drugs.

How often must people be told that drink, after it has reached a certain stage, is a disease, which the poor victim again and again endeavours to throw off, while his friends say: "Use your will power and knock it off!" As well say the same of any other disease; in any case, the disease must be eradicated by scientific treatment.

The Keeley Treatment is always administered by regularly qualified physicians, who have made a special study of Inebriety. After carefully inquiring into the history of each patient, and making a thorough physical examination, they treat each case according to the condition of the patient. No matter how long-standing the addiction, or how much has been taken, the result is invariably the same, a cure.

No constitution is too delicate for the Keeley Treatment, as the remedies are perfectly harmless.

Patients are given the utmost freedom; there is absolutely no confinement, and, until the remedies render it unnecessary, they are allowed their usual amount of alcohol or drugs.

"It really Cures."

"It really cures. It does what it professes to do." Such is the emphatic testimony of Mr. Eardley-Wilmot, the well-known secretary of the Church of England Temperance Society, who for some years has had the Keeley method under close observation in this country. He tells how case after case that had been considered hopeless has yielded speedily to the Keeley Cure, the patients returning to their work full of vigour, and happy in the restoration of all that makes life worth living.

Think! either for yourself or others:

will you allow them or yourself to be utterly destroyed when an absolute cure is at hand?

We can show you hundreds of letters of gratitude from patients who have taken the treatment, and who are willing that their names should be given, or they will correspond direct with prospective patients.

Write us to-day and we will prove to you that this cure is an incontrovertible fact, approved by some of our most eminent men, among them the following: Rev. Canon Fleming, B.D.; the Right Hon. Lord Montagu of Beaulieu; H. W. Forster, Esq., M.P.; Vice-Admiral Woodward, C.B.; Rev. R. J. Campbell, M.A.; W. Hind-Smith, Esq.; and Eardley-Wilmot, Esq., R.N., Secretary of the Church of England Temperance Society.

More than half a million

have taken the treatment, among them 17,000 physicians. Does not this fact alone speak volumes? And twenty per cent. of our patients come through the recommendation of their family physician.

About one-third of the patients are ladies, all of whom have apartments outside the Institute, of their own selection.

Private Treatment.

At the constant demand of Patients wishing to be treated privately, we have decided to establish a Physician at a watering-place on the South Coast, where they can be treated without the knowledge of their friends or strangers.

The treatment takes four weeks for alcohol (for drugs five to six weeks), and is carried out in the United Kingdom only at the Keeley Institute, 9, West Bolton Gardens, London, S.W.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

NOW READY.

THE DEVIL'S PEEPSHOW.

By the Author of "A Time of Terror." Crown 8vo, price 6s.

The story of a strong man conquered by passion, who, after passing through deep waters, reaches a peaceful haven.

READY SHORTLY.

NEW NOVEL BY NEITH BOYCE.

A PIONEER OF TO-DAY.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

MADAME ALBANESI'S NEW NOVEL.

THE STRONGEST OF ALL THINGS.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A plot absorbing in its interest, never for a moment slackening, carrying the reader out of himself, and holding his complete attention from first to last."—Daily Telegraph.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

NEW NOVEL BY PERCY WHITE.

COLONEL DAVERON.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A stirring tale, which will be especially welcome to the author's numerous admirers as a remarkable example of his rich and resourceful talent."—The World.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

NEEDLES AND PINS.

A Sequel to "If I Were King."

By JUSTIN HUNTLY McCARTHY.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A fascinating romantic tale. The book abounds in dramatic incidents . . . Rich in powers of description and analysis."—Scotsman.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

DEAD LOVE HAS CHAINS.

By M. E. BRADDON. 3s. 6d.

"Remarkably well knit, brightly written, stimulating, and fresh. The plot, indeed, is excellently conceived."—Standard.

THE PASSING OF THE THIRD FLOOR BACK.

By JEROME K. JEROME. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"All the stories are on a high level of literary quality and imaginative brilliance."—Scotsman.

NEW VOLUME OF STORIES BY

W. W. JACOBS.—SHORT CRUISES.

With 38 Illustrations and Cover Design by WILL OWEN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Mr. Jacobs' humour is as irresistible as ever in these tales."—Truth.

HURST & BLACKETT, Ltd., 182, High Holborn, W.C.

NEW BOOK BY THE BARONESS ORCZY.

MESSRS. GREENING have pleasure in announcing the publication of a new book by the Author of "The Scarlet Pimpernel," entitled

THE TANGLED SKEIN

A POWERFUL HISTORICAL ROMANCE.

In this new romance the BARONESS ORCZY is at her best. The story is of enthralling interest throughout. The scene is laid in old Hampton Court in the days of Mary Tudor and her picturesque and brilliant Court.

6s. THE TANGLED SKEIN 6s.

Other notable Novels in Messrs. Greening's List are "The Mascotte of Park Lane," by Lucas Cleeve; "Richard, the Brazen," by Cyrus Brady; "The Loafer," by Gurner Gillman; "A Son of Helvetia," by A. Wakley; "And the Moor gave up its Dead," by Eric Harrison; "A Just Fate," by George Long.

GREENING & CO., Ltd., 91, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

BERNARD QUARITCH, Bookseller, 15, Piccadilly, London, W., has transferred his business to 11, Grafton Street, New Bond Street.

THE GOVERNANCE of LONDON.

Studies of the Place of London in English Institutions. By G. LAURENCE GOMME, F.S.A. With Maps, 15s. net.

THE SANITARY EVOLUTION of LONDON.

By HENRY JEPHSON. 6s. net.

THE SECRET HISTORY of THE ENGLISH OCCUPATION of EGYPT.

By WILFRID S. BLUNT. 15s. net.

THE REAL SIR RICHARD BURTON.

By WALTER PHELPS DODGE, F.R.G.S. With a Frontispiece, 6s. net.

KING LEOPOLD'S SOLILOQUY.

A Satire. By MARK TWAIN. Paper cover, 1s. net; cloth, 1s. 6d. net; postage 3d. extra.

Published by T. FISHER UNWIN, London.

A BOOK ON INDIA, AND SOME NOVELS.

INDIA—THEN AND NOW.

The first reviews of MR. H. G. KEENE'S fascinating history of the early adventurers in India—the men who made the British conquest of India possible—justify us in thinking that every one interested in our Eastern Empire should not fail to read this book. The Spectator declares, in the course of a whole-page review, that HINDUSTAN UNDER FREE LANCES (15s. net) "ought to be read by all students of Indian history"; the Outlook, also in a long review, speaks of "Mr. Keene's deeply interesting book." This history of men like De Boigne, Thomas, the Skinners, and the Hessings is fuller of adventure than any novel, and has the merit of dealing with a period in Indian history that is too little known.

SOME NEW NOVELS. 6s. each.

The latest of our novels for the summer season is THE FEAST OF BACCHUS, by ERNEST G. HENHAM, a "study in dramatic atmosphere" which the Reader recommends as "a book of strange adventures, of ghostly, nightmare visions: you will want to read it at a sitting, but do not begin it at bedtime unless your nerves are in a thoroughly healthy condition." A book of somewhat similar type, that should appeal to all interested in the occult, is ONE OR TWO, by THEO. DOUGLAS. Three new novels that have been warmly received by the Press, and should on no account be missed, are FORTUNE'S FOOL, by F. E. WYNNE (a new writer of exceptional promise): THE NANCY MANŒUVRES, by CHARLES GLEIG; and THE BARONY OF BRENDON, by E. H. LACON WATSON.

BROWN, LANGHAM, & CO., LTD.,
78, New Bond Street, W.

APPEAL.

ROYAL MATERNITY CHARITY OF LONDON.

Founded 1757.

Patron—H.M. THE QUEEN.

President—H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN OF SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

The Charity provides Midwives and Medical Attendance (Gratis) for poor Married Women in their Own Homes. Donors of £10 10s., three "Letters" annually for life; Annual Subscribers, four "Letters" per guinea.

The Committee earnestly pleads for gifts of money to extinguish the Charity's burdening Debt.

A Training School for Pupil-Midwives is attached to the Charity.

Major G. LIONEL B. KILLICK, Secretary.

Offices: 31, Finsbury-square, E.C.

SWITZERLAND

For Health and Pleasure.

VISIT

ST. MORITZ, Engadine,

6000 feet above Sea.

The exhilarating Alpine air, combined with the sunshine and blue sky of ST. MORITZ, promote renewed health and vigour.

GRAND HOTEL ST. MORITZ.

THE

HOTEL DE LUXE OF THE ALPS. . . . . .

Newly opened in December, 1905. Contains 300 rooms. Private Apartments with Bath and Dressing Rooms. Thorough quiet secured by double passages. Grand Society Room, with most beautiful views on the Lake and Mountains. Most modern Sanitary and Ventilating arrangements. Lift to all floors. Daily Concerts by the Milan Orchestra.

Tennis, Golf, Croquet, Boating on the Lake, Trout Fishing, Delightful Walks and Drives.

For Illustrated Booklet and Tariff address THE MANAGER.

TRUTH HOTEL LIST.

AYR.—STATION HOTEL, adjoining station. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards. For Business Gentlemen, Families, and Tourists to "The Land of Burns," and Ayrshire district. Within few minutes' walk of sea shore. Convenient Golf Courses. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Dumfries, and Turnberry.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. BECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—ROYAL CRESCENT HOTEL, MARINE PARADE. High Class, for Families and Gentlemen. Finest Position in Brighton for health and quiet. Sea view from nearly all rooms. Electric lighting throughout. Telephone, No. 1403. Telegrams—"Crescent Hotel, Brighton." Under personal supervision of GEORGE LOGAN, Proprietor.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Finest position on front.
Splendid public rooms. Orchestra twice daily.
Tepid sea-water Swimming Bath. Garage communicating with the Hotel.
Private suites, with bathrooms. Write for Illustrated Brochure.

DUBLIN.—HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE-STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High-class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

DUMFRIES.—STATION HOTEL, opposite station. Electric light. Lift. Billiards. Convenient for Firth of Solway, Castle Douglas, Sweetheart Abbey, Caerlaverock Castle, &c. Lovely Drives. Splendid centre for motor and cycle tours. Shooting. Fishing. Golf. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Turnberry.

EASTBOURNE.—The HYDRO HOTEL, a Select Residential Hotel, due south, facing sea. Spacious Lounges and Public Rooms. Garage. Special Week End Terms. Cinderella Dance Saturday. For Amusement Programme and Tariff (Illustrated), O. F. BERGANN, Manager.

GLASGOW.—ST. ENOCH STATION HOTEL. Best centre for business and pleasure. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (4 tables). Restaurant. Within shilling cab fare of all railway and steamboat termini in Glasgow. Near electric cars and opposite subway cable railways. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Ayr, Dumfries, and Turnberry.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., 11, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

MALVERN.—The Premier Garden City of England.—The IMPERIAL HOTEL faces due South and offers every comfort at moderate and inclusive charges. A cheerful lounge, with electric light. The extensive baths (separate building), Brine, Turkish, &c., now open. Accommodation for Motors.—For tariff apply to Resident Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

MARGATE.—CLIFTONVILLE HYDRO. Fully licensed. Finest position, facing sea and oval. Electric light and lift.
Roof garden. Billiards. First-class cuisine and wines.
Motor garage in own grounds. Turkish, dowsing, and electric baths.
Special week-end terms from Messrs. Cook & Sons.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
W. WORSTER, Manager.

TURNBERRY.—STATION HOTEL. "The most up-to-date Hotel in Scotland." Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (3 tables). Conservatory. Garage and stables. Sea Water Baths. Two fine golf courses for visitors. Lovely Climate. Charming district. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Dumfries.

LEAMINGTON SPA.—REGENT HOTEL. Premier Hotel of Midlands. Ideal Summer Resort. Best centre in England for Motoring and Driving. Garage for 60 cars. Telegs. "Regent." 'Phone 109 Leamington

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire. 500 feet above sea level. Situated on the edge of the Moor. Bracing air, lovely scenery. 9-hole Golf Course adjoining grounds, free to visitors.—JOS. I. KIRBY, Managing Director.

WESTGATE-ON-SEA. — WESTCLIFF HOTEL. Premier position, facing sea. Coffee, drawing, lounge, billiard rooms. Family suites. Stabling. Motor garage.—G. MARCH, Proprietor.

FOLKESTONE.—BATH HOTEL.
First class Private. Inclusive Terms.—Miss GRIFFITHS, late York House, Bath. Telephone 117.

MONTROSE ON THE NORTH SEA,

A Bracing Holiday Resort.

FAMOUS GOLF LINKS—Ladies' and Gentlemen's Courses open to all at nominal charge.
SEA BATHING—Miles of Sand with safe and commodious Bathing Station.
MONTROSE forms an attractive and healthy place of residence, and a convenient centre for Excursions to a neighbourhood of beauty and interest
For Official Guide apply to Town Chamberlain.

PEEBLES HOTEL Hydropathic

Under Mr. A. M. THIEM'S Personal Management.
CONSTRUCTED FIREPROOF THROUGHOUT.
EQUIPPED on the most MODERN lines. Every Home Comfort. High-class Cuisine. Pure Bracing Air. Golf, Tennis, Croquet, and Bowling Greens. Motor Garage. Magnificent Recreation Hall.
A GERMAN BATH IN SCOTLAND.—Physician, H. Neu, M.D. (Bonn University). Every form of Electricity, Massage, and Baths. Diet—Gymnastics—also Sun, Air, and Electric Light Baths.

TRUTH FOREIGN HOTEL LIST & CONTINENTAL GUIDE.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—GRAND HOTEL HENRION CORNELIUSBAD. The Leading English house.

BADEN-BADEN—HOTEL REGINA. Latest creation. The most up-to-date, elevated position.—J. LIPPERT, Proprietor.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL STEPHANIE. Allee of Lichtenthal. The leading Hotel.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL BRISTOL AND DÉPENDENCE. First-class. Facing baths and Sprudel. Occupying finest position.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL PRINCE OF WALES. HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL EULER. First-class. Close to Central Railway. Situated in a quiet position.—Prop., A. S. BUCHER.

BÂLE.—GD. HOTEL VICTORIA and NATIONAL. Opp. central Stn. First-class. Private apartments with bath.—Pr., PAUL OTTO.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL DE L'UNIVERS. Leading hotel. Suites of rooms with private baths.

BRUNNEN.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class, best situation of Brunnen. 250 beds. English billiards. American Bar.

BRUSSELS.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. Suites with private bath. Central heating.

CAPRI.—GRAND HOTEL QUISISANA. The leading first-class hotel. Every modern comfort.

CHAMOUNIX.—GRAND HOTEL IMPERIAL. The best-managed Hotel. Moderate charges.—H. BECKER.

CHATEAUX D'OEX.—GRAND and BERTHOD. 3,300 ft. Switzerland. Summer and Winter Sports.

COLOGNE.—HOTEL DISCH. The leading hotel in the town.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—GRAND HOTEL BELVEDERE. First-class.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—HOTEL VICTORIA. Favourite English House.

DRESDEN.—HOTEL BELLEVUE.—World-renowned. Very select. Situated on the Elbe and Opera Square. Suites and single rooms with private baths and toilet. Under the personal management of R. RONNEFELD.

EMS.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class.

EMS.—HOTEL FOUR SEASONS AND EUROPE. HOTEL FOUR TOWERS. First-class.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated. Full south.—Proprietor, CHIARI.

GENOA.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Apartments, with bath. Quiet rooms, garden on the fourth floor, splendid panorama.

GLION, above Montreux, Swiss.—NEW PARK HOTEL. First-class. Best situation. Own park. Open whole year. Winter sports.

HOMBURG (BATH).—RITTER'S PARK HOTEL. The leading hotel. Patronised by English and American Society.—Proprietor, C. RITTER.

HOMBURG (BATH).—VICTORIA HOTEL. Very first-class in every respect. The largest, also 4 villas. Finest garden.—J. BAEHL, Pr.

HOMBURG (BATH).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Suites with private bath and lavatory. "Hygienic diet at doctor's advice."

HOMBURG (BATH).—HOTEL BELLEVUE. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Vacuum cleaning indoors.—W. FISCHER, Prop.

KISSINGEN (BAD).—HOTEL VICTORIA and KAISERHOF. The leading English house.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE & RICHMOND. Motor garage. Leading hotels. Best situation. Open whole year.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL DE LAUSANNE. First-class. Facing railway station. Latest comforts.—AD. SCHAER, Prop.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU SEJOUR. First-class family home. All latest comforts. Fine situation. Large garden.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL EUROPE. First-class. Finest situation. Very quiet. Entirely renovated. Latest improvements.—HAGEN BROS., Proprietors.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Open from March 4. In the vicinity of Station and landing boats.—G. MUTH, Proprietor.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BELLEVUE AU LAC. First-class. Large dining-room, separate tables. Modern improvements.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. New hotel, unrivalled position, with latest improvements. The Hotel faces the English Church.—Proprietor, A. BROCCA, of Hotel Lugano.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BEAU REGARD & CONTINENTAL. First-class, beautifully situated in its own grounds. Nr. English church.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. First-class. Near Cathedral. Post, Teleg., & Rly. Office in hotel. Central heating. Suites with baths

MONTE CARLO.—GRAND HOTEL DE LONDRES. Opposite Casino. Modern comfort. Reasonable terms. Always open.—Manager, J. KAISER.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Unrivalled situation and comforts.

MUNICH.—THE CONTINENTAL. Leading HOTEL and RESTAURANT. Entirely renewed and enlarged.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHERHOF. A good English house.—CARL POSCH, Proprietor.

NAPLES.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class. Situated in the finest and most select part of Naples. Magnificent view of town, Vesuvius, and bay. Proprietors, HAUSER & DOEPFNER.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable, in best situation. Splendid view of bay.

NAPLES.—GD. HOTEL DU VESUVE. Splendid position. Strictly first-class. Latest comfort.

NAPLES.—ELDORADO MODERN HOTEL. Good central situation. Moderate terms. Overlooking the Gulf.

NICE—GD. HOTEL DES ILES BRITANNIQUES. First-class, moderate terms.—Proprietor, ZAMBAIL. Summer, Hotel Roseg-Pontresina, Engadine.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel. Facing sea, nearest the Kursaal.—Prop., H. HILLEBRAND BROWNE.

OSTEND.—Sea bathing. The leading hotels on the beach are the CONTINENTAL, 400 beds, the SPLENDID, 400 beds. Rooms from 6 francs. Full board with room, 12 to 20 shillings, according to location.

PALERMO.—EXCELSIOR PALACE HOTEL. New. Leading hotel. Opened February, 1906.

PARIS.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Most luxurious and comfortable hotel in Paris. Entirely renovated.—A. LOTTI, Gen. Mgr.

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES and ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rendezvous of English and Americans.—Proprietor-Manager, A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—MERCEDES HOTEL, Place de l'Etoile. Most modern hotel in Paris. Opened April, 1904. Luxuriously furnished.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA, Avenue de l'Opéra. First-class. Latest and all modern improvements.—G. VAUTIER, Prop.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENÉE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PONTRESINA.—HOTEL KRONENHOF & BELLAVISTA. First-class. Best situation. Open whole year. Summer and Winter resort.

ROME.—REGINA HOTEL. New. Opposite Queen Margherita's Palace. One of the leading.—Managing Prop., E. BARBIANI.

ROME.—PALACE HOTEL. New. Up-to-date. BEAUSITE HOTEL. First-class family house.

ROME.—HOTEL ROYAL. The English House.

ROME—SAVOY HOTEL. First-class family hotel near the gardens.—Proprietor, J. LENGYEL.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family Hotel. Preferred position amongst the villas. Inclusive terms, from Fr. 11 to 20.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ENGADINER KULM. Baths with suites and rooms. Golf, tennis, and all the winter sports.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL, the most fashionable. Proprietor, CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ST. PETERSBURG. Family hotel. Sunniest position, adjoining Kulm and all the Sport places. Inclusive terms, 10 to 16 fr.

TERRITET, Switzerland.—GRAND HOTEL & ALPES. Well-known rendezvous of English and American clientèle.

TERRITET.—GRAND HOTEL BON-PORT. Favourite English house. Apartments with baths. Most sheltered situation.

VEVEY.—GRAND HOTEL and PALACE HOTEL. The Fashionable Hotels. Two tennis courts.—ENG. MICHEL.

VEVEY.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. 120 rooms. Very latest improvements. Bath with private suite.—Proprietor, T. WHITE.

VEVEY.—Healthiest Swiss resort.—TROIS COURONNES HOTEL. First-class. Modern improvements. Most moderate terms.

WIESBADEN.—FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest position, opposite Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. Connected with a Magnificent Bathing Establishment. Situated at the Curplace. "The English Home."

WIESBADEN.—PALAST HOTEL. Kochbrunnen Bath establishment. Rooms with private bath. First-class, up-to-date.

FOREIGN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BEAULIEU.—HOUSES & ESTATES. E. KURZ. (Opposite Station.) Villas furnished, to be let or sold.

HOTELS, &c.

PORTSMOUTH.—TOTTERDELL'S HOTEL. Naval and family hotel. Premier position. Old established. Telephone: No. 104 Telegrams: "Tots, Portsmouth."—C. MULLARD, Proprietor.

ILFRACOMBE.—CLARK'S direct principal sea fronting ARCADE PRIVATE HOTEL. Homely. Highly commended. Personal attention. Maple's furnishing. Electricity throughout. Moderate terms.

LOWESTOFT GRAND HOTEL.

Standing in three acres of charming Grounds.
300 feet Sea Frontage.

Lawns for tennis, bowls, croquet. Steps leading to the beach from Hotel grounds for bathing. Arrangements made for families.

Lowestoft is the Healthiest Seaside Resort on the East Coast.

The HEALTHIEST SPOT IN SCOTLAND.
At the foot of the Grampians. Grand Scenery. Every Modern Comfort. Excellent Cuisine. Electric Light and Heating. Spacious Lounge. Billiards. IDEAL RESORT for GOLF; 18-Hole Course near. MOTORING. Motor Garage and Pit. TENNIS and BOWLING GREENS near hotel. Send for Illustrated tariff to C. A. THIEM, Proprietor

PATRONISED BY H.M. THE KING.

DOVERCOURT.—HOTEL ALEXANDRA.

Facing Sea. The Most Bracing Air on East Coast, within 2 hours from London (or 3 hours Motor Run). Every Modern Luxury and Comfort. Excellent Cuisine. Electric Light. Golf Course near. Motor Garage (Auto. Club, Offl. Appt.). Special Terms for Week-end. Send for New Tariff.

A. H. THIEM, Proprietor.

SELECT CONDUCTED SWISS TOURS.

CONDUCTED TOURS leave frequently for
PARIS, SWITZERLAND, and THE RHINE.
THE RHINE, BLACK FOREST, & SWITZERLAND.
PARIS and SWITZERLAND.
GRAND ALPINE TOUR
Occupying 14 to 22 days.

Travel tickets, hotel accommodation, carriage drives, steamer and rail excursions, sightseeing, rail and hotel servants' fees, free allowance of luggage, and the services of a competent representative.

INCLUSIVE FARES from £22 10s.
NO EXTRAS.

Illustrated booklet post free, THOS. COOK & SON, Ludgate Circus, London, and Branch Offices.

NORWAY PLEASURE CRUISES.

13 DAYS FROM £12 12s.

"MIDNIGHT SUN." Two Berth Cabins. Luxurious Accommodation. Sailing June 22; July 6 20; Aug. 3, 17. Visiting Sand, Odde, Bergen, Fretheim, Gudvangen, Loen, Marok, Naess, and Molde.—Apply ALBION S.S. CO., LTD., Newcastle-on-Tyne.

R.M.S.P.

THE ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY,

LUXURIOUS TRAVEL.

Brazil, £50; Argentina, £62; West Indies, £38.

SHORT TRIPS TO
Spain, £9 15s.; Portugal, £12.

Apply to 18, Moorgate-street, E.C.; or 32, Cockspur-street, S.W.

DENMARK. NORWAY. SWEDEN.

VIA HARWICH & ESBJERG,

By the Danish Royal Mail Steamers of the Forenede Line of Copenhagen, thrice weekly.

Send postcard to the UNITED SHIPPING COY., Ltd., 108, Fenchurch-street, London; or the Continental Manager, Liverpool Street Station, E.C., for descriptive illustrated pamphlet (free).

HOLIDAYS IN THE OLD WORLD CITIES OF THE ZUYDER ZEE

and other interesting parts of Holland.

SCHEVENINGEN—The Dutch Brighton—Only 10 hours from London.

BY THE

British Royal Mail Route,

via Harwich and the Hook daily.

CORRIDOR VESTIBULED TRAINS.
DINING AND BREAKFAST CARS.

Send post card to the Continental Manager, G.E.R., Liverpool Street Station, London, E.C., for descriptive illustrated pamphlet (free).

GREAT £150,000 STOCK at SALE PRICES

INAUGURAL SALE

OETZMANN & CO., in order to facilitate further development and extension, have converted their business into that of a Joint Stock Company.

Every Article in Stock

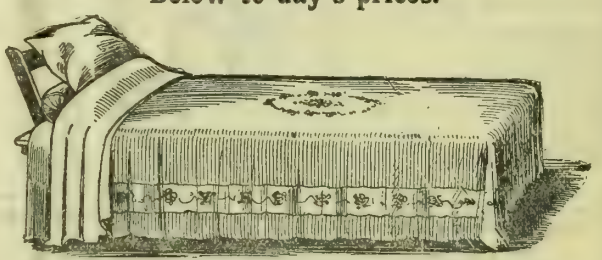
At commencement of Sale Reduced and in many instances as much as

50 PER CENT.

Write for SALE CATALOGUE, Post Free.

Carpets at 20 to 30 per cent.

Below to-day's prices.



Pitch Pine Folding Bedstead, with Double Woven Wire Spring Mattress, Overlay Mattress, Bolster and Pillow, 2 feet 3 inches wide by 6 feet long 12/9

Oetzmann's

OETZMANN & Co LTD.

HAMPSTEAD ROAD. W.
Continuation North of Tottenham-court Road.

Rowland's Macassar Oil

FOR THE HAIR

Is the Best Preparation you can use.

WHY?

BECAUSE without it the Hair becomes dry, thin, and brittle, and this is the nearest approach to the natural oil in the Hair, the loss of which causes baldness.

BECAUSE you must keep the Hair well nourished and not too dry, or you will soon lose it.

Ladies require it to keep the Hair soft and silky.

Men require it to prevent baldness.

Children require it to lay the foundation of a Luxuriant Growth.

Of Stores, Chemists, and ROWLANDS, 67, Hatton Garden.
Sizes, 3/6, 7/-, 10/6.
Sold in a Golden Colour for Fair Hair

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

TATTERSALLS.

Messrs. Tattersall beg to give NOTICE that their Thursday Sales have commenced and will be continued during the Season.
Sales every Monday and Thursday.

THE
BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY,

164, Buckingham Palace Road, S.W.,

have a large selection of well furnished country houses to let for long or short periods at—

	Bedrooms.	Bathrooms.	Reception.	Rent.
				Gns.
GREAT MISSENDEN ...	8	2	4	10
MILDENHALL	11	—	4	12
HIGHWORTH	12	—	3	9
BLACKWATER	9	1	3	7
WEYBRIDGE	6	1	3	5
ABINGDON	12	1	4	10
WARWICK	11	1	3	9
BANBURY	13	1	4	14
HENLEY-ON-THAMES ...	9	1	3	10
" " ...	12	—	4	9
BROXBOURNE	9	1	3	8
ROYSTON	10	—	3	9
BRACKNELL...	13	1	3	10
STONY STRATFORD ...	11	1	3	9
ICKENHAM	11	1	3	14
FARNHAM	3	1	2	2
KELVEDON	5	1	3	5
PARKSTONE	8	1	3	4
BURNHAM BEECHES ...	5	1	2	5
Etc., Etc.

Most of these houses have large grounds and stabling. Further particulars and orders to view may be had on application to the

BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY,
164, Buckingham Palace Road, S.W. (late of 83, Ebury Street).

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS, sent gratis, with full particulars. Schools also recommended. Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 22, Craven-street, Trafalgar-sq., W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 Gerrard

CIGARS

We will supply direct from our factories in HAVANA and Holland, Cigars at HALF BRITISH PRICES from 7/6 per hundred.
LA CUBA COMPANY,
11, N.Z. Voorburgwal,
Amsterdam, HOLLAND.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE
FREE

O.S. TOOTH BLOCK

THE BEST AND SAFEST DENTIFRICE.

The Rev. EDWARD MUCKLESTON, M.A., Haseley Rectory, Warwick, says:—"I must say, with truth, that I prefer your preparation to all others."

OVER 5,000 UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIALS.

Sold by all Chemists, price One Shilling,

AND BY OSCAR SUTTON & CO., PRESTON.

PHOSFERINE

The Greatest of all Tonics.

RADIATES HEALTH.

Used in Court and Cottage. Supplied by

ROYAL COMMANDS

To The Royal Family, The Empress of Russia, The King of Greece, The Queen of Roumania, The Dowager Empress of Russia, The Crown Princess of Roumania, and the principal royalty and aristocracy throughout the world.

It is the most powerful Nerve and Recuperative Tonic known. It removes Mental Depression, Want of Tone and Nerve Power. It has remarkable Health-giving, Strength-giving, Energising & Rejuvenating properties

Proprietors:—ASHTON & PARSONS, LIMITED.
La Belle Sauvage, London, E.C.

A TILIA BISCUIT

Made by PEEK, FREAN

is more nourishing than several ordinary biscuits of the same size.

Tilia Biscuits contain about 20 per cent. of TILIA, the wonderful substance which is all nourishment. They are sold by all Grocers and Stores at 1/= and 2/= per tin, and can be had plain, sweet, or wholemeal.

PEEK, FREAN & Co. Ltd.

OFFER

FREE SAMPLES

of TILIA BISCUITS, COCOA, and POWDER on receipt of 1d. stamp for postage. — PEEK, FREAN & CO., Ltd., Dept. T6, 176, Drummond-road, S.E.

Price 1/- NOW READY. By Post, 1/3

The Thirteenth Series of

QUEER STORIES

from "TRUTH."

PERMANENTLY ENLARGED.

1st Series, GREEN.
2nd Series (Out of Print).
3rd Series, YELLOW.
4th Series, BLUE (Out of Print).
5th Series, SCARLET (Out of Print).
6th Series, VIOLET.
7th Series, ORANGE.
8th Series, WHITE.
9th Series, ROYAL PURPLE.
10th Series, APPLE GREEN.
11th Series, TERRA COTTA.
12th Series, RAINBOW.
13th Series, BLUE Cover, printed in red.

This volume has a blue wrapper printed in red to distinguish it from the twelve previous issues.

Can be obtained at all Booksellers' and Bookstalls.

"TRUTH OFFICE," 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

SPECIAL FOR LADIES.

J. C. VICKERY

Jeweller and Silversmith
To H.M. The KING
and H.M. The QUEEN.
179, 181, 183, Regent Street, W.

D E A R E S T

No. M 520.—Vickery's Exclusive Flat Gold Cedar Pencil Holder.

Set Diamond, Emerald, Amethyst, Ruby, Emerald, Sapphire, Topaz, forming word "DEAREST."

With Ring, only £5 15s.; with Stirrup Loop, £6 6s.

Other articles with gems forming word "Dearest."

Rings, Charms, Brooches, Bracelets, Pocket Knives, Lockets, &c.

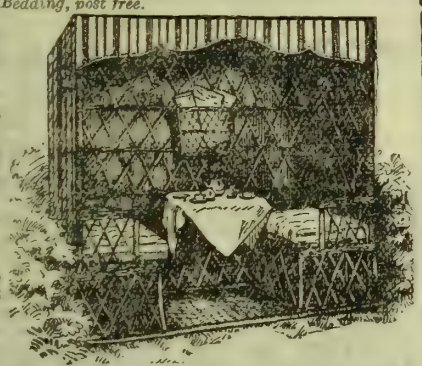
FRILLED BUTTER MUSLIN

WITH NEW HEMSTITCH FRILLS, 3 yds. long, 8/3 per pair. PLAIN FRILLS, 6 9 per pair. Sample book of Plain and Fancy Muslins on approval. Carpets, Tapestries, Cretonnes, Art Silks, Art Serges. Patterns on approval. Book of Lace Curtains, Blinds, Carpets, Linoleum, Furniture, Bedsteads, Bedding, post free.

THE BELVOIR WICKER ARBOUR.

With let-down flap Table; Basket for Books, Needlework, &c. Being light, it is easily turned in any position. Shelters from wind and sun.

Price Complete in Striped Tick.. £3 5 0
Shower-proof 4 7 6
Made to fold flat, 15/- extra.
Catalogue Free.



GORRINGE & CO., 91A Dept., Queen's Walk, NOTTINGHAM.

Robinson & Cleaver,

BELFAST. LTD.

Regent Street & Cheapside, LONDON; and LIVERPOOL.
Manufacturers to His Gracious Majesty The King, H.R.H. The Princess of Wales, &c., &c.
Carriage paid on Orders 20s. upwards in United Kingdom.

CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples Post Free.

BORDERED.
Children's .. .. .. 1/3 per doz.
Ladies' .. .. 2/6 „
Gentlemen's .. .. .. 3/6 „
HEMSTITCHED.
Ladies' .. .. 2/9 per doz.
Gentlemen's .. .. .. 3/11 „

IRISH COLLARS, CUFFS, & SHIRTS.

Illustrated Price Lists Post Free.

Collars—Gentlemen's four-fold, from 1/11 per doz.
Cuffs for Gentlemen from 6/11 per doz.
Matchless Shirts, with four-fold Fronts and Cuffs and bodies of Fine Longcloth, 35/6 the half-doz. (to measure, 2/- extra).

OLD SHIRTS made good as new with good materials in neckband, cuffs, and fronts, for 14/- the half-doz.

IRISH DAMASK TABLE AND HOUSE LINEN.

Fish Napkins, 2/11 per doz.
Dinner „ 5/6 „
Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2/11 each.
Table Cloths, 2½ by 3 yds., 5/11 each.
Kitchen Table Cloths, 11½d. each.
Linen Sheeting, 2 yards wide, 1/11 per yard. Surplice Linen, 10½d. per yard. Dusters, from 3/3 per doz. Glass Cloths, 3/11 per doz.

N.B.—To prevent delay, all Letter-orders and Inquiries for Samples of these goods should be sent direct to 40, W. Donegall Place, Belfast.

"THE QUEEN OF Apollinaris TABLE WATERS."

Patterns post free.

Remittance or Reference with order.

The "CALEDONIAN" GOLFING SKIRT
supplied by
COPLAND & LYE, Glasgow,
enhances the enjoyment of the game. These smart well-cut Skirts are made of reliable Scotch Tweeds, checked or plain; also of navy or black Serge.
21/- Price, in Stock Sizes, 21/-
Made to special measurements, 2/- extra. Carriage paid in U.K.

COPLAND & LYE'S Famous Scotch Tartan Skirts in the principal clan tartans 42/-

COPLAND & LYE'S Renowned "Caledonian" Winceys from 1/- per yard.

COPLAND & LYE, THE LEADING SPECIALISTS IN SCOTCH TEXTILES.
The Caledonian House, Sauchiehall Street, GLASGOW.

Jewsbury & Brown's ORIENTAL TOOTH PASTE.

In Pots and Tubes.

The BRITISH COALITE COMPANY, LIMITED, is ISSUING a PROSPECTUS, which is dated June 15th, 1907, and which states, amongst other things, that:—

This Prospectus has been filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies.

The Subscription List opened on TUESDAY, JUNE 18TH, 1907, and will close for London applications on or before THURSDAY, JUNE 20TH, 1907, and for Country applications on or before the first post on FRIDAY, JUNE 21ST, 1907.

This notice is not to be regarded as an invitation to the public to subscribe for Shares. The full Prospectus contains particulars of Contracts, &c., and other information, in accordance with the requirements of the Companies Act, 1900. Applications will only be received on the terms of the full Prospectus, copies of which can be obtained at the office of the Company, or from the Bankers, Brokers, and the British Coalite Company, Limited.

BRITISH COALITE COMPANY, LTD.

(Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900.)

CAPITAL - - - £2,000,000,

DIVIDED INTO

1,500,000 ORDINARY SHARES of £1 each, and 500,000 DEFERRED ORDINARY SHARES of £1 each.

Out of the profits available for distribution in each year, the Ordinary Shares will be first entitled to a non-cumulative dividend of 6 per cent. per annum, and the surplus profits will be distributed as to one-half amongst the Ordinary Shares, and the other half amongst the Deferred Ordinary Shares.

The Ordinary Shares will also have a preference as regards Capital over the Deferred Ordinary Shares, and after repayment of the Capital paid up on both classes of Shares will be entitled to one-half of the surplus Assets, the holders of the Deferred Ordinary Shares being entitled to the other half.

ISSUE OF 1,500,000 ORDINARY SHARES AT PAR, PAYABLE:—2s. 6d. on Application, 2s. 6d. on Allotment, 5s. 0d. on the 19th August, 1907, 5s. 0d. on the 18th October, 1907, 5s. 0d. on the 17th December, 1907.

Payment in full may be made on Allotment. Interest at 4 per cent. per annum will be allowed on amounts prepaid.

With the exception of £55,000 (required for the repayment of the deposits on the purchase of freehold land at Barking, for expenses at Wednesfield, and for the payment of preliminary expenses), the whole of the purchase consideration is taken by the Vendors in Deferred Ordinary Shares, and the proceeds of this issue will be used for the completion of the purchase of the said freehold properties, for the construction of Coalite works at Barking and elsewhere, the payment of underwriting commission and brokerage, and for working capital.

DIRECTORS.

CHARLES ALLEN, J.P. (Chairman, Henry Bessemer and Co., Ltd.; Carlton Main Colliery Co., Ltd., near Barnsley), Bent's Green, Sheffield.
SIR William H. BAILEY (Director of Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron and Coal Company, Ltd., and Manchester Ship Canal Co.), Sale Hall, Cheshire.
A. C. CORY-WRIGHT, J.P. (Director Wm. Cory & Son, Ltd., Coal Factors), 52, Mark-lane, London, E.C.
ALBERT GEORGE KITCHING, J.P. (Director of the Metropolitan Railway Company), 7, Drapers'-gardens, London, E.C.
SIR W. H. PREECE, K.C.B., F.R.S. (Director London Electric Supply Corporation, Ltd), 8, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W.
HARCOURT WYNNE PUGH (Mann, George & Co., Coal Exporters), 23, Lime-street, London, E.C.

BANKERS.

London—UNION OF LONDON & SMITHS BANK, LIMITED, 2, Princes-street, E.C., and Branches.
" PARR'S BANK, LIMITED, 4, Bartholomew-lane, London, E.C., and Branches.
" MANCHESTER & LIVERPOOL DISTRICT BANKING COMPANY, LIMITED, 75, Cornhill, London, E.C., and at Manchester, Liverpool, and Branches.
Sheffield—SHEFFIELD & HALLAMSHIRE BANK, LIMITED.
Newcastle—BARCLAY & CO., LIMITED.
Scotland—THE NATIONAL BANK OF SCOTLAND, LIMITED, Head Office, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Branches.

SOLICITORS.

ASHURST, MORRIS, CRISP, & CO., 17, Throgmorton-avenue, London, E.C.

BROKERS.

London—VERTUE, LUBBOCK & CO., 43, Threadneedle-street and Stock Exchange, E.C.
Manchester—R. A. ARMITAGE & SON, 10, St. Anne's-square.
Sheffield—EADON & DUTCHMAN, 2, East Parade.
Newcastle—WISE, SPEKE & CO., 28, Collingwood-street, and Stock Exchange.
Liverpool—A. M. SING & Co., 26, Exchange-street East.
Cardiff—E. T. LYDDON & SONS, Bute Docks.

AUDITORS.

DELOITTE, PLENDER, GRIFFITHS & CO., 5, London Wall-buildings, E.C.
E. LAYTON BENNETT & CO., 31 and 32, Broad-street-avenue.

CONSULTING ENGINEER.

THOMAS PARKER, M.I.C.E., M.I.M.E.

SECRETARY (pro tem.) AND OFFICES.

J. E. G. HADATH, No. 3 London Wall-buildings, London, E.C.

BRITISH COALITE COMPANY, LIMITED, has been formed to purchase the Patent Rights for manufacturing and dealing in COALITE in the United Kingdom, to acquire valuable freehold sites at Barking and Wednesfield, together with the COALITE plant capable of an output of about 15,000 tons per annum now in operation, and to take over a contract entered into with Messrs. Wm. Cory & Son, Ltd., under which they agree for twenty-one years to collect and sell the whole of the output in the metropolitan and other areas, as defined in the contract, and to act as sole agents for the purchase of coal within such areas.

WHAT COALITE IS.—COALITE is manufactured from ordinary coal by a refining process, the invention of Mr. Thomas Parker, M.I.C.E., M.I.M.E., of Wolverhampton, the well-known Engineer, who recently carried out the electrification of the Metropolitan Railway.

In his report, Mr. James Swinburne, F.R.S., describes COALITE as follows:—

"Mr. Parker distils coal at a low temperature so as to produce COALITE, by removing all the smoke-producing matter without overheating the carbon. COALITE is thus an improved coal, lighting more easily and burning absolutely without smoke. The process does not break down the hydro-carbons, so that nearly a double yield of valuable liquid bye-products is obtained, and about half the usual volume of gas, which is on the other hand richer than ordinary gas.

"The treatment of coal so as to produce primarily not coke but a first-rate domestic fuel, and at the same time a larger yield of liquid bye-products, and a notable quantity of rich illuminating gas is, in my opinion, a new principle of the highest public importance."

DOMESTIC USE.—Compared with household coal of good quality, COALITE has, among others, the following advantages:—

1. It radiates more heat into the room, the difference being very remarkable in large fires.
2. It burns absolutely without smoke.
3. It lights easily and burns up brightly at once, so that the fire is cheerful and efficient from the beginning.
4. It keeps a clear glowing fire for many hours without attention.
5. It can be burnt down into a very small fire without going out.
6. It heats a room more cheaply than the best coal.
7. It can be used in any form of grate or stove.
8. Chimney and kitchen flues will not require sweeping.

COMMERCIAL VALUE.—As some 13,000,000 tons of bituminous coal are burned annually in the Metropolis alone, most of which could with advantage and economy be replaced by Coalite, there is practically an unlimited field for the new fuel.

The smoke and soot given off by a coal fire are due to imperfect combustion, and it is estimated that one-fourth of the coal used in London is so wasted.

In the manufacture of COALITE, however, almost the whole of the valuable constituents of the coal, which would otherwise be lost in smoke and soot, are preserved and converted into bye-products of great commercial value. The following figures, the result of exhaustive experiments in the manufacture of COALITE, by Dr. S. Rideal, Prof. Lewes, and Mr. T. Parker, give mean quantities of bye-products which will be obtained per 2,100,000 tons of Coalite produced from 3,000,000 tons of bituminous coal:—

Gas of high quality of about 20 candle-power	14,800,000,000	cub. ft.
Ammoniacal liquor, producing sulphate of ammonia	20,839	tons.
Tar	306,035	"
From which is extracted:—
Pitch (high quality)	127,939	tons.
Crude light oils (benzol, naphtha, &c.)	7,170,000	galls.
Carbolic oils	5,535,000	"
Creosote oils	9,442,500	"
Anthracene oils (dye stuffs, &c.)	9,003,750	"

The production of even 2,100,000 tons of COALITE annually in London alone would place the Company in possession of sufficient bye-products to establish manufactures of all the compounds capable of being produced from these bye-products. The Directors anticipate a ready and profitable sale for the COALITE gas, not merely for enriching the illuminating gas supplied to the metropolitan and other areas, but also for use in large gas engines, for which, when diluted, it is eminently suitable.

Coal tar is the starting point in the preparation of synthetic dye stuffs, and an extremely profitable industry in the preparation of them will be within the grasp of the Company, while the wealth of light hydro-carbons in the liquid bye-products obtained in the manufacture of COALITE makes it probable that the fuel of the future for motor vehicles will be drawn from this source.

The pitch obtained in the manufacture of COALITE possesses excellent qualities for electrical work where high insulation is required. A copy of the report of Messrs. Preece and Cardew, of which an extract accompanies this Prospectus, can be seen at the Offices of the Company.

PLANT AND OUTPUT.—The manufacture of COALITE on a commercial scale has been going on at Wednesfield during the past year, where extensions of the plant are in progress.

A large freehold site has been secured at Barking, having a valuable frontage to the River Thames, and it is intended to erect, immediately, works on this site capable of treating about 3,000,000 tons of coal per annum for supply in the Metropolitan area. These works will be extended as demand requires.

The development of the means for supplying London with the new smokeless fuel, not only for domestic, but for commercial purposes, will be followed by the establishment of manufacturing centres throughout the provinces. Applications in regard to licenses for using the COALITE process have already been received from important colliery proprietors in Great Britain, COALITE being especially an excellent fuel for steam generating purposes.

ARRANGEMENT FOR SALE OF COALITE.—The Vendors have entered into the important agreement with Messrs. Wm. Cory & Son, Limited, above mentioned. Messrs. Cory's unrivalled facilities, in conjunction with Messrs. Rickett, Cockerell & Co., Limited, place them in an exceptional position for carrying out this work.

ESTIMATED PROFITS.—From the results of tests made during the manufacture of COALITE at Wednesfield by Prof. Vivian Lewes, Dr. S. Rideal, and Mr. T. Parker (during which the cost of production was carefully and exhaustively ascertained), they estimate that 2,100,000 tons of COALITE, with the resulting gas, will produce, apart from other bye-products of great value, a net profit of over £500,000.

To pay 6 per cent. upon 1,500,000 Ordinary Shares	£90,000
Balance available for further Dividends, Reserve, &c.	410,000
	£500,000

The above estimate of profit is based upon the production and sale of only 2,100,000 tons of Coalite for supply in the Metropolitan area and does not take into account the profits to be derived from the sale of the bye-products, other than Gas, resulting from the manufacture within that area or from the further manufacture of Coalite and the resulting bye-products in London and in the other large towns and districts throughout the United Kingdom.

From the above figures it will be seen that after paying the 6 per cent. dividend upon the Ordinary Shares a balance remains of £410,000 available for further dividends and reserve. The Directors anticipate, however, that on the sale of the bye-products, and the establishment of other Coalite works in the Provinces, these figures of profits can be largely increased.

PATENT RIGHTS.—Exhaustive searches as to previous Patents have been made in the British, German, French, and United States Patent Records, by Messrs. Edward Evans & Co., of Chancery Lane, W.C., which have been confirmed by the official examinations as to novelty made in the United Kingdom, Germany and the United States. The validity of the Patent Rights for Great Britain has been reported upon by Mr. Terrell, K.C., Mr. Walter, K.C., and Mr. Frederic Swann, whose joint opinion was entirely favourable on all points.

The following is a copy of such opinion:—

"We have carefully perused and considered the numerous earlier specifications which have been placed before us, dealing with the subject of the destructive distillation of coal, and the preparation of fuel by such distillation. We have settled the complete Specification of Parker on his application for Patent 14,365/06 having regard to all such earlier Specifications.

"We are of opinion that the patent, when granted on such application, will be valid, and that the Specification as we have settled it describes an invention which is not disclosed in any of the earlier documents placed before us, and that such invention is novel and good subject-matter for letters patent.

(Sgd.) " THOS. TERRELL.
" ARTHUR J. WALTER.
" FREDERIC SWANN."

The complete specification which was lodged at the Patent Office on the 24th December, 1906, has now passed the official examination, and the Comptroller-General of Patents has issued his certificate that it is ready for acceptance. The applications for the United States and German Patents have been accepted.

Application for a special settlement in and an official quotation of the Company's shares will be made in due course to the Stock Exchange, London.

To Profit Participating Policy Holders

IN THE

STANDARD LIFE ASSURANCE CO.

The Profit Participating Policy Holders of the above Company are hereby informed that a movement has been on foot for some time past with a view to obtaining redress from the Company in respect of the passing of the bonus for the last quinquennium.

The Policy Holders concerned appointed an influential Committee consisting of the following—

Sir CHRISTOPHER FURNESS, M.P.
JAMES BROWN, Esq., J.P., 3, Kent Terrace, Regent's Park, N.W.
ERNEST SCHLOESSER, Esq., 23, St. Thomas'-street, Southwark, S.E.

and instructed them to obtain the Opinion of Sir Robert Finlay, K.C., on the whole matter.

That Opinion being favourable, the Committee have since used every effort to arrive at a friendly settlement of their claims with the Directors of the Company, but without success.

The Policy Holders concerned have therefore held a further meeting and authorised the Committee to commence legal proceedings against the Company; and it was the feeling of the Meeting that the Committee should publicly invite the co-operation and support of the whole body of Profit Participating Policy Holders interested.

Policy Holders of that class are therefore invited to communicate (stating the amount of their policies) with the undersigned, who will furnish them with full particulars of the steps that have already been taken, and such further information as they may desire.

By order of the Committee,
MAURICE JENKS, F.C.A., Honorary Secretary,
6, Old Jewry, London, E.C.

BIRKBECK BANK (established 1851), Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C. 2½ per cent. interest allowed on Deposit Accounts. 2 per cent. interest on Drawing Accounts with Cheque Book. All general Banking Business transacted. ALMANACK, with full particulars POST FREE.—C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

Please Note Change of Address.

Belgrave Ladies Agency,

164, BUCKINGHAM PALACE ROAD, S.W.

SERVANTS!
SERVANTS!!
SERVANTS!!!

For Thoroughly Reliable Servants with personal characters for London or country, also foreign servants; also job servants with references taken up before recommendation can be had on the shortest notice.

HOUSES!
HOUSES!!
HOUSES!!!

The Belgrave Ladies Agency have a large selection of HOUSES and FLATS in all parts of London, country, and abroad; also APARTMENTS. The Agency, which has highly influential recommendations, is entirely worked and managed by Ladies.

The

Belgrave Ladies Agency,

164, BUCKINGHAM PALACE ROAD, S.W.

Late of 83, Ebury Street, S.W.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY

(LIMITED),

HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.

INVESTED FUNDS - - £63,000,000

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

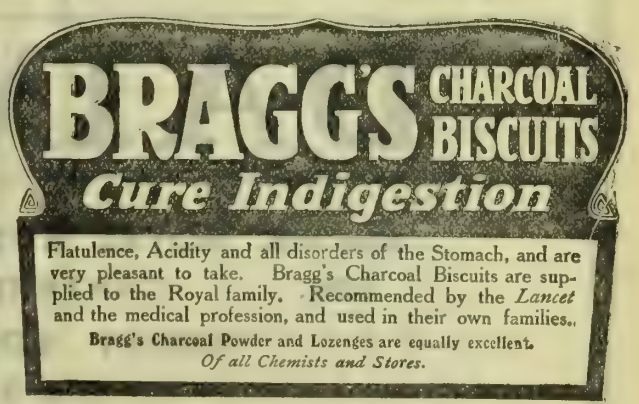
NOTICE.

No member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the Control of the Committee.

A list of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.



A LOVELY CLEAR COMPLEXION

ensured by using

SULPHOLINE LOTION

The Standard Remedy for over 35 years. Quickly removes all Skin Eruptions—clears off every Pimple, Blemish, or Spot.

FREE TRIAL SAMPLE sent on receipt of 2d. to pay postage.

Sold everywhere, in bottles 1/-, or on receipt of amount.

A Good Complexion is Better than a Pretty Face.

J. PEPPER & CO., Bedford Laboratory, London, S.E.

THE

ITALA

Cars are noted for their vitality and simplicity. It is not only unique in design but perfection in construction, which makes the Itala the most Elegant and up-to-date Car of To-day.

SIR THOMAS LIPTON says:—
"I have much pleasure in stating that my 70 h.p. 'Itala' Car is giving me the greatest satisfaction, and I feel sure there is no better Car in England."

Mr. H. R. Pope has beaten all previous Records by driving a 40 h.p. Itala from Monte Carlo to London in 29 hrs. 16 mins.

CATALOGUES ON REQUEST. IMMEDIATE DELIVERY.

Sole Concessionnaires
ITALA AUTOMOBILES Ltd., 89, Wigmore Street, London, W.

Telegrams: "ITALAUTO." Telephone: 2818 PADD.

Provincial Sub Agents:
THE CLEVELAND CAR CO., Ltd., Darlington.
G. STEVENSON, Ltd., Tunbridge Wells.

.. THE ..

Straker-Squire

25-30 H.P. Car. Four Cylinder.

Four days absolute NON-STOP Irish Reliability Trials. . . . .

Extract from letter of one of the best-known London experts (interested in another make of car), after 100 mile trial run; his letter can be seen here:—

"You have a very fine thing indeed to handle. The engine is certainly THE LAST WORD in design and proportion, and the running the NEAREST APPROACH TO A TURBINE I have ever come across."

SIDE ENTRANCE, £650.

Limousines & Landaulettes
Immediate Delivery.

Sidney Straker & Squire
LIMITED,
75-77, Shaftesbury Avenue.

TELEPHONE: 8525 GERRARD. TELEGRAMS: "STRAQUIRF."

By Appointment to H.M. The King.

Weekly Wins!

By Appointment to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

DAIMLER

June 8th. 1907. ROYAL AUTOMOBILE CLUB MEET, CARTERS HILL.

HENRY EDMUNDS TROPHY WON for the 3rd year in succession by a 30 h.p. DAIMLER.

June 8th, 1907. MID STAFFS A.C. HILL CLIMB, WESTON HILL.

DAIMLERS MADE 1st and 2nd FASTEST TIMES.

THE DAIMLER MOTOR CO. (1904), Ltd.

Coventry: Daimler Works. London: 219-229, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.
Manchester: 60, Deansgate. Nottingham: 96-98, Derby Road. Bristol: 18, Victoria Street.

OUR PUZZLES.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Building, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on postcards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand, whilst in the case of new Competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

NOTICE.

I have just heard from the G.E.R. Co. that they have decided to award their Special Prize of Two Guineas which was offered, conditionally, in connection with TRUTH Puzzle No. 1,479. But full particulars will be announced next week.

PRIZE AWARDS.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,475.

BEST ENIGMA, FORMED ON A GIVEN MODEL.

The Prize of Two Guineas is awarded to FRISCO, whose Enigma was printed in TRUTH of May 22 last.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,476.

BEST ANAGRAM OF THE WORDS "ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION OF PICTURES AT BURLINGTON HOUSE."

The Prize of Two Guineas is awarded to HORACE, whose anagram was printed in TRUTH of May 22 last.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,477.

FORECAST OF FIRST THREE HORSES IN "THE DERBY."

The Prize of Two Guineas is awarded to WILDCAT, with a score of 3 marks—the runners up being Milliner and Veri, each with a score of 2½ marks. WILDCAT'S forecast was 1, Orby; 2, Woolwinder; 3, Galvani.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,478.

(This Puzzle was, originally, misnumbered 1,477.)

SIX GREATEST WOMEN IN THE WORLD'S HISTORY.

It is with fear and trembling that I have adjudicated on this delicate and difficult problem. On the whole, however, I am of opinion that the most representative list of "Greatest Women" has been sent in by ECHO. The Prize of Two Guineas, therefore, is awarded to that Competitor.

ECHO'S list is as follows:—Boadicea, Joan of Arc, Catherine de Medici, Queen Elizabeth (of England), Maria Theresa (Austria), and Catherine II. (Russia)

I print below a further list of assorted specimens of answers to this puzzle.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,482.

It was Dr. Johnson, I think, who, with his usual violent prejudice against field sports of any kind, somewhat brutally defined the gentle art of angling as:

"A piece of string with a worm at one end and a fool at the other."

Now it has often struck me that, if the worthy Doctor were alive to day, his views on certain of our modern sports and games would make highly amusing reading. But as it is impossible to recall him from the other world for this purpose, I am going to ask my readers to project themselves, as far as may be, into the plain-spoken and prejudiced Samuel's mind and to evolve what he would have said in relation to certain specified sports and games, had he been here to say it.

In other words, I am offering this week the usual Prize of Two Guineas to that Competitor who shall send in

THE BEST JOHNSONIAN DEFINITIONS OF (1) GOLF; (2) CROQUET; (3) HOCKEY; AS A GAME FOR GIRLS.

Competitors are reminded that it is not their own views but the supposed views of Dr. Johnson that they are invited to express in these definitions, the language of which should be as good Johnsonese as they can attain unto. And I am sure that if they enter into the spirit of the thing, the results will be highly diverting for all concerned.

PLEASE NOTE THAT:

(i.) No Competitor must send in more than one set of three definitions.
(ii.) No single definition must exceed thirty words.
(iii.) All sets of definitions must reach TRUTH office by the first post on Monday, July 1, 1907.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of ELECTION, winner of TRUTH Prize No. 1,471 (Best Advertisement Anecdote) is William Park, Esq., Churchover, Rugby.

INCA.—Your anagram was duly received and included in the Competition.

JETHART.—I have identified your "Greatest Women" list as that marked X.Y.Z. I am making inquiries in respect of your other query. The answer of the enigma, however (viz., that the man's name was "Knott"), is sufficiently obvious.

SIMPLEX.—I am inquiring into the matter about which you ask.

SNOOKS.—In spite of your humorously pathetic appeal and the goodness of your catch-name, I'm afraid I must abide by our published regulations and exclude your solution from the Competition. I feel sure that your sense of fairness will concur in this decision and will recognise the impracticability, not to say the injustice to others, of ignoring the rules for the benefit of an individual Competitor.

EDGERTON, TONY and MAYFLOWER.—I much regret that your solutions of G.E.R. Puzzle were received too late for inclusion.

GRASSHOPPER.—I note your explanation and thank you for sending it, although I had already grasped the point of the name.

LADDIE.—Many thanks for introducing MOLLIE, whose acquaintance I am most pleased to make and whose name I shall hope to see frequently at the foot of Puzzle solutions.

CENTURIA.—Your nom de plume duly registered. I quite agree with what you say. At the same time, as I do not feel equal to pronouncing on so vexed and delicate a question myself, I do not see that any other system can well be adopted.

I desire to direct the attention of Competitors, who occasionally send in solutions on post-cards, to Rule XI., which expressly forbids this method of communication.

Hitherto I have been lenient in this matter—especially in the case of new Competitors. But I must now warn all my readers that, after the publication of this Notice, no solutions, or other communications on post-cards, can be entertained.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,479.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

THE IDEAL AGE FOR A MAN OR A WOMAN TO MARRY.

N.B.—I have cut out all notes, comments, and explanations embodied by Competitors in their answers, and print only the essential matter—viz., the ages of the man and the woman respectively.

Man, 28; woman, 25.—Tammas.
Man, 27; woman, 25.—Duss.
Man, 26; woman, 23.—Splendige.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Muz Muz
Man, 28; woman, 24.—Gapstang.
Man, 27; woman, 25½.—Snuggard.
Man, 30; woman, 24.—Trommy.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Khayyam.
Man, 25; woman, 23.—Nemesis.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Cosmos.
Man, 25; woman, 21.—Nemo.
Man, 27; woman, 23.—Thersites.
Man, 27; woman, 24.—Beginner.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Bagnet.
Man, 26; woman, 23½.—Doric Mooring.
Man, 26; woman, 25.—Little Toad.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Kabul
Man, 27; woman, 23.—Verbum Sat.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Blencathra
Man, 27½; woman, 21½.—Jean qui Rit.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Leda
Man, 26; woman, 23.—Guges.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Milliner.
Man, 21; woman, 18.—Maria
Man, 25; woman, 21.—Sophia.
Man, 25; woman 20.—Diana.
Man, 21; woman, 17.—Crank.
Man, 29½; woman, 22½.—Humshaugh.
Man, 25; woman, 20.—Immerito.
Man, 27; woman, 21.—Queensholme.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Bramble.
Man, 27; woman, 24.—Yorke.
Man, 30; woman, 24.—Dagmar.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Ethna.
Man, 29; woman, 25.—Stylite.
Man, 32; woman, 23.—Sanger.
Man, 30; woman 25.—In Tune
Man, 25; woman, 23.—Rimabel.
Man, 31; woman, 24.—Shelmartin.
Man, 30; woman, 24.—Croina.
Man, 28; woman, 22.—Ruam
Man, 28; woman, 22.—Ethelwyn.
Man, 26; woman, 25.—Fitzhamon.

Man, 28; woman, 25.—Gladiator.
Man, 28; woman 24.—Harts.
Man, 29; woman, 23.—Cassio
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Erra.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—F. M. K.
Man, 27; woman, 20.—Freda.
Man, 26; woman, 19.—Frances.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Hyrte.
Man, 30; woman, 24.—Querky.
Man, 30; woman, 23.—Peter I
Man, 27.75; woman, 24.88.—Almativa.
Man, 27; woman, 23.—Oiseau
Man, 22; woman, 20.—Rho.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Margate Hoy.
Man, 27; woman, 22.—Green Pine.
Man, 25; woman, 23.—Game B
Man, 40; woman, 30.—Mrs. Game B.
Man, 26½; woman, 23½.—Centuria.
Man, 30; woman, 23.—Petite.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Outsider.
Man, 30; woman, 22.—Eillom.
Man, 25; woman, 20.—Borderer.
Man, 30; woman, 23.—Puck.
Man, 25; woman, 23.—The Prebend.
Man, 25; woman, 22.—Pupa.
Man, 25; woman, 23.—Ox Short.
Man, 32; woman, 26.—Laddie.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Mollie.
Man, 29; woman 24.—Nymph.
Man, 32; woman, 25.—Crysta.
Man, 28; woman, 23.—Yendig.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Woodfin.
Man, 24; woman, 20.—Sandstone.
Man, 27; woman, 23.—Ino.
Man, 27½; woman, 23½.—Eboracum.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Chick.
Man, 26; woman, 22.—Comus.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Winkle.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Gem.
Man, 25; woman, 20.—A. E. L.
Man, 27; woman, 22.—Kismet.
Man, 28; woman, 23.—Clement.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Valor.

Man, 28; woman, 25.—Never Despair.
Man, 28; woman, 24.—Empire.
Man, 25; woman, 21.—Wisdrive.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Irsafil.
Man, 28; woman, 20.—Meleha.
Man, 27; woman, 24.—Ainsty.
Man, 25; woman, 23.—Hyde.
Man, 27; woman 23.—P. Gillam.
Man, 26½; woman, 21½.—Leaf Rule.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Ba.
Man, 35; woman, 28.—Renoops.
Man, 28; woman, 24.—Mars, Hull.
Man, 35; woman, 25.—Autolycus.
Man, 27; woman, 23.—Raspboy
Man, 29; woman, 23.—H. R. S.
Man, 28; woman, 24.—Cherrypicker.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Heja.
Man, 27; woman, 25.—Brad.
Man, 27; woman, 23.—Nunc Dimittis.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Loulou.
Man, 29; woman, 26.—Western.
Man, 27; woman, 24.—Alpha Beta.
Man, 30; woman 25.—Noona.
Man, 25; woman, 23.—Erasmus.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Mac.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Perro.
Man, 27; woman, 23.—Chic.
Man, 25; woman, 22.—Sugar.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Veronica.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Gret.
Man, 29 years 5 months, and 3 days; woman, 22 years, 8 months, and 15 days.—Myrmidon.
Man, 27; woman, 21.—Wig and Gown.
Man, 26; woman, 21.—Bad Luck.
Man, 30; woman, 22.—Redder.
Man, 26; woman, 24.—Tirrem.
Man, 28; woman, 24.—Zazina.
Man, 25; woman, 23.—Togo.
Man, 24½; woman, 17½.—Sincérité.
Man, 34; woman, 27.—The Girl.
Man, 31; woman, 23.—Amuinn.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Jupiter.
Man, 29; woman, 26.—Excise.

Man, 25; woman, 23.—Rhamnus.
Man, 28; woman, 23.—Korah.
Man, 30; Woman, 25.—Rhody.
Man, 27; woman, 23.—Spartan.
Man, 28; woman, 24 — Hypatia.
Man, 27; woman, 23.—Sherlock.
Man, 35; woman, 20.—Twicky.
Man, 28; woman, 21.—Aster.
Man, 28; woman, 22.—Shieling.
Man, 25; woman, 23.—Veracious.
Man, 27½; woman, 25.—Cashier.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Northlander.
Man, 26; woman, 24.—Hattie.
Man, 28½; woman, 23.—Cercueil.
Man, 25; woman, 23.—Railway.
Man, 27; woman, 24.—D. H. S.
Man 30; woman, 25.—Den.
Man, 35; woman, 27.—Saucy Matt.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Coral.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Devon.
Man, 25; woman, 21.—Roy.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Nosclip.

Man, 30; woman, 25.—Edith.
Man, 28; woman, 22.—Mormond.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—H. G. Watts.
Man, 32; woman, 26.—Harebell.
Man, 30; woman, 23.—Batchelor.
Man, 25; woman, 22.—Pendarley.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Pinchbeck.
Man, 29 years, 10 months, 2 weeks, 4 days; woman, 25 years, 6 months, 2 weeks.—Dullard.
Man, 25; woman, 23.—Racbrane.
Man, 30; woman, 21.—Robin Adair.
Man, 29; woman, 23.—Provident.
Man, 30; woman, 20½.—Patrol.
Man, 26; woman, 24.—Omega.
Man, 30; woman, 24.—Lichen.
Man, 28; woman, 23.—O. P. Q.
Man, 27; woman, 23.—Detinu.
Man, 35; woman, 25.—J. McGrigor Allan.
Man, 30; woman, 21.—Clapa.
Man, 27; woman, 21.—Veni.
Man, 28; woman, 21.—Vici.
Man, 30; woman, 24.—Haron.

Man, 30; woman, 25.—Bunga Malor.
Man, 29; woman, 22.—Normanhaugh.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Bucks.
Man, 24½; woman, 20½.—Dorset.
Man, 29; woman, 22.—Kent.
Man, 27; woman, 22.—Wildcat.
Man, 29; woman, 23.—Knarf.
Man, 26; woman, 21.—Iethart.
Man, 27; woman, 20.—Bip.
Man, 26; woman, 21.—Inex.
Man, 28; woman, 25.—Uggug.
Man, 32; woman, 25.—Chance.
Man, 26; woman, 22.—Nurse.
Man, 25; woman, 18.—Entelche.
Man, 29; woman, 22.—Lake Victoria.
Man, 30; woman, 23.—Dick Mosith.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—Langrish.
Man, 29; woman, 22.—Foxo.
Man, 27; woman, 23.—Cygne.
Man, 29; woman, 25.—Wynotte.
Man, 30; woman, 25.—E. Lewis.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,478—FURTHER LIST OF ASSORTED SPECIMENS.

SIX GREATEST WOMEN IN THE WORLD'S HISTORY.

Queen Victoria, Jean d'Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine the Great of Russia, George Eliot, Boadicea.—Oiseau.

Sappho, Cleopatra, Hypatia, Jeanne d' Arc, Maria Theresa, Florence Nightingale.—Cui bono, inquam?

Elizabeth, Victoria, Catherine of Russia, Marie Theresa, Joan of Arc, Catherine de Medici.—Bim.

Joan of Arc, Boadicea, Cleopatra, Queen Elizabeth, Grace Darling, Florence Nightingale.—Caw.

Helen of Troy, Cleopatra, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Madame Curie.—Beechwood.

The Blessed Virgin Mary, Boadicea, Joan of Arc, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts.—White Heather.

Cleopatra, Catherine the Great, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Joan of Arc, Grace Darling.—Harold.

Cleopatra, the Virgin Mary, Hypatia, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine the Great of Russia.—Hopscotch.

Queen Victoria, Joan of Arc, Florence Nightingale, Queen Elizabeth, Marie Corelli, Ellen Terry.—Kent.

Virtue, Cornelia (mother of the Gracchi); Beauty, Cleopatra; Power, Catherine of Russia; Saintliness, Catherine of Alexandria; Reformer, Mrs. Fry; Philanthropist, Florence Nightingale.—Dorset.

Fra Angelica Kauffmann, art; Duchess of Devonshire, beauty; Lady Jane Grey, learning; Queen Victoria, kindness of heart; Queen Elizabeth, wielder of power; Charlotte Young, writer.—Bucks.

Deborah, Semiramis, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Catherine of Russia, Elizabeth (Queen of England).—Allimac.

Joan of Arc, Elizabeth, Cleopatra, Florence Nightingale, Rosa Bonheur, George Eliot.—The Twig.

The Virgin Mary, Queen Victoria of England, Catherine of Russia, Cleopatra, Isabella of Castile, Joan of Arc.—X. Y. Z.

Cleopatra, Catherine the Great, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Boadicea, George Eliot.—Nurse.

Semiramis, Zenobia, Boadicea, Sappho, Joan of Arc, St. Catherine of Siena.—Zagloba.

Blessed Virgin Mary, Sappho, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine of Russia, Mrs. Eddy.—Ass.

Helen of Troy, Catherine Empress of Russia, Elizabeth Fry, Queen Elizabeth, George Eliot, Charlotte Brontë.—Korah.

Sappho, Cleopatra, Hypatia, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth of England, Florence Nightingale.—Eboracum.

Cleopatra, Boadicea, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Mary Queen of Scots, Queen Victoria.—Half Acres.

Boadicea, Queen Elizabeth, Joan of Arc, Cleopatra, Empress Josephine, Queen Victoria.—Charles Burdett.

Eve, Helen of Troy, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Florence Nightingale, Queen Victoria.—Felsberg.

Aspasia, Elizabeth of England, Victoria of England, Isabella of Spain (Queen of Ferdinand), Madame de Maintenon, Elizabeth Fry.—Minos.

Boadicea, Joan of Arc, Anne of Austria, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine of Russia, St. Catherine of Siena.—Einnim.

Ruth, Cleopatra, Virgin Mary, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria.—Ursellia.

Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Catherine of Russia, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale.—Djalfi.

Judith, Aspasia, Cleopatra, Zenobia, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth.—Veronica.

Boadicea, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Elizabeth (Queen of England), Madame de Stäel, Florence Nightingale.—Bip.

Cleopatra (Queen of Egypt), Queen Elizabeth, Joan of Arc, Elizabeth Fry, Queen Victoria, Catherine the Great.—Bad Luck.

The Blessed Virgin Mary, Queen Victoria, Queen Elizabeth, Mary Queen of Scots, Jeanne d'Arc, Florence Nightingale.—Nemo.

Cleopatra, Queen Elizabeth of England, Mary Magdalene, George Sand, Charlotte Brontë, Sappho.—H. R. S.

Queens Victoria, Elizabeth, and Mary, of England, Queen Esther (see Bible), Joan of Arc, Judith (see Apocrypha).—Heja.

Queen Hatshepsut of Egypt, Sappho, Joan of Arc, Queen Isabella of Castile, Queen Elizabeth of England, Catherine II. of Russia.—Cheltonian.

Mother of the Machabees, Joan of Arc, Boadicea, Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Cleopatra.—Fosco.

Helen of Troy, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Elizabeth of England, Catherine of Russia, Marie Antoinette.—Ainsty.

The Virgin Mary, Boadicea, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale.—Cercueil.

Queen Victoria, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine II. (Empress of Russia), Catherine de Medici, Isabella I. (of Castile), Maria Theresa (of Austria).—Inca.

Boadicea, Queen of Britain; Cleopatra, Queen Elizabeth, Joan of Arc, Maria Theresè, Empress of Austria; Queen Victoria.—Crank.

The Virgin Mary, Boadicea, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine 2nd of Russia.—Sphinx.

The Virgin Mary, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Mary Queen of Scots, Catherine the 2nd of Russia.—Mary.

The Virgin Mary, Boadicea, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Maria Therese of Austria.—Diana.

Joan of Arc, Cornelia (Mother of the Gracchi), Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Empress Maria Therese. Presuming that the Blessed Virgin Mary is barred; if not, substitute her for the Empress Maria Therese.—Iere.

Deborah, Boadicea, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine, wife of Peter the Great; Queen Victoria.—Detinu.

Helen of Troy, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Catharine de Medicis, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria.—Golli-wog.

Queen Elizabeth, Joan of Arc, Catherine of Siena, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Caroline Fry.—Mab.

Florence Nightingale, Sister Dora, Joan of Arc, Grace Darling, Queen Victoria, Boadicea.—Coral.

Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Mary Queen of Scots, Marie Louise, Queen Victoria.—Nemesis.

Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Mrs. Booth, Florence Nightingale, George Eliot.—Grasshopper.

Sappho, Aspasia, Hypatia, Jeanne d'Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Cleopatra.—Khayyam.

Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine of Russia, Marie Theresa, Queen Victoria.—Secundus.

Semiramis, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Catherine II. of Russia, Queen Elizabeth, Florence Nightingale.—Grenville.

The Virgin Mary, Queen Elizabeth, Joan of Arc, Florence Nightingale, Grace Darling, Queen Victoria.—Rigor Mortis.

Cleopatra, Semiramis, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Mary Stuart, Marie Antoinette.—Bob.

Cleopatra, Sappho, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Mary Stuart, Marie Antoinette.—Scotus Viator.

Eve, the first woman; The Madonna, Joan of Arc, Elizabeth Tudor, Queen of England; Catherine II., Empress of Russia; Victoria, Queen and Empress.—Ewa.

Sappho, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Empress Catherine of Russia, Mrs. Browning, George Sand.—Rimabel.

Deborah the Prophetess, Queen Boadicea, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale.—Clement.

Semiramis, Cleopatra, The Virgin Mary, Joan of Arc, Flora Macdonald, Florence Nightingale.—Eillom.

Helen of Troy, The Virgin Mary, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Marie Antoinette, Queen Victoria.—Alpha Beta.

Queen Victoria, Queen Elizabeth, Joan of Arc, Florence Nightingale, Elizabeth Fry, Catherine II., Empress of Russia.—Bunny.

Boadicea, Catherine II., Empress of Russia; Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Joan of Arc, Florence Nightingale.—Nest.

Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Ellen Terry, Florence Nightingale.—Scot.

The Blessed Virgin Mary, Semiramis, Catherine II. of Russia, Maria Theresa of Austria, Florence Nightingale, Queen Victoria. Should No. 1 be disallowed—Louisa of Prussia, Napoleon's contemporary.—Fish.

Ruth, Monica, Philippa of Hainault, Sarah Martin, Lady Duff Gordon, Victoria.—Pupa.

The Blessed Virgin Mary (if allowed), Semiramis, Catherine II. of Russia, Maria Theresa of Austria, Elizabeth Fry, Queen Victoria. If No. 1 is not permitted—Madame Roland.—Midge.

Virgin Mary, Boadicea, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Frances Ridley Havergal, Florence Nightingale.—Red Dragon.

Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Elizabeth Fry, Florence Nightingale, Queen Victoria, Harriet Beecher Stowe.—The Mac.

Semiramis, Zenobia, Boadicea, Elizabeth Fry, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth.—Esneh.

Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine of Russia, Helen of Troy, Queen Victoria.—Blot.

Joan of Arc, Cleopatra, Queen Victoria, Queen Elizabeth, Ellen Terry, Florence Nightingale.—Hypatia.

Joan of Arc, Cleopatra, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Ellen Terry, Madame Patti.—Sherlock.

Joan of Arc, Cleopatra, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria, Catherine of Russia, Semiramis.—Alicujus.

Sappho (incomparably the greatest poetess the world has ever seen), Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra; Joan of Arc, Isabella, Queen of Castile, etc.—Patroness of Columbus; Queen Elizabeth of England, Maria Theresa, Empress of Germany, Queen of Hungary, etc.—Tony.

Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth of England, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Elizabeth Fry, Mrs. Siddons.—Cantab.

Boadicea, Cleopatra, Catherine of Russia, Marie Antoinette, Queen Elizabeth, Queen Victoria.—Dwarber.

Helen of Troy, Cleopatra, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, The Empress Catherine of Russia, Queen Victoria.—Leaf Rule.

Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth, Elizabeth Fry, Queen Victoria, Florence Nightingale, Lady Burdett Coutts.—Canning.

Judith, The Blessed Virgin Mary, Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth of England, Catherine the Great of Russia, Queen Isabella of Castile, wife of Ferdinand.—Asinus.

Joan of Arc, Queen Elizabeth of England, St. Catherine of Siena, Florence Nightingale, Madame Curie (discoverer of radium), Queen Victoria of England.—Aster.

Boadicea, A.D. 62, Cornelia (the mother of the Gracchi), Sarah (wife of Abraham), Queen Elizabeth of England, Florence Nightingale, Elizabeth Fry (Quakeress).—Lou-Lou.

Our Lady, Joan of Arc, Florence Nightingale, Cleopatra, Queen Elizabeth of England, Catherine of Russia.—Ba.

The Terms of Subscription to "Truth," which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth," Truth Buildings, Carteret Street, S.W.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Latest Methods. Lowest Fees.
Five years' Warranty.
"Originators of popular GUINEA Sets."—Vide Dispatch.
MR. LABOUCHERE in "TRUTH" writes:—"One of the largest practices in the world. Can do everything science and experience suggest to satisfy every customer."
PAMPHLET POST FREE,
GOODMAN'S, Limited, 2, Ludgate Hill, E.C.
and West End Branch, 61, Seymour-street, Edgware-road End.
BRIGHTON: 10, Castle-square.

A MASTER KEY

of this size.

BRAMAH LOCKS

FOR ALL PURPOSES can be made to a Master Key in suites, with subordinate keys for BUTLER, MAID or VALET, GARDENER, &c., &c., each suite independent of the other, but all opening to the MASTER KEY.

A choice selection of Despatch and Jewel Boxes, Travelling Requisites, strong and light, with real Bramah Locks, Steel Jewel Safes, &c., &c.

Illustrated Catalogues Post Free.

BRAMAH & CO.,

By Appointment to H.M. the King. Sole Makers of the Genuine BRAMAH LOCKS.

100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

The HACKNEY FURNISHING CO., Ltd.

Parties Furnishing should visit their West-End Premises, situated in the finest position in London,

93, 95, 97, 99, OXFORD STREET, W.

(Facing Newman Street).

Three minutes from Tottenham Court Road and Regent Street.

Their New Galleries are acknowledged to be the most Artistic combined with Elegance in London.

Parties can furnish on their deferred payment system as follows:—

GENERAL TERMS.

Worth	Per Month	Worth	Month	Worth	Month	Worth	Month
£10 ...	£0 6 0	£30 ...	£0 17 0	£50 ...	£1 8 0	£200 ...	£4 10 0
£20 ...	£0 11 0	£40 ...	1 5 0	£100 ..	£2 5 0	£500 ...	11 5 0

Free Life Insurance. Free Fire Insurance. No Security. No Deposit.

Head Offices } 1, 2, 3, 4, Town Hall Buildings.
and Showrooms } 13, 19, 20, 21, 22, The Grove, adjoining Mare St., London, N.E.

Catalogues and full particulars post free.

A. M. STEWART, Managing Director.

Est. nearly Quarter of a Century.
Tel. 327 Mayfair.

W. EVANS & CO.

Choice and varied Stock of new Goods for Spring and Summer Wear just arrived.

FROCK COAT from £2 15 0
CASHMERE TROUSERS from 13/-
LOUNGE SUITS ... £3 3 0
DRESS SUITS ... £5 5 0

INSPECTION INVITED.

Gentlemen who are unable to call can rely on having a good fit from self-measurements, or by sending garments as guide.

TRUTH says: "Our latest discovery in tailoring is Evans. 77, Gt. Portland-street, W., who can actually fit."

77, Gt. Portland-st., London, W.

TYPEWRITERS

M88 Copied.

Great Bargains for Sale, Hire, or Exchange. Shorthand and Typists sent out with machines from £1 per week.

Ring up—4881 Holborn.
8325 Bank. 7093 Central.

TAYLORS LTD. 74, Chancery Lane, London.

And at 92, QUEEN STREET, E.C. (Cheapside End).

Goddard's Plate Powder

For Cleaning Silver, Electro Plate, &c

Sold everywhere 1/- 2/6 & 4/6

NOTHING CAN BE ANY GOOD FOR HAIR

EXCEPT

which is FALLING OUT or PREMATURELY GREY

CAPSULOIDS.

Because Nothing but Capsuloids Does or Can Destroy the Germs and thus Remove the Cause.

A PROMINENT PHYSICIAN says: "One of my most intelligent patients told me yesterday that I might call Capsuloids humbug, but that they were a most wonderful medicine. He asked me to look at his hair and see the effect; he certainly does look well. He is not the first person who has spoken thus highly of them. Please send me six boxes under plain wrapper, as I feel I must experiment and satisfy myself."

The Largest Manufacturing Chemists in the World admit that after trying for months to analyse Capsuloids, they have failed completely, and so cannot discover how to produce them.

Capsuloids are never harmful to any part of the body; instead, they are most wonderfully beneficial. Hundreds tell us of their clear skins and exquisite complexions when writing that their hair troubles have been cured.

LOOK AT THIS PICTURE OF A HAIR GREATLY MAGNIFIED, and learn how your hair grows, why it becomes prematurely grey, why it does not grow well, and why it falls out. The whole hair is produced by the multiplication of those growing cells which lie at the bottom and form its roots. They rest upon the little blood vessels which carry the blood from which the cells draw all their nourishment. You can easily see from this picture that when the harmful germs settle in these growing cells, and go on multiplying, they will injure the cells, which causes the hair to loosen and fall out, or become prematurely grey. If those germs are not checked, they will in time quite destroy the cells, and as the roots would then be dead, it is clear no hair could ever grow from a dead root. These germs must be killed quickly, and the only medicine ever discovered which will do it is—

C-A-P-S-U-L-O-I-D-S

Daly's Theatre, Leicester Square, W.

I have found Capsuloids of remarkable benefit to my hair since I commenced to take them a little time back. They are rapidly renewing my hair, which was painfully thin. I have every reason for being pleased that I tried them, and I constantly recommend them to those about me. (Signed)
W. LOUIS BRADFIELD.

Price 2s. 3d. per box. Special Sample given when this coupon is enclosed, and three boxes are ordered direct from us.
Larger Sample with six.

Send for valuable Free Hair Booklet which gives full Explanations.

Come and have your Hair Examined Free between 10 to 1 and 2 to 5.

THE CAPSULOID CO., LTD., 47, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

COUPON TRUTH, 19/6/07

TURKEY CARPETS

EXAMPLES AND PRICES

ft.	in.		ft.	in.		£	s.	d.
8	10	x	7	1	...	4	0	0
11	1	x	7	9	...	5	18	0
10	8	x	8	3	...	5	18	0
11	10	x	9	0	...	6	12	0
14	1	x	10	11	...	10	18	0
15	9	x	11	2	...	11	15	0
14	6	x	12	3	...	11	15	0
16	8	x	11	9	...	12	8	0

Compare Qualities when comparing prices

THE FINEST COLLECTION of ORIENTAL CARPETS IN THE WORLD

MAPLE & CO

LONDON SMYRNA

The extensive displays of tasteful and refined

Furniture,

Carpets,

Fabrics, &c.

at the least cost compatible with reliable quality, now on view in their showrooms at Pall Mall East, fully establish the pre-eminence of HAMPTONS as the Leading Experts in originating new and inexpensive interpretations of the Classic

English

Styles.

This Exhibition demonstrates that individuality in every article is the distinguishing feature of Hampton & Sons' productions.

HAMPTONS

Head Offices and only Showrooms—

PALL MALL EAST, LONDON, S.W.

Consider Your Health!

When you consider how much depends upon it, what can be more important to you than the state of your health! If you are troubled with bad or indifferent health your capacities for work or pleasure are affected—even your life is threatened. Thousands know by old experience that are a blessing in the household and in every country of the world. No other medicine exercises so marked a control over and other painful forms of stomachic troubles.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

Biliousness, Sick-Headache, Nervous Prostration, Indigestion, Constipation

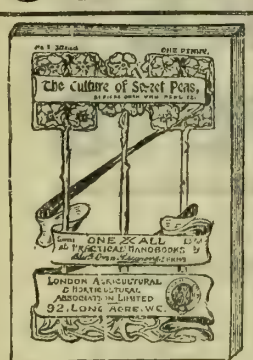
BEECHAM'S PILLS are good alike for man, woman and child, if taken according to directions. They are pre-eminently a family medicine—a remedy to have by one in readiness for every occasion when need arises.

There is yet another point in this connection that you should mark on the tablet of your memory. BEECHAM'S PILLS, in addition to their acknowledged value in Kidney, Liver, and Stomach disorders, have a specially beneficial effect in such ailments as are peculiar to women, many of whom endure needless pain and ill-health through ignorance of this important fact.

Sold everywhere in boxes, price 1/1½ (56 pills) & 2/9 (168 pills)

ONE & ALL



The "ONE & ALL" Garden Books are a useful series of Popular Penny Handbooks. Each number treats of a separate subject by a practical expert. They are neatly printed on good paper and profusely illustrated. They are on sale at all "One & All" Seed Agencies, the Railway Bookstalls, and at all the leading Newsagents and Booksellers'.

PUBLISHED PERIODICALLY.

Price ONE PENNY each.

No. 1.—"SWEET PEAS." By the late RICHARD DEAN, V.M.H. Fifth Edition.
No. 2.—"ANNUALS." By T. W. SANDERS, F.L.S. Fourth Edition.
No. 3.—"SALADS." By HORACE J. WRIGHT, F.R.H.S. Third Edition.
No. 4.—"VEGETABLES." By HORACE J. WRIGHT, F.R.H.S. Third Edition.
No. 5.—"PERENNIALS." By T. W. SANDERS, F.L.S. Third Edition.
No. 6.—"MANURING." By EDWARD OWEN GREENING, F.R.H.S. New Edition.
No. 7.—"POTATOES." By the Hon. H. A. STANHOPE. First Edition.
No. 8.—"ALLOTMENTS." By T. W. SANDERS, F.L.S. First Edition.
No. 9.—"ROSES." By T. W. SANDERS, F.L.S. First Edition.
No. 10.—"GARDEN MAKING." By ED. OWEN GREENING, F.R.H.S.

Publishers:

AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL ASSOCIATION, Ltd., 92, Long Acre, London, W.C.

GARDEN BOOKS

THE BEST ON EARTH.

SIR ANDREW CLARK'S INVARIABLE ADVICE WAS

"Let the Patient have Schweitzer's Cocoatina, if you please."

SCHWEITZER'S Cocoatina

The Most Nutritious and Perfectly Digestible Cocoa.

For Invalids and Children as well as for the Strong and Healthy.

"This is Genuine Cocoa."—THE LANCET.

H. SCHWEITZER & CO., LTD., 143, York-road, London, N.

FOR

POLISHING METALS,

especially

BRASS,

There is nothing better than

"LA BRILLANTINE" METALLIC POWDER.

As used by the Army, London Fire Brigade, &c.
TRY IT AND CONVINCE YOURSELF.
Sold everywhere in 6d. and 1s. Boxes.

PROPRIETORS:
J. F. BAUMGARTNER & CO.,
(T) 74, Newman-st., Oxford-st., London, W.
Absolutely refuse imitations.

ALCOHOLIC EXCESS

and DRUG HABIT cured at home in 3 to 7 weeks by the TURVEY TREATMENT without inconvenience. The only cure under British Medical Direction. Success tested by officials of the C.E.T.S. Mission, &c. Established 12 years. Over 5,000 recorded cases.—Write for Report of Public Test, or call, Med. Supt., TURVEY TREATMENT CO., Ltd., 24, Amberley House, Norfolk Street, Strand, London. Consultation to patients or their friends, free.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & MALCOMSON, Limited, 4 and 5, Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., and Published by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st. E.C., the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.
Entered as Second-Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1591. Vol. LXI. Wednesday, June 26, 1907. Price Sixpence.

TO OUR READERS.

We receive hundreds of letters every week from "Readers of 'Truth.'" A large majority of the writers expect replies direct. Of the work, trouble, and expense involved in doing this we say nothing. But as experience has shown that a large number of our "Constant" and "Regular" readers who inquire about individuals with whom we have dealt in our columns over and over again are not actual subscribers to the paper, but merely occasional readers of it at clubs, libraries, or at friends' houses, we consider we must protect ourselves in the matter.

We have therefore decided that henceforth every reader who writes making an inquiry that necessitates a direct reply must enclose a stamped envelope and also a Coupon which will always be found at the foot of the 3rd page of the coloured cover. Without these no notice will be taken of the communication.

Inquiries addressed to "Vigilant," which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through his "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can "Vigilant" send replies by post.

No Coupon will be available that is over a fortnight out of date, except from correspondents residing abroad.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made Payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Buildings," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

THIS week's issue of Truth contains a Stock Exchange Supplement, to which I would direct the special attention of my readers. It gives a complete list of the members of the Stock Exchange who are brokers, and also a list of the bucket-shop keepers and other harpies against whom my City Editor has so often warned the public.

The King and Queen will give a large family dinner-party at Buckingham Palace on Friday night, to celebrate his Majesty's Birthday.

It is probable that the King will travel on Saturday by special train from Paddington to Oxford, in order that he may witness some of the scenes of the Pageant during the afternoon. In this case his Majesty will afterwards proceed by road to Nuneham Courtenay, where he is to be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Harcourt until Monday morning. The King will then return to town by special train from Culham to Paddington, unless he should decide to motor back.

The announcement in the daily papers, which originated with a news agency, that the King is to leave London for Marienbad on Saturday, August 10, is incorrect. His Majesty is to arrive at Buckingham Palace from Cowes, according to present arrangements, on Monday, August 12, and he will leave for the Continent on Tuesday, the 13th. The King is to be conveyed in the Royal yacht from Port Victoria to Flushing, whence he will travel direct to Marienbad, unless his Majesty decides to break the journey by paying a flying visit to the Emperor Francis Joseph at Ischl. In this case the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland will meet the King at Ischl.

The King is to be at Newmarket next month for both the summer race meetings—from Tuesday, July 2, until Friday, the 5th, for the first fixture, and from Tuesday, July 16, until Thursday, the 18th, for the second one. It is expected that one of the entertainments given during the First July Week for the King will be a garden-party at Moulton Paddocks, Sir Ernest Cassel's beautiful place. It is probable that his Majesty will drive from Newmarket one afternoon to Culford Hall, near Bury St. Edmunds, in order to pay a visit to Lord Cadogan.

Excellent arrangements had been made both by the Court officials and by the Great Western Railway for the garden party at Windsor Castle, but the crowd was overwhelming. Many of the guests did not reach the East Terrace until the party was practically over. The streets of Windsor were a perfect pandemonium, and if there is another garden party at the Castle on this vast scale motor-cars should be prohibited for the afternoon. When the party was at its climax a heavy shower fell. The King and Queen and the Royal family came down from the Castle to the East lawn in procession, passing between the lines of guests, and when they reached their marquees a number of presentations took place. The scene on the lawn was very brilliant until the rain sent every one crowding into the marquees, when a great many people left at once, and proceeded to the Great Western station in order to catch the first special back to Paddington. The King and Queen and the Royalties stayed for nearly an hour in their special marquees and on the lawn.

Several of the daily and weekly papers announced in the spring that the King and Queen would give "a great garden-party" at Buckingham Palace during the season. It was then stated in Truth that their Majesties' garden-party would take place at Windsor Castle on the Saturday or Monday after Ascot races.

It has again been asserted that there will be "another large garden-party" at Buckingham Palace next month. The fact is that the Queen intends to give a children's party at the Palace, which will be an afternoon affair, with games and other amusements in the grounds near the house, but strictly juvenile.

The King has again lent Barton Court House, the Royal residence on the Osborne estate, to Canon Hervey, Rector of Sandringham, who occupied that place last year for several months. Lord and Lady Suffield have just left Barton Court House, the place having been lent to them for some time past by his Majesty. A variety of improvements have been carried out lately, by order of the King, in this picturesque Elizabethan manor house, which occupies a charming situation in Osborne Park. Barton was occupied during the last reign by the equerries on duty and other members of the Household-in-waiting, and sometimes by bachelor guests at Osborne. Two rooms were then reserved exclusively for the use of Queen Victoria, who often drove to Barton to breakfast or afternoon tea.

The Prince and Princess of Wales are to be the guests of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch at Dalkeith Palace from Tuesday, July 9, when they will arrive from London in time for dinner, until the morning of Friday, the 12th. On Wednesday, the 10th, the Prince and Princess are to drive in state to Prestonfield in order to visit the showyard of the Highland and Agricultural Society. At noon the Prince of Wales will present the medals to the winners in the parade ring. After lunching in the Royal Pavilion, the Prince and Princess are to proceed to the grand stand, where they will witness a parade of the stock at half-past two, after which the jumping will take place. On Thursday morning the Prince and Princess are to drive to Edinburgh, and the Princess is to lay the foundation stone of the new Municipal Art School at Lauriston at eleven o'clock. After the ceremony a private visit will be paid to the Royal Infirmary, whence the Royal party will drive to Prestonfield, and they are to lunch at the showyard at one o'clock. An hour will afterwards be spent in inspecting the stock, and it is expected that in the afternoon the Prince and Princess will pay a visit to Lord Rosebery at Dalmeny Park.

Prince and Princess Dietrichstein von Nicolsburg have left the Austro-Hungarian Embassy for Vienna, and will proceed thence to their country seat in Moravia, where they are to receive a short visit from the King at the beginning of September. During his stay in London Prince Dietrichstein was privately invested by the King at Buckingham Palace with the First Class (G.C.V.O.) of the Royal Victorian Order.

The Grand Duchess Marie of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha and her youngest daughter, Princess Beatrice, have arrived at Kensington Palace from Germany on a visit to Princess Henry of Battenberg. It is understood that the King has arranged a reconciliation between the Grand Duchess Marie and the Grand Duke of Hesse, there having been no communications between them since the divorce of the Grand Duchess Victoria Melita, who is now married to the Grand Duke Cyril Vladimirovitch.

The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Hesse, who arrived at Windsor Castle on Friday from Darmstadt on a visit to the Court, are this week the guests of their Majesties at Buckingham Palace. They are lodged in the apartments on the south side of the palace which were appropriated to the use of Princess Beatrice and the late Prince Henry of Battenberg during the last reign. The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess are expected to leave London next Tuesday on their return to Darmstadt.

The Duke of Fife has chartered the Duke of Sutherland's large steam yacht Catania for a few weeks, and he will leave Southampton on Saturday for a cruise, accompanied by the Princess Royal and their two daughters. Early in August the Princess Royal and the Duke of Fife are going to Mar Lodge, intending to reside there until the end of October.

The King of Siam has chartered Sir George Newnes's steam yacht Albion for a few weeks, and she leaves Southampton to-day for Copenhagen, where she will embark his Majesty for a cruise to Norway and the Baltic.

Colonel Douglas Dawson, who has been for some years Master of the Ceremonies, has been appointed by the King to the office of Comptroller in the Lord Chamberlain's Department, in succession to the late Sir Arthur Ellis. Colonel Dawson is a cousin of Lord Dartrey, and his father, who was in the Guards, was killed in the Crimea. Colonel Dawson will continue to act as Master of the Ceremonies (i.e., the introducer of the Ambassadors and other Chefs de Mission) at the remaining Court ceremonials of this season.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen returned to the Viceregal Lodge from Buxton at the beginning of the week. They have several public engagements for the week and much business in connection with the visit of the King and Queen to Ireland. The garden party to be given on July 10 at the Viceregal Lodge will be on a scale never before witnessed there. The gardens will be all thrown open and refreshments served in tents on the lawn. Military music will be discoursed, and only fine weather is needed to ensure the brilliancy of the entertainment. Lord Aberdeen will attend the Birthday Review in the Phœnix Park on Friday, and on Saturday Lady Aberdeen opens the French department of the Dublin Exhibition, and will be entertained at tea, a large party being invited to meet their Excellencies.

The Duke and Duchess of Devonshire were to have commenced their annual Saturday till Monday parties at Compton Place this week, and the King was

For APPEALS, see page 1617.
For the TRUTH HOTEL LIST, see page 1621.
For SPECIAL FOR LADIES, see page 1623.
For Selected FOREIGN HOTELS, see page 1620.
For AMUSEMENTS, see page 1619
For ESTATES, AUCTIONS, see page 1618.
For OUR PUZZLES, see pages 1629, 1630.

to have been their guest next month for a week-end. The Prince of Wales was to have paid them a visit in Yorkshire, from August 12 till the 19th, for a week's grouse shooting over the famous Upper Wharfedale moors. Of course, these arrangements have been cancelled in consequence of the Duke's illness, which has excited the greatest regret in all circles of society, as no man is more popular among his friends, or more sincerely esteemed in public life. It is hoped that the Duke may be able to leave town in a few days for Eastbourne, and he will probably go to Nauheim for a course of treatment as soon as he is equal to the journey.

It is now definitely settled that next year's show of the Royal Agricultural Society is to be held at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, under the presidency of Mr. Victor Cavendish. The Duke of Northumberland has undertaken to act as President of the local committee. The list of Vice-Presidents includes nearly all the territorial magnates of the counties of Durham and Northumberland, and most of the other representative men in the district.

Sir John Ferguson Davie, who died last week after a long illness, was a country squire of the very best type. He was a liberal and considerate landlord, a most generous friend to his poorer neighbours, and munificent in his charities. He was very popular among all classes in Devonshire and West Somerset, where his large estates were situated. He was the eldest son of Sir Henry Ferguson Davie, who in his day was a well-known Member of Parliament, and he sat in the House of Commons for thirty-one years as a Liberal of somewhat advanced views. Sir John himself sat for Barnstaple in the Parliament of 1859 as a Palmerstonian Liberal. He served for many years in the Grenadier Guards, and saw service in the Crimean war. Sir John, who married a daughter of the late Sir James Hamlyn Williams, had lived for many years past at Bittescombe Manor, his place in Somersetshire, and Creedy Park, the family seat near Crediton, was occupied by his brother, Mr. William Ferguson Davie, formerly Principal Clerk in the House of Commons, who succeeds to the title and estates. Sir John was an expert salmon fisher, a fine shot, and a zealous supporter of stag-hunting.

Mr. Thomas Andrews, the very distinguished metallurgical chemist, died last Wednesday at his residence near Sheffield. He gained a wide reputation as a consulting and testing engineer and as a scientific expert, and for many years he had enjoyed a very large practice. He zealously pursued extensive researches in the branches of science in which he was an expert, and he had gained many honours, including the Telford Prize, the Telford Medal, the Bessemer Prize, and the Gold Medal of the Society of Engineers. He had written largely on engineering subjects, and his publications included "Thoughts on Faith and Scepticism." Mr. Andrews succeeded his father as proprietor of the Wortley Ironworks.

Apropos of some recent remarks in TRUTH about bogus degrees and academic distinctions, one of my readers relates the following experience of a relative of his, who is now an eminent K.C. Counsel was cross-examining a prevaricating witness upon certain circulars which he had published with the letters B.A. appended to his name. He endeavoured to extract from the man—who did not, it would seem, bear about him any other visible indications of a Bachelor of Arts—what these letters might mean. After much pressure the witness admitted that they stood for Bacon Agent.

A lady tells me a sad story of the results of dealings by post with a Yorkshire firm—apparently a firm in a biggish way of business. Her purchase, prompted by an attractive catalogue, took the form of two blouses, at 9s. 6d. the pair. The garments were so unsatisfactory that she returned them in order that they might be exchanged for a single blouse. Of the nine-and-sixpenny blouse she says that it was "a wretched, ill-made thing; in many places the machine-stitching had not caught the material, and the blouse almost came to pieces in my hands." This experience seems worth mentioning because "shopping by post" is very much on the increase, and undoubtedly it is often more satisfactory to the shopman than the customer.

Of course, there are many ladies in the country—the complainant in the above case is one of them—who are compelled to depend on the post to a great extent; but there are many more, a good many even in London, who are led by seductive advertisements into sending long distances for articles which they could get quite as cheap, and probably of better quality, in Oxford-street, Kensington, or Westbourne Grove. Personally, I would never pay any money to a tradesman of whom I knew nothing before seeing what I was going to buy; and I cannot understand why even people who are compelled to "shop by post" cannot confine their dealings to shops which they know and where they are known.

Some interest attaches to a brief correspondence that has passed between the son and executor of a gentleman recently deceased and a firm of tobacconists at Clifton—Messrs. Lloyd and Co. It begins with the delivery by Messrs. Lloyd and Co. of a bill for £2 16s. for 200 cigars supplied to the deceased gentleman in March, 1906. The bill was addressed to the deceased, with a request for an early settlement. The son had been in the habit for some time of buying cigars for his father himself, but had never seen cigars of this particular brand in his possession, and found no trace of any of them among his effects. He therefore wrote, explaining these facts to Messrs. Lloyd and Co., and asking them to let him have his father's order for the 200 cigars. This letter was written on May 18, but has never been answered. I would suggest to Messrs. Lloyd and Co. that they owe it to themselves to make some answer. They may not be aware, but it is the fact, that the practice prevails extensively of sending in bills to deceased persons for goods which have neither been ordered nor supplied, in the hope that the executors will settle them without asking any questions. In failing, therefore, to answer the above-mentioned letter, Messrs. Lloyd expose themselves to unpleasant suspicions. If they would like to send their answer to me, I should be pleased to do them the justice of publishing it.

BRUNNEN.—GRAND HOTEL. The most exquisite spot on Lake Lucerne. Thoroughly first-class. 250 rooms and saloons. American Bar. English and French billiards.

On my puzzle page this week an announcement is made of the award of the special prize offered by the Great Eastern Railway Company for the most attractive catch-name for the new train to Cromer, Sheringham, and Mundesley. It will be seen that from among several hundred suggestions "The Poppyland Luncheon Express" has been chosen as the most likely popular title for what is officially known as the Norfolk Coast Express. The regular daily service begins in July. At the invitation of the directors, however, a large party recently enjoyed a trial trip of the new express, so that in advance of the opening of the service it is possible to testify to the fact that it presents a thoroughly up-to-date example of luxurious railway travelling. Not only is the journey considerably shortened in point of time, but in the spacious and well-appointed carriages of this corridor train, with restaurant-cars for both first and third class passengers it is accomplished with the most perfect ease and comfort. "The Poppyland Luncheon Express" is sure to win the favour of the public, and increase the number of visitors to the delightful district which it will serve.

The popular conception of Mark Twain merely as a humorist does him a good deal less than justice. One has only to read his trenchant satire, "King Leopold's Soliloquy: A Defence of his Congo Rule," just published by Mr. Fisher Unwin, to see how fierce is his detestation of oppression and cruelty, how intense his passion for human liberties. Mr. E. D. Morel, of the Congo Reform Association, is to be congratulated on having secured the assistance of Mark Twain's powerful pen in the campaign that is being directed against King Leopold's iniquitous misgovernment of the Congo territory. Mark does not mince his words. Here is his final denunciation of the King:—

> Lust of conquest is royal; Kings have always exercised that stately vice; we are used to it, by old habit we condone it, perceiving a certain dignity in it, but lust of money—lust of shillings—lust of nickels—lust of dirty coin, not for the nation's enrichment, but for the King's alone—this is new. It distinctly revolts us, we cannot seem to reconcile ourselves to it, we resent it, we despise it, we say it is shabby, unkingly, out of character. Being democrats we ought to jeer and jest, we ought to rejoice to see the people dragged in the dirt, but—well, account for it as we may, we don't. We see this awful King, this pitiless and blood-drenched King, this money crazy King, towering toward the sky in a world solitude of sordid crime, sole butcher for personal gain findable in all his caste, ancient or modern, pagan or Christian, proper and legitimate target for the scorn of the lowest and the highest, and the execrations of all who hold in cold esteem the oppressor and the coward.

This is pretty strong language to use about a King, but in this case who will say that it is undeserved?

Lord Howe has decided to sell the rare and splendid collection of Shakespeare quartos and folios which has long been the glory of the library at Gopsall Park, his family place in Leicestershire. The first folio, of 1623, was the property of Charles Jennens, the friend of Handel, who died in 1773, leaving his immense property to William Penn Assheton Curzon, ancestor of Lord Howe. There is a first edition (quarto) of "Richard III.," printed in 1597. There are very few copies of this book, the only perfect one being at Chatsworth. Another quarto of the most extreme rarity is the second edition of "Hamlet," printed in 1604. There are only two other copies known, one at Chatsworth, and the other in the Huth Library. There are several other gems in the Gopsall collection, which has just been sent up to Sotheby's for sale.

Does the Daily Express mean to take lying down—if so, lying would be a peculiarly appropriate word in this connection—the castigation which it has lately received in some Anglo-Indian journals? Under a series of sensational headlines, the Daily Express published what purported to be a long telegram from Calcutta, dated May 9, giving "the gravest reports of the increasing native unrest." This telegram was characterised by the Empire of Calcutta as "a ridiculous compound of ignorance and mendacity." In the Calcutta Statesman it was pointed out that some of the statements made were so nonsensical that it hardly seemed credible that they could have been written by anyone who had been even a week in India, and a correspondent hinted pretty plainly that the Daily Express message never came over the wires at all, but was merely an imaginative expansion of a very brief cablegram which had been received by the Standard. It will be interesting to observe whether the Daily Express can show that this accusation is unfounded by producing its own original cablegram.

Mr. Algernon Ashton has been writing to the press about a projected memorial to Charles Dickens at Portsmouth. He states that Dickens "strictly desired that no statue should ever be erected to his memory." The instruction in Dickens's will was as follows:—"I conjure my friends on no account to make me the subject of any monument, memorial, or testimonial whatever."

The summer session of the Canterbury Convocation is fixed for next week, and both Houses will meet at Westminster for business on Tuesday morning. The Archbishops and Bishops of both provinces met last week at Lambeth Palace on two days for a strictly private conference.

The Rev. J. N. Dalton, Canon of Windsor, has replaced the Rev. Dr. Sheppard, Canon of Windsor and Sub-Dean of the Chapel Royal, as the Deputy-Clerk of the Closet-in-Waiting on the King. Dr. Sheppard has been appointed Precentor of St. George's Chapel, in succession to Canon Dalton, resigned.

The canonry in Winchester Cathedral, which became vacant several months ago by the resignation of Bishop Sumner, has at last been filled up by Bishop Ryle, who has collated the Rev. Vernon Faithfull Storr to the stall. The new canon was rector of Bramshott from 1901 until 1906, when he accepted the rectory of Headbourne Worthy. Canon Storr, who is examining chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, is an able man, and his lectures on the Philosophy of Religion at Cambridge excited much attention. The canonry is worth about £500 a year (reduced from £910 by agricultural depression), with an excellent house and garden in the Close at Winchester.

MALOJA, Engadine, Switzerland.—Palace Hotel, Kursaal, 6,000 ft. altitude. Completely renovated 1906. Private Baths. Golf, Tennis.—EDWARD SMART, Manager. Prospectus on application.

The Bishop of Guildford, who resigned this canonry, is a son of Charles Sumner, the last of the Prince-Bishops of Winchester, who held this see from 1827 until 1869. He was appointed to Winchester (which bishopric was then one of the great prizes of the Church) in 1827 by George the Fourth (nominally by Lord Goderich) at the request of Lady Conyngham. The Bishop of Guildford held the then rich living of Old Alresford from 1850 until 1885, when Bishop Harold Browne collated him to a canonry in Winchester Cathedral, with which stall he held also the Archdeaconry of Winchester. He was suffragan of the diocese during the last three years of Bishop Harold Browne's episcopate, and afterwards under both Bishop Thorold and the present Archbishop of Canterbury. Bishop Sumner was also for three years Prolocutor of the Lower House of Convocation, so he has enjoyed a remarkably wide experience of ecclesiastical offices and duties.

Archdeacon Sinclair is to be the Canon-in-residence and Sunday afternoon preacher at St. Paul's Cathedral during July, replacing the Bishop of Stepney.

The Irish ecclesiastical lottery scandal is more serious now than it has ever been, hardly a week passing without a wholesale distribution through the post of circulars and tickets relating to some newly-organised gamble of this description. Among those to which my attention has just been directed are two lotteries promoted by the Christain Brothers, at Maryborough, Queen's County, and Mount Sion, Waterford, and another in aid of the Institution of the Nursing Sisters of the Bons Secours, at Cork. It is announced that the drawing for the latter is to take place some months hence in the presence of the Lord Mayor of Cork and the High Sheriff—in fact, it has now become a regular thing in Ireland for assistance in these violations of the law to be given by the very authorities whose duty it is to see that the law is observed.

Among the holiday funds claiming attention at this time of year, I hope my readers will not overlook that of the Poor Clergy Relief Corporation, for the benefit of poor clergymen, especially those suffering from overwork or bad health. Even where clergymen are not in the worst extreme of poverty, there are many of them whose means make it impossible for them to take a holiday, and cases are frequent in which men have not been away from their parishes for eight or ten years, or even longer. Such cases have a strong claim upon the benevolence of all Church people—the more so since the parish is apt to suffer as well as its pastor when the latter is tied down to his work without intermission for many years in succession.

A tradesman in Streatham asks whether he would be justified in exhibiting a collecting-box for the Tryphena Mission, Bow Common, E. The answer is "No," and I trust it will meet the eye of other tradesmen in that part of London, on whom, I understand, these collecting-boxes have been planted. As has been already explained in TRUTH, the Tryphena Mission was originally started by the Rev. Archibald Brown, a well-known Nonconformist minister, and after he left the East End the management of it passed into the hands of Mr. B. F. Adams. Mr. Adams practically placed it at the disposal of Mr. George Breton, of the notorious Poor Children's Society, but when the humbug of this charity was exposed in TRUTH, the connection was severed, and Mr. Adams has since carried on the Tryphena Mission on his own account. He is, however, quite uncontrolled in the management, and the work which he does is of that class of indiscriminate charity in the distribution of free meals, coals, etc., the value of which is very doubtful, and the expenditure upon it very difficult to check. There is no justification whatever for making collections all over London on behalf of a petty local charity of this undesirable class.

It would be well if tradesmen in London and the suburbs exercised a little more discretion in allowing collecting-boxes for obscure or shady charities to be exhibited on their counters. In the above instance a female has been going about from shop to shop in Streatham—and, no doubt, in other parts of London—telling a plausible tale of the value of the charity, and inducing soft-hearted shopkeepers to take the Tryphena boxes. Except for the one who has written to me, nobody thus appealed to seems to have had the prudence to make inquiries about the mission before complying. What large sums of money may be collected and wasted by this process is conspicuously shown in the case of the Poor Children's Society, which obtains some thousands of pounds per annum from collecting-boxes planted in shops, restaurants, and public-houses. Tradesmen ought to understand that when they exhibit collecting-boxes in this way, they are as much responsible for the result as if they were personally appealing to their customers on behalf of the charity.

I have received a long letter from Sir Frederick Milner, which he asks me to publish by way of reply to my recent article on the relations of the Rev. F. Lawrence with the Church Society for the Promotion of Kindness to Animals. If the letter contained any sort of reply to the allegations that have been made against Mr. Lawrence, I should have the greatest pleasure in complying with the request. But I cannot give the space Sir Frederick Milner requires to mere eulogies of Mr. Lawrence's virtues and suggestions that he is the victim of a cruel persecution, without any explanation or denial of any material fact that has been stated. The following passages sufficiently show all that Sir Frederick Milner has to say:—

CLARIDGE'S HOTEL, BROOK-STREET, Grosvenor-square.—Over 300 rooms; nearly 100 bathrooms. Royal suite, private entrance. Situation ensures perfect quiet.

SEEGER'S HAIR DYE.—Dyes the hair by merely combing through. 2s. the Case, or Trial Bottle, mailed free from observation, 7d.—HINDE'S Ltd., 1A, Finsbury, London.

Sir,—The Church Society for Promotion of Kindness to Animals was formed with the object of supplementing the excellent preventive work carried out by the Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The object of the society was to instil into the minds, especially of the young, a respect for animals of all kinds and a horror of cruelty. In furtherance of this object Mr. Lawrence preached sermons in all parts of England, and visited hundreds of schools, where he gave most interesting lectures to the children. He also visited all the cab-stands in the metropolis and a number of slaughter-houses. . . .

Because Mr. Lawrence declined to preach against legitimate sport, he aroused the antagonism of the extremists, and since then has been subjected to a most cruel persecution, and has received numbers of anonymous letters, couched in shameful terms, and threatening him with ruin. . . .

It is insinuated in your article that Mr. Lawrence lived in luxury on the proceeds of the society. What are the facts, to which I can personally testify? They are these: That Mr. Lawrence not only resigned his living, as I have already pointed out, but he spent every sixpence he had in the world in promoting the objects of the society, with the consequence that when, utterly broken in health, he resigned his post, he was left absolutely destitute. A committee was formed, and a small fund has been raised, to which several eminent and influential persons have subscribed, which we trust will be sufficient for the maintenance of our esteemed friend during the few years of life that may be left him. . . .

I have known Mr. Lawrence intimately for the last thirty-five years. At that date he was the protégé of Archbishop Thomson, who to my knowledge had a high opinion of him and of his devoted self-sacrificing work. He has lived a life of Spartan simplicity, and I have often remonstrated with him because, in his desire to help the poor and suffering, he has often denied himself the bare necessaries of life. I have no hesitation in asserting that Mr. Lawrence is known, respected, and beloved by hundreds of those amongst whom he has so faithfully worked. The late committee of the Church Society are ready and willing, in the forms of the agreement already made, to complete the amalgamation with the Royal Society. The minute books are in the hands of the Archbishop of York, and he will decide as to their destination.—I remain, your obedient servant,

Frederick Milner, P.C.

The reader will see at once that there is not a word here which even pretends to exculpate the gentleman for whom Sir Frederick Milner expresses such warm friendship and admiration. What is alleged against Mr. Lawrence is that while posing as an "honorary" official of this charity, he really lived on it for years; that the published accounts, for which he was really responsible, concealed this state of things from the subscribers and those to whom his appeals were addressed; and that after the discovery of the truth had led to his removal, or withdrawal, from his official position, he was actually found to have possessed himself again of money intended for the Society. Beyond saying that I insinuated that Mr. Lawrence lived "in luxury"—which I certainly did not—Sir Frederick Milner's letter in no way deals with these points. It confirms rather than refutes all that was said, and it is really childish to talk about Mr. Lawrence having spent "every sixpence he had" on the Society, if the fact is that the Society was practically maintaining him for some years.

In one of the passages which I have eliminated, Sir Frederick Milner suggests that my article was inspired, if not written, by a personal enemy of Mr. Lawrence, whom he can identify. The article was written, like every other article in Truth, in this office on materials—including much in Mr. Lawrence's own handwriting—which I consider establish everything said in it, and more. It is quite idle for any personal friend of Mr. Lawrence to suppose that allegations so founded can be disposed of by mere protestations of personal regard or high appreciation of his noble intentions. Mr. Lawrence's friends and admirers are quite right to subscribe for the purpose of helping him out of the position into which he has drifted; I am glad that they should do so, for I feel rather sorry for the old gentleman. But they really cannot expect those who have not the advantage of knowing him personally to accept him at their valuation. After reading Sir Frederick Milner's letter, it is easy to understand the difficulty which has been experienced by those who were not Mr. Lawrence's personal friends in ejecting him from the position which he occupied; and I am inclined to think that the infatuated admiration of his friends is in some measure answerable for the trouble into which he has got himself.

Since the foregoing remarks were penned I have received another letter from Sir Frederick Milner, in which he tells me that if I do not publish his letter he will publish it elsewhere, that he has influence with a "society journal," and that he will disclose the name of the enemy of Mr. Lawrence above referred to. He also proposes to invoke the intervention of Parliament by distributing copies of his letter among the Lords and Commons. These threats have certainly no terrors for me. I have no objection whatever to Sir Frederick publishing his letter elsewhere, and I wish he had done so before he troubled me with it, for I have many other demands on my space. As for the "society journal," which Sir Frederick proposes to place in the field, I can only hope that its editor will be more successful than I am in discovering what the case is which he is expected to support.

The following contributions have reached me towards the Tress Barry Fund for providing sixpences for distribution among the children in the London workhouses at Christmas. I trust that there are still many more of my readers who intend to give their help towards this object at an early date:—

	No. of Sixpences.		No. of Sixpences.
H. E.	10	A. E. K.	20
J. W. M.	84	G. W. G.	40
W. J. T.	8	J. W. Matthews	100
Bombay	40	N. W. P.	60
J. H. L.	100

I have received 10s. from N. W. P. for the Truth Toy Fund.

The following amounts have also been received towards Lady St. Helier's Children's Holiday Fund:—W. H. J., 10s.; St. Andrew's Boys, £2 2s.; A. E. K., £2 10s.

Dieudonné Hotel and Restaurant, Ryder Street, S.W. Excellent cuisine, prompt service, and comfort. Luncheons and Dinners Prix Fixe and à la carte. Mod. charges. Tel. No., 5265, Ger.

Ask—and you will find that in business offices where the use of the best ink is essential, Stephens' Ink is used. You should use it at home—it costs no more. Resolutely refuse substitutes.

Though I do not agree with all Mr. Haldane's political views, I must say that he deserves all the praise he has received for the way he has piloted his Army Bill through the House of Commons. Though he has made no very material alterations in the scheme, he has contrived to satisfy nearly everybody—with the possible exception of Mr. Arnold-Forster; and the Bill goes to the House of Lords with the minimum of decent excuse for any attempt to knock it out of shape in that assembly. Such opposition as remained in the field to the end of the proceedings came almost as much from the Liberal and Labour benches as from the other side of the House. One hardly expects to see the Lords supporting objections from the former quarters. It will be rather interesting, therefore, to see how the Upper House performs its constitutional functions in regard to this measure.

That Mr. Haldane's scheme has progressed so satisfactorily, is largely due to the fact that as a scheme it is decidedly sketchy. It is really an "enabling Bill" to give certain powers to the Army Council—a disjointed sort of skeleton which will have to be riveted together, clothed with flesh, and vivified with blood in the subsequent process of administration. So far as the "Territorial Army" is concerned, the success of this process will depend in a great measure on the way the nation at large responds to the call to be made upon it, how the County Associations do their duty, and how much money Parliament hereafter finds for the necessary expenses. The nature of the Bill lent itself easily to modification in the course of debate, and this was particularly shown in Mr. Haldane's last concession on the subject of the Militia, which was embodied in a mere verbal statement without altering a line of the Bill. This adroit transformation of the only feature of the scheme which has provoked warm opposition was enough in itself to stamp the present Secretary of State as a great general. He must have taken lessons in "slimness" while General Botha was in London, though it is curious how little either of them suggests that quality to the outward eye.

I confess I do not fully understand the effect of this last change on Mr. Haldane's general plan, and I do not mind confessing it, for I am sure that I am not the only one. What is clear is that so many Militia battalions are to be preserved as adjuncts of the Regular Army, and incidentally it appears that their objection to drafting during war has been overcome, in which case Mr. Haldane has scored elsewhere than in Parliament. But on this view the man must be enlisted with express liability to foreign service in time of war, and nothing is said about this in the Bill. Surely that is the place for it. Again, is the establishment of the Territorial Army, as "adumbrated" by Mr. Haldane, to be reduced by the number of these Militia battalions? Presumably it is, but in this case the calculations of military experts by which the desired strength of this force was fixed a few months ago, must be somewhat elastic. Apparently the "Territorial Army" becomes now only a new name for the Volunteers and Yeomanry, combined with a few Militia battalions which are not considered good enough for use anywhere outside the Kingdom.

With regard to the allegation that military training in schools is more apt to discourage boys from soldiering than to encourage them, an officer writes:—

> You quote a Service correspondent in support of these views, but he merely expresses an opinion without supporting it by any facts from which your readers may draw conclusions. Will you kindly allow me, as another military correspondent, to express my opinion on the matter? I believe that military training in schools, applied with tact and skill, encourages boys to embrace a military career, and in support of my opinion I produce the following facts. Of the boys trained at the Duke of York's and Royal Hibernian Military Schools, where the training is strictly on military lines, 80 per cent. to 85 per cent. join the Regular Army, and make very good soldiers. This statement is made on the highest authority, and is easily verified.

With all respect to my correspondent, I cannot see that this evidence has much bearing on the question in dispute. The boys he refers to are the sons of soldiers, and are avowedly being trained under military conditions to follow in their fathers' footsteps. It is to be expected that they will take to soldiering. But their case has no analogy to that of the sons of civilians, who are either being educated for civil life, or are already in civil employment. It is quite true that the previous correspondent, whose letter appeared in TRUTH of June 12, cited no evidence in support of his opinion; but I supplemented his letter with the evidence which most impresses me, and which comes from the experience of the Volunteer corps at Oxford and Cambridge. The best way of testing the question is to ascertain what proportion of public school cadets subsequently join Volunteer corps.

One or two communications have reached me from India with reference to a paragraph in TRUTH of April 24, commenting upon the failure of a sergeant-major of an Irish infantry depot to pass the musketry course at Hythe. I have consequently discovered what I had overlooked when the paragraph was published—that the warrant officer in question was the depot sergeant-major of the Royal Irish Rifles, whose original appointment was the subject of notice in TRUTH of November 14, 1906. Some particulars of the sergeant-major's record were then given, and it was suggested that it was not such as to entitle him to promotion, the fact being that he had been about fifteen years at the depot, and had risen from the rank of corporal, serving in the recruiting office as orderly-room clerk, and finally as depot quartermaster-sergeant.

I am now credibly informed that before this appointment was made the Officer Commanding the 1st Battalion of the regiment in India was requested to recommend a man for it. He made a recommendation, but it was disregarded. The man who was thus set aside was fully qualified for promotion, and had served abroad for fifteen out of nineteen years. Of course, he had, among his other qualifications, a musketry certificate—as I understand it, an Indian certificate, the qualification for which is rather stiffer than at Hythe. This case is, therefore, a glaring example of the practice of allotting the most desirable home billets for senior men to stay-at-homes, whose soldiering has chiefly been done in clerical berths at the depots, and it is high time that Mr. Haldane put an end once and for all to this practice, in the interests of justice as well as "efficiency." These cases seem to be peculiarly rife in Ireland, and another of precisely the same class was referred to in TRUTH a few weeks before this one at Clonmel.

DEAFNESS successfully treated by the AKOUPHONE INSTRUMENTS. . . Also Vibratory Treatment for Neurasthenia. Mr. ARONSBERG, 9, Bentinck-street, Cavendish-square, London, W.

At Hong Kong, as some of my readers may be aware, our soldiers are paid in dollars, and it seems that whole dollars may or may not be paid in one-dollar notes or bills. From a growl which has reached me from that station it would seem that it may make some difference to the soldier, and to somebody else, whether he receives his dollars in paper or in cash, for the money-changers at Hong Kong give 108 cents for a one-dollar bill. Thus a gunner in the R.G.A., entitled to $5, who is paid, as in a case before me, in three one-dollar bills, and ten twenty-cent pieces, gets sixteen cents less than if he had been paid entirely in bills. Presumably there is a corresponding gain of sixteen cents on the other side. This matter seems well worth a little official investigation.

Through the agency of the Salvation Army I have heard a rather mysterious story relating to an army veteran who is among the numerous men discharged in the last few months from Woolwich Arsenal. The points of interest in it are, not only the fact of the man having been discharged, but also that he seems to have left the Army with only a pension of 1s. a day. The man, whose name is Miller, has a remarkable army record, of which the following are the most material particulars:—

February 12, 1876. Enlisted in the Seaforth Highlanders at Fort St. George as piper; served with the regiment 6 years and 8 months.

1883. Transferred to the Rifle Brigade as private. Served with the 3rd Battalion in Egypt.

1885. Transferred to 1st Batt. Rifle Brigade, and served in Burma; rose to corporal. Was reduced to the ranks for breach of orders in capturing a native chief.

Next transferred to the 4th Batt. Rifle Brigade, and re-instated as corporal.

1890. Promoted to sergeant, and received the distinguished service medal. Returned home with 4th Battalion, but transferred to the 1st Battalion, and served in China.

1896. Invalided home owing to loss of speech; recovered, and served at the depot of the Seaforth Highlanders as a recruiting sergeant.

May, 1899. Transferred to 2nd Batt. Seaforth Highlanders, and went to South Africa as interpreter. Served in the war.

June, 1901. Invalided home, owing to having again lost his speech through explosion of a shell. Recovered on the voyage, but finally invalided out October, 1901.

Employed after this at Woolwich Arsenal until October, 1906.

How this man came to be discharged with only 1s. a day I cannot understand, and though I have seen him, he seems unable to throw any light upon the matter. According to the above statement of his service, he had had eleven years' service as sergeant at the time of his discharge, with a total service of twenty-five years, which would seem to have entitled him to 2s. 6d. at least. But, however that may be, his service certainly seems to entitle him to more consideration than he has received. He actually has nine medals, earned in Afghanistan, Egypt, Burma, and South Africa, besides the D.S. and good conduct medals, and he states that when he got the D.S. medal he had been actually recommended by the Duke of Connaught for the Victoria Cross. He qualified as interpreter in no less than five languages. He has been four times wounded in engagements, and, owing to this, has suffered bouts of fever and ague, as well as smallpox, on foreign service. He is now more or less crippled, and, having a wife and children, is reduced to a state of destitution. I presume that his physical condition had something to do with his being selected for discharge from Woolwich; but, as the Woolwich job was evidently given him by way of reward for his services, when it was taken away he clearly had a claim to consideration in some other shape. A man who has served for twenty-five years, and been on active service for a great part of the time, ought certainly to be better treated than this.

Possibly some benevolent reader of TRUTH may be able to give advice or assistance in the following case. A soldier confides to me that he is in great trouble as to how to provide for his mother, who, while he has been serving abroad, has lost a leg and met with another accident, and is at the same time suffering worse trouble still at the hands of another child, out of whose reach she must be placed. It is a long and melancholy story, but these are the essential facts. I gather that the man cannot keep his mother altogether, but he is willing to contribute something towards her support.

The fourth of the new "A" liners of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company begins her maiden voyage to South America this week. As they have been successively put on the service during the past two years or so, I have said something in praise of those magnificent ships, the Aragon, the Amazon, and the Araguaya. On Saturday one of my representatives enjoyed a short trip on the Avon, the latest of these liners, and I gather from his description that she presents the same splendid accommodation for passengers, the same lavish provision of everything making for comfort and luxury in ocean travel which have earned for her sister ships the name of floating hotels.

Judging from the following facts, there seems room for improvement in the postal service and in the existing arrangements for the transit of goods between some of the neighbouring suburbs of London. A florist who supplies cut flowers from the neighbourhood of Chalfont St. Peter desired to despatch a parcel to Hampstead. A letter to the carrier requesting him to call took twenty-four hours in delivery; the carrier took twelve hours to respond after receiving it; the transit of the box by rail from Gerrard's Cross Station to Hampstead took twenty-four hours more—total, sixty hours. Business must be carried on with some difficulty under these conditions.

I was much interested to read in the Daily Mail the Lord Mayor's panegyrics of some of the municipal undertakings and achievements that he has seen in

"TRUTH" writes:—"I have never heard anything but favourable accounts of DR. LUNN'S Excursions." Tours to Switzerland. Norway Cruises.—Secretary, 5, Endsleigh Gardens, N.W.

Berlin. He seems to have been particularly struck by the splendid equipment and organisation of a municipal hospital, and by the "forest school" in the suburbs for specially delicate children in the Berlin schools, who are taken to and fro daily at the public expense. If, however, any proposal were made to put London on an equality with Berlin in these and other respects, I expect the Lord Mayor would be one of the first to howl against them as "socialism," and I am quite sure the Daily Mail would. The word "wastrel" also would probably be found appropriate to the occasion.

After his discoveries in Berlin, the Lord Mayor ought to be able to give some useful instruction to some of the City magnates who suppose that British stocks are depressed through fear of the progress of socialism in this country. On this view of the matter German stocks, and those of most countries, not to mention British Colonies like Australia and New Zealand, offer a much more alarming prospect than our own. I often wonder where the investors who have been selling their Consols, or whatever it may be, from fear of socialism, re-invest their wealth. Perhaps Lord Rothschild knows.

The report of the Law Society's committee on solicitors' accounts contains a number of pious opinions, and three definite and rather drastic proposals. It is rather unfortunate that, though the committee are unanimous about the former, three of its members dissent from the latter. It is of little use to lay down, as an abstract proposition, that it is the duty of a solicitor to do this and not do that in his dealings with other people's money, unless some practical means can be found for keeping him up to the mark. There was a strong and rather bitter opposition to the appointment of this committee at all. In point of fact, the resolution for the purpose was defeated at a general meeting, and only carried by an appeal to the members at large by means of a poll of the Society. The opposition will be intensified now that the recommendations of the committee are formulated in black and white, while the position of the reform party is weakened by the disagreement of the committee on the only practical portion of its report.

The majority recommend that a solicitor shall either have his books audited annually by a chartered accountant, and submit the accountant's certificate to the Society with his application for his practising certificate; or else submit, in lieu of the accountant's certificate, a statutory declaration that he has kept clients' moneys in a separate banking account, and treated them in a certain way, and that they are intact. The dissentient trio object to this on two grounds. They think it will derogate from the cardinal principle which the committee have laid down, that "it is no part of a solicitor's duty to hold money belonging to a client for any lengthened period, and that it is contrary to good practice to do so." They also think that the proposed regulations, "while affording no security against dishonesty of a few, would place the whole profession under a degrading obligation."

No doubt the "degrading obligation" is the real stumbling-block with the dissentients, as it is with so many solicitors who resist all effective regulations. But it is nonsense to suggest that solicitors will be more "degraded" by self-imposed regulations for the purpose of keeping the weaker brethren straight than they are by the perpetually recurring scandals which have brought disgrace upon the whole profession, and will, if continued, cause the public to regard every solicitor with suspicion. It is difficult to see how any regulations designed to amend this state of things can escape the reproach of being "degrading" if solicitors choose to take such a wrong-headed view. Nor is it true, as the dissentients also observe, that the "degrading obligations" which are proposed will "afford no security against dishonesty of a few." They will not, of course, absolutely prevent a dishonest man from stealing his client's money; but they will prevent men who are not constitutionally dishonest from placing themselves in a position where a momentary temptation, coupled with security against detection, leads them to make temporary use of their clients' money, with the full intention of replacing it; and this is what has been the cause of the downfall of at least half the solicitors who have ended their careers in the dock or in exile.

As for the other point—that it is contrary to right practice for solicitors to act as bankers—it concerns solicitors and bankers rather than clients. So far as the client is concerned, there is no visible reason why he should not use his solicitor as a banker if he were secured against the misappropriation of his money, and the extent to which solicitors are so used seems to indicate that some clients find it a convenience. I do not advocate the practice, but it infringes no abstract principle nor professional rule. The objections of the dissentients seem, therefore, to have little substance in them, and it is to be hoped that the majority of the profession will be with the majority of the committee.

Recently two Lambourn J.P.s, Major Aldridge and Mr. R. N. Bennett, convicted a servant girl, aged sixteen, of stealing an umbrella, and in default of payment of a fine of £1 10s. she was committed to prison. There does not seem to be the slightest doubt that the conviction was a miscarriage of justice, and a gentleman who was acquainted with the facts at once paid the fine and secured the girl's liberation. The case has since been inquired into by the Home Office, with the result that the fine has been remitted, a course with which the magistrates agreed. This result is all very well so far as it goes, but there is a strong feeling in the district that under an efficient administration of justice the girl would never have been convicted, and that the two magistrates responsible for this serious blunder ought to give place to more capable men.

Any excuse for harsh treatment of the person who dares to be guilty of the unforgivable crime of poverty is sufficient for certain occupants of the Magisterial Bench, and that the recent Home Office circular declaring that nothing less than a term of fourteen days' imprisonment is of any use in repressing vagrancy has been eagerly seized upon as supplying such an excuse, my Legal Pillory for the past few weeks clearly shows. This week there are a number of cases which illustrate the mischievous effects of this advice, and with the smart terms of imprisonment given to offenders for petty pilfering supply striking contrasts with the paltry fines inflicted for assaults on women, for cruelty to children, and for ill-treatment of dumb animals:—

Grantham Police-court. Before Dr. Wilson and Mr. J. Hawkins. Hiram Stacey, charged with assaulting Harriet Bullimore, lodging-house keeper, because she refused to allow him to remain in the house on account of his foul language. Fined 20s. and 5s. costs.

Highbridge Petty Sessions. George Durston, charged with cruelty to a horse by beating it on the head with the butt end of a whip. Fined 5s. and costs.

Spalding Police-court. Before Alderman Howard and other magistrates. Thomas Ashwell, charged with cruelty to a calf, by bleeding it prior to killing it, in order to whiten the meat. Fined 10s. and costs.

Framlingham Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Borrett, F. Read, J. W. Read, and W. Grey. Wm. Cattermole, charged with assaulting Caroline Peck, whom he accosted in the road on her way home. Fined £1 and costs.

St. Rollox Police-court. Before Bailie Russell. Allen McMillan, charged with assaulting another man without any provocation by striking him in the face with some weapon, knocking him down and kicking him in the stomach. Fined 21s.

East Harling Petty Sessions. Before Sir E. C. Nugent and other magistrates. Charles Allen, charged with assaulting three children of a neighbour, aged 11, 9, and 6. He kicked the eldest and struck the others. Fined 5s. and costs. For further assaulting their father he was fined 20s.

Derby Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. Longdon, and Norman. Thomas Wilson, charged with cruelty to a mare. He beat it heavily with a whip, and on being examined several weals were found on the ribs and several sores and dry blood on the back. Fined 20s. and costs.

Hertford Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor and other magistrates. Morris Adams, charged with cruelty to two children, aged two years and eleven. The younger was left in a coster's barrow scantily clad and covered with a wet sack. The other was badly nourished and ill-clad. Fined £1 and costs.

Nottingham Borough Police-court. A husband, mother-in-law, and father-in-law, charged with assaulting Mrs. Slatcher. She was thrashed by all three, kicked by her husband, and knocked on the head with a rolling pin, being rendered insensible. Fined £1 each.

Grantham Police-court. Before the same magistrates. Henry Clark, fisherman, charged with stealing a jacket, valued at 5s., the property of the landlord of an inn. One month's hard labour.

Wells County Police-court. Before Dr. Purnell and Alderman Goodall. Elizabeth Selby, charged with sleeping out without visible means. Fourteen days' hard labour.

Gainsborough Police-court. William Dring, an educated man of 77, who was unable to work, charged with begging. One month's hard labour.

Bridgnorth Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Anderson and J. W. Steward. Margaret Swain, charged with being disorderly at the workhouse. She was insolent to the officers. Twenty-one days' hard labour.

Kinross Sheriff Court. John M'Donald, charged with taking a trout by means of set lines. Fined £2 and a guinea costs.

Scarborough Police-court. E. Clark, charged with begging at the house of a detective. Six weeks' hard labour.

Garstang Petty Sessions. Before Dr. Fisher, Messrs. Hornby, Whittaker, and Cardwell. Patrick Murray, charged with acting as a pedlar without a licence. Seven days' hard labour.

Bradford Police-court. Mary Wilson, charged with stealing a metal watch, value 2s. 6d. Two months' hard labour.

Ormskirk Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Bromley and R. Shawe. An elderly man, charged with sleeping out. Two months' hard labour.

Southend Petty Sessions. C. Bolton, charged with stealing lead, value £1. Three months' hard labour.

Pewsey Petty Sessions. J. Corley, charged with unlawfully surrendering himself as a deserter from the army. One month's hard labour.

Brackley Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Myers and Lang. William Russell, charged with stealing a washing bowl, value 6d. One month's hard labour.

ROYAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS. Nearly 8,000 convictions last year. Complaints marked "Private," absolutely confidential.—SECRETARY, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

The prominence, one might almost say notoriety, which the Lancaster county magistrates have earned for themselves by the manner of their dealing with motorists is not likely to be diminished by two cases heard by them on June 15. In the first of these a man was charged with driving a motor-cycle over a measured quarter of a mile at the rate of twenty-four miles an hour. He had been sent on an urgent message by a doctor in a case of life and death. But the evidence of the doctor on the point weighed not at all with the Lancaster Bench, for the man was fined £3 and costs. In the second case the justices absolutely disregarded overwhelmingly convincing evidence for the defence. The case for the prosecutor depended upon the accuracy of the timing by the police by means of a handkerchief waved as a signal by one constable to another a quarter of a mile distant provided with a stop-watch. The constable made the speed twenty-four miles an hour. Against this was the fact that a new speedometer affixed to the car indicated that the speed at the time the car passed through the trap was fifteen miles an hour. The speedometer had been tested a week before the alleged offence, and it was tested afterwards and certified to be accurate. Both the chauffeur and the owner swore that the speedometer was registering accurately, and that on this occasion the owner had, by counting the milestones and comparing the time by his watch as the car passed them, been careful to keep within the legal limit of speed. Nevertheless, the magistrates accepted the word of the constable and fined the defendants £5 and costs. One wonders what kind of evidence is likely to be accepted by these Lancashire worthies, who have already this year convicted thirty-one motorists brought before them and imposed fines to the tune of £196 10s., according to a "scale" they have devised.

How effectively the Moneylenders Act now grinds the tooth of usury was shown once more in a case before Mr. Justice Ridley on Saturday. Charles Samuel, alias "B. S. Thomas," sued a borrower for £550, the balance outstanding on a promissory note for £650. The amount actually advanced was £450, and it was to be paid back, together with £200 for interest, in twelve monthly instalments. The defendant raised the defence that the transaction was harsh and unconscionable, and the judge left the question to the jury, who returned a verdict for the plaintiff for £400 only, being £150 less than he claimed. The defendant had already paid £425 into court, so that on the jury's verdict for £400 judgment was entered for him with costs, and the avaricious Samuel was thus considerably worse off than he would have been if he had accepted what had been tendered in discharge of the debt.

The tipster Pizzey, whose extraordinary skill in spotting losers I have so often noticed, now embellishes his circulars with a Miltonic quotation. "Give me," he cries with the poet, "give me liberty to know, to think, to believe, and to utter freely above all other liberties." By all means let Pizzey have this liberty, but, of course, he must allow others what he claims himself. I therefore take the liberty of uttering freely the opinion that his is a mischievous business—mischievous alike to the community and to the Turf—which ought to be suppressed by Parliament.

Another tipster, Tom Tower, of Maidenhead, has also dropped into the habit of quotation. The "Prophetic Pointers," as he calls them, in a recent issue of the publication which he entitles Racing Gold, were headed with a verse or two from Longfellow beginning with the line: "This is the place; stand still, my steed." It was scarcely a happy thought. If his steeds did not exactly stand still, they at any rate failed to run as fast as the "Prophetic Pointers" suggested they would do, nearly every one of them being beaten. One of Tower's subscribers says that if he had backed all the tips in Racing Gold and the letter and the telegram for which he also paid, he would have been a very heavy loser. However, though a poor prophet, Tom Tower is an amusing fellow. "No puff required," he says, in inviting subscriptions for his "stable letters." And then he adds: "These are the best letters in the universe!"

Harry Aldon and Co., 66, Jermyn-street, St. James's, are "Turf commission agents" (otherwise bookmakers) whose method of business deserves exposure. A backer who had been in communication with them as to the opening of an account, and who had given his bank as a reference, received the following letter:—

Dear Sir,—We wrote you last week as to the amount of weekly credit you would require from us, and failing to hear from you beg to say, we have much pleasure in placing your name upon our books as a client, allowing you a weekly credit of £10, which we trust will meet with your present requirements. Upon our better acquaintance we will gladly increase this amount.—Trusting to be favoured with your esteemed patronage, we remain, dear Sir, yours very truly, Harry Aldon and Co.

During the following week the backer sent the firm various bets by which he won £14 10s. No cheque was forthcoming from Aldon and Co., but in reply to an application for it they wrote as follows:—

In reply to your letter, we beg to say the reference you sent us is far from satisfactory, and we are making further inquiries, and should they prove all right, which we trust they will, a cheque will be sent you for your last week's account. We feel sure that you, as a business man, can easily see how careful we have to be with new accounts.

The latter sentence is particularly rich, in view of the terms of the letter which Harry Aldon and Co. had written ten days previously. The statement that the reference was unsatisfactory is plainly a mere subterfuge, but even if it had been true they could not honestly decline to pay the week's account after voluntarily telling the backer that they had pleasure in placing his name upon their books with a credit of £10.

The Army appears to have suffered somewhat severely at the hands of John Howard, 10, Blandford-street, W., one of the welshing bookmakers whom I pilloried last week. Another officer tells me that he has been unable to obtain payment of a sum which he won from Howard over the Derby. Howard is a welsher naked and unashamed. He does not, like so many of the fraternity, trump up paltry excuses for non-payment, but lies low and says nothing, absolutely ignoring telegrams and letters from his deluded creditors.

I have had further evidence of the way soldiers are victimised by Edward O'Brien, Limited, of Coventry, since this matter was referred to in Truth of the 12th inst. It seems to be quite the regular course of procedure in this business to get an instalment out of a man by the representation that no bondsmen or references are required; and then to send a guarantee form to be signed by the commanding or other officer or a civilian householder. When the man cannot supply this signature, the next step is to refuse the return of his money on the ground of the expenses that have been incurred, and to try and get him to take goods instead, either from O'Brien or from Mr. Robey, "a friend of mine in this city," as he is described in one communication. As it is absurd to suppose that officers will guarantee their men's debts to tradesmen, and highly improbable that soldiers will find civilian householders to do so, the inference is that this game is played deliberately, and O'Brien must do very good business with it.

It so happens that one of these negotiations with a soldier was in progress when my last paragraph appeared. At that date O'Brien had suggested to the man that he should get a friend to "take over the transaction," and had then fallen back upon the Robey suggestion. The man again demanded the return of his money (10s.). Simultaneously with this the Truth paragraph appeared (June 12). Then, on June 17, O'Brien refunds 9s., keeping the other shilling "to cover part of the expense which I have incurred through your not completing the transaction." Seeing that the man has been put to just as much expense as O'Brien, namely, 3d. or 4d. for postage, and that the fault is entirely due to the delusive nature of O'Brien's representation of his terms, this sticking to the customer's money on the ground of the expense that has been incurred, is about the most impudent part of the whole business.

The Daily Chronicle published the other day an interesting account, given by its Berlin correspondent, of the huge business done in Germany by a group of firms, mostly with British names, dealing in quack remedies, such as an electric ear battery, a magic ring for curing gout, and a foot powder for the same purpose, and also in planchettes, complexion specifics, an apparatus for increasing the height, and so on. The information was taken from the Morgenpost, which states that seven of these firms, which are all under one management, had a turnover between them last year of £50,000. From what I have heard, it would not surprise me if my old friend Scott, of Symonds' London Stores, was connected with these businesses. He commenced operations, it may be remembered, in the United States, but found it desirable to transfer his activity to the United Kingdom, and disappeared from view when Symonds' London Stores came to grief. It is quite conceivable, therefore, that he has found his feet once more in Germany.

The Ladies' League (under Royal patronage), 2, Princes-street, Cavendish-square, W., successfully Recommends Gentlewomen for responsible Positions in every capacity. Telephone, 1,025 Mayfair.

Notice.—The Britannia Hygienic Laundry Co. have opened a West End branch at 306, Vauxhall Bridge-road, South Belgravia. High class work. Flannels specially treated.

Why people who go to a shop to buy a pound of tea or a yard of ribbon should expect to receive a share of the tradesman's profit in the shape of a "present" of some other article, or a coupon enabling them to get the present somewhere else, I have never been able to understand. But this expectation seems to prevail widely, especially among females, and those who cherish it are naturally fooled to the top of their bent. New methods of fooling them are constantly being invented, the demand producing the supply. The latest inventor in the field is my old acquaintance W. H. Dickin. He calls his invention the Tradesmen's Provident Society. The tradesman pays Dickin £3 3s. per annum, and is supplied with "checks" and little books to stick them in, which he distributes to his customers. The customers stick the checks in the book, and when they have filled the book, forward it to Dickin, with instructions to him to pay ten shillings, as they may elect, either to their P.O. Savings Bank account, or to their banker, or to their deposit account with Dickin, or to a specified charity.

The advantages of this scheme from the customer's point of view are thus set forth by the ingenious inventor:—

£10 spent is 600 checks and 8s. saved.
You will only have to save 1,500 and you have 20s.
Save one million and get £666 13s. 4d.
Now as to the use this cash will be to you:
1. It will buy your furniture.
2. It will pay your insurance.
3. It will buy your house.
4. It will enable you to make provision for your children.
5. It will enable you to send your children to college.
6. It will enable you to provide for old age.

. . . . . .

13. It will enable you to build your own house.
14. It will enable you to purchase a piano or organ.
15. It will enable you to purchase a motor.
16. It will enable you to start a farm.

In a word, it will solve all personal, domestic, and political difficulties, including old age pensions and back to the land. And the beauty of it is that the ends are within the reach of all, for the more you spend with your tradespeople the more you will get from Dickin; and even if you do not want the profits deposited at your banker's, or in your savings bank account, it will go automatically, through Dickin, to hospitals or other charities. There is only one thing I miss about the Tradesmen's Provident Society, and that is the name of Hibbens. Hitherto Dickin and Hibbens, through all the years I have known them, have been associated as closely as Castor and Pollux or Day and Martin. But there is no mention of Hibbens in connection with the Tradesmen's Provident Society. I hope nothing has happened to him. The old firm does not seem quite the same without him. It may be this that gives me a presentiment that there will be disappointments over the houses and old age pensions, the farms and the motor-cars.

Some ten years ago a good deal of attention was devoted in TRUTH to a very active begging-letter writer, by name Mrs. Margaret Longshaw. The last I heard of her was that the commanding officer of a regiment in which I believe a brother of hers had served, had undertaken to raise some funds on her behalf, and had set her up in a laundry at Liverpool. Quite recently I have had a number of inquiries respecting a lady describing herself as "Louisa Rayner," but giving no address except "Post Office, Clapham," who indites very piteous appeals, with the usual heartrending recital of personal and domestic misfortunes. I find that Mrs. Rayner is identical with my old friend Mrs. Longshaw, and the Charity Organisation Society tell me that to their knowledge the woman has been begging pretty regularly during the ten years that have elapsed since I last heard of her.

This is rather interesting, because it shows pretty clearly that the laundry business did not last long, and that, in spite of the efforts made on her behalf, Mrs. Longshaw speedily drifted back into her old method of earning a living. No doubt there is an element of truth in her account of herself, but it is, as usual in these cases, garnished with a great deal of fiction; and though it is quite certain that she is chiefly dependent on charity, it is impossible to say how much per annum she makes out of her operations. It is certain that she is an habitual and apparently irreclaimable mendicant, and her story shows very conspicuously how much easier it is to get a living in this way than by honest work. This is the fault of the people who place their purses at the disposal of begging-letter writers, without attempting to test their statements, or to ascertain whether there may not be a better means of helping them.

Another type of begging-letter writer is represented by Mrs. Cremer, of 10, Caithness-road, Mitcham. This lady respectfully ventures to submit samples of her crochet work, which she hopes you will purchase, not only on its merits, but also in consideration of her "sadly straitened means," the result of "many long seasons of adversity." Her husband has a difficulty, owing to advanced years, in obtaining lucrative engagements, and the ill-health of Mrs. Cremer and her daughter has aggravated the domestic distress. The names of Lady Ilchester, Lady Ellesmere, and other ladies are mentioned as patrons of the crochet industry, and the name of a clergyman in the north of London is given as a reference. On inquiry, it appears that Mrs. Cremer and her family are living in a nice little house, comfortably furnished, with not the slightest appearance of want or distress, and two of the sons have business positions of some kind. Probably the lady would be ashamed to stand in the street and ask for alms, but she has no hesitation in writing to strangers in distant parts of the country asking them to buy her work out of charity. It is another example of the abuses that arise from the encouragement of begging by post.

Know HUMPHREYS, and be well dressed. HUMPHREYS, opposite South Kensington Station, one of the biggest and best Dressmakers. Unusual originality combines with sensible, not fancy prices.

A VAIN WISH.

(Naturam expellas furcâ; tamen usque recurrit.)

The Speaker Sheffield's member slates
  Anent the exclamations,
Wherewith so oft he punctuates,
In course of decorous debates,
  His enemies' orations.
And says if he would but restrain
His jawbones, how The House would gain!

With Mr. Speaker, I confess,
  My lyre's in concord strung, sir;
I wish Sir Howard would repress
The terrible loquaciousness
  Of his eternal tongue, sir.
But then I know I might as soon
Expect to get, let's say the moon.

For like the poet, who compared Himself unto a linnet,
So Howard, who has always aired
His tongue, nor ever speech has heard
  Sans interfering in it——
He "does but pipe because he must";
And if he didn't, he would bust.

I have been favoured with copies of two letters that a distinguished Dame of the Primrose League at Uppingham addressed to another official of that organisation in reference to the shocking conduct of one of the members at the recent Rutland election. The first letter was as follows:—

DEAR MRS. ———.—I was told yesterday that Miss ——— had been to Leicester to fetch a Radical voter. I have not the slightest wish to interfere with Miss ———'s proceedings, but she cannot play a double game of that sort, and if we can substantiate that action of Miss ———'s yesterday will you please ask her to return her P.L. badge to you, and say at my request? I do not care to have any traitors among us. You may remember I made Mr. ——— return his badge for the same reason.

In the second letter the Dame repeats the request for the return of the badge, and remarks that it "belongs to the party"—thereby showing a wholesome contempt for the solemn fiction of some of its leading lights that the Primrose League is not a party organisation. It appears that Miss —— did not herself fetch a Radical voter from Leicester, but did accept an invitation to go for a ride there in a motor-car. Still, it was a Radical motor-car, and so I suppose that there can be no doubt about the heinousness of her crime. The manner in which it was detected and punished should be a warning to all traitors. People belonging to the Primrose League cannot be too careful. One or two Dames are kind enough to honour me with their friendship, but I sometimes tremble to think what disgrace they would fall into if this were known in their habitations, for, of course, they ought to shun all Radicals.

The Tribune called attention last week to a new feature in electioneering which has lately attained huge dimensions, and deserves the special attention of Liberal officialdom. This is the wholesale employment of workers and the huge expenditure of funds at elections, really on behalf of an individual candidate, but nominally on behalf of some organisation outside the constituency. On both sides the practice is adopted, but far more on the Conservative side than the Liberal, mainly, of course, because money for electioneering purposes is more abundant on the Conservative side. The names of ten electioneering associations on that side which have been conspicuous at recent by-elections are given in the Tribune. They do not all take the field at once, but several of them have been seen nearly everywhere, such as the Tariff Reform League, the Licensed Victuallers' Association, the National Sporting League, the Rural Labourers' League, the Women's Social and Political Union.

The effect of this practice is to reduce to a dead letter all the provisions of the Corrupt Practices Act, 1883, relating to the limitation of expenditure and of the employment of paid workers. The statutory return of expenditure and employees made by the candidate can bear no relation under these circumstances to the money really spent or the number of persons really employed in procuring his return. For example, at the Hexham election there were, according to the Tribune, no less than eighty-five emissaries of the five organisations above-mentioned working on behalf of the Unionist candidate, in addition to those whom he directly employed. Many of these outside agencies hire committee-rooms, hold meetings, and distribute immense quantities of literature, and their expenditure of money must be in proportion. Clearly this ought to be stopped, for it is directly contrary to the spirit of the Act. The Tribune suggests that the Act may be strong enough already to stop it. If there is good ground for thinking so, the question should be raised in the law courts at the first opportunity. If this method fails, the Act should be amended. A Liberal Government passed the Act, and its successors should look upon themselves as its guardians, apart from the fact that the Liberal party suffers most, as it undoubtedly does, from the evil.

Lord Robert Cecil's demonstration against the Lords' Resolution, by way of advertising the scandals of "blocking" motions, seems rather a futile proceeding. He could not persist without creating an impression that the Opposition were trying to evade the issue by a side wind; and as this would have hurt his own side more than the Government he has had to retire without getting any forwarder with the "blocking" question. It is a very difficult matter to deal satisfactorily with blocking motions without infringing privileges which the House values. Mr. Balfour admitted last week that he had been unable to solve the problem; and it is absurd, therefore, to make a fuss because the half-promise to see if they could do anything which the Government gave less than two months ago, has not yet been redeemed. All parties are agreed that the practice has become a gross abuse, but if it is to be checked it must be by some procedure the control of which will rest with the House collectively, rather than with any Ministerial majority for the time being.

The results of the Premier's Resolution will depend entirely upon the measures taken to give effect to it, and the way in which they are taken. As these measures were outlined by him on Monday, the only fault that can be found with them is that they are not strong enough. One conference between the two Houses over a rejected or mutilated Bill may be desirable and expedient. If, after the failure of such a conference, the Lords maintain their non possumus when the Bill is a second time presented to them, a second conference is futile. Nothing can be expected from it unless the Commons are to give way on points which they hold to be material, and this is the very evil which has to be removed if a Liberal majority and Government are ever to have their own way in legislation. A third conference, after two failures and three interpositions of the Lords' veto, is unthinkable. Every object which it is desired to gain would be frustrated by such procedure.

If any effect is to come of the Resolution, this must be brought home to the Government during the present debate. It may be assumed that there is no need for bringing it home to the Prime Minister. His action and his speech entitle him to the presumption that he is thoroughly in earnest. But all his colleagues are not of the same fibre. Their influence may be traced in Sir Henry's proposals. These are tempered by the Whiggish mind and the spirit of compromise. There are occasions in politics where compromise is expedient. This is not one of them. Whatever may be the case with the House of Lords itself, the veto must be ended. Any half measure, which purports to restrict it, but will leave it in practice as effective as before, is not worth wasting time over.

Such a measure will be, indeed, worse than useless. It is bad tactics, for it is easier to carry the whole measure than the half one. No compromise on this question will elicit the enthusiasm necessary to carry the reform; the appearance of compromise will be quite sufficient to damn the proposal. The truth of this is shown by the tactics of the Opposition, particularly in the press. Their cue is to pooh-pooh the Government proposals, to persuade the public that Ministers do not mean business. If they can succeed in implanting that conviction in the country, their battle is half won. It is the business of the Government to dispel any such notion. This can only be done by a policy of "thorough"—thorough in conception and thorough in execution. "The whole hog" must be the motto.

Is it, or is it not, a fact that peerages are openly sold in order to swell the electoral chest of the two great parties in the State? Some years ago a respectable trader, who had never opened his mouth in the House of Commons, in which he had sat for some years, was made a peer. In TRUTH I mildly hinted that he had bought his peerage. I knew him a little, and he called on me to protest against my having made such a suggestion. "But is it not true?" I asked. "No!" he indignantly replied. "Then why were you made a peer? I believe that you manufacture an excellent article, but you make a good deal of money by selling it, and I cannot see why this should entitle you to a peerage." "Well," he replied, "I do not mean to say that I have not given a great deal to the Party." "I know that you have," I answered, "and if you had not, you certainly would never have been made a peer. You paid your money, you claimed your reward, and you have received it." "Well," he said, "the Party must have funds." "Precisely," I answered, "and I do not complain of your buying, for if funds had to be procured in such a fashion, you might as well have been selected as any other customer. But do not tell me in future that you did not buy your peerage." And he did not.

Yet it does seem to me that the legislative powers of this very worthy gentleman, and of his descendants in sæcula sæculorum, can hardly be deemed so sacred that the fiat of the nation may not limit them, as it has already limited the prerogatives of our ancient kings. Taking the creations of the last twenty years, I do not suppose that 10 per cent., if that, have given any proof that they are the men best endowed to exercise a veto against the House of Commons, or to procreate descendants likely to distinguish themselves as legislators. If the Lords are simply to obstruct all changes in the established order of things, they are the very men for the business. They all belong to one class, and they have all the prejudices of rich, well-to-do gentlemen. Many are well meaning, but no one can exercise an independence of judgment where his own interests are concerned. Almost all of them are Conservatives.

When a Conservative Ministry is in office, with a majority in the House of Commons, they obediently accept any Bill sent up to them. When the case is reversed, they throw out Bills sent up to them, or whittle them down to nothing, except when they pass them without change in order to curry favour with the electorate and avert their own doom. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman is right in laying stress upon the circumstances under which the last Education Bill was finally killed. What more scandalous exhibition can be conceived than the Lords confederating with Mr. Balfour in his room in the House of Commons to defeat a Government that had just been placed in office by an overwhelming national majority, and then running back to carry out his orders in their own House? No, my worthy and respected friends, you will not get the country on your side in your contest with the House of Commons, for the House of Commons is the people's house, and yours is not.

THE BOY AND THE MOTOR BICYCLE.

Young Tom, a Lad of ten or so,
Who wanted Everything to know,
Out with his Father strolled one Day,
Along what's called the King's Highway.
As thus they strolled, Tom asking "Why?"
Re all that caught his boyish Eye,
A Motor-Bicycle fizzed by,
Popping like fifty Champagne Corks,
Or Squibs on Night of Guido Fawkes.
Tom stared perplexed; and while stared he
A Daimler—24-h.p.—

JEFFREY & CO.'S ARTISTIC WALL PAPERS are on view at their New Showrooms, The Wallpaper Gallery, 31, Mortimer st., W. To be had of all decorators.—Factory: 64, Essex-rd., Islington, N.

That covered twice as fast the Ground,
Sped swiftly by with scarce a Sound.
The Lad, his Eyes with Wonder wide,
"Oh, Daddy dearest, tell me," cried,
"Why does the Bike, though smaller far,
And slower than that fine, big Car,
Explode and bang and trumpet thus,
And make no end of noisy Fuss;
Whereas the Car, ten times its Size,
At double Speed in Silence flies?"
His Sire at Tom's perplexèd Face
Looked down, and stated thus the Case.

Moral.

"'Tis those who do the least, my son,
That cackle most of what they've done;
While those it is who do the most
That least of their Achievements boast."

SCRUTATOR.

SHIPPING AND WAR.

IF the Hague Conference is to prove useful, it must limit itself to such proposals as are likely to command general assent. It is no use wasting time over millennium suggestions, or any that require the assent of the world to the doctrine that British virtue is superior to that of other nations. Arbitration, for instance, is a sensible mode of averting wars. Anything, therefore, that the Conference can do to strengthen the hands of the Hague Court as the forum of international disputes will be useful. In regard to the rights of belligerents and neutrals in the case of war, there is great room for effective action by the Conference. The question whether the private property of the citizens of a belligerent on the high seas should be open to capture is apparently to be raised. I do not look on this matter from a sentimental standpoint. I am no advocate of making wars comparatively innocuous to the private citizens of a belligerent State. On the contrary, as it is the civilians who decide whether there is to be war or peace, I agree with John Stuart Mill in the view that the horrors of war should be brought home to them, since this may lead to them thinking twice before rushing into it.

From the British standpoint, the question of capture is one that ought not to be decided in a hurry. As it is, by the Declaration of Paris of 1858, free ships make free goods, but enemies' merchant ships on the high seas are still good capture. Supposing, let us say, that we went to war with Germany, we could practically destroy her carrying trade, but she would be able to trade in neutral waters. A neutral nation, therefore, like the United States, even supposing that all the German ports were blockaded, would be able to continue its trade with Germany under its own flag, by using the Dutch or the Belgian ports. On the other hand, Germany would be able to slip fast cruisers through the blockade, which would prey on our commerce. One Alabama drove the mercantile marine of the Northern States off the sea during the Confederate war. The chance of capture raised the cost of underwriting American vessels against war risks so much that merchants only shipped in neutral bottoms. On the whole I am inclined to think that, after weighing the pros and cons, the balance inclines in favour of making belligerent merchants' ships free from capture on the high seas. I am looking at the matter, of course, from the British point of view. I doubt whether—no matter what we might think—we should be able effectively to protect our own mercantile marine, and the attempt to do so enormously increases the cost of our Navy. We have to be ready to defend our shipping by keeping up a big fleet of warships, which would be otherwise unnecessary. Moreover, I am inclined to think that foreign nations would be less inclined to build warships if they knew that in any case their merchant ships would not be liable to capture. The question, however, is one which requires a great deal of consideration.

Another point which requires general agreement is that of contraband war goods. As it is these are liable to capture on board a neutral, provided that it can be shown that the vessel is bound for a belligerent port. But there is no clear understanding what is contraband of war, nor where the liability to capture begins. During the American Civil War, we claimed and exercised the right to send goods—whether contraband or not—to the Bahamas; and we only recognised the right of capture when a vessel was caught on her way between the Bahamas and a blockaded Confederate port. The more definitely international laws on such points as these are agreed to the less is the liability of a neutral becoming involved in a war, and consequently the less the danger of the conflagration spreading. It is a good thing, therefore, that two proposals for establishing an international "Prize Court of Appeal" have been put forward at the Hague—one by Sir Edward Fry as our representative, the other by Germany. There seems no reason why all the Powers should not agree to this step, whichever of the two proposals is adopted. If this be done, henceforward no nation will be the sole judge of its right to seize a particular cargo at a particular point, and the decisions of the Court of Appeal will build up an international code definitely settling the uncertain points mentioned above. This is all in the interest of peace.

No man entertains a stronger desire to put an end to wars than I do. But I am practical. Therefore, whilst hoping that other nations will not fight, I deem it primarily our aim to keep the peace. I would have, therefore, every issue raised at the Conference judged, so far as we are concerned, from this standpoint. I do not believe in alliances that may land us in war, and that tend to divide the world into hostile camps. I should prefer a general agreement of all nations in regard to European and extra-European matters. This was always the view of Mr. Gladstone, and I heartily agree in it. I am glad when any nation exchanges a despotic régime for a popular one, and I am sorry when its citizens are oppressed by their rulers. But I would not go to war on their behalf. If we cannot secure the good government of other countries, or hinder other countries from fighting, we ought at least to be able to reform ourselves at home and live in peace with all others. There is hardly a war in which we were ever engaged that we might not have kept out of. Our statesmen have always been too fond of playing a great part on the world's stage. They have always been too fond of meddling in matters that only indirectly concern us. If we want armaments to be reduced, practice is a stronger argument than the noblest abstract professions, and I would have us substitute practice for preaching. If we want other countries to abate their territorial ambitions we should not add to our vast domains and call it "pegging-out claims for futurity." I want our armaments to be reduced, because we can expend the money that they now cost more usefully. But this is only possible if we keep our breath to cool our own porridge, and if we steadily look after our own interests without quarrelling with others. This is what is called a parochial view. Possibly it is. But our parish is a very large one, and if we limit our energies to making its parishioners happy and contented, we shall have our hands full. Alexander the Great may have been a hero. Where he is now I do not know. But if all have their reward in the next world, according to their deeds in this world, the poorest citizen of Macedonia, whose ambitions did not extend to interfering in the affairs of the whole outside world, will have been in the long run better off than he.

DOES "THE ACT" COVER DOMESTICS?

It is universally recognised that a vast amount of litigation will be needed to elucidate the effect of the Workmen's Compensation Act of last year. It has, indeed, been described as "an abominable Act," not merely by indignant housekeepers, but by connoisseurs of Parliamentary draftsmanship. Its undeniable defects are not the fault of its original authors so much as of the innumerable M.P.s who tried their hands at improving it during its passage through the House, and they will probably furnish in course of time a remarkable proof of the incapacity of the House of Commons, by reason of its methods of procedure, to turn out a passable piece of legislative workmanship. Incidentally, the failure of the House of Lords as a revising chamber for the purpose of knocking the work of the lower House into shape is revealed at the same time.

Of all the questions that have yet been raised as to the true construction of the Act, the most eye-opening is suggested by a letter that I have just received from a practising barrister. I publish the letter below for the bewilderment of my readers and the public at large. It may be remembered that as the Act was originally presented by the Home Secretary it did not apply to domestic servants. An amendment which was intended to extend to this class the rights of all other "workmen" was moved by Mr. Harry Marks, M.P., and nobody making much objection, was accepted by the Government and embodied in the Bill. It has been universally assumed that effect had been duly given to Mr. Marks's benevolent enthusiasm for domestic servants, and great has been the perturbation of householders and housekeepers, and great the profit of insurance companies in consequence. The learned author of the following letter is of opinion that the Act fails to give effect to the intentions of Mr. Marks and his brother legislators; and though the writer modestly withholds his signature, I think it is no breach of confidence to say that he has the reputation of a sound lawyer:—

SIR,—It has been far too readily assumed that maid-servants in purely private families are "workmen" within the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906

In my opinion, a maid-servant dwelling in her employer's house (being a purely private dwelling house) is a "member of her employer's family," and is (as such) wholly excluded from the Act.

It is true that the Act contains an express definition of "member of a family," but that definition follows immediately after the definition of "dependants," the Act (s. 13) saying, firstly, that dependants are such of the members of the workman's family as are (either wholly or in part) dependent on the workman's earnings; and then saying, secondly, that "member of a family" means husband or wife, son or daughter, etc., etc. But all that means, of course, the workman's family, and the workman's family only, and has no reference at all to (nor any applicability at all to) the employer's family.

If this opinion of mine is correct, as I believe it is, it seems to follow that the insurance malady, which has been for some months now afflicting almost all private households, is a malady of misconception merely—a malady of the imagination merely—and which my opinion should dispel.—Your obedient servant,

A. B.

I would not presume to express any opinion of my own on this knotty point, but this, at least, I can say, that counsel's opinion in this case is perfectly intelligible, even to the lay mind. The argument is perfectly simple. The "fool of an Act"—if the foregoing opinion should be upheld by the Court, there never was such a fool of an Act before—says nowhere a single word about domestic servants. It deals exclusively with the obligations and rights of employers and "workmen." Is, then, a domestic servant a "workman"? In order to define a workman, the fool of an Act starts by telling us what he is not. Among other things he is not "a member of the employer's family dwelling in his house." My correspondent holds that a female domestic living in her employer's house is in law a member of his family, and I suppose this would be so. So far, therefore, she is outside the operation of the Act. In order to bring her within the Act, one must look at the definitions following that of a "workman." The first of these defines "dependants," who are "members of the workman's family" fulfilling certain conditions. The second defines "member of a family" as meaning certain specified relatives in the ascending and descending scale, from grandfather to grandson. In order, then, to bring the domestic servant within the Act we must take this special and limited definition of a "member of a family" as applicable to that term when used in regard to the employer's family in the previous definition of a workman. My correspondent is of opinion that this definition of a member of a family applies to the workman's family only. This seems most plausible, for if the definition applies to the employer's family the result would be that a paterfamilias who employed and housed his stepson would not have to compensate him in the event of accident, because a stepson is a member of his family under the Act, while if he employed his nephew in the same way he would have to compensate him, because a nephew is not a member of his family under the Act; which is certainly absurd. It strikes me as possible that if the original Bill, excluding domestic servants, were referred to, it would make the intention of this definition of a member of a family even more clear; but I have no copy of the Bill in its original shape within reach. Anyhow, the question is a very pretty one, and promises to afford excellent sport to lawyers from the humble county-court right up to the House of Lords, for everything depends on how far you are to read into what the Act actually says what may be discovered from extraneous sources as to the intentions of Mr. Harry Marks and the legislature generally.

MATRIMONY FOR THE MIDDLE-AGED.

The Puzzle Editor of TRUTH recently offered a prize for the solution of that very important question—What is the ideal age for marriage in man and woman respectively? I am not going here to anticipate his award, which has not yet been given. But the long list of selections from the answers received, which were published in TRUTH last week, has much impressed me, and cannot fail, I think, to make an equal impression upon "every thinking man." Several hundred readers of this journal of both sexes have tackled the problem, and with one or two exceptions, denoting some degree of boldness and originality of outlook, they are all practically agreed that in the ideal marriage the man will be somewhere between twenty-seven and thirty-one and the woman three or four years younger. Even a liberal-minded philosopher, whose ideal is satisfied if the man is not over seventy-five and the woman not over eighty-eight, holds that the man should not be under twenty-seven nor the woman under twenty-four. This is perhaps the most striking contribution to the discussion, for it shows that even one who thinks that neither man nor woman can well be too old to marry holds that they may easily be too young. Youth, not age, is the disqualification. Among the rest, only three would have a girl marry under twenty; not one would have a man marry under twenty-one; and while two bold spirits think him fit for matrimony at that age, all the rest would desire him to wait till he is five-and-twenty at least, and the majority for four or five years longer.

Here we have, I take it, "a fair average sample" of opinion among that large class of the community which reads a paper like TRUTH, and also the key to much that we see around us, and on which social philosophers moralise. It does not surprise me in the least. Like the rest of the world, I find myself from time to time a guest at a wedding—a more or less willing and delighted guest. My experience in this direction extends now, I regret to say, over a good many years. During that time I have noticed a progressive advance in the ages of the happy pairs who have been the recipients of my congratulations, and of my little contribution to their household equipment. This is the more striking because it is quite opposed to one's ordinary experience as one goes on in life. If you run up to-day to Oxford or Cambridge, you will find that the undergraduates are mere boys—very different from the mature men of your day; and the dons, including even the proctors, are nowadays quite young fellows. It is the same everywhere. The newly-ordained curate is a mere baby; most of the men who are playing first-class cricket are little more than boys; the rising generation of subalterns can hardly grow a moustache; and the rank and file of the army generally seem to have only just left school. If your memory runs back twenty years or so, you will see at once that things were very different then.

But at the hymeneal altar it is all the other way about. The older one grows, the older grow the brides and bridegrooms. The first young lady of my acquaintance who was led to the altar had left school the year before; but it must be ten years now since I last saw a bride in her teens. I hardly like to say it, it seems so long ago, but I can remember attending in my youth the weddings of two men still in the undergraduate stage. I do not know when I last saw a bridegroom who had not traces of grey hair about him—but certainly not in the present century. Until last week I used to think that this was all the fault of the men—that the youths of the present generation think it bad form to lose their hearts, unless to married ladies. But after studying my Puzzle Editor's plébiscite, I find that there is no difference of opinion between the two sexes in this matter. The views of the lady competitors as to the "ideal age" for matrimony are practically identical with those of the men. It is actually a lady who places the age qualification highest for both sexes—man forty, woman thirty. Of course, I do not know the ages of the competitors for TRUTH prizes, nor must I inquire. But if it is the general opinion of young women that they should not get married before four or five-and-twenty, and then only to men three or four years older, we must not say it is the men's fault that boy-and-girl matches have gone out of fashion. I am a strong believer in the doctrine that all these matters are really determined by the other sex, however much the truth of the case may be disguised. No doubt there have been cases where a man has fallen in love with a woman without any intention to that effect on the woman's part; but these are the exceptional cases. Under normal conditions a man does not form a serious attachment if the woman does not want him to. It follows that if any general opinion prevails among girls that they ought not to be fallen in love with until they are five-and-twenty, and ought not to be fallen in love with even then by men less than three years senior to them, it is a moral certainty that they will not be. Although, therefore, it is clearly proved by my Puzzle Editor's statistics that men and women of the present day are very closely agreed as to the proper age for matrimony, I entertain no doubt whatever that it is the women who have fixed the age limit, not the men.

The ideal, however, which has thus been set up, has a certain danger about it which may be easily overlooked, and to which I would call the attention of the rising generation of maidens, as well as the generation already risen. It is all very well to settle in your own mind that you will not get married till you are five-and-twenty, and that you will not allow any man under twenty-eight to propose to you, but are you sure that opportunity and the man will both present themselves at these ideal ages? There is an important factor in life called human nature. Human nature has made the male creature peculiarly susceptible to female charms in the earliest stage of his manhood. This susceptibility wears off, like youth, somewhat rapidly. It generally begins to disappear at about four or five and twenty, and it is succeeded by a comparatively cold-blooded and critical attitude towards the other sex. Nor is the male alone subject to change about that period of life. It is sad, but true, that about the same time those charms in the female which have the most potent attraction for the male frequently begin to "go off." Others of a higher order may replace them—the charms of the mind and the soul rather than those of the flesh. Art may be invoked to disguise the physical change, and it is one of the most wonderful things about woman that the older she grows the more skilful she becomes in concealing the fact. But there is no getting away from the eternal truths of nature, and one of these truths is that a man is much less apt to fall in love at twenty-seven than at twenty-two, and that a woman is much less likely to be fallen in love with at twenty-five than at twenty. And unfortunately the likelihood diminishes year by year after those points are passed, even more rapidly on the feminine side than on the masculine. The damsel, therefore, who makes up her mind that the proper age for her to marry is twenty-five, and the proper age for her husband twenty-eight, and who acts up to this ideal in her youthful days, runs a great risk of achieving something quite different from her ideal. She may have luck, of course—a great many do, as we see. But, failing luck, she may find that what she could have done in a year or two, had she given her mind to it at twenty, may now take her five or ten years, or more; and that, in place of the ideal swain of eight-and-twenty, she must be content with a middle-aged fogey, who is getting tired of dining out every night, and beginning to feel that he wants some one to look after him affectionately when he is out of sorts. If she has no taste for this job, she must renounce matrimonial ambitions altogether. This is the danger of the ideal which so many young women are now cherishing and teaching young men to cherish. It is what they call in the City "missing the market." (My City Editor will explain the term more precisely to any lady who desires the information.) I have not the slightest doubt that this explains why so many of our "girls" now go to the altar between thirty and—let us say thirty-seven, for this seems to be the highest age which our girls now reach, and according to my experience it is quite the ideal age for matrimony. That the bridegrooms are generally grey, and not infrequently stout, is merely an incidental consequence of the phenomenon.

I am simply noting a few social facts and tendencies which strike me. It is not my desire to moralise upon them. But there seems an opening for it. Much attention was devoted in the press a few years ago to the question, "Is Marriage a Failure?" How does it work out, I wonder, in the case of Miss Thirty-Five and Mr. Forty-Three? The process of breaking in to double-harness is not always easy when the pair are matched young; does it come any easier with a middle-aged colt and a filly whose teeth tell their own tale, when both of them have forgotten what harness feels like, and neither has heard the crack of the domestic whip for years? The youngest couples may find that matrimony brings disillusionment, but what is the effect of the revelation when Angelina first sees Edwin with his teeth out, or Edwin finds Angelina taking her hair off? The partnerships that begin when the illusions of youth are dead may start with a big capital of mutual respect and worldly wisdom, but do these assets last longer or yield a bigger increase as the years roll by than an equal quantity of mere boy-and-girl sentiment? Perhaps Father Vaughan may find time to investigate these questions. I might point out that contemporary life offers every opportunity for testing the two theories, for it is a curious thing that the idea that young people should defer marriage till they have got over their youth and acquired sufficient incomes to insure them against uncomfortable consequences, is chiefly confined to the middle strata of society. Among the "lower orders" boys and girls still fall in love and get married without much regard to anything but the fact that they are in love. Oddly enough, at the other end of the social scale it is also still the custom for Royal youths and maidens to mate and acquire families as soon as they are of marriageable age. Is the percentage of matrimonial failures in these cases higher than among the prudent and self-contained scions of the middle classes? I do not know, but perhaps Sir Gorell Barnes might help us to an answer. Like my contemporaries, I have sat at the feet of Mr. Bernard Shaw, and I am therefore sufficiently abreast of the age to know that romance is not merely humbug, but a prolific source of social, literary, and artistic evil. Knowing this, I do my best to regard Romeo and Juliet as a pair of infatuated mooncalves. But I have a lurking suspicion that matrimony is such a speculative business that mere love may be as good a basis for it as any other, and that the ideal age for marriage is the moment when the right lad and the right lass discover one another.

THE THEATRES

There is not much of importance to chronicle during the past week.

At the Adelphi Theatre, Mr. Martin Harvey continues his season with the production of "The Corsican Brothers." This venerable and venerated veteran is, perhaps, not the play one would have selected as the best for the purpose of exhibiting Mr. Harvey's talents.

At the Vaudeville, I think the management have made a happier hit with their revival of Sir F. C. Burnand's "Mrs. Ponderbury's Past" than with their late somewhat knock-kneed venture. Here, at any rate, we have wit, which perhaps does not suffer from being of the crusted port order. The audience of the first night, in any case, seemed more than pleased with Mr. Charles Hawtrey's graceful dalliance with the verities. Miss Billie Burke served as an effective contrast to Miss Marie Illington, who got and kept more than one good opportunity for her peculiar ironical thrusts, which always please audiences. Miss Billie Burke did very well as the flaunting music-hall star, who falls like an osprey on the smooth pond of Dulton-on-the-Mole, and so successfully puts to flight the proprieties. This farce may be recommended as "a pill to purge melancholy," provided always that Mr. Charles Hawtrey is playing Matthew Ponderbury, which I have no reason to suppose that he will cease to do for the present.

The new first piece at the Hicks Theatre is in striking contrast with "Brewster's Millions," which follows. Both, however, are good of their kind, and I was among the first to point out the crude merits of the latter. Messrs. Pryce and Morrison's one-act play, "The Dumb Cake," shows how a young girl longing for a husband lays out a mug of beer and a loaf of specially baked and guarded cake, on the night of Hallow E'en, and leaves the door wide open for the entrance of her fate. This all by the direction of a card-telling crone. A runaway pickpocket rushes into the room at this dead hour of night, drinks the beer, and by so doing finds his way to the heart of the girl. She believes him to be her Heaven-sent fate. The art of the authors is here made evident, and their knowledge of the human heart. Instead of basely taking advantage of the helpless and confiding girl, the thief, rapidly realising the facts, impresses upon her that if the gold locket which she has given to him is again in her pocket when she wakes in the morning, then the whole adventure is a dream. He slips the locket into her dress, and after taking due precautions against arrest by the policeman on his beat, finally disappears. The climax and discovery are brought about by the visit of a neighbouring beldame, who gloats regretfully over the ten pounds reward obtainable for the capture of the burglar who has just left the room. Poignant are the moments when the girl realises that her hero is only a thief. Well and unobtrusively acted, this touching little play makes one wish for more in bulk, though certainly not better in quality, from the pens of Messrs. Pryce and Morrison.

I have never seen the famous basket-trick so well done as by Shekla, the Indian conjurer, who performed it before a select audience at the Salle Erard last week. His somewhat stout wife seemed all too big to enter the basket, yet managed somehow to do so and apparently afterwards evaporated, for he jumped upon the empty receptacle, thrust swords through it all the way round, and performed other self-imposed feats. The lady afterwards emerged, apparently none the worse for her evaporation.

THE COMPLETE CATECHIST.

THE SOCIAL SPONSOR'S CATECHISM.

(For the instruction of those wishing to assume the responsibilities of godparents to the "nouveaux enrichis.")

QUESTION: What is your name?

ANSWER: Adela Countess of Stonibroke.

Q.: Who gave you this name?

A.: My late husband, at the altar of St. George's, Hanover-square, together with his hand, his heart, and his inextricable financial embarrassments.

Q.: What is your profession?

A.: I am a Social Sponsor.

Q.: What is a Social Sponsor?

A.: A smart woman, with a handle to her name and a debit balance at her bankers, who undertakes to get wealthy bounders into Society by standing godmother to them—on commission.

Q.: What duties are expected of you in your capacity of godmother to such persons?

A.: To give extravagant entertainments at their houses to all my own friends; to make up select little dinner parties, for their benefit, at the Ritz or the Carlton; to take them about with me to Ranelagh, Ascot, Henley, and other Society functions, and generally to spare neither pains nor money in bringing them into touch with the right people.

Q.: Does not all this come expensive?

A.: It comes very expensive—to my godchildren.

Q.: What other godparental duty do you exercise towards them?

A.: I undertake—as a conscientious godmother should—the vicarious responsibility for their religious observance of all the Articles of the Social Faith.

Q.: What are the Articles of the Social Faith?

A.: They are comprised in the Code known as The Upper-Ten Commandments.

Q.: Do these Upper-Ten Commandments bear any resemblance to the Bible Ten Commandments?

A.: They are practically the same as the Bible Ten Commandments, with one trifling variation.

Q.: What is that one trifling variation?

A.: All the "nots" are left out.

Q.: Is it true to say, with Rita and Marie Corelli, that Society welcomes wealthy bounders indiscriminately?

A.: It is quite the reverse of true. Society shows the nicest possible discrimination in appraising the sterling worth of each of my godchildren, and in shaping its behaviour towards him, or her, accordingly.

Q.: Illustrate your answer by examples.

A.: I will. If the godchild I am sponsoring is worth half-a-million, Society nods to him; if he is worth a million, it shakes hands with him; but if he is worth two or more millions, it throws both its arms round his neck.

Q.: Does Society concern itself at all with your godchildren's personality?

A.: No. It confines its attention strictly to their personalty.

Q.: When your godchildren grow up to Social independence, do you then leave them henceforward to make their own way alone?

A.: I do not leave them. I never leave money spontaneously. It is invariably they who leave—or, in technical parlance "drop"—me.

Q.: Do you regard this as a grievance?

A.: No. I rather regard it as the inevitable outcome of their improved Social education.

Q.: How so?

A.: Because one of the first lessons you learn in Society's educational curriculum is to drop those who can be of no further use to you.

Q.: What practical moral do you deduce from this circumstance?

A.: The paramount duty of making as much money as I can out of my Social godchildren, while I still have the run of their cheque books.

Q.: Do you always discharge this paramount duty?

A.: Always—most conscientiously.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE REVOLTING VIGNERONS.

THE vote of the Chamber on Friday came to this: "The present Government is not to blame for the situation in the South, and, at any rate, we had better keep on this horse until we have crossed the river." Clemenceau spoke as if weighted with a sense of responsibility, and at the same time with spirit and readiness, often making a flashing sally to cast light on the debate. Witticisms would have been out of place had he felt inclined to deal in them, which I do not at all suppose he did. He furnished undecided Deputies with all the arguments they might need in explaining a vote in his favour to their local papers or heads of electoral committees. That telegram, handed him by General Picquart, describing the dramatic and brave conduct of General Bailloud, came as a fine bit of tag. Jaurès, for the first time, made a short speech, none the less eloquent for its condensation and all the more powerful. He surpassed himself in delivering this philippic. On Thursday the Chamber seemed in a state of panic-stricken gloom and almost to despair of France. On Friday, after the reading of the telegram about Bailloud—a general "displaced" not long ago for delivering an indiscreet speech at Nancy—one could notice a tendency to hope for the best. One should not pay too much attention to the under-current of interest which invitations to the "fused" soirée at the Molier Circus had excited at the buffet and in the lobby. This soirée was for Friday evening.

Molier is a famous "sportsman." He used to give two soirées a year for les femmes du monde and ces dames du demi-monde. As it has become so hard to distinguish between them, he decided to fuse the two entertainments into a single one, to which both mondes rushed.

The Cabinet might not have escaped so well if M. Millerand had not, in attacking it, delivered a discours ministre that rather pointed, not a few imagined, to the offer by him of a portfolio to M. Doumer. Millerand is not greatly liked in the Chamber: he is for Millerand too openly, but is trenchant, sometimes chopping, and an infallible high priest of socialism, without, however, being bigoted to any school or form. The great point in his favour was his having belonged to the Waldeck-Rousseau Ministry, when its chief persevered in a patient rather than an implacable course towards the "Fort Chabrol" revolt. The Chamber is inclined to give the South the benefit of mitigating circumstances, in judging of the rising there. The feeling towards the young soldiers who refused to fire on a crowd in which their own people mingled leans towards indulgence. This is not according to the classical notions of discipline, but is in harmony with the present conditions of military service in France and elsewhere. You may remember how the German Emperor shocked us when a few years ago, in preaching to a body of raw recruits on the duty of absolute obedience, he exhorted them, if commanded, to fire without hesitation on their fathers and mothers. The speech of Deputy Aldy, of the Aude, had a strong effect. He is a worthy man, respected (as he deserves to be) at Narbonne, which sent him to the Chamber, and thoroughly knows the departments that have risen. Clemenceau had been informed, M. Aldy contended, about the riots by police officers and other officials, some of whom acted as poltroons, the Prefect at Perpignan hiding in a cockloft. These officials had resentment to satisfy, and wanted to earn promotion often by misstatements. They saw stratagems and treason where there was none, and overlooked the deep distress of seven years. The foreclosures of mortgages and executions on goods and chattels had in that time been vastly above the average. M. Aldy, who is a tried and proved Republican, denied that old gaol-birds or hooligans had led the rioters, who were mostly decent people beggared by causes often represented but unavailingly to other Chambers and Governments. These "beggars" belonged to every party, but were mostly Republican. La jeunesse de l'action anti-républicaine were denounced to the Prime Minister as forward agitators. Why were none of them arrested?

The Chamber does not want society to be saved by the strong fist, as by Cavaignac in June, 1848, a form of salvation which gave Louis Napoleon his opportunity.

The motto attributed to M. Rouvier to some extent describes the situation: "la France se dissout." So does Great Britain, so does, and visibly and rapidly, the biggest and most closely knit of the great military Empires—Russia. So may, in another generation or two, the United States. We saw last year how the dual kingdom of Scandinavia split in twain. It would take very little to knock over the Empire proclaimed thirty-seven years ago in the Mirrors Gallery at Versailles. Catalonia is almost sure one of these days to secede from Spain, and if so she and the French South may take hands again as in the time of the Counts of Barcelona. The North of Italy is in a state of constant friction and irritation because tied to Naples and its too fluent politicians and lazzaroni. Were there a breakdown of the military monarchies as such, there is no reason why Piedmont, Lombardy, and any other former State of North Italy, should not revert to its old autonomy. MM. Ribot and Clemenceau judge the manifest inclination of the South to fly off from the North with the Catholic mentality. "France une et indivisible" is a phrase minted by Robespierre, who received his education at a Jesuits' school. It had its usefulness when all the great monarchs united against the young French Republic. The close unity the monarchy sought to establish had also its uses when, under the spur of Law and his system, the Regent decided to revive the road-making policy of the Romans. The King's highways are now of minor importance compared to the railroads of great companies, whose hands are so tied by frontiers and the military arrangements connected with them. The study of a railway map of Europe will bring home to you the great hindrance of the frontier to any rational system of international communication. A railway cannot be made nor a telephonic apparatus set up without helping the work of dissolution to which M. Rouvier is said to have alluded. The unification of the human race has for its counterpoise reversion towards particularism and ethnographic distinctions. Bretons, more than they ever did since the Revolution, now want to be Bretons. Provence deifies Mistral for writing fine poems in her dialect and for refusing to enter the Academy. The North of France threatens in turn to hoist the flag of secession if the Chamber sacrifices her great sugar interest to the South. The Félibre movement has become serious because it answers to a wide-spread sentiment. I remember it purely dilettante and led by William Bonaparte Wyse, and Aubenal, an Avignon poet and publisher. The Flemings disliked being linked to the Walloons, who want to fuse with the French Ardennes and, perhaps, Luxemburg. This particularism may turn out to be the stone, hewn out of the mountains without hands, that will shatter the military Empires.

The French Southerns are at the best of times impulsive. The wine glut and dear bread have made them more so. They drink the wine to make up for scanty meals, as the Parisians did through the siege and Commune. Apart from their Home Rule dreams, they are incensed at having helped to rivet the fetters in which they are now held down. This they did in voting for protection some years ago. The North then took them in. At any rate, they now think so. Those vine-growers whom M. Aldy defended are generally the owners of small freeholds, which they cultivate themselves when not working for wages on large vineyards. They are hundreds of thousands. The beetroot growers of the North are scarcely more than hundreds, and are the flying arches that buttress up the Méline structure. They have the long purse, business smartness, and skill in lobby work. Science, in a way, is enlisted on their side, and in combining in trusts they have the strength of the fagot. Their trusts are not patent, because illegal. Sugar manufacturers hit on artificial wine as a set-off against the withdrawal from them of the bonuses for exporting sugar. This wine now ruins the South. It is made with the already squeezed grapes of the wine press. The addition of the rinsings and heel taps of bottles that held fine wines is an improvement, as the vinous particles assimilate the sugar. With the addition of water and tartaric acid you have wine. In a free trade country it would have every right to struggle for existence. In a protectionist country I am not sure that it has. Protection involves a constant resort to expedients that interfere with freedom to buy and sell.

Artificial wine with the Bordeaux or Burgundy taste is constantly served on the tables of vain and pretentious hosts and hostesses who do things on the cheap. This may account for so much mineral water being now drunk at West End dinner parties.

It is often difficult enough to please every one in one's own family circle. But for a writer in a paper like Truth, which is read by people of all classes and nationalities, to please all his readers is an impossibility. For instance, some readers—those with analytical minds—are glad to have even unwelcome facts and opinions placed before them. Others, on the contrary, hate nothing so much as to have some pet prejudice, or notion to which they are used, rubbed against the grain, however inadvertently.

In the latter category I would place a Swedish reader—a lady I assume—who has served me with a remonstrance on account of some lines I wrote about her sovereign. Now nobody has a greater admiration than I profess for the popular, personally eminent, and deservedly beloved King of Sweden, who, against the opinion of his military and not a few of his political advisers, let the Norwegians go their own way rather than wage war against his seceding subjects, whom he called "in a way my children." The head and front of my offence lay in speaking of King Oscar as showy, although in the very same sentence I qualified the epithet, as my pen ran on, with the words "and the most accomplished of monarchs."

Had I been content with writing, not as I had been myself impressed, but as some manufacturer of conventional drivel professed to be, and had called Oscar II. the "Magnificent" or the "Noble," as other European monarchs have been described by historian-laureates, I should, doubtless, have escaped censure. But I prefer admiring King Oscar as a man to worshipping him as a figure-head. I am sorry to have hurt the feelings of the loyal Swede—gentleman or lady—but I am still more sorry—for his or her sake—that what was, after all, a complimentary reference to the monarch should have been misconstrued. The hypersensitiveness I complain of is, after all, a common feeling of the middle classes in monarchical countries in Europe. The result of their widespread dislike of sincerity when crowned heads are in question is that writers who have any respect for their pens are afraid to write about them, except in the flattest terms, during their lifetime, and there would be no interest in post obit articles. I believe that the fear of writing of crowned heads according to one's own impressions has greatly helped to bring them down in the regard of every one who hates the mawkish platitudes that are distilled about Courts and their central figures.

I should have given a quite inadequate idea of King Oscar had I left out the word "showy." He is extremely showy, as were his grandfathers, compatriots of the late MM. de Lesseps, Etienne Arago, and Benjamin Constant, the painter. All Gascons who have much to show are as showy as a well-arranged shop window. The showy Gascon is compared to the close stove, as the blazing fire in an open grate—inspiriting and inspiring. Bernadotte's brother-in-arms, Murat, was a fine example of the power of showiness to inspirit. Gambetta may be cited as another instance of this inspiriting Gascon power. He led France whithersoever he would because he was a showy speaker. I saw King Oscar arrive at Stockholm at a time when that city suffered from the blues owing to a separatist crisis at Christiania. The King's showy qualities, and by no means his serious ones, had a magical effect in chasing the depression from which his good subjects had been suffering.

The remonstrant Swede is disposed to peck at me further for saying that the Trianons of Drottningholm and Haga are without charm. Here, again, personal impression ought to be obeyed in writing. Coming, as I came, from a sunny country, with my eye filled with the great variety for trees and foliage at the Little Trianon, I did not yield to the spell of the Swedish Trianons referred to.

I am very fond of Sweden, and I vastly enjoyed a tour there and in Norway. There is great beauty in many Swedish, as in many Norwegian landscapes. But one unused to high altitudes from infancy must find both countries monotonous in their general features. Monotony is the one great feature in which they resemble each other. The tourist can never in Norway get away from granite cliffs, pine forests, fiords, waterfalls, and harsh effects of Nature, save in the top of the North, where the midnight sun transforms everything. In Sweden one has stretches of perfectly flat country, the beds of dried-up lakes good for wheat and pasturage. Lakes in course of being dried up, but still, vast, deep, clear, are often alive with pleasure steamers. These lakes are very picturesquely bordered with outcrop rocks and boulders, affecting the form of mountains, and planted with pines. The sharp opposition of these lines is curiously picturesque. In the long summer's evenings the immensity of the greenish-blue sky, with every shade of gold-pink violet, is reflected in the immensity of some lake. Vastness answers to vastness, and one becomes intoxicated from sheer admiration. But the foreigner soon gets tired of this, and wants, after a fortnight or so, to get away.

At Drottningholm one has the scenery I have described, Lake Mälar being everywhere visible, with, in the woods, a great admixture of oak. The oaks in the Royal Swedish parks are grand. Grandeur, however, is not synonymous with charm. The Trianon there is almost an eyesore, and disfigures the low, rocky ridge on which it stands. This creation of Queen Ulrika, sister of Frederick the Great, passed in her time for a good copy of "a Chinese village." She had not the French Treasury to draw upon, no accomplished artist to help her; the factions of the Hats and Caps obliged her to work on cheap lines. A cheap architectural fancy is never in its old age attractive. Marie Antoinette squandered without stint on the Petit Trianon, had great artists to second her, and a rich soil for her trees and flowers, with a sunny climate. Nature does not resent, at her fanciful farm, the intrusion of finical conceits, as at the Swedish Trianons.

The Haga Trianon, begun by Gustav III. in the enthusiasm inspired by a visit to Versailles, but prematurely finished, struck me also as dismal and old-fashioned. To be antique is one thing; to be old-fashioned is another. The shabby flimsiness of Gustav's Trianon jarred with the grim majesty of the oaks around. They might have fought for centuries against Northern storms and come nobler and stronger out of each fight. Charm they had not. One might as well have looked for it in them as for the sweetness of Bernini in Michael Angelo.

Charming are those islands that stud the Sound connecting Lake Mälar and the Baltic. They belong to rich families at Stockholm, who come here to spend the summer, and go to great expense to brighten their chalet balconies and pleasure grounds with flowers. I fancied them Isles of the Blest. Very charming, also, are the views from that part of Ulriksdal Slott, where the present Queen of Denmark spent her youth. Her rooms, which are still reserved for her use, overhang a picturesque arm of a lake. The scenery is soft for Sweden, and very varied. The late King revelled in it. So does Queen Sophie. She used to spend, and perhaps still does, the summer at Ulriksdal. The King prefers Drottningholm, which is less confined. He passes, when there, the forenoons of Sunday with the Queen, to the great delight of her ladies, who find his presence stimulating.

A PEER AMONG THE POLITICIANS.

I KNOW, of course, that you think a good deal of TRUTH, naturally enough, but it is only within the last week that I have begun to realise what a frightfully important paper it really is, and what a tremendous effect anything has that one writes in it. It really makes me quite nervous to write anything for you at all now, for fear I shall make some poor devil miserable, because he thinks I mean him when very likely I mean somebody else all the time. I daresay you remember—or if you don't you will easily find it by turning up the back numbers—that a few weeks ago I wrote about one of the big political clubs, and how I paid it a visit on the chance of finding some one conspiring to get up riots in India. Well, the effect that article has had on the members of the club has been quite awful, and I feel no end sick about it, because they are really quite harmless sort of people. But, of course, I had no idea when I wrote it that they would ever guess it was meant for them.

I heard about it from a man I know slightly—he's something in the City, I think; any way, he wanted me to become a director of some wild-cat sort of company that he's connected with, something to do with insuring against borough councillors taking bribes, I think it is, and he's a member of the club in question. He asked me to lunch with him there, and incidentally he began to tell me about the extraordinary changes that have been taking place there during the last week or two, as a result of some tom-fool article that some silly ass had been writing in a low rag called TRUTH. Rather funny that—what? You needn't mind what he said about the paper, by the way, that's only because he was one of the directors, before it burst up, of the Back-Door Hire-Purchase Watch Trading Syndicate that you came down on heavily some time back.

Of course, as soon as he began talking like that I began to want to pay another visit to the club—it is quite near Charing Cross, by the way. I thought it over, and it seemed to me that no one would be likely to spot me as ever having been there before, and even if they did there was no earthly reason why they should connect me with the writer of the article, so I told the Syndicate man I would lunch there with him the next day. Really, it was astonishing the difference in the place, and it really made me feel sick that I should have been the cause of it all. We went into the big smoke-room that I told you about first. It was just as full as it was last time, but you never saw people so changed as the members were. Instead of sitting about anywhere and talking out loud and that sort of thing, they were each of them as far away from anybody else as they could possibly manage; and when anybody came near them they looked at him with a sort of fearful suspicion that was quite amazing. Nearly all of them had Blue-books and were pretending to read them when anybody came near them, and the few words that I did hear spoken above a whisper were all about the Irish Council Bill and the House of Lords Resolution. But perhaps the most surprising thing of all was the waiters. Last time, as I wrote, they were all much too haughty to even think of answering a bell within five minutes, but now, as soon as a member rang, there were sure to be at least half-a-dozen tumbling over each other in their anxiety to take his order. And when the Syndicate man spoke rather sharply to one of them, the poor fellow's eyes filled with tears, and he had to wipe them on his sleeve before he could see where to put his tray down.

The Syndicate man told me that the changes I did see were nothing to those I didn't. He said that the members with German accent—I forget if I told you that when I came last half of them seemed to be Germans—had started an English pronunciation class in the card-room, and that you could see dozens of them at all hours pacing up and down the corridors practising the words they had learned and how to say "that" instead of "zat," and things of that kind. And the men who used to go about in rough tweed suits, with red ties and slouch hats (he said they belonged to some particular party in the House of Commons, but I've forgotten which it was) had all gone in for silk hats and mutton-chop whiskers, so that they looked like bankers or undertakers. And he said, too, that because the writer of that article had described a lot of men as sitting in a big circle discussing the different varieties of whisky, that ever since everybody always sat in long rows, as if they were in an omnibus, and that no one ever discusses the price of anything stronger than dry ginger ale. Then, too, about the nail-scissors that used to be chained to the wall of the place where you wash your hands, it seems that the chain was broken fifteen times in three days after the article was published, so that they had to give up chaining them up, and after that they disappeared altogether the very first day.

If it was only the one article that had upset the people it wasn't written about in this way there mightn't be anything in it, but I hear it's the same with several others. For instance, I wrote one—it struck me as being very good, though I don't know what you thought about it—about real and sham baronets and how much they hated not being peers. The very next day all the bogus baronets in the country held a meeting of indignation, at which a copy of TRUTH was solemnly burned, and they all signed a declaration that there wasn't a word of truth in what I had said, and that the best proof that they didn't care about the peerage was that they might just as easily have called themselves lords instead of baronets, but not one of them had done so. Why, I was even told that, because I had said that the public is fond of the Lords, the Prime Minister had as nearly as possible given up the idea of moving his Resolution at all, and it was only because Lord Robert Cecil—but I suppose it would be scarcely fair to give away a party secret like that.

THE RITZ HOTEL, PICCADILLY, W. — 8090 Gerrard. The Restaurant and Hotel overlook the Green Park. Magnificent suite of Ball and Banqueting Rooms. Under the same Direction as the Carlton Hotel.

Now, I don't know whether it is that my articles are specially brilliant, or whether it is because Truth is great and will prevail—as we used to say at school—but I do think all this throws quite a new light on journalism. I didn't in the least realise before what a serious thing it is to be a journalist—worse than being a clergyman in some ways—because if he makes a mistake it only does harm in the next world, while if you or I, or one of the Daily Mail staff says anything that isn't exactly so, it may upset thousands of people in London itself. I always used to think that journalists, especially young ones—and nearly all the chief papers are run by very young men, I am told, nowadays—took themselves and their work a great deal too seriously, and that it didn't really matter much what they wrote, because nobody ever believed it unless they wanted to. But I quite see now that I was wrong, and that the very youngest reporter who has learned to read his own shorthand notes has more power than the biggest statesman whose words he is taking down—because whatever he makes him say, people will always be sure he did say it. No wonder they get into the habit—the journalists, I mean—of believing that whatever they write must be true, and that if it isn't it ought to be. I think that explains a good deal of what I have never been able to understand about some of the newspapers and the things they publish.

I had meant to write about Ascot this week, and about a plan of mine for catching the man who took the Gold Cup, but Jessie was so much upset at the idea of all those unfortunate politicians being so cut up by what I had written about some other club—I forget if I told you it was quite near Charing Cross, really—that she thought I ought to ease their minds a little. Though, after all, I don't know that the members of a political club need be ashamed if they don't always talk politics, especially those of them who aren't English; and as to the nail-scissors and the waiters, I think they ought to be grateful to me rather than otherwise, especially as I meant quite another place all the time. And so does Jessie.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

"PAINLESS MARRIAGES," dear Lady Betty, is an announcement which raises hopes that every prospective bridegroom will wish may be fulfilled. At the time, in England, a marriage and a "Remnant Sale" invariably attract every woman within reasonable distance of either.

At a recent wedding in London the bewildered bridegroom mistook the register for an hotel visitors' book, and, instead of merely signing the former, wrote "We have had a very pleasant time. I hope to come again soon."

* * * * *

The furnishing craze in this country cannot, surely, reach a further height. The wife of a millionaire, having spent half a million in furnishing her drawing-room, recently asked an expert to express his opinion of the result. "It is beautiful!" he answered, deliberately; "it is exquisite—pure Louis XVI.! But let me entreat of you to remove your husband—he is distressingly Edwardian."

Polished Floors.—"Ronuk," Ltd., are prepared to estimate for the polishing and maintenance of all kinds of floors in Mansions, Hospitals, and Institutions. Write for pamphlet.—Manufacturers of "Ronuk" Polish, "Ronuk," Ltd., Portslade, near Brighton.

One enthusiastic woman surrounds herself with Chippendale guardsmen, slight and dainty, whilst another devotes herself to the collection of "Tallboys"!

* * * * *

The West End Protectionist-Imperialists are in earnest in crying, "Down with Foreign food"; they are continually to be seen putting it down at the fashionable restaurants.

* * * * *

The gold-diggers of Belgravia have been satirised ceaselessly these last thirty years, but the following letter, that has been forwarded for publication, will surprise even the experienced in this direction:—

"Dearest Belinda,—Whilst prospecting in an obscure drawing-room in Bayswater I have discovered a millionaire! Will you join the small syndicate I propose to form to develop him and his family? We should have sufficient capital to hire a furnished house in Grosvenor or Berkeley-square, and to entertain suitably, and, in the circumstances, it would be best for me to assume the office of managing director. The syndicate should be composed of five subscribers of £2,000 apiece. Bridge, bets, gifts, loans, commissions, and City 'tips' should between them yield a return of £100,000 in six months—that is, £20,000 for each of us. I submit the proposal to you before approaching any other friend, for I know you are enterprising and can afford to risk the sum I have mentioned. Let me have a definite answer at once, and, if you decide to subscribe, please let me see you as soon as possible to arrange to whom we shall offer the remaining shares. My millionaire, like all others are at first, is very shrewd in the City and very silly in the West-End—we all have the experience we have paid for!"

* * * * *

A good listener makes a good talker, is a reflection which almost amounts to a new proverb. It is generally said that there are fewer conversationalists in England than there were in the past—a statement which is altogether contrary to the facts; the decay of the stimulating listener is the circumstance that injuriously affects all but the most loud-voiced and irrepressible talkers of the time. The conversationalists of other days devoted themselves to the cultivation of the art; it was their main interest in life. They came amongst others prepared for the exhibition which they proposed to give; they were surrounded by expectant listeners who did not distract them by inattention or by discussing other matters between themselves; and, of course, the excitement caused by the effort and the applause frequently inspired them. The conversationalist of to-day, moreover, has not the importance which his predecessors had, and has not, therefore, the self-confidence they possessed. He comes amongst others somewhat exhausted by his work, with a multitude of more serious interests occupying his attention, is virtually forced to improvise throughout, and is at the mercy of circumstances, for it may be that a financial magnate is present and all are absorbed in what the latter says. It is as much as the conversationalist of the moment can ordinarily achieve to hold the attention of one of his neighbours for five minutes—and even then the latter is continually on the alert to intrude his or her own thoughts however unintelligent they may be. His neighbours have not come to listen as an audience goes to a play, but to improve acquaintances, cultivate new ones, and add to their store of social or political information, or of scandal which may add to their own conversational capital for future use. The brilliant listener it is that is almost extinct, the one who has discrimination, and the endeavour to obtain whose approval is a stimulating influence. Wit perishes in contemporary circumstances, except that which consists mainly of manner—a comical appearance and a loud voice are the chief qualities required to obtain an audience in this direction now. It is the same in literature. "Poster effects" alone arrest the attention, and this is a disadvantage which painting shares with literature. Too many interests spoil the intelligence.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE management of Ascot is singularly skimble-skamble, for there is no meeting in the country at which the programme is so full of palpable and flagrant faults. Money is given lavishly, but without a particle of discrimination, and there are a preposterous number of stakes all on very much the same lines. Horses are engaged over and over again, with the object of picking some race in which the opposition is likely to be weak. There is frequently also a cutting up of stakes by private agreement. "If your horse does not run for the A," says one owner to another, "mine shall be started for that race and yours can go for the B." This is a very pleasant arrangement for the owners concerned, but it is utterly destructive to sport. What is the object of having a couple of big two-year-old races on the same afternoon? If there had been no Biennial on Tuesday the field for the Coventry Stakes would have been much larger, and the race would have been a great deal more interesting. Then the Prince of Wales' Stakes and the Ascot Derby are too much alike, and Tuesday's race would be greatly benefited if Wednesday's disappeared from the programme. There are also the O.M. Biennial and the St. James's Palace Stakes, events of the same class, each run over the same distance. It is the extremity of folly to throw away £2,000 on the Ascot Stakes, which last week brought out a field of eleven horses of very moderate class, while the weight for age races are endowed with such very much smaller sums. There ought to be only three handicaps altogether at Ascot—the Stakes (£1,000 added), the Royal Hunt Cup, and the Wokingham, and the last of them should be endowed with £1,000 instead of only £500. The All Aged Stakes and the King's Stand Plate are one and the same thing, and one or other of them should be given up. It is useless to wade through the absurdities and imbecilities of the Ascot programme, but a drastic reform, of a root and branch character, is most urgently required. The whole affair bears the print of the hoof of the amateur. Ascot ought to be the first meeting in the world for sport, as the funds are enormous, and the receipts, large as they are, might be considerably increased by charging £10 for each ticket issued for the so-called Royal Enclosure. If a readjustment of stakes on practical lines were carried out we would see the crack horses of all ages opposing each other, which would greatly increase the interest of the racing.

I gave a plumper for Frugality for the Coronation Stakes, and she won easily from Laomedia, thereby justifying the opinion which was expressed in TRUTH after Epsom—that she would have won the Oaks if all had gone well with her. The running of Glass Doll and Laomedia confirmed the Oaks form, as the Epsom winner now had 7 lb. the worst of the weights. It was pleasing to see Lord Falmouth's historic colours to the fore in so rich a race. If Frugality had been fit when she ran for the One Thousand she would no doubt have won that race, and the unfortunate accident which she met with at Epsom lost her the Oaks. I expect she will prove herself to be the best filly of the year. It is exceedingly unfortunate that Frugality should have been struck out of the Eclipse Stakes in October, 1905, as there has been such a complete collapse of the entry that she must have stood an excellent chance of winning that race. Her most important engagement is the Park Hill Stakes at Doncaster, where she can meet Witch Elm with 4 lb. the best of the weights.

Baltinglass was a great Newmarket tip for the Ascot Derby, as he was supposed to have come on considerably of late, but Major Loder's run of luck is over for the present, and his colt performed very badly. All Black, with all the best of the weights, won easily at the finish from O'Cullen and Prince of Orange, but there was certainly nothing to boast about in this achievement, and it is at once ludicrous and instructive to remember that a few months ago there were simpletons taking 12 to 1 about this beast for the Derby.

Galvani and My Pet II. were included in the field for the Biennial (O.M.), the favourites being Pure Gem and Altitude. Hymettus won very easily indeed, and the ignominious performance of Galvani was calculated to sicken the doodles who were gulled into backing him for the Derby, while those writers who persistently puffed Major Loder's colt before Epsom must have felt inclined to stick their faces into a holly-bush sooner than encounter any of their justly indignant followers.

Cheshire Cat did not start for the Fernhill Stakes, and, in the absence of the Duke of Devonshire's filly, Quelpart was favourite, but Mr. de Rothschild's colt has not got over his knockings about at Epsom and Hurst Park, and he was never in the race. He needs a rest. Saxham was a strong tip for this race, and he started nearly as good a favourite as Quelpart, but Freeborn won very easily. Saxham, however, compensated his owner for several disappointments by winning the T.Y.C. Biennial on Thursday, after a most exciting finish with Mildew II. and Chimborazo, and he was mainly indebted for his success to the admirable riding of G. Stern. Sagamore was favourite for this race, but Mr. Raphael's colt is quite out of form, and Stron Ard was the Newmarket tip.

A sporting paper announced on Friday that "on Thursday the acme of the Ascot meeting is reached, not only from the racing point of view," and so on. It is really wonderful that any one can print such gibberish. "From the racing point of view" the Cup Day at Ascot was a miserable failure. Four stakes, with £2,100 of added money, brought out only thirteen starters altogether, and the utter lack of interest in three of these races is proved by the fact that they were regarded as such certainties that in the first of them odds of 11 to 2 were betted on the winner, odds of 10 to 1 were asked for in the second, and in the third race the odds rose to 20 to 1. It is, indeed, high time for the Cup Day programme to be rigorously revised.

The two-year-old racing at Ascot was decidedly disappointing, as neither the Coventry Stakes nor the New Stakes discovered a flyer from among the dark lot. On Tuesday, during the luncheon hour, every one was full of the superlative merits of M. Ephrussi's Monitor, and so heavily was the French colt backed that he started for the Coventry Stakes with anything over 2 to 1 freely taken, in a field of eleven. Monitor is a very nice colt, but he ran very badly. However, he got all the worst of the start, and on Friday he compensated his owner for this disappointment by easily winning the Windsor Castle Stakes. Popinjay was favourite, but I fancy Lord Rosebery's filly did not care for the Ascot hill, and she will do better on an easier course. Royal Realm, who was said at Epsom to be better than White Eagle, ran most creditably, considering that he is at present very backward, and he was probably second best. This colt ought not to be hurried in any way, and if his owner is well advised, Royal Realm will be given a rest during the summer, in order that he may have time to develop, and then he could be prepared steadily for the Middle Park Plate. I do not believe for a moment that he has ever been tried to be as smart as White Eagle, but he ought to make a good three-year-old. Prospector, who had made a successful début at Hurst Park on the previous Friday, won very easily indeed from Bracelet and Popinjay. The hollow defeat of Lord Rosebery's filly was disappointing to Newmarket people, who had pronounced him at Epsom to be the highest-tried of their two-year-olds up to the present time. Prospector is a good colt, but in my opinion Royal Realm will be the best animal of this field next year if he is judiciously managed. White Eagle was withdrawn from the Coventry Stakes, in favour of Royal Realm, although he would have had no extra weight to carry for his win at Epsom, and later in the afternoon he cantered away with the Biennial, giving 5 lb. and a very hollow beating to Lord Derby's colt Bonspiel II., who had been well galloped at Newmarket. The Coventry Stakes could not be regarded as a brilliant success, for with 130 entries there were only eleven starters, and in the Biennial a subscription of 123 brought out a field of fourteen. In each case the sweepstakes is £10 each p.p. The Triennial on Wednesday was declared by all clever people to be a good thing for the highly bred Indian Runner, another of Mr. Hall Walker's lot, but he was beaten cleverly by the unfancied Dibs, a colt by Blairfinde, owned by Mr. J. S. Morrison. It is probable that the field for this race was a poor one in point of class. The favourite was said to be the equal of White Eagle, but this is all moonshine. There was a field of sixteen for the New Stakes, which would have been more interesting if White Eagle had started, but he was not engaged in this race. Lapwing had missed his engagement in the Coventry Stakes in order that he might be kept for this race, but in spite of all the laudatory cackling at Newmarket about this colt, he was not backed as if the stable regarded him as a good thing, and he ran very badly, as also did Tsu Shima, whose home performances had been extravagantly exaggerated. The great paddock tip was Mr. Joel's Your Majesty, by Persimmon out of Yours, but he ran very green, and Lapwing got off badly, and then swerved all over the course. Sir Archibald, who won with extreme ease for Mr. Bassett, had carried off a race at the Newmarket Second Spring Meeting, and he was then regarded as a very smart colt.

DIEPPE CASINO. Five hours from London. Unrivalled pleasure centre. Operas, plays, concerts nightly, by leading Parisian artistes. Orchestra of 60. Petits Chevaux, Baccarat, &c.

Last week, when referring to the entry for the Eclipse Stakes, I expressed the opinion that Sancy would win the Rous Memorial Stakes, and Polar Star, who was made favourite, had no chance with Mr. Bass's much-improved horse, who won in a common canter. There were sixty-eight entries for this race, but only three starters. I am glad to hear that Polar Star is to be indulged with a rest until the end of August. He is at present all to pieces, as was apparent when he ran at Epsom, for he was a truly lamentable object there, and it was preposterous to suppose that he could have recovered his form in a fortnight. Sancy and The White Knight are obviously the best four-year-olds in training, and Mr. Bass's horse seems to have an excellent chance of winning the Eclipse Stakes, while the Jockey Club Stakes would also appear likely to fall to him, but for the fact that Beppo will have a considerable advantage in the weights, as he is entitled to a breeding allowance of 12 lb.

There was some heavy gambling on the Triennial between Troutbeck and Slavetrader, and why the latter should have been considered capable of defeating the Duke of Westminster's horse at 12 lb. it is difficult to conjecture. I had regarded the Triennial as being practically a match between Troutbeck and Bridge of Canny, but when it was decided to reserve Lord Derby's horse for the Cup the race seemed a good thing for the St. Leger winner, whose superior class would pull him through, as he can stay well. Troutbeck pulled very hard during the race, which was over directly his jockey let him go up to Slavetrader.

Bezonian was regarded as a real good thing for the Prince of Wales' Stakes, but Lord Rosebery's colt is now rather stale, and he is in great need of a long rest. Qu'appelle, who won easily at the finish for Lord Harewood, can stay well, and the other starters for this race are not distinguished for stamina. The bad running of Galleot is puzzling, for at home he is better than Hymettus, who cleverly defeated a large field for the Biennial on Wednesday. Weathercock again ran badly, but his hopeless defeat did not disappoint the stable so much as the collapse of Baltinglass in the Ascot Derby, a race which he had been confidently expected to win. Slieve Gallion found no difficulty in winning the St. James's Palace Stakes, and his owner was very wise in letting this colt start last week for this race only, although he had several other valuable engagements. Slieve Gallion has an engagement at the Liverpool July Meeting, but I hear that the Two Thousand winner will not be again seen out until the St. Leger. Wool Winder, of course, cantered away with the O.M. Biennial on Thursday, and second to him finished Boulter's Lock, half-brother, by St. Frusquin, to Keystone II. St. Martin's long deferred début took place on Friday in the Triennial, and he was made a hot favourite, but his performance was beneath contempt, as Acclaim gave him 16 lb. and won in a common canter. The brother to Quintessence has very bad legs, and he has evidently given his trainer a lot of trouble.

I recently mentioned Gourd as likely to win a long-distance handicap on soft ground, but added that Lord Derby's mare likes a flat course. Gourd was stopped in the Ascot Stakes by the uphill finish, which was too severe for her. Noctuiform has either lost his excellent New Zealand form, or he will not do his best, for he was unplaced, having started favourite. Torpoint won easily from Feather Bed, to whom he was giving 4 lb., and he had a stone the worst of the weights with Gourd. It was a good performance on Friday when Torpoint gave 7 lb. and an easy beating to the French horse.

Hillsprite was made a "boiling" favourite for the Royal Hunt Cup, but he was hopelessly beaten after going six furlongs, and Lally only just won from Andover, the winner of the handicap two years ago, who had started second favourite. The resurrection of Lally, who so grievously disappointed his friends in last year's Derby, excited much braying, but it was no great achievement to defeat Andover with 9 lb. the best of the weights. Lally cannot stay one inch beyond a mile, as he was stopping fast in the last hundred yards, and if there had been another fifty yards to go he would have been beaten.

The White Knight won the Gold Cup, as I had predicted would be the case long before his Epsom success, and he justified the description of him in Truth as "the best four-year-old in England," for he made hacks of Beppo, Bridge of Canny, and Troutbeck. I had pointed out the blunder of regarding Bridge of Canny as a horse of the same class as The White Knight, and when Querido so easily defeated Lord Derby's horse at Chester it was impossible to estimate the amount of weight he had in hand. Bridge of Canny, however, was greatly fancied by many of the Newmarket people, and he had come on considerably since Chester. Eider was the only one of the three foreign horses which was backed. In the last half mile the race became a match between Eider and The White Knight, and during a ding-dong finish there was some bumping, which provoked vituperative bellowings from the backers of the favourite. The White Knight was only able to make a dead heat of it in the last few strides, but every one who had carefully watched the finish was prepared for an objection, which resulted in Eider being disqualified for boring and bumping. The decision of the Stewards has been severely criticised, but they had no alternative, as it was obvious that The White Knight would have won the race but for Eider's interference, which was no doubt due to the distress of the French horse. The White Knight is a very fine horse, and a real old-fashioned stayer, having, at the same time, a grand turn of speed. He is an immense credit to Desmond, a sire which was recommended to the notice of breeders by Truth many years ago when he first went to the stud. I have not been among those who have only just become admirers of The White Knight, having given him a plumper for the Coronation Cup at Epsom on May 29.

There was a splendid entry for the Hardwicke Stakes, but this race has usually been a failure of late years, and only a moderate field came out, so that odds were betted on Beppo, although he had earned the extreme penalty of 10 lb., and it might reasonably have been assumed that he was suffering from the effects of his race for the Cup. However, he won in a trot from Challacombe, who has done nothing since his very unexpected victory in the St. Leger of 1905.

The Newmarket programme for next week is not brilliant, but the meeting is sure to be a great success from the social point of view, and there will be large fields for all the minor events.

There are forty entries for the July Stakes, which is a handsome subscription, considering that no money is added to this race, and the sweepstake is £50 each,

The Buzzard Golf Ball has a reputation amongst keen golfers Latest and best. Increases your drive by 20 yds., and outlasts any other. 2s. each of Golf professionals and dealers.—Sample for P.O., from F. A. Johnson, 29, Paternoster-row, London.

£30 forfeit. Your Majesty ought to be able to win the July Stakes, and I expect that the easy New T.Y.C. will suit Mr. Joel's colt better than the severe five furlongs at Ascot. Lapwing ought to improve on his New Stakes performance. There are sixty-six acceptances for the Stud Produce Stakes, and Popinjay has a chance of retrieving her reputation. The Exeter Stakes may be won by Araminta, and the Fulbourne Stakes should be a good thing for White Eagle.

The Princess of Wales' Stakes of £6,000 would be a very interesting and important race if it brought out Polymelus, Llangibby, Black Arrow, and Spearmint, but it is now exceedingly doubtful if even one of these horses will be in a condition to start. This race had been looked upon as a certainty for Polymelus, but there has been something wrong with Mr. Joel's horse since he ran at Epsom. If he cannot be got to the post there will be a doleful and ridiculous collapse, as the other animals in the list of acceptances are a deplorable lot of crocks. The Duke of Portland's Wombwell is a very bad horse, and he would scarcely be able to give 16 lb. to the King's hurdle racer, Nulli Secundus, and this pair of wretches ought to be defeated by the Duke of Devonshire's colt by Marco out of Lady Villikins, who will win the race if he is in any sort of form. Every one will be pleased to see the Duke's colours successful in so valuable a race.

STRAINED HEARTS AT HENLEY.

I have received a long letter from Mr Fairbairn, in which he seeks to explain away what he says I plainly suggested, and that is that in 1905 he was trying to stir up discord in Cambridge rowing. If he prefers it, I will say that the consequences of his suggestion, if acted upon, would have necessarily stirred up dissension in University rowing, even though he may fail even now to appreciate the consequences of what he suggested. I will even go so far as to say that he was animated by the highest motives in propounding his policy, and yet I still consider that it was essentially rotten. At the same time, I will admit that considerations of policy almost fall into insignificance in comparison with the advantages to be derived from the Fairbairn style, which he says he did not originate, but revived. When he coached Jesus, his old college, after many years, in 1905, he found his theories differed from those prevalent in many colleges. He says:—

> The main difference was the forward swing. I coached for plenty of time over the finish and the body to come evenly forward with a pendulum-like swing. I objected to the lively recovery, as it was called, stating that lively recovery was false, and owing to it the strained hearts so much in vogue were contracted.

He concludes his epistle with these words: "We have had no strained hearts or illness from the style, and formerly strained hearts, etc., were very much in evidence." I wish he had defined illness, etc. Strained hearts are in all conscience bad enough, but goodness only knows—and Mr. Fairbairn—what other ills oarsmen have in store if they do not adopt his theories. Mr. Fairbairn appears as the Mrs. Eddy of rowing. Adopt my views, old ones revived, he says in effect, and all the woes of oarsmen shall cease. No more hearts, no more boils, no more blains. Strength and vigour and happiness are assured. He tells me the Oxford crew had a lively recovery. I read that the House and other crews from Oxford have the same fault. So have the Eton boys. Mr. Fairbairn says there are two styles in vogue now. The Cambridge colleges have abandoned their evil ways, so has the Cambridge eight. The Leander eight has one or two "lively recoverers," but these latter are shaking down to the other style. Thus do good communications correct bad manners? But do they make for fast times?

It is a blessed comfort to think that Leander are doing the right thing. But I am really distressed about the other men. I feel sure that there are numbers of oarsmen who do not appreciate the advantages of Mr. Fairbairn's theories. It is his duty to be up and stirring. If his naturally modest and retiring nature would permit him, I should advise him to take the opportunity at Henley of really instructing oarsmen in rowing. Let him engage the Town Hall and give a lecture. A paper that thrilled the world with Cambridge's doughty deeds on eggs would certainly rouse the parents of the Empire to the insidious dangers that lurk in any other style of rowing than that revived by Mr. Fairbairn. On the platform he should get support. For he vouches Messrs. Powell and Escombe as being especially good exponents of his style, and Messrs. Muttlebury and Wauchope as supporting it. No more stirring meeting would ever have been held at Henley.

Hearts and other illnesses! Was greater rubbish ever written? Of course, I know that in the May week and in Eights week young men's hearts suffer severely, but their recovery is pretty lively. It is the most abject nonsense to write in this way. Indeed, I have a shrewd suspicion that Mr. Fairbairn has attached the phrase "lively recovery" to a style of rowing that no man of any repute has ever taught any college or university crew. He says that "to be quick with the first part of the forward swing, so as to be slow with the last part is a breach of a mechanical principle." I can only say that neither Muttlebury, Escombe, nor Wauchope, nor Fletcher, nor any other coach of any repute ever taught such nonsense. If this is what Mr. Fairbairn learned from the Jesus men, then these men knew nothing about rowing. Mr. Fairbairn says that his theory is "that the stroke should be rowed well out, and the hands flicked away, whilst the body changed from the back to the forward swing, and then the forward swing should be even as a pendulum." There is not a word there that is not perfectly consistent with what in ordinary phraseology is meant by a lively recovery. This phrase I understand to mean getting the hands away smartly and simultaneously bringing the body steadily to the perpendicular as a part of the swing, the whole swing of the body being even and the getting away of the hands coupled with the swing back of the weight of the oar being utilised to bring the body forward. It is twaddle to say that Cambridge had not a good recovery this year. As a matter of criticism, one could say that their recovery was not so good relatively as their other excellent points of leg drive and so on. But if Mr. Fairbairn means by his theory that the hands ought to be got away before the body comes forward, then he is talking just as much nonsense as the Jesus men, according to his account, talked to him. It is a theory that none of the men he names support, either as coaches or in practice. For if there is one thing more likely to stop the way of the boat than a bucket, it is a hang after the finish of a stroke. It comes to this, then, that Mr. Fairbairn has either revived a style involving a hang at the finish, or else he was teaching something that every capable coach was teaching at the time. That there was any new discovery or any genuine revival was as much a fiction of his imagination as the strained hearts and other illnesses, etc. He had discovered no panacea for human ills. So much for the wonderful revival of Mr. Fairbairn, and now as to the way in which this anti-heart straining system was to be foisted on to the University.

Mr. Fairbairn says Christ's and Corpus asked for Jesus coaches, and the revivalists, as I will call them, made many bumps. Then he says, and I quote his own words:—

> Garbett, who was coaching with me, and I were asked to meet Powell and Sanger, the 1905-1906 'varsity presidents, and discuss the difference in styles. Unfortunately, I was called away, and Garbett told me that Powell and he discussed the advisability of my coaching a trial eight in this style, and so we could get a comparison of styles. On this I wrote Powell, stating that if we wished a test of styles I thought it would be better for me to coach an eight from these three colleges only, as they had adopted this style and the other colleges could go on in the ordinary way with the trial eights, and this eight could race them, and so get a comparison of styles. This is what your correspondent has turned into the idea that I was trying to cause dissension in Cambridge rowing.

I am very sorry he feels so aggrieved. However well-meant his intentions may have been, I can conceive no method more calculated to create dissension and trouble in University rowing. The proposal was absolutely impossible. The President, if he had acceded to it, would have abdicated the position to which he had been elected by the University. His duty was to get the best men for the trial crews out of the whole University. It was impossible for him to consent to a proposal to have three colleges taken out of his jurisdiction. The inevitable consequence would be that the segregation of such important colleges as Jesus, Christ, and Corpus under the tuition of Mr. Fairbairn would be regarded by the University at large as a struggle for supremacy between the two University crews coached on traditional lines, and one selected out of a small group by an old oarsman holding no office and in no wise subject to the jurisdiction of the President. Such a scheme would have been fatal to University rowing. It would inevitably lead to rupture and dissension. If a man has not sense enough to see that these would be the consequences of such an enterprise, I really doubt whether he has intelligence enough to revive, let alone originate, any rowing theory that is worth a rap. A man might just as well try to get up an eight to beat the selected University crew in the Lent Term, propose to take them on over the course at Putney, and, if successful, then he would, I presume, let that eight represent the University. I suppose that such a suggestion would not cause dissension. Mr. Fairbairn was at Jesus in 1884, and I wonder if he recollects what happened at Cambridge in the early part of that year. His scheme, if propounded by an undergraduate, might have been regarded as the wild-cat idea of a youngster, but it must be looked at in a very different light when put forward by a revivalist of mature years. He may at any time propound the same scheme again for some other revival. At present he is probably harmless, as he is quite satisfied that all the Cambridge crews are being coached according to his theory. Never had a revivalist more honour in his own country. He has banished, in little over two years, all the ills that oarsmen meet with. It is a wonderful work which he modestly does not appreciate. If he did, he would not trouble me with the catalogue of successes of crews that have rowed according to his theories. Why worry me, after all this great work, by asking me if I am logical. I am dazzled by his achievements. He is satisfied that all the first three crews rowed in the same style in the May races. I refer him to the Field of June 15. According to that writer, the Jesus crew were at their best two or three weeks before the race. Their characteristic was that they did their work in the middle of the stroke, and that such a style was no good for hard racing. I am not responsible for the Field, whose contributor does not appreciate the value of Mr. Fairbairn. He has evoked the non-existent to triumph over the non-existent, and he is quite satisfied. There never was a Fairbairn theory, and there never were strained hearts.

A Frenchman has won the open golf championship. The explanation is quite simple. England is a Free Trade country. France is not. And there is a Liberal Government in power. Massey is to be congratulated on a brilliant performance in boisterous weather. For the fifth time, and for the fourth year in succession, Taylor, the winner of three championships, was second, two strokes behind the winner, and three ahead of Tom Vardon and Pulford.

It is now admitted that the South Africans can play cricket. The players have their expenses paid, but, unlike the Australians, they do not make a penny out of the game.

The Jam Sahib of Nawanager must miss his cricket even as his old county misses him. No doubt it will interest many of his old admirers—they will know, of course, that I am referring to the inimitable bat whom they knew as Ranjitsinhji—to learn that he has become an ardent automobilist, so that he can still make runs. Soon after his return to India he scored the maximum number of marks with a Lanchester car in the Delhi-Bombay trials, and he has since won other successes. With an eye to the gaining of further laurels he has just sent to Birmingham an order for two of the largest and most powerful motor-cars of the same well-known manufacturers.

Stephens' Ink writes a clear blue colour which develops into an intense black. It is pleasant to write with and follows the pen ungrudgingly even when much evaporated in the inkstand.

MAMMON.

Demoralised Stock Markets—Prices in Many Cases Nominal—Easy to Buy, but Selling Largely a Matter of Negotiation—Exaggerated Fears that Cannot Last.

THE state of the Stock Markets last week can only be described as deplorable. There was no panic, in the ordinary sense of the word, but the long-drawn-out malady, aptly termed "dry rot," was present in acute form, and those whose business it is to endure the gloomy atmosphere of Throgmorton Street day after day must sometimes ask themselves whether a real panic would not be preferable to these weary months of stagnation and steadily falling prices, with the constant overhanging dread of fresh financial trouble. With most of the panics that have passed into history the period of real trouble has been short and sharp, and, like a thunderstorm, it has had the effect of clearing the air and preparing the way for a fresh buying movement. As things exist at present, the Stock Markets are in a more or less nominal state; if by markets is meant a place where one can buy and sell, then there are really no markets, for it is easy enough just now to buy, but selling is a very different matter. As regards the leading securities, the disposal of what in normal times would be considered a moderate line of stock is often a matter of negotiation, while there are many out-of-the-way securities—I refer more particularly to the Mining Markets—which are practically unsaleable. It is not merely London which is in this demoralised condition; the description applies with equal force to New York and the Continent, the various centres being about equally charged with distrust of each other. I have no desire to overdraw the picture, but am merely trying to convey an idea of the wave of pessimism that for the time being has engulfed the Stock Markets at home and abroad.

That this gloomy feeling is exaggerated, and will therefore pass, hardly needs to be added, and investors in securities possessed of intrinsic merit have no reason to take alarm. Indeed, the knowledge that markets at present are in an artificial state, and that because of the temporary want of equilibrium between supply and demand the quoted prices are not in many cases a reliable test to values, should constitute in itself a warning to refrain from throwing away stocks at this juncture. Whether the revival comes now, or whether things are to get still worse before they finally turn, is a matter impossible to prophesy. The points to keep in mind are that the general financial situation in all vital respects is sound, that there is a complete absence of speculation in stocks, and that prices all round are a long way below what might be called average levels. There has during the past week been trouble in Egypt, a banking house at Alexandria being caught by the recoil that has succeeded the inflation of securities in the land of the Pharaoh. This is a matter, however, that need cause no grave concern. Certain Continental interests are involved by the collapse, but they are apparently well able to bear their losses. The London creditors are unlikely to be badly hit, as houses this side have not made advances without obtaining security.

An exceptionally firm feature during the last few days has been Consols. The rally in the Funds is truly refreshing, and, if allowed to develop, must exercise an important effect upon the Stock Exchange as a whole. There are solid reasons for the upward movement. Mr. Asquith has definitely announced that arrangements have been made whereby any fresh issue, either of Local Loans or Irish Land stock before December 31 next will be avoided. Not only so, but there is to be no issue of Transvaal Guaranteed stock this year, the immediate needs of the new colony being limited to £1,000,000, which will be raised in the form of a short-dated loan. Thus the Consol market is to be allowed a free run for a time, and if Sinking Fund purchases are to be resumed at once, as some authorities declare, they will be permitted to have full effect. The news is especially welcome to the joint stock banks, seeing that they are about to face the question of writing down their holdings of Consols from the figure of 85 at present figuring in the half-yearly balance-sheets. Even as things stand the banks may deem it necessary to write down by 2 per cent., but this is a less formidable cut than seemed likely a short time ago. The leading Foreign Government bonds have stood their ground well, making allowance for the unsettling effect produced by the dissolution of the Russian Duma, the French wine-growers' revolt, and the Egyptian financial troubles. Among South Americans weakness has developed in Peruvian Corporation stocks, as the outcome of the settlement just arrived at between the Corporation and the Government. It is, perhaps, unnecessary to enlarge upon the details of the scheme, which have already been fully published in the financial press, but the judgment passed by the market is that although the terms are doubtless the best that could be obtained, the Corporation has had to concede more than it has been awarded in return. The preference has been sold because it is considered there is no immediate prospect of a larger return on the stock, while, on the other hand, a re-arrangement of capital will probably be necessary in order to provide for the large liability which the Corporation has assumed in carrying on the construction of the railways commenced by the Government.

Home Rails Still Dormant—Unjustified Neglect—The Strong Position of the Trade Lines—Dividend Prospects Satisfactory Despite Dear Coal.

The Home Railway Market has remained in the dormant stage, and the best that can be said about this department is that, thanks to an absence of fresh selling pressure, prices have not given way to any material extent. Recent movements may be gathered from the following table:—

Home Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest.	June 15, 1907.	June 22, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Caledonian 3 p.c. Pref.	80	72¾	70¼	69½	– ¾
Do. Def.	42½	28⅝	26⅝	26	– ⅝
Central London	96½	82½	74	74	—
City and S. London	47½	39	43	45	+2
Furness	69¾	61⅜	60½	58½	–2
Glasgow and South-Western Def.	42⅜	37½	32	32	—
Great Central 1894 Pref.	81⅞	69	59	57	–2
Do. "B"	40⅝	32½	26¼	26½	—
Do. "A"	19½	15½	13½	13½	– ½
Great Eastern	90⅜	79½	71½	70½	–1
Great Northern Pref.	105	98¾	96	95½	– ½
Do. Def.	48¾	39½	38¾	38⅜	– ⅜
Great Western	144	122⅝	122½	121½	–1½
Hull and Barnsley	50	42½	48	47½	– ½
Lancashire and Yorkshire	110½	100	100	99	–1
London and Brighton "A"	130⅝	111½	83½	83½	—
London, Chatham, and Dover	16⅜	13	12½	12⅛	– ⅜
Do. 4½ p.c. Arbitration Pref.	99½	85	76	76	—
Do. do. 2nd Pref.	64½	48	43	42	–1
London and North-Western	163½	147½	142½	141	–1½
London and South-Western Def.	57½	44⅜	46	44½	–1½
Metropolitan Consolidated	89¼	59	42	41	–1
Metropolitan District	37½	18⅜	11½	11½	—
Midland 2½ p.c. Pref.	70⅜	64	65	65	—
Do. Def.	74⅜	62½	60⅜	60½	– ½
North British 3 p.c. Pref.	78½	72⅜	68¼	67½	– ¾
Do. Def.	47½	38⅜	32⅜	31½	– ⅝
North-Eastern Consolidated	147½	134⅜	136¾	135½	–1½
North Staffordshire	105⅜	96¾	96	96	—
South-Eastern "A"	55½	44⅜	34	33½	– ½

It is generally agreed that the stocks of the leading companies have got down to a level at which they are attractive to the speculative investor. Every now and again, too, a few hardy professionals, taking their courage in both hands, go into the market and bid for lines of stock, thinking that the time has come when the public will return to their old love. But the public remain as far away as ever, and House men who have proved themselves over-sanguine are forced to cut their losses. It is all very disappointing, although just now the Home Railway Market is not allowed to nurse its grievance alone, but simply forms one of a group, all uttering the same wail of "nothing doing." Meanwhile, it is reassuring to holders of Railway stocks to know that, speaking generally, the sagging tendency of prices is in no way justified by the actual financial position of the companies. Dear coal admittedly is playing an important part in increasing expenditure, and may cause alterations in the dividends of one or two of the Southern lines, though it is doubtful if the burden will be felt to any serious extent in the first half of the year. The companies, too, are naturally making an effort to minimise as far as possible the effect of the increase, for, despite opposition, it is probable that the proposal to raise haulage rates for coal and other fuel as from July 1 will be carried into effect.

Taking the goods lines in a group by themselves, there can hardly be any question about the maintenance of dividends this year; indeed, there is little doubt that one or two lines, and notably the Great Northern and Hull and Barnsley will be in a position to increase them. Trade in the Midlands and North is still at high-water mark, and what this activity has meant to railroad gross receipts may be gathered from the following table:—

Company.	Receipts (24 weeks).	Increase.	Percentage of Increase.
	£	£	Per Cent.
Great Central	1,831 800	60,800	3 4
Great Northern	2,643,000	45,000	1·7
Great Western	5 623,400	216,200	4 0
Hull and Barnsley	274,100	31,600	12 7
Lancashire and Yorkshire	2,646,400	58,600	2·2
London and North-Western	6,719,000	199,000	3·0
Midland	5,478 800	180,100	3·4
North-Eastern	4,442,300	205,000	4·3

Not only are the companies already strongly entrenched through the continued expansion in receipts, but, foreseeing, no doubt, the likelihood of expenditure being costly in 1907, they carried forward at the close of 1906 record high balances. For instance, the Great Northern carried forward £52,600, an increase of £5,000 as compared with the second half of 1905; the Great Western carried forward £85,800, an increase of £38,800; the North-Western £118,800, an increase of £24,900; Midland £81,600, increase £24,800; and North-Eastern £82,900, increase £33,900. The Great Western, it is true, has to provide the dividend on £2,000,000 more ordinary stock this year (which may take, say, another £100,000), and is working 70 miles more line; but even here there can be scarcely a doubt about the maintenance of the dividend when receipts for less than half the year are up £216,000 (without allowing for under-publication), and when the company began the year with nearly £40,000 more in hand. Assuming then, that dividends in the case of the trade lines will be maintained, it requires no further argument to establish the cheapness of stocks, for on the basis of last year's dividends, the yield to a present purchaser averages fully 4½ per cent. In the case of Hulls the yield is 4¾, with every prospect of an increase, while York Deferred gives 4½ per cent. with also reasonable prospects of increase.

Grand Trunks—Temporary Dulness Due to Option Sales—Mexican Rails—Has the Government made an Offer to Purchase? San Paulos and Coffee Valorisation — Leopoldina Prospects — Slump in Guayaquil and Quito Bonds — The Concession Reported to Have Lapsed.

In the Canadian Railway Market Grand Trunks have given way to a slight extent during the past week. There is still apparently some bankrupt stock on the market that has yet to be absorbed, while at the moment the market is inclined to hang fire in connection with the maturity of call options entered into for the end of the half-year. Doubtless the greater portion of the stock accumulated against these options, and not required, has been sold already, but until jobbers are sure that the liquidation is complete they are naturally not going to encourage higher prices. However, this weight upon values is a purely temporary matter, and with traffic returns continuing to shape so splendidly, I am disposed to look for an early revival in Trunk junior securities. The investor who wishes to take an interest in this market ought, therefore, not to delay buying too long. Trunk Thirds are indisputably, in my opinion, the pick of the basket, and, barring accidents, I see no reason why they should not stand 10 points higher before the year is out. Canadian Pacifics have been firmly maintained during the week, the market being helped by cables from Winnipeg that ideal conditions now prevail for the crops. The volume of business, however, was too small to materially affect the quotation.

How to Operate in Stocks Successfully.—See Halford's Adviser (post free).—Palmerston House, London, E.C. Established 1869. Telegrams: "Monitor, London."

In the Foreign Railway group the bargain-hunter is still afforded a wide choice of selection, though he does not appear yet to have taken much advantge of his opportunities, as the following table indicates:—

Colonial and Foreign Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest	June 15, 1907.	June 22, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Canadian Pacific	208	161⅞	172⅜	171	-1⅜
Grand Trunk	29 15/16	25 1/16	28⅛	27 3/16	- 15/16
Do. 4 p.c. Guaranteed	105½	101½	100½	100½	—
Do. 5 p.c. First Pref.	123½	114⅜	118	118	—
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	115	105⅜	109	109	—
Do. 4 p.c. Third Do.	70½	60 15/16	70½	69½	- ⅜
Mexican	50⅜	22½	43½	41	-2½
Do. 8 p.c. First Pref.	144⅜	118⅜	134	132½	-1½
Do. 6 p.c. Second Pref.	93⅜	49½	86½	85	-1½
Interoceanic of Mex. 7 p.c. Pref.	11 15/16	0	10⅞	10⅜	- ½
Do. 7 p.c. "B" Debs.	124	109	115⅜	116½	+ ⅜
Mexican Central 4 p.c.	90½	78½	83	84	+1
Do. First Incomes	30	18	20⅜	20½	—
Do. Securities "A" bearer	95	88 1/16	90	90	—
Do. Do. "B" Do.	81½	66½	77	78	+1
Nat. of Mexico 4 p.c. First Pref.	61⅛	37½	49⅜	50	+ ½
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	31⅜	19½	21	20	-1
Bengal and North Western	149½	144	148	148	—
Madras 5 p.c.	127½	120½	112xd	112xd	—
Antofagasta Def.	180½	162	137	134	-3
Nitrate Rails	16⅜	14½	12⅜	12¾	+ ⅜
Argentine Great Western	130½	111	103½	108½	—
Do. North-Eastern Debs.	83½	64½	72½	72¼	- ¼
Buenos Ayres and Pacific	136½	120	111⅞	112¼	- ¼
Do. and Rosario	120⅞	111	98⅜	97⅜	- 1
Do. Great Southern	145	122⅜	120½	119½	- 1
Do. Western	138½	123½	119½	119½	—
East Argentine	100	87	114½xd	114½xd	—
Cordoba Cen. (C.N.S.) Income Debs.	75½	63⅜	64½	63½	-1
Cordoba and Rosario First Pref.	108⅜	85	85½	85½	—
Entre Rios First Pref	98	85	90½	90½	—
Great Western of Brazil	16 1/16	12½	10½	10⅝	- ⅛
Leopoldina	86½	69½	70½	70	- ½
San Paulo	214⅜	199½	208½	201	-7½
Central Uruguay	92½	82	88	86½	-1½
Costa Rica	29 15/16	25	28	27	-1
Cartagena (Colombia) Debs.	80½	78	70	70	—
Colombian Nat. Second Debs	68½	76½	69	69	—
Colombian Northern 5 p.c. Debs.	81½	76½	79	79	—
Manila 6 p.c. Debs.	126	112	109	109	—
Guayaquil and Quito 6 p.c. Bonds	93½	55	39½	35	-4½
Cuban Central	7 1/16	5½	5⅝	5½	—
United of Havana	103	105⅜	93	92	—1
Western of Havana	15 3/16	12½	12	11⅞	- ⅛
Mashonaland Debs (2nd issue)	94⅜	87½	87½	87½	—
Rhodesia 4 p.c. Debs.	8 ⅜	76	71½	71½	—
Ottoman (Smyrna to Aidin)	23⅞	19¼	20¼	20½	+ ¼

It was said that the small investor had been laying hold of Mexican Railway First Preference, which shows his wisdom. So far as last week is concerned, the effect of the buying was obliterated by the liquidation of larger lines, but when a preference stock can be bought to yield nearly 6 per cent. with a growing margin behind it, it looks good enough to buy and lock away. There has been a rumour in the City that a provisional offer has already been made on behalf of the Mexican Government to buy up the old Mexican Railway. I am not in a position to give any details, although, seeing that the various stocks have recently remained so limp, it does not look as if the offer (presuming such to have been made) was considered good enough to be seriously entertained by the company. In any negotiations of the kind the difficulty will no doubt centre around the ordinary, because of the widely different views that are held as to the value of this stock.

Argentine Rails have been in a state of quiescence, the generous returns offered upon the stocks of the best companies failing to tempt the public. San Paulos among Brazilian Rails have been dull, in connection with the reported breakdown of the coffee valorisation scheme attempted by the State Governments, and Leopoldinas have hung fire sympathetically. The latter stock, as I pointed out when dealing with the company's outlook a month ago, presents strong attractions to the speculative investor. Leopoldinas got 4 per cent for 1906, and would have received 5 per cent. had it not been for the cost of repairing damage done by floods, which, directly and indirectly, cost £55,000. In other words, 5 per cent. should be paid in respect of 1907, without any addition to ordinary net receipts. But as a matter of fact, the company is likely to add considerably to its revenues this year, seeing that already since January 1 its gross receipts amount to £424,000, an increase of £114,000 as compared with the corresponding period of 1906. Leopoldina ordinary can now be bought at about 70, and I find it hard to believe that the absence of a rise is due to anything more than market apathy. There has been a fresh fall in the bonds of the Guayaquil and Quito Railway, which is not surprising, in view of the report that the company has lost its concession, and that the line has been seized by the Government. It is true that, according to the terms of the issue, the Government of Ecuador made itself liable for the bonds in the event of non-completion of the line or forfeiture of the concession, but the question is, what is the credit of the Government of Ecuador worth? The market, at any rate, is not at all sanguine about the due payment of the July coupon.

YANKEES QUIET BUT COMPARATIVELY STEADY—THE READING DIVIDEND—THE MONETARY SITUATION—NEW YORK STILL A HEAVY GOLD EXPORTER.

The most noticeable feature about the American Railroad market last week was the smallness of the daily turnover of sales in Wall Street. On Monday the number of shares dealt in was 160,000, which established a new low record for a full session this year. So far as London is concerned it was a case of virtual stagnation, the market on several occasions making scarcely a pretence of opening until an hour after the usual time for commencing. The movements in prices corresponded with the state of business, as the following table shows:—

Americans.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	June 15, 1907.	June 22, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Atchison	114½	89	89⅜	89½	- ½
Do. 5 per Cent. Pref.	109½	101	96	96	—
Baltimore and Ohio	129⅛	109 5/16	95½	95½	+ ½
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	101½	93⅜	89	89	—
Chesapeake and Ohio	68⅝	54	34½	33½	-1
Chicago, Milwaukee	204½	152½	129	128½	- ½
Denver and Rio Grande	52½	38⅜	25½	25½	- ¼
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	93⅞	85⅞	73½	73½	—
Erie	52⅛	40	22⅝	22¼	- ⅜
Do. 4 p.c. First Pref.	85½	77	58	57½	- ½
Do. 4 p.c. Second Pref.	77	65⅜	38	37½	- ½
Illinois Central	188⅝	171	140	140	--
Louisville	160⅜	143⅞	114	113½	- ½
Missouri, Kansas	45⅜	31 7/16	32⅜	32⅜	- ⅜
New York Central	159½	130⅜	115	113½	-1½
N. Y. Ontario and Western	57 5/16	45½	35⅜	35½	- ½
Norfolk and Western	100⅞	87⅛	75½	74½	-1
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	96½	91½	86	86	—
Northern Pacific	235	190½	126½	125½	-1
Pennsylvania ($50)	75⅜	63¾	61½	61	- ½
Reading ($50)	85⅜	59 3/16	51	51½	+ ⅛
Southern	43⅞	33	18½	18	- ½
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	105	97	61½	62	+ ⅜
Southern Pacific	99 9/16	64⅜	75½	75⅞	+ ⅜
Union Pacific	203	144⅝	135½	135	- ½
U.S. Steel	52½	33¼	33¼	32⅜	- ⅜
Do. 7 p.c. Pref.	117	102⅜	100	99¾	- ¼

Chesapeakes were affected by the understanding that the board contemplates placing $30,000,000 of 5 per cent. short term notes for the purpose of eliminating the existing floating debt, the action to be the prelude to an eventual issue of bonds. Rumours that the New York Central and Rock Island were considering issues of a similar kind also had their reflection in the prices of the stocks of those companies. A large proportion of what speculative interest was abroad centred around Readings, in connection with the rumour of a forthcoming increase in the dividend. The expectation was that the Central of Jersey would raise its dividend from 8 per cent. to a basis of 10 per cent., which would in turn justify the Reading in announcing an increased rate—that company owning more than 50 per cent. of Jersey Central issued stock. In both instances, however, the estimates of the "bulls" were at fault, the dividends remaining unchanged. The matter has directed renewed attention to the price of Reading Common. At one time last year these shares (of $50 denomination) soared as high as 85⅜, and at the beginning of the present year they stood at 72⅜; the dividend was only 4 per cent., but the optimists excused such a sky-scraping price on the ground that the company was likely to announce a plan for separating its railroad from its mineral property, and that this proposed melon-cutting would give to the stockholders a handsome bonus. At the present time the market is paying little heed to "bull" talk of this kind, there being too many securities giving unusually high returns without the need for troubling over bonuses that may or may not become available. Even allowing for the fall that has occurred in Readings—from 85 to about 50—the stock yields no more than 4 per cent., and with the powerful searchlight that is being turned on security prices in Wall Street it is doubtful if the stock can be maintained at the existing level, when other Americans are being offered on a yield basis (that is, of course, taking the 1906 dividends as a criterion) of 6 to 8 per cent.

HOME RAILS.—Options granted in all Home Railway securities at low rates for one, two, and three months. Treatise on Options and list of rates free on mentioning this paper to the Secretary, LONDON AND PARIS EXCHANGE, LTD., Bankers, Basildon House, Moorgate-street, London, E.C.

A batch of satisfactory traffic returns and revenue statements have played their part in keeping Americans comparatively steady during the past week. But all the same, the attempts made by powerful insiders to manipulate values to higher levels have failed, and it seems now to be recognised by the "bull" party itself that there are at present too many unfavourable and uncertain features in the situation to permit of speculation for the rise in stocks meeting with any real success. The bond market, which should furnish the index to the state of the stock market, remains in a very unsatisfactory condition, as I pointed out a week ago. Further, the monetary position is by no means assured. During the week Wall Street has had to face further gold exports to Europe to a total of $5,000,000 (the total following upon the shipment of $12,400,000 in the weeks immediately preceding, and this movement has, of course, made serious inroads upon the reserves of the Associated Banks, at a time when money is in extra demand in connection with preparations for the usual July dividend payments. So far loan rates in New York have not been advanced very seriously, largely because stock speculation is almost a dead letter. But the situation as regards money would be speedily altered were speculation to revive, and that seems one of the best reasons to urge at the moment for expecting no revival.

Recovery in Kaffirs Followed by Depression Caused by Fresh Liquidation and General Botha's Statement: "The Last Chinaman Must Go"—The Labour Outlook—A Crop of Rand Dividends.

The past week was rather an eventful one in the history of the Kaffir Market. Business has been pretty brisk in the shares which are the first to reflect any change in market sentiment, and some pretty wide fluctuations in quotations have been witnessed. As a result of liquidation coming on the top of General Botha's announcement that the Chinese are to be repatriated, the market was in a very gloomy condition at the beginning of the past week, but subsequently the feeling became a little more cheerful, encouragement being derived from the confidence displayed by the Transvaal Minister of Lands that additional native labour would be forthcoming in sufficient quantity to take the place of the Chinese due to leave by the end of the current year. He quoted statistics in support of his contention that a large number of Portuguese, Basutoland, and Transkeian natives who had formerly worked on the mines were not now employed, but were clearly available. In addition to this factor the market was stimulated to some extent by the crop of Rand dividends declared in respect of the first half of the current year, several of which are at a larger rate than those announced this time last year. But the recovery in Kaffir prices, brought about under the influence of the better feeling engendered by factors referred to, was not long maintained. The tendency became gloomy again on the publication in Friday's papers of General Botha's further speech, in which he emphatically asserted that "the last Chinaman must go; there will be no peace until then," and prices further receded in consequence of a renewal of liquidation on account of Paris. The following table shows how the leading shares have fared on the week:—

Share.	June 15, 1907.	June 22, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Anglo-French	1 3/32	1 1/32	– 1/32
Apex	2 3/16	2 7/16	– 1/16
Consolidated Gold Fields	3 1/16	3 1/16	– 1/32
East Rand Proprietary	3 3/32	3 1/32	– 1/16
Geduld	1 7/8	1 3/4	– 1/16
General Mining and Finance	1 1/8	1 1/8	—
Goerz and Co.	1/8	1/8	—
Joh. Consolidated Investment	1 1/8	1	– 1/8
New Modderfontein	5 1/16	4 3/4	– 5/16
Randfontein Estates	1 1/2	1 1/2	– 1/16
Rand Mines	5 3/8	5 1/4	– 1/8
S. A. Gold Trust	2 1/16	1 15/16	– 1/8

It is, of course, difficult to reconcile General Botha's latest statements on the Chinese labour question with those he made immediately after his election and subsequently during his stay in this country. It will be remembered that he repeatedly stated that the Government would use its best endeavours to make the mining industry a success, and on one occasion he added, "because I know the prosperity and progress and the welfare not only of the Transvaal, but of the whole of South Africa, are materially dependent upon the development of that industry." He gave the further assurance that they would do nothing in regard to the labour question without having instituted a drastic inquiry. Yet it now appears that General Botha has made up his mind that all the Chinese must leave the Rand, although, as far as I am aware, none of the Commissions appointed to investigate the labour problem has issued its report, and it is not even certain that the places of the coolies, whose contracts are due to expire by the end of the year—some 16,000 of the total of 50,000—can be filled by natives. There is an impression that the Transvaal Premier, who, according to Reuter's cable, "spoke with vehemence throughout his speech," was stung into making the emphatic assertion that all the Chinese must go by the charges of barter and bargain brought against the Government, but if we have now got at what he really intends shall be done, the allegations may, perhaps, be said to have served a useful purpose. At the same time, it is very difficult to conceive of the Boers doing anything which would seriously interfere with the progress of the mining industry, in view of the fact that they would be acting against their own interests. There is an idea in market circles that General Botha has something up his sleeve in the form of a scheme for getting a large and more regular supply of natives for the mines. In this connection it is interesting to note that a cable received from Johannesburg a few days ago reports that "twenty trusted Boer commandants with large native experience, and for years in closest touch with the various tribes, are now arranging with the chiefs on behalf of the Government for regular supplies of men to the mines."

The current number of the Statist contains an interesting chart showing the movement monthly over an extended period in the supply of native and Chinese labour for the Rand Mines. It appears that in the period from the beginning of 1904 to the present time high-water mark in respect of the number of natives available was reached in April, 1905, when the total was between 95,000 and 100,000. After the following month there was an almost persistent falling off, until in October, 1906, the number employed was reduced to nearly 75,000. Then a steady improvement set in up to April last, when over 90,000 were available. In the case of Chinese labour, the first supply of which reached the Rand in June, 1904, the number available steadily increased until it reached about 55,000 in September last. Since then the return of the sick and undesirables has reduced the total to a small extent, but there are still over 50,000 coolies on the Rand. If the anticipations of the Government are confirmed there will be an upward movement in the native figures to set off against a certain downward movement in those of the Chinese.

As regards the position of holders of Kaffir shares, I can only repeat what I said last week—namely, that those who have taken up shares in the producing mines should not be frightened into realising, as in the event of a shortage of labour, the supply would probably be concentrated on those properties. Moreover, it should be remembered that there are some thirty mines on the Rand which do not employ Chinese and will not be directly affected by the repatriation order, while in the case of a number of those which have coolie labour there will not be an early exodus.

"Finance."—A concise weekly record of markets and prices, published by the Central Stock Exchange, Ltd. (Established 1893), 66, Cannon-street, London, E.C. Post free for six months to applicants mentioning this paper.

Subjoined is a list of the Kaffir dividends that have been declared recently, and to which reference is made above. On the whole, the showing must be considered satisfactory and to promise well for the future, providing the labour supply be not materially depleted:—

Company.	Dividend just declared. Per share. s. d.	Amount declared a year ago. Per share. s. d.
City and Suburban	4 0	5 0
Crown Deep	10 0	8 0
Ferreira	30 0	30 0
Geldenhuis Deep	3 0	4 0
Geldenhuis Estate	8 0	5 0
Knights Deep	1 0	1 0
Langlaagte Estate	2 0	2 0
May Consolidated	4 6	4 6
Meyer and Charlton	10 0	6 0
New Heriot	3 0	3 0
New Modderfontein	3 0	—
Nigel	3 0	3 0
Rand Mines	3 0	3 0
Robinson Central Deep	7 6	7 0
Robinson Deep	3 6	3 6
Robinson Gold	10 0	9 0
Rose Deep	2 6	2 0
Simmer and Jack	1 0	1 0
Van Ryn	4 0	2 0
Village Main Reef	4 0	4 0

The Rand Mines distribution a year ago was for a period of twelve months, so that the amount now announced, being for a half-year, is at the same rate. The New Modderfontein only joined the list of dividend-payers last December, the amount then declared being 4s. per share. The City and Suburban and Geldenhuis Deep declare smaller dividends this time than a year ago; but, on the other hand, the Meyer and Charlton proposes to distribute a bonus of 4s. per share in addition to its dividend, and smaller increases are shown by the Crown Deep, Robinson Central Deep, Robinson Gold, Rose Deep, and Van Ryn.

DIAMOND SHARES ACTIVE—FORCED LIQUIDATION CHIEFLY RESPONSIBLE FOR THE RECENT DECLINE IN DE BEERS AND JAGERS—DE BEERS DIVIDEND—THE HEAVY FALL IN PREMIERS AND THE NEWS OF THE PASSING OF THE DIVIDEND.

Activity has continued to characterise the market in the principal Diamond shares, the general trend of which has been in the downward direction of late. With realisations in progress in the general markets on account of Paris it was hardly to be expected that De Beers, a prime favourite of speculators on the other side of the Channel, would escape the depression. As regards the extent of the decline it may be pointed out that the latest price shown in the table below is practically the lowest of the current year, and compares with the high record of over 30 touched during the last six months:—

Share.	June 15, 1907.	June 22, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
De Beers Pref. (£2 10s.)	17¼	17¼	—
" " Def. (£2 10s.)	23½	23 1/16	− 1/16
Jagersfontein Pref.	3¾	4	+ ¼
" Def.	7¾	6¾	− ¾
New Vaal River	3½	2¾	− ¾
Premier (Transvaal) Pref. (5s.)	7⅞	7⅞	—
" " Def. (2s. 6d.)	9½	9¼	− ¼

After the carry-over on Monday, however, De Beers had a smart recovery to nearly 24, and recoveries were also experienced by Jagersfontein and Premiers. While the immediate outlook for the Diamond shares, in common with other South Africans, is very uncertain, I think that those in a position to pay outright for purchases made might easily do worse than pick up a few De Beers Deferred about the current level. The half-yearly dividend of 17s. 6d. per share brings the return for 1906-7 up to 35s., and the yield on the shares at the current price works out at over 7 per cent. per annum. In the case of Jagersfontein the recent weakness is understood to have been due to the forced liquidation of a London account, while the depression was accentuated by a rumour that the mine was flooded. No confirmation has come to hand of this story; on the other hand, the fact that on the drop in the quotation support was promptly forthcoming from an influential quarter is regarded as a practical denial of the statement. Although the company is apparently to be made to pay the Orange River Colony a tax on its profits, the shares seem worthy of attention at the present much-reduced price, in view of the expected increase in earnings during the current year.

Premiers have been still lower than the above table shows, having touched 9 at the beginning of the past week. This figure compares with the quotation of 11½ ruling at the settlement a fortnight ago, and it is worthy of note that the official announcement of the passing of the dividend on the deferred shares was promptly followed by a smart rally in the shares. Presumably this was the result of "bear" repurchasing, and in the event of this assumption being correct the question arises: Who had foreknowledge of the board's intention to pass the dividend? In explanation of the persistent decline in the shares, the week before last it was rumoured in the market that instead of making a distribution the profits would be applied to the purchase of additional machinery, but the official cable was not published for some days after the rumour was first circulated, and in the meantime the price of the shares steadily receded. It is stated by the directors that the results to the end of this month "should have allowed a distribution to the deferred shareholders of 400 per cent."—that is, 10s. per share—"but the board of directors consider it the sounder policy in the meantime to defer the declaration and thus strengthen the financial position of the company to the extent of the dividend." Why it is really necessary to withhold the profits the directors do not explain, and it seems to me that shareholders have ground for complaint on this score, to say nothing of the fact that the whole of the serious decline in the market value of their holding occurred before the issue of any official information at all. As there are 320,000 deferred shares in the Premier Company the fall in the price of 2½ points represented a depreciation in market value of over three-quarters of a million sterling. Besides having had to face this, shareholders have to do without the dividend they had been expecting, and are given only a vague statement by way of explanation. If I were a shareholder I should not be content to "take it lying down."

RHODESIA, LIMITED, REPORT—POOR RESULTS AND PROSPECTS—GENERAL CONDITIONS IN RHODESIA IMPROVING, BUT NATIVE LABOUR SUPPLY FOR THE MINES DECREASING.

The directors of Rhodesia, Limited, which was reconstructed at the end of 1905, have just issued their report covering the period to the end of December last. The board has evidently gone into the company's affairs pretty thoroughly, but so far has not been able to place the business on a successful basis. The profit and loss account shows a debit balance of £15,523, and in this connection the directors point out that "it was hardly to be expected that the reconstructed company, taking over as it did the assets, liabilities, and organisation of the old company, whose profit and loss accounts for 1903, 1904, and 1905 showed debit balances averaging at least £15,000 a year, would be able in such times as have prevailed to show a balance to credit of profit and loss account." It has been possible to reduce administration expenses to some extent, "and measures are still being enforced by which much will be effected this year towards the same end," but the best prospect the directors are in a position to hold out to shareholders in respect of the current year is that the income and expenditure may be made to balance.

In regard to Rhodesian prospects in general, a more cheerful note is struck, however. As the table of monthly returns published last week showed, the gold output production of the country is increasing, the May return being a record, and the report now under review points out that there are not wanting evidences that trade in Rhodesia is reviving. The present season's crops promise to be abundant, "and agricultural prosperity must tend to sound and solid commercial improvement throughout the country." This information is confirmed by Sir William Milton, the Administrator of Southern Rhodesia, who has just arrived in this country. Speaking of the mining industry, this authority remarked that there was more real prosperity now than probably during any previous period, this being due to the success of small workers, "who in the great majority of cases are making very satisfactory profits." But it would appear that agricultural prosperity may tend to restrict the operations of the mining companies, for at the meeting of the Chamber of Mines at Buluwayo last week the chairman said the number of natives seeking work was decreasing, and a further shortage was expected, "as the agricultural conditions were improving to such an extent that eventually it would be unnecessary for the natives to work."

Recovery in the Copper Group Stopped by a Renewal of Liquidation—The Outlook for the Metal—El Oro Position and Dividend Yield.

The price of copper and the quotations of the principal copper shares have continued to fluctuate pretty widely, with a tendency, for the most part, in the downward direction, as the following table shows:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	June 15, 1907.	June 22, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Abosso	1⅝	1 7/16	1 7/16	1½	+ 1/16
Ashanti Goldfields (4/-)	17/9	7/9	14/-	14/-	—
Gold Coast Amalgamated	3⅜	1½	1 15/16	1 15/16	- 1/16
Taquah and Abosso	2⅜	1 1/16	2 1/16	2 1/16	—
Wassau	1⅜	½	¾	11/16	- 1/16
Egyptian Mines and Exploration	10/6	1/3	1/9	1/-	-9d.
Nile Valley	13/-	3/-	1/-	1/-	—
Camp Bird	33/6	22/-	21/6	20/6	-1/-
Esperanza	5 9/16	2½	1½	1 15/16	+ 1/16
Le Roi (£5)	2	1	1 7/16	1 7/16	—
British Broken Hill	58/-	30/7½	40/6	38/9	-1/9
Broken Hill Proprietary (8/-)	5¾	3 1/16	4 7/16	4 1/16	- 5/16
Zinc Corporation	2⅛	1 1/16	13/-	12/-	- 1/-
Anaconda Copper ($25)	15⅜	11⅝	11½	10 5/8	- 7/16
Arizona (Pref. Ord. 5/-)	3 1/2	3	63/-	62/6	-6d.
Great Cobar (£5)	9 1/16	4⅜	8½	8½	- ½
Mount Lyell	52/6	33/-	44/-	41/6	-2/6
Mount Morgan	4⅜	3½	4½	4½	—
Rio Tinto (£5)	91⅛	63⅜	83½	80½	-2½
Dolcoath Tin	29/6	10/-	24/-	23/6	-6d.
Pusing Lama Tin	3 5/16	¾	2½	2 1/16	- 1/16
Balaghat	36/-	22/6	15/6	14/6	-1/-
Champion Reef (2/6)	30/-	9/6	10/3	10/-	-3d.
Mysore (10/-)	7½	5½	5 11/16	5 11/16	—
Siberian Mines	2⅛	1 1/16	1 1/16	1	- 1/16
Siberian Proprietary	16⅜	3½	3	2¾	- ¼
Waihi	9 13/16	6 5/16	8½	8 5/16	- 3/16

A recovery set in at one time during the past week, but it was nipped in the bud by a renewal of liquidation. In respect of some of the shares the selling has been particularly heavy, but it was only to be expected, having regard to the speculative activity which has characterised this group for some time past that it should participate largely in any general depression such as the Stock Exchange has recently been, and is still, experiencing. As regards the outlook for the metal, for the fall in which the depression on the Stock Exchange is held partly responsible, the view is taken that while the price may further decline to a moderate extent, it is not to be expected that it will fall so low as to seriously affect the profits of the companies producing the commodity in question, and those holding sound shares of the class are advised not to be frightened into throwing them on the market at this juncture.

The shares of the El Oro Mining and Railway Company have been in demand during the past week, the declaration of a dividend of 1s. 6d. per share having served to attract attention to them. This distribution is for a half-year, and on this basis the yield per annum on the current market price works out at nearly 11½ per cent. The scrip appears a promising speculative lock-up. As regards the mine, an official circular just issued shows that important developments have taken place at the 1,000-ft. level during the past half-year, and in other portions of the property results are stated to have been of a very satisfactory character. In respect of the railway it is announced that the extension of the line into the Suchitepec timber lands will be completed by the end of next month, and a subsidiary company is now being formed for the purpose of operating these timber lands as a commercial company. In this new company the El Oro Mining and Railway Company holds three-fifths free interest for the expenditure which it has already incurred in obtaining the concession and building the railway thereto.

In consequence of pressure on my space I am compelled to hold over the concluding portion of the article, commenced in last week's issue, on the mines of the Broken Hill Field.

Lornie of Kirkcaldy.

An article with the above heading appeared in these columns on October 30, 1879. John Lornie, of Kirkcaldy, was at that time sending out circulars recommending a purchase of some more or less worthless American railroad bonds, and Truth pointed out that his gains from the business he was carrying on must come out of the pockets of foolish and ignorant dupes. Whatever else he may be, John Lornie is certainly a good stayer. Here, in June, 1907, he is still pursuing a similar game. In his recent circulars he represents that nowadays he writes only to "old correspondents," but the copies before me were addressed to strangers who had never before heard of the man. "As you are an old correspondent"—though you are nothing of the kind—he encloses with the circular another printed slip embellished with a portrait of himself; and on one such slip, directed to a lady whom he had previously pestered with his unsolicited advice, he has written:—

> If you do not care to invest much you could at least send a few hundreds when I offer to take all risk and keep you absolutely safe.—J. L.

Pretty cool, that. But the lady sagaciously noted that while Mr. Lornie would have the handling of the few hundreds, she would have only his word for it that the money would be absolutely safe. The security did not seem good enough, and so, instead of forwarding the cash to Kirkcaldy, she sent on the circulars to Carteret-street.

The Canadian Syndicate as Share Pushers.

I have accumulated quite a collection of printed cards emanating from the Canadian Syndicate, Limited, 550-551, Salisbury House, E.C., and having reference to the shares of the Canada Consolidated Cobalt Company, Limited. They began to reach me at the beginning of this month, when numbers of people who had never heard of the Syndicate were surprised by the receipt of a postcard informing them that the shares of the company, "on which you have an option at 22s. 6d., good until June 4," were sold on Mav 30 for special settlement at 24s. 6d. A comment on this in the Financial News elicited a letter from the secretary of the Syndicate to the effect that "owing to a mistake of the people who did the addressing," the postcards had been sent to persons for whom they were not intended, but that by way of an amende honorable the Syndicate had granted a small option to these persons, thus putting them on a level with those already possessing the option, for whom the postcards were really intended. Apparently this privilege was not sufficiently appreciated—at any rate on June 12 the Syndicate distributed another batch of cards (in envelopes this time) notifying the recipients that they had an option on the shares at 22s. 6d., "good until June 15," which could, however, be extended till June 18 at 24s. 6d. per share. But it would seem that even then all the shares were not snapped up, for on June 18 yet another card went out to individuals privileged to acquire the shares at 24s. 6d. until June 21.

(Continued on page 1601.)

• TRUTH •

STOCK EXCHANGE SUPPLEMENT.

No. 1,591. WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26, 1907.

THE SORROWS OF THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

THE Stock Exchange appears to have become a prey to moping melancholy. Everywhere one hears and reads the same lamentations over the aloofness of the public and the slackness of business, the same dismal stories of dwindling profits and the miserable straits to which once prosperous men have lately been reduced. Not a few affirm that they are now making no money at all, but simply living—and living simply—on their capital. Doubtless there is a good deal of characteristic exaggeration in all this gloomy talk. Like the actor who conscientiously blacked himself all over for the part of Othello, the erstwhile blithesome broker or jovial jobber does the thing thoroughly when he gives himself up to a fit of the blues. The state of affairs on the Stock Exchange is not really quite so desperate as some of the croakers would make out. Still, it is bad enough in all conscience, and though everybody hopes that the clouds will roll by, nobody is very sanguine. The situation is, too, made all the more disquieting by the knowledge that, while the Stock Exchange is writhing in a slough of despond, the outside brokers rejoice in a roaring trade. It would be ridiculous to suggest that the sad plight of men inside the "House" is wholly, or even largely, attributable to the success of their competitors outside. The prevalent depression is mainly due to various complex causes which need not be discussed here. Nevertheless, many members are beginning to debate the question whether some departure from the traditional policy of the Stock Exchange may not be required to meet the attacks of the poachers on what used to be regarded as its preserves. In the aggregate it is an enormous amount of business which is bagged by the poachers, and not only is this business in itself a serious loss to members but the malpractices that occur in connection with it bring the Stock Exchange into undeserved odium. That institution is, of course, without a shade of a shadow of responsibility for bucket-shop frauds or bucket-shop tricks that are morally indistinguishable from fraud. It seems almost superfluous to say this. Unfortunately, however, the public are very foolish and very ignorant, and it is an undoubted fact that the Stock Exchange suffers in the estimation of numbers of people for the sins of rogues over whom—luckily for them—it has no sort of control. Medical men often complain of the mischief that is done by advertising quacks, but they have at least the satisfaction of knowing that in the long run they do not suffer themselves, but, on the contrary, earn fees for undoing the evil the quack has occasioned or aggravated. The quack's dupes become the doctor's patients. No such satisfaction is available for the genuine stockbroker. Every bucket-shop swindle means for him the loss of possible clients. Some of the victims drop all their money, and others, concluding that all dealers in stocks and shares are tarred with the same brush, resolve to have nothing more to do with any of them.

BUCKET-SHOP BANDITTI.

The infantile ingenuousness of a great mass of the British public on the subject of dealings in stocks and shares is truly astounding. Some notion of it may be gathered from the revelations that are made from time to time in the police-courts, but I myself have perpetual proofs of it in the correspondence that reaches "Vigilant's Letter Box." In the "Mammon" article TRUTH has always done its best to put its readers on their guard against the banditti of the bucket-shops, so that no regular reader of the paper has any excuse for being captured. Every week, however, I am inundated with letters seeking advice about the character of these harpies, or suggesting that they shall be pilloried again, or—as often happens—asking for a recommendation to a reliable broker; and it has occurred to me that the answers which I give to such inquiries may be usefully amplified by the publication in this special supplement of two lists of names which ought to be serviceable both to the public and the members of the Stock Exchange. In the first list I propose to set out the names or aliases—mostly aliases—of individuals or firms of the bucket-shop class who for one reason or another figured in my last annual Cautionary List, or have since come under notice in "Mammon." Besides cover-snatchers and promoters of "blind pools," whose methods of duping greenhorns have been repeatedly exposed in TRUTH, I include various other practitioners, such as the share-pushers who gull people into buying the worthless securities of rotten and moribund companies, and the firms who charge unwary purchasers outrageously exorbitant prices for foreign lottery or premium bonds. I do not for a moment suggest that all who figure in the list are on an equality of turpitude, but at the same time all of them are parties whom the sensible speculator or the prudent investor will be careful to avoid:—

American Commercial Exchange, The, New York.
Arnold and Butler, 124, Holborn, E.C.
Barclay and Co., 11, Spring-gardens, Manchester, and 4, Featherstone-buildings, High Holborn.
Bertram, Seymour, and Co., Copthall-house, E.C.
Blythe, Gould, and Co., 25, Lawrence-lane; the Globe and Lancashire Stock Exchange (same address); Gordon, Richmond, and Brother, Imperial-buildings; and Fife, Hamilton, and Co., 42, New Bridge-street. (Businesses suspended while the proprietors are serving sentences of imprisonment.)
Brodie, George, and Co., 42, Copthall-avenue, E.C.
Bull, Martin (alias Brown), 7, Fenchurch-buildings, E.C.
Cassell and Langton, 34-36, Gresham-street, E.C.
Charles and Co. (alias Frederick C. A. Spiegel), Moorgate-street, E.C.
Clement and Hayes, 19, Buckingham-street, E.C.
Consolidated Securities Co., The, 10, Drapers'-gardens, E.C.
Corcoran, Morgan, 14, Great Winchester Street, E.C.
Coventry and Co., Charles, Trafalgar-buildings, W.C.
Cunliffe, Russell, and Co., Paris.
Currie and Crisp, 68-70, Queen-street, E.C.
Digby, Curtis, and Co., 40 and 41, Sackville-street, W.
Douglas, Cairn, and Co., Crown-court, Old Broad-street, E.C.
Eastwood and Co., 76, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C.
Financial Guardian, 2, Tokenhouse-buildings, E.C.
Freeborn, Franklin, and Co, 12, Bank-street, Manchester.
Freeman, Wm., and Co., 76, Cornwall-road, Bayswater.
Fry and Co., 34, Coleman-street, E.C.
Glass, R. E., 8, Union-court, Old Broad-street, E.C.
Hanmer and Co., Liverpool and Manchester.
Humbert, Wm., Nephew, and Co., Queen Victoria-st. E.C.
Imperial Stock and Share Exchange, 19-21, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.
Industrial Trust and Assets Corporation, Limited, 50, Cannon-street, E.C.
International Securities Syndicate, 23, Westminster Palace-gardens, S.W.
Iredale and Co., J. Henry, 12, Rumford-place, Liverpool.
Ives, Anderson, and Co., 51, Bishopsgate-street Within.
Kitson, James and Co., 4, Mildmay-chambers, Bishopsgate-street Within.
Lawrence, A., and Co. (alias Lawrence Spiegel), 38, Great St. Helen's, E.C.
Laurie and Vincent, 70, Queen-street, E.C.
Lee, Baillie, and Co., 31, Basinghall-street, E.C.
Lombard Association, The, 45, Lombard-street, E.C.
London and British Stock and Share Exchange, 79, Queen-street, E.C.
London and Counties Exchange, Imperial-buildings, New Bridge-st., E.C.
London and Scottish Stock Exchange, 20, Bucklersbury, E.C.
Mackenzie, John B., 22, Rood-lane, E.C.
Martin and Church, Craven House, Kingsway, W.C.
Melville, Glyn, and Co., Paris.
Metropolitan Stock, Share, and Deb. Asso., 257, High Holborn, W.C.
Metropolitan Trust Investment Co., The, 4, Birchin-lane, E.C.
Milne, Son, and Hamilton, 11, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.
Mining and General Investments Corporation, The, Hounslow.
Morgan, Roland, 33, Old Broad-street, E.C.
National Securities Corporation, The, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.
National Share Exchange, The, 22, Great Winchester-street, E.C.
Securities Investment Co., The, 42, Old Broad-street, E.C.
Shipworth and Watson, 2, Dunedin-house, Basinghall-avenue, E.C.
Stock Exchange Investment and General Agency, 3, Crosby-sq., E.C.
Smith, Hamilton, and Co., 80A, Fenchurch-street, E.C.
Tyler, Wm., and Co., Pinner's House, Old Broad-street, E.C.
Wisner and Co., A. L., New York and Finsbury Pavement House, E.C.

To prevent any misconception, it may be advisable to repeat that the above is only a list of such individuals and firms as happen to have been the subject of warnings in TRUTH. It is not intended as a complete list of bucket-shops and similar concerns, for there are many more—some of them, indeed, the same persons under fresh aliases—against whom it is equally necessary that the public should be on their guard.

The Stock Exchange.

The second of my lists contains the names and addresses of all the members of the Stock Exchange who are stock and share brokers, jobbers being, of course, excluded, as the public are not brought into direct relationship with them. It may be thought that the printing of the list here is somewhat superfluous, seeing that it is always exhibited for public inspection at one of the entrances to the Bank of England, and a copy can, moreover, be obtained by any one who writes for it to the secretary to the committee of the Stock Exchange. But, as my correspondence shows, the majority of people do not know this, or will not take the trouble to make the necessary application, and consequently fall into the hands of the first outside dealer whose advertisement they come across. It cannot be too often repeated that no member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise or to send circulars to persons other than to his own principals. A host of innocents would be saved from the traps that are set for them if this regulation were generally known. But it is not, nor is it ever likely to be generally known, and the result is that the public are imposed upon by all sorts of unscrupulous knaves, whilst honest brokers are deprived of much legitimate business. There is a growing feeling among members of the Stock Exchange that the regulation ought to be modified to the extent of permitting any broker to issue circulars or newspaper advertisements containing simply his name and address and a statement of his membership—in other words, a plain business card. Some day, perhaps, this will be done, but at present the powers that be in Throgmorton-street maintain the old policy, and men in the House are in that way severely handicapped by the rivalry of the uncontrolled outsiders. Although members of the Stock Exchange may not advertise individually, however, there is no reason why they should not be advertised collectively, and I believe that the publication of the appended directory of brokers will be found extremely useful. Whenever I am asked for advice by intending investors, I tell them that it is always best to do business through a member of the Stock Exchange, but that I do not undertake to recommend any particular broker. Sometimes I am reminded that there are certain outside firms that bear a good reputation. I am aware that this is so, but the fact does not alter my view that on the whole it is much the wisest and safest plan to go to a member of the Stock Exchange. It would be absurd to pretend that a man's membership is an absolute guarantee of his trustworthiness, but it is at any rate very strong primâ facie evidence of it, and it entitles the client to the protection of the ruling body of the Exchange. The Stock Exchange exacts a high standard of conduct among its members in their dealings with one another and with their clients, and the committee, who are always ready to investigate bonâ fide complaints, will not tolerate anything in the nature of sharp practices—indeed, it is sometimes said that if the committee err at all in the settlement of disputes and the enforcement of a rigorous code of honour, they are rather inclined to err on the side of the clients. Certainly the investor who employs a member of the Stock Exchange has a degree of security for honest and honourable treatment which he cannot possibly command elsewhere.

List of Brokers who are Members of the Stock Exchange.

Aarons, L. & Co. .... 21, Gresham ho., Old B'd st.
Aarons, Arthur E. .... 21, Gresham ho., Old B'd-st.
Aarons, Frank H. .... 21, Gresham ho., Old B'd-st.
Aarons, Lewis ..... 21, Gresham ho., Old B'd-st.
Abbott, Allen V. ..... 61, Old Broad-street
Abbott, James J. ..... 1, Austin Friars
Abrahams, Jonas & Co. 10, Drapers'-gardens
Abrahams, Arthur C. .. 10, Drapers'-gardens
Abrahams, Nevil'e A... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Adams, Harry N. .... 19, Old Broad-street
Adams, Howard C. .... 30, Coleman-street
Adams, James S. ..... 19, Old Broad-street
Adams, William F. .... 1, Copthall chambers
Agelasto & Co. ..... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Agelasto, Stephen A... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Aitken, Robert M. .... S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle st.
Akroyd, John B. ..... 52, Threadneedle-street
Akroyd, Swainson H... 52, Threadneedle-street
Albery, Irving J. .... 54, Old Broad-street
Alder, Frank ..... 38, Throgmorton-street
Alexander, Charles J... Stock Exchange
Allen, A. J. & Son.... 23, Birchin-lane
Allen, Arthur J. ..... 23, Birchin-lane
Allen, A. Louis ..... 31, Throgmorton-street
Allen, Charles A. .... 3, Cushion-court
Allen, Charles H. E. .. St. Stephen's chambers
Allen, Ernest S. ..... 23, Birchin-lane
Allen, Walter ..... 23, Austin Friars
Althaus, Theodore F... 18, Cornhill
Ambler, Frank ..... Crown-court, Old Broad-st.
Ambrose, William H. .. Bartholomew house
Anderson, K. & Co. .. 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Anderson, Francis H... 18, Cornhill
Anderson, Henry .... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Anderson, James ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Anderson, James P. .. 7, Drapers'-gardens
Anderson, Stuart G. .. 152, Gresham house
Andoe, Arthur C. .... 27, Clement's-lane
Andrade, Solomon H... 12, Angel court
Andreae & Co. ..... 28, Throgmorton-street
Andreae, Charles .... 28, Throgmorton-street
Andreae, Oscar ..... 457, Salisbury house
Andrewes, Herbert E. 9, Drapers gardens
Andrews, Basil F. .... 2 and 3 Old Broad-street
Andrus, Francis Bain 7, Birchin-lane
Angel, Arthur M. .... Gresham house
Ansbacher, Henry .... 20, Copthall avenue
Ansell, Mankiewicz & Tallerman ..... Warnford-court
Arbuthnot, Harold D... 22, Finch lane
Archer, Clement W. .. White house, Telegraph-st.
Argenti & Co. ..... 5, Drapers'-gardens
Argenti, Ambrose N. .. 5, Drapers'-gardens
Armitage, Edward H... 31, Threadneedle-street
Armstrong, Frederick 2, Drapers'-gardens
Armytage-Moore, C.J.E. 18, Old Broad-street
Arthur, James A. S... 2, Copthall buildings
Asbury, Bruce J. .... 7, Birchin-lane
Asch, William ..... 7, Lothbury
Ashby, Arthur G. .. 3, Copthall buildings
Ashby, Frank H. .... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Aston, A. Louis ..... 58, Lombard-street
Aston, William W. .... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Atchley, William W. . 2, Drapers'-gardens
Austin, George ..... St. Stephen's chambers
Austin, Oswald F. .... 3, Adam's court
Aylward Brothers .... 120, Bishopsgate st. Within Aylward, Edgar A. .. 120, Bishopsgate st. Within Aylward, Louis J. .... 120, Bishopsgate st. Within

Bach, Frederick ..... 4, Angel court
Bach, Maximilian .... 4, Angel court
Bacharach, Otto L. .... 38, Throgmorton-street
Backhouse, George S... 2, Copthall buildings
Baillieu, E. L. M. .... 70, Cornhill
Baily, Arthur C. ..... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Baker & Baker ..... 61, Old Broad-street
Baker, Alfred J. ..... 61, Old Broad-street
Baker, Arthur ..... 10, Angel-court
Baker, C. M. & Son .... 1, Copthall chambers
Baker, Charles M. .... 1, Copthall chambers
Baker, George W. .... 116, Gresham house
Baker, Laurance A. .. 61, Old Broad-street
Baker, Montford ..... 1, Copthall chambers
Baker, Samuel S. .... Crown ct., Old Broad street
Baker, Thomas T. .... 10, Angel-court
Balfour, Arthur H. .... 31, Moorgate-street
Balfour, F. R. S. .... 14, Austin Friars
Balfour, George P. .... 2, Cushion-court
Balfour, Melville ..... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Balfour, Robert D. .... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Banks Brothers ..... 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Banks, John R. ..... 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Banks, Walter T. .... 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Baptie, T. P. & Co. .. 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Baptie, Thomas P. .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Barber, Henry ..... 29, Threadneedle-street
Barker, E. & Co. ..... Crown-ct., Old Broad-st.
Barker, Henry G. .... Crown-ct., Old Broad-st.
Barkworth, Alfred M... 27, Austin Friars
Barlow, Edward H. .. 1, Drapers'-gardens
Barnard, Alexander D. Crown-ct., Old Broad-st.
Barnes, Henry K. .... 4, Sun-court, Cornhill
Barnett, Herbert W. .. 21, Old Broad-street
Barnett, Walter E. .... 6, Tokenhouse-yard
Barron, Arnold L. .. 74, Cornhill
Barry & Co. ..... 7, Birchin-lane
Barry & Yeates ..... 4, Copthall buildings
Barry, Frederick C. .. 7, Birchin-lane
Barry, James McC. .... 4, Copthall buildings
Bartels, Fritz W. .... Stock Exchange
Barton, Dugald C. .... Swan chmbrs., Copthall-av.
Barton, George H. .... 29A, Cornhill
Barton, R. A. P. .... Warnford-court
Basan, Halbert, Jun... 9, Copthall-avenue
Bates, Harry D. A. .. 61, Old Broad-street
Battersby, Charles W. 2A, Copthall-court
Bauer & Blundell .... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Bauer, Raphael ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Bauer, Raphael M. .... 4, Copthall-court
Baumann, Bentley M. 10, Drapers'-gardens
Bayley, William D. .... 1, Angel-court
Beale, Stanley L. .... 10, Moorgate-street
Beardshaw, Wilfred.... 9, Tokenhouse-yard
Beardsley, Charles C... 20, Copthall-avenue
Beardsley, Herbert L. 20, Copthall-avenue
Beauchamp, R. C. W... 7, Birchin-lane
Beauclerk, William A 5, Austin Friars
Beckton, Ben. ..... 62, Threadneedle-street
Bedford, Charles W. .. 65 & 66, Old Broad-street
Beeman, George B. .. 10, Throgmorton avenue
Beeman, Philip I. .... 27, Austin Friars
Beeton, Henry R. .. 18, Austin Friars
Begbie, Horace ..... 26, Old Broad-street
Begg, Faithfull & Co... Bartholomew house
Begg, Ferdinand F. .. Bartholomew house
Beith & Kohn ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Beith, Isaac M. ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Belchier, Henry A. .. 74, Cornhill
Belchier, Herbert D. .. 74, Cornhill
Belfour, Percy G. & Co. 57½, Old Broad-street
Belfour, Percy G. .... 57½, Old Broad-street
Bell, Harry W. G. .... 5, Throgmorton avenue
Bellairs, E. H. W. .. Warnford court
Bendon, Albert A. & Co. 28, Throgmorton street
Bendon, Albert A. .. 28, Throgmorton-street
Benjamin, Alfred I. .. 19, Old Broad-street
Benn, Piercy ..... 18, Old Broad-street
Bennett, Payne & Co... 28, Threadneedle-street
Bennett, Arthur M. .. 28, Threadneedle-street
Bennett, Charles ..... 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Bennett, Harry de C... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Bennett, William .... 28, Threadneedle-street
Bensinger, Louis ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Benson, James ..... 4, Adam's-court
Benvenisti, Leon ..... 451, Salisbury house
Berdoe - Wilkinson, D. 3, Copthall buildings
Berdoe - Wilkinson, E. 3, Copthall buildings
Berend, Martin ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Berman, Emil ..... 31, Throgmorton street
Bernheim, Hemance .. 11, Copthall-court
Bessell, Mowbray .... 15, Austin Friars
Bevan, D. A. & Co. .. S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Bevan, David A. ..... S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Bevan, Gerard L. .... 1, Cornhill
Bevan, Owen C. ..... 18, Cornhill
Bickerton, Thomas .... Bartholomew house
Bicknell, Gilbert E. .. 4, Adam's-court
Biedermann, A. & Co... 15, Throgmorton-avenue
Biedermann, Max L... 15, Throgmorton-avenue
Biedermann, Adolph H. Warnford-court
Bierer & Co. ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Bierer, August ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Billett, Campbell and Grenfell ..... 3, Throgmorton avenue
Bingham, Hon. A. E. 57½, Old Broad-street
Bingham, Frank ..... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Birch & Co. ..... 8½, Angel court
Birch, F. J. P. ..... 8½, Angel court
Birch, F., & Christian White house, Telegraph st.
Birch, Francis J. P... White house, Telegraph st.
Bird, William ..... 11, Royal Exchange
Birks, Harry W. ..... 62, Threadneedle street
Birnbaum, Albert B. .. 15, Austin Friars
Birnstingl, Avigdor L. 19, Old Broad-street
Bisgood, E. F. & Co... Copthall ho., Copthall-av.
Bisgood, Eugene F. .. Copthall ho., Copthall-av.
Bishop, Bernard E. .... 7, Adam's-court
Bisset, George F. ..... 23 & 25, Old Broad-street
Bithrey, Ernest W. S... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Blair, James S. M. .... 15, Gt. Winchester-street
Blake & Browne ..... 75, Old Broad-street
Blake, Arthur R. F. .. 79, Cornhill
Blake, Thomas ..... 75, Old Broad-street
Bleibtreu, Niel L. .... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Blennerhassett, W. L. 54, Old Broad-street
Blood, Maurice ..... Warnford-court
Blundell, Eustace .... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Blunt, Harry ..... S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Blyth & Hutchinson .. 79, Cornhill
Boby, Henry S. ..... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Boldero, Frederick .... 2A, Copthall-court
Bonas, Rudolf S. ..... 28, Throgmorton-street
Bond, William E. .... 80, Cornhill
Bone, J. G. & Sons .... 4, Copthall-court
Bone, George A. .... 4, Copthall-court
Bone, George H. K. .. 4, Copthall-court
Bone, William ..... 2, Copthall chambers
Boome, Harry J. S. .. 23, Moorgate-street
Booth, Edward E. .... 2A, Copthall-court
Borthwick, Wark & Co. 11, Copthall-court
Borthwick, Lord ..... 11, Copthall-court
Boulter, R. S. L. ..... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Boulton, Reginald .... 19, Throgmorton-avenue
Bourke, Cuthbertson & Co. ..... 5, Throgmorton-street
Bourke, Hon. H. L. .. 5, Throgmorton-street
Bourne, Henry ..... 37, Throgmorton-street
Bouverie, Hon. E. P... 3, Threadneedle street
Bower & Gunning .... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Bower, George C. .... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Bowerman & Cartland 2, Copthall buildings
Bowerman, Charles .... 2, Copthall buildings
Bowler, Henry ..... 3, Copthall chambers
Boyer, Frank H. & Co. 9 Copthall-avenue

Boyer, Frank H. ..... 9, Copthall-avenue
Boyle, Hugh ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Bradberry, T. R. .... 4, Warnford-court
Bragg, Stockdale, Hall & Co. ..... 57½, Old Broad-street
Braithwaite, Cecil .... 27, Austin Friars
Braithwaite, John S... 27, Austin Friars
Braithwaite, J. B., jun. 27, Austin Friars
Brampton, Arthur .... 9, Gresham house
Bramwell, John ..... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Branston, Basil G. .... 54 & 55, Cornhill
Breisach, Ernest ..... 14, Austin Friars
Bremner, Alex. W. .... 2, Copthall buildings
Brenton, Francis G..... 2, Finch-lane
Brewin, Arthur ..... Stock Exchange
Brewin, Julius A. .... 6A, Austin Friars
Brewster, David W. .. 2, Drapers'-gardens
Bridgewater, John J. .. 17, Bishopsgate-st. Within Bridgford, T. W. & Co. 2, Drapers'-gardens
Bridgford, T. W. ..... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Bristow, Frank R. .... 56, Old Broad-street
Broadbent, Ernest W... 11, Angel-court
Brocklebank, G. S. & Co. 3, Pope's Head-alley
Brockelbank, G. S. .... 3, Pope's Head-alley
Brodrick, Hon. L. A... 18, Austin Friars
Brooks, Clifford ..... 13, Copthall-court
Broughton, E. G. W... 19, Throgmorton-avenue
Brown, A. J. & Co. .. 7, Drapers'-gardens
Brown, Alexander J. .. 7, Drapers'-gardens
Brown, Alfred L. .... 2A, Copthall-court
Brown, Alfred S. ..... 6, Lothbury
Brown Brothers ..... 2A, Copthall-court
Brown, Edward L. .... Warnford-court
Brown, Herbert H. .... 6, Drapers'-gardens
Brown, Meredith M. .. 3, Drapers'-gardens
Brown, Spencer C. L... 20, Copthall-avenue
Brown, W. Hurst ..... 2A, Copthall-court
Browne, Arthur W. .... 75, Old Broad-street
Browne, Frederick W.. 11, Copthall-court
Browning, Todd & Co. 18, Old Broad-street
Bruce and Bell ..... 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Bruce, Robert B. B. .. 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Brunton, Bourke & Co. 2, Threadneedle-street
Brunton, Sidney ..... 2, Threadneedle-street
Bryant & Rolfe ..... 56, Old Broad-street
Bryant, Edward ..... 56, Old Broad-street
Bryant, Shettelworth S. 61, Old Broad-street
Bryce, Ellissen & Co... 42, Gresham house
Bryce, Francis ..... 42, Gresham house
Buckmaster & Moore .. 18, Old Broad-street
Buckmaster, Walter S.. 18, Old Broad street
Bucknall, Leonard C. .. 57, Old Broad-street
Budd, Charles B. .... 14, Angel-court
Budd, Walter F. ..... 14, Angel-court
Bugler, Arthur J. .... 35, Copthall-avenue
Bulger, Daniel D. .... 27, Throgmorton-street
Bull, William & Son... 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Bull, Horace P. ..... 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Bull, William ..... 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Bullock, Henry R. .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Bulteel, John G. ..... 31, Threadneedle-street
Bulteel, Lionel ..... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Bumpus, Francis H. .. 53, New Broad-street
Burdett, Tom A. ..... 168-9, Palmerston house
Burge & Co. ..... 3, Austin Friars
Burge, Woodall & Co... 1, Cushion-court
Burge, Charles E. .... 3, Austin Friars
Burge, George S. ..... 3, Austin Friars
Burge, Oscar M. ..... 5, Austin Friars
Burge, William A. .... 1, Cushion court
Burkill, Harold J..... 103, Gresham house
Burman, William H. .. 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Burnand, G., & Co..... 103 6, Gresham house
Burnand, Lewis W..... 103 6, Gresham house
Burnand, Lionel B. .. 103 6, Gresham house
Burnell, Charles D. .... 50, Threadneedle-street
Burnell, George E. .... 50, Threadneedle-street
Burnett, Wallace H. .... 13, Copthall-court
Burrow, Charles G. .... 3, Copthall-court
Burtt, Sidney M. ..... 18, Austin Friars
Bushy, Walter ..... 24, Throgmorton-street
Bush, Charles E. ..... Bartholomew house
Butcher, James T. .... 6, Tokenhouse yard
Butler, Harry ..... 75, Old Broad-street
Byas, Cecil E. ..... 38, Throgmorton-street
Byfield, Percy ..... 28, Threadneedle-street
Byng, Foley & Co. ..... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Byng, Hon. Antony S.. 4, Tokenhouse buildings

Cadogan, John C. .... 7, Lothbury
Cahn, Gottfried ..... 6 & 7, Copthall-court
Calley, Legh C. ..... 21, Birchin-lane
Cambridge, W. J. .... 6, Throgmorton-street
Camden, George H. .... 43-6, Threadneedle-street
Cameron, Algernon J... 4, Copthall chambers
Cameron, Ewen A. .... 1, Hatton-court
Campbell, Archibald H. 7, Drapers'-gardens
Campbell, Henry T. ... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Campbell, Hugh ..... 16, Tokenhouse-yard
Campbell, The Hon. Kenneth H. ..... 66, Old Broad-street
Campbell & Goldstone.. 3, London Wall building
Campbell, Kenneth R... 3, London Wall building
Campbell, William O. .. 10, Old Broad-street
Cancellor, Frederick .. 2, Copthall buildings
Candy, Walter C. .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Caney, McMullen & Caney ..... 16, Tokenhouse yard
Caney, John W. ..... 16, Tokenhouse-yard
Caney, Percy W. ..... 2, Copthall-court
Capel, J. & Co. ..... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Capel-Cure & Terry .... 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Carden, Sir R. W. & Co. ..... 3, Threadneedle street
Cardia, Alexander .... 5, Drapers'-gardens
Caridia, Emanuel A. ... 5, Drapers'-gardens
Caridia, George A..... 5, Drapers'-gardens
Carlebach H. & Co..... 4 & 6, Copthall-avenue
Carlebach, Arthur .... 4 & 6, Copthall-avenue
Carlebach, Henry ..... 4 & 6, Copthall-avenue
Carlebach, Richard .... 4 & 6, Copthall-avenue
Carless, Frederick J. .. 7, Adam's-court
Carlisle, Charles H. ... 75, Old Broad-street
Carmichael, T. & Co... 38, Throgmorton-street
Carmichael, Thomas .. 38, Throgmorton-street
Carr, W. I., Sons & Tod 22, Finch-lane
Carr, Philip W. ..... 22, Finch-lane
Carr, Wilfred I. ..... 22, Finch-lane
Carrie, George ..... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Carroll & Co. ..... 5, Copthall buildings.
Carroll, John T. ..... 5, Copthall buildings
Carron, William ..... 66, Old Broad-street.
Carruthers, John ..... 5, Lothbury
Carstens, William F... 6, Throgmorton street
Carter, Robert L. ..... 57, Old Broad-street
Cartland, Arthur J. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Cartwright, Philip C... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Carvalho, Raphael N.. 4, Angel-court
Case, Ernest L. ..... 6A, Austin Friars
Cassy, John S. ..... 21, Old Broad-street
Castellan, Victor E. .. 7, Drapers'-gardens
Castello, D. & Sons ... 38, Throgmorton-street
Castello, James ..... 38, Throgmorton-street
Castello, Percy M. .... 38, Throgmorton-street
Cavell, Strachan & Lardelli ..... 16, Tokenhouse yard
Cawston, George & Co. 19, Warnford-court
Cawston, George ..... 19, Warnford-court
Cazenove & Akroyds ... 52, Threadneedle-street
Cazenove, Arthur P. .. 52, Threadneedle-street
Chaldecott, James H... 1, Cushion-ct., Old Broad-st.
Challoner, Frederick W. 28, Throgmorton-street
Chancellor & Meates .. 3, Austin Friars
Chancellor, Walter .... 3, Austin Friars
Chandler, Alfred E. .... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Chandler & Co. ..... 7, Angel-court
Chapman & Rowe ..... Blomfield ho., London Wall
Charlesworth, C. B. .... 20, Copthall-avenue
Chater-Fawsitt, H. G... Stock Exchange
Cheston, Geoffrey ..... 6, Throgmorton-street
Chetwynd-Stapylton, F. 18, Cornhill
Chichester, The Earl of 3, Drapers'-gardens
Chick, Walter J. ..... 20, Copthall house
Chown, John ..... 23, Bucklersbury
Christian, Edward H. . White ho., Telegraph-st.
Christie, Brewin & Gribble ..... 6A, Austin Friars
Christie, Charles H. F.. 6A, Austin Friars
Christie, Walter G. .... 53, New Broad-street
Christmas, T. S. H. .... Stock Exchange
Christopherson, M..... 9, Tokenhouse-yard
Church, M. B. C..... 13, Copthall-court
Churchill, John S. ... 28, Throgmorton-street
Clado, Constantine .... 6, Lothbury
Clapham Brothers .... 18, Gresham house
Clapham, Athol E. .... 18, Gresham house
Clapham, Charles L. .. 18, Gresham house
Clapham, John ..... 1, Cushion-court
Clark, Alexr. K. ..... 4, Hercules passage
Clark, Alexander T. .. 116, Gresham house
Clark, Edward ..... 1, Royal Exchange-avenue
Clark, James D. ..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Clark, Lawrence ..... 3, Adam's-court
Clark, Percy ..... 1, Royal Exchange-avenue
Clark, William ..... 24, Throgmorton-street
Clarke, B. M. & Co..... 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Clarke, Bennett M. .... 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Clarke, Herbert ..... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Clarke, Walter ..... 31, Threadneedle-street
Clayton & Aston ..... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Clayton, Ernest S. .... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Clayton, John H. ..... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Clayton, Sands ..... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Clayton & Rose ..... Bartholomew house
Clayton, John E. .... Bartholomew house
Clow, Leonard & Co... 22, Austin Friars
Clow, Leonard ..... 22, Austin Friars
Clutton-Brock, H. A... 58, Old Broad-street
Coates, Son & Co. .... 99, Gresham-street
Coates, E. F., M.P. .... 99, Gresham-street
Cobb, Herbert E. .... 12, Copthall-court
Coelen, Gerald J. F. H. 10, Moorgate-street
Coffey, Ernest A. ..... 10, Old Broad-street
Cohen, Laming & Co.. 15, Angel court
Cohen, Arthur ..... 15, Angel court
Cohen, Lionel ..... 5, Copthall-court
Cohen, S. C. & Co. .... 27, Throgmorton-street
Cohen, Solomon C..... 27, Throgmorton-street
Cohen, William H. .... Stock Exchange
Cohn, Adolph ..... 15, Throgmorton-avenue
Cohn, Jefferson D. .... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Cokayne, Francis S. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Coldstream, Francis M. S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Coleman, T., & Co..... 5, Austin Friars
Coleman, Thomas ..... 5, Austin Friars
Coleman, Walter L. ... 6, Throgmorton street
Coles, Edgar L. ..... 39, Throgmorton-street
Coles, Frederick P. .. 39, Throgmorton-street
Colley, William ..... 4, Copthall-court
Collier, William ..... 2, Castle-court, Cornhill
Collingridge, F. H. ... 2, Threadneedle-street
Collins & Maas ..... 2, Drapers' gardens
Collins, Arthur A. .... Warnford-court
Collins, Edwin F. .... 31, Threadneedle-street
Collins, Henry G. E. .. 10, Drapers'-gardens
Collins, William R. ... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Colmer, J. G., C.M.G... 99, Gresham-street
Colsell, George D. .... 31, Threadneedle-street
Compton, Lord A. F... 1, Hatton-court
Concanon, J. B. & Co. 28, Austin Friars
Concanon, James B. .. 28, Austin Friars
Connew, Leonard G. .. 6, Austin Friars
Cooke, Malcolm & Bedford ..... 65 & 66, Old Broad-street
Cooke, Malcolm S. .... 65 & 66, Old Broad-street
Cooke, William W. .... 1, Copthall chambers
Cooper, Sidney & Co... 54, Old Broad-street
Cooper, Howard L. ... 54, Old Broad-street
Cooper, Joseph E. .... 54, Old Broad-street
Cooper, Robert W. .... 14, Austin Friars
Cooper, Stanley ..... 54, Old Broad-street
Cooper, Thomas P. .... St. Stephen's chambers
Cork, S. C. & Son..... 30, Throgmorton-street
Cork, Alfred P. ..... 30, Throgmorton-street
Corri, Eugene ..... 7, Finch-lane
Cosser, Stephen A. .... Copthall ho., Copthall-av.
Cotton, Herbert F. ... 13, Copthall-court
Cotton, Ronald O. .... 4, Drapers'-gardens
Covernton, Charles A... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Cox, Bernard M. ..... 29, Threadneedle-street
Coxhead, Algernon B.. 17, Tokenhouse-yard
Craddock, Leopold R... 17, Bishopsgate-st. Within Craven, George H. .... 4, Copthall chambers
Creagh, Pierce ..... Stock Exchange
Cremieu-Javal, Raoul .. 19, Old Broad-street
Crew, Joseph F. ..... 39, Throgmorton street
Crews, Lichtenstadt & Co. ..... 38, Throgmorton-street
Crews, Charles T. D... 38, Throgmorton-street
Crews, Harold N. ..... 38, Throgmorton-street
Cricknfer, John E. .... 3 & 4, Great Winchester st.
Crisp, C. Birch & Co. 11, Angel-court
Crisp, Charles B. ..... 11, Angel-court
Crisp, Charles J. .... 28, Throgmorton-street
Crofts, Francis G. .... 35, Throgmorton-street
Crook, John S. ..... 17, Tokenhouse-yard
Crookshank, F. W. .... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Crosley, John M. .... 5 & 6, Great Winchester-st.
Crosthwaite, Henry T. 10, Moorgate-street
Crosthwaite, H. F. .... 10, Moorgate-street
Cruickshank, F. H. G. 3, Drapers'-gardens
Crumplin, Walter J. .. 4, Tokenhouse-buildings
Cull and Daniell ..... 50, Threadneedle-street
Cullen and Engel .... 13, Copthall-avenue.
Cullen, Horace ..... 13, Copthall-avenue.
Cuming, Hugh B. .... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Cumming, Harry A. .. 8½, Angel court
Cundall, Frederick ... 7, Lothbury
Cundell, Wilfred M. .. 18, Austin Friars
Cunningham Brothers .. 2, Royal Exchange-avenue
Cunningham, Andrew . 2, Royal Exchange-avenue
Cunningham, C. R. .. 2, Royal Exchange-avenue
Curwen, T. T. & Sons... 1, Cornhill
Curwen, Edward S. .. 1, Cornhill
Curwen, Thomas C. .. 1, Cornhill
Curzon, The Hon. F. N. 1, Hatton-court
Cutbill, Edward & Co. 54, Cornhill
Cutbill, Edward ..... 54, Cornhill
Cutbill, Louis E. .... 54, Cornhill
Cutcliffe, Ley & Co... 7, Adam's-court
Cutliffe, John ..... 7, Adam's-court
Cuthbertson, E. H. .. 6, Throgmorton-street
Cuthbertson, R. A. .. 15, Throgmorton-avenue
Cutler, William S. .... 10, Old Broad-street

Da Costa, David N. .. 28, Throgmorton-street
Dadson Brothers ..... 15, Austin Friars
Dadson, Henry ..... 15, Austin Friars
Daly, Sydney O. ..... 4, Queen Victoria-street
Daniell, Edward C. ... 50, Threadneedle-street
Daniell, Henry A. .... 13, George-street
Daniell, Lindsay ..... 50, Threadneedle-street
Daniell, R. H. A. .... 13, George-street
Davey, Ernest ..... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Davids, Henri ..... 1, Angel-court
Davids, Leonard ..... 1, Angel-court
Davidson, Arthur J... 10, Moorgate-street
Davidson, Evan ..... 2, Austin Friars
Davie, Sidney R. .... 35, Gresham house
Davies, Allan T. ..... 9, Tokenhouse-yard
Davies, E. & Co. ..... 26, Austin Friars
Davies, Ernest ..... 26, Austin Friars
Davies, F. H. & Co. .. 20, Copthall-avenue
Davies, Frederick H. .. 20, Copthall-avenue
Davies, Harold G. .... 58, Lombard-street
Davies, James R. ... 4, Austin Friars
Davies, Robert F. .... 20, Copthall-avenue
Davies, William R. .... 10, Moorgate-street
Davis, Alexander .... 7, Lothbury
Davis, Bernard D. .... 28, Throgmorton-street
Davis, Kilpin & Foster 2 & 3, Old Broad-street
Davis, S. & Co. ..... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Davis, Sydney ..... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Davis, William W. .... 2, Copthall buildings
Davison & Jones ..... 9, Tokenhouse-yard
Davison, Charles ..... 9, Tokenhouse-yard
Davison, John R. .... 15, Angel-court
Dawes & Puckle ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Dawes, Edwin ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Dawes, G. W. & Co..... 5, Lothbury
Dawes, George W. .... 5, Lothbury
Dawes, Richard J. A... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Dawkins, Thomas S. .. 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Dawson, William A. .. 57½, Old Broad-street
Day, Frederick C. ... 7, Finch-lane
Deacon, George C. .. 1, Drapers'-gardens
Deacon, J. E. & Co... 10, Old Broad-street
Deacon, James E. .... 10, Old Broad street
Debenham, James .... 4, Copthall-buildings
De Beaufort, Arnoud J. 4, Hercules-passage
De Broé, Conrad ..... 6, Tokenhouse-yard
De Castro, Jules ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
De Jongh, A. & Co. .. 11, Angel-court
De Jongh, Alexander .. 11, Angel-court
De la Mare, A. J. .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
De Meyier, Johan .... 4, Hercules-passage
De Montmorency & Co. 63, Cornhill
De Murrieta, C. J. .. 24, Austin Friars
De Murricta, Francis .. 24, Austin Friars
Denny, Addison ..... Copthall house
Denton, Frank J. .... 6, Drapers'-gardens
De Renzi, Loftus .... 1, Cushion-court
Derenburg & Co. .... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Derenburg, Charles .... 9, Drapers'-gardens
De Smitt, Samuel L. .. 2, Tokenhouse-buildings
Detmar, Thomas G. .. 3, Copthall chambers
Dettmar-Todd, J. H... 18, Old Broad-street
Deutsch, Schlesinger... Warnford-court
Deutsch, Franz..... Warnford-court
De Zoete & Gorton .. 27, Throgmorton-street
De Zoete, Herman W... 27, Throgmorton street
De Zoete, Walter M... 27, Throgmorton street
Dickinson, John ..... 64, Gresham-street
Dickson & Holman .... 16A, Tokenhouse-yard
Dillon, Arthur H. .... 2, Copthall chambers
Dimond, George H. .. 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Dixon, Charles ..... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Dodd, Percy T. ..... 3, Copthall buildings
Dodgson, Gerald C. .. 2, Austin Friars
Dodgson, Henley F. .. 26, Royal Exchange
Dodgson, William H... 26, Royal Exchange
Doidge, Charles F. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Doidge, Thomas T. ... 2, Copthall buildings
Dolphin, Son & Fisher 4, Copthall buildings
Dolphin, Edward J. .. 4, Copthall buildings
Dolphin, James ..... 4, Copthall buildings
Donegan, Frank J. .... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Donelly, Arthur McL... 6, Throgmorton-street
Dormer, Harold I. .... 70, Cornhill
Douglas, J. M. & Co... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Dove, Walter H. ..... 24, Austin Friars
Downie, Frederick W... 18, Bishopsgate-st. Within Drake, Arthur T. .... 23 & 25, Old Broad-street
Drew, Geoffrey H. .... 4, Bishopsgate-st. Within Drew, Harvey R. .... 4, Bishopsgate-st. Within Dreyfus, Edmond .... Salisbury ho., London Wall
Drucker & Morris .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Drucker, Henry ..... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Du Cane, R. D. G.... 6, Tokenhouse-yard
Dudgeon, E. B. ..... 62, Threadneedle-street
Dufour, Charles M. .. 10 and 11, Austin Friars
Dunbar, Fraser S. .. 27, Throgmorton-street
Duncum, William J. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Dury, Frank ..... 29, Cornhill
Duveen, Henry, Jun.. 14, Angel-court
Dyas, Richard S. V. .. 20, Bishopsgate-st. Within Dyer Brothers ..... 79, Cornhill
Dyer, Conrad M. ..... 79, Cornhill
Dyer, Thomas ..... 79, Cornhill
Dyson, Bernard P. .... 2A, Copthall-court

Eardley, Edward C. E. 13, Copthall-court
Earle, Alfred ..... 14, Copthall-avenue
Eaton, Richard W. .. 26, Birchin-lane
Edinger & Asch ..... 7, Lothbury
Edinger, Otto H. ..... 7, Lothbury
Edward, James K ..... Warnford-court
Edwardes, Lewis .... 18, Austin Friars
Edwards, Charles P. .. Warnford-court
Edwards, Eben W. W.. 2, Finch-lane
Edwards, Evan ..... 16A, Tokenhouse-yard
Eiloart, Alfred ..... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Eiser, J. G. & Co.... 23, Austin Friars
Eiser, John G. ..... 23, Austin Friars
Elam, Edward S. ..... Blomfield ho., London Wall
Elin, George H. A. .. 11, Copthall-court
Elkington, Arthur J... 7A, Austin Friars
Elliott, F. W. & Co... 13, Copthall-court
Elliott, Frederick W... 13, Copthall-court
Ellis & Co.' ..... 1, Cornhill
Ellis, Percy ..... 8, Copthall-court
Ellis, Sidney ..... 64, Gresham-street
Ellissen, G. & Co. .... 4, Drapers'-gardens
Ellissen, Gustav ..... 4, Drapers'-gardens
Ellissen, Herbert ..... 4, Drapers'-gardens
Ellissen, Victor A. .... 42, Gresham house
Elworthy, Frank T. .. 20, Copthall-avenue
Emberson & Hughes .. 4, Drapers'-gardens
Emberson, Alfred J. .. 4, Drapers'-gardens
Emslie, Alexander .... 13, Copthall-court
Enfield, Viscount .... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Engel, Frank ..... Copthall house, 13, Copthall-avenue
Engelbert & Schloesser 11, Copthall-court
Engelbert, Charles .... 11, Copthall-court
Encell, Charles A. .... 4, Queen Victoria-street
Epstein, Maximilian .. 6, Drapers'-gardens
Erroll, Theodor J. B... 5, Copthall buildings
Escombe, Robert & Co. 23, Austin Friars
Escombe, John ..... 8, Great Winchester-street
Etheridge, E. J. C. &Co. Swan ho., Gt. Swan-alley
Etheridge, E. J. C. .. Swan ho., Gt. Swan-alley
Ettlinger, Julius ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Evans, Emslie & Co... 13, Copthall-court
Evans, Henry J. ..... 29, Cornhill
Evans, William H. .. 13, Copthall-court
Evennett, C. O. C. .. 38, Throgmorton-street
Evennett, Francis C... 38, Throgmorton-street
Everitt, Walter G. .. 31, Throgmorton-street
Evers, Henry M. C..... Warnford-court
Eykyn Brothers ..... 1, Tokenhouse buildings

Fairholme, Henry W... 20, Bishopsgate-st. Within Falkenheim, Franz .... 28, Throgmorton-street
Farish & Dawkins ..... 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Farish, Robert W. .... 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Farlow, John A..... 2, Copthall-court
Farnes, Henry D. .... 2, Copthall buildings
Farnham, George F. .. 70, Cornhill
Farquhar, G. F. R. .... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Farrar, Frederick M... 6, Moorgate-street
Farrar, John M. ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Farrell & Vaughan .... 5, Drapers'-gardens
Farrell, William L. .. 5, Drapers'-gardens
Faulconer, William R.. 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Faulkner, Percy R. .. 61, Old Broad-street
Faull, Anthony T. ..... 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Fawcett, James H. .... 33, Old Broad-street
Featherstone, Forsyth & Roberts ..... 5, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Featherstone, John F... 5, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Feetham, Robert ..... 99, Gresham street
Feiling, Charles H. .. 13, Copthall-court
Felkin, W. S. ..... 3, Copthall buildings
Fenn & Crosthwaite .. 10, Moorgate-street
Fenner, Charles E. ... 63, Cornhill
Fenwick, F. N. N. .... Warnford-court
Fernee, Joseph A. .... St. Stephen's chambers
Few, Maurice H. ..... 5, Lothbury
Field & Glanvill ..... 3, Copthall buildings
Fielding, Son, Macleod 2, Copthall buildings
Fielding, Frank C. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Fielding, Lewis & Runchman ..... 3, Adam's ct., Old Broad-st.
Fielding, William W... 3, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Fiennes, Hon. E., M.P. 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Fifield, John G. C. .... 43-6, Threadneedle-street
Fisher, Algernon ..... 4, Copthall buildings
Fison, Thomas A. .... 39, Throgmorton-street
Fitzgerald, B. J. H. .. 19, Throgmorton-avenue
FitzGerald, Hon. E. .. 24, Austin Friars
Flachfeld, J. & Sons .. Warnford-court
Flachfeld, Alfred .... Warnford-court
Flachfeld, Julius ..... Warnford-court
Flachfeld, Oscar ..... Warnford-court
Fleischmann, Louis .... 31, Throgmorton-street
Fleming, Edward .... 7, Finch-lane
Fletcher, Sidney J. B.. 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Flint, Harold A. ..... 11, Copthall-court
Flower, Cecil O. ..... 1, Angel-court
Foa, Ferdinand E. .... 4, Throgmorton-avenue
Foley, Arthur P. ..... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Foote and Adams ..... 19, Old Broad-street
Forbes, Wilson & Christie 53, New Broad-street
Forbes, Edward B. .... 53, New Broad-street
Forrest, George F. .... Stock Exchange
Forsyth, David C. .... 36, Throgmorton-street
Forsyth, W. S. A. .... 5, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Foster & Braithwaite... 27, Austin Friars
Foster, Frederick J. .. 2 & 3, Old Broad-street
Fowler & Hewkley .... 4, Copthall buildings
Foxwell, Douglas L. .. Warnford-court
Fradgley, Elsey W. .... 62, Threadneedle-street
Francis, Herbert D. .. 7 & 8, Gt. Winchester-st.
Francis, R. & Sons .... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Francis, R. H. M. ..... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Francis, Robert G. .... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Frankel, Otto & Co. .. 2, Drapers'-gardens
Frankel, Otto ..... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Franklin, Harry W. .. 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Fraser, Alister G. .... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Fraser, William D. C... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Freeman, G. & Co. .... 23, Throgmorton-street
Freeman, George ..... 23, Throgmorton-street
Freeman, Richard .... 23, Throgmorton-street
Fremantle & Co. ..... 77-80, Palmerston house
Fremantle, Ronald A... 77-80, Palmerston house
Friedberger, J. & Co. 5, Copthall court
Friedberger, J. C. M... 5, Copthall-court
Friedberger, W. S. .... 5, Copthall court
Frost, K. & Hicks .... 2A, Copthall-court
Frost, John K. ..... 2A, Copthall court
Fulton, David L. ..... Palmerston house

Galloway & Pearson.... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Galloway, Francis T... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Galloway, W. J. ..... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Gamburg, Hugo F. .. 10, Drapers'-gardens
Game, William ..... 8½, Angel-court
Gardner, Alfred ..... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Gardner, Arthur ..... 13, Copthall-court
Gardner, Charles ..... 13, Copthall-court
Gardner, Samuel .... 13, Copthall-court
Gardom, Ernst C. .... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Gardom, Herbert A. .. 74, Cornhill
Garratt, Wardell & Westcott ..... 58, Old Broad-street
Garratt, Frank T. .... St. Stephen's chambers
Garratt, Henry J. .... 58, Old Broad-street
Gascoyne & Co. ..... 1, Copthall chambers
Gascoyne, Ernest ..... 1, Copthall chambers
Gaskell, Henry ..... Stock Exchange
Gastrell, Cecil B. H... 6, Drapers'-gardens
Gaury, Hubert S. B... 9, Copthall house
Gethen, Harry H. .... 16, Tokenhouse-yard
Gibbes, George H. .... 38, Throgmorton-street
Gibbes, Wyndham .... 38, Throgmorton-street
Gibbes, Wyndham T. .. 38, Throgmorton-street
Gibbs, J., Son & Smith 29, Cornhill
Gibbs, Frank E. ..... 29, Cornhill
Gibbs, John ..... 29, Cornhill
Gibson, Edward H. .. 22, Finch-lane
Gielgud, Frank ..... 31, Throgmorton-street
Gilbey, Southard & Co. 2, Copthall buildings
Gilbey, Southard ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Giles & Overbury ..... 14, Angel-court
Giles, Francis T. ..... 14, Angel-court
Gillespie, James ..... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Gillham, H. W. C. .... 61, Old Broad-street
Gilson, Edward J. .... 14, Austin Friars
Glanvill, Cornelius R. 3, Copthall buildings
Glanvill, Henry ..... 3, Copthall buildings
Glanvill, Henry N..... 3, Copthall buildings
Glassborow, C. A. .... 5, Lothbury
Glassborow, W. H. .. 54, Cornhill
Glasscock, Wallace .... 11, Angel-court
Glover, Bernard R. .... 6A, Austin Friars
Glyn, Richard M. .... 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Godefroi Brothers .... 11, Copthall-court
Godefroi, Edward .... 11, Copthall-court
Godefroi, Louis ..... 11, Copthall-court
Godfrey, J. R. R. & Son 79, Cornhill
Godfrey, Raymond H... 79, Cornhill
Godfrey, W., & Co. ... 11, Copthall-court
Godfrey, William ..... 11, Copthall-court
Godfrey, William H. .. 11, Copthall-court
Goetz, Felix B. ..... 6, Throgmorton-street
Goff & Penn ..... 2, Royal Exchange-avenue
Goff, Charles W. ..... 2, Royal Exchange-avenue
Goldie, Albert ..... 23 & 25, Old Broad-street
Goldie, Barré A. H... 57, Old Broad-street
Golding, Charles T. .. 4, Hercules-passage
Goldschmidt. Carl .... 6, Drapers'-gardens
Goldsmidt, Henry F. .. 28, Throgmorton-street
Goldsmith, Leopold & Co. 4, Drapers'-gardens
Goldsmith, Leopold ... 4, Drapers'-gardens
Goldsmith, St. Barbe... 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Goldstone, Charles J... 3, London Wall buildings
Goodison, Henry E. .. 2, Austin Friars
Gordon, Francis F. .... Stock Exchange
Gordon, Harold H. .... 1, Cornhill
Gordon, H. E. & Co... 4, Sun-court, Cornhill
Gordon, Henry E. .. 4, Sun-court, Cornhill
Gordon, P. & Co. .... 1, Hatton-court
Gordon and Barton .. Warnford-court
Gordon, William J. .... Warnford-court
Gordon, William E. .. Stock Exchange
Gore & Co. ..... 5, Lothbury
Gosling, Edward L. .... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Gosschalk, J. & H. .... 13, Copthall-court
Gosschalk, Henry D. .. 13, Copthall-court
Gosschalk, Joseph H... 13, Copthall-court
Gould, Arthur W. .... 6, Drapers'-gardens
Gould, Frank H. C. .. 3, Adam's-court
Gould, John ..... 11, Angel-court
Goult, Walter ..... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Govett, Sons & Co. .... 6, Throgmorton-street
Govett, Francis A. .... 6, Throgmorton-street
Govett, Frederick L. .. 6, Throgmorton-street
Grant, Stuart C. ..... 26, Austin Friars
Gray, Henry H. ..... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Green & Griffin ..... 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Green, Henry C. ..... 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Green, Knethell W. ... 3, Adam's-court
Greener, Dreyfus & Co. Salisbury ho., London Wall
Greener, John H. .... Salisbury ho., London Wall
Greenfield, Frederick .. 2, Drapers'-gardens
Greenfield, George P... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Greenfield, H. S. B.... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Greensmith, George .... 6, Throgmorton-street
Greenwell, W. & Co... 2, Finch-lane
Greenwell, Bernard E... 2, Finch-lane
Greenwell, Sir W. L., Bt. 2, Finch-lane
Greenwood & Co..... 28, Austin Friars
Greenwood, Harold .... 2, Angel-court
Grenfell, Cecil A. .... 6, Throgmorton-street
Grenfell, R. F. J. .... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Greyham, Sim ..... 4, Warnford-court
Gribble, Herbert W. R. 6A, Austin Friars
Grieveson, Grant & Co. 61, Old Broad-street
Grieveson, Thomas .... 61, Old Broad-street
Griffin, Richard S. .... 5, Throgmorton avenue
Griffith, L. J. T..... 29, Threadneedle-street
Grimaldi, C. G. ..... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Grounds, George F. .... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Growse, John ..... 5, Lothbury
Grumbar & Sée ..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Grumbar, Julian C..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Grünebaum, Isidore ... 12 & 13, Angel-court
Grylls & West ..... 29, Threadneedle-street
Grylls, John P. ..... 29, Threadneedle-street
Gully, W. C. ..... 20, Bishopsgate-st. Within Gunning, Alfred ..... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Gurney, Harold ..... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Gurney, L. W. ..... 1, Austin Friars
Gutmann, E. & Co. .. 5, Tokenhouse-yard
Gutmann, Emil ..... 5, Tokenhouse-yard
Gutmann, Emil, Jun. .. 28, Austin Friars
Gutmann & Rosskamm 4, Drapers'-gardens
Gutmann, Ernest B. .. 4, Drapers'-gardens
Gwinner, H. E. & Co... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Gwinner, Harry E. .. 1, Drapers'-gardens
Gwyther, Douglas H... 6A, Austin Friars

Haas, Carl D. ..... 15, Throgmorton-avenue
Haas, Julius ..... Warnford-court
Hacking, Arthur ..... 13, Copthall-court
Hadrill, Walter F. .. 1, Drapers'-gardens
Haes & Sons ..... 17, Bishopsgate-st. Within Haes, Andrew ..... 17, Bishopsgate-st. Within Haes, Arthur E. M..... 17, Bishopsgate-st. Within Haes, Charles P. M. .. 17, Bishopsgate-st. Within Haes, John A. ..... 17, Bishopsgate-st. Within Haggard, F. C. D. .... 6, Lothbury
Hale, W. Webb & Co... 15, Austin Friars
Hale, Charles H. ..... 15, Austin Friars
Hale, William W. .... 15, Austin Friars
Halfhead, Robert N. .. 4, Copthall-court
Hall, Frederic E. .... 57½, Old Broad-street
Hall, John F. ..... 42, Gresham house
Halley, William T. .... Moorgate-ct., Moorgate-pl.
Halsey, Francis E. .... 13, King's Arms-yard
Halsted, T. & E. ..... 47, Cornhill
Halsted, Walter F. .... 47, Cornhill
Hamilton, Mackay & Thomson ..... 30, Throgmorton-street
Hamilton, T. & Co. .. 34A, Throgmorton-street
Hamilton, James B. .. Stock Exchange
Hamilton, John J. .... 30, Throgmorton-street
Hamilton, W. R. T. .. 28, Austin Friars
Hammond, C. & Son .. 15, Angel-court
Hammond, Arthur B... 15, Angel-court
Hammond, Charles .... 15, Angel-court
Hammond, F. J. ..... 28, Austin Friars
Hampson, Herbert P... 18, Old Broad-street
Hancock, C. B. C. .... 18, Old Broad-street
Hancock, W. W. B. .. Blomfield ho., London Wall
Hanning, J. H. S. .... 99, Gresham-street
Hanson, Charles A. .. 99, Gresham-street
Hanson, C. E. B. .... 99, Gresham-street
Harbord, The Hon. A. 3, Drapers'-gardens
Harding, James ..... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Harding, R. R. ..... 5, Copthall buildings
Hardman, E. de R. .. 19, Old Broad-street
Hardy, Arthur J. .... White ho., Telegraph-st.
Hardy, Harold ..... 7, Finch-lane
Harker & Co. ..... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Harker, John C. ..... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Harris & Co. ..... 21, Birchin-lane
Harris, Bernard F. .... 21, Birchin-lane
Harris, Ernest E. ..... 21, Birchin-lane
Harris & Webster ..... St. Stephen's chambers
Harris, Frederick N... Swan ho., Great Swan-alley,
Harris, Richard C. .... St. Stephen's chambers
Harris, Robert W. .... 21, Birchin-lane
Harris, W. H., C.M.G. 29A, Cornhill
Harrison, Irving & Co. 3, Copthall buildings
Harrison, Irving H. S. 3, Copthall buildings
Harrison, L. F. ..... 25, Austin Friars
Harrison, Robert H. C. 25, Austin Friars
Harrower, David B. .. 4 & 6, Copthall-avenue
Hart, Angel H. & Co. Gresham house
Hart, Angel H. ..... Gresham house
Hart and Bach ..... 4, Angel-court
Hart, Cyril E. ..... 4, Angel-court
Hart, Ernest W. ..... Warnford-court
Hart, Henry B. ..... 4, Angel-court
Hart, Joseph H. ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Hart, W. H. & Co..... 26, Old Broad street
Hart, William H. .... 26, Old Broad-street
Hartley, Sidney ..... 4, Copthall chambers
Haselden, E. B. & Co. 27, Throgmorton street
Haselden, E. B. ..... 27, Throgmorton-street
Hawes, Alfred ..... Stock Exchange
Hawes, Henry) G. T. .. 5, Lothbury
Haxell, Arthur B. .... 56, Old Broad-street
Hay, Hon. C. G., M.P. Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Haydon, George ..... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Hecht, Frederic W. .... 4, Angel-court
Hecht, Henry J. ..... 7, Lothbury
Hedderwick & Schultz. 2, Copthall buildings
Hedderwick, R. H. .... 2, Copthall buildings
Hedgeland, John G. .. 6, Copthall-court
Heinemann and Pershouse ..... 6, Drapers'-gardens
Heinemann, E. L. .... 6, Drapers'-gardens
Helbert, Wagg & Russell S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Helps, F. A. & Son.... 75, Old Broad-street
Henderson, Alec P. .... 28, Austin Friars
Henderson, Sir A., Bart. 28, Austin Friars
Henderson, Alexander . 11, Birchin-lane
Henderson, George .... 3 & 4, Adam's-court
Henderson, Henry W... 28, Austin Friars
Henriques, Edward A.. 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Hensler, Thomas G... 26, Old Broad-street
Hensley, Egerton H. E. 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Herbage, Sidney F. .. 4, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Herbert & Webb ..... 5, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Herbert, Tom C. .... 5, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Herbert, G. S. & Son.. 6, Finch-lane
Herbert, Edward .... 6, Finch-lane
Herbert, Edward Y. .. 6, Finch-lane
Heriot, Charles H. .. 27, Throgmorton-street
Heritage, Leopold .... 13, Copthall-court
Herman & Kent ..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Herman, Ernest ..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Heron, Gilbert ..... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Hertslet, A. L. A. .... 13, Copthall-court
Hertz, Henry A. ..... 23, Austin Friars
Hertz, Oscar ..... Warnford-court
Herzfeld, Michael .... 6, Tokenhouse-yard
Herzfelder, Maurice .. Warnford-court
Herzfelder, Willy .... Warnford-court
Heseltine, Powell & Co. 1, Drapers'-gardens
Heseltine, Christopher.. 1, Drapers'-gardens
Heseltine, Edward L... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Heseltine, Evelyn .... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Hess, Regensberg & Atchley ..... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Hess, Julius F. ..... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Heseltine, Frederick B. 14, Angel-court
Hewitt, Robert B. .. 28, Threadneedle-street
Hewkley, George ..... 4, Copthall buildings
Hewkley, Henry ..... 4, Copthall buildings
Hewkley, Jesse ..... 4, Copthall buildings
Heywood, W. R. ..... 58, Old Broad-street
Hichens, Harrison & Co. 25, Austin Friars
Hichens, Basil S. .... 25, Austin Friars
Hichens, James B. .... 25, Austin Friars
Hichens, John K. J... 25, Austin Friars
Hickman, Walter F. .. 10, Drapers'-gardens
Hicks, Herbert ..... 27, Throgmorton-street
Hicks, Peter ..... 2A, Copthall court
Higgens, Claude R..... 2, Copthall buildings
Higgins, Charles J. .. White ho., Telegraph-st.
Higgins, Leonard R. .. 9, Drapers'-gardens
Higginson, E. G. F. .. 4 and 6, Copthall-avenue
Hilder & Towse..... 13, Gresham house
Hilder, Clifton T. .... 13, Gresham house
Hill & Co. ..... 29, Threadneedle-street
Hill, Garrington L. W. Bartholomew house
Hill, Henry J. ..... Bartholomew house
Hill, James W. ..... 3, Tokenhouse buildings

Hill, John & Sons .... Bartholomew house
Hill, Joseph E. ..... 10, Moorgate-street
Hillersdon, Leslie & Co. 3, Copthall-court
Hillersdon, A. P. .... 3, Copthall-court
Hillier, George Lacy.. 9, St. Mildred-court
Hilton, Gibbes & Smith 38, Throgmorton-street
Hindmarsh, D. S. .... 2, Cushion-court
Hirsch, A. & Co. ..... 28, Austin Friars
Hirsch, Henry ..... 28, Austin Friars
Hirsch, Hugo ..... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Hirsch, Joseph ..... 28, Throgmorton-street
Hoare, Walter E. .... 4, Copthall chambers
Hoblyn, C. D. & King . 18, Bishopsgate-st. Within Hoblyn, Charles D. .. 18, Bishopsgate-st. Within Hoblyn, Reginald A... 18, Bishopsgate-st. Within Hodding, King & Co. .. 14, Angel-court
Hodges, Edgar E. W... 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Hodgson, C. R. & Co. 1, Copthall chambers
Hodgson, Charles R... 1, Copthall chambers
Hodgson, G. & Co. .... 63, Old Broad-street
Hodgson, Arthur ..... 63, Old Broad-street
Hodgson, Gerald .... 63, Old Broad-street
Hodgson, Reginald .... 63, Old Broad-street
Hog, Thomas A. F. .. White ho., Telegraph-street
Hogg, Harding C. .... 8¼, Angel-court
Holden, John ..... 2, Finch lane
Holden, Norman E. .. 17, Bishopsgate-st. Within Holland & Balfour .... 2, Cushion-court
Holland, Charles ..... 2, Cushion-court
Holland, Godfrey .... 23 & 25, Old Broad-street
Hollebone Brothers & Trench ..... 18, Birchin-lane
Hollebone, C. V. .... 18, Birchin-lane
Hollebone, Henry .... 18, Birchin-lane
Holman, William G.... 16A, Tokenhouse-yard
Holmes, Piers N. .... 14, Angel-court
Holms & Franklin .... 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Holms, Douglas L. .. 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Holt, Louis E. F. .... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Homan, Ralph ..... 2, Austin Friars
Honey, T. E. ..... 23 & 25, Old Broad-street
Hood, Arthur ..... 15, Throgmorton-avenue
Hood, George E. W. .. 68, Lombard-street
Hope, Dodgson & Co... 26, Royal Exchange
Hope, George P. ..... 26, Royal Exchange
Hopkinson, Miles S..... 13, Gresham house
Hore & Doidge ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Hore, Charles C. ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Horley, Cyril T. ..... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Hornby, James..... 27, Throgmorton-street
Hornby, Richard A. .. 33, Old Broad-street
Horne & Co. ..... 23, Moorgate-street
Horne, Edmund L. .... 23, Moorgate-street
Hoskins, Arthur S. .... 12, Angel-court
Hough, John J. ..... 6, Drapers'-gardens
How, Edward R. ..... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Howard, George A. H.. 24, Austin Friars
Howard, George C. .. 16, Tokenhouse-yard
Howe, Newbold & Co... 13, Copthall-court
Howe, Harold M. .... 13, Copthall-court
Hudson, Ernest J. .... 19, Old Broad-street
Huggins, A. E. & Co... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Huggins, Arthur E. .. 7, Drapers'-gardens
Hughes & Peevor .... 28, Threadneedle-street
Hughes, Claude N. .. 4, Drapers'-gardens
Hughes, John H. .... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Hughes, Samuel ..... Warnford-court
Hulbert, Smith,& Co... 1, Royal Exchange-avenue
Hulbert, William H. .. 1, Royal Exchange-avenue
Hunt, Cox & Co. ..... 29, Threadneedle-street
Hunt, Holdsworth .... 29, Threadneedle-street
Hunt, Robert..... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Hunter, William..... 61, Old Broad-street
Huntsman, James E... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Hurst, Peter ..... 5, Drapers'-gardens
Hutchinson, Symes & Scott ..... 15, Angel-court
Hutchinson, Albert H. 73, Cornhill
Hutchinson, E. C..... 73, Cornhill
Huygens, Willem ..... 9, Drapers'-gardens

Ichenhäuser, Henry ...4, Angel-court
Ilsley, Reginald J. .... 3, Newman's-ct., Cornhill
Inchbald, J. & Son .... 2, Copthall court
Inchbald, Charles E. .. 2, Copthall court
Inchbald, Howard .... 2, Copthall court
Inglis, Alexander B... 3, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Inglis, Robert W. .... 3, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Inman & Co. ..... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Inman, George T. .... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Ionides, Ambrose C. .. 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Isaac, Albert L. ..... 15, Angel-court
Ive, Thomas J..... 28, Throgmorton-street

Jacks, William R. .... 5, Copthall buildings
Jackson, A. H. & Co. 2, Angel-court
Jackson, A. Hardie .... 2, Angel-court
Jackson, Powell & Geiger ..... 30, Throgmorton street
Jackson, Charles F..... 30, Throgmorton street
Jacobs, Alfred H. .... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Jacobs, Claude O. .... Stock Exchange
Jacobs, G. L. & Co. .. 61, Old Broad-street
Jacobs, Gordon L. .... 61, Old Broad-street
Jacobs, Hyam E. ..... 11, Copthall court
Jacobs, Walter ..... 5, Copthall-court
James, A. F. B. & Co. 121-2, Gresham house
James, Arthur F. B. .. 121-2, Gresham house
James, Ernest E. .... 18, Old Broad-street
James, Samuel ..... 3, Copthall chambers
Janson, Frederick A.... 21, Birchin-lane
Janvrin & Merriman .. 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Janvrin, Frederick C... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Jaquemet, Francis G... Warnford-court
Jaques, A. R. & Co. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Jaques, Austin R. .... 2, Copthall buildings
Jay, G. H. & A. M. .. 9, Old Broad-street
Jay, Alfred M. ..... 24, Austin Friars
Jay, Arthur E. ..... 24, Austin Friars
Jefferis, Percy W. .... 5, Lothbury
Jenkyns, Edward E... 11, Copthall-court
Jessop, Charles B. .... 24, Throgmorton-street
Jeudwine, E. J. W. .. S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
John, Reginald E. H... 31, Threadneedle-street
Johnson, Frederick G.. 53, New Broad street
Johnson, Robert V. .. 28, Threadneedle-street
Johnston, Henry A. .. Bartholomew house
Johnston, John O. L... Warnford court
Jonas, Benjamin ..... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Jonas, Morris J. ..... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Jones, Blood & Hart.. Warnford court
Jones, Theodore ..... Warnford-court
Jones, Chas. F. ..... 9, Tokenhouse-yard
Jones, E. & Simpson .. 2, Copthall buildings
Jones, Frank W. H... 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Jones, Frederick G. .. 181-2, Gresham house
Jones, Harold I. ..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Jones, H. Gwyther .. 28, Throgmorton street
Jones, J. A. & Co..... 75, Old Broad-street
Jones, John A. ..... 75, Old Broad-street
Jones, John H. H. .... 75, Old Broad-street
Jones, Robert S. .... 4, Copthall chambers
Jones, Stafford F. .... 4, Austin Friars
Jones, Thomas R. .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Jones, William ..... 4, Drapers'-gardens
Johnson, G. C. Ashton.. 23, Austin Friars
Joseph, Bertram E. .. 2, Drapers'-gardens
Joseph, George P. .... 23 & 25, Old Broad-street
Joseph, J. & Son ..... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Joseph, Percy H. .... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Jourdan & Pawle ..... 1, Cushion-court
Judd, Harry S. ..... S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.

Kahn & Herzfelder .... Warnford-court
Kahn, George H. .... Warnford-court
Kahn, John ..... Warnford-court
Karpeles, Joseph N. .. 13, Copthall-court
Kaulla, William ..... 15, Throgmorton-avenue
Kay, Robert C. ..... 23, Austin Friars
Kaye, Stanley ..... 3, Newman's-ct., Cornhill
Keeble, Gilbert E. .... Stock Exchange
Keeling, Graham B. .. 11, Birchin-lane
Keeling, Samuel T. .. 39, Throgmorton-street.
Keell, Herbert ..... 13, Copthall-court
Keen, Cobb & Co. .... 12, Copthall-court
Keen, Alfred G. .... 12, Copthall-court
Keen, Alfred J. ..... 12, Copthall-court
Keene, Arthur ..... 29, Threadneedle-street
Keller & Petty ..... St. Stephen's chambers
Keller, Frederic W. .. St. Stephen's chambers
Kelly, William H. .... Copthall ho., Copthall-av.
Kelsey, Higginson & Syrett ..... 4 and 6, Copthall-avenue
Kelsey, Howard ..... 4 and 6, Copthall-avenue
Kennedy, B. V. R. .. 3, Adam's court
Kent, Chas. W. ..... 16, Tokenhouse-yard
Kent, Stephen W. .... 108, Bishopsgate-st. Within Kerwin, James ..... 5, Copthall-court
Kilby, B. M. ..... 5, Copthall buildings
Kildahl, A. S. ..... 2, Cushion-court
Killik & Co. ..... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Killik, Stephen H. M... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Kimpton & Puckle .... 5, Angel-court
Kimpton, Frank E. .. 5, Angel-court
King, Vail & Benson .. 4, Adams'-court
King, Livius S. ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Kino, John H. ..... 4, Austin Friars
Kirk, Edmund W. R... St. Stephen's chambers
Kitcat, Mortimer & Aitken ..... S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Kitcat, Sidney A. P... S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Kitching & Cuming .... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Kitching, Albert G. .. 7, Drapers'-gardens
Kitching, G. A. N. .... 2, Cushion-court
Kittoe, Montgu F. M. S. 16, Tokenhouse-yard
Knight, Fletcher & Co. 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Knight & Searle ..... Bartholomew house
Knight, Thomas J. .... Bartholomew house
Knight, John A. ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Knocker, C. McM..... 1, Copthall chambers
Koch & Co. ..... 27, Throgmorton-street
Koch, Hugo ..... 19, Old Broad-street
Koch, Victor ..... 27, Throgmorton-street
Koch, William M. .... 1, Hatton-court
Kohn, Arthur ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Koickmann, W. A. & Co. 7, Austin Friars
Koickmann, W. A. .... 7, Austin Friars
Krailsheimer, J., & Co. 6, Drapers'-gardens
Krailsheimer, Julius .. 6, Drapers'-gardens
Kulb, Herbert L. ..... 62, London Wall
Kyd, Andrew M..... 18, Austin Friars

Labouchere, C. E. E... 3, Cushion-court
Ladenburg, W. F. .... 15, Austin Friars
Laing & Cruickshank.. 3, Drapers'-gardens
Laird, George S. ..... 21, Gresham house
Lambrinudi, L. & Co... 5, Drapers'-gardens
Lambrinudi, Leonidas . 5, Drapers'-gardens
Laming, Percy A. L... 15, Angel-court
Lamming, J. & Co. .. 65, London Wall
Lamming, Joseph .... 65, London Wall
Landells, Walter .... 27, Throgmorton street
Landon, Charles H. .. 29, Threadneedle-street
Lane Brothers ..... 17, Tokenhouse-yard
Lane, Edward W. .... 17, Tokenhouse-yard
Lane, Lindsay ..... 61, Old Broad-street
Lardelli, Thomas F. .. 16, Tokenhouse-yard
Last, William C. .... 5, Lothbury
Laurence, Sons & Gardner ..... 13, Copthall-court
Laurence, Eugene M. .. 20, Copthall-avenue
Laurence, Percy E. .. 13, Copthall-court
Laurie, Milbank & Co. 31, Threadneedle-street
Laurie, A. St. G. de McA. ..... 31, Threadneedle-street
Laurie, Allan D. ..... 58, Old Broad-street
Laurie, Herbert ..... 31, Threadneedle-street
Laurie, John D. ..... 31, Threadneedle-street
Laurie, Ranald M. .... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Laurie, William H. .... 31, Threadneedle-street
Lavarack, Hamlet .... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Lawford, G. & Co..... 9, Tokenhouse-yard
Lawford, Alfred W. .. 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Lawford, Benson ..... 9, Tokenhouse-yard
Lawford, Eustace A. .. 5, Austin Friars
Lawrence, Ernest F. .. 5, Copthall buildings
Lawson, Henry P. .... 2, Finch-lane
Lawson, William R. .. Stock Exchange
Lazarus, Albert & Co... 18, Austin Friars
Lazarus, Albert ..... 18, Austin Friars
Lazenby Bros. & Paine 20, Copthall-avenue
Lazenby, Edgar ..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Leaver, Mayor & Co... 6, Copthall-court
Leaver, Frank W. .... 6, Copthall-court
Le Marchant, H. C. .. 20, Copthall-avenue
Lee, Gerard ..... 12, Copthall-court
Lee, Gilbert S. ..... 31, Threadneedle-street
Lee, John H. ..... Stock Exchange
Leeman & Hancock.... Blomfield ho., London Wall
Leeman, Walter J. .... Blomfield ho., London Wall
Leeming Brothers .... 20, Bishopsgate-st. Within Leeming, John ..... 20, Bishopsgate-st. Within Legg, Edwin W. .... 13, Copthall-court
Leigh-Hunt, M. E. .. 3 & 4, Gt. Winchester-st.
Leney, John A. ..... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Leon, Wilfred M. .... 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Leo-Wolf, Albert W... 27, Throgmorton-street
Leppard, Silverthorne 9, Copthall-avenue
Leppard, Percy S. .. 9, Copthall-avenue
Lermitte, Horace A. .. 13, Austin Friars
Leslie, Frederick J. .. 3, Copthall-court
Leveson-Gower, H. D. G. 27, Austin Friars
Levett, Sydney O. B... 7, Austin Friars
Levett, Victor G. .... 7, Austin Friars
Levita, Arthur F. .... 1, Hatton-court, Threadneedle-street
Levy, Robert S. ..... 61, Old Broad-street
Lewis, Henry D. ..... 28 & 31, Bishopsgate-street Within Lewis, William ..... 3, Adam's-ct., Old Broad st.
Ley, James V. ..... 7, Adam's-court
Lichtenstadt, August.. 38, Throgmorton-street
Lienard, Peter ..... 10 & 11, Austin Friars
Lightbody & Forsyth.. 35, Throgmorton-street
Lightbody, Charles R.. 35, Throgmorton-street
Lightfoot, Edward T... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Lilienfeld, Arthur .... 28, Austin Friars
Lindeck, Cahn & Co... 6 & 7, Copthall-court
Lindeck, Henry J. E. 6 & 7, Copthall-court
Lindo, Eustace A. .. 2A, Copthall-court
Lindow, King & Co... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Linton, Clarke & Co... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Littlejohn, A. & Co... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Littlejohn, Alexander .. 2, Drapers'-gardens
Llewellyn, T. L. M... 24, Austin Friars
Lloyd, Hardy, & Corri 7, Finch-lane
Lloyd, Ernest O. ..... 7, Finch-lane
Lloyd & Ward ..... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Locke, Thomas S. .... 2A, Copthall-court
Loddiges, George ..... 11, Copthall-court
Loeb, Sydney J..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Loewenstein, Rattle&Co. 26, Austin Friars
Loewenstein, Leopold.. 26, Austin Friars
Loewi, Paul R. ..... 61, Old Broad-street
Lomer & Mackinnon .. Swan chmbrs., Copthall-av.
Lomer, Horace A. .... Swan chmbrs., Copthall-av.
Long, Arthur ..... 56, Old Broad-street
Lord Brothers ..... 4, Austin Friars
Lord, George ..... 4, Austin Friars
Lord, Percival F. G. .. 3, Threadneedle-street
Lord, Reginald S. .... 5, Copthall buildings
Lott, Herbert C. ..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Lovell, Sidney J. ..... 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Lovey, Alfred H. .... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Lowndes, G. W. S. .. 6, Throgmorton-street
Löwy, Ernest D. ..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Lubbock, Hon R. A. .. 43/6, Threadneedle-street
Lumsden & Co. ..... 29, Cornhill
Lumsden, Robert ..... 29, Cornhill
Lussignea, Alfred ..... 7, Drapers'-gardens

Maas, Hermann L. .... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Maas, Walter R. J. .. 3, Adam's-court
McAnally & Inglis.... 3, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
McArthur & Lord .... 3, Threadneedle-street
McArthur, William .... 3, Threadneedle-street
McDonell, Geoffrey L.. 29, Cornhill
McKenna, C. E. & Co.. 5, Lothbury
McLoughlin, Eugene .. 31, Lombard-street
McMullen, Leonard .. 16, Tokenhouse-yard
McNab, John ..... 11, Old Jewry chambers
McNeill, George P..... 5, Copthall buildings
McOstrich, N. A. .... 31, Threadneedle-street
MacGregor, Gregor .. 2, Cushion-court
MacNish, A. & Co. .... 74, Cornhill
Macandrew, Alan J. .. 3, Drapers'-gardens
Macdonald, Hugh D. .. 5, Lothbury
Macfadyen & Mercer .. 3, Adam's-court
Macfadyen, Archibald . 3, Adam's-court
Mackay, Alexander .. 30, Throgmorton-street
Mackay, Charles S. .. 11, Copthall-court
Mackenzie, William G. 27, Throgmorton-street
Mackinnon, Norman ... Swan chmbrs, Copthall-av.
Mackintosh, R. & Co. .. 66, Old Broad-street
Mackintosh, Robert .. 66, Old Broad-street
Maclagan, William E... 2, Cushion-court
Macleod, William M... 2, Copthall buildings
Macmillan, Thomas .. 75, Old Broad-street
Macnicoll & Co. ..... 35, Gresham house
Macnicoll, A. N. ..... 35, Gresham house
Macrae, Frank L. .... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Macrae, George A..... 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Magniac, Williamson & Co. ..... 33, Old Broad-street
Magniac, Claude H. .. 33, Old Broad street
Maguire, Sidney C. .. 4, Austin Friars
Malcolmson, Vernon A. S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Malleson, Godfrey K... 29, Threadneedle-street
Mancor, John ..... 6, Copthall-court
Mandelkau, Hermann.. 8, Copthall-court
Mankiewicz, G. A. ..... Warnford-court
Marcus, C. & Co. .... 2A, Copthall-court
Marcus, E. S. & Co... 4, Warnford-court
Marcus, Edward S. .... 4, Warnford-court
Marcus, L. G. & Co... 28, Austin Friars
Marcus, Lewis G. .... 28, Austin Friars
Mares, Robert ..... 1, Copthall chambers
Marks, Bulteel Mills&Co. 31, Threadneedle-street
Markus, Robert ..... 7, Lothbury
Marsden, Percy & Co. 62, London Wall
Marsden, Percy M. M. 62, London Wall
Marshall & Co. ..... 61, Old Broad-street
Marshall, Henry W. .. 4, Adam's court
Marshall, Owen ..... 61, Old Broad-street
Marshall, W. E. ..... 13, George st., Mansion Ho.
Marshall, W. S. D. .. 13, George st., Mansion Ho.
Marten, Christopherson 9, Tokenhouse-yard
Marten, Frederick C... 9, Tokenhouse-yard
Martin, Alexander W.. 27, Throgmorton-street
Martin, Walter J. .... 9, Old Broad-street
Mason, J. & Son ..... 19, Old Broad-street
Massey, Richard ..... 21, Gresham house
Mathew, William E. .. 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Matthews, Thomas .... 27-30, Gresham house
Mathieson, Wilfrid .... 35, Throgmorton-street
Maxwell, Stuart G. .. Warnford-court
May, N. & Co. ..... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
May, Charles ..... 7, Adam's-court
May, Nathan ..... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
May, Edmund C. ..... 25, Austin Friars
May, Hamilton S. .... 20, Copthall-avenue
May, R. C. & Battersby 2A, Copthall-court
May, Richard C. ..... 2A, Copthall-court
Meade, James G. .... 4, Copthall-court
Meates, Sidney E. .... 2, Copthall buildings
Meates, William C. .. 3, Austin Friars
Medwin & Löwy ..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Mello, Henry J. ..... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Mendel & Myers ..... 6, Throgmorton-street

Mendel, Cæsar ..... 6, Throgmorton-street
Mendel, Henry B. .... Salisbury ho., London Wall
Mendelssohn & Co. .. 6, Austin Friars
Mendelssohn, M. ..... 6, Austin Friars
Mercer, Ernest A. .... 3, Adam's-court
Mercer, Sidney V. .... 26, Austin Friars
Merriman, Harry M. .. 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Merzbach, George .... 20, Copthall-avenue
Messel, Harold G. .... 31, Throgmorton-street
Messel, L. & Co. ..... 31, Throgmorton-street
Messel, Leonard C. R.. 31, Throgmorton-street
Messel, Ludwig ..... 31, Throgmorton-street
Metcalfe, George ..... 13, Copthall-court
Meyer, Hermann & Co. 11, Copthall-court
Meyer, Hermann ..... 11, Copthall-court
Meyer, Julius M. & Co. 6, Drapers'-gardens
Meyer, Julius M. .... 6, Drapers'-gardens
Meyers & Robertson .. 11, Copthall court
Meyers, Augustus .... 11, Copthall-court
Meyerstein, E. W. & Co. 1, Drapers'-gardens
Meyerstein, E. W..... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Middleton, W. N. & Co. 8, Finch-lane
Middleton, L. A. J. .. 8, Finch-lane
Middleton, W. N. .... 8, Finch-lane
Miéville, F. L. & Co... 11, Angel-court
Miéville, Amédée F. .. 11, Angel-court
Miéville, Frederick L... 11, Angel-court
Millar & Llewellyn .. 24, Austin Friars
Millar, William K. .... 24, Austin Friars
Millar, James & Co... 13, King's Arms-yard
Millar, James ..... 13, King's Arms-yard
Miller, Charles D. .... 3, Austin Friars
Miller, Charles J. .... 1, Angel-court
Milln & Robinson .... 2, Austin Friars
Milln, James S. ..... 2, Austin Friars
Millns, John H. ..... 28, Throgmorton-street
Mills, The Hon. E. J... 31, Threadneedle-street
Mitchell, Cecil H. .... 74, Cornhill
Mitford & Fradgley .. 62, Threadneedle-street
Mitford, Bertram G. .. 62, Threadneedle-street
Moatt, John ..... 28, Threadneedle-street
Mocatta & Foà ..... 4, Throgmorton-avenue
Mocatta, Ernest G. .... 4, Throgmorton-avenue
Molison, Arthur R. .... 3, Adam's-court
Monier-Williams, Torrington F. ..... 18, Austin Friars
Montagu, Oppenheim & Co. ..... 22, Austin Friars
Montagu, Lord C. W. A. 22, Austin Friars
Montefiore, C. E. S. .. 13, Copthall-court
Montefiore, E. S. .... 13, Copthall-court
Montefiore, H. J. ..... 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Montgomery, Basil, Fitzgerald & Co. .. 19, Throgmorton-avenue
Montgomery, Sir Basil T. G., Bart. ..... 19, Throgmorton-avenue
Moore, Taylor & Watson 20, Copthall-avenue
Moore, Leslie W. ..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Moreau, Ernest P. .... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Morgan, Harold E. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Morgan, Percy J. .... Swan ho., Gt. Swan-alley
Morgan, William .... 2, Copthall buildings
Morice, J. C. & C. W. 23, Old Broad-street
Morice, Charles J. .... 23, Old Broad-street
Morice, Norman ..... 23, Old Broad-street
Morice, Walter F. .... 23, Old Broad-street
Morison & Lermitte .. 13, Austin Friars
Morison, Walter ..... 13, Austin Friars
Moritz & Blyth ..... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Moritz, Martin R. .... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Morley, E. Evelyn .... 16, Tokenhouse-yard
Morris, Charles A. .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Morris, Fredk. A. .... 17, Bishopsgate-st. Within Morris, W. & Sons .... 57, Moorgate-street
Morris, Frank B. .... 57, Moorgate-street
Morris, Frank R. .... 57, Moorgate-street
Morris, Norman B. .... 57, Moorgate-street
Morrison, F. W. R. .... 2, Austin Friars
Morrison, Walter G. .. 54, Cornhill
Mortimer, H. S. ..... 5, Lothbury
Mortimer, P., Scotter & Co. 80, Lombard-street
Mortimer, Leonard .... 80, Lombard-street
Mortimer, Roger & Co. 5, Lothbury
Mortimer, W. & Son.. 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Mortimer, William .... 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Mortimer, W., Jun. .. S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Morton, Cyril ..... Moorgate-court
Morton Brothers ..... Bartholomew house
Morton, Robert ..... Bartholomew house
Morton, Thomas ..... Bartholomew house
Mosenthal, Philip H. .. 10, Drapers'-gardens
Mott, Arthur F. ..... Warnford-court
Moy, Hardman & Vanderveil ..... 19, Old Broad-street
Moy, Arthur, Jun. .. 19, Old Broad-street
Muir & Scott ..... 8, Finch-lane
Muir, James ..... 8, Finch-lane
Muir, Robert, jun. .... 1, Copthall chambers
Muir, Thomas ..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Muirhead, Henry J. .. Stock Exchange
Mullens, Marshall & Co. 13, George-st., Mansion Ho.
Mullens, J. A., Jun. .. 13, George-st., Mansion Ho.
Muller, Charles J. 9, Tokenhouse-yard
Mumford & Bicknell .. 4, Adam's-court
Mumford, Leonard .... 4, Adam's-court
Munro, Henry T. ..... 13, Austin Friars
Munro, William J. T... 18, Old Broad-street
Murphy & Charlesworth 20, Copthall-avenue
Murphy, Edward H. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Murphy, John O. .... 20, Copthall-avenue
Murton, C. A. & Son.. 48, Threadneedle-street
Murton, Charles L. .. 48, Threadneedle-street
Myer, Charles G. ..... White ho., Telegraph-street
Myers, Moss S. ..... 6, Throgmorton-street

Nasmith, Shephard & Co. 31, Threadneedle street
Nasmith, Arthur P. .. 31, Threadneedle street
Nasmith, Martin A. .. 31, Threadneedle-street
Nathan & Roselli .... 7, Adam's court
Nathan, David ..... 7, Adam's court
Nathan, Edward ..... 7, Adam's court
Neame, Douglas J. .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Nelke, Phillips & Co. .. 28, Throgmorton street
Nelke, Paul ..... 28, Throgmorton street
Neuwelt, Albert ..... 8, Drapers' gardens
Nevill, Horley, and Co. 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Nevill, Walter P. .... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Newall, William ..... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Newbery, George J. .. 26, Royal Exchange
Newbery, George R. .. 26, Royal Exchange
Newbold, Charles L. .. 13, Copthall-court
Newcomb, Basil ..... 3, Drapers' gardens
Newman, Gerard R. .. 13, Copthall-court
Newman, L. S. M. .... 3, Pope's Head-alley
Newson-Smith, F. E. .. 3, Pinner's-court
Newton, Alfred J. .... 26, Old Broad-street
Newton, John ..... Warnford-court
Nicholas, Montagu & Co. 29, Threadneedle-street
Nicholas, Montagu A... 29, Threadneedle-street
Nicholas, William L... 19, Throgmorton-street
Nicholls, Irving H. .. 13, Copthall-court
Nicholls, Joseph C. .... 57, Old Broad-court
Nickalls, Guy ..... 11, Angel-court
Nichisson & Co. ..... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Nickisson, A. C. H. .. 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Nicol & Stuart ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Nicol, Herbert B. .... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Nicolls, Jasper H. E... 6, Finch-lane
Nissim, Maurice ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Nivison, R., & Co. .... 76, Cornhill
Nivison, John ..... 76, Cornhill
Nivison, Robert ..... 76, Cornhill
Nivison, Samuel ..... 76, Cornhill
Noakes, Stuart B. .... 70, Cornhill
Noble, Samuel A. ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Norbury, John ..... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Norbury, John, Jun... Basildon ho., Moorgate st.
Northern & Durham .. St. Stephen's chambers
Norton, William & Co. 2, Copthall buildings
Norton, William ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Nurse, Samuel F. C. .. 9 & 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Nye & Meade ..... 4, Copthall-court
Nye, Jesse ..... 4, Copthall-court

Oakley, Norris Bros. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Oakley, Thomas N. .... 2, Copthall buildings
Oakley, Walter ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Oates, Robert L. .... 10, Drapers'-gardens
O'Brien, Neville F. .. 1, Cornhill
O'Connor, P. J. .... Warnford-court
Oddie, Herbert ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Odell, James W. ..... 3, Copthall-court
Oelsner, Steinthal & Co. Warnford-court
Oelsner, William D. .. Warnford-court
Ogilvy, Francis ..... 6, Throgmorton-street
O'Hagan, Arthur ..... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Oliver, Richard S. .... 3, Threadneedle-street
Oppenheim, Joseph .... 22, Austin Friars
Oppenheim, Louis ..... 30, Throgmorton street
Oppenheim, Oscar .... 12, Angel court
Oppenheimer, A. S.... 23 & 25, Old Broad-street
Osborne, Clarence A... 77-80, Palmerston house
Osborne, Ernest J. .... 85, Gresham-street
Ovenston, Clifford H. .. 2, Copthall-court
Overbury, Joseph W... 14, Angel-court
Owen, Herbert C. & Co. Swan ho., Gt. Swan-alley
Owen, Herbert C. .... Swan ho., Gt. Swan-alley
Oxenford, Matthew & Co. 85, Gresham-street
Oxenford, Ferdinand .. 85, Gresham-street
Oxenford, M. F. ..... 85, Gresham-street
Oxley, Harold ..... 2, Finch-lane

Page, Ogilvy T. ..... 31, Threadneedle-street
Paget & Edward .... Warnford-court
Paget, George E. ..... Warnford-court
Pain, William ..... 29, Threadneedle-street
Paine, Herbert N. .... 20, Copthall-avenue
Paine, Walter H. .... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Palmer, Charles J. .... 18, Birchin-lane
Parker, Cyril E. ..... 4, Austin Friars
Parsons & Henderson.. 3 & 4, Adam's-court
Parsons, A. S. C. .... 23 & 25, Old Broad-street
Parsons, Edward P. ... 3 & 4, Adam's-court
Partridge & Greenfield. 2, Draper's-gardens
Partridge, Harold A. .. 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Pascoe, Wallis ..... 5, Copthall buildings
Pasteur, Charles H. .. White ho., Telegraph street
Pater & Co. ..... 56, Old Broad-street
Pater, Edgar A. ..... 56, Old Broad-street
Paton, Alexander .... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Paton, William H. .... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Pattinson, George H... Stock Exchange
Patton, Philip C. ..... Copthall h'se, Copthall-av.
Pawle, H. & Co. ..... 13, Copthall-court
Pawle, Harold ..... Stock Exchange
Payne, William R. .... 31, Throgmorton-street
Payton, Charles W. .. 23, Gresham ho., Old B'd-st.
Peake, Cosmo F. N. .. 74, Cornhill
Pearce, Frederick G... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Pearson, Charles E. .. 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Pearson, Cyrus T. .... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Pearson, Elliot ..... 29, Threadneedle-street
Peckham, Henry T. .. 19, Old Broad-street
Peerless, Bartholomew 57, Moorgate-street
Peevor, Leslie ..... 28, Threadneedle-street
Pember & Boyle ..... 18, Cornhill
Pember, George R. .... 18, Cornhill
Pember, Henry C. .... 18, Cornhill
Pemberton, W. A. .... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Penn, Charles B. ..... 2, Royal Exchange-avenue
Penn, Eric F. ..... 3, Threadneedle-street
Penson, John W. ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Perry, John H. P. .... 27, Throgmorton-street
Pershouse, Frank S. .. 6, Drapers'-gardens
Petrie & Farrar ..... 6, Moorgate-street
Petre, Hon. Albert H. 6, Moorgate-street
Pettitt, Edward ..... 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Pettman, William C. .. 35, Coleman-street
Petty, George T. ..... St. Stephen's chambers
Phillips, Arthur J. .... 31, Threadneedle-street
Phillips, Edgar L. .... 10, Angel-court
Phillips, F. A. & Co... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Phillips, Frederick A... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Phillips, Frederick S... 28, Throgmorton-street
Phillips & Drew ..... 4, Bishopsgate-st. Within Pidgeon & Stebbing .. 3, Copthall buildings
Pierce, Charles F. A... White house, Telegraph-st.
Piggott, James F. .... 4, Copthall-court
Pike, Hugh W. ..... 14, Copthall-avenue
Pilcher, Charles F. .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Pilkington, Malcolm C. 14, Austin Friars
Pim, Vaughan & Co. .. 1, Drapers'-gardens
Pim, Ernest T. ..... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Pim, Henry ..... 47, Cornhill
Pitman, Frederick I. .. 14, Austin Friars
Pitts, Frederic ..... 14, Cornhill
Platter & Beauclerk .. 6, Austin Friars
Plater, Ernest W. .... 6, Austin Friars
Plater, George ..... 6, Austin Friars
Platt, Percival C. .... 30, Gresham house
Playford, Randal ..... 14, Cornhill
Pocock, Walter L. .... 34, Moorgate-street
Pollak, J. & Co. ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Pollak, Joseph ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Pollock, Hope & Co. .. 29, Threadneedle street
Pollock, George H. .. S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Pollock, William P. H. 29, Threadneedle street
Ponder, Frank M. .... 37, Throgmorton-street
Ponder, Septimus .... 37, Throgmorton-street
Ponsonby, Hon F. J. 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Porter, Arthur D. .... 50, Threadneedle-street
Pott, Henry ..... 57, Old Broad-street
Pott, Henry P. ..... 57, Old Broad-street
Potter, Henry ..... 9, Copthall-avenue
Poultney & Straus .. 5, Copthall buildings
Powell, Charles J. .... 30, Throgmorton-street
Powell, Oswald H. .... 4, Hercules-passage
Powell, Walter ..... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Pratt, Clapham, & Reynell ..... 1, Cushion-court
Pratt, Arthur J. ..... 1, Cushion-court
Prebble, Albert D. .... 14, Queen Victoria street
Price, Arthur R. ..... 57, Old Broad-street
Pritchard, Hamilton .. 77, Palmerston house
Pritchard, J. M. & Co. 31, Throgmorton-street
Pritchard, Hugh J. M. 31, Throgmorton-street
Pritchard, John M, ... 31, Throgmorton-street
Pritchard, Owen M. .. 31, Throgmorton-street
Procter, Joseph ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Prust, John & Co. .... 37, Throgmorton-street
Prust, William A. D. .. White ho., Telegraph-st.
Prynne, Gordon ..... 28, Austin Friars
Prynne, William H. G. Stock Exchange
Puckle, Walter H. .... 5, Angel-court
Pulbrook, Henry, jun... 34, Throgmorton-street
Pulley, Henry C. .... 31, Threadneedle-street
Pumfrett, Leonard R.H. 8, Finch-lane
Pyefinch, Gerald ..... 3, Threadneedle-street
Pyne, Charles A. .... 55, Old Broad-street

Quekett, Owen C. .... 23, Threadneedle-street
Quilhampton, Archie .. 5, Copthall buildings
Quilter & Co. ..... 14, King's Arms-yard
Quilter, Percy C. .... 14, King's Arms-yard
Quilter, Sir W. C., Bart. 14, King's Arms-yard
Quin, James ..... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Quirk, Tucker & Rayner 4 and 6, Copthall-avenue

Rabone, Ernest ..... 5, Austin Friars
Rae, George B. ..... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Rae, Oswald ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Raincock & Co. ..... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Raincock, Henry ..... 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Ramsbotham & Ross .. 6, Copthall-court
Ramsbotham, James .. 6, Copthall-court
Randell, Charles E. .. 61, Old Broad-street
Ransford & Co. ..... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Ransford, William H... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Rantzen, Henry ..... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Rathborne & Hill .... 10, Moorgate street
Rathborne, Lancelot St. G. P. ..... 10, Moorgate street
Rattle, John G. ..... 26, Austin Friars
Rau, J. ..... 28, Throgmorton street
Rayner, Henry B. .... 4 and 6, Copthall-avenue
Read & Brigstock .... 5, Austin Friars
Read, Ernest A. ..... 5, Austin Friars
Read, Thomas C. .... 19, Old Broad street
Redford, Henry A. .... 62, Copthall house
Reed, Eliot P.-S. .... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Reeve, Henry Blyth .. 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Reeve, Herbert C. .... 29, Threadneedle-street
Reeves & Prust ..... White ho., Telegraph-street
Reeves, Lionel E. .... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Reeves, Richard J. .... White ho., Telegraph-street
Regensberg, A. L. .... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Regensberg & Co. .... 15, Copthall-avenue
Regensberg, Hermann 15, Copthall avenue
Reichenbach, Max .... 10, Angel-court
Reid, Henry B. ..... Bartholomew house
Reid, J. & J. ..... 5, Austin Friars
Reid, James C. ..... 5, Austin Friars
Reid, John J. ..... 5, Austin Friars
Reidpath, A. Marshall.. Stock Exchange
Renwick, Thomas A. .. 1, Cushion-ct., Old B'd-st.
Reynell, Frederick .... 1, Cushion-court
Reynolds, A. L. & Co. 2, Copthall buildings
Reynolds, Alfred L. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Reynolds, Louis B. .. 13, King's Arms-yard
Ricardo-Rocamora, D. 4, Drapers'-gardens
Rice, Charles H. ..... 4, Queen Victoria-street
Rice, William G. ..... 4, Queen Victoria-street
Richardson, F. R. & Co. 11, Copthall court
Richardson & Glover .. 6A, Austin Friars
Richardson, Alan .... 6A, Austin Friars
Richardson, Ernest A... 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Richardson, W. E. .... Jamaica buildings
Richardson, W. G. .... 13, Copthall-court
Ridgers, Leo ..... 4, Copthall-court
Ridgway & Browne .. 11, Copthall-court
Ridgway, Arthur E. .. 11, Copthall-court
Ritchie, Frank ..... Crown-ct., Old Broad-street
Ritscher, Paul ..... 5, Tokenhouse-yard
Roberts, Charles J. .. Warnford-court
Roberts, Idwal A. .... 5, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Roberts, Percy H. .... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Robertson, Alfred .... 11, Copthall-court
Robertson, Ambrose & Kermack ..... Bartholomew house
Robertson, George S. .. 19, Old Broad-street
Robertson, Norman D. 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Robertson-Luxford, J. S.O. ..... 38, Throgmorton street
Robinson & Glyn .... 9 and 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Robinson, Francis .... 9 and 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Robinson, Frederick G. 21, Austin Friars
Robinson, Harry ..... 5, Adam's-ct., Old B'd-st.
Robinson, Lionel, Clark & Co. ..... 24, Throgmorton-street
Robinson, Lionel G. .. 24, Throgmorton-street
Robinson, Tom ..... 5, Adam's ct., Old B'd st.
Roehrich, E. & Co. .... 3, Copthall chambers
Roehrich, Edouard .... 3, Copthall chambers
Rogers, Herbert K. G... 27, Throgmorton-street
Rolf, Charles A. ..... Copthall house
Roller, Alexander H. F. 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Rollo, The Hon. B. F 3, Drapers' gardens
Ronald, James H. .... 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Ronald, Ronald D. .... 5, Copthall buildings
Rooke, C. H. & Co. .. 4, Austin Friars
Rooke, Charles H. .... 4, Austin Friars
Rose, Bateman L. .... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Rose, Van Cutsem & Co. 14, Copthall-avenue
Rose, Eric H. ..... 14, Copthall-avenue
Rose, Leonard S. .... Bartholomew house
Rosen, Joseph E. ..... 28, Throgmorton-street
Rosenbacher, Richard... 4 and 6, Copthall-avenue

Rosenheim, Ludwig .. 15, Copthall-avenue
Ross, William E. .... 6, Copthall-court
Roselli, Joseph ..... 7, Adam's-court
Rosskamm, Philipp .. 4, Drapers'-gardens
Rothwell, George & Co 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Rothwell, Herbert J. .. 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Rowe & Pitman ..... 14, Austin Friars
Rowe, George D. ..... 14, Austin Friars
Rowe, George F. .... Blomfield ho., London Wall
Rowe, Schwann & Co... 23 and 25, Old Broad-street
Rowe, Percy B. ..... 23 and 25, Old Broad-street
Ruben & Ladenburg .. 15, Austin Friars
Ruben, Erwin ..... 15, Austin Friars
Rubens & Reichenbach 10, Angel-court
Rubens, Victor ..... 10, Angel-court
Rubens, Walter E. .. 10, Angel-court
Rubinstein & Co. ..... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Rumball, Sydney F. .. Copthall ho., Copthall-av.
Runchman, Matthew S. 3, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st
Rushton, George A. .. Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Russell, The Hon. C... S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st
Russell, P. H. & Co. .. 7, Drapers'-gardens
Russell, Percy H. .... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Russell, William ..... 17, Gracechurch street
Ryan, Alfred F. ..... 25, Austin Friars
Ryder, The Hon. A. D. Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Ryman, John R. ..... 28, Throgmorton-street

Saalfeld, A. & Co. .... Warnford-court
Salomons, Frederick B. 4, Warnford-court
Samuel, Sir E. L., Bart. 3, Pope's Head-alley, Cornhill
Samuels, Samuel ..... 6, Throgmorton-street
Sandeman, Clark & Co. 7A, Austin Friars
Sandeman, Edward W. 7A, Austin Friars
Sandeman, T. C. ..... 7A, Austin Friars
Sanders, Louis ..... 7, Adam's-court
Sanderson, Walter .... 10, Angel-court
Sandys, Lord ..... Stock Exchange
Sanger, Charles A. .... 20, Copthall-avenue
Sauerbach, Maurice .. 10, Angel court
Saunders, F. A. .... 18, Cornhill
Saunders, F. G. .... 7, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Saunders, Raphael .... White house, Telegraph st.
Savory, Ernest B. .... 24, Austin Friars
Savory, Ronald H. .... 27, Austin Friars
Schaap & Co. ..... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Schaap, Magnus L. .... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Schiff, A. G. & Co. .. Warnford-court
Schiff, Alfred G. ..... Warnford-court
Schiff, Ernest F. ..... Warnford-court
Schiff, Otto M. ..... 6, Throgmorton-street
Schiff, Richard ..... 27, Throgmorton-street
Schilizzi, George ..... 5, Drapers'-gardens
Schlesinger, Arthur H. 42, Gresham house
Schlesinger, Cæsar .... Warnford-court
Schlesinger, E. and Co. 4, Angel-court
Schlesinger, Eugene M. 4, Angel-court
Schlesinger, Richard A. 4, Angel-court
Schloesser, Paul A. .. 11, Copthall court
Schnapper, S. & Co. .. 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Schnapper, Siegmund A. 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Schofield, Benjamin .. 64, Gresham-street
Schuler, Percy & Co. .. 18, Austin Friars
Schuler, Percy ..... 18, Austin Friars
Schultz, Sandford S. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Schuster, W. S. L. .... Warnford-court
Schwab, Isidor M. .... 26, Austin Friars
Schwann, Henry S. .... 23 and 25, Old Broad-street
Schwarzschild, J. & Son 34A, Throgmorton-street
Schwarzschild, A. I. .. 34A, Throgmorton-street
Schwarzschild, Jacob.. 34A, Throgmorton-street
Scott, Albert ..... 4, Austin Friars
Scott, B. J. & Co. .... 7, Throgmorton-avenue
Scott, Benjamin J. .... 7, Throgmorton-avenue
Scott, Charles H. .... 4, Austin Friars
Scott, Donald M. .... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Scott, Horace H. ..... 76, Cornhill
Scott, Horatio G. ..... 163 6, Gresham house
Scott, Reginald B. .... 7, Throgmorton-avenue
Scott, Stratten and Co 9, Drapers'-gardens
Scott, Thomas G. ..... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Scott, William C. .... 15, Angel-court
Scott-Gatty, C., C.S. .. 3, Throgmorton avenue
Scotter, Frederick C. .. 80, Lombard-street
Scrase, Arthur G. .... 54, Old Broad-street
Scrimgeour, J. & A. .. South Sea ho., T'dneedle-st.
Scrimgeour, A. C. .... South Sea ho., T'dneedle-st.
Scrimgeour, John A. .. South Sea ho., T'dneedle-st.
Scrimgeour, Walter .. South Sea ho., T'dneedle-st.
Scrutton & Son ..... 25, Austin Friars
Scrutton, A. J. ..... 25, Austin Friars
Searle, Godfrey J. .... Bartholomew house
Seaton, Henry H. D... 4A, Tokenhouse buildings
Sebag, J. & Co. ..... 13, Copthall-court
Sechiari Brothers ..... 5, Drapers'-gardens
Sechiari, Ambrose P... 5, Drapers'-gardens
Sechiari, George P. .. 5, Drapers'-gardens
Sechiari, Pandia P. .. 5, Drapers'-gardens
Secretan, Philip, jun... 7, Angel-court
Sedgwick, W. F. M. .. 23, Austin Friars
Sée, Henri ..... 20, Copthall-avenue
Selbyl, Edward B. .... 26, Austin Friars
Seligman & Weinberger 18, Austin Friars
Seligman, Armand M... 18, Austin Friars
Seligman, Julian J. .. 18, Austin Friars
Seligmann, Albert & Co. 10, Drapers'-gardens
Seligmann, Albert .... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Selz, Charles ..... 4, Drapers'-gardens
Serocold, Claud P. .... 52, Threadneedle street
Sewell, George E. .... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Sewell, Stanley H. .... 17, Old Broad-street
Sewill, Herbert ..... 35, Throgmorton street
Seymour, Pierce & Co. White house, Telegraph-st.
Seymour, Hugh F. .... South Sea ho., T'dneedle-st.
Sharman-Crawford, H. 8¼, Angel-court
Shaw, Somerset J. A. 4 and 6, Copthall-avenue
Shaw, William T. .... 66, Old Broad street
Shead, Samuel G. .... 36, Throgmorton street
Sheldon, Robert ..... 4, Adam's court
Shephard, Thomas A... 31, Threadneedle-street
Shepherd, Frederick J. 13, Copthall-court
Sheppards, Polly & Co. 57, Old Broad-street
Sheppard, Arthur W. .. 61, Old Broad-street
Sheppard, Samuel G. .. 57, Old Broad-street
Sheridan, William F... 22, Austin Friars
Shirreff, J. A. & Co... Swan ch'mb'rs, Copthall-av.
Shirreff, James A. .... Swan ch'mb'rs, Copthall av.
Shoolbred, Stuart T. J. 26, Birchin-lane
Short, Martin & Co. .. 12, Angel-court
Short, Alfred V. ..... 12, Angel-court

Short, Martin ..... 12, Angel-court
Shorter, Son & Co. .... 26, Birchin-lane
Shorter, Arthur ..... 26, Birchin-lane
Shorter, Arthur W. .. 26, Birchin-lane
Shotter & Scott ..... 4, Austin Friars
Sidney, W. S. & Co. .. 3, Newman's-ct., Cornhill
Sidney, William S. .. 3, Newman's-ct., Cornhill
Silo, Pietro ..... 1, Hatton-ct., T'dneedle-st.
Silverston, J. & Co. .. 27, Throgmorton-street
Silverston, Jacob ..... 27, Throgmorton-street
Silverston, Maurice .... 27, Throgmorton-street
Sim, A. Coysgarne .... 6, Throgmorton-street
Simon, Frank C. ..... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Simon, Herman K. .... 3, Copthall chambers
Simpson, Frederick C. 2, Copthall buildings
Simpson, Frederick H. 2, Copthall buildings
Simpson, William A... 2, Copthall buildings
Simpson, William R. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Simson, Arthur T. .... 25, Austin Friars
Singer, David ..... 23 and 25, Old Broad-street
Singer, J. & Co. ..... 4 and 6, Copthall-avenue
Singer, Jules ..... 4 and 6, Copthall-avenue
Skinner, Allen ..... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Skinner, James ..... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Slade, Cecil W. P. .... Bond-court hse., Walbrook
Slater, E. J. & Bond.. Warnford-court
Slater, Ernest J. ..... Warnford-court
Slater, Walter W. .... Warnford-court
Smallwood, Richard C. 2, Copthall buildings
Smith, Arthur ..... 11, Angel-court
Smith, Ernest R. ..... 11, Copthall-court
Smith, Francis C. .... 31, Threadneedle-street
Smith, Francis G. .... 2, Copthall buildings
Smith, Francis S. R. .. 31, Threadneedle-street
Smith, Frederick M. .. 80, Cornhill
Smith, Herbert W. .. 24, Austin Friars
Smith, Hugh P. ..... 13, King's Arms-yard
Smith, John B. M. .. 20, Copthall-avenue
Smith, John H. A. .. 6A, Austin Friars
Smith, J. Wentworth .. 29, Cornhill
Smith, Joseph W. .... 10, Drapers'-gardens
Smith, Lancelot G. H. 14, Austin Friars
Smith, Leonard ..... 120, Bishopsgate-st. Within Smith, Norman B. .... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Smith, P. Merry & Co. 80, Cornhill
Smith, Percy W. ..... 14, Cornhill
Smith & Pitts ..... 14, Cornhill
Smith, Reginald M. .. 1, Copthall chambers
Smith, Rice & Co. .... 4, Queen Victoria-street
Smith, Robert ..... 3, Austin Friars
Smith, Thomas & Son .. 16, Tokenhouse-yard
Smith, Thomas G. .... 16, Tokenhouse-yard
Smith, T. Sen. & Co. .. 1, Copthall chambers
Smith, Thomas P. H. .. 1, Royal Exchange-avenue
Smith, Walter H. .... 75, Old Broad-street
Smith, William H. B... 1, Copthall chambers
Smith, William M. .... 1, Copthall chambers
Smith-Bingham & Co... 11, Copthall court
Smith-Bingham Croxton 11, Copthall court
Smithers & Co. ..... 58, Old Broad-street
Smithers, John ..... 58, Old Broad-street
Smithers, John M. .. 58, Old Broad-street
Smithers, Oswald E... 58, Old Broad-street
Smyth, Robert F. .... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Smythson, Sydney M... 4, Hercules-passage
Snell & Swaffield .... 5, Copthall buildings
Snell, Michael B. ..... 5, Copthall buildings
Snow, Thomas M. .... 43 6, Threadneedle-street
Snyder, John T. ..... 11, Copthall-court
Solomon, J. H. & Co... 14, Austin Friars
Solomon, Arthur H. .. 14, Austin Friars
Souter, Frank T. E. .. 27, Throgmorton-street
Sparkes & Clark ..... 1, Royal Exchange-avenue
Spencer, Arthur ..... 5, Lothbury
Spencer, Herbert ..... 29, Cornhill
Spencer, John G. .... 54, Threadneedle-street
Sperling & Co. ..... Bond-court, Walbrook
Sperling, Henry R. .... Bond-court, Walbrook
Spielmann, Ausbacher 20, Copthall-avenue
Spielmann, Meyer A. .. 20, Copthall-avenue
Spier, Adolph ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Spring, Percy T. ..... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Spurling & Skinner .. 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Spurling, Gilbert .... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Spurling, Stuart ..... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Stacey, John B. ..... 4, Austin Friars
Stacey, Percy Edward.. 28, Austin Friars
Stainforth, Edward T... 13, Copthall-court
Stamm, Julius ..... 38, Throgmorton-street
Stanhope, Hon. C. H. Basildon house, M'rgate-st.
Stanley, C. & Son .... 36, Cornhill
Stanley, Arthur J. .... 35, Cornhill
Stanley, Charles H. .. 35, Cornhill
Staples, George W. .. 178 Gresham house
Stearns, J. P. & Co. .. 3, Copthall-court
Stearns, Joseph P. .... 3, Copthall-court
Stebbing, Frederic A... 3, Copthall buildings
Stebbing, George A. .. 3, Copthall buildings
Steer, Lawford & Co... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Steinhart, H. M. & Co. 28, Throgmorton-street
Steinhart, Henry M. .. 28, Throgmorton-street
Steinthal, Anton E. .. Warnford-court
Steinthal, Gustav V. .. 8, Drapers'-gardens
Stephens, Arthur N. .. 9 and 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Stephens, Thomas .... 34A, Throgmorton-street
Stephens, William .... 16, Tokenhouse-yard
Stephenson & Taylor .. 10, Angel-court
Stephenson, Henry L... 10, Angel-court
Stephenson, Wilfred R. 151 and 152, Gresham hse.
Stern, Maurice ..... 4, Drapers'-gardens
Sternberg Brothers .... 1, Angel-court
Sternberg, Daniel .... 1, Angel-court
Sternberg, Hermann L. 1, Angel-court
Stevens, William J. .. 10, Moorgate-street
Stewart & Whitmore .. 5, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Stogdon, John H. .... 18, Old Broad street
Stokes, Alexander H... 9 and 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Stokes, Durham & Co. 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Stokes, Durham ..... 5, Throgmorton avenue
Stokes, Thomas R. .... 28, Austin Friars
Stokes, Walter L. C. .. 7, Lothbury
Stone, John G. B. .. 9, Drapers'-gardens
Stoop & Co. ..... 4, Hercules-passage
Stoop, Cornelis F. .... 4, Hercules-passage
Stopher, William .... 1, Drapers' gardens
Stott, Nowell S. ..... 7A, Austin Friars
Stout, Harry W. ..... 3, Drapers'-gardens
Stracey, Sir E. P., Bt. Bond-court, Walbrook
Strachan, Walter ..... 16, Tokenhouse-yard
Strange, James W. .... Bond-court, Walbrook
Strangman, Ernest .... 2, Royal Exchange avenue

Straus, Paul ..... 1, Angel-court
Straus, Sidney R. .... 6, Copthall buildings
Strauss, Hermann .... 27, Throgmorton-street
Strauss, Hugo ..... 6, Throgmorton street
Streatfeild, Sidney .... Warnford-court
Strutt, The Hon. R. .. Stock Exchange
Stuart, Gordon H. .... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Stuart, Peter ..... 16 and 17, Royal Exchange
Stubbs, Stanley J. .... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Style, Arthur J. .... 31, Lombard-street
Summers, Robert T. .. 6, Throgmorton-street
Summers, Thomas .... 6, Throgmorton-street
Sutcliffe, Harry ..... Bartholomew house
Sutherland, Harry & Son 2, Copthall buildings
Sutherland, Alfred H. 2, Copthall buildings
Sutherland, Harry .... 2, Copthall buildings
Sutton, Frank H. .... Stock Exchange
Swift, D. & Co. ..... 27-30, Gresham house
Swift, Donald D. ..... 27-30, Gresham house
Swyer, Robert ..... 9 and 10, Tokenhouse-yard
Syer, Edwin J. ..... 22, Austin Friars
Symes, Glascott H. .... 7, Copthall-court
Symes, Herbert W. .... 15, Angel-court
Syrett, Reginald M. .. 4 and 6, Copthall-avenue

Tabraham, Arthur P... 18, Austin Friars
Tallentire, William H. 2, Austin Friars
Tallerman, Phineas .. Warnford-court
Tapp, T. A. ..... 28, Throgmorton-street
Taylor, Alfred W. .... 14, Cornhill
Taylor, Charles E. .... 1, Cornhill
Taylor, Frank E. .... 20, Copthall-avenue
Taylor, John H. M... 10, Angel-court
Teather, Harold L. .... 2, Angel-court
Tedeschi, Adrian .... 22, Austin Friars
Telford & Jackson .... 4, Copthall chambers
Teil, A. J. H. & Co. .. 2, Austin Friars
Teil, Alfred J. H. .... 2, Austin Friars
Terry, James E. ..... 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Terry, John D. ..... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Thal, Ernest J. ..... 18, Austin Friars
Thalmessinger, M. & Co. 10 and 11, Austin Friars
Thalmessinger, Marco.. 10 and 11, Austin Friars
Thomas, Harold B..... 6, Drapers'-gardens
Thomasset, T. C. .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Thompson, Richard S. 14, Copthall-avenue
Thompson, W. & Crook 17, Tokenhouse-yard
Thompson, Walter .... 17, Tokenhouse-yard
Thomson & Carlisle .. 75, Old Broad-street
Thomson, Alexander F. 75, Old Broad-street
Thomson, Curtis F. .. 20, Copthall-avenue
Thomson, D. L. & Co... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Thomson, David L. .. 7, Drapers'-gardens
Thomson, Lionel G. .. 7, Drapers'-gardens
Thomson, Walter B. .. 30, Throgmorton-street
Thomson, William P... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Thorburn, Kenneth .. S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Thorburn, Robert .... 19, Throgmorton-avenue
Thorne, Frederick W... 54, Old Broad-street
Thorne, Percy O. E... 79, Cornhill
Thornhill Brothers .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Thornhill, Cecil J. .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Thornton, Richard P... 62, Threadneedle-street
Thornton, Spencer R... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Thorp, William ..... 840, Salisbury house
Threlfall & Knight .... 2, Copthall buildings
Threlfall, Charles H. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Tod, Norman P. ..... 22, Finch-lane
Tomkinson & Price .... 3, Copthall buildings
Tomkinson, Frederick... 3, Copthall buildings
Tomkinson, R. E. & Co. 74, Cornhill
Tomkinson, James E... 74, Cornhill
Tomkinson, Robert E... 74, Cornhill
Tootal, Frederick E. O. 1, Cornhill
Tooth & Oddie ..... 2, Copthall buildings
Tooth, Edwin N. .... 2, Copthall buildings
Torrens, Edward S.... 26, Birchin-lane
Torrens, William Matt 5, Throgmorton-avenue
Townley, Francis H. .. 1, Drapers'-gardens
Towse, Edward D. .... 13, Gresham house
Tragett, George L. .. 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Tremayne, C. R. J... 3, Copthall buildings
Trench, Benjamin B... 18, Birchin-lane
Trevor, Philip C. W... 4, Angel-court
Trimen, Arthur R. .... 5, Austin Friars
Trimm, Charles H. .. 2, Copthall buildings
Tritton, Arthur F. .. 13, Copthall-court
Tritton, Arthur H. .... 1, Cornhill
Tritton, Vincent B., jun. 1, Cornhill
Trotter, Charles W. .. Basildon ho., Moorgate st.
Trotter, William .... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st.
Troubridge, Sir T. H. C., Bart. ..... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Troughton, Charles W. 4, Sun-court, Cornhill
Trower, Lionel G. .... 8½, Angel-court
Tubini, Antoine B. .. S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Tuck, William H. .... 6, Throgmorton-street
Tucker, William S. .. 4 and 6, Copthall-avenue
Tuckwell, Son & Hartley ..... 4, Copthall chambers
Tuckwell, Edward .... 4, Copthall chambers
Tuckwell, Edward H... 4, Copthall chambers
Tudball, Charles D. . 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Tudor, H. & Son .... 29, Threadneedle-street
Tudor, Hugh G. .... 29, Threadneedle-street
Tupper, Audley F. .... 27, Austin Friars
Turnbull, James & Co. Moorgate-ct., Moorgate-pl.
Turnbull, James ..... Moorgate-ct., Moorgate-pl.
Turnbull, James, jun Moorgate-ct., Moorgate-pl.
Turner, Errol G. ..... 28, Austin Friars
Turner, Howard L. .. 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Turrell, Jno. W. .... 18, Austin Friars
Tuteur, Walter B. .... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Tydd, Benjamin S. .... 31, Threadneedle-street
Tydd, George B. & Co. 31, Threadneedle-street
Tydd, George B. .... 31, Threadneedle-street
Tytler, William T. F... 1, Drapers'-gardens

Uhlfelder, Carl ..... 15, Angel-court
Usborne, Henry L. .... 22, Austin Friars
Usborne, Robert A. .. 1, Drapers'-gardens

Valintine, F. A. W... 18, Cornhill
Vallance & Francis .... 7 and 8, G't Winchester-st.
Vallance, Arthur ..... 7 and 8, G't Winchester-st.
Van Outsem, Henry H. 14, Copthall avenue
Van Gulik, Gerard .... 28, Throgmorton-street
Vanderfelt, Sydney G. 28, Throgmorton-street
Vandervell, Harry .... 19, Old Broad-street
Van Sandau, F. C. T... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Venables, Edmund E... Basildon ho., Moorgate-st
Vernet, Robert ..... 6, Tokenhouse-yard

Vertue, Lubbock & Co. 43-6, Threadneedle-street
Vertue, Alfred ..... 43-6, Threadneedle-street
Vertue, Charles B. .... 43-6, Threadneedle-street
Viall, King ..... 4, Adam's-court
Vickerman, Arthur H. 9, Drapers'-gardens
Vigne, H. & Sons..... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Vigne, John H. ..... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Vivian, Gray & Co..... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Vivian, William ..... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Vowler, E. N. & Co. .. 3, Pope's Head-alley
Vowler, Edward N. .. 3, Pope's Head-alley

Wagg, Alfred R. .... S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Wagg, Arthur ..... S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Wagg, Edward ..... S'th Sea ho., Th'dneedle-st.
Wagner, J. & Co. .... 66, Old Broad-street
Wagner, Hermann .... 66, Old Broad-street
Wagner, Joseph ..... 66, Old Broad-street
Wainwright & Whitehead ..... 11, Copthall-court
Waithman, Balfour & Co. 34, Moorgate-street
Waithman, Charles .. 34, Moorgate-street
Waithman, John C. .. 34, Moorgate-street
Wake, Gordon A. .... 2, Austin Friars
Waley, Alfred J. .... 13, Copthall-court
Walford, Ernest F. .. Stock Exchange
Walker, Adam ..... 8, Drapers'-gardens
Walker, Edwin J. .... 35, Gresham ho., Old B'd-st
Walker, George M. .... Bartholomew house
Walker, William ..... 3, Copthall buildings
Wall, William G. .... 6 and 7, Copthall-court
Waller, Hardress J. .. 4, Tokenhouse buildings
Walmisley, H. W. & Co. 18, Austin Friars
Walmisley, Herbert W. 18, Austin Friars
Walmisley, S.E.H. & Co. 27, Throgmorton-street
Walmisley, S. E. H... 27, Throgmorton-street
Walter & Gould ..... 11, Angel-court
Walter & Walker .... Bartholomew house
Walter, William ..... Bartholomew house
Walter, Charles M. .. 7, Angel-court
Walters, Hugh ..... 18, Old Broad-street
Warburg, Julius ..... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Ward, Douglas I..... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Ward, John I. ..... 3, Throgmorton-avenue
Wardell, Henry ..... 58, Old Broad-street
Warren, C. F., jun. .. 24, Austin Friars
Washington, T. G. & Co. 2, Copthall-court
Washington, William R. 2, Copthall-court
Wassermann & Co. .. 54, Old Broad-street
Wassermann, Jacob .. 54, Old Broad-street
Watson & Swaine .... 5, Copthall buildings
Watson, Charles B. .. 5, Copthall buildings
Watson, Charles W. .. 5, Copthall buildings
Watson, Gerald A. .... 18, Old Broad-street
Watson, Guthrie F. .. 14, Austin Friars
Watson, Henry T. .... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Watson, Herbert E. .. 54, Cornhill
Watson, James ..... 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Watson, James H. .... 28, Threadneedle-street
Watson, Septimus W... 96 and 97, Palmerston hse.
Watson, William S. .. 20, Copthall-avenue
Weager, William G. .. 2, St. Michael's ho., Cornhill
Wear, A. & Co. ..... St. Stephen's chambers
Wear, Alfred ..... St. Stephen's chambers

Webb, Alfred ..... 5, Adam's-ct., Old Broad-st.
Webb, Charles ..... 75, Old Broad-street
Webber, Ralph G. .... 29, Threadneedle-street
Weber, Ernest ..... 4, Drapers'-gardens
Webster, Frank H. .... St. Stephen's chambers
Webster, William .... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Weddle, Dudley ..... 28, Throgmorton-street
Weguelin, Thomas H... 7, Drapers'-gardens
Weinberger, Hugo .... 18, Austin Friars
Weisberg, Arthur .... 6, Drapers'-gardens
Weisberg, Moses A. .. 6, Drapers'-gardens
Weiser, Benito ..... Swan house, G't Swan-alley
Weismann, Alfred .... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Wellesley, H. A. & Co. 5, Copthall buildings
Wells, Thomas L. .... 9, Drapers'-gardens
Welton, Edward ..... Bond-court, Walbrook
Wendel, Charles ..... 18, Austin Friars
Wescott, Harold S..... 58, Old Broad-street
West, Charles W. .... 29, Threadneedle-street
West, Colin ..... 31, Threadneedle-street
West, Herbert E. .... 18, Austin Friars
Westhead, Walter B. .. 13, Copthall-court
Westley, Frank ..... 8, Copthall-court
Westmacott, Escombe & Co. ..... 8, Great Winchester-street
Westmacott, John .... 8, Great Winchester-street
Wharton, Frank M. .. 37, Throgmorton-street
Wharton & Macrae .... 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Whish, George H. M. .. 38, Throgmorton-street
White, Henry & Son .. 1, Tokenhouse buildings
White, Henry ..... 1, Tokenhouse buildings
White, Henry A. .... 1, Tokenhouse buildings
White, Frank H. .... 5, Austin Friars
White, The Hon. R. .. 6, Throgmorton-street
White, Walter G. .... 14, Austin Friars
Whitehead, Geo., & Chown ..... 23, Bucklersbury
Whitehead, George H. 23, Bucklersbury
Whiteheads & Coles .. 39, Throgmorton-street
Whitehead, Henry .... 39, Throgmorton-street
Whitehead, Littleton .. 11, Copthall-court
Whitehead, William .. 39, Throgmorton-street
Whiteside, Robert B. .. 63, Cornhill
Whitwham, Frank G. .. 11, Copthall-court
Wightwick, Edward A. 3, Tokenhouse buildings
Wildy & Co. ..... 3, Threadneedle-street
Wildy, Arthur ..... 3, Threadneedle-street
Wildy, Harold Adams.. 3, Threadneedle-street
Wilkinson & Son ..... 3, Copthall buildings
Wilkinson, Charles E. 74, Cornhill
Willats, Walter J. .... 2, Drapers'-gardens
Williams, Cuthbert S... 20, Copthall-avenue
Williams, de Brõe & Co. 6, Tokenhouse-yard
Williams, Gerald ..... 27, Royal Exchange
Williams, Gerald W... 6, Tokenhouse-yard
Williams & Wimbush.. 27, Royal Exchange
Williamson, Charles S. 33, Old Broad-street
Williamson, F. J. .... 3, Copthall buildings
Wilmersdoerffer, C. .. 4, Drapers'-gardens
Wilmot, Louis F. R... 5, Copthall buildings
Wilson, A. & Sons .... 11, Birchin-lane
Wilson, Bernard A. .. 11, Birchin-lane
Wilson, Leslie ..... 11, Birchin-lane
Wilson, A. J. jun. .... 57, Moorgate-street

Wilson, Arthur & Co,.. 31, Threadneedle-street
Wilson, Arthur ..... 31, Threadneedle-street
Wilson, Arthur M. .... 18, Birchin-lane
Wilson, Ellis & Schofield ..... 64, Gresham-street
Wilson, Arthur (Wilson, Ellis & Schofield) .... 64, Gresham-street
Wilson, Frank ..... 53, New Broad-street
Wilson, Frank T. & Co. 58, Old Broad-street
Wilson, Frank T. .... 58, Old Broad-street
Wilson, Frederick W... 2, Copthall buildings
Wilson, George ..... Bartholomew house
Wilson, James ..... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Wimbush, Roland B. B. 27, Royal Exchange
Winch, Apsley, B. .... 31, Threadneedle-street
Winch, Arthur B. & Co. 58, Lombard-street
Winch, Arthur B. .... 58, Lombard-street
Winn, The Hon. C. H. 31, Throgmorton-street
Wise & Burnell ..... 50, Threadneedle-street
Wise, John H. ..... 50, Threadneedle-street
Wontner, A. J. & Renwick ..... 1, Cushion-ct., Old B'd-st.
Wontner, Algernon J... 1, Cushion-ct., Old B'd-st.
Wood, Arthur F. .... 4, Copthall chambers
Wood, Edward H. .... 6 and 7, Copthall-court
Wood, J. L., C.M.G. .. 19, Throgmorton-avenue
Wood, Thomas M. .... 80, Lombard-street
Woodall, E. & Yardley 31, Threadneedle-street
Woodall, Herbert .... 1, Cushion-court
Woodbridge & Flint .. 11, Copthall-court
Woodbridge, Austin H. 11, Copthall-court
Woodcock, Norman J... 11, Copthall-court
Woodhams & Branston 54 and 55, Cornhill
Woodhams, Walter L... 54 and 55, Cornhill
Woods, Arthur & Co... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Woods, Arthur ..... 1, Drapers'-gardens
Woog, Giacomo ..... 2, Tokenhouse buildings
Woollan, Frank M. .... 18, Austin Friars
Woolley, Day & Co. .... 7, Finch-lane
Woolley, Ernest ..... 7, Finch-lane
Woolley, Hugh L. .... 6, Drapers'-gardens
Woolner & Co. ..... 4, Copthall chambers
Woolner, Hugh ..... 4, Copthall chambers
Woolston, Beeton, Brodrick & West ..... 18, Austin Friars
Wright, Percy J. .... 13, Copthall-court
Wright, William ..... 4, Copthall chambers
Wurtzburg, C. E. & Co. 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Wurtzburg, Charles E. 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Wurtzburg, William F. 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Wylie & Ponsonby .... 1, Tokenhouse buildings
Wylie, George C. .... 1, Tokenhouse buildings

Yardley, George W. .. 31, Threadneedle-street
Yeates, Henry W. .... 4, Copthall buildings
Yorke, Hon. B. E. .... 10, Throgmorton-avenue
Young, Daniel ..... 19, Old Broad-street
Young, Eustace ..... 13, King's Arms-yard
Young, Montagu & Co. 116, Gresham house
Young, St. John M. .. 116, Gresham house

Zorn & Leigh-Hunt.... 3 and 4, G't Winchester-st.
Zorn, David F. L. .... 3 and 4, G't Winchester-st.
Zorn, John C. L. .... 3 and 4, G't Winchester-st.

COMMERCE IN WAR

By L. A. ATHERLEY-JONES, K.C., M.P.

Royal 8vo, 21s. net. Prospectus free.

"In his facts Mr. Atherley-Jones is perfectly trustworthy, and as regards arrangement he has hit on a plan which is convenient and useful."—Yorkshire Post.

METHUEN & Co., 36, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

THE TRUST MOVEMENT IN BRITISH INDUSTRY.

A Study of Business Organisation. By HENRY W. MACROSTY, B.A.

8vo, 9s. net.

"We wish space permitted us to quote some of the appreciations and criticisms of the volume, but we must rest content with a hearty rec mmendation of it to our readers. It is an honest book, the product of a vigilant mind."—Investors' Review.

LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO., 39, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

NOW READY.

MINING MANUAL, 1907.

By WALTER R. SKINNER.

Twenty-First year of issue.

THE STANDARD REFERENCE WORK ON MINES.

Price ONE GUINEA, post free.

To be obtained from all Booksellers, or direct from the Proprietor, WALTER R. SKINNER, 11-12, Clements-lane, London, E.C.

THE COURT OF THE TUILERIES, 1852—1870. Its Ceremonial, Splendour, Follies, Lapses, and Downfall; with Impressions of its Chief Personages. By LE PETIT HOMME ROUGE. Dy. 8vo, cl., 7s 6d. net.

Athenæum.—"It appears to a hardened reviewer of such volumes of gossip and scandal to be by far the best which has appeared upon the Second Empire. On the whole, the writer is so accurate and so well-informed that his book makes serious claim to be treated as history. It is the back-stairs view of the history of a period in which the backstairs played the leading part. It undoubtedly contains almost the first accurate collected statement on many of the most important international events of the period between 1852 and 1870."

JULIE DE LESPINASSE. By the MARQUIS DE SÉGUR. Authorised English Version. With Photogravure Frontispiece, from the only authentic Portrait of Mademoiselle de Lespinasse, by CARMONTELLE. Demy 8vo, Art Linen, gilt top, 7/6 net.

Spectator.—"One of the most enthralling and touching books that have been published of late years." Morning Post.—"The value and interest of the work are beyond all question." Truth.—"A fascinating biographical study."

MOLIÈRE: a Biography. By H. C. CHATFIELD-TAYLOR. With an Introduction by THOMAS F. CRANE, Professor of Romance Languages, Cornell University. With Index, Bibliography, and 10 Illustrations specially drawn by JOB. Royal 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 10s. 6d. net.

Daily Telegraph.—"A thoroughly workmanlike and eminently readable presentation of Molière . . . At once scholarly and popular."

CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

5/- net. PITMAN'S 5/- net.

HISTORY, LAW, and PRACTICE of THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

(FOLEY & GOULD).

Truth says:—"An excellent exposition of the law relating to the purchase of stocks and shares. . . There is a particularly valuable chapter on speculative and gambling transactions."

London: Sir ISAAC PITMAN & SONS, LTD., 1, Amen-corner, E.C.

NEW EDITION.

LOMBARD STREET.

A Description of the Money Market, revised and thoroughly brought up-to-date (1906) by E. JOHNSTONE. (The Paternoster Library.) Price 3s. 6d.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co., Ltd., Dryden House, Gerrard-street, W.

THE SECOND ISSUE (FOR 1906).

The British Trade Year-Book.

Covering the 26 years 1880-1905, and showing the course of trade. By JOHN HOLT SCHOOLING. With 221 Tables, each containing several sections of British or of International Trade. 75 Diagrams. 10s. 6d. net.

This is the ONLY BOOK that shows the COURSE OF TRADE in an intelligible and compendious form.

Bank Rate & the Money Market

IN ENGLAND, FRANCE, GERMANY, HOLLAND, AND BELGIUM, 1844-1900. By R. H. INGLIS PALGRAVE, F.R.S. Royal 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

The Principles of Money.

With Tables. By J. L. LAUGHLIN. Med. 8vo, 16s. net.

JOHN MURRAY, LONDON.

"Truth" Cautionary List

WAS ISSUED AS A

SUPPLEMENT TO "TRUTH,"

FEBRUARY 6, 1907.

Price 3d. By Post 3½d

Truth Publishing Office, 10, Bolt Court, E.C.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & MALCOMSON, Ltd., 4 & 5, Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., & Published weekly by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st., E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.
Entered as Second Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

(Continued from page 1600.)

"We have invested all our spare capital in these shares," says the Canadian Syndicate, "and are not prepared to dispose of our own holdings short of £3 per share, a figure we believe they will ultimately reach." For the sake of the rest of the buyers, as well as the Syndicate, it is to be hoped that this belief will prove to be well-founded. Meanwhile, however, I am not surprised to learn that this vigorous share-pushing campaign has produced a distinctly unfavourable impression on the minds of not a few of the people to whom the cards were addressed.

NOTES ON NEW ISSUES.

The Anglo-Mexican Oilfields, Limited, has been formed with a capital of £250,000 in £1 shares, to acquire concessions to extract petroleum from the lands of certain estates in the State of Chiapas, Southern Mexico. The consideration payable to the owners of the lands is £2,500 in cash and £10,000 in shares. The promoters of the company, the M.E.X. Syndicate, are to receive £120,000 in shares. Various experts report that "the shows are very promising," etc., but it is clearly a very speculative venture which should be left to people who can afford to risk the loss of their money.

The capital of the United Services Co-operative Hotel Company, Limited, is £225,000 in ordinary shares of £1 each, of which 207,000 shares are now offered for subscription. The objects of the company are to acquire a site at South Kensington, erect thereon a first-class hotel, and work the same upon co-operative principles, giving as regards a hotel privileges similar to those given to their shareholders by the various co-operative stores. It is primarily intended to cater for M.P.s, naval and military officers, and members of the superior grades of the Civil Service on the home, Indian, and colonial establishments. It is estimated that after the construction and equipment of the hotel, a sum of £25,250 will remain for working capital. The list closes on Thursday for London, and on Monday for the provinces.

The United River Plate Telephone Company, Limited, offer for subscription £300,000 Four and a Half per Cent. debenture stock at par. This debenture stock constitutes a first floating charge on the entire undertaking, and in view of the profits and progress of the company it appears to afford a good 4½ per cent. investment.

STOCK EXCHANGE SUPPLEMENT.

The attention of my readers is specially directed to the Stock Exchange Supplement which is published with this issue of TRUTH.

"VIGILANT'S" LETTER BOX.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can I reply by post, and as there seems to be a misunderstanding in the minds of many of my readers, I wish to emphasise the fact that a coupon must be attached to every inquiry. A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the coloured cover of TRUTH.

2. Six different stocks are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks an additional coupon or coupons (one for every half-a-dozen stocks) must be forwarded. The answering of many of the inquiries I receive necessitates a great deal of careful research, and I shall therefore be compelled henceforth to enforce this regulation. Its necessity will be apparent when I state that some correspondents send lists of 20 or 30 different stocks covering every class and description of Investment.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication; cards are apt to be lost or misplaced, causing unnecessary trouble.

4. Anonymous letters will not in any case be attended to.

5. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

6. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written, and numbered.

7. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

8. I do not recommend brokers or solicitors.

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

Wych Hazel.—The bonds are a distinctly second-rate investment, and I do not regard the yield as attractive. Interest at present is being regularly paid, the dates being January 1 and July 1. G. T.—Consols, or, to give them their official title, Two and a Half per Cent. Consolidated Stock, is the security for your purpose. You will find full details as to the method of purchasing in your Post Office Savings Bank book. Headingley.—Quite good, and, providing you are not putting too many eggs into one basket, I see no objection to your buying more.

RAILWAYS.

L'Ideale.—I by no means recommend you to buy the shares with borrowed money. C. M.—(a) The dividend will probably go short this half year, but the balance should, without doubt, be made up in the second half. Hold. (b) If the dividend on this stock be smaller for the current year it will be due to dear coals and materials—a temporary matter. In the long run the stock should command a better price. (c and d) Both sound investments, and there is little doubt about the maintenance of the interest. Thanks for your appreciative remarks.

MINES.

W. W. W.—1. On the statements in the prospectus the shares seemed a fair purchase, and apparently the fall in the quotation is mainly the result of the issue not having gone off well. Possibly now the special settlement is out of the way they will have some recovery, but there is little or no market interest in them at the moment. 2. I believe the mine has fair speculative prospects. Professor.—In my opinion, you could make a much more attractive selection than the shares you name. They are highly speculative. Frankie.—1 and 2. Hopeful purchases at current prices. 3. I have not a high opinion of the scheme. Scotland.—Hold all for the present.

MIXED SECURITIES.

Jungle.—1. The following would be suitable. The yield would be from 4½ to 5 per cent. Spread the money over the lot:—Antofagasta and Bolivia Railway New Five per Cent. debentures, Buenos Ayres and Pacific Four and a Half per Cent. new debentures, National Railroad of Mexico Four per Cent. First Consolidated Mortgage bonds, United Railways of the Havana Five per Cent. Irredeemable debentures (1906), Atchison Railroad New Five per Cent. Convertible ten year bonds, Grand Trunk Railway Five per Cent. Second Preference, and Imperial Tobacco Six per Cent. Preferred Ordinary. 2. Better get your local banker to put the business through for you. 3. I do not recommend them. Field Officer (Aden).—See first answer to "Jungle." It is impossible to absolutely guarantee against loss in buying stocks of any description, from Consols downwards. The securities named, however, are very sound, and, in my opinion, possess more prospect of a rise than a fall, that is, if you are prepared to lock them away at least for a year or two. Celestial.—1-3. I should say the bank would take the responsibility, but why not consult it direct? 4. Yes. 5. London County Council New Three and a Half per Cent., issued at 97, and standing now at a fractional premium. You could hardly have anything safer. Thanks for your appreciative remarks. Glad to hear that TRUTH prevails in such remote parts. Esuriens.—1. I have no reason to doubt the honesty of the management. Beyond the general depression there is nothing, so far as I am aware, to account for the decline in the price of the shares, and on the official particulars they seem a fair speculative lock-up. 2. Sell them. Ashtray, India.—1. This mine does not appear to have been affected by the strike, and I consider the shares one of the best selections among Kaffirs at present. 2. Hold. 3. The line was disappropriated by the State Government, as from the end of 1905, the payment being £202,500, in 7 per cent. bonds of the State. The company contested the right of the authorities to buy up the line on these terms, but the decision of the Brazilian Courts went against it. At the present time the line is in receivership and interest on the bonds is being temporarily withheld. You need, however, have no fear that the bondholders' interests are not safeguarded, the best evidence of which is that the scrip at the present time stands at 91. Whether the bonds will be redeemed immediately I cannot yet say. 4. The stock is quite sound, but I do not look for any immediate rise, as traffic returns in the next six months are likely to show a falling off, owing to the short maize crop. However, you could afford to hold, even should the dividend be temporarily reduced from the present 6 per cent. level, a contingency that is possible, though not altogether probable. 5. Buenos Ayres and Pacific New Four and a Half per Cent. debentures should suit you. The yield is over 4⅝ per cent. Cina Peculi.—1. All the six stocks named in your first letter are gilt-edged securities, about which you need have no reason to worry. With regard to buying the ordinary stocks you mention, both are sound enough, and look attractive at present prices, but in the present depressed state of the market it would be rash to assert that prices have touched bottom. As to your second letter, 2 and 3 are both good industrial investments. See "Insurance Notes" for the reply to your last question. Nobody.—The Car Trust Investment Company was reconstructed in 1905, under the name of the Car Trust Realisation Company. Preference stockholders received one 5s. share in the new concern for every £10 stock in the old, and no dividend was to be paid on the new shares until the whole of the Income bonds and Debenture stock had been paid off. I have heard no price for the shares, but their value, if any, must be very small, as the Income bonds stand at only 25. Star.—(a) Sell them. (b) Very speculative, and not attractive at present. (c) Do your business through a member of the Stock Exchange. A list of members is published in the Supplement in this week's TRUTH. Adeline, Boscombe.—1. Hold for the present, in spite of the report. 2. I have heard nothing of the concern since the publication of the prospectus, with which I was not very favourably impressed. Huntsman.—1. No. 2. You could obtain the higher yield offered by the new issue without seriously increasing the risk. 3. Not first-class, but good enough among 5 per cent. securities. 4. Yes. Nozruc.—1. I cannot hold out any very strong hope of a recovery. The last accounts published showed a heavy deficit on working, and in view of the limited character of the guarantee the outlook for the debenture holders is not particularly inspiriting. I am not sure but what the best course would be to sell now and exchange into one of the many excellent high yielding securities that are available for investors. 2. The debentures should be held for the present. M. B.—1. Yes. 2. The company is doing very well, but the dividend outlook for the stock is rendered uncertain by the fact that 2 per cent. of the total now being paid is drawn from the sale of Rescission bonds given by the Government in commutation of the guarantee, and this fund is expected to be exhausted by 1909. You might hold the stock for the present, but keep a close watch upon traffics and general conditions governing the line. 3. Grand Trunk Second Preference. G. B., Gravesend.—Your investments are good enough among securities returning 4½ to 5 per cent., and your brother might divide his money between, say, Japanese Four and a Half per Cent. bonds and the new Argentine Fives. G. S.—There is good security behind each of the stocks you name, and by spreading your money over the five you ought to be able to command the required yield with a minimum of risk. Smythe.—1. I do not advise. 2. A fair investment, but you must not count upon any material movement in the price within the immediate future. Moobung.—1. A fair speculation; hold for a better market. 2 and 3. These also should be held. Lancelot.—1. Hold what you have as a pure speculation, but do not buy more. 2. I certainly do not advise a further purchase. See this week's comments. Douglas.—1. A sound industrial investment, but I do not anticipate a rise. 2 and 3. Hopeful purchases. 4-6. I prefer Glencairns as a holding for dividends. The others are more speculative. Oxford.—1. Hold for the present. 2. Reports as to the value of the property (which, by the way, is in West Australia, not New Zealand) are conflicting, and I do not care to recommend a purchase of the shares. Senex.—1. A very fair holding for dividends. 2. Keep them. Greenhorn.—1, 2, 4, 5, 8, 9, and 11 seem good for a small recovery when domestic conditions improve 3. The poor report is disquieting. 6. They do not seem attractive to me. 7. Speculative. 10. Realise. With regard to your other queries, see Rule 2. Scotus.—1. I think you might make a better investment. 2. An undesirable holding. W. McC.—1. I should not like to call the debentures safe. They are, of course, fully guaranteed, but the financial position of the guarantors, although sufficiently good at the present time to meet the service on the debentures, is not all that might be desired. If safety be your first object, it would be better to exchange into something not possessing this element of doubt. 2. In the event of the recovery to the price you paid, it might be as well to realise. 3. Thanks for the information.

Miscellaneous.

Hindoo.—Obviously speculative. Caution, W. T., and D. A.—Thanks for your communications. Aloof.—May 29 and June 12. I do not know what the cost would be, but I should not advise litigation over so small a sum. However, if you like, I will forward the solicitor's address. Express.—I referred last week to the National Share Exchange bucket-shop. Diligens.—1. Yes. 2. The yield mentioned was on the then current price of the shares. R. W. C.—All good. Erie.—Hold for the present. Carrington.—Have nothing to do with Arnold and Butler, or any other cover-snatchers. Such so-called methods of "investment on margin," etc., are wild gambles, in which you are practically certain to lose your money. Jeames, Vigornian, and other correspondents.—See preceding answer. Nimrod, Solitary, Constant Reader (Murree Hills), and other correspondents.—I do not recommend purchases of such lottery or premium bonds. The International Securities Syndicate, Cunliffe, Russell, and Co., and other touting firms charge outrageously exorbitant prices for the bonds. Mayflower.—See preceding answer. Apply to Messrs. N. Keizer and Co., 29, Threadneedle-street, E.C. H. L. W. and R. G.—A swindling bucket-shop, which I have already exposed. Duke.—See "Insurance Notes." W. H. D.—I have heard nothing of it. W. H. T.—1. Lyons' ordinary shares would be a good purchase. 2. See "Insurance Notes."' G. K.—1 and 2. I advise you not to purchase such bonds, but I have had no occasion to criticise the firm you name. 4 and 6. These are highly speculative, and, in my opinion, you could make a much more attractive selection at present. Suspicious.—The insignificant decline was due to market conditions, and not to fears concerning the new project, which is calculated to benefit the concern. Worth holding. Ashley.—1 and 2. Would make good commercial investments. 3. A trifle risky. 4. Only attractive as a high yielding speculative investment. 5. Best left alone. Celt.—1. The shares are about equal, and I do not think you would gain anything by the proposed exchange. 2. Lyons appear preferable. 3. It seems unwise to realise in present market conditions. Cosmos.—Realise and put the proceeds into Humbers or Darracqs. Lyons are worth holding, and there is nothing to fear in regard to the other. I know nothing against the firm, but recommend you to do your business through a member of the Stock Exchange. Carrots.—1. Beyond the land balance there are no attractive prospects, and the shares appear a trifle over valued. 2. An attractive speculation. 3. Poor. Cristow.—Bradford, Dyers, and Argyll appear the best of the list. Hospenthal.—You have no cause for anxiety. Montemilla, Cork.—All might be held. Dunlops seem the least attractive. Scunthorpe.—Neither could possibly be regarded as free from serious risk. Medicus, and other correspondents.—Replies will appear next week.

Over-stoutness is not difficult to permanently cure when the right remedy is found. Antipon is now in universal favour. The Methodist Recorder says:—"It is satisfactory to know that Antipon is the practical result of a specialist's researches and discoveries, so that reliance can be placed upon its efficacy." Price 2s. 6d. and 4s 6d. per bottle, of all chemists, or of The Antipon Company, 13, Olmar-street, London, S.E.

Miscellaneous Issues—Pekins Unaffected by the New Coal Discovery—British Electric Traction Prospects—Spencer, Santo's Reduced Dividend—Bieckert's Prosperity—Allsopp's Debentures.

The Miscellaneous market remains in a state of disheartening dulness, unrelieved by any really bright spot. There are many securities in this department standing at prices which ought to tempt investors, but they are still backward in coming forward, and week after week passes without any substantial sign of that broadening out of public interest which has been so long awaited. Speculation is practically at a standstill, such a favourite counter as Anglo "A" being almost completely neglected, in common with more stable issues in the same group, for which a month or two ago some investment demand was being experienced. Hudson's Bays have also been comparatively inactive, though towards the end of the week a small advance was recorded. The Pekin Syndicate published a cablegram from their chief mining engineer at the Honan mines, stating that a seven feet coal seam has been struck, that further prospecting is proceeding, and that in the meantime a small quantity of coal is being obtained, of which 20 per cent. is good clean lump. The news, though somewhat more encouraging than some of the previous reports, did not produce any material effect on the price of the shares, which are now quoted at about 5¼, a heavy drop from the price at which they stood even six months ago. For some time past it had been generally anticipated that the revenue of the British Electric Traction Company for the past year would reveal a serious falling off, so that in this respect the report issued last week occasioned no surprise. Between 1902 and 1906 the dividend on the ordinary shares dwindled from 9 per cent. to 3 per cent., and this year nothing is paid. The net profit was, in fact, barely sufficient to meet the debenture and preference charges. The directors drag into the report an allusion to "the free importation of manufactures from abroad," which is particularly foolish in connection with the company's undertakings, and the shareholders might justly regard the outlook as quite hopeless, if it were seriously contended that they must not look for an improvement, first, until a protective policy has been adopted in this country, and, secondly, until the tariff could be so manipulated as to benefit this particular concern. Fortunately, the outlook is not actually so gloomy as that. There was in the past year an increase in the yield from the company's investments, and further large increases may be fairly counted upon, seeing that a number of the associated tramway companies, whose properties are still only in the development stage have a good prospect of becoming remunerative. Meanwhile, the report has had little or no influence on the price of the company's securities. The reduction of the ordinary dividend of Spencer, Santo, and Co. was not unexpected, and had been discounted by the drop in the value of the shares during the past few months. Instead of the 10 per cent. distributed for the four preceding years, the ordinary shareholders now get only 6 per cent. Conditions in the building trade have been unfavourable, and though various contracts have been secured, the percentage of profit is less than in more prosperous times. In the brewery division the outstanding feature has been the fall in Bieckert's Brewery ordinary stock, notwithstanding the remarkable state of prosperity this concern has now reached. Seven years ago there was a drastic writing-down of the capital, and even then it was not till 1905 that a dividend was paid on the ordinary stock. The distribution then was 6 per cent.; in the following year it was doubled; and now it is raised from 12 to 15 per cent., while the allocation to reserve has been largely increased. The business at Buenos Ayres is rapidly expanding under the present management, and to provide for the necessary extensions and improvements at the brewery an issue of new shares and 5 per cent. debenture stock is contemplated. A meeting of the holders of Allsopp's Four per Cent. Mortgage Debenture stock has been called for this week to consider a proposal for the modification of the trust deed to permit the cancellation of £250,000 of the stock. The exact effect of the proposal is not very clearly explained in the circular which has been sent out, but one large stockholder detects in it a flagrant example of that policy of "confiscation" against which brewers are perpetually declaiming, and there certainly seems to be good ground for the complaint that the matter is being rushed through. Among textiles hardly a change has occurred. Iron, steel, and coal companies' shares have exhibited a slightly weaker tendency, but Vickers have shown a satisfactory degree of firmness in view of the strike. Motors have generally been inactive, with fractional declines in two or three cases. VIGILANT.

INSURANCE NOTES.

Owing to the exceptional pressure on my space this week, I am obliged to hold over my usual "Insurance Notes." Below I give, however, the answers to a number of inquiries by correspondents on insurance questions:—

Ajax and Lotus.—The Scottish Provident Institution is one of the strongest and best in the country. Cura Peculi.—The United Kingdom Temperance Institution is thoroughly sound and strong. P. B.—The Scottish Temperance Company is the best office for your purpose. It may, however, be necessary for you to find rather more than £100. Duke.—I should not advise you to commence paying to this Corporation, though if you have paid for long it might, or might not, be advisable for you to continue doing so. I had something to say on this subject on March 6. Hautbois.—If the policy is properly assigned to you for valuable consideration, of which I imagine your having paid the premiums is convincing proof, the policy is irrevocably yours, and the company would have to pay you. You should ascertain from the company that the assignment to you has been registered in their books. W. H. T.—Take your endowment assurance policy from the National Provident Institution. T. M.—Ask the association if they will give the surrender value subject to your obtaining the consent of all parties concerned, and a guarantee from the Law Guarantee and Trust Society, indemnifying the life office in the event of a claim being made; this guarantee would cost very little. If not, consult Messrs. Foster and Cranfield, Poultry, E.C., as to the sale of the policy. M. F., Cardiff.—You might have done better, but there is not a vast deal the matter with the policy you have. It is waste of money to insure twice over. A. K. C.—An amalgamation is in progress, which will improve the security for the policy holders. The policy you have is quite all right. Oliver and L. W. S.—I cannot advise the association you mention for the class of business you refer to. I do not agree with the press opinions expressed in their circular. W. A. B.—The policy you mention is very fairly satisfactory. The extra premium referred to is "7½ per cent. extra on premium, to secure compensation from date of accident." These words are quoted from the company's proposal form. Snorter.—The policy you mention is all right. Your old gardener can be insured at the ordinary rate, no information in regard to age being asked for or required. J. M.—Pay Alliance, Royal, or Royal Exchange 5s. a year for a permanent servant, and 2s. 6d. a year for all occasional employees. You are not liable to porters and other casual employees unless you employ them for the purposes of your trade or business. Take the life policy you want from the Norwich Union.—Several answers to correspondents are postponed till next week.

All Rights reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

A CLAIM FOR COMPENSATION.

MR. GILKS, the butler, and Mrs. Perridge, the housekeeper, were discussing their usual mid-morning luncheon in the latter's room—a succulent little luncheon of cold chicken and tongue, and lamb chops in aspic, "flanked" (as our forefathers would have said) with a bottle of special old port, which Gilks, who had a sound taste in wine, had just got up from his master's cellar. Both butler and housekeeper were in the habit of doing themselves well, as their portly persons and rubicund faces testified. Indeed, how they managed to assimilate what they did without becoming martyrs to chronic dyspepsia is one of those mysteries of domestic service that no one outside it can ever comprehend.

Now while Mr. Gilks was thus discussing, gastrically, the lamb chops and the old port, he was also, oratorically, discussing something else—a something else that then loomed large on the public horizon—to wit, the recent Act extending the principle of Compensation for accidents to those engaged in domestic service.

"This is the dawn of a new era, Mrs. Perridge—of a new and blessed era," he said, holding up his glass critically to the light and surveying the clear transparency of the ruby fluid with an appreciative eye. "What was we before? Slaves without rights and without remedies! And what are we now? Free men and women, Mrs. Perridge, with a weapon in our hand as can bring the most harbitry of our tyrants to their knees. You mark my words, Mrs. Perridge, this is nothing less than an almighty revolution, compared with which the liberation of the niggers by William Wilberforce was child's play."

And to emphasise the impressiveness of the pronouncement, Mr. Gilks tossed off his whole glass of port at a gulp, and smacked his lips resoundingly, with an air of triumph.

"There, now, Mr. Gilks; you don't say so," simpered Mrs. Perridge, coyly arranging her cap ribbons and glancing at the oracle admiringly.

"But I do say so, ma'am," he replied, as he re-filled his glass. "I'm not a Radical, Mrs. Perridge. I've always been—like most of the gentlemen in my line—a good Conservative; which it's more respectable, and soshally beneath contempt, Radicals being, for the most part, low, vulgar fellers. But I must confess, Mrs. Perridge, that in this particular case the Radicals have done a righteous thing, and covered themselves with everlasting glory. And though I couldn't never vote for them—even if I had a vote—especially with their views about the wine and spirit trade, wanting to turn us all into blue-ribboners—yet I shall always speak kindly of them in future, Mrs. Perridge," he declared, magnanimously, "for this one good—I may even say, holy—action."

"I hear our governor is grumbling about it terrible," remarked Mrs. Perridge.

"He is, ma'am," nodded Mr. Gilks. "He was going on about it only last night after dinner, forgetting, I suppose, that I hadn't yet left the room; said it was an iniquitous Act, he did, and if servants wanted insuring against accidents, why shouldn't they insure themselves, as he had to do; and that such pampering and cosseting of the lower orders—of the lower orders, if you please, Mrs. Perridge—was downright sickening."

"P'raps he was only thinking of the under servants, who, of course, are the lower orders," suggested Mrs. Perridge.

"He didn't say nothing about under servants. He lumped us all together, like so much dirt," answered the indignant Mr. Gilks.

"Well, the governor is hasty. He often speaks without weighing his words," said Mrs. Perridge. "But his bark is worse than his bite, after all; and really he isn't a bad master, as masters go."

"I am not denying that he has his points," replied Mr. Gilks, with the air of one who prides himself on being strictly impartial, even to his worst enemies. "He doesn't look into the stock in the wine cellar too closely, nor does he stoop to the low practice of counting his cigars. Still, a man who can bring hisself to speak of me as the lower orders—— Oh! hang. There goes the bell. That's for me. I wish the dooce the Government would pass a law doing away with bells in domestic service. They're always ringing at the most inconvenient times," declared Mr. Gilks, as, with a regretful glance at the half-finished contents of the bottle, he rose and went off to obey the summons.

As he was passing along the corridor that led from the housekeeper's room, he encountered Mary, the second housemaid, a good-looking, buxom young woman, with red cheeks and saucy blue eyes.

"You're looking very pretty this morning, my dear," said the butler, with an amorous playfulness that was hardly in keeping with his usual dignity.

"Oh, go on, Mr. Gilks," tittered Mary.

"I am going on, when I have taken the usual toll," replied Mr. Gilks.

And he put his arm round Mary's waist and kissed her.

"Well, I never," giggled Mary; "and me with such a bad cold in my head, too. It would serve you right if you caught it. That it would, Mr. Gilks."

"And if I did, my dear," replied the butler, jocosely, "it wouldn't matter much, for, under the new Act, you see, I should come down on the governor for compensation."

"I thought you could only claim compensation," answered Mary, saucily, "for ailments caught while discharging your domestic duties."

"Well, and ain't I discharging one of my domestic duties in kissing you, my dear?" demanded Mr. Gilks, with a facetious grin. And he passed on, chuckling to himself at his own wit, and reflecting that really this would be rather a nice point for the lawyers—to settle whether it was, or was not, part of the domestic duties of the butler to kiss the pretty maidservants. For his part, he was prepared to maintain strenuously that it was, and he had little doubt that Mary would be found of the same opinion. On the other hand, Mrs. Perridge, the housekeeper, would, of course, dissent strenuously from the proposition, since she somehow regarded the butler as her own private property. What reason she might have for this claim I don't quite know. At any rate, Mr. Gilks so far recognised it that he was always severely distant in his manner to Mary when Mrs. Perridge was looking.

At supper that evening in the housekeeper's room the subject of compensation again cropped up. This time it was Mrs. Perridge who introduced it.

"I've found out something, Mr. Gilks," she said, "from certain remarks as I overheard to-day between the master and the missis."

"The missis? Oh, d—n that woman!" ejaculated Mr. Gilks, viciously.

"Oh, fie, Mr. Gilks! Such language. In my presence, too!" said Mrs. Perridge, holding up a reproving finger.

"Well, I couldn't help it, really," replied Mr. Gilks. "I'm not the one to swear before ladies in a general way. But that woman would provoke the patience of a saint. I wonder the old man has managed to stick her so long—I do, indeed."

"He can't help himself, poor man!" answered Mrs. Perridge; "he's not like you or me. He can't give notice to leave when he isn't satisfied. I dare say he wishes he could. Besides, it's her money. The master hasn't a copper of his own. And when you're living on your wife, you have to put up with things, you know. But you haven't told me. What's the mistress been doing to you now?"

"She's been nagging at me the whole day," replied the butler, with a gloomy scowl. "Nothing I've done since I got up this morning seems to be right. The wine-glasses are greasy, the plate's smeary, the lamps smell enough to poison you, her precious Fido looks as though he hadn't been brushed for a month, and why can't I teach the buttons better manners. She said it all in such a hasty way, too, as though she were trying to rile me. It was all I could do—I give you my word it was, Mrs. Perridge—to preserve a dignified and contemptible silence."

"I don't wonder, Mr. Gilks," said the housekeeper, sympathetically, "I know what the mistress is when she gets saying nasty things."

"She's a cat, ma'am, a spiteful, wixenish cat, which I'd give something to have the chance of rapping her over those venomous claws of hers," ejaculated Mr. Gilks, viciously.

"There, now! I often feel that way myself about her," replied Mrs. Perridge, warmly; "and it seems to me, Mr. Gilks," she added, with an impressive look, "as providence has just now put the very weapon in your hand for the purpose."

"What do you mean, Mrs. Perridge?" inquired Mr. Gilks.

"You remember my saying just now, Mr. Gilks, that I had found out something to-day through overhearing certain remarks that passed between the master and the missis?"

The butler nodded.

"Well, I'll tell you what those remarks was," continued Mrs. Perridge. "They was these, Mr. Gilks: Missis says to master, 'Tom,' she says, 'how about insuring the servants? Have you done it yet?' she says. 'Well, no, my dear,' says he, 'I hav'n't. The fact is I rather grudge having to pay the money for such a purpose,' he says. 'But don't you think, Tom,' says she, 'as it would be wiser to take out a policy?' 'Well, I don't really think there's much risk,' he says, 'we've never had an accident to our servants yet, all these years. But there; I'll think about it, my dear.' Which, when he says he'll think about a thing, you know what it means, Mr. Gilks. It's only another way of saying as he's put it on one side till further notice."

"So it is," assented Mr. Gilks. "The governor is a regular slacker in business matters—always was. But I don't know as I quite follows your point about the weapon yet, Mrs. Perridge."

"No?" rejoined Mrs. Perridge, fixing her black eyes in a cunning gaze upon the butler, "then I'll tell you, Mr. Gilks. The governor hasn't insured us. What's the consequence—I just suppose a case—what's the consequence, I repeat, if you, for instance, Mr. Gilks, should slip down on the parquet flooring and strain yourself so badly as to be unfit for work for a month or two?"

"The old man would have to pay me compensation, of course," replied Mr. Gilks.

"Quite so," said Mrs. Perridge, the cunning of her look becoming still more pronounced. "But, not having covered you by insurance, the governor would have to stump up out of his own pocket, which means—since it's all the mistress's money—that she'd have to pay the piper. Now you know how hard the mistress always parts, Mr. Gilks ——"

"Nasty old skinflint," murmured the butler, "I know it well."

"That's just the fun of it," continued Mrs. Perridge, looking more cunning than ever. "She don't exactly love you, as it is, Mr. Gilks; and just think how she'd feel if she had to pay you from fifty to a hundred pounds compensation out of her own pocket. Oh, gracious! How she would grizzle over it. It would be like drawing her very heart's blood."

"Ah!" said Mr. Gilks, a smile of comprehension gradually stealing over his fat face. "I think I begin to see the point of your observations, Mrs. Perridge."

"It's an easy matter, after all, slipping down on parquet flooring—a thing, in fact, as might happen to any one," remarked Mrs. Perridge, in a casual sort of way.

"Yes, it's easy enough slipping down, ma'am," replied Mr. Gilks, thoughtfully; "but it's not so easy slipping down just hard enough to hurt yourself sufficiently and yet not so hard as to hurt yourself too much. Remember as a man of my build falls heavy, Mrs. Perridge, and I might get damaged more than I bargained for."

Mrs. Perridge smiled a knowing and superior smile.

"You could easy sit down on the floor, couldn't you, Mr. Gilks?" she inquired.

"Yes, Mrs. Perridge, I could certainly do that," he answered.

"And I could easy find you there, groaning and writhing, and trying in vain to get up—couldn't I, Mr. Gilks?" pursued the wily housekeeper.

"Yes, ma'am, you could," replied Gilks, chuckling. "But then," he added after a pause "where would the marks and bruises be, Mrs. Perridge? A man can't disable himself like that, you see, without having something to show the doctor."

"Oh, a man of your habit bruises at a touch, Mr. Gilks," answered the housekeeper. "You've only got to pinch yourself here and there, and the thing's done. Besides, in any case, strains aren't wisible, Mr. Gilks. Not the 'cutest doctor that ever looked a patient over can see a strain. You just hobbles and groans, and says 'Phew!' every time he touches you. And who's to know that you ain't really hurt? Of course, if you was dealing with an insurance company it would be different, insurance companies being dangerous things to play tricks upon. But with a private individual like the master—so slack and easy going and unsuspicious—you'll just be on velvet. If it wasn't so, I'd never have suggested such a course, Mr. Gilks."

The butler nodded. "Well, it's certingly worth thinking of," he said. "I'll give it my consideration, Mrs. Perridge."

Mr. Gilks gave the housekeeper's sly suggestion his consideration, and the next day's events decided him, for it so happened that his mistress again got out of bed on the wrong side that morning, with the result that she, spent the rest of the day in falling foul of all her servants, Mr. Gilks in particular, and thereby wrought him up to a pitch of vindictiveness that yearned irresistibly for summary retaliation. And in his resolve to "get his own back" he was warmly encouraged and fomented by Mrs. Perridge, who herself appeared to have been much exasperated during the day by her mistress's ill-humoured naggings.

So next morning, when the head of the house came down to breakfast, he was met by Mrs. Perridge with a long face and a distressful tale of how she had found poor Gilks an hour before lying groaning on the polished parquetry of the front hall, so much hurt that he was unable to rise; how she and Freddy, the "buttons," had, with the greatest difficulty, got him up and assisted him to his room, where he was now lying on the bed; and please might she send the stable boy for the doctor, as poor Gilks's injuries seemed very serious, etc., etc.

The master, of course, gave the requisite permission, and at once went himself to see Gilks, whom he found groaning and writhing on his bed, evidently in acute pain. Gilks, between his groans, gave his master a circumstantial account of the accident.

"I was a-crossing the front hall this morning, sir, after unbarring the shutters, when I slipped on the parquetry, all sudden-like, and come right down on my back, so heavy as I thought I'd broken every bone in my body. I was so much hurt that I couldn't even get up on to my hands and knees. And if Mrs. Perridge hadn't found me, and called up Freddy to get me on my feet, I should have been there now, sir. And oh, dear! my poor side. Phew! phew! It's serving me out something crool, it is. I do hope I haven't damaged myself for life, sir. But it almost feels like it—the pain's so bad—it do, indeed."

"Tut, tut! We'll hope it's not so serious as that, Gilks," replied his master kindly. "The doctor has been sent for. He'll be here presently. When he comes we shall know more about it. In the meanwhile you had better lie where you are and not attempt to move."

"I couldn't, sir, if I tried to," answered Gilks, lugubriously.

"Come, come. Cheer up, my good fellow," said his master, encouragingly. "I hope the doctor won't find anything so very serious the matter after all."

The hope he thus expressed was no mere pious formality either; for his folly in not having insured his servants had already dawned upon him, and he realised that if Gilks really were permanently disabled, it would be uncommonly awkward for him. Gilks had £70 a year and his keep—say another £50. What if he should have to pay the full pound a week allowed by the Act for the remainder of his life? It was rather a disturbing prospect.

But all apprehension on this score was—to his great relief—removed by what his wife had to tell him when he reported Gilks's unfortunate accident to her.

"Well, you may thank your stars, my dear Tom," she said, "that you have a business-like wife to look after you. When you put off insuring the servants and said you'd think about it, I knew what that meant—that you might perhaps do something by the next blue moon. So I took the matter into my own hands, communicated with 'The Regal,' got them to quote me for an inclusive omnibus policy, and clinched the matter by sending a cheque for the premiums at once. So luckily—whatever may be the extent of Gilks's injuries—we are fully covered."

"I say! But that's splendid. What a head you have got, to be sure, Clara," exclaimed her husband, in admiring approval. "You have taken a ton weight off my mind. I was afraid I might have to keep Gilks for the rest of his natural life."

"You are rid of all liability now, anyway, Tom—even if Gilks's injuries should prove to be serious. But, as to that, I confess I 'hae my doots.' I haven't the highest opinion of Gilks, as you know; and it wouldn't in the least surprise me if this wasn't more or less of a put-up job," declared his wife, with rather a grim expression.

"Oh, come, Clara, you are too hard on Gilks. He may be a little slack in his work perhaps——"

"Slack? If slackness were his only failing, I should regard him much more leniently than I do. But, as I have often told you, I don't believe he is any too honest, and if you had followed my advice, you would either have discharged him, or at least have taken the key of the wine-cellar into your own charge, long ago."

"My dear Clara, you know I could never do that——"

"No; I am aware of it, Tom. You are so easy-going and afraid of hurting people's feelings, that it amounts to a positive weakness. For that reason, I am extremely glad that it lies with the insurance company, and not with yourself, to handle the claim for compensation that Gilks will, of course, prefer. For you would have agreed to any demand without examination, whereas the company won't pay until they are satisfied that it's a genuine case."

"Well, I'm glad, too, as far as that goes," replied her husband. "I hate haggling with menials about anything. The doctor will be here before long, and then we shall hear what he has to say."

In due course the doctor arrived. He saw Gilks, examined him carefully, and gave the following report:—

"The fellow is certainly a good deal bruised," he said, "and appears to have strained his side rather badly. Whether his injuries are likely to be really serious it is difficult, at the moment, for me to say; but, at any rate, he must remain in bed for the present. And even taking the most favourable view, I should say he will be unable to resume his duties for quite a month."

"There, my dear, I told you I was sure Gilks wasn't shamming," said the master of the house to his wife, when the doctor had left.

"No. It seems he has really hurt himself," she replied, rather grudgingly. "Though, still, there is nothing to show that he didn't fall on purpose. It is, at least, an odd coincidence that he should have slipped down for the first time, in all these years, just after the new Act's coming into force. However, we will leave the insurance people to deal with that. What we have to do is to engage a locum tenens to do Gilks' work. And, luckily, I happen to know of a most trustworthy and capable man. My sister wrote to me about him only a few days ago, to ask if I could hear of a place for him. She knows him personally and can vouch both for his respectability and capacity. With your approval, I'll write and engage him for a month certain, at once."

"All right. Do so by all means," replied her husband, only too glad to be spared the bother of having to look out for a locum tenens himself.

In due course, the locum tenens arrived; and the first thing he did (owing, I suspect, to a hint given him by his new mistress) was to request that a careful inventory might be made of the stock of wine in the cellar before he took over the key. His master, not much liking the trouble of the thing, turned over the job to his wife. She did the work, as she always did everything, thoroughly; and the overhauling of the stock, under her keen supervision, brought to light rather a startling circumstance. More than twenty dozen bottles of what was supposed to be old port were found to have been emptied and filled with water. Moreover, from the comparatively recent disturbance of the dust in these particular bins, it was evident that no one but Gilks could be the culprit.

Gilks indignantly denied the charge. But his guilt was so evident that his master, while declining to prosecute him, gave him notice to leave the house at once as soon as he was well enough to be moved. And Gilks, not caring to remain any longer, under the circumstances, managed to get well enough to be taken away in an ambulance in the course of two or three days.

But that wasn't the end of his troubles. The insurance people, after looking into the case, came to the conclusion that his was a bogus claim, and declined to pay a penny. And Gilks, finding that he had to deal with an insurance company instead of with his easy-going master, was afraid to press his claim, and had to sit quietly down by their refusal. So altogether he got badly "left in the cart," which served him right.

Those tormented by Midges, Gnats, Mosquitos, and Insect Bites should use "SAMBULINE" or Elder, Glycerine, and Honey Jelly, an elegant preparation for allaying Irritation caused by Heat, Chafing through Exertion or Exposure to the Sun, at Seaside, Cricket, Motoring, Cycling, Tennis, Riding, Rowing, Fishing, etc., of Chemists in Metallic tubes 1s., post free 12 stamps of OSBORNE, BAUER, & CHEESEMAN, 19, Golden-square, Regent-st., London.

But how about Mrs. Perridge, the housekeeper, who had put Gilks up to his attempted fraud? Did no visitation fall on her? No; none whatever. The facts, you see, were these. Mrs. Perridge had, for some time, been spoiling to have her revenge on Gilks. She knew, of course, of his depredations in the wine-cellar. She knew also that, if he were temporarily disabled, they must come to light. And she baited her trap for him accordingly.

You will say that this was very mean and spiteful of Mrs. Perridge. I am not concerned to deny it. But then it was also very mean and treacherous of Mr. Gilks to make up to the housekeeper, to lead her on to expectations of marriage, and then to back down from his implied obligation. Still, even this she might have overlooked, in the hope of winning him back again. But there was one thing that she could not, and would not, overlook. I refer to Mr. Gilks' fatal delusion that it was part of his domestic duties as butler to kiss Mary, the under-housemaid.

ART NOTES.

THE PASTEL SOCIETY.

PASTEL is a medium which has never yet received its due share of attention in this country, and a debt of gratitude is certainly due to the Pastel Society for its efforts towards its popularisation. Unfortunately, they have, hitherto, only served, for the most part, to accentuate the nakedness of the land, the most interesting works shown at its exhibitions, speaking generally, being those shown by foreign artists. At the present show the British exponents—and more particularly the women among them—seem to have made a praiseworthy attempt to level up, and the average level of achievement is distinctly above that to which we have grown accustomed. On the other hand, the tendency to attempt the impossible—in the way of making pastel do the work of oils, water-colours, and what not, which has been much in evidence of recent years, shows itself, if anything, in an accentuated form. It must be said, too, that those in authority seem to regard it with a favourable eye rather than otherwise, seeing that they include a number of exhibits which have not the remotest claim to be included in a pastel exhibition. Pencil-drawings by Burne-Jones are always interesting, but it is a little difficult to understand what they are doing in this gallery. A specimen of Morris chintz, an Arts and Crafts table or two, even a Rodin statue were no more out of place. Then, again, there are a number of portrait studies, in charcoal, by Mr. Sargent. I quite admit, of course, that no self-respecting exhibition can afford to open its doors without showing something by Mr. Sargent, but——! I am not at all sure, by the way, whether it is not time that Mr. Sargent was honoured in the same way as was the famous race-horse Eclipse, who, if I am not mistaken, had to abstain from racing when it became evident that he could not help winning whatever he was entered for. I suggest this, not only in the interests of other artists, who must by this time be in much the frame of mind of the moon in "The Walrus and the Carpenter," who felt herself ungenerously treated because the sun shone all night as well as all day, but also in that of Mr. Sargent himself. It is difficult to imagine his state of mind, wrestling with his sense of duty, at the beginning of the season, without a tear of sympathy. Consider him as he mournfully contemplates the list of approaching exhibitions—"Academy, International, New Gallery, New English Art Club, Pastel Society, This, That, and The Other—three hundred and ninety-eight exhibitions altogether, and not one of them can afford to open its doors without at least one of my works. It is too much, much, much too much." And it really is. Could not some sort of National Memorial be got up—reassuring the distinguished artist—pointing out to him that even did he only exhibit at, say, fifty shows in the course of a season, he would yet be acquitted of any dereliction of duty.

To return to the Pastel Society, first disposing of Mr. Sargent's studies, which are, be it said, quite as clever as one has come to expect, and quite as important as, considering all things, we have any right to expect. They represent a fair selection of Mr. Sargent's aristocratic clientèle, and they are all very much alive. Mr. Mancini, by the way, shows a work of very similar character, though a shade smudgier, and to compare the two styles is interesting and not at all odious.

Quite the most beautiful example of what can be legitimately achieved by the pastellist is Mr. Henri Le Sidaner's snow scene. There is no attempt at imitating an oil painting—indeed, I doubt if by the use of oils, more fluent though they be, the artist could have achieved so strikingly the hushed suggestion that accompanies falling snow. Another very noticeable exponent of pastel at its most interesting is M. Simon Bussey, whose portrait of his little daughter in very smart red shoes is one of the most lovable, if not, perhaps, the loveliest, of the works shown. The foreign exhibitors, in fact, are those whose works cling most perseveringly to the memory, even although they are not always the most sympathetic, as, for instance, those of MM. Lhermitte and Réné Billotte. Of the English exhibitors those which stand out most forcibly are a brilliant study of shimmering silks by Miss Anna Airy, some of Mr. Pennell's clever little sketches of New York and London scenes—though I do not know why he preferred pastel to some more appropriate medium—and some landscapes by the late Mr. Brabazon, which do not, however, strike me as being of his best. One of the most remarkable works shown is certainly Mr. Walter Crane's "Nymph of the Shore," who wears such an extremely tight-fitting blue dress, thereby displaying her strange anatomy to the worst advantage, that the problem of how she got into it is only equalled by that of how she is ever to get out of it without some sort of tin-opener. There are, indeed, far too large a proportion of works shown which were much better left in modest retirement, and which it is only kindness to forget. This is the more to be regretted, in view of the fact that so much of what is good is very good indeed, and that, had the weeding-out process been more faithfully attended to, it would have been an exhibition of the first note.

However it may be as regards artistic interest, there is no shadow of doubt that when it comes to popularity such an exhibition as that of the Pastel Society is not in it with paintings of the religious allegory type such as Mr. Sigismund Goetze's "Ever Open Door," now being shown by Messrs. Vicars at their Bond-street Galleries previous to a provincial tour. It is difficult to write of such paintings, which are set forth in such ingenuous language as to silence the scoffer even when they most tempt him. Whatever we may think of the taste of such works, it is at least certain that they will deeply move many thousands of excellently religious folk, and, in so far, they are beyond the reach of criticism. But it is at least permitted to say that, in this present example, which represents, with much obviousness, the souls of the dead—if I read the picture aright—divesting themselves of all their earthly possessions as they approach the Gates of Heaven, Mr. Goetze has attempted an artistic effect which has never occurred to any artist before him. He chooses for the most salient point of his composition—and that so markedly and directly that it is impossible to escape it—such a distinctly original motif—if that be the appropriate word for it—as a pair of blue satin corsets! It is true that nothing could more appropriately typify the vanities of this wicked world.

Another painting which, owing to its subject, is assured of a certain amount of popular favour—though chiefly, I take it, in the form of reproductions—is Mr. Arthur Garratt's "The Liberal Government, 1906," now being shown at the Doré Gallery. It provides what I take to be excellent portraits of the Ministers who are at present guiding our national destinies—of all, that is to say, except Mr. John Morley, who is seated behind the Premier, so that we are able to see little of him but his nose. "C.-B." himself is on his feet, addressing the House, and leaning upon the historic dispatch-box the while. The painter has admirably suggested the solemn dignity which we may be sure attends the Front Bench and their immediate supporters during important debates. Even Mr. John Burns exhibits a subdued solemnity than which nothing could be more striking. In fact, were some discriminating politician to forward, by registered post, a reproduction of Mr. Garratt's painting to every member of the House of Lords, that peccant body would there and then, I have little doubt, realise what manner of men it is vainly flouting, and would capitulate to the will of the people without any need for passing a Resolution at all. Which might be an excellent way out of a somewhat difficult position for everybody.

Scrubb & Co., Ltd., caution the public against the many injurious imitations of their Cloudy Fluid Ammonia that are being offered, and draw attention to their having affixed the signature of Scrubb & Co. to each bottle, without which none is genuine.

MUSIC.

BANDSMEN'S SALARIES IN THE "HALLS."

THE recent award of the arbitrator in the music-hall dispute is one of considerable interest to a certain section of the musical world, inasmuch as it regulates the pay not only of the variety artists, but also of the orchestral players involved in the dispute. Those who followed the matter may remember that the latter, as represented by the Amalgamated Musicians' Union, asked for a minimum wage of 36s. per week of six performances. In the result Mr. Askwith has awarded them 30s. in all cases where the average wage was on January 1 less than this, and in other theatres and all new theatres 32s., drummers getting 2s. less in each case. It is nothing much to boast of, but in view of the deplorable salaries which have hitherto obtained, the award, as a whole, probably represents a step forward. No doubt it has not given universal satisfaction. There are, for instance, many players in some of the halls concerned who are actually getting more at the present time than they would receive under the award, and it will therefore be open to their managers to reduce their salaries of 35s., 36s., and so on, to the lower amount. The managers may fairly argue that as both sides agreed to abide by the arbitrator's decision they can hardly be blamed if they adopt his terms. For some, therefore, the award is not very palatable. On the other hand, it will mean a great improvement in the case of many of the players in the smaller halls where considerably less than 32s. a week has hitherto been paid. To put it shortly, the mediocre players will benefit chiefly and those at the top and bottom only indirectly by the general levelling up which may be expected to result. Of the latter classes, the more fortunate and capable are receiving much better wages already, while the case of the others is, of course, just the opposite, and starvation rates obtain which the award will not affect, applying, as it does, only to houses of a certain standing.

Orchestral players may be divided roughly, in fact, into three classes. First, there are the highly trained musicians who have had a proper musical education at one or other of the regular schools. These are the pick of the calling, and furnish the leading concert orchestras, festival players, etc. Secondly, there are those not quite so well educated, who have acquired their knowledge more promiscuously. These are capable enough in their way, but rather rough and ready; they make up the orchestras of the minor theatres and the less important bands. Finally, there are the absolutely inefficient and incapable, who are reduced to accepting the worst class of work at absolutely starvation wages. These are the players who take 10s. or 15s. a week, and who are the salvation of the impecunious or parsimonious managers. When all others have refused the miserable terms offered, it is they who come forward and fill the breach. They play abominably, they have the vilest instruments, they are the dregs of the profession; but—they will take the terms offered, and that is all the manager cares about. These are the blacklegs of the calling who are mainly responsible for the shockingly low standard of pay which prevails throughout the profession at the present time. Eventually it is hoped to bring them all more or less into line, or at any rate a sufficient number of the best of them, to compel better all-round terms, and it is because the recent award may be said to represent a step in this direction rather than because of any immediate benefit which it confers that it is to be welcomed.

But the thing can only be done by degrees, of course. It is unfortunately the case that, as regards a considerable proportion of the poorest class of players, they are hardly worth more than such miserable salaries as those named, and if managers were compelled to pay a uniform salary of a decent kind, they would certainly not obtain employment. As it is, their necessity is the manager's opportunity, and he does not fail to profit by it. The average music-hall and theatrical manager unfortunately takes the view that the orchestra is at best a necessary evil, and in any case a thing to be got on the cheapest terms possible. While the musicians are indispensable enough in a way, they are, in another sense, the least important part of the entertainment. They constitute no draw, they win no applause, they are necessary only in the same way that the doorkeepers, seat attendants, and so forth are necessary, and they are paid accordingly. And the more capable performers are helpless to exact better terms because of the unlimited supply of inefficients and ne'er-do-wells ready and compelled by their necessities to take whatever they can get. On the whole, therefore, it is something to have even such a slender minimum as 30s. officially laid down and determined. Compared with the prices paid in many theatres and music-halls which are regarded as quite flourishing and high-class establishments by the public, this is quite a princely wage, and though it does not come up to the requirements of the more capable members of the calling, whose minimum as fixed by their representative body, the Orchestral Association, is 36s., it can hardly fail to exercise a beneficial influence all round in the long run.

The most notable event at Covent Garden lately has been the revival of "La Gioconda," which was produced in excellent style on Thursday last. Ponchielli's work is not one of great strength, and after the more pungent fare of the same order which has been offered us more recently by Puccini and others, it seems a little wanting here and there in devil and sting. There is in it, however, not a little charming melody and graceful music of a lighter kind, and in its way it is by no means devoid of its dramatic moments. The delightful dance of the Hours was, of course, once well known to all concert-goers, and this is only one of many charming pages which might be specified. The very use of the word charming is no doubt a criticism, since the story of the work is one of the blood and thunder type, which would seem to demand music of a very different order. Without possessing, however, the power and dramatic qualities which would probably have characterised a setting of the same book by Verdi, say, Ponchielli's music is by no means wanting in force and incisiveness. The performance was first-rate with Destinn, Kirkby Lunn, Bossi, Sammarco, and Journet in the leading parts, and a mise-en-scène which was the theme of general admiration.

Recent concerts have been noteworthy for the number of pianists who have been heard. Early last week there was Paderewski, who plays (and draws) as well as ever. Sapellnikoff is another famous artist who has been appearing in London again after too long an absence, while other recitalists have included Miss Irene Scharrer (who has come on wonderfully), Fräulein Marie Bender (a newcomer of some note), Mr. Félix Fox (a clever American player), and Mr. Cecil Baumer. Some clever piano playing from Mr. York Bowen was heard also at the last of the three chamber concerts, devoted to modern British works, given by Mr. Thomas Dunhill; concerts which it is regrettable, though hardly surprising, to note have not been a financial success. Mr. Dunhill chose the wrong time of the year for concerts of this kind, but may do better in the autumn. Even the Joachim Quartette concerts have not been too well attended this time, owing no doubt to the absence of Dr. Joachim himself—though Herr Halir is an excellent substitute. On Saturday, at the Queen's Hall, there was a good audience for Mr. Arthur Fagge's benefit performance of "The Dream of Gerontius," while at the same hall on Monday the Upsala Choir, from Sweden, delighted their hearers in the first of three concerts, of which it may be hoped the subsequent ones will be better patronised.

All Saints', Margaret-street, which is about to lose the services of Dr. W. S. Hoyte, who has been there nearly forty years as organist and choirmaster, has long been noted, like St. Andrew's, Wells-street, hard by, for the excellence of its music. It was when passing this church, as Dr. Hoyte's vigorous strains streamed forth, that Barnby, then organist at St. Andrew's, was supposed to have perpetrated his well-known mot to the effect that he regarded such playing as "the Hoyte of vulgarity." Dr. Hoyte, who is now a very old man, has been in failing health for some considerable time past, but has pluckily stuck to his duties until unmistakable warnings compelled him to bow to the inevitable. Dr. Hoyte, who is retiring on a suitable pension, is being succeeded by his pupil and assistant, Mr. W. S. Vale.

Dr. Hoyte's retirement recalls the case of another veteran organist who retained his powers to an extraordinary age—namely, Mr. Lissant, who was organist of St. Augustine's, Queen's Gate, until considerably past eighty, and who retained his vigour to the last—so effectually, indeed, that when once he had begun a voluntary it was with the utmost difficulty that he was prevailed upon to stop. Mr. Lissant, who had been a choir boy at Westminster Abbey at the coronation of William IV., died only three or four years ago.

"Lunch in F" bids fair to go down to fame with "Stanford in B flat" or "Walmisley in D minor." Mr. Lunch awoke last Wednesday, when a brief note concerning him appeared in these pages, to find himself famous, and by the following morning had had the dizzy greatness thrust upon him of an interview in the Morning Leader, in the course of which, in the interval between "shaves" and "hair cuts," he imparted to his interlocutor particulars of his career. When only five years old, it seems, Mr. Lunch was singing in the choir of St. Andrew's, Westbourne-grove, and at twelve he was deputising as organist at Christ Church, Ealing, so that his taste for music is of no sudden growth. As for the particular service which has brought him so prominently before the public, this musical Figaro explained:—

> I was scribbling down the introduction one day when the vicar of St. Thomas's (the Rev. P. Bainbrigge) came in for a shave, and asked me what I was doing. He expressed a desire to see it when it was finished, and in a week I had sent it to his organist, who was so pleased with it that he decided to produce it at his service.

Oddly enough, it appears, Mr. Lunch boasts several eminent musicians, including Dr. Richter and Mr. Ben Davies, among his regular clients. No doubt he regales them with appropriate conversation while they submit themselves to his ministrations. He, at least, would never be capable of the faux pas ascribed to one of his fraternity who, attending professionally to Dr. Joachim, advised a close crop, on the ground that otherwise he ran the risk of being mistaken "for one of those fiddling chaps."

A chance for poets. The "W. H. Ash" prize of twenty guineas is offered by the Worshipful Company of Musicians for the words for a "Marching Song" for the use of British soldiers on the march. The successful words will be set to music by a distinguished British composer, as yet unnamed. Further particulars may be obtained from Mr. T. C. Fenwicke, clerk to the company, at 16, Berners-street, W.

Talking of poets, Mlle. Suzanne Morival is to be congratulated on the glowing testimonial which her charms have wrung from the inspired pen of Mr. Alfred Austin:

> None can resist the dual charm by which thou dost ensnare,
> Either thou singest far too well, or else art thou too fair,
> For we who listen to thy voice forget thy face to view,
> And those who in thy face rejoice forget to listen too.

It is not every débutante that can boast a Poet Laureate among her conquests.

Carl Reinecke, one of the grand old men of music of to-day, entered on his eighty-fourth year on Sunday last, and by all accounts means to add considerably to his extensive output yet. If he has written nothing of a very epoch-making nature, his music has always been scholarly and refined. Reinecke was reckoned one of the most learned theorists of his day, and many well-known English musicians derived benefit from his teaching at Leipsic, where he was, of course, for many years conductor of the famous Gewandhaus concerts. This was in their unreformed period, when they used to take place practically without rehearsal, since the so-called rehearsal was actually a public performance, to which admission was readily obtained. As director of the Gewandhaus concerts Reinecke succeeded Julius Reitz, who was himself the successor of Mendelssohn. To-day the fine old musician has laid aside his bâton, but he still takes his daily walk and receives his friends every Sunday.

If Herr Mottl had left Munich for Vienna, which, it seems, he is not now to do, as a consequence of the recent sensational libel suit in which he was concerned, he would have been revisiting the city in which his student days were passed, for it was at the Vienna Conservatoire that he received his musical education, or some of it. Some ten or twelve years ago Mottl was a frequent visitor to London, and many will recall the great success of the Wagner concerts which used to be organised on his behalf by Mr. Schulz Curtius. Of late, however, he has seldom visited us, and they do say that some rather sharp criticisms to which he was subjected on the occasion of one of his former visits has had something to do with this. If memory serves, it was his tendency to drag the time which displeased some of his London hearers. But Mottl is undoubtedly a fine conductor, as more than one anecdote testifies.

On one occasion, when conducting a rehearsal at Queen's Hall, he had great difficulty in getting a certain passage to his liking. Again and again the players tried it, but to no purpose, until the performers began to grow dangerously restive under the ordeal. At this moment a sound of knocking, seeming to proceed from beneath the orchestra, was heard, and Mottl, seizing on the incident, immediately restored general good humour by pausing and observing in dramatic tones: "Gentlemen—the shade of Wagner!" Mottl has always been a Wagner worshipper, and Mozart is another of his major divinities. "I consider Mozart," he once declared, "the greatest purely musical genius that has ever showered blessings on the world. He was music personified."

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—If you are disappointed, as I fear you will be, in Mr. Kitson's "Life of Captain James Cook" (1), it is the misfortune, not the fault of the biographer. Mr. Kitson has given you all there was to give—a kind of log-book account of the great circumnavigator and discoverer's voyages and explorations—but the man himself escapes you. Only he, said Johnson, who knew a man in life should write his biography, but from those who knew Cook intimately, who sailed with him as mate or doctor, you learn nothing but vague generalisations. You learn so little, indeed, of the individual man that you are

(1) "Captain James Cook, R.N., F.R.S., the Circumnavigator." By Arthur Kitson. With Map and Illustrations. (London: John Murray. 15s. net.)
(2) "The Women Artists of Bologna." By Laura M. Ragg. With Twenty Illustrations. (London: Methuen & Co. 7s. 6d. net.)
(3) "Colonel Daveron." By Percy White. (London: Hurst & Blackett, Ltd. 6s.)
(4) "The Last of the Mammoths." By Raymond Turenne. (London: Chatto & Windus. 2s. 6d.)
(5) "The Loafer." By Gurner Gillman. (London: Greening & Co., Ltd. 6s.

grateful for the nearest approach to the intimacy you long for, which is to be found, perhaps, in the description of Cook's character and person given by Samwell, surgeon's mate of the Resolution.

> He was a modest man and rather bashful, of an agreeable, lively conversation, sensible, and intelligent. In his temper he was somewhat hasty, but of a disposition the most friendly, benevolent, and humane. His person was about six feet high, and, though a good-looking man, he was plain, both in address and appearance. His head was small; his hair, which was a dark brown, he wore tied behind. His face was full of expression, his nose exceedingly well shaped; his eyes, which were small and of a brown cast, were quick and piercing; his eyebrows prominent, which gave his countenance altogether an air of austerity. He was beloved by his people, who looked up to him as a father, and obeyed his commands with alacrity. The confidence we placed in him was unremitting; our admiration of his great talents unbounded; our esteem for his good qualities affectionate and sincere.

Surgeon Samwell also bears expert testimony to not the least, if the least-known, of Cook's services, "that he had at last broken the back of the scurvy fiend." Dr. Johnson, in saying that "a ship was like a jail in which you had a chance of being drowned," might have added, "and in which you had an immeasurably greater chance of catching jail fever." No less than 20 per cent. of a man-of-war's crew usually died of scurvy in crossing the Atlantic. When Cook served on board the Eagle, after a two months' cruise in the Channel Captain Palliser lost from scurvy twenty-seven men, including the surgeon, and landed one hundred and thirty-two men, including two surgeon's mates, invalided through the same disease. When Cook served on board the Pembroke she lost twenty-nine men from scurvy in crossing the Atlantic, and yet the Pembroke had the cleanest bill of health in the fleet. Yet when Cook himself was captain, in a voyage of three years and eighteen days he did not lose one single man from this fell scourge! In fact, all this frightful loss of life in the Navy was preventable, and could have been prevented if other captains in the fleet had taken the care Cook did of the health of his crews. Cook seems to stand alone amongst the world's heroes in this, that he made upon his own age a deeper impression than he has left on ours. On the breaking out of war with France and America each hostile Government, unsolicited, gave instructions to its Navy that Captain Cook and his two ships must be unmolested; while the liberality of our own Admiralty in hastening to meet his every want and wish must, I fancy, have been unprecedented. No doubt, if Cook had been as great a curse as he has been a blessing to mankind, if he had desolated as many countries as he discovered, and if he had diminished as much as he has increased the sum of the world's wealth and happiness, he would have been immeasurably more famous than he is. "Greatness," says Fielding, in "Jonathan Wild the Great," "consists in bringing all manner of mischief on mankind, and goodness in removing it from them." Mr. Kitson's is beyond doubt the most accurate and adequate biography of Cook that has ever appeared.

Archbishop Whateley, who lived in barbarous ante-suffragette times, used to say that woman's intellectual inferiority to man was proved by her failure to produce a single great painter or composer, though music and painting have been for centuries the special studies of the sex. I cannot say that Mrs. Ragg in her "The Women Artists of Bologna" (2) has refuted the archbishop's facts and inferences, since not one of these lady artists is of supreme or even of secondary artistic rank. Nevertheless, this record of their lives and works is doubly interesting for the glimpses it gives you into the characters and into the times of these brilliant women. Mrs. Ragg happily compares biography to a coin which upon one face is stamped with an image and superscription, and upon the other with a coat of arms, a device, an allegory—the former relating to the individual, the latter to his environment. In this volume you have sometimes the obverse, sometimes the reverse, of the coin presented to you, and sometimes both. In the first of the four sketches, which is at once the longest and the most interesting, it is rather with the individual than with her time you have to do, and rather with the saint than with the artist. That Caterina was a saint is proved by something more convincing than the gruesome and even disgusting post-mortem examination of her venerated body to prove that it had not been embalmed, which would have shocked no one so much as Caterina herself, who in her lifetime was a prude of prudes. Her uncorrupted body—that is, the skin of it—still survives to be worshipped by the faithful:

> Yet no grinning skeleton or ghostly corpse could be more unlifelike than this small erect figure whose discoloured, wizened face is thrown into hideous relief by the splendour of silk and gems and cloth of gold.

The profane Protestant wonders why the miraculous preservation of the body of the saint did not go farther than the imperfect tanning of her skin, for the contemporary testimony of the nuns to that other miracle—the exquisite fragrance of Caterina's body months after her death—is hardly satisfactory. Next in interest to Caterina comes Mrs. Ragg's record of Elisabetta Sirani, chiefly because it gives you so vivid a glimpse into times when poison—from which this artist was supposed to have died—was so generally and subtly practised. But, indeed, all four sketches are of unusual interest, while the volume is sumptuously illustrated. Mr. Percy White's "Colonel Daveron" (3) is a singularly subtle study of an unusual, an unpleasant, but far from unnatural character, whose suicide is a crowning act of moral cowardice. Fortunately the Colonel does not absorb your interest, which is distributed between all those who, in loyalty to his much-enduring wife, try to restore his self-respect and the respect of the public, which was to be shown by the return of the Colonel to Parliament. Far from the least interesting part of this extremely interesting story are its opening chapters describing Tony Derrick's school masters, mates, and days. If you can believe in an American multi-millionaire offering his only daughter and heiress to the man who will bring home a monstrous mammoth to adorn his latest gift to New York—a Museum of Natural History—you may find interest in "The Last of the Mammoths" (4). Nor is this the only improbability in the novel, since the mammoth itself is incredible, while you are in no way prepared for the convenient falling in love of the heiress with the artist at the opening of the tale. However, the search for, and chase of, the great beast are spiritedly described. Mr. Gurner Gillman's "The Loafer" (5) is a first novel of promise. It contrasts two brothers, rivals for the hand of the same heroine, who by her Grace Darling heroism puts the weaker to shame, and is the indirect cause of his death. In dying, he meditates the far-fetched and far-reaching revenge of persuading the heroine to marry him, only in order to prevent her becoming, after his death, his brother's wife. "Yes, there it was in the Book of Common Prayer in all the coldness of type: 'A woman may not marry her husband's brother.'" This, I must admit, is rather bathos, but there are many strong and stirring scenes in "The Loafer."—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

There are a good many readers who have pleasant recollections of Mr. John Watson's books, "Poachers and Poaching," "Nature and Woodcraft," "The Confessions of a Poacher," etc., which were warmly praised for their striking originality and great distinction of style. Mr. Watson, who has been silent for some years now, is the author of a new book, "Woodlanders and Field Folk: Sketches of Wild Life in Britain," which, by reason of its singularly faithful and poetic descriptions of nature, should appeal to lovers of the English countryside. The book is issued by Mr. Fisher Unwin.

Yet another posthumous novel of Adeline Sergeant

Thomas Goode & Co.—China, glass, pottery, fireproof ware. Sole agents in the United Kingdom for the famous "Bi Métal" (copper lined with pure sheet silver) Cooking Utensils. Illustrated catalogues free.—South Audley-street, London.

Mortlocks. — Specialists in Luncheon, Dinner, Dessert, Breakfast, and Tea Services. Old English and French Patterns and Models. Specimens sent on Approval. Carriage paid.—Oxford St., and Orchard-st., London, W.

is being published by Messrs. Methuen this week. "The Quest of Geoffrey Darrell" is the title of the story, which is largely concerned with the machinations of a secret society—a Red Brotherhood of more than common ingenuity in intimidation and persecution.

Mrs. Charles Brookfield is the author of an historical novel, "My Lord of Essex," which Sir Isaac Pitman and Sons are publishing. The story, which deals with the romantic career of Queen Elizabeth's favourite, is shortly to be presented on the stage by Mr. Lewis Waller in a dramatic version prepared by Mr. Charles Brookfield.

Several additions have lately been made to the series of popular half-crown reprints—comely volumes, well printed on good paper, and nicely bound—of notable works published by Mr. Murray. Mr. J. A. R. Marriott's "George Canning and his Times: a Political Study," is now issued in this form, and another volume is Mr. Basil Lubbock's "Round the Horn Before the Mast," which has gone through several editions since its first appearance in 1902. In fiction, the series includes two of Mr. H. A. Vachell's earlier novels, "John Christy: a Romance of Yesterday," and "The Shadowy Third"; and also "The Heart's Highway: a Romance of Virginia in the Seventeenth Century," by Mary C. Wilkins.

In "Poetry and Progress in Russia" (Lane, 7s. 6d. net), Mrs. Newmarch deals with an aspect of Russian literature hitherto neglected in favour of the school of realistic fiction. The period covered extends from the first publications, in 1814, of Poushkin—the greatest of the Russian national poets—to the death in 1886 of Nadson, whose work is characteristic of the decadence of Russian poetry. The book, which is embellished with six full-page portraits, consists of an introduction and studies of Poushkin and Nadson, and of Lermontov, a poet of the romantic school; Koltsov, the Russian Burns; Nikitin, the singer of Russian rural life; and Nekrassov, the poet of revolution.

Lady Breadalbane has another series of articles on deer-stalking which will be published in Blackwood's Magazine. The first of these, which is to appear in next month's number, will be entitled "The High Tops of Black Mount."

A new novel by Mr. Edgar Jepson is welcomed by every one who appreciates wit and humour, and such will not be disappointed with "The Four Philanthropists" (Fisher Unwin, 6s.). Three of the four are of the male sex, a baronet, an American capitalist, and a briefless barrister. In their enthusiasm for humanity they form "The General Philanthropic Removal Company," whose objects are the removal of financiers and captains of industry. In the course of the attempt to remove Albert Armstead Pudleigh, by means of a sandbag, an attempt which fails by reason of the thickness of the financier's skull, a fourth, in the person of Angel Pavis, becomes one of the band, and adventures crowd upon them. It is a lively narrative, touching the true fantastic note, while beneath its wit and humour an undercurrent of satire marked by keen observation, gives strength to the story.

In connection with the Oxford Pageant this week Messrs. Raphael Tuck and Sons have issued, under the authority of the committee, three sets of postcards containing reproductions of pictures by Mr. Byam Shaw, Mr. J. Finnemore, and other artists. The pictures represent the principal scenes and incidents in the pageant, and the postcards, which are remarkably well printed in colours, should have a wide popularity as artistic souvenirs of a memorable performance.

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United, Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Building, Carteret street, S.W.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—London is looking its very best just now. The trees in full leaf are usually covered with thick dust at the end of June, but dust has been vanquished by rain this season, and the foliage is fresh and green. There has been no oppressive heat as yet, and the few quiet days when nothing was going on because all the world was at Ascot were pleasant enough to the lover of repose.

We chose Friday for our visit to Ascot. Thursday is always such a crush, and we were told by friends that this year it was a greater crush than ever. We also heard that in the Grand Stand there were some queer-looking people. How is it that this should be so at Ascot and never at Sandown, Kempton, or Goodwood? We had lovely weather on Friday, and the drive through Windsor Park was delicious. The constant rain had kept the trees and turf in brilliant green, and a pleasant breeze tempered the sunshine, which made everything lovely.

What struck us most about the gowns was the continued popularity of flower-painted muslins. There were scores of them in the Royal Enclosure. Next to this, and far more striking, was the immense size of the hats, and the abnormal length and beauty of the feathers that trimmed them. Not only trimmed them, but the wearers' back and shoulders as well! A huge hat has the effect of making the face look small, but, when the head and face are already far too small, as they are in some of our high-bred beauties, out of all proportion with their height, the result is distinctly unfortunate. The face shrinks to the apparent size of a well-developed cocoanut. On the other hand, the immense hat makes large faces, matured in the indulgence of every luxury, look smaller than they are, and in this they are greatly assisted by the loose floating veil of the moment. The tight veil, stretched over the cheeks, gives fine value to full curves. The loose one lessens the impression of these.

Wonderful, quite wonderful, were the coats and their colours. The jockeys themselves were for once outdone. In comparison with their jackets, caps, and sleeves, the Royal Enclosure blossomed like a variegated poppy field. You cannot imagine the brightness of the colours in these cloaks. Many were of a modified kimono shape. There was one in real Chinese embroidery on pale blue satin lined with cherry colour. Sometimes these swore visibly with the tints of the boas and hat feathers. Feather boas, again, were an important item in the colour of the scene. Blue in every tone seemed the favourite for these, but that does not imply that there was not any quantity of bright colour in others. White, cream, and ivory were well represented, also that artistic tone of cream-colour known as "Paris." There was pink in every shade, from hedge-rose fading to deepest clover. Hydrangea colours were in great favour (it is the decorative flower of the season), and every tone of mauve and purple was also to be seen in boas.

What with these and enormous hat-feathers, some of the women rather suggested a North American Indian brave in full war paint.

Yes, dear, sleeves were all short. I noticed that the best-dressed women did not affect the kimono sleeve, with the ballooning of white below it. Many of the most distinguished gowns had sleeves that were just full enough to indicate, without closely defining, the shape of the arms. One could but admire the deftness with which the folds were caught in upon the white under-sleeve which, as a rule, began to show midway between shoulder and elbow, and finished an inch or more below the latter, without frills or flourishes of any kind, perfectly flat and close-fitting.

Brown, with a tint of coffee in it, and a ruddy cinnamon shade were worn by some of the best-dressed women. Mrs. George Keppel, whose unimpeachable taste always makes her toilets so much admired, wore brown and cream checked muslin, trimmed with brown ribbon velvet. The Countess of Craven had a perfect gown of cinnamon gauze trimmed with lace to match, laid on in motifs. A brown hat, massed with feathers and—alas!—the cruel ospreys, was worn with this.

This is to inform the readers of "TRUTH" that the HOTEL ROSE, WIESBADEN, is now rebuilt and refurnished. 200 rooms. 60 bathrooms. Apartments with private bath.

The hats at Ascot represented the slaughter of the innocents to a greater extent this year than ever before since the wearing of whole birds went out of fashion. Queen Alexandra's published protest appears to have been wholly disregarded by the majority of her "smart" subjects.

I have never seen anywhere such quantities of exquisite embroideries, not on the cloaks only, but the gowns as well. A black mousseline taffetas was embroidered in pomegranates in pink and crimson, and these tints were repeated in the feathers of the enormous black crinoline hat. Mrs. Reginald Wynne's white gown was most artistically embroidered in white floss silk roses and trimmed with cords and tassels. Mrs. Hall Walker was another lady whose embroideries were much admired.

We were fortunate enough to be among the 8,500 guests bidden to his Majesty's garden party at Windsor on Saturday, and I must try to give you some account of the afternoon. The invitations were for half-past four, but seeing that the first special was advertised to leave Paddington at 2.45, we decided to catch it, and thus avoid the crowd. As hundreds of others had had the same idea, we found the first special already filled, but were fortunate enough to find places in the second. At Windsor station there was a double line of carriages, flys, and omnibuses ready to convey the guests up the long Castle Hill to the private grounds. Each driver had a wide armlet of scarlet cloth on which the King's cipher was stamped in purple. An officer in uniform saw that every one had a seat, and all went smoothly. We heard that a couple of hours later, when the great mass of guests arrived, the congestion was considerable, and the delay in crossing High-street, crammed with motors, carriages, and flys, so great that almost every one got out and walked.

Arrived inside the gates, we saw on the slopes the bountiful provision of marquees made for the accommodation of the company. Everybody made for that part of the grounds that led from the East Terrace slopes to the Royal tent, distinguishable from all others by the Royal standard flying from its two pinnacles, as well as by the Indian canopy in scarlet and gold that rested on silver poles in front. Hard by was a smaller tent, with a kind of tunneled entrance in scarlet cloth bordered and fringed with gold. This was for the King of Siam—the monarch with the uncomfortable name, Chulalongkorn. Opposite these two tents we placed chairs for ourselves, and then watched the company. It was intensely interesting, for this was a representative gathering. Almost every one who was there signified some distinction in politics, the Church, the law, science, art, the Army, the Navy, and society.

Exactly at half-past four the Royal Horse Guards struck up the National Anthem, following it with the Siamese, and the Royal procession for which we had all been waiting came down, two and two, the wide avenue between the two rows of guests. As they came nearer us we saw that the Queen was leading, with the King of Siam on her left. Her Majesty looked well in an embroidered white gown through which pale mauve showed. Her black hat had pink roses round the back. The King of Siam speaks English very well and very carefully. King Edward walked with the Grand Duchess of Hesse, tall and dark-haired. Behind came the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg, escorted by the Duke of Connaught. She looked much younger and better than when last I saw her ten years since. Her daughter, Princess Beatrice, walked among the young people at the end of the procession. Princess Patricia, in white with a rather small old rose hat, looked really lovely. The Princess of Wales, in a beautifully embroidered white soft silk dress and a becoming pale blue toque, had brought two of her sons, one in a jacket and one in a sailor suit, and her daughter, Princess Mary, in pale blue with insertions of creamy lace.

There were many other Royalties, but you do not want a catalogue. They all immediately sat down to tea, the Queen sitting next the King of Siam, the King between the Duchess of Coburg and the Grand Duchess of Hesse. I do love the way his Majesty dresses. He wore a blue coat which was neither a frock nor an overcoat, and was fastened in front with two linked buttons. His white waistcoat revealed a bit of pink shirt on either side a wide grey tie, with a ruby pin in it fastened rather low down.

When a smart shower fell the gazing guests all turned their backs on the Royal tent and fled for shelter. The sight must have been an amusing one for the Royal hosts. The tents were soon full, and up to the Terrace flew those who could not get in, a flying scud of costly millinery. We improved the occasion by indulging in some quite perfect iced coffee and strawberries of the Brobdingnag persuasion with delicious cream.

When the sun shone out again the scene was at its prettiest. Instead of occupying the long rows of chairs, the guests were scattered in radiant groups all over the slopes, and the Royal party, separated in several divisions, sauntered towards the Castle, and talked to any friends they met. The King's sonorous voice carries well, and we heard the whole of his conversation with a gentleman, though we were some distance off; but then it was like a postcard—not intended to be private.

The most animated of the Royal party was Princess Louise Duchess of Argyll; the quietest the Princess of Wales.

We heard afterwards about Mark Twain being presented to their Majesties by Mr. Whitelaw Reid, and were sorry to have missed seeing the incident. The fact is, we could have used Argus's hundred eyes, and as many more, could we only have attached them to our consciousness in some scientific manner.

We were two whole hours getting to Maidenhead, just six miles away. "No train till 7.32, ma'am." And it was the day of Windsor Races. However, everything comes to an end if you only give it time, and so did our long and tiresome wait in Windsor Station. Not a fly was to be had for love or money.

Dinner was a welcome episode, I assure you.

Next day we spent a couple of hours at Boulter's Lock. Though quite as crowded as ever, it is for one reason not quite so interesting as it used to be in the days when every one went through. Owing to the long wait outside it, everybody now who can manage it sends up their launch or boat early in the morning, and joins it just in time for luncheon. The whole of the Bucks bank was lined with these waiting craft above Boulter's for a quarter of a mile, and the scene of motors and carriages setting down the parties to occupy them was entirely lively. Some of the launches were beautifully decorated with flowers. As to dress, it was chiefly white, and there were very few enormous hats. Ribbons and flowers were the principal trimming. Feathers were conspicuous by their absence; and very sensibly so. There were too many bare arms. It is not a pretty fashion. I noticed many lovely faces.

There was the usual rumour that the King would pass through the lock at four o'clock. So likely, on the most crowded day of the whole year!

Letty went to the dress rehearsal of the Oxford Pageant on Friday, and can talk of nothing else. She describes it as a perfect illusion, and, you know, she lives for illusions. The beauty of the scenes is equalled, she asserts, by that of the verses, and, as CORSET KRUTOID.—The latest nouveauté Parisienne in tricot forms an elegant and smart up-to-date contour and lengthens the waist line.—Write or call at MESDAMES SYKES, JOSEPHINE, & Co. The Royal Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, London.

REDFERN'S ANNUAL SALE commences Monday, July 1, for one week only. A unique opportunity to secure a Paris Costume for a nominal sum, also dress lengths, bargains in Furs, Millinery, &c. Entrance during Sale, 26, CONDUIT-STREET.

she phrases it, the "poetic glamour of the Past is over it all."

The Duchess of Sutherland's always delightful garden party for the Harris, Lewis, Shetland, and Sutherland homespuns is fixed for the 8th, the same afternoon as the garden reception at Marlborough House in connection with the League of Mercy. Those who have invitations for both can divide the afternoon into two portions, each equally attractive.

Have you ever been to Leighton House? Most people know about its existence, and hardly any one has seen it. We were there the other day, when Mr. and Mrs. Leeder were at home to the Guild of Service and Good Fellowship, and we had the happiest afternoon of the whole season. The house, of red brick, stands in Holland Park-road, and does not look particularly interesting till one enters. And then, Amy, it is just like walking into a dream. There is the wonderful inner hall, full of vistas, and old, old Persian tiles, blue and white, in those designs that are so complicated and yet do not worry the eye. The hall is full of shadows in different tones of brown, and a silver fountain plays in its midst. It reminded me of the wild, haunting music of Rubinstein's "Der Asra." I could almost see the princess passing daily, and the dark, tall figure of the slave standing to watch her by the fountain. We went up the broad, black staircase to the studio, and at every step there were beautiful pictures. The studio was already full, so we went out into the garden and discovered the right way to hear a concert. We sat on the lawn, in a circle of trees, with a plate each of strawberries and cream, and down from the studio windows came music, and every now and then a sunny wind swept over the trees, and they bowed and danced and swayed with grace that it was glorious to watch. Donalda's voice, clear as crystal, Ada Crossley's, like a golden river, M. Pecskai's violin, leaping and crying in maddening Hungarian music, they came down to us on the shady lawn, and every now and then the wind came and said things like great waves in a gentle mood, among the trees.

Then every one came pouring out, and we watched the prettiest possible masque, "The Makynge of a Garden," performed charmingly by the students of Whitelands Training College. The masque was full of flowers and pretty voices, old-world melodies, and graceful movements; and the trees overhead joined in, while sun and shadow glinted over everything. Once or twice the harmony was rent by the herald's bugle, whose note was thin and piercing, but it only served to prove how delightful everything else was. And the adorable baby who played Cupid, with her hair crowned with rosebuds, was just the happy finishing touch.

The weather was kind, too, to the "Episodes from Shakespeare's Plays" given on Saturday in the garden of Lowther Lodge in connection with the League of Mercy. The costumes were beautiful, the dances graceful, and the Procession in Episode III. was splendidly stage-managed. So Iva tells me. She enjoyed the very lovely garden.

Do not you love dainty table linen and sheets and pillowslips? You must come up and stay with me for Robinson and Cleaver's sale beginning July 1 and lasting till the end of the month. It will be well worth your while, for, as you know, the price of all linen things has risen very seriously. But this famous house has been so long in the business (in connection with its Belfast establishment) that it can afford to sell its large stock at old prices. I am saving up for it, for there will be opportunities of great bargains not only in house linen, but in handkerchiefs, lace of every kind, collars and cuffs, fichus, and outfitting for women. Write for a sale catalogue at once; it will be sent post free. You can then choose at your leisure, first what you must have, then what you would like to have and will get if you can. The former is necessity, the latter pure self-indulgence. Do not you love your linen-closet? I suppose "love" is too strong a word, but it is really a kind of affection one feels for those nice, sweet-smelling piles of linen sheets and pillowcases, more or less dainty bedspreads with lace or embroidery, tablecloths, and sweet teacloths. This Irish grass-bleached linen and damask wear for ever, as I know from experience.

We called one morning at 4, South Molton-street, to see the wonderful old quilt which the Home-work Co-operative Society have just restored for the Duke of Rutland. It comes from the historic bed at Haddon Hall, and is specially interesting because the arms worked on the flag in the centre show that it dates from the time of Elizabeth. The quilt can be seen at 4, South Molton-street, till the 29th inst., and at the same time visitors can have a look at the society's embroideries, and laces, trimmings, and so on, which are quite unlike anything one gets elsewhere. The children's frocks and lingerie blouses are quite lovely; many of them have old Italian lace bretelles, and all have some dainty quaint embroidery about them, yet they are not at all expensive.

I have received the following from Mona:—

MY DEAR MADGE,—Your gardener does not seem to understand the management of Poinsettias, as you call them. That was the old name, but botanical nomenclature is in a perpetual state of change, which is most confusing, and they have been transferred to the genus Euphorbia. There are three species frequently grown in hothouses—E. pulcherrima, E. fulgens, and E. splendens. Their flowers are inconspicuous; their attractiveness is due to their coloured bracts, a feature which makes them not only very beautiful, but also very interesting. I will tell you why. An ordinary flower is composed of various parts, sepals, petals, and so forth, all of them modified foliage leaves—not, as you might imagine, leaves in a highly advanced state, but really degraded. They have not, like foliage leaves, stomata or breathing pores; they have no system of veins; they consist merely of a number of loosely connected cells. And the reason of their degradation lies in the fact that they are situated generally at the extremities of the shoots, farthest away from the supply of food and green chlorophyll, or in what I may call little backwaters, where the main current of the sap passes them by. The colours which they have thus acquired, having proved useful to the plants in attracting fertilising insects, have gradually been deepened and differentiated, and the different parts have become specialised, each adapting itself to the performance of a single function; and so in the course of countless generations our beautiful flowers have been evolved. But in certain cases, such as the Euphorbias, some of the ordinary foliage leaves near the ends of the shoots have not received their fair share of the sap, and in consequence they also have lost their green colour, and have run together owing to the want of growth between them—the suppression of the internodes, as it is technically called—and have formed coloured bracts. As these bracts have proved sufficient of themselves to attract the insects necessary for distributing the pollen and ensuring fertilisation, the agencies ordinarily instrumental in increasing the size and heightening the colour of the petals have failed to operate, and the flowers have remained small and inconspicuous. In other words, the bracts have assumed the functions of petals.

From the cultural standpoint, the most important thing to note is that, as they are produced near the extremities of the shoots and nowhere else, the more shoots we can get the better. For this reason, though old plants are sometimes useful as large specimens, young plants, which grow more freely, are much superior. They are easily raised from cuttings, taken about the present time. They should be inserted separately in small pots of sandy soil, in order to avoid disturbing the roots, and should afterwards be grown in a fairly high temperature, without a check of any kind. Cold or drought spoils them by causing them to lose their leaves.

You really ought to exert more authority over your gardener. The garden is run for your pleasure, not for his; if he cannot grasp that fundamental fact you should get someone who can. He may not like to see plants, upon which he has spent so much time and trouble, spoilt by being used in the house, but after all that is your business. It would be just as reasonable for him to object to the cutting of the lettuces and cauliflowers which he has grown. And there is no reason why plants which are wanted in the house should be spoilt there. You may use your caladiums to decorate the dinner table or the drawing-room without injury, provided that you do not leave them there too long. After a few days, or a week at the outside, they should go back to the greenhouse. When your gardener brings them in tell him, if he grumbles, that they will be changed for others in a few days. The more often you make him change them—purely for the good of the plants, remember—the sooner he will alter his tune. Eventually he will beg of you to let them stay in the house a little longer. He will assure you that it will do them good, and will dwell on the hurtfulness of frequent changes of temperature. Then you will hold him in the hollow of your hand.

THE WOODLAND LAUNDRY, PARK-RD. EAST, ACTON. Tel. 629 Chiswick. "A really first-class laundry at moderate prices."—The Ladies' Field. "It appeals to dainty people."—The Queen. Please apply for Price List, &c.

STEPHENS' GUM is manufactured from the very best gum only. It cannot ferment, mould, or otherwise deteriorate. It sticks quicker than any paste.

Caladiums are such beautiful plants that I am not surprised you wish to have more of them. The usual time to propagate them is spring, just as the tubers are starting into growth, but you can do so still in a small way if you wish. Select a pot with a number of small leaves springing up at some distance from the central growth, and, after scraping away the soil so as to uncover the top of the tuber, but without disturbing any roots, cut off with a sharp knife the little knobs from which the leaves spring. Each will probably have some small roots attached to it. These should be drawn out carefully. The young plants should then be potted separately. If they are placed in a warm, moist atmosphere, shaded from hot sunshine, and sparingly watered at first, they will soon grow. In caladiums, as in the euphorbias, the leaves have largely usurped the functions of petals. The flowers are not strikingly beautiful, a muddy cream in colour, and something like a bolster tied in the middle in shape. They rather resemble the flowers of the common "lords and ladies," a genus belonging to the same natural order. As they are not wanted, and only weaken the plants, they should be taken off as soon as they are noticed.

In the crotons or codiæums we have another exceedingly handsome family of stove plants, in which, owing to the brilliant colouring of the foliage, the flowers have remained inconspicuous. These again you need not hesitate to tell your gardener to bring in for house decoration. If they are not left too long they will not be injured, but even if they are it will not matter much, for it is much better to propagate them afresh every year than to keep old plants. The latter get dull in time and lose their lower leaves. It is only the young foliage that is really very brightly coloured. If the plants do get rather shabby indoors they will do quite well for supplying cuttings. But, of course, you want them to last as long as possible, so they should not be placed in draughts and the leaves should be kept clean. Draughts are deadly to all plants, carrying away the moisture from them at such a rate that intense cold is produced.—Your affectionate cousin, MONA.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

DEAREST MADGE,—What slaves of routine most of us are! We go on doing the same thing over and over again, each time just because we did it the time before, until we lose sight, at last, of any other reason for doing it. However circumstances may change we do not, but keep systematically on in the same old grooves, in the same old way. Under bondage to this law our family party set out to ruralise last week. It was our summer habit of long standing. Though June had recklessly and shockingly abandoned its traditions, we would not give up ours. If June was not summer it ought to be, and if the month acted so unworthily with regard to keeping its engagements and fulfilling its duties we were not going to follow the bad example. The June that ought to be a dutiful June is, above all others, the month of the country, of bright and breezy lawn and upland, of sunny gardens, of roses, and strawberries, of all the dear delights which Nature showers around at this season. Oh! the freshness, fragrance, and lightness of the June air when no intruding wild winds trouble its serene calm! The cheerful brightness of the sun, when it is bright, before it has learned, as later on, to scorch or glare. How little those who pass the month amidst the strain and stress, the rush and crush of the "season" in a great capital, understand what they are missing by slighting Nature when in her heyday. This year, however, their consciences may be clear in that respect. They are missing nothing that is not well missed. Personal experience allows one to be dogmatic on this point. Last week those in the country had a very poor time indeed. Our hopes that June might amend its ways and return to grace were vain. The wind blew loud and chill, the rain fell pitilessly. It might have been February fulfilling its mission of filling dykes, only it was worse, for the leafiness of June made the storm louder in the trees, and there were the flowers all torn and dishevelled. And to think that the longest day of the year is now past! Now we have given up June as a bad job, and all our hopes are turned to July.

Everyone is looking forward to the visit of the King and Queen. Short as it is to be, a sight of Royalty is the excitement of many weeks. Dublin will be full for many days; already vigorous preparations are in progress on all sides. If only the weather mends and does its part well, we shall have a brief time, at least, of the prosperity with which we are not as yet sufficiently well acquainted. And short times sometimes lead to long times, as great rivers spring from small sources. The afternoon garden party at the Viceregal Lodge to meet their Majesties has been fixed for July 10. Invitations have not been sent out for it, but those who have been presented either at the Royal or Viceregal Courts and wish to attend it are invited to send in their names for the Chamberlain's consideration. One can imagine that the attendance will be very large, but there is space enough for a goodly crowd of King Edward's Irish subjects, who are "courtable" to assemble in his honour in the gardens and pleasure grounds of the Irish Viceregal residence. Our sex have now been provided in a short visit with two opportunities for the wear of Royal toilettes on the successive afternoons at the Viceregal Lodge and at Leopardstown. No doubt we shall rise to the occasion. The weather alone fills us with trepidation; it is difficult to believe in a coming summer which has taken so long to come, and to order the dainty costumes which would suit early July. However, there is no doubt but that on Royal occasions women are always zealous in doing their best to fulfil their admitted duty of being ornamental. Kingstown will be a great centre of attraction, with the Royal yacht in the harbour. Though not picturesque in itself, its immediate environs are beautiful. The two lovely bays of Dublin and Killiney merge in one another close by. Opposite to Kingstown the historic Hill of Howth runs out into Dublin Bay, some seven miles distant, whilst behind the town rise up the mountain ranges of Dublin and Wicklow. The neighbourhood affords beautiful motor drives, long or short. This week the King's birthday review will be held on Friday in the Phœnix Park, and is expected to be a more brilliant spectacle than usual. On the previous day Lord and Lady Aberdeen give a garden party at the Viceregal

The ingredients of STATE EXPRESS cigarettes are well known to medical men and approved by them.

For Discriminating Smokers.

These delicious high-class Cigarettes will not produce any dry or irritating effect on the throat or nasal organs.

No. 555
4/9 per 100
2/6 per * 50
6d. per 10

* Also packed in our patent vacuum air-tight tins for tropical climates.

Of all Tobacconists and Stores throughout the World.

STATE EXPRESS CIGARETTES

Manufactured in LONDON by
ARDATH TOBACCO CO.,
Worship Street, Finsbury, E.C.
at their
"Model hygienic factory."
—Vide Daily Press.

Lodge. Sir Antony and Lady MacDonnell are visiting England just now, but will of course return to the Under Secretary's Lodge for the King's visit.

Amongst the interesting Irish marriages which have just taken place is that of Miss Violet Skeffington, Lord Massereene's sister, to Mr. Corbet Radford—a quiet country wedding. Do not such weddings suggest the sweetness of romance far more than great ceremonials in town? The romance possibly is in both all the same, only somehow or other it seems to get rather crowded out in the latter. This week the marriage of Mr. Brooke to Miss Nina Hill caused much interest over here, where Sir George and Lady Brooke are well known members of Dublin society, their residence on the banks of the Liffey, being not many miles from the capital. Lady Brooke is the sister of Sir Hugh McCalmont.—Yours ever, CLARE.

Here are the recipes I wrote to you about. Petites pâtés à la Mexican are excellent:—

Make a nice mince of 4 oz. of cold cooked chicken, 2 oz. of cold tongue, a slice of ham, a dessertspoonful of chopped truffle, a tablespoonful of chopped white mushroom, and a little parsley, mix it with a gill of good tomato sauce and the yolks of 2 eggs. Roll 8 oz. of puff paste and cut it into rounds, put a portion of the mince on the centre of half, cover it with the other half, press both together, make a small hole in the top on which to put a ring of puff paste. Bake the pâtés very carefully and dish them garnished with fried parsley. These are also excellent for a cold collation of any kind.

Turbot à la Suédoise is an excellent réchauffé:—

Place the best pieces of the remains of a cooked turbot aside and pound the remainder with 3 boned anchovies, a teaspoonful of capers, the merest scrape of an onion, 2 oz. of butter, a spoonful of white sauce, a teaspoonful of chopped parsley, and salt and pepper to taste, rub it through a wire sieve. Butter a fireproof dish, spread it with a layer of the purée, then slices of fish, repeat the layers of fish and purée, pour half a teacupful of cream over it, sprinkle it thickly with bread crumbs, and bake it a nice colour.

Macédoine de fruits au champagne is a delightful dish for garden parties:—

Pick a quantity of choice ripe fruits, such as stoned cherries, strawberries, raspberries, peaches in quarters, small cubes of pineapple, etc. Mix them all with a small bottle of champagne and ice them very thoroughly, without actually freezing. Mash the rough parts of the fruit with a glass of white wine or sherry, allow them to stand an hour, and then rub them through a hair sieve, add sugar to the purée to make a palatable syrup, and, when cold, freeze it to thick cream consistency. Dish the macédoine in a large bowl, pile the ice over it and serve it quickly.

Finally, eggs à la Farmière are a plat par excellence:—

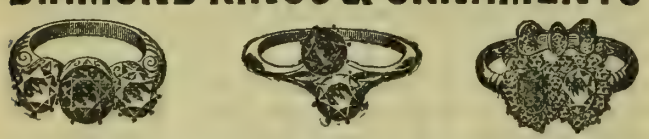
Put a gill of good cream into a stewpan with salt, pepper, and a pinch of paprika, add the yolks of 2 eggs, and whisk it on the stove till it is quite hot and thick, but not boiling. Poach 6 eggs in plenty of boiling water, pour a little of the cream sauce on a buttered fireproof gratin dish, place the eggs on it, cover with the remaining sauce and sprinkle with grated parmesan cheese. Serve this quickly.

Ever your loving cousin, MADGE.

DIAMOND RINGS & ORNAMENTS



Finest Quality, below Store and usual West End Prices.

SPINK & SON, LTD.,

DIAMOND AND PEARL MERCHANTS,

17 & 18, PICCADILLY, W., and 30, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C. Est. 1772.

THE TRIUMPH OF A GREAT TEA.
Vide Press.

MAZAWATTEE

Name and Fame

WORLD-WIDE.

OF ALL GROCERS.

The Ancient Writing Paper of the Priests.

Court Envelopes, 1s. per 100. Mourning Envelopes, 1s. 6d. per 100.

Thin, for Foreign Correspondence, 5 Quires, 1s. Mourning Note, 5 Quires, 1s. 6d.

HIERATICA

NOTE PAPER 5 Quires, 1s. (Regd.).

Every Sheet and Envelope Watermarked HIERATICA. Reject imitations. Any difficulty in obtaining, send stamps to our new address, Hieratica Works, Hill-street, Finsbury, London, E.C. Sample free. Parcels carriage paid in U.K.

THE MUTUAL LIFE

INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Announces the issue of
NEW FORMS OF CONTRACT
providing for
ANNUAL CASH DIVIDENDS
with several options each year.

Liberal Loan and Surrender Values and Various Modes of Settlement.

FUNDS OVER £100,000,000 SECURELY INVESTED.

Apply for particulars Head Office for the United Kingdom—
16, 17, 18, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.
J. H. HARRISON HOGGE, General Manager.

BRIGHTON COLLEGE. — Public School, with excellent buildings. Staff of sixteen graduates. Preparation for all public examinations.—Prospectus from The Rev. W. R. DAWSON, M.A.

THE LADIES' GUILD (under Royal Patronage) successfully introduces Ladies as Chaperons, Companions, Secretaries, Governesses, Guides, &c. Schools recommended.
10, George-street, Hanover-square, W. Telephone, Gerrard 6006.

BENSON'S

SELECTED GEM RINGS.

Brilliants, £12.

Brilliants and Rubies, or Sapphires, £17.

Amethyst, Diamond Points, £6 6s.

Brilliants, £18.

"The Times"

MONTHLY PAYMENT SYSTEM
IS AVAILABLE.

Brilliant, with Ruby Eyes, £6 6s.

Illustrated Books: No. 1 of Rings, Watches, Chains; No. 2 of Clocks, Plate, Bags, and Silver Goods, post free. Mention TRUTH

62 & 64, Ludgate Hill, E.C.
and 25, OLD BOND STREET, W.

BAILEY'S HOTEL LONDON

The most comfortable Hotel in London. GLOUCESTER ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON. Self-contained Suites.

Telephone No. 557 Kensington. Telegrams—"Bailey's Hotel, London."

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES:

Founder's Day Fête,

GIRLS' GARDEN CITY,
BARKINGSIDE, ESSEX.

NEXT SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1907.

PATRONESS:
H.R.H. PRINCESS ALEXANDER OF TECK.

Singing; Musical and Naval Drills; Maypole; Handicrafts at Work; Bell-ringers; Action Songs; Cookery Exhibits; Gun Drill by Little Handy Men; March Past of 300 Young Emigrants, etc. Charming Grounds (60 acres). 65 Cottages, Schools, Laundry, Church, Infirmary, Open-air Sanatorium, etc., can be inspected.

Open 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Morning Service, 11.30. Short Meeting, 3.30.

LORD BRASSEY presides.

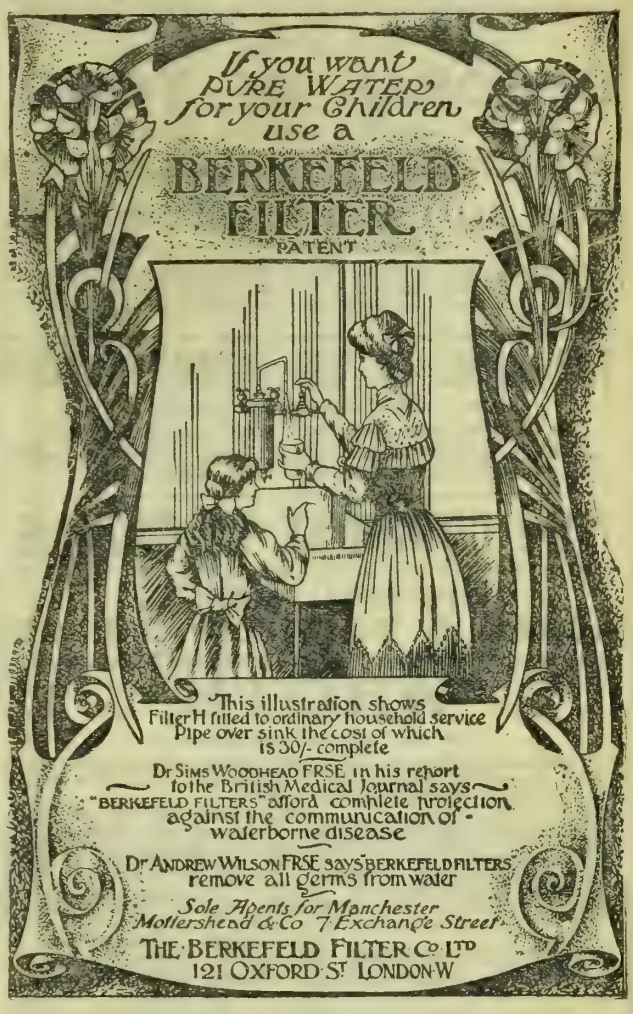
THE BISHOP of ST. ALBANS and others WILL SPEAK.

SPECIAL TRAINS, 10.35 a.m. and 2.45 p.m., from Liverpool Street.

HER GRACE THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND WILL OPEN THE NEW GYMNASIUM.

TICKETS OF ADMISSION, 1s. each. Also Cheap Return Railway Tickets, available by any train (9d. Third, 1s. 1d. Second, 1s. 5d. First), and Refreshment Tickets (Lunch, 1s. 6d.; Tea, 1s.), must be obtained beforehand from the

Honorary Secretary,
18 to 26, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY,
London, E.



Funds Exceed

£16,000,000.

Funds Exceed

£16,000,000.

ALLIANCE

Assurance Company, Ltd.

Life. Fire. Marine. Accident. Burglary.

Head Office—BARTHOLOMEW LANE, LONDON, E.C.

Chairman—THE RIGHT HON. LORD ROTHSCHILD, G.C.V.O.

INSURANCES GRANTED FOR

DOMESTIC SERVANTS, SHOP ASSISTANTS, CLERKS & WORKMEN,

UNDER THE

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT, 1906, &c.

The Alliance Policies contain no burdensome conditions, and they satisfy the requirements of Policyholders. A copy of the Policy form, together with Proposal forms, may be had on written or personal application.

ROBERT LEWIS, General Manager.

NEW VOLUME OF THE WATERLOO LIBRARY.

READY TO-DAY.—Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

DEBORAH OF TOD'S.

By Mrs. HENRY DE LA PASTURE.

Daily Telegraph.—"A really clever and interesting book. . . . . Every feminine figure has about it some vivifying touch to render it memorable."

WAR AND THE WORLD'S LIFE.

By Col. F. N. MAUDE, C.B. With Plans, 12s. 6d. net.

The Scotsman says:—"Colonel Maude's work is replete with interest for thoughtful readers in the Army. A civilian could not read it without learning much concerning the nature and tendency of modern military exigencies."

THE CASE OF SIR JOHN FASTOLF

AND OTHER HISTORICAL STUDIES.

By D. WALLACE DUTHIE. Large post 8vo, 5s. net.

Mr. W. L. COURTNEY, in the Daily Telegraph, says:—"Mr. Duthie's special pleading is very ingenious and extremely interesting."

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

for JULY contains the first instalment of a

NEW SERIAL STORY by

AGNES & EGERTON CASTLE,

Authors of "Young April," "Rose of the World," &c., entitled—

WROTH,

and the following contributions:—

THE BROKEN ROAD. Chaps. XIX.-XXI. By A. E. W. MASON, M.P.
A GIRL OF THE REFORM BILL. By S. G. TALLENTYRE.
AMONGST THE MUTINY CITIES OF INDIA. I. Delhi. By Dr. W. H. FITCHETT.
'MY COUSIN THE BOOK-BINDER.' By E. V. LUCAS.
THE RECREATION OF THE PEOPLE. By the Rev. Canon BARNETT.
A GRAMMARIAN'S WEDDING.
OUTLAWS OF YESTERDAY. By Major G. F. MACMUNN, D.S.O., R.F.A.
THE FOOTPRINT ON THE SAND. By HORACE G. HUTCHINSON.
THE PERSONALITY OF EDWARD VI. By Sir CLEMENTS R. MARKHAM, K.C.B.
THE CHRISTCHURCHMAN'S LAMENT. By R. A. K.
AT LARGE. I. The Scene. By ARTHUR C. BENSON.

At all Booksellers' and Newsagents. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place, S.W.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

FOR HOLIDAY READING.

NEW NOVEL BY NEITH BOYCE.

A PIONEER OF TO-DAY.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

THE DEVIL'S PEEPSHOW.

By the Author of "A Time of Terror." Crown 8vo, price 6s.

The story of a strong man conquered by passion, who, after passing through deep waters, reaches a peaceful haven.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

MADAME ALBANESI'S NEW NOVEL.

THE STRONGEST OF ALL THINGS.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

NEW NOVEL BY PERCY WHITE.

COLONEL DAVERON.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

NEEDLES AND PINS.

A Sequel to "If I Were King."

By JUSTIN HUNTLY McCARTHY.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

DEAD LOVE HAS CHAINS.

By M. E. BRADDON. 3s. 6d.

THE PASSING OF THE THIRD FLOOR BACK.

By JEROME K. JEROME. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME OF STORIES BY

W. W. JACOBS.—SHORT CRUISES.

With 38 Illustrations and Cover Design by WILL OWEN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HURST & BLACKETT, Ltd., 182, High Holborn, W.C.

STERILE MARRIAGE: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By a late Senior Physician to a Hospital for Women. A new Edition just published. Post free, 3s. 9d.
London: Shelley & Co., Limited, 38, Gracechurch-street.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

The Life and Letters of

SIR JAMES GRAHAM

By CHARLES STUART PARKER, Editor of "Life of Sir Robert Peel." With Portraits and other Illustrations. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 24s. net.

"Mr. Parker's admirably written life, full of fresh material of great importance, will go far to rescue from undeserved neglect a great and good man."—The Tribune.

"Mr. Parker has written a book which is a valuable contribution to political history, and fully carries on his already high distinction as a biographer."—Daily Chronicle.

BURY PAGEANT EDITION, 1907.

THE CHRONICLES OF JOCELIN OF BRAKELOND

Edited by Sir ERNEST CLARKE, M.A., F.S.A.

Price 1s. net.

C. E. LAWRENCE'S REMARKABLE ROMANCE.

PILGRIMAGE. 6s.

"The work is worth ten ordinary novels, for it takes us through the externals of worship, chivalry, and love, on that elusive quest upon which practically every human being sooner or later sets out in the search of things as-they-are instead of things-as-they-appear."—Daily Mail.

JUST OUT. A NEW NOVEL, by the Author of "INTO THE HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES," &c.

THE BURNING TORCH

By F. F. MONTRÉSOR.

6s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

PUBLISHED TO-DAY

MY LORD OF ESSEX. 6s.

By FRANCES M. BROOKFIELD.

The Romantic Episode of Cadiz.

A story of gallant daring, of subtle intrigue, of royal caprice, of dazzling and difficult Court life.

The most thrilling and dramatic novel of the year.

Mrs. Charles Brookfield's First Novel.

LONDON:
SIR ISAAC PITMAN & SONS, LTD.,
NO. 1, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

New Edition (17th). Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Boards, 1s. Of all Booksellers, or post free from the publishers.

THE DIETETIC CURE OF OBESITY.

("FOODS FOR THE FAT.")

With a Chapter on Gout and its Dietetic Treatment.

By Dr. YORKE DAVIES.

CONTENTS.—Evils of Corpulency. Dangerous Conditions due to Corpulency, such as Weak Heart, Gout, &c. Diet the only Safe and Permanent Cure at any age. Quack Medicines to reduce weight dangerous and useless. Evils of Overeating and Sedentary Habits. Food in its Relation to Work, Exercise, &c.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, W.C.

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

THE SENSATION OF THE DAY!

MEMOIRS OF THE

COMTESSE DE BOIGNE

1781-1814.

With portrait, 1 vol., 10s. net.*

"* The first instalment of Memoirs which have awaited publication for years and for the passing away of the many illustrious personages who came into contact with this witty, gossip-loving writer.

COMTESSE DE BOIGNE

"From cover to cover the book is packed with wit and observation, and as a picture and history of those wonderful years it is of enthralling interest."—Daily Telegraph.

COMTESSE DE BOIGNE

"Her pen is lively, and more often than not, malicious, and her pages bristle with anecdotes."—Daily Mail.

ECLIPSE AND O'KELLY.

By THEODORE ANDREA COOK, M.A., F.S.A.,

Author of "A History of the Turf." Profusely Illustrated, 1 vol., crown 4to, £1 1s net. Also an Edition de Luxe, limited to 100 copies, £3 3s. net.*

"Appeals not merely to the lover of the Turf, but to the student of society and manners in one of the most interesting periods of our social history."—Daily Telegraph.

A GUIDE TO MODERN COOKERY

By A. ESCOFFIER, of the Carlton Hotel. 1 vol., 12s. 6d. net.*

"The ordinary good plain cook will discover something worth learning on every page. The book is a comprehensive one as well as a simple one. It should be in every house."—Pall Mall Gazette.

* Prospectus of these works on application.

The Best Six-Shilling Novels.

THE HOUSE OF DEFENCE - - E. F. BENSON.
THE INVADER - - - - MARGARET L. WOODS.
ALICE-FOR-SHORT - - - - W. DE MORGAN.
GHETTO COMEDIES (Illustrated) ISRAEL ZANGWILL.
KEDDY: A Story of Oxford (2nd Impression) - H. N. DICKINSON.
SIR ELYOT OF THE WOODS - EMMA BROOKE.
THE COUNTRY HOUSE (4th Impression) JOHN GALSWORTHY.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford-street, W.C.

WHAT SCURF MEANS.

A SIGNAL OF TWO DIFFERENT CONDITIONS OF HAIR TROUBLE EITHER OF WHICH IF NEGLECTED WILL LEAD TO BALDNESS, GREYNESS, OR IRRITATION OF THE SCALP.

You brush your hair in the morning, and it is full of a dry powdered scurf.

Do you know what this signifies?

It means that your hair is not getting the lubrication it requires from nature, that the sebaceous glands which secrete the oil for this purpose are drying up and causing the hair to become brittle and inclined to fall out.

And fall out it will unless you take steps to apply a proper remedy.

Or again, you find that your scalp and hair is matted with a sticky, greasy form of scurf. This is a signal for an entirely different condition of affairs—leading, however, to the same result, loss of hair.

Something or other, most probably an irritating micro-organism, has excited the sebaceous glands, caused them to pour out their secretions in excess, and, moreover, poisoned and altered the character of the latter.

Consequently the hair—damp, sticky, and clogged together—is rotting away and will presently fall out also.

Here are two hair conditions which cannot be cured by the application of a "universal Cure-all," inasmuch as they require two different remedies.

We describe two complaints only—but there are many others.

You will find the whole subject treated exhaustively in a book written by Mr. Warner Oliver, the hair consultant, of 4, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, London, W.

This book contains no advertisement of any specific restorative. It is purely a treatise on the hair—fully illustrated and written in a most interesting fashion.

If you are not satisfied with the present condition of your hair, this book will give you information of much value and interest. By writing to Mr. Warner Oliver, and mentioning "TRUTH," and saying what is troubling you as far as your hair is concerned, you may obtain this book, free of all charge and obligation. Simply write, stating whether you are Rev., Mr., Mrs., Miss, or titled, and the book will be sent to you to any address, post paid.

? ? ? ? ?

Have you read
THE TANGLED SKEIN?
By the author of "The Scarlet Pimpernel." 6s.

Have you read
THE LOAFER?
By GURNER GILLMAN. 6s.

Have you read
A SON OF HELVETIA?
By ALINE WAKLEY. 6s.

Have you read
THE MASCOTTE OF PARK LANE?
By LUCAS CLEEVE. 6s.

Have you read
AND THE MOOR GAVE UP ITS DEAD?
By ERIC HARRISON. 6s.

If not, kindly order at once.
GREENING & CO., Ltd., 91, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

Price 1/- NOW READY. By Post, 1/3

The Thirteenth Series of

QUEER STORIES

from "TRUTH."

PERMANENTLY ENLARGED.

1st Series, GREEN.
2nd Series (Out of Print).
3rd Series, YELLOW.
4th Series, BLUE (Out of Print).
5th Series, SCARLET (Out of Print).
6th Series, VIOLET.
7th Series, ORANGE.
8th Series, WHITE.
9th Series, ROYAL PURPLE.
10th Series, APPLE GREEN.
11th Series, TERRA COTTA.
12th Series, RAINBOW.
13th Series, BLUE Cover, printed in red

This volume has a blue wrapper printed in red to distinguish it from the twelve previous issues.

Can be obtained at all Booksellers' and Bookstalls.

"TRUTH OFFICE," 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

APPEAL.

CITY OF LONDON TRUSS SOCIETY

For the Relief of the Ruptured Poor throughout the Kingdom.

Patron—His Majesty the King. Vice Patron—H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, K.G.

The CENTENARY FESTIVAL of this Charity, which annually relieves nearly 10,000 poor persons suffering from hernia or rupture, will be held at PRINCES' RESTAURANT, PICCADILLY, on Thursday, July 11. Sir THOMAS BROOKE-HITCHING, C.C., Mayor of St. Marylebone, in the chair.

The Committee EARNESTLY APPEALS for SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS to enable a heavy debt to the Society's Bankers to be paid off, and the beneficent work of the Institution, which has been so efficiently carried on for 100 years, to be continued.

35, Finsbury-square, E.C. W. K. TAUNTON, Secretary.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

To American and Colonial Visitors. By order of the Owner, Lady Henry Somerset. "THE WHITE HOUSE," Highams, Woodford-green. About one mile from Woodford and Higham's Park Stations, G.E.R. The genuine Antique and Valuable CONTENTS OF THE RESIDENCE, comprising the appointments of 12 bedrooms in white enamelled and other woods, excellent bedding, choice Florentine cabinets, ebonised and inlaid with ivory, genuine old Chippendale bookcase with glazed panelled door and six drawers, a 3ft. beautifully hand-painted bureau in panels of figures, etc., antique oak inlaid Dutch dresser, a set of Chippendale dining chairs, Sheraton card, occasional, and coffee tables, early English bracket, grandfather's, French, and other clocks, Louis XV. and XVI. settees, fauteuils, and chairs, Queen Anne and other mirrors, valuable carpets, etc. A Collection of very fine Old Coloured Bartolozzi Engravings after H. Holbein, taken from the original paintings in possession of His Majesty the King at Windsor Castle, oil paintings, water-colour drawings, a library of books, statuary, bronzes, and valuable decorative china, embracing specimens of Chelsea, Chinese porcelain, Delf, Nankin, and other Oriental China. Also a Victoria and Ralli car, equal to new.

MESSRS. COCKETT and HENDERSON are favoured with instructions from Lady Henry Somerset to SELL the above by AUCTION, on the premises, on Monday, July 8, 1907, and following day, at 12 o'clock precisely.

On view Saturday, July 6, 1907.

Catalogues (six stamps) may be had at the Auctioneers' offices, 72, Bishopsgate-street, Within, E.C.

TATTERSALLS.

Messrs. Tattersall beg to give NOTICE that their Thursday Sales have commenced and will be continued during the Season.

Sales every Monday and Thursday.

ALDRIDGE'S.

Capt. LONSDALE'S and Col. COTES'

ANNUAL SALE OF SPORTING DOGS

will take place

NEXT FRIDAY, JUNE 28, at 2.30,

At ALDRIDGE'S, ST. MARTIN'S-LANE, London.—W. and S. FREEMAN.

Catalogues forwarded.—On view Thursday until sale.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS, sent gratis, with full particulars Schools also recommended. Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 22, Craven-street Trafalgar-sq., W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 Gerrard

THE

BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY,

164, Buckingham Palace Road, S.W.,

have a large selection of well furnished country houses to let for long or short periods at—

	Bedrooms.	Bathrooms.	Reception.	Rent.
				Gns.
GREAT MISSENDEN ...	8	2	4	10
MILDENHALL	11	—	4	12
HIGHWORTH	12	—	3	9
BLACKWATER	9	1	3	7
WEYBRIDGE	6	1	3	5
ABINGDON	12	1	4	10
WARWICK	11	1	3	9
BANBURY	13	1	4	14
HENLEY-ON-THAMES ...	9	1	3	10
" " " ...	12	—	4	9
BROXBOURNE	9	1	3	8
ROYSTON	10	—	3	9
BRACKNELL...	13	1	3	10
STONY STRATFORD ...	11	1	3	9
ICKENHAM	11	1	3	14
FARNHAM	3	1	2	2
KELVEDON	5	1	3	5
PARKSTONE	8	1	3	4
BURNHAM BEECHES ... Etc., Etc.	5	1	2	5

Most of these houses have large grounds and stabling. Further particulars and orders to view may be had on application to the

BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY,
164, Buckingham Palace Road, S.W. (late of 83, Ebury Street)

R.M.S.P.

THE ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY,

LUXURIOUS TRAVEL.

Brazil, £50; Argentina, £62; West Indies, £38.

SHORT TRIPS TO

Spain, £9 15s.; Portugal, £12.

Apply to 18, Moorgate-street, E.C.; or 32, Cockspur-street, S.W.

CANADIAN PACIFIC LINE

FASTEST TO CANADA.

NEW "EMPRESS" ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS.
(4 DAYS OPEN SEA). Weekly Service from Liverpool.
EMPRESS OF IRELAND ... 14,500 tons ...June 28.
LAKE ERIE ... ... 7,550 ,, ... July 3.

For passages apply C. P. Rly., 62-65, Charing Cross, S.W.; 67, King William-street, E.C.; or Local Agents.

THROUGH TICKETS via CANADA to JAPAN, 22½ days; CHINA, 27½ days; AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND.

NORWAY PLEASURE CRUISES.

12 DAYS FROM £12 12s.

"MIDNIGHT SUN." Two Berth Cabins. Luxurious Accommodation. Sailing July 6, 20; Aug. 3, 17. Visiting Sand, Odde, Bergen, Fretheim, Gudvangen, Loen, Marok, Naess, and Molde.—Apply ALBION S.S. CO., LTD., Newcastle-on-Tyne.

COUNTRY HOUSE AGENTS' LIST.

BOGNOR-ON-SEA.—DAWSON SIDDAL, Estate Agent. Furnished and Unfurnished Houses for Sale or Let. Apartments Agency. Lists free. Telephone IX3 Nat.—Offices: Station-road.

BOURNEMOUTH.—JOLLIFFE & FLINT, Estate and House Agents. Lists of Furnished and Unfurnished Houses for Sale or Let, free by post.—Offices, 1, Arcade, Bournemouth.

EASTBOURNE HOUSES.—MESSRS. LAKE & CROWDER, Auctioneers, Surveyors, and Valuers, opposite the railway station. Telephone 8. Y. Agents for all the principal furnished and unfurnished houses.

ISLE OF WIGHT.—Houses to let, furnished or unfurnished, and properties for sale.—Apply to ALBERT BULL & PORTER, Ventnor, Shanklin, Sandown, and Totland Bay. Telephone 63X, Ventnor.

OXFORD and READING.—HAMLET & DULAKE, Estate Agents, Auctioneers, Valuers, and Surveyors. Illustrated property list and all information gratis to applicants.

LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.

QUICKEST AND MOST COMFORTABLE ROUTE BETWEEN LONDON AND
BIRMINGHAM, MANCHESTER, LIVERPOOL, IRELAND, AND THE NORTH.

Birmingham, Manchester, Liverpool, and Glasgow can be reached more quickly and easily from Euston than from any other London terminus.

SUMMER TRAIN SERVICE—JULY, AUGUST, AND SEPTEMBER.

Numerous and important additions and improvements in the train service on the London and North Western Railway will be made for the summer months, including new Corridor Trains, with luncheon and refreshment cars, as well as Sleeping Saloon Expresses between Euston, Edinburgh, and Glasgow, and the North, in both directions.

Additional Express Trains, with Corridor, Luncheon, and Dining Cars, will also be established between Liverpool, Manchester, and Scotland.

New Express Trains for tourists and families will be run from Euston, Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester, to North and Central Wales, the Cambrian Line, Blackpool, Morecambe, and the English Lake District.

The train service between Leeds, Bradford, Halifax, and Bristol, the West of England and South Wales, will be improved and augmented.

THE ROYAL MAIL ROUTE FROM ENGLAND TO CORK, WATERFORD, AND KILLARNEY, IS via HOLYHEAD AND DUBLIN.

FREDERICK HARRISON,
Euston Station, London, 1907. General Manager.

The many Health Resorts and Beauty Spots in DEVONSHIRE

and the

Cornish Riviera

are within easy reach by

G.W.R.

Sea Air and Sunshine at Brixham

Carbis Bay
Dawlish
Exmouth
Falmouth
Fowey
Helston
Ilfracombe
Kingsbridge
Land's End
Looe
Newlyn
Newquay
Paignton
Penzance
St. Agnes
St. Ives
Salcombe
Torquay
Teignmouth

Country Sports and Moorlands at

Ashburton
Bovey
Bodmin
Brent
Buckfastleigh
Dousland
Exeter
Liskeard
Lostwithiel
Luxulyan
Moreton
Newton Abbot
Princetown
Roche
St. Austell
Tavistock
Totnes
Wadebridge
Wrangaton

The balmy air of Torquay, Fowey, Falmouth, and Penzance—the superb bracing effects of Paignton and Newquay are alike especially appreciated by those in search of REST, CHANGE, & SUNSHINE.

Cheap Week-End and Tourist Tickets.

The Superintendent of the Line, Paddington Station, will send all particulars upon application; and upon receipt of 3d. in stamps, will forward a copy of either of the following Travel Books:

"Cornish Riviera Express" leaves Paddington daily at 10.30 a.m.

"Devon: The Shire of the Sea Kings."
"The Cornish Riviera: Our National Health and Pleasure Resort."

JAMES C. INGLIS, General Manager.

HOLIDAYS IN THE AUSTRIAN TYROL

BY THE

British Royal Mail Route,

VIA

HARWICH

AND THE

HOOK OF HOLLAND.

Corridor Vestibuled Trains.

Send postcard to the Continental Manager, G.E.R., Liverpool Street Station, London, E.C., for descriptive illustrated pamphlet (free).

CONCERTS.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.
SATURDAY AFTERNOON NEXT, at 2.45,
MADAME
CLARA BUTT CLARA BUTT
And MR.
KENNERLEY RUMFORD
Will give a GRAND CONCERT TO SAY "GOOD-BYE" previous to their departure for Australia. Assisted by Miss Esta D'Argo, Miss Ada Forrest, Mr. Noel Fleming, Mr. Ben Davies, Misses Pauline and Ethel Hook. Solo Pianoforte, Miss Gertrude Meller. Solo Violin, M. Tivadar Nachez. Solo 'Cello, Mr. W. H. Squire. Conductor, Mr. S. Liddle. Organ, Mr. Arthur E. Godfrey.
Boxes £4 4s., £3 3s., and £1 11s. 6d. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 5s., 3s., 2s. 6d., and (at doors only) 1s., at Royal Albert Hall; usual Agents'; and IBBS & TILLETT, 19, Hanover-square, W.

BECHSTEIN HALL—SVEN.
SCHOLANDER,
Swedish Troubadour Moderne.
SECOND SONG RECITAL.
TUESDAY EVENING NEXT, July 2, at 8.30.
ENTIRELY NEW PROGRAMME.
Accompaniment, Old Swedish Lute, 1798.
Tickets, 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall; and usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.

BECHSTEIN HALL.—Madame
JULIA CULP. July 5, at 3.15.
EXTRA RECITAL.
In response to many requests.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall; usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER,
Chatham House, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

EXHIBITIONS.

BALKAN STATES EXHIBITION, EARL'S COURT.
Open 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. 1s. Season Tickets, 10s. 6d. Weekly Tickets, 2s. 6d.
SERVIAN SECTION.—QUEEN'S PALACE.
BULGARIAN SECTION.—IMPERIAL COURT.
MONTENEGRIN SECTION.—DUCAL HALL.
WORKING TOBACCO, CARPET AND OTHER EXHIBITS.
Manufactures Raw Products, Arts and Industries.
IN THE BALKAN VILLAGE.
PEASANT DANCERS and GIPSY MUSICIANS FREE.
"THROUGH THE BALKANS IN TEN MINUTES."
VIEWS of MONASTIR, SHIPKA PASS, CATTARO, &c.
GRAND MILITARY AND PROMENADE CONCERTS.
EARL'S COURT.
"OLD JAPAN" IN THE EMPRESS HALL,
With its Temples, Monuments, Teahouses, and Geisha.
A COLONY OF ART MISSIONARIES,
Exhibiting every phase of their wonderful Crafts.
A Wealth of Cherry, Peach, and Wistaria Blooms.
SEE THE WATERFALL AND THE LOTUS POND.
FUJI YAMA.—NIKKO TEMPLE AND NIKKO BRIDGE.
JAPANESE THEATRE. FREE.
"OLD JAPAN." "OLD JAPAN."
Maxim's Flying Machine—Baikan Stalactite Caves—Pigmies from Ituri—The FISHING CORMORANTS—The Helter Skelter—The Salt Mine.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.
SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, and includes selected Landscapes and Portraits by Early British Masters.
SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W.

DORE'S GREAT MASTERPIECES.—Portraits by EDWARD PATRY; Pictures by EVE BAKER; Pictures of India, &c., by MADAM "LOTUS" PERALTE; Sketches of Egypt, by SYBIL DOWIE; Sketches by MURIEL T. HUNT.—35 New Bond-st., W. 10 to 6. 1s.

THOMAS McLEAN'S Forty-third Annual Exhibition of Pictures of the British and Foreign Schools is now open at T. McLEAN'S GALLERY, 7, Haymarket. Admission 1s.

GRAFTON GALLERIES, Grafton Street, W.
EXHIBITION of Works by Members of the French Society of Painters in Water colours.
Open daily 10 to 6. Admission 1s., including Catalogue.
Organised by EUGENE CREMETTI.

The most delightful trip this year is a visit to
THE
Dublin Exhibition
(Irish International),
now in full swing.

A white city of handsome buildings in a verdure-clad landscape of natural beauty.

The story of the World's progress in the 20th Century told in a living panorama of Machinery, Manufactures, Science, Art and Commerce.

Music & Novel Amusements Galore.

Practically every country in the world has contributed of its choicest pictures, its rarest antiquities, its most recent discoveries in science and manufacture. The Exhibition is a wonderland of the new, and a treasure-house of the historical.

All the Railway and Steamship Companies are offering special facilities and low excursion rates.

Official Tourist Agents:—
THOS. COOK & SON, LTD.

S.H.B.

AMUSEMENTS.

ROYAL OPERA, Covent Garden.
GRAND OPERA EVERY EVENING.
(For full particulars see Daily Papers.)
Box-office, 10 to 10.

HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE. Mr. TREE.
EVERY EVENING at 8.45.
A WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE, By Oscar Wilde.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.30.
Preceded every evening at 8 by
THE DOOR UPON THE LATCH.
Dramatised by F. Kinsey Peile from Robert Louis Stevenson's story "Le Sire de Maletroit."

ST. JAMES'S, KING STREET, PALL MALL. Tel. 3903 Gerrard.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a New and Original Play,
JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOUR, by ALFRED SUTRO.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER. Miss EVA MOORE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, MR. GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING at 8 (doors open 7.40), a new musical play entitled
THE GIRLS OF GOTTENBERG.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2 (doors open 1.40).
Box-office open daily from 10 till 10.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE. — Lessees and Managers, A. & S. GATTI. EVERY EVENING at 9, Messrs. A. & S. GATTI'S PRODUCTION of MRS. PONDERBURY'S PAST, by F. C. Burnand. Under the direction of Mr. Charles Hawtrey. Preceded at 8.30 by THE ANONYMOUS LETTER. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.30.

DALY'S THEATRE, Leicester-square.
Produced by Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING at 8.15.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY at 2.30.
A New Play, with music, entitled
THE MERRY WIDOW
("Die lustige Witwe").

APOLLO. EVERY EVENING AT 8.15.
HENRY LOWENFELD, Sole Proprietor.
Tom B. Davis, Sole Lessee and Manager.
ROBERT COURTNEIDGE'S Production,
TOM JONES.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY at 2.

SAVOY.—IOLANTHE, WEDNESDAY, FRIDAY, 8.25. SATURDAY AFTERNOON, 2.30. GONDOLIERS, THURSDAY, 8.25. PATIENCE, SATURDAY, 8.25.

GARRICK THEATRE. Mr. ARTHUR BOURCHIER and Miss VIOLET VANBRUGH. EVERY EVENING at 8.30 in THE WALLS OF JERICHO, by ALFRED SUTRO.
MATINEE every WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

CRITERION THEATRE (next door to Piccadilly Circus Tube Station). Lessee, SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM. Every Evening at 8.30, CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company in THE LIARS, by Henry Arthur Jones. MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY at 2.30.

SHAFTESBURY. — The Romantic Light Opera, LADY TATTERS. EVERY EVENING at 8.15, Matinee Thursdays, at 2. Mr. COURTICE POUNDS, Mr. WALTER PASSMORE; Miss LOUIE POUNDS, Miss CLAUDIA LASELL, Miss MARIE GEORGE.

THE PLAYHOUSE, Northumberland-avenue.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. Cyril Maude.
TO-NIGHT, and EVERY EVENING at 9, a New Comedy in 3 acts by Augustus Thomas, entitled
THE EARL OF PAWTUCKET.
Mr. CYRIL MAUDE and Company, including
MISS ALEXANDRA CARLISLE.
Preceded at 8.20 by THE DRUMS OF OUDE.
FIRST MATINEE, WEDNESDAY, July 3, and every following Wednesday, at 2.20.
All seats, including gallery, can be booked. Tel., 14,042 and 14,043 Gerrard.

LYRIC THEATRE. Mr. LEWIS WALLER.
Lessee, Mr. William Greet. Under the Management of Mr. Tom B. Davis.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a play in four acts by Tom Taylor, entitled
(Last 3 Weeks.) CLANCARTY. (Last 3 Weeks.)
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

WALDORF THEATRE, Aldwych, Strand, W.C.
TO-NIGHT, and EVERY EVENING, at 8.50,
A New Play in Three Acts,
By Channing Pollock.
IN THE BISHOP'S CARRIAGE.
Frank Cooper, Charles Cartwright, Henry Vibart, Charles Collette; Misses Agnes Hewitt, Fannie Ward. Preceded at 8.30 by THE QUIPS.
MATINEE (TO DAY) WEDNESDAY, at 2.30.
Box-office now open 10 to 6. Tel. 3,830 Ger.

ALHAMBRA.—New Ballet, "QUEEN of SPADES," Mlle. Maria Bordin; M. and Madame Zancig, Urbanora, Up-to-date Pictures, New Ballet, "Electra," and Grand Varieties. Doors 7.45.
Manager, GEORGE SCOTT.

EMPIRE, Leicester Sq.—New Ballet, SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY, Mlle. Adeline Genée, Première Danseuse, The Debutante, Barber Ritchie Trio, the Biograph, Mr. Hymack, &c. Every Evening at 8.
Manager, Mr. H. J. HITCHINS.

PALACE.—EVIE GREENE, R. G. KNOWLES, HORACE GOLDIN, CLARICE VANCE, &c., THE ROYAL REVIEW, &c., on BIOSCOPE. EVENINGS 8 (doors 7.45). MATINEE, FULL PROGRAMME, SATURDAY at 2.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION.—Brightest and most comfortable Promenade in London. Lifelike Portrait Models of T.M. The King and Queen of Spain. Madame Tussaud's Exhibition Band. Open 9 till 10.

LONDON HIPPODROME.
TWICE DAILY, at 2 and 8 p.m.
MIRTH, MYSTERY, AND SENSATION.
AQUATIC, STAGE, AND EQUESTRIAN SPECTACLE.

TRUTH FOREIGN HOTEL LIST & CONTINENTAL GUIDE.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—GRAND HOTEL HENRION CORNELIUSBAD. The Leading English house.

BADEN-BADEN—HOTEL REGINA. Latest creation. The most up-to-date, elevated position.—J. LIPPERT, Proprietor.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL STEPHANIE. Allee of Lichtenthal. The leading Hotel.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL BRISTOL AND DÉPENDENCE. First-class. Facing baths and Sprudel. Occupying finest position.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL PRINCE OF WALES. HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL EULER. First-class. Close to Central Railway. Situated in a quiet position.—Prop., A. S. BUCHER.

BÂLE.—GD. HOTEL VICTORIA and NATIONAL. Opp. central Stn. First-class. Private apartments with bath.—Pr., PAUL OTTO.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL DE L'UNIVERS. Leading hotel. Suites of rooms with private baths.

BRUNNEN.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class, best situation of Brunnen. 250 beds. English billiards. American Bar.

BRUSSELS.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. Suites with private bath. Central heating.

CAPRI.—GRAND HOTEL QUISISANA. The leading first-class hotel. Every modern comfort.

CHAMOUNIX.—GRAND HOTEL IMPERIAL. The best-managed Hotel. Moderate charges.—H. BECKER.

CHATEAUX D'OEX.—GRAND and BERTHOD. 3,300 ft. Switzerland. Summer and Winter Sports.

COLOGNE.—HOTEL DISCH. The leading hotel in the town.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—GRAND HOTEL BELVEDERE. First-class.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—HOTEL VICTORIA. Favourite English House.

DRESDEN.—HOTEL BELLEVUE.—World-renowned. Very select. Situated on the Elbe and Opera Square. Suites and single rooms with private baths and toilet. Under the personal management of R. RONNEFELD.

EMS.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class.

EMS.—HOTEL FOUR SEASONS AND EUROPE. HOTEL FOUR TOWERS. First-class.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated. Full south.—Proprietor, CHIARI.

GENOA.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Apartments, with bath. Quiet rooms, garden on the fourth floor, splendid panorama.

GLION, above Montreux, Swiss.—NEW PARK HOTEL. First-class. Best situation. Own park. Open whole year. Winter sports.

HOMBURG (BATH).—RITTER'S PARK HOTEL. The leading hotel. Patronised by English and American Society.—Proprietor, C. RITTER.

HOMBURG (BATH).—VICTORIA HOTEL. Very first-class in every respect. The largest, also 4 villas. Finest garden.—J. BAEHL, Pr.

HOMBURG (BATH).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Suites with private bath and lavatory. "Hygienic diet at doctor's advice."

HOMBURG (BATH).—HOTEL BELLEVUE. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Vacuum cleaning indoors.—W. FISCHER, Prop.

KISSINGEN (BAD). — HOTEL VICTORIA and KAISERHOF. The leading English house.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE & RICHMOND. Motor garage. Leading hotels. Best situation. Open whole year.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL DE LAUSANNE. First-class. Facing railway station. Latest comforts.—AD. SCHAER, Prop.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU SEJOUR. First-class family home. All latest comforts. Fine situation. Large garden.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL EUROPE. First-class. Finest situation. Very quiet. Entirely renovated. Latest improvements.—HAGEN BROS., Proprietors.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Open from March 4. In the vicinity of Station and landing boats.—G. MUTH, Proprietor.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BELLEVUE AU LAC. First-class. Large dining-room, separate tables. Modern improvements.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. New hotel, unrivalled position, with latest improvements. The Hotel faces the English Church.—Proprietor, A. BROCCA, of Hotel Lugano.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BEAU REGARD & CONTINENTAL. First-class, beautifully situated in its own grounds. Nr. English church.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. First-class. Near Cathedral. Post, Teleg., & Rly. Office in hotel. Central heating. Suites with baths

MONTE CARLO.—GRAND HOTEL DE LONDRES. Opposite Casino. Modern comfort. Reasonable terms. Always open.—Manager, J. KAISER.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. First class. Patronised by English and Americans. Unrivalled situation and comforts.

MUNICH.—THE CONTINENTAL. Leading HOTEL and RESTAURANT. Entirely renewed and enlarged.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHERHOF. A good English house.—CARL POSCH, Proprietor.

NAPLES.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class. Situated in the finest and most select part of Naples. Magnificent view of town, Vesuvius, and bay. Proprietors, HAUSER & DOEPFNER.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable, in best situation. Splendid view of bay.

NAPLES.—GD. HOTEL DU VESUVE. Splendid position. Strictly first-class. Latest comfort.

NAPLES.—ELDORADO MODERN HOTEL. Good central situation. Moderate terms. Overlooking the Gulf.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel. Facing sea, nearest the Kursaal.—Prop., H. HILLEBRAND BROWNE.

OSTEND.—Sea bathing. The leading hotels on the beach are the CONTINENTAL, 400 beds, the SPLENDID, 400 beds. Rooms from 6 francs. Full board with room, 12 to 20 shillings, according to location.

PALERMO.—EXCELSIOR PALACE HOTEL. New. Leading hotel. Opened February, 1906.

PARIS.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Most luxurious and comfortable hotel in Paris. Entirely renovated.—A. LOTTI, Gen. Mgr.

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES and ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rendezvous of English and Americans.—Proprietor-Manager, A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—MERCEDES HOTEL, Place de l'Etoile. Most modern hotel in Paris. Opened April, 1901. Luxuriously furnished.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA, Avenue de l'Opéra. First-class. Latest and all modern improvements.—G. VAUTIER, Prop.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENÉE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PONTRESINA.—HOTEL KRONENHOF & BELLAVISTA. First-class. Best situation. Open whole year. Summer and Winter resort.

ROME.—REGINA HOTEL. New. Opposite Queen Margherita's Palace. One of the leading.—Managing Prop., E. BARBIANI.

ROME.—PALACE HOTEL. New. Up-to-date. BEAUSITE HOTEL. First-class family house.

ROME.—HOTEL ROYAL. The English House.

ROME—SAVOY HOTEL. First-class family hotel near the gardens.—Proprietor, J. LENGYEL.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family Hotel. Preferred position amongst the villas. Inclusive terms, from Fr. 11 to 20

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ENGADINER KULM. Baths with suites and rooms. Golf, tennis, and all the winter sports.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL, the most fashionable. Proprietor, CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ST. PETERSBURG. Family hotel. Sunniest position, adjoining Kulm and all the Sport places. Inclusive terms, 10 to 16 fr.

TERRITET, Switzerland.—GRAND HOTEL & ALPES. Well-known rendezvous of English and American clientèle.

TERRITET.—GRAND HOTEL BON-PORT. Favourite English house. Apartments with baths. Most sheltered situation.

VEVEY.—GRAND HOTEL and PALACE HOTEL. The Fashionable Hotels. Two tennis courts.—ENG. MICHEL.

VEVEY.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. 120 rooms. Very latest improvements. Bath with private suite.—Proprietor, T. WHITE.

VEVEY.—Healthiest Swiss resort.—TROIS COURONNES HOTEL. First-class. Modern improvements. Most moderate terms.

VIENNA.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Kartnerring next to the Opera. The most leading hotel in the town. Own fishing and shooting.

WIESBADEN.—FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest position, opposite Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. Connected with a Magnificent Bathing Establishment. Situated at the Curplace. "The English Home."

WIESBADEN.—PALAST HOTEL. Kochbrunnen Bath establishment. Rooms with private bath. First-class, up-to-date.

FOREIGN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BEAULIEU.—HOUSES & ESTATES. E. KURZ. (Opposite Station.) Villas furnished, to be let or sold.

SWITZERLAND

For Health and Pleasure.

VISIT

ST. MORITZ, Engadine,

6000 feet above Sea.

The exhilarating Alpine air, combined with the sunshine and blue sky of ST. MORITZ, promote renewed health and vigour.

GRAND HOTEL ST. MORITZ.

THE

HOTEL DE LUXE OF THE ALPS. . . . . .

Newly opened in December, 1905. Contains 300 rooms. Private Apartments with Bath and Dressing Rooms. Thorough quiet secured by double passages. Grand Society Room, with most beautiful views on the Lake and Mountains. Most modern Sanitary and Ventilating arrangements. Lift to all floors. Daily Concerts by the Milan Orchestra.

Tennis, Golf, Croquet, Boating on the Lake, Trout Fishing, Delightful Walks and Drives.

For Illustrated Booklet and Tariff address THE MANAGER.

TRUTH HOTEL LIST.

AYR.—STATION HOTEL, adjoining station. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards. For Business Gentlemen, Families, and Tourists to "The Land of 'Burns,'" and Ayrshire district. Within few minutes' walk of sea shore. Convenient Golf Courses. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Dumfries, and Turnberry.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. BECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—ROYAL CRESCENT HOTEL, MARINE PARADE. High Class, for Families and Gentlemen. Finest Position in Brighton for health and quiet. Sea view from nearly all rooms. Electric lighting throughout. Telephone, No. 1403. Telegrams—"Crescent Hotel, Brighton." Under personal supervision of GEORGE LOGAN, Proprietor.

DUBLIN.—HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE-STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High-class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

DUMFRIES.—STATION HOTEL, opposite station. Electric light. Lift. Billiards. Convenient for Firth of Solway, Castle Douglas, Sweetheart Abbey, Caerlaverock Castle, &c. Lovely Drives. Splendid centre for motor and cycle tours. Shooting. Fishing. Golf. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Turnberry.

EASTBOURNE.—The HYDRO HOTEL, a Select Residential Hotel, due south, facing sea. Spacious Lounges and Public Rooms. Garage. Special Week End Terms. Cinderella Dance Saturday. For Amusement Programme and Tariff (Illustrated), O. F. BERGANN, Manager.

GLASGOW.—ST. ENOCH STATION HOTEL. Best centre for business and pleasure. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (4 tables). Restaurant. Within shilling cab fare of all railway and steamboat termini in Glasgow. Near electric cars and opposite subway cable railways. Other G. & S. W. Rly Coy.'s Hotels at Ayr, Dumfries, and Turnberry.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position. Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

MALVERN.—The Premier Garden City of England.—The IMPERIAL HOTEL faces due South and offers every comfort at moderate and inclusive charges. A cheerful lounge, with electric light. The extensive baths (separate building), Brine, Turkish, &c., now open. Accommodation for Motors.—For tariff apply to Resident Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

MARGATE.—CLIFTONVILLE HYDRO. Fully licensed Finest position, facing sea and oval. Electric light and lift. Roof garden. Billiards. First-class cuisine and wines. Motor garage in own grounds. Turkish, dowsing, and electric baths. Special week-end terms from Messrs. Cook & Sons.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
W. WORSTER, Manager.

TURNBERRY.—STATION HOTEL. "The most up-to-date Hotel in Scotland." Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (3 tables). Conservatory. Garage and stables. Sea Water Baths. Two fine golf courses for visitors. Lovely Climate. Charming district. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Dumfries.

LEAMINGTON SPA.—REGENT HOTEL. Premier Hotel of Midlands. Ideal Summer Resort. Best centre in England for Motoring and Driving. Garage for 60 cars. Telegs. "Regent." 'Phone 109 Leamington.

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire. 500 feet above sea level. Situated on the edge of the Moor. Bracing air, lovely scenery. 9-hole Golf Course adjoining grounds, free to visitors.—JOS. I. KIRBY, Managing Director.

WESTGATE-ON-SEA. — WESTCLIFF HOTEL. Premier position, facing sea. Coffee, drawing, lounge, billiard rooms. Family suites. Stabling. Motor garage.—G. MARCH, Proprietor.

FOLKESTONE.—BATH HOTEL.
First class Private. Inclusive Terms.—Miss GRIFFITHS, late York House, Bath. Telephone 117.

MONTROSE ON THE NORTH SEA,

A Bracing Holiday Resort.

FAMOUS GOLF LINKS—Ladies' and Gentlemen's Courses open to all at nominal charge.
SEA BATHING—Miles of Sand with safe and commodious Bathing Station.
MONTROSE forms an attractive and healthy place of residence, and a convenient centre for Excursions to a neighbourhood of beauty and interest.
For Official Guide apply to Town Chamberlain.

PEEBLES HOTEL Hydropathic

Under Mr. A. M. THIEM'S Personal Management.
CONSTRUCTED FIREPROOF THROUGHOUT.
EQUIPPED on the most MODERN lines. Every Home Comfort. High-class Cuisine. Pure Bracing Air. Golf, Tennis, Croquet, and Bowling Greens. Motor Garage. Magnificent Recreation Hall.
A GERMAN BATH IN SCOTLAND.—Every form of Electricity, Massage, and Baths. Diet—Gymnastics—also Sun, Air, and Electric Light Baths. Resident Medical Specialist.

HOTELS, &c.

LOWESTOFT GRAND HOTEL.

Standing in three acres of charming Grounds.

300 feet Sea Frontage.

Lawns for tennis, bowls, croquet. Steps leading to the beach from Hotel grounds for bathing. Arrangements made for families.

Lowestoft is the Healthiest Seaside Resort on the East Coast.

PORTSMOUTH.—TOTTERDELL'S HOTEL. Naval and family hotel. Premier position. Old established. Telephone: No. 104. Telegrams: "Tots, Portsmouth."—C. MULLARD, Proprietor.

PATRONISED BY H.M. THE KING.

DOVERCOURT.—HOTEL ALEXANDRA.

Facing Sea. The Most Bracing Air on East Coast, within 2 hours from London (or 3 hours Motor Run). Every Modern Luxury and Comfort. Excellent Cuisine. Electric Light. Golf Course near. Motor Garage (Auto. Club, Offl. Appt.). Special Week-end Terms. Send for New Tariff.

A. H. THIEM, Proprietor.

ILFRACOMBE.—CLARK'S direct principal sea fronting ARCADE PRIVATE HOTEL. Homely. Highly commended. Personal attention. Maple's furnishing. Electricity throughout. Moderate terms.

GRAND HOTEL DU LAC DE JOUX LE PONT. 3,350 feet above sea-level. First-class Hotel with every comfort. Golf, tennis, fishing, boating, large pinewood forests. Cure d'aire and Neurastenie. Doctor in attendance.

Jewsbury & Brown's ORIENTAL TOOTH PASTE.

In Pots and Tubes.

BRAGG'S CHARCOAL BISCUITS

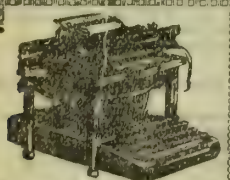
Cure Indigestion

Flatulence, Acidity and all disorders of the Stomach, and are very pleasant to take. Bragg's Charcoal Biscuits are supplied to the Royal family. Recommended by the Lancet and the medical profession, and used in their own families.

Bragg's Charcoal Powder and Lozenges are equally excellent.

Of all Chemists and Stores.

TYPEWRITERS



MSS. Copied.

Great Bargains for Sale, Hire, or Exchange. Shorthand and Typists sent out with machines from £1 per week.

Ring up—4881 Holborn. 8325 Bank. 7093 Central.

TAYLORS LTD. 74, Chancery Lane, London.

And at 92, QUEEN STREET, E.C. (Cheapside End).

OF ALL LEADING TAILORS.

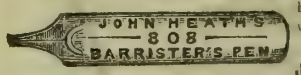
Quality MOTOFRIEZE

Colour BLUEWATER (and 23 others).

The only truly Hygienic cloth for Motor Garments.

Descriptive Booklet (with patterns) from the BALLYMENAGH WOOLLEN FACTORY, Ltd.,

Great Pulteney Street, Regent Street, London, W.



Better work, cleaner work, & quicker work with JOHN HEATH'S PENS. Of all Stationers, or send 7 stamps for box of 24 samples.

JOHN HEATH & CO., Birmingham.

Each Purchase Convinces!

REGISTERED TRADE MARK H. SAMUEL

Each article bought at H. SAMUEL'S affords additional proof of the truth of his assertion that he supplies at lowest factory prices, and moreover, experience proves that one purchase is invariably the prelude to further profitable investments.

WATCHES, CLOCKS, DIAMOND and GEM JEWELLERY, ELECTRO-PLATE, CUTLERY, &c.,

18 ct. Three Diamonds 30/- 18 ct. Three Rubies & Two Diamonds 47/6 18ct. 3 Diamond & 3 Rubies or Sapphires 25/-

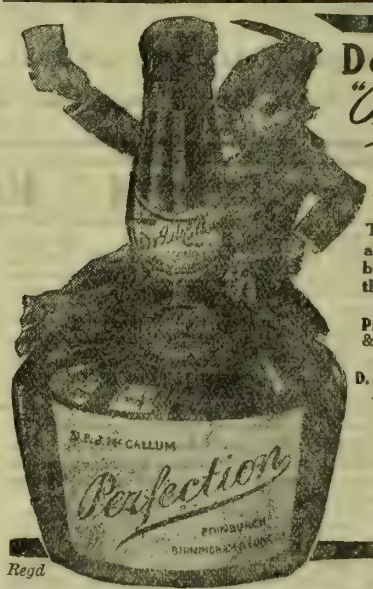
Whether you purchase from one of his 53 splendidly stocked branches, or through the medium of the post, your complete and lasting satisfaction is absolutely assured.

CALL TO-DAY OR WRITE FOR FREE CATALOGUE.

Central Depot—

H. SAMUEL, MARKET STREET, MANCHESTER.

London Depot—178, STRAND, W.C.



Regd

D&J.McCALLUM'S "Perfection" SCOTCH WHISKY

A PERFECT WHISKY.

(Mellow like a Liqueur.)

The Sole Whisky supplied at the Banquet in the Edinburgh City Chambers for the presentation of South African War Medals.

Price, 48/- per doz. (Cases 3, 6, & 12 botts.) carr. paid in U.K.

Proprietors,

D. & J. McCALLUM, EDINBURGH, London and Birmingham.

FOR GOUT, GRAVEL, RHEUMATISM, etc., DRINK

VICHY CELESTINS (State Spring)

Caution: See that each bottle has a neck label with VICHY-ETAT & the name of the Sole Agents: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd., 26, Upper Thames Street, LONDON, E.C.

ALCOHOLIC EXCESS

and DRUG HABIT cured at home in 3 to 7 weeks by the TURVEY TREATMENT without inconvenience. The only cure under British Medical Direction. Success tested by officials of the C.E.T.S. Mission, &c. Established 12 years. Over 5,000 recorded cases.—Write for Report of Public Test, or call, Med. Supt., TURVEY TREATMENT CO., Ltd., 24, Amberley House, Norfolk Strand London. Consultation to patients or their friends, free.

IDRIS GINGER ALE SWEET OR DRY

AS SUPPLIED TO H.M. THE KING

SPECIAL FOR LADIES.

J. C. VICKERY

Jeweller and Silversmith
To H.M. The KING
and H.M. The QUEEN.

179, 181, 183, Regent Street, W.

No. M 289.

Vickery's exclusive Novelty Brooch, Earrings, and Ring to match, in Diamonds and Rubies.

Only £37.

Charming Novelties for Gifts in Jewellery, Silver, Leather, Tortoise-shell, Watches, Clocks, Dressing Bags, &c.

Patterns post free.

Remittance or Reference with order.

The "CALEDONIAN"
GOLFING SKIRT
supplied by
COPLAND & LYE, Glasgow,
enhances the enjoyment of the game. These smart well-cut Skirts are made of reliable Scotch Tweeds, checked or plain; also of navy or black Serge.
21/- Price, in Stock Sizes, 21/-
Made to special measurements, 2/- extra. Carriage paid in U.K.

COPLAND & LYE'S
Famous Scotch Tartan Skirts
in the principal clan tartans 42/-

COPLAND & LYE'S
Renowned "Caledonian" Winceys
from 1/- per yard.

COPLAND & LYE, THE LEADING SPECIALISTS IN SCOTCH TEXTILES.
The Caledonian House, Sauchiehall Street, GLASGOW.

SWEET!

How often a lady uses this word as adequately describing her full appreciation of a good thing, and nothing more often calls forth the expression than when she uses "Erasmic" Soap. Men agree.

"THE DAINTY SOAP FOR DAINTY FOLK."

4d. per Tablet. 1/- per Box.

Of all Chemists, &c.

"Erasmic" Soap

FRILLED BUTTER MUSLIN

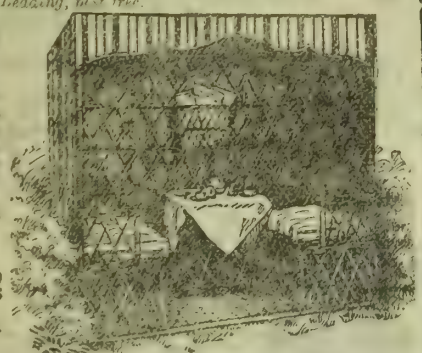
WITH NEW HEMSTITCH FRILLS, 3 yds. long, 8/3 per pair. PLAIN FRILLS, 6 9 per pair. Sample book of Plain and Fancy Muslins on approval. Carpets, Tapestries, Cretonnes, Art Silks, Art Serges. Patterns on approval. Book of Lace Curtains, Blinds, Carpets, Linoleum, Furniture, Bedsteads, Bedding, post free.

THE BELVOIR WICKER ARBOUR.

With let-down flap Table; Basket for Books, Needlework, &c. Being light, it is easily turned in any position. Shelters from wind and sun.

Price Complete in Striped Tick...£3 5 0
Shower-proof 4 7 6
Made to fold flat, 15/- extra.

Catalogue Free.



GORRINGE & CO., 91A Dept., Queen's Walk, NOTTINGHAM.

SURE TO WIN

your favour, if you will but give it an opportunity. That is our feeling about LI-NOLA, Catesbys' bordered Cork Lino, for it is a floor covering so completely satisfactory in every way that it needs only to be tried to be prized. The patent border appearing in LI-NOLA is made in every available design and colour, the work of really artistic designers, and forms a floor covering altogether charming. Not only can any scheme of decoration be matched, but the room is improved 50% in appearance and hygiene by the addition of LI-NOLA.

FREE sample pieces, together with fine book of coloured designs, sent by post.

CATESBY & SONS, Desk 12,
"Shipping Dept.," Tottenham Court-road, London, W.

"THE QUEEN OF

Apollinaris

TABLE WATERS."

HAMPSTEAD TUBE

(CHARING CROSS EUSTON & HAMPSTEAD RAILWAY)

HAMPSTEAD – HIGHGATE

CHARING CROSS

JOURNEY TIMES AND FARES BETWEEN CHARING CROSS

Journey Time Minutes	AND	Fare d.
1	Leicester Square	1
2	Oxford Street	1
4	Tottenham Court Road ...	1
5	Euston Road	1½
6	Euston	2
8	Mornington Crescent ...	2
10	Camden Town	2
12	South Kentish Town ...	2
13	Kentish Town	2
15	Tufnell Park	3
18	Highgate	3
12	Chalk Farm	2
15	Belsize Park	3
18	Hampstead	3
24	Golders Green	3

THE HAMPSTEAD TUBE CONNECTS WITH OR HAS STATIONS IN CLOSE PROXIMITY TO STATIONS ON OTHER LINES AND TO TRAMWAY SYSTEMS AS FOLLOWS:–

CONNECTS WITH	At Hampstead Tube Stations
‡ Bakerloo Tube (Trafalgar Square)	Charing Cross
† Central London Railway	Oxford Street
* † City and South London Railway	Euston
‡ District Railway	Charing Cross
* † Piccadilly Tube	Leicester Square
* † L. & N. W. Railway (Euston)	Euston

CONNECTS WITH	At Hampstead Tube Stations
‡ Metropolitan Electric Tramways ... ... (Finchley, Whetstone, Barnet)	Highgate
‡ Midland Railway	Kentish Town
† South Eastern and Chatham Railway	Charing Cross
‡ Tottenham and Hampstead Junction Railway... (Junction Road)	Tufnell Park

* Through Bookings. † Subway or Lift Connection ‡ Short Street Connection.

NOW OPEN

FOLDER MAPS, ILLUSTRATED GUIDES, and all INFORMATION obtainable at Booking Offices, or from W. GOTT, Passenger Agent, 75, LONDON ROAD, S.E.

Robinson & Cleaver,

BELFAST. LTD.

Regent Street & Cheapside, LONDON; and LIVERPOOL.
Manufacturers to His Gracious Majesty The King, H.R.H. The Princess of Wales, &c., &c.
Carriage paid on Orders 20s. upwards in United Kingdom.

CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples Post Free.

BORDERED.
Children's .. .. .. 1/3 per doz.
Ladies' .. .. 2/6 „
Gentlemen's .. .. .. 3/6 „
HEMSTITCHED.
Ladies' .. .. 2/9 per doz.
Gentlemen's .. .. .. 3/11 „

IRISH COLLARS, CUFFS, & SHIRTS.

Illustrated Price Lists Post Free.

Collars—Gentlemen's four-fold, from 4/11 per doz.
Cuffs for Gentlemen from 6/11 per doz.
Matchless Shirts, with four-fold Fronts and Cuffs and bodies of Fine Longcloth, 35/6 the half-doz. (to measure, 2/- extra).

OLD SHIRTS made good as new with good materials in neckband, cuffs, and fronts, for 14/- the half-doz.

IRISH DAMASK TABLE AND HOUSE LINEN.

Fish Napkins, 2/11 per doz.
Dinner „ 5/6 „
Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2/11 each.
Table Cloths, 2½ by 3 yds., 5/11 each.
Kitchen Table Cloths, 11½d. each.
Linen Sheeting, 2 yards wide, 1/11 per yard. Surplice Linen, 10½d. per yard. Dusters, from 3/3 per doz. Glass Cloths, 3/11 per doz.

N.B.—To prevent delay, all Letter-orders and Inquiries for Samples of these goods should be sent direct to 40, W. Donegall Place, Belfast.

A TILIA BISCUIT

Made by PEEK, FREAN

is more nourishing than several ordinary biscuits of the same size.

Tilia Biscuits contain about 20 per cent. of TILIA, the wonderful substance which is all nourishment. They are sold by all Grocers and Stores at 1/= and 2/= per tin, and can be had plain, sweet, or wholemeal.

PEEK, FREAN & Co. Ltd.

OFFER

FREE SAMPLES

of TILIA BISCUITS, COCOA and POWDER on receipt of 1d stamp for postage. — PEEK FREAN & CO., Ltd., Dept. T6 176, Drummond-road, S.E.

Enjoy TILIA Biscuits

A Healthy Complexion

results from using the

'4711'

Eau de Cologne

(Blue and Gold Label).

A few drops sprinkled into a basin of hot or cold water will cheer and refresh you, and act as a SKIN TONIC.

IMPORTANT.—Cheap impure Eau de Cologne used in this way will injure your skin. Insist on seeing the Hall Mark No 4711 on every bottle. It is an absolute guarantee of purity.

Sold everywhere from 1/- to 15/- per bottle.

PRESENTS in SILVER

at the

Goldsmiths & Silversmiths Company, Ltd.,
112, Regent Street, W.

New Registered Design.

Solid Silver Flower and Sweetmeat Centre-piece, Finely Pierced. The Baskets lift off for independent use. Height 13 inches.
£16 16 0.

¶ When Purchasing Wedding, Birthday, Christening or Complimentary Presents, do not decide until you have inspected the Goldsmiths & Silversmiths Company's Stock of Novelties in Solid Silver at 112, Regent Street, and compared Prices and Quality.

¶ If unable to visit 112, Regent Street, write for Illustrated Catalogue of Presents in Solid Silver, sent Post Free, or for a Selection of Goods on approval, carriage paid.

A choice Stock of Antique and Second-hand Silver at Moderate Prices. Inspection invited.

The
Goldsmiths & Silversmiths Company, Ltd.
By Appointment to H.M. the King.
Show Rooms:—
112, Regent Street, London, W.

A Prospectus has been filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, which states, amongst other things, that—

The SUBSCRIPTION LIST is now OPEN, and will CLOSE for London on or before THURSDAY, 27th June, and for the Provinces on or before MONDAY, 1st JULY. Lists were also opened on Tuesday, the 18th June, and will close on Monday, the 1st July, at the following places :—

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED BY :—

THE BANK OF AUSTRALASIA.—Sydney, Melbourne, Brisbane, Adelaide, Auckland, and Wellington.
THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE.—Montreal, Toronto, Quebec, St. John, N.B., St. John's, Newfoundland, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Halifax, and Victoria.
THE CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA.—Penang, Singapore, Hong Kong, and Shanghai.
THE NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA (LIMITED).—Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, Kurrachee, Allahabad, Simla, Rangoon, Colombo, Zanzibar, and Mombassa.
THE STANDARD BANK OF SOUTH AFRICA (LIMITED).—Cape Town, Durban, Pietermaritzburg, and Pretoria.
LONDON CITY AND MIDLAND BANK (LIMITED), LONDON, E.C.—Gibraltar, Malta, and Cairo.

THE UNITED SERVICES CO-OPERATIVE HOTEL COMPANY, Limited.

(Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900.)

CAPITAL - - - £225,000,

Divided into 225,000 Ordinary Shares of £1 each.

ISSUE OF 207,000 ORDINARY SHARES OF £1 EACH AT PAR. Payable as follows :—10s. per share on application, 5s. per share on allotment, 5s. per share on the 16th September, 1907, or abroad in the currency and at the rates of exchange stated in the form of application.

DIRECTORS.

SIR CHARLES PETER LAYARD, The Grey House, Langton, Tunbridge Wells, ex-Chief Justice of Ceylon, Chairman.
COLONEL ARTHUR ROBERT KENNEY-HERBERT, 8, Castlebar-road, Ealing, late Secretary to Government Military Department, Madras.
EDGAR GEORGE MONEY (of the firm of Boustead Bros., Merchants), 3 and 4, Fenchurch-street, London, E.C.
WILLIAM STEPHEN TUDOR SAUNDERS, 3, Morpeth-terrace, Victoria-street, S.W., Managing Director, Grand Oriental Hotel, Colombo.
JACQUES HOFFER, 1, Whitehall-court, London, S.W., Hotel Manager, formerly of the Hotel Cecil, London, late Manager of the Galle Face Hotel, Colombo.

BANKERS.

In London—The LONDON CITY and MIDLAND BANK, Limited, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.
Abroad—As printed at head of this Prospectus.

SOLICITOR.

GEO. D. PERKS, Hamilton House, Victoria Embankment, London, E.C.

BROKER.

JAMES DEBENHAM, 4, Copthall-buildings, and Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

ARCHITECT.

H. CHATFEILD CLARKE, F.R.I.B.A., 63, Bishopsgate-street Within, London, E.C.

CONSULTING MECHANICAL AND ELECTRICAL ENGINEERS.

BUCKTON & JONES, 72, Victoria-street, London, S.W.

AUDITORS.

MARTIN, FARLOW & CO., Incorporated Accountants, 4, King-street, Cheapside, London, E.C.

SECRETARY AND OFFICES.

REGINALD E. EMSON, F.S.A.A., 26, Budge-row, Cannon-street, London, E.C.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring the site at South Kensington, hereinafter described, erecting thereon a first-class hotel, and working the same upon co-operative principles, giving, as regards a hotel, privileges similar to those given to their shareholders by the various co-operative stores.

It is intended, primarily, to cater for Members of Parliament, and of the Indian and Colonial Legislative Councils, commissioned officers of the Navy, Army, and Auxiliary Forces, and members in the superior grades of the Civil Service on the Home, Indian, and Colonial establishments, and for their families.

In allotting the share capital preference will be given to applicants belonging to the afore-mentioned classes, whilst reserving a fair proportion for subscription by the general public. Every shareholder of 10 fully-paid Ordinary Shares of £1 each will be entitled as accommodation permits to a bedroom, bath, full board and attendance, either at the special exclusive rate of 10s. 6d. per diem or at 20 per cent. below the terms charged to non-shareholders, at the option of the Directors. In the case of shareholders with families, the holding of 15 Shares of £1 each will entitle them, and their children up to the age of 21, to the above special advantages and reductions. This special tariff will extend to inclusive terms for those shareholders desiring to reside or make a prolonged stay at the hotel, and shareholders will be entitled to entertain their guests at meals at these rates.

It may be pointed out that the investment of a small sum in the shares of this Company will secure to shareholders many of the advantages of a residential club, without the recurrent expense of an annual subscription.

It is estimated that, week by week, including visits to London on the part of officers of the Navy and Army on the Home stations or garrisons throughout the Empire, civilians, officials, and their wives and families, a constant average of several thousands of the above classes come to, or pass through, London. These form the grounds for believing that the hotel, run on the lines proposed, will be patronised continuously throughout the year.

The directors fully recognise the great importance of securing capable management to ensure the success of the undertaking. They have, therefore, secured the services on the board of Colonel Kenney-Herbert, who opened and controlled the restaurants at Wellington Court and St. James's Court, and who is well-known under the nom de plume "Wyvern"; Mr. W. S. T. Saunders, Managing Director of the Grand Oriental Hotel, Colombo, Ceylon; also of Mr. Hoffer, formerly of the Hotel Cecil, and the Ghezireh Palace Hotel, Cairo, and latterly manager of the Galle Face Hotel, Colombo.

An option to lease an undoubtedly excellent site for the erection of the hotel has been secured. This is situated near the corner of the Brompton-road, facing the Oratory, and close to the Brompton-road Station of the "Piccadilly Tube" Railway, and the South Kensington Station on the District Railway.

Plans of the proposed hotel have been prepared, and estimates have been obtained for building and furnishing the same. The plans provide for a handsome, well-arranged building, modern in design and equipment.

No underwriting commission has or will be paid on the present issue of shares.

Application for shares should be made upon the form accompanying the prospectus, and sent to the company's bankers, and in all cases with a remittance for the amount of the deposit. Applications in the United Kingdom should be sent to the Company's London bankers. Applicants abroad should send their applications to the nearest branch of the Company's foreign bankers. A list of these branches is given on the application form.

Prospectuses and forms of application can be obtained at the office of the Company, or from the bankers in London or abroad, solicitor, and broker.

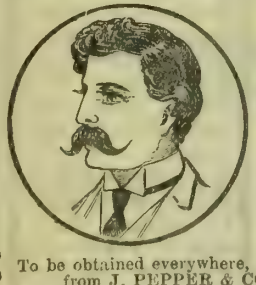
PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY
(LIMITED),
HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.

INVESTED FUNDS - - £63,000,000

BIRKBECK BANK (established 1851), Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C. 2½ per cent. interest allowed on Deposit Accounts. 2 per cent. interest on Drawing Accounts with Cheque Book. All general Banking Business transacted. ALMANACK, with full particulars POST FREE.—C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

DON'T LOOK OLD

KEEP YOUR SITUATION.



LOCKYER'S
SULPHUR
HAIR RESTORER

DARKENS IN A FEW DAYS.

To be obtained everywhere, 1/6 per bottle; or sent post free for 1/6 from J. PEPPER & CO., Bedford Laboratory, London, S.E.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN,

and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of Himrod's Cure for Asthma.

Established over a Quarter of a Century.

Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an Inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, J. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, MAY, ROBERTS, & CO., BUTLER & CRISPE, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale houses.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the Control of the Committee.

A list of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

KUPFERBERG's
SPARKLING
BERNCASTLER

Guaranteed to be made exclusively from grapes grown in the famous Berncastler vineyards. This exquisitely fine light Moselle, which is of rich bouquet and delicate yet pronounced flavour, has for half a century been a recognised favourite both with the medical faculty and with all English connoisseurs. Each bottle of genuine Berncastler (Nonpareil) bears the Kupferberg full brand and label.

Price 60/- per doz. bottles, and 64/- per two doz. half-bottles.

Of all Wine Merchants & Stores.

Wholesale Agents: Coverdale, Pohlmann, & Co., 5, Mark Lane, E.C.

STEINWAY

VERTEGRAND

The attention of every householder is hereby directed to the fact that the pianos, Grands and Vertegrands, made by the house of STEINWAY, and sold by them through special agents at fixed net prices for cash all the world over, have a surrender value greater than that of the instruments produced by any other firm. The reason is not far to seek, viz.:—durability, general excellence in tone production, expensive workmanship in all minor details. The superiority of the STEINWAY creations in this respect is as marked as are all the other distinctive "STEINWAY" features.

Deferred Payments.

Hiring Arrangements.

STEINWAY Pianos may be obtained on hire at very reasonable rates, or may be purchased by deferred payments. If for any reason a purchaser on the Deferred Payment System is desirous of returning his instrument, the difference between the Hire Terms and the amounts paid under the deferred plan will be returned to him.

Write or call to-day for the Steinway Hire and Deferred Payment particulars, also booklet "P.," "Portraits of Musical Celebrities," post free on request.

STEINWAY & SONS
STEINWAY HALL

LONDON and NEW YORK.

By Appointment to H.M. The King.

Weekly Wins!

By Appointment to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

DAIMLER

June 15th, 1907. DERBY & STAFFS A.C.'s HILL CLIMB. DAIMLERS made 1st & 2nd FASTEST TIMES.

June 15th, 1907. SHEFFIELD A.C. HILL CLIMB. DAIMLER MADE FASTEST TIME.

June 15th, 1907. EDINBURGH M.C. HILL CLIMB. DAIMLER SECURED 1st PLACE.

THE DAIMLER MOTOR CO. (1904), Ltd.

Coventry: Daimler Works. London: 219-229, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.
Manchester: 60, Deansgate. Nottingham: 96-98, Derby Road. Bristol: 18, Victoria Street.

A Drink. A Tonic. A Medicine.

WOLFE'S

Aromatic Schiedam

SCHNAPPS

The purest spirit distilled for human consumption. Admirable as a pick-me-up, tonic, or digestive. As a beverage it combines happily with aerated waters. And in addition, WOLFE'S SCHNAPPS has well-known medicinal virtues, notably in the case of delicate women.

To be had of all Wine and Spirit Merchants, Licensed Grocers, &c.
Wholesale Agents for the United Kingdom:
The FINSBURY DISTILLERY Co., LONDON.

Every Lady should know that Southalls' Sanitary Towels are a comfort, convenience, and saving of the cost of washing, and an absolute necessity to health—

Southalls' Towels

the greatest invention of the age for women's comfort, are sold by Drapers, Ladies' Outfitters, and Chemists, in silver packets containing one dozen at 6d., also manufactured under their improved Patents, 1/-, 1/6, and 2/-. A trial will immediately convince that there is no substitute for these goods.

A Sample Packet containing 6 towels in the four standard sizes, post free for 6 stamps from the Lady Manager, 17, Bull-street, Birmingham.
Southalls' Compressed Towels—tiny silver packets, only 2½ in. long. Size A, 1d. B, 1½d. C, 2d.

50 Years

For over Fifty years

CAMBUS

pure Scotch Whisky has been made from the Patent Still (not the Pot Still)

7 years Old. 3/6 a Bottle.
Matured in Wood. 42/- a Case.
"Not a headache in a gallon." Ask your Wine Merchant for "CAMBUS."

THE DISTILLERS CO., LTD., EDINBURGH.

London Distributors—
Messrs. BOWEN & McKECHNIE; W. H. CHAPLIN & Co., Ltd.; and MARSHALL & MARSHALL, Ltd.

NO BREAKING.
NO SPILLING.
NO WASTE.

NO RUINED GARMENTS IN TRAVEL.

DR. LYON'S

PERFECT

TOOTH POWDER

Cleanses, Preserves, and Beautifies the Teeth without injury; imparts a Natural Fragrance to the Breath.

Sold by all Chemists in dainty blue enamelled metal boxes, with Dr. Lyon's patent measuring tube very convenient for Tourists.

Price 1/-.

Prepared by the eminent Dental Surgeon,

J. W. Lyon, D.D.S.

157, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, LONDON, E.C.

32 Years' Reputation and Still Unrivalled.

"NESTOR"

Egyptian Cigarettes

(NESTOR GIANACLIS—CAIRO).

SWEET AS AN ORIENT KISS.

Of all Tobacconists & Stores throughout the World, &
10, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

The HACKNEY FURNISHING CO., Ltd.

Parties Furnishing should visit their West-End Premises, situated in the finest position in London,

93, 95, 97, 99, OXFORD STREET, W.
(Facing Newman Street).

Three minutes from Tottenham Court Road and Regent Street.

Their New Galleries are acknowledged to be the most Artistic combined with Elegance in London.

Parties can furnish on their deferred payment system as follows:—

GENERAL TERMS.

Worth	Per Month	Worth	Month	Worth	Month	Worth	Month
£10 ...	£0 6 0	£30 ...	£0 17 0	£50 ...	£1 8 0	£200 ...	£4 10 0
£20 ...	£0 11 0	£40 ...	1 5 0	£100 ..	£2 5 0	£500 ..	11 5 0

Free Life Insurance. Free Fire Insurance. No Security. No Deposit.

Head Offices { 1, 2, 3, 4, Town Hall Buildings.
and Showrooms { 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, The Grove, adjoining Mare St., London, N.E.
Catalogues and full particulars post free.

A. M. STEWART, Managing Director.

OUR PUZZLES.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Building, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on postcards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand, whilst in the case of new Competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,478.

PRIZE AWARD.

NEATEST AND MOST ATTRACTIVE CATCH-NAME FOR THE G. E. R.'s NEW CORRIDOR LUNCHEON-CAR EXPRESS.

Competitors will remember that, when this Puzzle was announced, it was stated that in addition to the usual Prize of Two Guineas given by TRUTH, the G. E. Railway would give a further sum of Two Guineas, conditionally upon the Prize Catch-name being sufficiently attractive for them to adopt.

I have now heard from the Company to the effect that, though they have not yet quite made up their minds as to whether they can, or cannot, adopt the Catch-name which, in their opinion, is the best sent in—viz., "THE POPPY-LAND LUNCHEON EXPRESS"—still, in view of the large number of ingenious suggestions submitted and the wide interest attracted by the competition, they have decided to present their Two Guineas outright.

The total value of the Prize-money at my disposal is, therefore, Four Guineas, and as two competitors, viz., NORVIE and RAILMAN, have sent in "The Poppy-land Luncheon Express," they will divide the Prize equally, each receiving the sum of Two Guineas.

In thus announcing the award I should like to take the opportunity of congratulating my competitors on the ingenuity that nearly all of them have displayed in this exceptionally popular competition. I was rather proud of my competitors before. I am prouder than ever of them now.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,483.

I propose this week to set my readers an interesting Puzzle from real life by offering the usual Prize of Two Guineas for :—

THE BEST CONJECTURAL SOLUTION, IN NOT MORE THAN 100 WORDS, OF THE MYSTERY SURROUNDING THE THEFT OF THE GOLD CUP AT ASCOT LAST WEEK.

The points especially requiring to be cleared up, for the purpose of this Competition, are as follows :—

(i.) Motive of theft.
(ii.) Sex of thief.
(iii.) Method employed by thief to elude the vigilance of custodians, and to get away safely with his booty after having annexed it.

Competitors are not confined to these three main points. They may, if they please, introduce supplementary matter bearing upon the subject, within the limit of words allowed. But no solution which evades any of the three main points—however ingenious in other respects—will be adjudged satisfactory.

I would, therefore, recommend competitors to answer the questions involved in those points first, numbering them (i.), (ii.), (iii.), for convenience of reference; and to make their answers as terse and logical as possible.

Assuming that the mystery is cleared up before the adjudication, the Prize will be awarded to that solution which tallies most nearly with the actual facts. Otherwise, it will be awarded by the Puzzle Editor to that Solution which he considers, theoretically, the most convincing.

PLEASE NOTE THAT:

(i.) No Competitor must send in more than one Solution.
(ii.) All Solutions must reach TRUTH office by the first post on Monday, July 8, 1907.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of "CAMOENS," winner of one-half TRUTH Prize No. 1,473 ("Epitaph on Clive"), is J. Williams, Esq., Ellerslie, Claremount-road, Wallasey.

CENTURIA.—Your nom-de-plume duly registered.

MYRA, FERRA-NOVA, and CALLANT.—I much regret that the answers sent in by these three competitors to TRUTH Puzzle No. 1,479 were received too late for inclusion.

HUMSHAUGH.—I note your error in numbering of Puzzle. It will be all right.

KISMET.—Your solution of current Puzzle is too long to print, but it will be duly included in the adjudication along with the others.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,480.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

SUGGESTIONS FOR A PUZZLE OF A NOVEL AND ATTRACTIVE CHARACTER.

1. Quotations from Shakespeare showing that he foresaw the invention of the telephone.

2. A plebiscite to decide which is the best short poem—not exceeding six (?) verses—in the English language. Reading Videt.

3. Paragraph introducing names of as many Members of Parliament as possible, such names to be used as parts of speech other than proper names. Specimen sentence:—"The chamberlain felt quite [illegible] names of members for Basingstoke and Yarmouth.

4. Short rhymed verse on some political question, all nouns, adjectives, verbs, and adverbs to begin with the same letter of the alphabet.

5. The original riddles of an up-to-date character. Nemo the Sage.

1. Telling tales of biographical or autobiographical books supposed to be written by leading men, the titles to be similar to the "From—to" type of life—viz., "Screws, or From Push to Push," by J. C.; "Acts," by Ellen Terry; "The Furnace of Love," by John Burns. Both humorous and serious.

2. What hobbies would you think be suitable for, say, A. Balfour, C.-B., Roberts, and others. Ludicrous and humorous only. Roberts: Photographing babies; C.-B.—Collecting love letters; Bernard Shaw: Writing begging letters; Rudyard K.: Interviewing old maids.

3. Humorous names for newspapers—viz., "Times"—The Dear One, or The Classic; "Standard"—The Inside Reckoner; "Punch"—The Corner, The Crown; The "Westminster Gazette"—The Gilt-edged—Golden Number; TRUTH—Condy's Fluid—Purifies and Saves. The New Testament. Northlander.

1. Name the ten greatest novels of the nineteenth century, written by British authors. To be decided either by the votes of competitors or by the personal preference of the Puzzle Editor.

2. The best answer in fifty words to the question: "Is the present Limerick craze a form of gambling and therefore reprehensible?" I refer, of course, to the competition conducted by certain publishers in which the entrance fee of competitors constitutes the prize money.

3. The shortest and cleverest reason given by a competitor why the two guineas should be awarded to him or her. Bell's Venus.

1. To find from letters, which, transposed, will make different words and fill up blanks in four lines, e.g., e i l v.

A "single" old woman on evil bent
Put on her "veil" and off she went.
"Live," she said, as she went away,
"I intend to have to 'live' to-day."

2. [illegible] engraven hard and soft, in immortal [illegible] of Byron's "Ocean when heard in heaven, "was muttered in hell, etc." on letter h.

3. The [illegible] known books in fiction and history [illegible] Mary.

1. The [illegible] best sentences of well-known quotations [illegible] paraphrased.

2. The best original (and unoriginal) and witty [illegible] Turner's pictures in the National Gallery, and of the old Dutch pictures there. Lamer-to.

The world a hundred years ago was very different from now. There is no reason, on the contrary, to suppose that in a hundred years the world will be like a hundred years [illegible] Walter Whitehouse.

Given a number of unnamed horses, colts, and fillies, selected by the Puzzle Editor, competitors to supply suitable names, suggested by the sires' and dams' names given. Competitors to defer to the Puzzle Editor, whose judgment is to be accepted in decision as fair and final. Rimabel.

A good puzzle would be a lyric or epigrammatic review of a well-known work or author. It would involve two puzzles, (1) to write the review, and (2) to guess the name of the work and its author in case of its not being given by the correspondent.

Example.

A horrible tale I will repeat—
Brave men converted into dogs' meat,
Or left for carrion crows to eat—
O what an intellectual treat.
(Nonsense chorus.)

A good long yarn I now might spin
If your attention I might win.
To waste so much time would be a sin;
It's the same thing over and over again.
(Nonsense chorus.)

Answer:—"Homer's Iliad." Libra.

For the six best questions beginning with "Why." H.

Patent Privileges.

1. Any one at any time may have an idea flash into the mind for an invention that can be patented. What should be the time limit of the patent? The period that has most votes will qualify for the prize, the final selection being made from those competitors naming this period at random.

2. Multi-millionaires are at a loss for schemes as to the disposal of their surplus funds. How could a million pounds sterling best be employed for the benefit of humanity?

3. Any one at any time may think out some invention and patent it; but the inventor may not be able to manufacture his invention. If this is stated by the inventor when applying for a patent, what extra privilege, if any, should be granted him? The privilege, if any, named by most competitors will qualify for the prize, and the final selection will be made from among these at random. Rachrane.

1. The date of the dissolution of the present Parliament. 2. The ten best pictures in the Royal Academy. 3. The seven most wonderful buildings in the world. Bucks.

1. Six men who in the esteem of the public ought to be elected R.A. 2. Six people of the day who might receive the O.M. (Order of Merit) from the King. 3. Six books that influenced one's life most. Dorset.

I went into a bungalow in this island (Dominica, F.W.I.) the other day, quite tucked away in the forest, and found the planter's library consisted of the following ten books, arranged in this order, well preserved, and well read. (On a table I also noticed a large Webster's Dictionary, "Living Races of Mankind," and "Newnes's Citizen Atlas"). 1. Spon's Household Manual. 2. Shakespeare. 3. "Life in Ancient India" (Speir). 4. "A Modern Zoroastrian" (S. Lang). 5. "Cakes and Ale" (Nathaniel Gubbins). 6. "Drinks of All Kinds" (F. and S. Davies). 7. Carlyle's "French Revolution." 8. "Pickwick." 9. The Bible. 10. "The Battle of the Bays" (Owen Seaman). The thought occurred to me that the sage who said, "Show me the books a man reads and I will tell you his character," would have had a fairly tough job here. Could not this idea being manipulated in some way into a competition? Isaak.

You ask for a new puzzle for your weekly competition. A preacher of some eminence has said, "There is no new thing under the sun." However, old scrap-books remind me that young ladies, who had a taste for literature and some admirers, used to have in their private books lists of the following kind: 1. Who was the greatest man in real life and in fiction? 2. Who was the greatest woman in real life and in fiction? 3. Who was the greatest poet, alive and deceased? 4. Who was the greatest general, alive and deceased? 5. Who was the greatest admiral, alive and deceased? 6. Who was the greatest painter, alive and deceased? 7. Who was the worst man in real life and in fiction? 8. Who was the worst woman in real life and in fiction? 9. What is your favourite virtue and the reverse? 10. What is your favourite amusement and the reverse? 11. What is your favourite flower and the reverse? 12. What is your favourite colour and the reverse? 13. What is your favourite dish and the reverse? 14. What is your favourite animal and the reverse? 15. What is your favourite motto and proverb? Myrmidon.

1. Name the six most destructive insects. 2. Make six new commandments for the present century. 3. Why should the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill not be passed? Chance.

A few weeks ago a lady friend of mine stood on our Liverpool landing-stage to bid good-bye to a school companion who was proceeding to America for ever by the "Baltic." On Saturday last a letter was received here from America, in which the school companion reviews the parting scene at the Liverpool landing-stage, and says, "I was reminded of that passage in the first scene —— of Shakespeare. She forgot the play, nor could she think of the passage that was appropriate to the occasion. Puzzle.—Could your readers find the passage in the first scene of any of Shakespeare's plays? Fitz.

The freak of a compositor in this office suggests an idea. At regular intervals printed letters are posted up indicating the comps. told off for Saturday afternoon duty. The fancy of the printer referred to is to pencil the letters into words. Thus the present list is:—

N
B
H
S

which the compositor has made to read, "Nature Bestows Her Serenity." Last month the letters were:—

N
H
C
O

which the printer pencilled into, "No Hen Can Quack." Nothing remarkable in these, but they suggest possibilities: and I propose that you should offer the usual prize for the most original and epigrammatic sentence formed from, say, six or seven initial letters picked by yourself from the alphabet at random. If it proved popular, the competition could be repeated at intervals, with different letters or a different number. Some years ago I suggested a subject for competition which proved very successful, namely, epitaphs on living celebrities on the lines of the quatrain on Edmund Burke in Goldsmith's "Retaliation." I am not aware that this has ever been repeated. T. Mark.

A rhymed alphabet of Shakespearean characters, heroes and heroines by turns. One line for each, giving as adequate a description as possible of the character in question. Petite.

There are in the United Kingdom many towns, villages, etc., whose names are similar in spelling to words in ordinary use. Puzzle.—To form the longest sentence or paragraph wholly composed of such names used as common nouns, verbs, etc. It might be allowable to divide names into two or more words (as, for instance, "singleton" into single ton), though, other things being equal, preference might be given to sentences or paragraphs composed entirely of individual words. No dovetailing of one name into another to be allowed. Only such names to be used as appear in the Post Office Guide or Bradshaw's Railway Guide. Tom Nissed.

Draw up a reasonable plan for the reform of the House of Lords and its future place in the Constitution. Leaf Rule.

A suggested ideal programme of instrumental music, consisting of six items, for Richter to have conducted at the recent concert given by the London Symphony Orchestra in honour of his thirty years' work in England. Korah.

1. Best forecast of cricket team chosen by M.C.C. to visit Australia in coming autumn. 2. Best forecast of County Championship at close of 1907 season. 3. Twelve most ridiculous queries after the manner of "Silly Season" subjects. Dullard.

Take twelve proverbs (unaltered) and form a consecutive narration. The words "and," "but," "because," "who," "that," may be used as connections, but each once only. Bim.

The best team of cricketers whose names shall all commence with the same letter, the B.'s and H.'s being excluded. Alpha Beta.

The best team of cricketers whose names contain not more than four letters. Alpha Beta.

The best team of gentleman cricketers who have three or more Christian names (or initials). Alpha Beta.

The best letter from the "Mikado" to the Lord Chamberlain expressing approval or disapproval of the latter's action in respect of the comic opera, "Mikado." Limit: 120 words. Detinu.

1. The best or most appropriate sentence, the words of which are composed of the names of modern men o' war. No more than twenty names of ships to be used in one sentence, and any word of three letters or less allowed to be used to render sentences grammatical. Batchelor.

1. The nearest guess to the average age of competitors in the competition. Each competitor to state his or her own age, as well as the competitive guess.

2. For the list of the three next best suggestions, after that chosen in this competition, to be decided by the votes of competitors or the opinion of the Prize Editor. Gapstang.

1. Twelve most popular novels written in Queen Victoria's reign.

2. The six most familiar quotations from Shakespeare's works

3. The twelve most popular heroines or heroes in fiction Gem.

I am almost ashamed to make the suggestion, but I notice a great many of my friends are deeply interested in acrostics. The supernatural cunning required to solve them has always been a source of wonder to me. But one always has to wait a week for the solution of the mystery. I suggest, therefore, that the Puzzle 1,481 should be the best double acrostic of, say, five lights, with solution attached. The solution being given with the acrostic is my point. Humshaugh.

1. The fittest object for the public good on which a millionaire might expend some of his surplus wealth.

2. The best quotation from Shakespeare which, when removed from its context, would seem to imply a recognition of the habit of smoking. ("Smoking, the latest fashion amongst the élite in the Elizabethan period, is mention by Ben Jonson, but nowhere by Shakespeare. Can it be that he had an objection to it somewhat like James I., who wrote against it in his well-known book "A Counterblast to Tobacco?" It is a well-known fact that the jeunesse dorée even smoked on the stage."—Elze's "Life of Shakespeare.")

3. The best original epigrammatic definition of "History." Verbum Sat.

1. The most suitable subject for the Laureate's next poetic effort.

2. The six best plays other than those of Shakespeare which will best bear repetition.

3. The best anagram composed of the letters in the words:—"The Lord Chamberlain's embargo on the popular 'Mikado.'" Blencathra.

1. The best original conundrum apropos the suffragettes.

2. The most appropriate quotation from Shakespeare applicable to the "Home Employment" dodge.

3. The best original epigrammatic definition of a society lady. Renwick.

1. New and original plots for novel or play, not to exceed fifty words.

2. Paragraph on a given subject in which only one vowel may be used, not to exceed fifty words.

3. Paragraph on a given subject in which two or more consonants are barred, not to exceed fifty words. Provident.

1. A prize for the best definition (with word limit) of various objects or expressions chosen by the Editor.

2. A prize for the quotation (English or classically) best suited to a subject or object chosen by the Editor.

3. A prize for verses (humorous or serious) on subjects chosen by the Editor, but excluding the prevailing "Limerick last line" craze. Little Toad.

1. What invention has most benefited mankind?

2. What has been the most useful invention of any age?

3. What has been the most wonderful invention of any age? Jethart.

1. Good rhymes are doubtless much to be desired in poetry. There are, however, some endings to verse which, although somewhat pleasing to the ear, cannot by any stretch be pronounced good rhymes. On the contrary, they may be called merely mock-rhymes. Take the following verse, for instance:—

Life is a ladle full of nonsense and fuss,
And to stir it into tempests is no manner of use.

Prize for best verse on similar lines.

2. For the best and longest sentence in which the number of letters in the words proceed in numerical, though mixed, order from 1 upwards. Examples:—"Why should I go thus heavily along?" "Try to make a TRUTH puzzle." "She is a good woman."

3. The number 142857 multiplied by any number up to and including 6 will give the same figures in the quotient. Prize to the best explanation of this fact. Asap.

Best suggestion for a new hoax:—

1. Misquote some passage from a well known author, without giving source, and ask your readers what's wrong. Several slips could be made.

Give a cryptic description of some place and ask your competitors to state what the place is. Arch. G.

1. Best forecast of the result of Jarrow election. (Politically, this is practically an unknown constituency, the late member having represented it from its formation, and purely on personal grounds. There will be four candidates, and the issue is both keenly interesting and exceedingly doubtful.)

2. Best selection of twelve prominent personages, companies, places, or, in fact, "anythings" to whom an interesting supposititious telegram might be sent. (Examples:—The Lord Chamberlain; The Suffagettes; The House of Lords; West Ham Guardians; Santos Dumont; "Consols"; "The Man in the Street"; South African Cricketers; George Bernard Shaw; Ellen Terry; Puzzle Editor of TRUTH, etc.)

3. Best twelve-word wire to one of the above. Cashier.

1. Set a "general knowledge" question which shall have all its items blue (or any other colour), e.g., "What are 'blue points,' 'a blue,' 'blue Peter,' 'the blues,' 'a blue stocking,' etc." The motif black would do equally well. 2. Suppose yourself wrecked (alone) on a Robinson Crusoe Island. State the ten implements, tools, weapons, etc., likely to prove most useful if saved from the wreck. (Fire-arms barred, owing to the impossibility of renewing supply of ammunition.) The ten objects must be such as are reasonably likely to be on board a ship carrying passengers. 3. Make the longest sentence possible (not a mere anagram), which shall contain no letters other than those in the Latin motto which appears weekly on the first page of TRUTH. Amuinn.

As to the best suggestion for a puzzle of an attractive and novel character. Well, mine is this: You offer the £2 2s. prize from time to time for the best "song-words," and I, among others, have won the prize. But what is the use of prize-winning words (even in TRUTH) unless you can obtain musical publication and popularity? Therefore, offer a prize to composers of repute to take up and set to music any, or all, of your prize-winning words. The cant-talk is that song composers cannot find verses of sense and sensibility. Give them the chance through your columns, and the wide range of choice amongst your many prize-winners of the last few years, whose "song-words" are still unset and unsung. Pyeddi.

1. Limerick competition.—Ordinary limerick competitions are almost played out, but I would suggest that you publish the first four lines in French and leave competitors to fill in the last line in French or English, as they wish. 2. Nomenclature competition.—For names of race-horses, names of sire and dam to be given in TRUTH competitions, to give names of filly or colt, as the case may be. 3. Cricket competition.—Competitors to give best representative eleven of first-class cricketers whose surnames commence with same letter of the alphabet. Cercueil.

1. A sentence of not more than fifty words on any subject chosen by the Puzzle Editor, and every word must begin and end with the same letter. 2. A piece of any up-to-date French prose translation not exceeding 300 words. Aster.

Put twenty sheep in five penns and have an odd number of sheep in each penn. Magpie.

1. Cricket and football forecasts are always popular. But a distinct novelty would be a competition in which competitors had to get results of given matches all wrong, instead of right. Nothing that sport is more full of glorious uncertainty. Therefore, you might publish a list of "open" fixtures, and ask competitors to predict the wrong results. In trying to do this, right predictions are sure to be given where wrong ones were intended. There ought to be good fun got out of a contest of this kind, and I think it is something absolutely new. It would not be necessary to publish entries, and the space could be utilised for the overflow of previous competition.

2. A murderer, before being hanged, protested his innocence, and wound up by saying that he was a loyal and faithful subject of the King. The subject then dropped. You will perceive the point in this little story. Similar examples might be invited.

3. The Yellow Press, and particularly one badly jaundiced organ, has sadly soiled its 'scutcheon lately. A motto in keeping seems desirable. If TRUTH competitors were asked to supply samples, I am sure something tastily appropriate would be forthcoming. Clames.

1. Word building:—Ask for the construction of the longest English word, which, taking any letter of the alphabet for a foundation, can be built up by addition of single letters, every letter making a legitimate word when it is added on to the others. Each letter to be placed in any position the competitor chooses. Examples:—(1) A-ma-mar-mart-smart-smarts. (2) H-he-her-hear-heart-hearth-hearths (seven-letter word).

2. A "Book-Titles" competition founded on the following idea should be popular:—Supposing a person had a large stock of paper-covered sixpenny novels, and he was going to get them bound in cloth, putting two sixpenny books in one cloth cover, he would find that there are lots of books that would seem—by their titles—to be just fitted for such a scheme. My examples will show what I mean without more explanation:—Desperate Remedies (Thomas Hardy), To Right the Wrong (Edna Lyall), She Loved a Sailor (Amelia Barr), Not Wisely but Too Well (Rhoda Broughton); To Let (B. M. Croker), No. 5, John-street (Richard Whiteing); It is Never too Late to Mend (Charles Reade), Joseph's Coat (D. C. Murray).

3. The best 100-word (or 200-word) sketch of the opening of a story, which shall "grip" the reader at the outset, and make him wish to continue the story. This scarcely needs an example, but I give one, selected from the letters of R. L. Stevenson, where he tells how he liked stories to begin with some sort of mystery in the first lines:—"Yes, sir," said the old pilot, "she must have dropped into the bay, a little afore dawn. A queer craft she looks." "She shows no colours," returned the young gentleman, musingly. "They're a-lowering of the quarter-boat," resumed the old salt; "we shall soon hear more of her." Hypatia.

1. Prizes are frequently offered for answers to given questions: why not reverse this order of things, and, giving an ordinary sentence, ask competitors to find a question or observation that, being placed before it, shall cause it to take on an aspect of brilliance?

2. In repartee the actual words of the rejoinder form often enough an everyday remark, which, apart from its context, is quite unspiced with wit. My suggestion is that the sentence "It is too late now" (or something equally simple) be given, and the prize offered for the preceding remark, which shall invest it with the most humour, point, or wit. Nibbler.

Nomenclature suggestive of the character of persons depicted in (1) English literature generally; say, twelve specimens. (2) Ditto in the works of Thackeray—e.g., Mr. Blindman, Bunyan; Sir Toby Belch, Shakespeare; Joseph Surface, Sheridan; Mrs. Malaprop, Sheridan; Lord Frederick Verisopht, Dickens; Sir Mulberry Hawk, Dickens; Mr. Archer, Thackeray; Sir John Salt and Miss Bird, Thackeray; Tony Lumpkin, Goldsmith; Soapy Sponge, Surtees; Mr. Midshipman Easy, Marryat. Thersites.

1. Finest sentence in the English language (a sentence to be considered as extending from one full-stop to another).

2. The ideal English cricket team to be sent out to Australia next winter (should be adjudicated not by plebiscite, but by some cricket authority).

3. The best list of twelve articles and their authors for an imaginary magazine (only living personages to be quoted). Hyde.

1. Poems in mock-heroic style—conjunction of a serious line with an unexpectedly prosaic one. Instance, Thackeray's poem on Timbuctoo:—

"I see her tribes the hill of glory mount,
And sell their sugars on their own account."

2. Quotations on the line of—

"Mark—the perfect man."—Psalm 37.
"Rose—a nurse of ninety years."—Tennyson's.
"Home they brought her warrior dead."

Nurse.

1. The most suitable subject for newspaper discussion during the "silly season."

2. The most appropriate quotation from Shakespeare applicable to the suffragettes.

3. The six most likely show places in and about London that our country cousins would visit. Margate Hoy.

1. Give either in prose or poetry the best specimen of "a descent from the sublime to the ridiculous," not to exceed fifty words.

2. Name the six battles which changed the map of Europe most since A.D. 1000.

3. Name six political men in the English Parliament who were the greatest failures; and also six who were the most successful at any date. Frances.

1. Six of the greatest historical errors on the part of (2) kings, (2) warriors, (2) statesmen.

2. The most ludicrous incident of the past week which has come under the writer's own observation. (This might be in verse, at Editor's discretion.)

3. Every one imagines he can edit a paper better than the duffer who attempts to do so. Give, therefore, the lines under which a new morning daily might be successfully established. Nemesis.

1. A list of three inventions or discoveries which, in the opinion of competitors, have tended most to the benefit of the human race.

2. A list of three possible inventions or discoveries which, if accomplished, would tend in the greatest degree to the benefit of the human race.

3. A list showing who, in the opinion of competitors, is the greatest living soldier, sailor, statesman, philosopher, writer, and scientist respectively. Khayyam.

Having had the "greatest men and women," would it not be a good thing to have "the four greatest impostors the world has ever seen"? Comus.

A school boy defined "a lie" as "an abomination unto the Lord" and "a very present help in time of trouble." I suggest that the reader of TRUTH should be asked to frame a pithy and epigrammatic definition of TRUTH. Autolycus.

1. Which nation is the most intelligent?

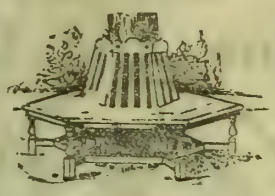
2. What three things do most men expect a woman to be, and vice versâ?

3. Say which is the best suggestion for a puzzle in this competition. Spartan.

Suggestions have also been received from the following:—Ox Short, Gladiator, Almaviva, Seefeld, Harebell, Beginner, Centuria, Echo.

JOHN P. WHITE
Garden Furniture & Ornaments

Catalogues upon application to the Works and Head Office, The Pyghtle Works, Bedford.



Catalogues of Carriage & Garden Gates, Garden Seats & Furniture, Chimney Pieces, Oak Panelling, Treillage, &c., &c.

134 NEW BOND STREET, LONDON W.

The quality of the tea is reflected in the quality of its patrons. Those who know good tea drink

Pearks' Tea

In Red Packets, 1s. 4d. and 1s. 6d. per lb.

"Like it Immensely"

is the verdict of one of our many correspondents after a trial of

PLAYER'S NAVY MIXTURE

It is the verdict of all who like a cool, sweet tobacco.

The price is 1/8 per ¼-lb. tin, 5d. per oz. Mild; 1/6 per ¼-lb. tin, or 4½d. per oz. Medium.

Send for Testing Sample, post free from John Player & Sons, Nottingham.

Lanchester Reliability.

Lanchester Cars are noted for their reliability, there is a reason for this. It is not only the perfection of design but the equally necessary perfection in construction which makes the Lanchester reliable. The design is simple and every part of the motor is accessible. A superior design added to the perfection of workmanship make a better motor car just as they make a better rifle or a better watch. Remember, a reliable motor car cannot be made "cheap." It is better to pay a good price for a good car than to buy a cheap one and spend all your time hunting round for repair shops. Practical demonstration is better than big talk and the Lanchester Motor Co. are always ready to arrange trial runs at any of their Depots. Catalogues giving detail descriptions of both the Four and Six cylinder Lanchesters may be had post free on application.

THE LANCHESTER MOTOR CO., LTD.,
Birmingham. Manchester, London.

MIRZAPORE CARPETS

Admirable for the dining room, being very thick in pile and luxuriously soft. The colourings and designs are of the true Indian character, adaptable to all schemes of decoration. Being very durable and inexpensive, they are particularly suitable for rooms in continuous use every day.

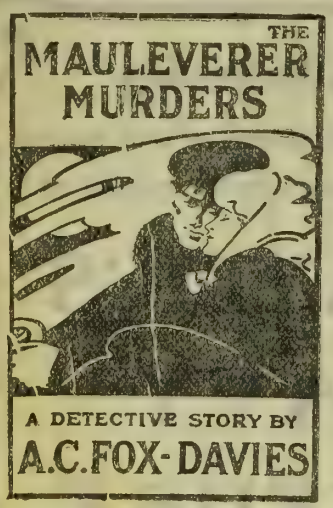
EXAMPLES OF SIZE AND PRICE

ft.	in.		ft.	in.		£	s.	d.
9	6	x	6	1	...	2	12	6
10	5	x	7	3	...	3	15	0
11	4	x	7	2	...	4	13	0
12	4	x	8	4	...	4	5	0
12	5	x	9	3	...	5	5	0
13	5	x	9	3	...	6	5	0
15	5	x	10	3	...	6	10	0
15	4	x	12	2	...	8	15	0

FINEST COLLECTION of INDIAN CARPETS IN THE WORLD

MAPLE & CO

LONDON BUENOS AIRES PARIS



On Friday Mr. JOHN LANE will publish a new and exciting Detective Story by the author of THE DANGERVILLE INHERITANCE. In this volume the author again introduces Ashley Tempest, the Barrister, and Dennis Yardley, the Detective, who were employed with such telling effect in his previous work. Mr. FOX-DAVIES builds up before his readers a remarkable series of crimes which when elucidated display a story more ingeniously and more dramatically startling and unexpected than his first novel.

RECENT SUCCESSES.

FOR THE WEEK END.

By HANDASYDE, Author of Four Gardens." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A genuine story of passion.....The author has set out to exhibit the relations of a pair of lovers who have met too late. The passion of this pair plays across a background of laughter and cynicism and shallow wit and horseplay and scandal."
—DAILY MAIL.

THE STRONGEST PLUME.

By HUGH DE SELINCOURT, Author of "A Boy's Marriage." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A very clever story.....a notable book. Its central figure is a young girl who goes through an experience which generally means the end of things, and the author has drawn the character with consummate skill."—MR. SIDNEY DARK, in DAILY EXPRESS.

THE WINGLESS VICTORY.

By M. P. WILLCOCKS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Such books are worth keeping on the shelves, even by the classics, for they are painted in colours that do not fade."—TIMES.

JOHN LANE, Publisher, The Bodley Head, Vigo St., W.

THE BEST ON EARTH.

SIR ANDREW CLARK'S INVARIABLE ADVICE WAS

"Let the Patient have Schweitzer's Cocoatina, if you please."

SCHWEITZER'S Cocoatina

The Most Nutritious and Perfectly Digestible Cocoa.

For Invalids and Children as well as for the Strong and Healthy.

"This is Genuine Cocoa."—THE LANCET.

H. SCHWEITZER & CO., LTD, 143, York-road, London, N.

Est. nearly Quarter of a Century.
Tel. 327 Mayfair.

W. EVANS & CO.

Choice and varied Stock of new Goods for Spring and Summer Wear just arrived.

FROCK COAT from £2 15 0
CASHMERE TROUSERS from 13/-
LOUNGE SUITS ... £3 3 0
DRESS SUITS ... £5 5 0

INSPECTION INVITED.

Gentlemen who are unable to call can rely on having a good fit from self-measurements, or by sending garments as guide.

TRUTH says: "Our latest discovery in tailoring is Evans, 77, Gt. Portland-street, W., who can actually fit."

77, Gt. Portland-st., London, W.

HAMPTON.

are now exhibiting unequalled values in China and Glass.

Tea Sets (40 pieces), 18/6.

For 12 persons. In fine Staffordshire China. New and tasteful design, Harebell decoration, and finished with Gold. 40 pieces, 18/6.

Breakfast Sets to match, for 6 persons, 29 pieces, 18/9.

Dinner Services (58 pieces), 52/6

Finest Staffordshire Stone China, with Enamelled Green and Hairbrown Borders, and finished with Gold, 58 pieces, 52/6. 82 pieces, 90/-. 105 pieces, £6/6/0.

See Illustration. Sent Free.

Only Showrooms:

PALL MALL EAST, LONDON, S.W.

ARE YOU TAKING

an everyday care of yourself? Prevention you know is ever so much better than cure. A little irregularity of the stomach seems such a trivial thing to-day, but next week it is a malady, ever getting more serious: little ailments soon become big complaints. Cure that little irregularity at once. Neglect it, and it leads swiftly to dyspepsia, indigestion, flatulence, constipation, biliousness, headache, and perhaps a train of greater evils. Even these will yield to but why run the risk of so much suffering? What folly to delay—waiting till one is ill.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

A dose of these famous pills taken whenever the least weariness is experienced will effectually prevent any unpleasant developments. Don't wait till you have to be cured. Take an everyday care of yourself, remember always if you keep the bowels regular and the liver in working order you will never be troubled with indigestion and it's attendant miseries.

"Taking care" of course means that the standard remedy must be always at hand. In many thousands of homes BEECHAM'S PILLS are regarded as the family medicine and are kept in an appointed place always ready for use. When you notice a symptom you want to get rid of it at once: there is no time like the present. To be always prepared, you too, must keep a box of Beecham's Pills

AT HOME.

Sold everywhere in boxes, price 1/1½ & 2/9.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & MALCOMSON, Limited, 4 and 5, Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., and Published by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st. E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.
Entered as Second-Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

CITY LIBRARY, LOWELL, MASS.

One volume at a time, obtained only by card, may be kept fourteen days unless marked to be returned in seven days. A fine of two cents a day is charged for each day overdue (including Sundays and holidays), and if not returned within one week after notice is sent twenty cents additional must be paid. Books must not be lent out of borrower's household.

Borrowers finding this book mutilated or defaced should report it.

☞ No claim for rebate or fine will be allowed because of failure to receive notice from the library, or on account of notice sent to the library of intention to return an overdue book.

The record below must not be made or altered by the borrower.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS-URBANA
3 0112 062053324